The ſecond poynt is this. Holy Church hath determined that euery Chriſten mã liuyng here bodely vpõ earth ought to be ſhriuen of a prieſt ordeined by the church, if he may come to him: ſyr what ſay you to this?

Confeſſiõ of ſinne to God onely.

Malachi. 2.

The Lord Cobham aunſwered and ſaid: A diſeaſed or ſore wounded man, hath need to haue a ſure wiſe Chirurgian and a true, knowing both the ground and the daunger of the ſame. Moſt neceſſary were it therefore to be firſt ſhriuen vnto God which onely knoweth our diſeaſes and can helpe vs. I deny not in this the going to a prieſt, if he be a man of good life and learning. For the lawes of God are to be required of the prieſt, which is godly learned. But if he be an idiote or a man of vicious liuing that is my curate, I ought rather to flee from him then to ſeeke vnto him: For ſooner might I catch euill of him that is nought then any goodnes towardes my ſoules health.

Then read the doctour agayne.

The 3. Article.

The third poynt is this, Chriſt ordayned S. Peter the Apoſtle to be his vicare here in earth whoſe ſea is ẏ church of Rome. And he graunted that the ſame power whiche he gaue vnto Peter, ſhould ſucceede to all Peters ſucceſſours which we call now popes of Rome. By whoſe ſpecial power in churches particular, be ordayned Prelates & archbiſhops, parſons, Curates, and other degrees more. Unto whom Chriſten men ought to obey after the lawes of the Church of Rome. This is the determination of holye Church. Sir beleue ye not this?

Who is next vnto Peter.

Succeſſion not of place but of conditiõs maketh Peters heire

To this he anſwered and ſayd: He that followeth Peter moſt nigheſt in pure liuing, is next vnto him in ſucceſſion. But your Lordly order eſteemeth not greatly ẏ lowly behauiour of poore Peter, whatſoeuer ye prate of him. Neither care ye greatly for the humble manners of them that ſucceeded him, till the time of Silueſter, whiche for the more part were martirs, as I told you afore. Ye can let all their good conditions go by you, and not hurt your ſelues with them at all. All the world knoweth this well inough by you and yet ye can make boaſt of Peter.

With that one of the other doctors aſked him: thẽ what do ye ſay of the Pope?

Antichriſtes head body & taile.

The Lord Cobham anſwered. As I ſaid before. He & you together maketh whole the great Antichriſt. Of whõ he is ẏ great head you biſhops, prieſts, prelates, & monks are the body: and the begging friers are the tayle, for they couer ẏ filthines of you both, with their ſubtile ſophiſtry, Neither will I in conſcience obey any of you all, till I ſee you with Peter follow Chriſt in conuerſation.

Then reade the doctor againe.

The 4. Article. Pilgrimage.

The 4. point is this. Holy Churche hath determined that it is meritorious to a Chriſten man, and to go on pilgrimage to holy places. And there ſpecially to worſhip the holy reliques and images of ſaintes, Apoſtles, Martirs, Confeſſours and all other ſaintes beſides, approued by ẏ Church of Rome. Sir what ſay ye to this?

What is to be dõe with Images.

Wherunto he aunſwered. I owe them no ſeruice by any commaundement of god: and therefore I minde not to ſeeke them for your couetouſnes. It were beſt ye ſwepte them faire from copwebs and duſt, and ſo layde them vp for catching of ſcathe. Or els to bury them fayre in ẏ groũd as ye do other aged people which are Gods Images.

Saintes are becõe now couetous beggers.

It is a wonderfull thing, that ſayntes now being dead ſhoulde become ſo couetous and needy, and thereupon ſo bitterly beg: which all the life time hated al couetouſneſſe, and begging. But this I ſay vnto you, and I would all ẏ world ſhould mark it. That with your ſhrines and Idols your fained abſolutions and pardons, ye draw vnto you the ſubſtaunce, wealth and chiefe pleaſures of all chriſten realmes.

A whelpe of the ſame heare.

Images not to be worſhipped.

Why ſir (ſaid one of the clerkes) will ye not worſhippe good images?

What worſhip ſhould I geue vnto them? ſaid the Lord Cobham.

Then ſaid Frier Palmer vnto him. Sir will ye worſhip the croſſe of Chriſt, that he died vpon?

Where is it, ſayd the Lord Cobham?

The Frier ſaid. I put you the caſe ſir, that it were here euen now before you?

The croſſe whether it is to be worſhipped.

The Lord Cobham aunſwered. This is a great wiſe man, to put me an earneſt queſtion of a thinge, and yet he himſelfe knoweth not where the thing it ſelfe is. Yet once againe I aſke you what worſhip I ſhould do vnto it?

Galat. 6.

A clerke ſaid vnto him. Such worſhip as Paule ſpeaketh of: and that is this. God forbid that I ſhould ioy, but onely in the croſſe of Ieſu Chriſt.

Then ſaid the Lord Cobham, and ſpread his armes abroad. This is a very croſſe, yea, and ſo muche better then your Croſſe of wood, in that it was created of God. Yet will not I ſeeke to haue it worſhipped.

Then ſayd the biſhop of London. Sir, ye wote well that he died on a materiall croſſe?

The materiall croſſe is not materiall to our faith.

What it is to reioyce in the croſſe of Chriſt.

The Lord Cobham ſaid. Yea, and I wote alſo that our ſaluation came not in by that materiall croſſe, but alone by him which died therupon. And well I wote that holy S. Paule reioyced in none other croſſe, but in chriſtes paſſion and death onely, and in his owne ſufferinges of like perſecution with him, for the ſame ſelfe veritie that he had ſuffered for afore:

An other clerk yet aſked him. Will ye then do none honour to the holy croſſe?

He anſwered him. Yes, if he were mine own I would lay him vp honeſtly, and ſee vnto him that he ſhoulde take no more ſcath abroad, nor be robbed of his goodes as he is now a dayes.

Sla͂dered with the truth.

These mẽ ſeeme to ſtand onely vpon their eſtemation amõgeſt the people.

Then ſayd the Archbiſh. vnto him. Sir Iohn, ye haue ſpoken here many wonderfull wordes to the ſlaunderous rebuke of the whole ſpiritualtie, geuing a great euil example vnto the common ſort here, to haue vs in the more diſdaine. Much time haue we ſpent here about you, and al in vaine ſo far as I can ſee. Well, we muſt nowe be at this ſhort point with you, for the day paſſeth away: ye muſt otherwiſe ſubmit your ſelfe to the ordinaunce of holy church or els throw your ſelfe (no remedy) into moſt deepe daunger. See to it in time, for anone it will be els to late.

The Lord Cobham ſayd: I know not to what purpoſe I ſhould otherwiſe ſubmit me. Muche more haue you offended me, then euer I offended you, in thus troubling me before this multitude.

A woluiſhe offer of gentlenes.

Then ſaid the archbiſhop again vnto him, we once agayne require to remember your ſelfe well, & to haue none other maner opinion in theſe matters, then the vniuerſall faith, and beliefe of the holy church of Rome is. And ſo like obedient childe returne agayne to the vnitie of your mother. See to it I ſay in time, for yet ye may haue remedy, where as anone it will be to late.

The Lord Cobham ſayd expreſly before them all. I wil none otherwiſe beleue in theſe poyntes, then that I haue told ye here afore. Do with me what ye will.

Bloudy murtherers.

Finally then the archbiſhop ſayd, wel, then I ſee none other but we muſt needes doe the lawe: we muſt proceede forth to the ſentence diffinitiue, and both iudge you, & condemne you for an hereticke.

And with that, the Archb. ſtood vp, and read there a bill of his condemnation, all the clergy and laity vayling their bonets. And this was the tenour therof.

IN the name of God. So be it. We Thomas by the ſufferaunce of God, Archbiſhop of Caunterbury, Metropolitane, and primate of al England, and Legate from the apoſtolicke ſee of Rome, willeth this to be knowne vnto all men. In a certayne cauſe of hereſy and vpon diuers articles, wherupon ſir Iohn Oldcaſtle knight and Lord Cobham, after a diligent inquiſition made for the ſame, was detected, accuſed, and preſented before vs in our laſt conuocation of all our prouince of Caunterbury, holden in the Cathedrall Church of Paules at London: At the lawfull denouncement and requeſt of our vniuerſal Clergy in the ſayd conuocation, we proceded ceded agaynſt him according to the law (God to witnes) with al the fauour poſsible. And following Chriſtes example in all that we might, which willeth not the death of a ſinner, but rather that he be conuerted and liue: we tooke vpon vs to correcte him, and ſought all other wayes poſsible to bring him againe to the churches vnitie, declaring vnto him what the holy & vniuerſal church of Rome hath ſayd, holden, determined, and taught in that behalf. And though we founde him in the Catholicke fayth farre wyde and ſo ſtifnecked, that he would not confeſſe hys error, nor purge himſelf, nor yet repent him therof: We yet pittieng him of fatherly compaſsion, and intirely deſiring the health of his ſoule, appoynted hym a competent tyme of deliberation, to ſee if he wold repent and ſeek to be reformed: but ſince that time we haue foūd him worſe and worſe. Conſidering therefore, that he is not corrigible: we are driuen to the very extremitie of the lawe, and wyth great heauines of hart, we nowe proceede to the publication of the ſentence diffinitiue, agaynſt him.

Then brought he forth an other bill, conteyning the ſayd ſentence, and that he read alſo in his beggerly Latine. Chriſti nomine inuocato, ipſumq; ſolum præ oculis habentes. Quia per acta inactitata, and ſo forth. Whiche I haue alſo tranſlated into Engliſhe, that men may vnderſtand it.

As Caiphas did Chriſt.

Chriſt is condēned in his faithful members.

Chriſt we take vnto witneſſe, that nothing els we ſeeke in this our whole enterpriſe, but his onely glory. For as much as we haue found by diuers actes done, brought forth and exhibited by ſundry euidences, ſignes and tokens, and alſo by many moſt manifeſt proues, the ſayd ſir Iohn Oldcaſtle knight and L. Cobham, not onely to be an euident heretické in his owne perſon, but alſo a mighty maintainer of other heretickes agaynſt the fayth and religion of the holy and vniuerſall church of Rome: namely about the two ſacramentes (of the aultar, and of penaunce) beſides the popes power, and pilgrimages. And that he as the childe of iniquitie and darcknes, hath ſo hardened his hart, that he will in no caſe attend vnto the voyce of his paſtor. Neyther will he be allured by ſtraight admoniſhmentes, not yet be brought in by fauourable wordes. The worthines of the cauſe firſt wayed on the one ſide, and his vnworthines agayn cōſidered on the other ſide, his faults alſo aggrauated or made double through his damnable obſtinacie (we being loth that he which is nought ſhoulde be worſe, and ſo with his contagiouſnes infecte the multitude) by the ſage counſel and aſſent of the very diſcrete fathers, our honourable brethren and Lordes, Byſhops here preſent, Richard of London, Henry of Wincheſter, and Bennet of Bangor, and of other great learned and wiſe men here, both doctours of diuinitie, and of the lawes canon and ciuill, ſeculers and religious, with diuers other expert men aſsiſting vs: we ſententially and diffinitiuely by this preſent writing, iudge, declare & condemne the ſayd ſyr Iohn Oldcaſtle, Knight, and Lord Cobham, for a moſt pernitious and deteſtable heretické, conuicted vpon the ſame, and refuſing vtterly to obey the Church agayne, committing him here from hencefoorth as a condemned heretické to the ſecular iuriſdiction, power & iudgement, to doe him thereupon to death. Furthermore, we excommunicate and denounce accurſed, not onely this heretické here preſent: but ſo many els beſides, as ſhall hereafter in fauoure of his errour, either receaue him or defend him, counſell him or help hym, or any other way mayntayne hym: as very fautours receauers, defenders, counſaylers, ayders, and mayntayners of condemned heretickes.

How ſpirituall theſe fathers are

Keepe the ſepulchre neuer ſo much, yet Chriſt will riſe. None office left vndone pertaining to Antichriſt.

What care is here to hold vp their popery.

And that theſe premiſſes, may be the better knowne al faithfull Chriſten men: we commit it here vnto your charges, & geue you ſtraight commandement therupon by this writing alſo: That ye cauſe this condemnation and diffinitiue ſentence of excommunication, cōcerning both this heretick and his fautours: to be publiſhed throughout all dioceſſes, in Cities, towns & villages by your curates and pariſh prieſts, at ſuch time as they ſhal haue moſt recourſe of people. And ſee that it be done after this ſorte. As the people are thus gathered deuoutly together, let the curate euery where goe into the pulpit and there open, declare, and expound, this exceſſe in the mother tongue, in an audible and intelligible voyce, that it may be perceiued of all men: and that vpon the feare of this declaration alſo, the people may fall from theyr euill opinions conceiued nowe of late by ſeditious preachers. Moreouer we will, that after we haue deliuered vnto each one of you biſhops which are here preſent, a copy hereof: that ye cauſe the ſame to be written out agayne into diuers copies, and ſo be ſent vnto the other byſhops and Prelates of our whole Prouince, that they may alſo ſee the contentes thereof ſolemnly publiſhed within theyr dioceſſes and cures. Finally we will that both you and they ſignifie agayne vnto vs ſeriouſly and diſtinctly by your writinges as the matter is, without fayned colour in euery poynt performed: the day wheron ye receaued this proceſſe, the time when it was of vs executed, and after what ſort it was done in euery condition, according to the tenour hereof, that we may knowe it to be iuſtly the ſame.

Richarde Clifford.

Rob. Maſcall.

A copy of this writing ſent Thomas Arundel the archbiſhop of Caunterbury, afterward from Mydſtone the x. day of Octobr, within the ſame yeare of our Lord 1413. vnto Richard Clifford the biſhop of London, which thus beginneth: Thomas permiſsione diuina. &c.

The ſaid Richard Clifford ſent an other copy thereof, encloſed within his owne letters: vnto Robert Maſchall a Carmelite frier, which was then biſhop of Herforde in Wales, written from Haddam the 23. day of October in the ſame yeare, and the beginning thereof is this: Reuerende in Chriſto pater, &c.

This Robert Maſcall directed an other copye thereof from London the 27. day of Nouember in the ſame yeare encloſed in his owne commiſſion alſo, vnto his archdeacon and and Deanes in Hareforde and Shrewſbury. And this is therof the beginning: Venerabilibus & diſcretis viris. &c. In like maner did the other biſhops within their dioceſſes.

Ex vtroque exemplari.

Math. 10.
Iob. 1.

After that the archbiſhop had thus read the bill of hys condemnation, with moſt extremitie before the whol multitude: The Lorde Cobham ſayd with a moſte cheerefull countenaunce. Though ye iudge my body whiche is but a wretched thing, yet am I certayne and ſure, that ye can do no harme to my ſoule, no more then could Sathan vppon the ſoule of Iob. He that created that, will of his infinite mercy and promiſe ſaue it, I haue therein no manner of doubt. And as concerning theſe articles before rehearſed, I will ſtand to them euen to the very death, by the grace of my eternall God.

Math. 10.

And therwith he turned him vnto the people, caſtyng hys handes abroad, and ſaying with a very loude voyce: Good Chriſten people, for Gods loue be well ware of theſe men. For they will els beguile you, and leade you blindling into hell with thēſelues. For Chriſt ſayth plainly vnto you: If one blinde man leadeth an other, they are like both to fall into the ditche.

He prayeth for his enemyes.

After this, he fell downe there vpon his knees, & thus before thē all prayed for his enemies, holding vp both hys handes and his eyes towardes heauen and ſaying: Lorde God eternall, I beſeeche thee of thy great mercies ſake, to forgeue my purſuers, if it be thy bleſſed will. And then hee was deliuered to ſyr Robert Morly, and ſo led forth again to the tower of London. And thus was there an ende of that dayes worke.

Ex vetuſto exemplari Lōdinenſiū.

Whyle the Lord Cobham was thus in the Tower, he ſent out priuely vnto his friendes. And they at his requeſt wrote this little bill here following, cauſing it to be ſet vp in diuers quarters of London, that the people ſhould not beleeue the ſlaunders and lyes that his enemies the Byſhops ſeruauntes and prieſtes, had made on him abroade. And thus was the letter.

A teſtimoniall made by his frendes.

To ſtop lying lippes. A reherſall of his belief. In forme of bread, but not without bread he meaneth.

For as much as Syr Iohn Oldcaſtle knight, and Lorde Cobham, is vntruely conuicted and empriſoned, falſly reported and ſlandered among the common people by his aduerſaries, that he ſhould otherwiſe both thinke & ſpeak of the ſacramentes of the churche, and ſpecially of the bleſſed ſacrament of the aultar, then was written in the confeſſion of his beliefe which was indended and taken to the clergy, and ſo ſet vp in diuers open places in the cittye of London. Knowne be it here to all the worlde, that he (neuer ſince) varied in any poynt therefro, but this is playnly his beliefe: that all the ſacramentes of the churche be profitable and expedient alſo to al them that ſhall be ſaued, taking them after the intent that Chriſt and hys true church hath ordayned. Furthermore he beleeueth, that the bleſſed ſacrament of the aulter is verily and truely Chriſtes body in forme of bread.

The clergie in hate of the people.

A practiſe of falſe prieſts.

These are their cōmon feates.

After this the biſhops and prieſts were in much great diſcredite both with the nobilitie and commons, partly for ẏ they had ſo cruelly handled the good Lorde Cobham: & partly agayn, becauſe hys opinion (as they thought at that tyme) was parfect concerning the ſacrament. The Prelates feared this to grow to further incōueniēce towards thē both wayes, wherfore they drew theyr heads together & at the laſt conſented to vſe an other practiſe ſomewhat cōtrary to that they had done afore. They cauſed it by and by to be blowne abroad by theyr feed ſeruauntes, frends, and babling ſir Iohns: that the ſayd Lord Cobham was becomen a good man, and had lowly ſubmitted himſelfe in all thinges vnto holy Church, vtterly changing his opinion concerning the ſacrament. And thereupon, they counterfayted an abiuration in hys name, that the people ſhoulde take no hold of that opinion by any thing they had hearde of him before, and to ſtand ſo the more in awe of them, cōſidering hym ſo great a man, and by them ſubdued.

This is the abiuration (ſay they) of ſir Iohn Oldcaſtle knight, ſometime the Lord Cobham.

✻ An Abiuration counterfaited of the Byſhoppes.

Walden in faſciculo Zizaniorum Wicleui.

IN Dei nomine. Amen. I John Oldcaſtle denounced, detected and conuicted, of and vpon diuers articles ſauoring both hereſye and error, before the reuerend father in Chriſt & my good Lord, Thomas by the permiſſion of God, Lord Archbiſhop of Caunterbury, and my lawfull and rightfull iudge in that behalfe, expreſſly graunt and confeſſe: that as cõcerning the eſtate and power of the moſt holy father the Pope of Rome, of his Archbiſhops, his Biſhops and hys other prelates, the degrees of the church, and the holy Sacramentes of the ſame, ſpecially of the Sacramentes of the aultar of penaunce and other obſeruaunces beſides of our mother holy Church, as Pilgrimages and pardons: I affirme (I ſay) before the ſayd reuerend father Archbiſhop & els where, that I being euill ſeduced by diuers ſeditious preachers, haue grieuouſly erred, and heretically perſiſted, blaſphemouſly aunſwered, and obſtinately rebelled. And therfore I am by the ſayd reuerend father, before the reuerend fathers in Chriſt alſo, the biſhops of London, Wincheſter, and Bangor, lawfully condemned for an hereticke.

Marke from whence this geare commeth.

Fine wormanſhip I trowe.

Neuertheles yet, I now remembring my ſelfe, and coueting by this meane to auoyd that temporall payn which I am worthy to ſuffer as an hereticke, at the aſſignation of my moſt excellent Chriſten prince and liege Lord, King Henry the 5. now by the grace of God moſt worthy king both of England and of Fraunce: Minding alſo to preferre the wholeſome determination, ſentence and doctrine of the holy vniuerſall Church of Rome, before the vnwholeſom opinions of my ſelfe, my teachers, and my followers: I freely, willingly, deliberately, and throughly cõfeſſe, graũt, and affirme, that the moſt holy fathers in Chriſt, S. Peter the Apoſtle and his ſucceſſors byſhops of Rome, ſpecially now at this time, my moſt bleſſed Lord Pope John, by the permiſſion of God, the xxiij. Pope of that name, which now holdeth Peters ſeat (and each of them in theyr ſucceſſion) hath full ſtrength and power to be Chriſtes Vicar in earth, and the head of the church militant. And that by the ſtrẽgth of his office (what though he be a great ſinner, and afore knowne of God to be damned) he hath full authority and power to rule and gouerne, bynde and looſe, ſaue and deſtroy, accurſe and aſſoyle, all other Chriſten men.

Alas good man, thou art ſlaundered.

And agreeably ſtill vnto this, I confeſſe, graunt, and affirme all other Archbiſhops, Byſhops, and Prelates in their prouinces, Dioces, and Pariſhes (appoynted by the ſayd Pope of Rome, to aſſiſte him in his doinges or buſines) by his Decrees, Canons, or vertue of his office: to haue had in times paſt to haue now at this time, and that they ought to haue in time to come: authoritye and power to rule and to gouerne, binde and looſe, accurſe and aſſoyle, the ſubiects or people of theyr aforeſaid prouinces, dioces, & pariſhes, and that their ſaid ſubiectes or people ought of right in all things to obey them. Furthermore, I confeſſe, graunt, and affirme, that the ſayd ſpirituall fathers, as our moſt holy father the Pope, Archbiſhops, Biſhops, & Prelates: haue had, haue now, and ought to haue hereafter, authority and power for the eſtate, order and gouernaunce of their ſubiectes or people, to make lawes, decrees, ſtatutes and conſtitutions, yea and to publiſhe, commaund, and compell their ſayde ſubiectes and people, to the obſeruation of them.

How proue ye that, by the ſcriptures.

Moreouer I confeſſe, graunt and affirme, that all theſe foreſayd lawes, decrees, ſtatutes and conſtitutions made, publiſhed and commaunded, according to the forme of ſpirituall law, all chriſten people, and euery man in himſelf is ſtraightly bound to obſerue, & meekely to obey according to the diuerſity of the foreſayd powers. As the lawes, ſtatuts, canons and conſtitutions of our moſt holy father the Pope, incorporated in his Decrees, Decretals, Clementines, Codes, Chartes, Reſcriptes, Sextiles, and Extrauagants ouer all the world: and as the prouinciall ſtatuts of Archbiſhopps in their prouinces, the Sinodall actes of Biſhops in their dioces, and the commendable rules & cuſtomes of prelates in their colledges, and Curates in their pariſhes, all Chriſten people are both bound to obſerue, & alſo moſt meekly to obey. Ouer & beſides all thys, I John Oldecaſtle vtterly forſaking and renouncing all the aforeſayd errors and hereſies, and all other errors and hereſies like vnto them, lay my hand here vpon this booke or holye Euangely of God, & ſweare: that I ſhall neuer more from henceforth holde theſe aforeſayd hereſies, nor yet any other like vnto them wittinglye. Neither ſhall I geue counſell, ayde, helpe, nor fauor at any time, to them that ſhall holde, teach, affirme, or maintayne the ſame, as God ſhall helpe me, and theſe holy Euangelies.

No ſcriptures haue they to ſhewe.

Intollerable yokes laye they.

Neuer made he ſuch an othe.

And that I ſhall from henceforth faythfully obey and inuiolably obſerue all the holy lawes, ſtatutes, Canons, and conſtitutions of all the Popes of Rome, Archbiſhops Biſhops, and Prelates, as are conteyned and determined in their holy Decrees, Decretalles, Clementines, Codes, Chartes, Reſcriptes, Sextiles, Summes, papall, Extrauagantes, ſtatutes prouinciall, actes ſynodall, and other ordinary regules and cuſtomes cõſtituted by them, or that ſhall chaunce hereafter directly to be determined or made. To theſe and all ſuch other, will I my ſelfe with all power poſſibly apply. Beſides all this, the penaunce whiche it ſhall pleaſe my ſayd reuerend father the Lord Archbiſhop of Caunterbury hereafter to enioyne me for my ſinnes, I will meekely obey and faythfully fulfill. Finally, all my ſeducers and falſe teachers, and all other beſides, whome I ſhall hereafter know ſuſpected of hereſye or errors: I ſhall effectually preſent, or cauſe to be preſented vnto my ſayde reuerend father, Lord Archbiſhop or to them which haue his authority, ſo ſoone as I can conueniently do it, and ſee that they be corrected to my vttermoſt power.

And this maintaine they ſtill. The pope holy bible of papiſts.

Marke this hãdling.

This charge geue they commonly.

This abiuration neuer came to the hands of the Lord Cobham, neither was it compiled of them for that purpoſe, but onely therewith to bleare the eyes of the vnlearned multitude for a time. After the whiche like fetch and ſubtle practiſe, was alſo deuiſed the recantatiõ of the Archbiſhop Thomas Cranmer, to ſtop for a time the peoples mouthes. which ſubtlely in like manner was alſo practiſed with the falſe recantatiõ of Biſhop Hoper, and diuers other, as in their places hereafter (Chriſt graunting) ſhalbe ſhewed.

And thus much hitherto concerning the firſt trouble of ſir John Oldcaſtle Lorde Cobham, with all the circumſtances of the true time, place, occaſion, cauſes, and order belonging to the ſame. wherin I truſt I haue ſufficiently ſatiſfied all the parties, requiſite to a faythfull hiſtory, without corruption. For the confirmation wherof, to the intent the mind alſo of the wrangling caniller may be ſatiſfied, & to ſtop the mouth of the aduerſary (which I ſee in all places to be ready to barke) I haue therfore of purpoſe annexed with all my ground & foundation taken out of the Archiues and Regiſters of the Archb. of Cant, Ex epiſt. TO the reuerend father in Chriſt and Lord, the Lord Robert by the grace of God Biſhop of Hereford, Richard by the permiſſion of God biſhop of London, health and continuall increaſe of ſincere loue. We haue of late receiued the letters of the reuerend father in Chriſt and Lord, the Lorde Thomas by the grace of God Archb. of Cant. primate of all England, and Legate of the Apoſtolicke ſee, vnto our reuerend brother the Lord Richard Biſhop of London, health and brotherly loue in the Lord. It was lately concluded before vs in the conuocation of Prelates and Clergye of our prouince of Caunterb. laſt celebrate in our church of S. Paul, intreating amongeſt other thinges with the ſayd prelates & clergy vpon the vnion and reformation of the Church of England by vs, and the ſayd prelates and Clergy: that it was almoſt impoſſible to amende the hole of our Lordes coate whiche was without ſeame, but that firſt of all certayne nobles of the realme, which are authors, fauourers, protectors, defenders, and receiuers of theſe heretickes called Lollardes, were ſharpely rebuked, and if neede were by the cenſures of the Churche, and the helpe of the ſecular power, they be reuoked from their errours. And afterward hauing made diligent inquiſition in the conuocation amongeſt the proctors of the Clergy and others which were there in great number out of euery dioces of our prouince: It was found out amongeſt others, that ſir Iohn Oldcaſtle knight, was and is the principall receiuer, fauourer, protector and defender of them: and that ſpecially in the Dioceſſe of London, Rocheſter, and Herefords, he hath ſent the ſayd Lollardes to preach, not being licenced by the ordinaryes and Biſhoppes of the Dioces or places, contrary to the prouinciall conſtitutions in that behalfe made, and hath bene preſent at theyr wicked Sermõs, greuouſly puniſhing with threatnings, terrors, and the power of the ſecular ſword: ſuche as did withſtand him: alledging and affirming amongeſt others, that we and our felow brethren Suffragans of out prouinces had not, neither haue any power to make any ſuch conſtitutions. Alſo he hath holden, and doth holde opinion and teach as touching the ſacramentes of the aultar, of penaunce, of pilgrimage, of the worſhiping of Sayntes, and of the keyes contrary to that which the vniuerſall church of Rome doth teach ond affirme.

Sir I. Oldecaſtel in fauour with the kyng.

Wherefore, on the behalfe of the ſayd prelates and clergy, we were then required that we would vouchſafe to proceed agaynſt the ſayd ſir Iohn Oldcaſtle vpon the premiſſes. Notwithſtanding, for the reuerence of our Lord the king, in whoſe fauour the ſayde ſir Iohn at that preſẽt was, & no leſſe alſo for honor of his knighthood: we with our fellow brethren and Suffraganes then preſent, with a great part of the Clergy of our prouince, comming perſonally before the preſence of our Lord the king, being then at hys Manor of Kenington, put vp againſt the ſaid ſir Iohn, a complaint, and partly reciting the defaultes of the ſayd ſir Iohn. But at the requeſt of our Lord the king, we deſiring to reduce the ſayd ſir Iohn to the vnity of the church, without any reproche, we deferred all the execution of the premiſſes for a great time. But at the laſt, for ſo much as our ſayd Lord the king after his great trauelles taken about the conuerſion of him, did nothing at all profite, as our ſaid Lord the king vouchſafed to certify vs both by word & writing: We immediatly decreed to call forth the ſayd ſir Iohn perſonally to aunſwere before vs at a certayne time already paſſed, in and vpon the premiſſes, and ſent our meſſengers with theſe our letters of citation to the ſayde ſir Iohn, then being at his caſtle of Cowling, vnto the which meſſenger we gaue commaundement that he ſhould in no caſe go into the Caſtle except he were licenſed. But by the meane of one Iohn Butler, porter of the kings chãber, he ſhould require the ſayd ſir Iohn, that he would either licẽſe the ſayd meſſenger to come into the Caſtle, or that he would cite him, or at the leaſt that he would ſuffer himſelfe to be cited without his Caſtle. The whiche ſir Iohn openly aunſwered vnto the ſayd Iohn Butler, declaring the premiſſes vnto him on the behalfe of our Lord the king: that he woulde by no meanes be cited, neither in any caſe ſuffer his citation. Then we being certified of the premiſſes lawfully proceeded further.

The keyes of the church falſely wraſted.

The L. Cobham excommunicated.

Firſt, hauing faythfull report made unto vs, that he could not be apprehended by perſonall citation, we decreed to cite him by an edict, to be openly ſet vppe in the porches of the Cathedrall Church of Rocheſter next vnto him, litle more then three Engliſh miles diſtant from the ſayd caſtle of Cowling. As we had thus cauſed him to be cited, and our edict aforeſayde to be publickely & openly ſet vpon the porches of the ſaid Church, that he ſhould perſonally appeare before vs the 11. day of September laſt paſt to aunſwere vnto the premiſſes, and certayne other thinges concerning hereſye: The which day being come, we ſitting in the tribunall ſeat in our greater chappell within the Caſtle of Leedes of our dioces, the which we then inhabited, and where as we then kept reſidence with our court, and hauing taken an othe whiche is requiſite in the premiſſes, and the information by vs heard and receiued, as the common report goeth: In the partes whereas the ſayd ſir Iohn dwelleth (fortifying himſelfe in his ſayd caſtle, defending his opinions manifoldly, contemning the keies of the churche and the Arbiſhops power.) We therefore cauſed the ſayde Syr Iohn cited, as is aforeſayd, to be openly with a loude voyce called by the cryer: and ſo being called, long looked for, and by no meanes appearing, we iudged him (as he was no leſſe worthy) obſtinate, and for puniſhment of his ſayd obſtinacye, we did then and there excommunicate him. And for ſo much as by the order of the premiſſes, and other euident tokens of hys doinges, we vnderſtand that the ſayde ſir Iohn for the defence of his errour doth fortify himſelfe, as is aforeſayd againſt the keyes of the Church, by pretence whereof, a vehement ſuſpition of hereſy and ſchiſme riſeth agaynſt him: We haue decreed if he may be apprehended, agayne perſonallye to cite him, or els as before, by an edict that he ſhould appeare before vs the Saterday next after the feaſt of Saint Mathew the Apoſtle and Euangeliſt next comming, to ſhew ſome reaſonable cauſe if he can, why we ſhoulde not proceede agaynſt him, to more greuous puniſhment, as an open hereticke, ſchiſmaticke and open enemy of the vniuerſall church. And perſonally to declare why he ſhould not be pronounced ſuch a one, or that the ayde of the ſecular power ſhoulde not be ſolemnely required agaynſt him. And further to aunſwere, do and receiue as touching the premiſſes, whatſoeuer iuſtice ſhal require. The which time being come, that is to ſay, the Saterday next after the feaſt of S. Mathew being the 24. day of September, ſir Rob. Morley knight Lieftenant of the tower of London appeared perſonally before vs, ſitting in the chapter houſe of the Churche of S. Paule at London, with our reuerent fellowe brethren and Lordes, Richard by the grace of God Biſhop of London, and Henry Byſhop of Wincheſter, and brought with him ſir Iohn Oldecaſtle Knight, and ſet him before vs (for a little before he was taken by the kinges ſeruauntes and caſt into the tower) vnto which ſir Iohn Oldcaſtle ſo perſonally preſent, we rehearſed all the order of the proces, as it is contayned in the actes of the of the daye before paſſed with good and modeſt wordes and gentle meanes. That is to ſay, howe he the ſaid ſir Iohn was detected and accuſed in the conuocation of the prelates and clergy of our ſayd prouince as is aforeſayd vpon the articles before rehearſed, and how he was cited & for hys contumacy excommunicate. And when we were come to that poynt, we offered our ſelues ready to abſolue him. Notwithſtanding, the ſayd ſir Iohn, not regarding our offer, ſayd, that he would willingly rehearſe before vs, and my ſayde fellowe brethren, the fayth which he held & affirmed. So he hauing his deſire & obteining licence, tooke out of his boſome a certayne Scedule indented, and there openly reade the contentes of the ſame, and deliuered the ſame Scedule vnto vs, and the Schedule of the articles, wherupon he was examined, which was as in forme folowing.

The L. Cobham caſt into the Tower.

The teres of the Crocodile.

Popiſh abſolution neglected.

✱ The catholicke fayth and confeſſion of the Lord Cobham.

I Iohn Oldcaſtle knight, Lord of Cobham, deſire to made manifeſt vnto all Chriſtians, & God to be taken to witneſſe, that I neuer thought otherwiſe or would thinke otherwiſe (by Gods helpe) then with a ſtedfaſt & vndoubted fayth to imbrace all thoſe his Sacramentes whiche he hath inſtituted for the vſe of his Church.

The Sacrament of the aultar.

Of penance.

Furthermore that I may the more playnly declare my mynde in theſe iiii. pointes of my fayth: Firſt of all I beleue the Sacramẽt of the aulter to be the body of Chriſt vnder ẏ forme of bread the very ſame body which was borne of his mother Mary, crucified for vs dead and buried, roſe againe the third day, ſitteth on the right hãd of his immortall father, now being a triumphant partaker with him of his eternall glory. Then as touchyng the Sacrament of penaunce this is my belief, that I doe thinke the correction of a ſinnefull lyfe to be moſt neceſſary for all ſuch as deſire to be ſaued and that they ought to take vpõ them ſuch repentaunce of their former lyfe by true confeſſion, vnfayned contrition, and lawfull ſatiſfaction, as the worde of God doth preſcribe vnto vs. Otherwiſe there will be no hope of ſaluation.

Of Images.

Thirdly, as touchyng images, this is my opiniõ, that I do iudge them no poynt of fayth, but brought into the worlde after the fayth of Chriſt by the ſufferaunce of the Church, & ſo growen in vſe that they might ſerue for a kalender for the lay people and ignorãt. By the beholdyng wherof they might the better call to remẽbraunce the godly examples & martyrdome of Chriſt and other holy men: but if any man do otherwiſe abuſe this repreſentatiõ, and geue the reuerence vnto thoſe Images, which is due vnto the holy men whom they repreſent, or rather vnto him whom the holy men themſelues owe all theyr honour, ſetting all theyr truſt and hope in them which ought to be referred vnto God: or if they be ſo affected toward the domb Images, that they do in any behalfe addict vnto them, eyther be more addicted vnto one Saint then another, in my minde they doe little differ from Idolatrye, grieuouſlye offending agaynſt God the author of all honor.

Of pilgrimages.

Laſt of all I am thus perſwaded that there be no inhabitants here in earth, but that we ſhall paſſe ſtraight either to life or puniſhment: for whoſoeuer doth ſo order his lyfe that he ſtumble at the commaundementes of God, whiche either he knoweth not, or he will not be taught them, it is but in vayne for him to look for ſaluation, although he ran ouer all the corners of the world. Contrarywiſe, he which obſerueth his commaundements cannot periſh, although in all his life time he walked no pilgrimage, neither to Rome, Caunterbury, nor Compoſtella, or to any other place, whither as the common people are accuſtomed to walke.

This Scedule with the articles therin conteined being read (as is aforeſaid) by the ſayd ſir Iohn: we with our felow brethren aforeſaid, & many other doctors & learned mẽ had conference vpon the ſame. And at the laſt by the counſell and conſent of them, we ſpake theſe wordes folowing vnto the ſayd ſir Iohn there preſent. Behold ſir Ioh. there are many good and catholicke things conteined in this ſcedule. But you haue this time to anſwere vnto other matters which ſauor of errors & hereſies. wherunto, by the cõtentes of this ſcedule, it is not fully anſwered, and therfore you muſt anſwere therunto & more plainely expreſſe & declare your fayth & opinions as touching thoſe poynts in ẏ ſame bill. That is to ſay, whither you hold, beleue and affirme, that in the ſacrament of the aultar, after the cõſecration rightly done, there remayneth materiall bread or not.

See whether theſe men picke quarelles where they neede not.

Item, whether you hold, beleue, and affirme, that it is neceſſary in the ſacrament of penaunce for a man to cõfeſſe his ſinnes vnto a prieſt appoynted by the church.

The which articles in this maner deliuered vnto him, amongeſt

amongſt many other thinges he anſwered plainly, that he would make no other declaration or anſwere therunto thẽ was conteyned in the ſayd Scedule. wherupon we fauoring the ſayd ſir Iohn, with benigne & gentle meanes we ſpake vnto him in this manner. Sir Iohn take heed, for if you do not playnly anſwere to theſe things, which are obiected agaynſt you within a lawful time now graũted you by the Iudges, we may declare you to be an hereticke, but the ſaid ſir Iohn perſeuered as before, and would make no other anſwere. Conſequently notwithſtanding, we together with our ſayd felow brethren and others of our counſell took aduiſe, and by their counſell declared vnto the ſaid ſir Iohn Oldcaſtle, that the ſayd holy Church of Rome in this matter following the ſaying of bleſſed S. Auguſtine Ierome, Ambroſe and other holy men, hath determined, yͤ which determinations euery catholicke ought to obſerue. wherupon the ſaid ſir Iohn anſwered, yͭ he would beleue and obſerue whatſoeuer the holy Church determined, and whatſoeuer god would he ſhould obſerue and beleue. But that he would in no caſe affirme that our Lord the Pope, yͤ cardinals, Archbiſhops, and Biſhops or other prelates of the church haue any power to determine any ſuch matters. wherunto, we yet fauoring him, vnder hope of better aduiſement promiſed the ſayd ſir Iohn: that we would geue him in writing certaine determinatiõs vpon the matter aforeſaid. wherunto he ſhould more plainly anſwere, writtẽ in latin, and for his better vnderſtanding tranſlated into Engliſh: wherupon, we commaunded and hartily deſired him that agaynſt monday next folowing, he ſhould geue a playne & full anſwere, the which determinations we cauſed to be trãſlated the ſame day & to be deliuered vnto him the ſonday next folowing. The tenor of which determinations here folow in this maner.

Here is no mention made of the worde of God.

Wolues clothed in ſheeps ſkins.

The ſumme of the popiſh beliefe.

The fayth and determination of yͤ holy Churche vpon the holy Sacrament of the aultar is this. That after the conſecration done in the maſſe by yͤ prieſt, yͤ material bread ſhall be chaunged into the materiall bodye of Chriſt, & the materiall wine into yͤ materiall bloud of Chriſt. Therfore after the conſecratiõ there remayneth no more any ſubſtãce of bread and wine, which was there before. what doe you anſwere to this article?

Confeſſion.

Alſo the holy church hath determined that euery chriſtian dwelling vpon earth ought to confeſſe his ſinnes vnto a prieſt ordeined by the Church, if he may come vnto hym. How thinke you by this article?

Chriſt ordeined S. Peter his Vicare in earth, whoſe ſeat is in the Church of Rome, geuing and graunting the ſame authority whiche he gaue vnto Peter alſo to his ſucceſſours which are now called Popes of Rome, in whoſe power it is to ordeine and inſtitute prelates in particulare churches. As Archbiſhops, biſhops, curates, and other eccleſiaſtical orders, vnto whom the Chriſtian people ought obedience according to the traditiõ of the church of Rome. This is the determination of the holy church. what thinke you by this article?

The Popes ſupremacy.

Pilgrimage.

Beſides this the holy Church hath determined, that it is neceſſary for euery chriſtian to go on pilgrimage to holy places, & there ſpecially to worſhip the holy reliques of the Apoſtles, Martirs confeſſors, & all ſayntes, whoſoeuer the church of Rome hath allowed. what thinke you of this article?

Upon which monday being the 25. day of the ſayd moneth of September before vs and our felow brethrẽ aforeſayd, hauing alſo takẽ vnto vs our reuerẽd brother, Benedict by the grace of God, Biſhop of Bangor, & by our cõmaundement our counſellers and miniſters. Maſter Henry ware officiall of our court of Cant. Philip Morgan D. of both lawes, Howell Kiffin Doctor of yͤ decretals, Iohn Kempe and william Carlton Doctors of law, Ioh. witnã Thomas Palmer, Rob. wombewell, Iohn withe and Robert Chamberlayne, Richard Dotington & Thomas walden profeſſors of diuinity. Alſo Iames Cole, & I. Steuens our notaries appointed on this behalf. They all and euery one being ſworne vpon yͤ holy goſpell of god laying their handes vpon the booke that they ſhoulde geue theyr faythfull counſell in, and vpõ the maner aforeſayde, and in euery ſuch cauſe and to the whole world. By and by appered ſir Robert Morley Knight, Lieuetenant of the Tower of London, and brought with him the foreſayde Syr I. Oldcaſtle ſetting him before vs. Unto whom we gentlye and familiarly rehearſed the actes of the day before paſſed. And as before we tolde him that he both is and was excõmunicate, requiring and intreating him that he would deſire and receiue in due forme the abſolution of the Church. Unto whom the ſaid Syr Iohn then and there plainly anſwered, that in this behalfe he would require no abſolutiõ at our handes but onely of God. Then afterward by gentle and ſoft meanes we deſired and required him to make playne anſwere vnto the articles which were laid againſt him. And firſt of al, as touching the Sacrament of the aultar. To the which article, beſides other thinges he anſwered and ſayd thus: That as Chriſt being here in earth had in him both Godhead & manhoode. Notwithſtanding the Godhead was couered and inuiſible vnder the humanity, the which was manifeſt and viſible in him: ſo likewiſe in the ſacrament of the aultar there is the very body and very bread, bread which we do ſee, the body of Chriſt hidden vnder the ſame which we do not ſee. And playnly denyed, that the fayth as touching the ſaid Sacrament determined by the Romiſh church and holy doctors and ſent vnto him by vs in the ſayd Schedule, to be the determination of the holy Church. But if it be the determination of the Church he ſayd that it was done contrary vnto the ſcriptures, after the church was endowed, and that poyſon was poured into the Churche and not afore. Alſo as touching the Sacrament of penance and confeſſion, he playnly ſayd and affirmed thẽ and there: that if any man were in any greuous ſinne, out of the which he knew not how to riſe, it were expedient and good for him to go vnto ſome holy and diſcreet prieſt to take counſell of him. But that he ſhoulde confeſſe his ſinne to any proper Prieſt, or to any other although he might haue the vſe of him, it is not neceſſary to ſaluation, for ſo much as by only contrition ſuch ſinne can be wiped away, & the ſinner himſelfe purged. As concerning the worſhipping of the croſſe, he ſayd and affirmed that yͤ only body of Chriſt which did hange vpon the croſſe is to be worſhipped. For ſo much as that body alone was & is yͤ croſſe, which is to be worſhipped.

Conuenerunt in vnũ aduerſus dominum & Chriſtum eius. Pſal. 2.

The ſacrament both body and bread in diuers reſpectes.

How confeſſion is to be alowed.

What honour is to be done to the croſſe.

And being demaunded what honor he would do vnto the Image of the croſſe. He aunſwered by expreſſe wordes that he would only do it that honor that he would make it clean and lay it vp ſafe. As touching the power and authority of the keyes, the Archbiſhops, Biſhop, and other prelates, he ſayde that the Pope is very Antichriſt, that is the head: the Archbiſhops, Biſhops and other prelates to be his members, and the Friers to be his tayle. The whiche Pope, Archbiſhops and biſhops a man ought not to obey, but ſo far forth as they be followers of Chriſt & of Peter, in their life, maners & conuerſation, and that he is the ſucceſſor of Peter, whiche is beſt and pureſt in life & maners. Furthermore, yͤ ſaid ſir Iohn ſpreading his handes wyth a loude voyce, ſayd thus to thoſe whiche ſtoode about hym. Theſe men which iudge and would condemne me, wil ſeduce you all & themſelues, and wil lead you vnto hell, therfore take heed of them. when he had ſpoken thoſe wordes, we agayne as oftentimes before with lamentable countenaunce, ſpake vnto the ſaid ſir Iohn, exhorting him wyth as gentle wordes as we might that he would returne to yͤ vnity of the church, to beleue & hold that which the church of Rome doth beleue & hold. who expreſly aunſwered that he would not beleue or holde otherwiſe then he had before declared. wherefore, we perceiuing as it appeared by hym that we coulde not preuayle: at the laſt wyth bitterneſſe of hart, we proceeded to the pronouncing of a definitiue ſentence in this maner.

The pope is Antichriſt, the Byſhops are his members, and fryers his tayle.

The bolde talke of the L. Cobham.

¶In the name of God Amen: We Thom. by the permiſsion of God Archb. and humble miniſter of the holy Church of Cant. primate of all England, and Legate of the Apoſtolicke ſee, in a certayne cauſe or matter of hereſy vpon certeine articles, wherupon ſir Iohn Oldcaſtle knight, Lord Cobham, before vs in the laſt cõuocation of our Clergy of our prouince of Caunterbury holden in the Church of S. Paul in London after diligẽt inquiſition therupon made, was detected & accuſed, & by our ſaid prouince notoriouſly and openly defamed. At the requeſt of the whole Clergy aforeſayd therupon made vnto vs in the ſaid conuocatiõ: with all fauour poſsible that we might (God we take to witnes) lawfully proceding agaynſt him, following the footſteps and example of Chriſt which woulde not the death of a ſinner, but rather that he ſhould be conuerted and liue, we haue endeuoured by all wayes and meanes we might or could to reforme him, and rather reduce him to the vnity of the church: declaring vnto him what the holy vniuerſall Church of Rome doth teach, hold and determine in this behalfe. And albeit that we founde him wandring aſtraye from the Catholicke fayth, and ſo ſtubberne and ſtiffeneckedthat he would not confeſſe his error or cleare himſelfe thereof, to deteſt the ſame: Notwithſtanding we fauouring him with a fatherly affection, and hartily wiſhing and deſiring his preſeruation, prefixed him a certayne competent time to deliberate with himſelf, and if he would to repent and reforme himſelfe. And laſt of all, for ſo much as we perceiued him to be vnreaſonable: obſeruing chiefly thoſe thinges whiche by the lawe are required in this behalfe, with great ſorow and bitternes of hart, we proceeded to the pronouncing of the definitiue ſentence in this maner.

Like will to like.

The name of Chriſt being called vpon ſetting him onely before our eyes. For ſo much as by actes enacted, ſignes exhibited, euidences and diuers tokens, beſides ſundry kinde of proofes, we find the ſaid Sir Iohn to be, & haue ben an heretick, and a folower of heretickes in the fayth and obſeruation of the ſacred vniuerſall Church of Rome, and ſpecially as touching the ſacraments of the Euchariſt and of penaunce. And that as the ſonne of iniquitye and darckeneſſe he hath ſo hardened his hart, that he will not vnderſtand the voyce of his ſhepheard, neither will be allured with his monitions, or conuerted with any fayre ſpeech. Hauing firſt of al ſearched and ſought out, and diligently conſidering the merites of the cauſe aforeſayd, and of the ſayd Sir Iohn, his deſertes and faultes aggrauated through his damnable obſtinacy: Not willing that he that is wicked, ſhould become more wicked, & infect other with his contagion, by the counſell and conſent of the reuerent men of profound wiſedome and diſcretion, our brethren the Lordes Richard biſhop of London, Henry Byſhop of Wincheſter, and Benedict Biſhop of Bangor, and alſo of many other doctours of Deuinity, the decretals and ciuill law, and of many other religious and learned perſons our aſsiſtantes, we haue iudged & declared ſententiallye, and definitiuely condemned the ſayde Syr Iohn Oldecaſtle knight, Lord Cobham, being conuict in and vpon that moſt deteſtable guilt, not willing penitently to returne vnto the vnity of the Church, and in thoſe things which the ſacred vniuerſall Church of Rome doth holde, teach, determine, & ſhew forth. And ſpecially as one erring in the articles aboue written, leauing him from henceforth as an heretick vnto the ſecular iudgement.

So did the Phariſies deliuer Chriſt vnto Pilate.

Moreouer we haue excommunicated, and by theſe writinges do pronounce and excommunicate him as an hereticke, and all other which from henceforth in fauour of his errour, ſhall receiue, defend, or geue him counſell or fauour, or helpe him in this behalfe, as fauourers, defenders, and receiuers of heretickes. And to the intent that theſe premiſes may be knowne vnto all faythfull Chriſtians, we charge and commaund you, that by your ſentence definitiue, you do cauſe the Curates which are vnder you, with a loud and audible voyce in their Churches, when as moſte people is preſent, in theyr mother tongue, through all your Cittyes and dioces to publiſh and declare the ſayd Sir Iohn Oldcaſtle as is before ſayd, to be by vs condemned as an hereticke, ſchimaticke, & one erring in the articles aboue ſayde: and all other which from henceforth in fauour of his errours ſhall receiue or defend hym, geuing him any counſell, comfort, or fauour in this behalfe, to be excommunicate as receiuers, fauorers, and defenders of heretiks. As is more effectually cōteined in the proces. That by ſuch meanes the erroneous opinions of the people (which peraduenture hath otherwiſe conceiued the matter) by thoſe declarations of the trueth, how the matter is, may be cut of. The which thing alſo we will and commaund to be written and ſignified by you, word for word, vnto all our fellow brethren: that they all may manifeſt, publiſh, and declare throughout all theyr cittyes and dioces, the maner and forme of this our proces, and alſo the ſentence by vs geuen, and all other ſingular, the contentes in the ſame. And likewiſe cauſe it to be publiſhed by their Curates whiche are vnder them as touching the day of the receipt of theſe preſents, & what you haue done in the premiſſes, how you and they haue executed this our commaundement. We will that you and they duely and diſtinctly certify vs the buſines being done, by you and theyr letters patentes, according to this tenour. Dated in our Manor of Maidſtone, the 10. of October. an. 1413. and in the 18. yeare of our tranſlation.

Syr Rob. Morley.
The L. Cobham returned agayne to the Tower.

Thus haue you here the iudiciall proces of the biſhops agaynſt this moſt noble chriſten knight, deſcribed by their owne letters and ſtile. After all this, the ſentence of death being geuen, the Lord Cobham was ſent away, Syr Robert Morley carying him agayne vnto the Tower, where as after he had remayned a certaine ſpace, in the night ſeaſon, (it is not known by what meanes) he eſcaped out and fled into Wales, where as he continued by the ſpace of 4. yeares.

¶ A defence of the Lord Cobham, agaynſt Nich. Harpſfield, ſet out vnder the name of Alanus Copus.

Alanus Copus Anglus, with his ſixe Dialogues.
Eroſtratus to get him a fame ſet Dianas temple on fire.

AS I was entring into this ſtory of the Lord Cobham, after the tractation of all the former hiſtoryes, hetherto paſſed, hauing next to ſet vpon this preſent matter, luckely, and as God woulde, in ſuch oportunity of ſeaſon, as may ſeeme, God to worke himſelfe for defence of his Sayntes: commeth to my handes a certayne booke of new found dialogues, compiled in latine by Nich. Harpſfield, ſet out by Alanus Copus, an engliſh man, a perſō to me vnknowen, & obſcure hetherto vnto yͤ world, but now to purchaſe himſelfe a name with Eroſtratus, or with the ſonnes of Enachim, commeth out not with his fiue egges, but with his fyre rayling dialogues. In the which dialogues yͤ ſayd Alanus Copus Anglus (whether he vnder the armour of other, or other vnder the title of his name, I knowe not, nor paſſe not) vncurteouſly behauing himſelfe, intemperately abuſing his time, ſtudy, and pen, forgetting himſelf, neglecting all reſpect of honeſty, and milde modeſty, neither dreading the ſtroke of God, nor paſſing for ſhame, neither fauoring the liuing, nor ſparing the dead, who being aliue as they neuer offended him, ſo now cannot aunſwere for thēſelues being gone: thus prouoking both God and man agaynſt him, after an vnſemely ſort, and with a foule mouth, and a ſtincking breath, rageth and fareth agaynſt deade mens aſhes, taking now yͤ ſpoyle of theyr good name, after theyr bodyes lye ſlayne in the field. His gall and choler being ſo bitter agaynſt them, that he cannot abide any memory after them to remayne vpon the earth. In ſo much that for the hatred of them, he ſpurneth alſo agaynſt me, and fleeth in my face, for that in my Actes and Monumentes, deſcribing the hiſtory of the Churche, I would ſay any thing in the fauour of them, whome the Romiſh Catholickes haue ſo vnmercifully put to death. The anſwere to whoſe book although it woulde require a ſeuerall tractation by it ſelfe (as if Chriſt graunt ſpace and leyſure, hereafter it ſhall not be forgotten) yet becauſe ſuch oportunity of the booke is offered to me at this preſent comming now to the matter of the Lord Cobham, Sir Roger Acton & other, with whom he firſt beginneth to quarell, it ſhall be requiſite a little by the way to cope with this Cope, whatſoeuer he be, ſomuch as trueth ſhall geue me for theyr defence to ſay ſomething. And here to cut of all the offalles of his raylinge talke and vnhoneſt rebukes, whiche I leaue to ſcoldes and men of his profeſſion agaynſt they liſte to brawle, let vs briefly and quietly conſider the matter, for diſcuſſing of yͤ truth. wherin firſt I ſhall deſire the Reader with equality and indifferency to heare both the partes to ſpeake, as well what the Martyrs hence gone and ſlayne could ſay for themſelues, if they were preſent, as alſo what this man here doth obiect againſt them now being gone. And ſo according to the ſame to iudge both vpon them as they deſerue, and of me as they ſhall pleaſe.

Whether the L. Cobham be to be iudged a traytor or a martyr.

Now to the ſcope of maiſter Copes matter, which is this, whether this foreſayd ſir Iohn Oldcaſtle, L. Cobham (firſt to beginne with him) is rather to be cōmēded for a Martyr, or to be reproued for a traytor. And whether that I in writing of him and of ſir Roger Acton, wyth other moe in my former edition, haue delt fraudulently, and corruptly in cōmending thē in theſe Acts & Monumentes or no. Touching the diſcuſſion whereof, firſt I truſt yͭ gētle M. Cope my frend, neither will, nor wel cā deny any part of all yͭ hetherto, touching yͤ ſtory of yͤ L. Cobham hath ben premiſed, who yet al this while was neither traitor to his country, nor rebell to his prince, as by the courſe of his hyſtory hetherto to the reader may well vnderſtād. Firſt in yͤ time of king Henry the fourth, he was ſent ouer to Frāce to the Duke of Orlyance, he did obey. Afterward K. Henry the fift, cōming to the crowne, he was of him likewiſe well liked and fauored, vntill the time that Tho. Arundel with his clergy, cōplayning to the king, made bate betwene thē. Then the Lord Cobham being cited by the Archbyſhoppe, at his citation, woulde not appeare. But ſent for by the king, he obeied and came. Being come, what lowly ſubiection he ſhewed there to the king the pag. 558. declareth. After he yelded an obedient cōfeſſiō of his fayth, it would not be receiued. Then did he appeale to the biſhoppe of Rome, for the which the king tooke great diſpleaſure with him, & ſo was he repealed by the king to the Archb. and committed to the tower, which alſo he did obey. Frō thēce he was brought to his examination once or twiſe: there like a conſtant martyr and witneſſe of the trueth, he ſtood to his confeſſion and that vnto the very ſentence of death defined agaynſt him. If this be not the effect of a true Martyr, let Alanus Copus ſay what he wil, or what he can. This I ſay, at leaſt I doubt, whether the ſayd Alanus Copus Anglus, put to the like triall himſelfe, would venter ſo narrow a poynt of martirdome for his religion, as this chriſtian knight did for his. Certes it hath not yet appeared.

The L. Cobham true and obedient to Kyng Henry 4.
The Lorde Cobham in the begynning fauoured of kyng Henry the 5.
The kynges diſpleaſure procured agaynſt the L. Cobham by popiſh prelates.

The L. Cobham obedient to the kyng.
The L. Cobham conſtāt in his fayth, to the ſentence of death.

To proceed after this deadly ſentēce, was thus awarded agaynſt him, the ſayd Lord Cobhā was thē returneth agayne vnto the tower, which he with patience and meekenes did alſo obey: from the which tower if he afterward by the Lordes prouidēce did eſcape, whether hath Alanus Copus, herein more to prayſe God for offring to him the benefite, or to blame the man for taking that which was offred. What Catholicke in all Louen hauing his houſe ouer hys head on fire, will not be glad to haue if he might, yͤ dore ſet open to flee the perill? or els why did Alanus Copus flye hys country hauing ſo litle need, if this mā, bleding almoſt vnder the butchers axe, might not enioy ſo great an offer of ſo lucky deliueraunce?

The L. Cobham worthy the name of a Martyr. The name of a martyr what it ſignifieth.

Thus hitherto I truſt, the cauſe of the Lord Cobham, ſtandeth firme and ſtrong agaynſt all daūger of iuſt reprehenſion. who being (as ye haue heard) ſo faythfull and obedient to God: ſo ſubmiſſe to his king: ſo ſoūd in hys doctrine: ſo conſtant in his cauſe: ſo afflicted for the trueth: ſo ready & prepared to death: as we haue ſufficiently declared not out of vncertayne & doubtful chronicles, but out of the true originals & inſtrumēts remaining in aūcient records: what lacketh now, or what ſhould let to the contrary, but that he declaring himſelf ſuch a martyr, that is a witnes to the verity (for the which alſo at laſt he ſuffred ẏ fire) may therfore worthily be crowned with ẏ title of a martir which is in Greek as much as a witnes bearer.

Calumnis.

Syr Roger Actō knight M. Iohn Brown Eſquire. Iohn Beuerley preacher.

But here nowe ſteppeth in Dame ἡ διαβόλη, with her coſē ſcold Alecto. &c. who neither learning to hold her toūg nor yet to ſpeak wel, muſt needs find here a knot in a ruſh and beginning now to quarrell inferreth thus: But after (ſayth he) that the Lord Cobham was eſcaped out of the tower, his felowes and confederates connēted themſelues together, ſeditiouſly agaynſt ẏ king & againſt their coūtry: A great crime no doubt M. Cope, if it be true, ſo if it be not true, the greter blame returneth vnto your ſelf, ſo to enter this action of ſuch ſlaunder, vnles the ground wherupō ye ſtand, be ſure. Firſt what felowes of ẏ L. Cobhā were theſe you meane of? Sir Roger Acton ye ſay, maiſter Brown & Iohn Beuerley, with 36. other hanged and burned in the ſayd field of S. Giles. A marueilous matter, ẏ ſuch a great multitude of 20000. ſpecified in ſtory, ſhoulde riſe againſt ẏ king, & yet but 3. perſons only known and named. Thē to proceed further, I would aſke of maiſter Cope what was the end of this conſpiracy, to rebell againſt the king, to deſtroy their country, and to ſubuert the Chriſtian fayth, for ſo purporteth the ſtory. As like true the one as the other. For euen as it is like, that they being Turkes went about to deſtroy the fayth of Chriſt wherin they died, and to ſubuert their country wherin they were bred: euen ſo like it is that they went about to deſtroy the king, whom God and their conſcience taught to obey.

Rob. Fabian proued with an vntruth.

An vntruth in Alanus Copus.

Yet further proceedeth this fumiſh promoter in his accuſation, & ſayth moreouer: that theſe foreſayd felowes and adherentes of the Lord Cobham, were in the field aſſēbled and there incamped in a great number agaynſt the king & how is this proued? by Robert Fabian which appeareth to be as true, as that which in the ſayde Robert Fabian followeth, in the ſame place where he affirmeth that Io. Cledon, and Richard Turmin, were burnt in the ſame yere, being 1413. when in deede by the true Regiſters, they were not burnt before the yere of our lord, 1415. But what wil maiſter Cope ſay, if the originall copy of the inditemēt of theſe pretenſed conſpirators doe teſtify, that they were not there aſſembled or preſent in the field as your accuſation pretendeth? But they purpoſed (will you ſay) and intended to come. The purpoſe and intent of a mans mind is hard for you and me to iudge, where as no fact appeareth. But geue their intēt was ſo to come: Yet might they not come to thoſe thickets neare to the fielde of Saint Giles, hauing Beuerley theyr Preacher with them (as ye ſay, your ſelf) as well to pray & to preach in that woody place, as wel as to fight? Is this ſuch a ſtraunge thing in ẏ church of Chriſt, in time of perſecution, for chriſtians to reſort into deſolate woods, and ſecrete thickets, from the ſight of enemies, when they would aſſemble in praying and hearing the word of God? In Queene Maryes tyme was not the ſame coulour of treaſon obiected agaynſt George Egle and other moe, for frequenting and vſing into backſides and fields, and ſuffered for that, whereof he was innocent & guiltleſſe? Did not Adam Damlipe dye in like caſe of treaſon, for hauing a French crowne geuen him, at his departure out of Rome, by Cardinal Poole? what can not cankred calumnia inuēt, when ſhe is diſpoſed to cauill? It was not the Cardinals crowne that made him a traytour, but it was the hatred of his preaching, that ſtyrred vp the accuſer.

Praying and preaching in backe corners a common thyng in time of perſecution.

Ill will taketh all thinges to worſt meaning.

In Fraunce what aſſemblyes haue there beene in late yeares of good and innocent chriſtiās, congregating together in backfieldes & couertes in great routes to heare the preaching of Gods holy word, & to pray: yea and not without their weapon alſo, for their owne ſafegard, & yet neuer intēded nor minded any rebelliō againſt their king. wherfore, in caſes of Religion it may & doth happē many times that ſuch congregations may meete without intent of any treaſon ment. But howſoeuer the intent and purpoſe was of theſe fore ſaid cōfederats of the Lord Cobham, whether to come, or what to do (ſeing this is playne by recordes, as is aforeſaid, that they were not yet come vnto ẏ place) how will M. Cope now iuſtify his wordes, ſo confidently affirming, that they were there aſſembled ſeditiouſly together in the field of S. Giles agaynſt the king? And marke here I beſech thee (gentle Reader) how vnlikely and vntidely the poynts of this tale are tide and hang together (I will not ſay without all ſubſtaunce of truth, but without all faſhion of a cleanly lye) wherin theſe accuſers in this matter ſeeme to me, to lacke ſome part of Simons Arte, in conueiing their narration ſo vnartificiallye. Firſt (ſay they) the king was come firſt with his garriſon, vnto the field of S. Giles. And then after the king was there incamped, cōſequently the fellowes of the Lord Cobham (the Captayne being away) came & were aſſembled in the ſaid field where the king was, againſt the king: & yet not knowing of the king, to the number of xx. thouſand: and yet neuer a ſtroak in that field geuen. And furthermore of all this xx. thouſād aforeſayd, neuer a mans name knowne, but onely three, to witte, ſir Roger Acton, ſir Iohn Browne, and Iohn Beuerley, a preacher. How this gear is clamperd together let the reader iudge, and beleue as he ſeeth cauſe.

An other vntruth in Alanus Copus.

An vnlikely tale.

The L. Cobham no traytor.

Alanus Copus pag. 833. lin. 11.

But geue all this to be true, although by no demōſtration it can be proued, yet by the Popes diſpenſation (which in this earth is almoſt omnipotent) be it graunted: that after the king had take S. Giles field before, the cōpanions of the Lord Cobham afterward comming and aſſembling in the thickets neare to the ſayd field, to fight ſeditiouſly agaynſt the king, agaynſt their country, & agaynſt the fayth of Chriſt, to the nūber of xx. thouſand, where no ſtroke being geuen, ſo many were takē, that al ẏ priſons of London were full, and yet neuer a mans name knowen of all thys multitude, but onely three: All this I ſay, being imagined to be true, thē followeth to be demaūded of M. Cope, whether the Lord Cobham was here preſent with this company in the field, or not? Not, in perſon (ſaith Cope) but with his mind and with his counſell he was preſent, and addeth this reaſon, ſaying: And therfore he being brought agayn, after his eſcape, was conuict both of treaſon and hereſye, & therfore ſuſteining a double puniſhmēt was both hanged and burnt for the ſame. &c. And how is al this proued? By Robert Fabian, he ſayth, whereunto briefly I aunſwere, that Rob. Fabian in that place maketh no ſuch mention of the Lord Cobham aſſiſting or conſenting to them either in mind or in counſell. His wordes be theſe: That certaine adherentes of Sir Iohn Oldcaſtle aſſembled in the fielde neare to S. Giles, in great number: of whom was ſir Roger Acton, ſir Iohn Browne, and Iohn Beuerley. The which with 36. mo in number were after conuict of hereſy and treaſon and for the ſame were hanged and burnt, within the ſayd field of S. Gyles. &c. Thus much in Fabian touching the commotion & condemnation of theſe mē: but that the Lorde Cobham, was there preſent with thē in any parte, either of conſent or counſell, as Alanus Copus Anglus pretendeth, that is not found in Fabian, but is added of his liberall cornu copiæ, wherof he is ſo copious and plentifull, that he may keep an open ſhop of ſuch vnwrittē vntruethes, whiche he maye aforde verye good cheape I thinke, being ſuch a plentifull artificer.

Alanus Copus taken with an other vntruth.

Ex ſtatuto. Reg. Hen. 5. an... cap. 7.

But here will bee obiected agaynſt mee the wordes of the ſtatute made the ſeconde yeare of king Henry the fifte wherupon this aduerſary triumphing with no litle glory ὥσπερ τὴν ὀλυμπιάδα ἀνελόμενος, thinketh himſelfe to haue double vauntage againſt me: firſt in prouinge theſe foreſayd complices & adherents of the Lord Cobham, to haue made inſurrection agaynſt the king, and ſo to be traytors. Secondly, in conuicting that to be vntrue, where as in my former booke of Actes and Monumentes I doe reporte: how that after the death of ſir Roger Acton of Browne, & Beuerley, a Parliament was holden at Leiceſter, where a ſtatute was made to this effect: that all and ſingular, ſuche as wer of wickliffes learning, if they would not geue ouer (as in caſe of felony and other treſpaſſes, looſing all theyr goodes to the king) ſhoulde ſuffer death in two manner of kinds, that is, they ſhould firſt be hanged for treaſō againſt the king, and then be burned for hereſy agaynſt God. &c.

The former edition of Acts and Mon. pag. 175.

Wherupon, remaineth now in examining this obiectiō and aunſwering to the ſame, that I purge both them of treaſon, and my ſelfe of vntruth, ſo farre as truth and fidelity in Gods cauſe ſhal aſſiſt me herin. Albeit in beginning firſt my hiſtory of Eccleſiaſtical matters, wherin I hauing nothing to do with abatement of cauſes iudiciall, but onely folowing the ſimple narration of things done and executed: neuer ſuſpected that euer any would be ſo captious with me, or ſo niſe noſed, as to preſſe me with ſuch narrow points of the law, in trying and diſcuſſing euery cauſe and matter ſo exactly, & ſtraining (as ye woulde ſay) the bowels of the ſtatute lawe ſo rigorouſly agaynſt me. Yet for ſo much as I am therunto conſtrained now by this aduerſary, I will firſt lay open all the whole ſtatute made yͤ ſecond yeare of this foreſayd Henry the fift, after the death of the foreſayd ſir Roger Acton and his fellowes, at the Parliament holden at Leyceſter. an. 1415. That done, I will note vpon the wordes therof, ſo as by the circumſtaunces of the ſame may appeare what is to be cōcluded, either for the defence of theyr innocencye, or for the accuſation of this aduerſary. The tenour and purport of the ſtatute here vnder enſueth.

¶ The wordes and contentes of the ſtatute made an. 2. Henrici. 5. cap. 7.

The preface or preamble of the ſtatute.

Forasmuch as great (A) rumors, congregations, and inſurrections here in England by diuers of yͤ king his maieſties leege people haue bene made here of late, as well by thoſe which were of the ſect of hereſy called Lolardy, as by others of their cōfederatiō, excitatiōs, & abetmēt: to yͤ intēt (B) to adnulle & ſubuert yͤ chriſtian fayth & the law of God within the ſame Realme, as alſo to (C) deſtroy our soueraigne Lord the king himſelfe and (D) all maner of eſtates of the ſame his Realme, as well ſpirituall as temporall (E) and alſo all maner pollicy, & the lawes of the land. Finally the ſame our Lord the king, to the honor of God, in conſeruation and fortification of the Chriſtian fayth, & alſo in ſaluation of his royall eſtate, & of the eſtate of all his realme, willing to prouide a more open & more due puniſhmēt agaynſt the malice of ſuch heretickes & Lolardes, then hath bene had or vſed in that caſe heretofore, ſo that for the feare of the ſame lawes, and puniſhment, ſuch hereſyes and Lolardies may the rather ceaſe in time to come:

Here it appeareth at whoſe ſute and ſupplication this ſtatute was ſet forward as alſo the cauſe why.

Aſtiterūt reges & Phariſæi.

By the aduiſe and aſſēt aforeſayd, & at the prayer of the ſayd commons hath ordeined & eſtabliſhed: that eſpecially the Chaūcellor, the Treaſurer, the Iuſtices of the one bēch and of the other, Iuſtices of Aſſiſe, Iuſtices of peace, Shiriffes, Maiors, and Bailiffes of Cityes and Townes, and all other officers hauing the gouernement of people either now preſent or which for the time ſhalbe, do make an othe in taking of their charge and offices, to extend their whole payne and diligence to put out, to do to put out, ceaſe & deſtroy, all maner of hereſyes and errors commonly called Lolardies within the places in which they exerciſe their charges and offices, from time to time, with all their power: and that they aſſiſt, fauor, and maintaine the ordinaries and their commiſſaries ſo often as they or any of them ſhal be therunto required by the ſaid ordinaries or their cōmiſſaryes: So that the ſayd officers and miniſters, when they trauell or ride to areſt any Lolard or to make any aſſiſtēce at the (F) inſtance and requeſt of the ordinaries or their cōmiſſaryes, by vertue of this ſtatute: that yͤ ſame ordinaries & commiſſaryes do (G) pay for their coſts reaſonably. And that the ſeruices of the king (vnto whō the officers be firſt ſworne) be preferred before al other ſtatutes for the liberty of holy Church & the miniſters of the ſame: And eſpecially for the correction and puniſhment of hereticks & Lolards, made before theſe dayes & not repealed, but being in theyr force. And alſo that all perſons conuict of hereſy of whatſoeuer eſtate, condition or degree they be, by the ſayd ordinaries or their cōmiſſaries left vnto the ſecular power according to the lawes of holy Church, ſhall leeſe & forfayte all theyr lands and tenements, which they haue in fee ſimple in maner and forme as followeth: That is to ſay, that the king ſhall haue all the landes & tenementes, which the ſayd conuictes haue in fee ſimple & which be immediatlye holden of him, as forfayted: And that the other Lordes of whom the lands & tenements of ſuch conuictes be holden immediatly, after that the king is therof ſeiſed & anſwered of the (H) yeare, day, & waſt: ſhall haue lyuery therof out of the hands of the king of the landes & tenements aforeſayde ſo of them holden, as hath bene vſed in caſe of attaynder of felonies, except the lands and tenements, which be holden of the ordinaries or their commiſſaries, before whom anye ſuch empeached of hereſye be conuict, (I) which landes and tenements ſhall wholy remaine to the king as forfeit: And moreouer, that all the goodes and cattels of ſuch conuicted, be forfayt to our right ſoueraigne Lord the king, ſo that no perſon conuict of hereſye & left vnto the ſecular power (according to the lawes of holy Church) do forfeit his landes before that he be dead. And if any ſuch perſon ſo conuicted be enfeoffed, whether it be by fine, or by deede, or without deed, in landes and tenements, rentes, or ſeruices, in fee or otherwiſe in whatſoeuer maner, or haue any other poſſeſſions or cattels by gift or graunt of any perſon or perſons, to the vſe of any other then only to the vſe of ſuch conuicts: That the ſame landes, tenementes, rentes, nor ſeruices, nor other ſuch poſſeſſions nor cattelles ſhall not be forfeite vnto our ſoueraigne Lord the king in no maner wiſe.

(F) (G) (H) (I)

And moreouer, that the Iuſtices of the kinges bench, the Iuſtices of peace, & Iuſtices of Aſſiſe, haue full power to inquire of all ſuch, which hold any errors or hereſies, as Lolards and who be their mayntayners, receiuers, fautors, and ſuſteiners, common writers of ſuch bookes, as well of their ſermons as ſcholes, conuenticles, congregations and confederacies, & that this clauſe be put in the cōmiſſions of the Iuſtices of peace. And if any perſons be indited of any of the points aboue ſaid, that the ſayd Iuſtices haue power to award agaynſt them a Capias, and that the Shriffe be bound to areſt yͤ perſon or perſons ſo indited as ſoone as he can finde them, either by himſelfe or by his officers. And for ſo much as the cogniſance of hereſies, errors, or Lolardies, appertain to the Iudges of holy church, and not vnto the ſecular Iudges, that ſuch perſons indited (K) be deliuered vnto the Ordinaries of the places, or to theyr Commiſſaryes by Indentures betwene them to be made, within x. dayes after their areſt, or ſooner if it may be done, to be therof acquited or conuict by the lawes of holy church in caſe ſuch perſōs be not indited of any other thing, the cogniſaunce wherof appertayneth to the Iudges & ſecular officers, in which caſe after they ſhalbe acquited or deliuered before yͤ ſecular iudges of ſuch thinges as apperteineth to yͤ ſecular Iudges, they ſhalbe ſent in ſafe cuſtody vnto yͤ ſaid Ordinaries or their commiſſaries, & to thē to be deliuered by Indentures as is aforeſayd, to be acquited or cōuicted of the ſame hereſyes, errors and Lolardies, as is aforeſaid, according to the lawes of holy church, & that within the terme aboueſayde. Prouided, that the ſaide indightments be not taken in euidence (L) but onely for information before the Iudges ſpirituall, agaynſt ſuch perſons indighted: but that yͤ Ordinaries begin their proces againſt ſuch perſōs indited, in the ſame maner, as though no ſuch indgement were, hauing no regard to ſuch inditementes. And if any be indited of hereſy, error, or Lolardy, and takē by yͤ Shiriffe or any other officer of the king, he may be let to mayneprise within the ſayde x. dayes, by good ſurety for whō the ſaid Shriffes or other officers wil anſwer, ſo that the perſon ſo indighted be readye to be deliuered vnto the ſayd Ordinaries, or to their Commiſſaryes, before the end of the tenth day aboue recited, if he may be any meanes for ſicknes. And that euery Ordinary haue ſufficiēt Commiſſaries or Commiſſary, abiding in euery Countye in place notable, ſo that if any ſuch perſon indited be taken, that the ſayd Commiſſaryes or Commiſſary may be warned in the notable place of his abiding, by the Shiriffe or any of hys officers to come vnto the Kinges Gayle within the ſayd Countye, there to receiue the ſame perſon ſo indighted by Indenture as is aforeſayd: And that in the Iuqueſtes in this caſe takē, the Shiriffes and other officers vnto whom it apperteineth, do impanell good and ſufficient perſōs not ſuſpected nor procured, that is to ſay, ſuche as haue at the leaſt euery one of thē that ſhal be ſo impanelled in ſuch inqueſtes, within the Realme, a hundred ſhyllinges by the yere of lands, tenements, or of rent, vpon payne to leeſe to the kings vſe xx. poūd. And that thoſe which ſhalbe impanelled vpon ſuch enqueſtes at ſeſſions and gayles, haue euery one of them to the value of xl. ſhillings by the yeare. And if any ſuch perſon areſted, whether it be by the Ordinaries or the officers of the king, (M) either eſcape or breake priſon before he be therof acquit before the Ordinary: that then all his goods and cattelles, which he had at the day of ſuch areſt, ſhall be forfeite to the king: And his landes and tenementes which he had the ſame day, be ſeiſed alſo into the kings handes, and that the king haue the profites therof from the ſame day vntill he render himſelfe to the ſayde priſon from whence he eſcaped. And that the aforeſaid Iuſtices haue full power to enquire of all ſuche eſcapes and breaking of priſons, and alſo of the lands tenements goods and cattels of ſuch perſons indighted. Prouided, that if any ſuch perſon endighted, doe not returne vnto the ſayde priſon, and dyeth (not being conuict) that then it ſhall bee lawfull for his heyres, to enter into the landes and tenements of his or their aūceſter without any other ſute made vnto the king for this cauſe. And that all thoſe which haue liberties or franchiſes royall in England, as the coūty of Cheſter, the county and liberty of Durham and other like: And alſo al the Lordes which haue iuriſdictions and franchiſes royall in wales where the kings writs do not run, haue like power to execute and put in execution in al pointes, theſe articles by them or by their officers in like maner as doe the Iuſtices and other the kinges officers aboue declared.

Statut. an.2 Hen.5. cap. 5.

let vs conſider the reaſons & obiections of this aduerſary, who grounding peraduenture vpon ẏ preface or preamble of this foreſaid ſtatute: will proue thereby the L. Cobham, and Sir Roger Acton, with the reſt of their abettours, to haue bin traitors to their king and their countrey. Wherunto I anſwere, firſt in generall, that although the face or preface prefixed before the ſtatute, may ſhew and declare ẏ cauſe & occaſion originall why the ſtatute was made: yet the making of the ſtatute importeth no neceſſary probatiō of the preface alwaies to be true that goeth before, which being but a colour to induce the making therof: geueth no force materiall therunto, nor is any neceſſary part of ẏ body of the ſaid ſtatute. But onely adhereth as a declaration of the circumſtance therof, and ſometime is cleane omitted and differeth much from the ſubſtance of the ſame. For as ſtatutes in ciuile policie moſt commonly do tend to a publike end & are generall: ſo prefaces before ſtatutes, which moſt commonly declare the cauſe or beginning therof, are priuate: and do ſtand only but vpō particular facts, which either of ill will & diſpleaſure may be ſuggeſted, or by colour may be exaggerated, or for feare may be deceiued, at leaſt ſuſpected, as many ſuſpicions do oftimes riſe in princes heads, through falſe ſurmiſes, & malicious cōplaints of certaine euill diſpoſed about them, wherby many cruell lawes riſing vpon a falſe ground, are promulgate to ẏ ruine of much innocēt bloud. Example wherof we haue not onely in this preſent ſtatute, an.2.Reg. Hen.5. but alſo in the like ſtatute, commonly called the ſtatute Ex officio vel de comburendo, made by this kings father and predeceſſour, an.2.Henr.4.cap.5. In the preface of which bloudy ſtatute, is contained an other like cōplaint of the Prelates & clergie, not ſo hainous, as alſo moſt ſhamefully falſe & vntrue againſt the poore Lollards, as by the wordes of the complaint may appeare, beginning: Excellentiſsimo & Gratioſiſ. principi, &c. Wherin, moſt falſely they ſlaunder and miſreport the true ſeruaunts of Chriſt to be Lollardes, heretiques, ſubuerters of the common wealth, deſtroiers of the Chriſtian faith, enemies to all good lawes, and to the Church of Chriſt. The wordes of which ſtatute proceeding much after ẏ like courſe as doth this preſent ſtatute, may eaſely bewray the vntruth and falſe ſurmiſe therof, if thou pleaſe (gentle reader) to marke and conferre the wordes according as they are there to be read and ſeene, as followeth: Conuenticulas & confederationes faciunt, ſcholas tenent & exercent, libros conficiunt atque ſcribunt, populum nequiter inſtruunt & informant, & ad ſeditionem ſeu inſurrectionem excitant, quantum poſſunt, & magnas diſſentiones in populo faciunt, & alia diuerſa enormia auditui horrenda in dies perpetrant, in fidei cathol. & eccleſiæ ſubuerſionem, diuinique cultus diminutionem, ac etiam deſtructionem ſtatus, iurium, & libertatum dictæ eccleſiæ Anglic. And after a few wordes: Ad omnem iuris, & rationis ordinem atque regimen, penitus deſtruendum, &c. He that is or ſhall be acquainted with old hyſtories, and with the vſuall practiſes of Sathan the old enemie of Chriſt, from the firſt beginning of the primitiue Church vnto this preſent time, ſhall ſee this to be no newes, but a common and (as ye would ſay) a quotidian feuer among Chriſtes children, to be vexed with falſe accuſations, and cruell ſlaunders.

Example of Nemeſion Martir. pag. 62.

Nemeſion the Egyptian and true Martyr of Chriſt, was he not firſt accuſed to be a felon? And when that could not be proued, he was condēned at the ſame iudgemēt for a Chriſtiā: and therfore being caſt into bands, was ſcourged, by the commandement of the Preſident double to the other felons: & at length was burned with ẏ theeues, although he neuer was found theef nor felon vide page. 62.

Example of Cyprian. pag. 69.

Againſt Cyprian in like ſort it was ſlaunderouſly obiected by Galenus Maximus proconſull: Quòd diu ſacrilega mente vixerit, & nephariæ ſibi conſpirationis homines adiunxerit. That he had long continued with a minde full of ſacrilege, and that he had gathered vnto him men of wicked conſpiracie, page. 69.

Example of Iuſtine the Martyr. Example of Cornelius Biſh. of Rōe pag. 65.

So Iuſtinus martyr, what falſe and criminous accuſations ſuffered he by Creſcens? Cornelius Byſhop of Rome and Martyr, was accuſed of Decius, quòd ad Cyprianum literas daret contra rempub. That he wrote letters vnto Cyprian againſt the common wealth vide page. 65.

Lawes and ſtatutes grounded vpō falſe cauſes againſt the Chriſtians.

To conſider the lawes and ſtatutes, made by tyraunts and Emperours in the firſt perſecutions of the primatiue Church, againſt the innocent ſeruaunts of Chriſt, and to compare the ſame with the lawes and ſtatutes in this latter perſecution vnder Antichriſt: A man ſhall find, that as they agreed all in like crueltie, ſo was there no great difference in falſe forging of pretenſed cauſes and crimes deuiſed. For as then, the Chriſtians were wrongfully accuſed of the Gentiles for inſurrections & rebellions againſt the Emperours and Empire, for beeing enemies to all mankind, for murdering of infāts, for worſhipping the ſunne (becauſe they praied toward the Eaſt) for worſhipping alſo the head of an Aſſe, &c. vide pag. 54. 36. vpon the rumors wherof, diuers and ſundry lawes and ſtatutes were enacted, ſome engrauen in braſſe, some otherwiſe wrote, againſt them: So in this foreſaid ſtatute. an.2.Henr.cap.5 alſo, an.2.Henr.4.cap.15. and in ſuch other ſtatutes or inditements made and conceiued againſt the Lolards: the caſe is not ſo ſtrange but it may credibly be ſuppoſed, that the making therof did riſe rather vpō malice & hatred againſt their religion conceaued, then vpon any iuſt cauſe miniſtred of their partes, whome they did wrongfully charge & accuſe. Like as in time of Domitianus, for feare of Dauids ſtocke, all the nephewes of Iude the Lords brother in fleſh, were accuſed to the Emperour, page 48. And alſo the like feare & hatred ſtirred vp other Emperours, and the Senate of Rome, to proceed with perſecuting lawes againſt the Chriſtian flocke of Chriſt. Euſeb. Lib.5. cap. 21. whereupon, roſe vp thoſe malitious ſlaunders, falſe ſurmiſes, infamous lies, and wrongfull accuſations againſt the Chriſtians: ſo that what crimes ſoeuer either malice could inuent, or raſh ſuſpition could miniſter, that was imputed againſt them, vide page 48.

The perſecuting ſtatutes in the primitiue church and of the latter church cōpared.

Feare & hatred cauſers of perſecution.

Vide ſupra, pag.48.

Not vnlike alſo it may ſeeme, that the Pope with hys Prelates fearing and miſdoubting leaſt the proceding of the Goſpell preached by theſe perſons ſhould ouerthrowe the ſtate of their maieſtie: Did therfore by ſiniſter accuſations, inflame the harts of Princes againſt them, and vnder ſome colour couert, to ſhadow their cloked hatred, deuiſed theſe and other like crimes which were not true, but which might cleanely ſerue their purpoſe.

The matter debated by recordes, whether the L. Cobham and ſir Roger Acton were traytors or not.

This hetherto haue I ſaid as in a generall ſumme anſwering to the preamble of the foreſayd ſtatute, for the defence of Sir Iohn Oldcaſtle, and Sir Roger Acton, and other, not as defining preciſely what was or was not (for here I may ſay with Paule, that as I was not preſent at the deed doing, ſo with him I may alſo leaue the ſame at large.) But as one by traſing the footeſteps of the truth, as by all coniectures hunting out in this matter, what is moſt like, would but onely ſay my mynde ſine ſtrepitu (as Lawyers ſay) & ſine figura iudicij.

Now conſequently it followeth, that we deſcend to the ſpeciall points and particulars of the foreſaid preamble: to conſider what thereof may be collected, or neceſſarily is to be iudged, either for profe or diſprofe, of this foreſaide Sir Iohn Oldcaſtle and his felowes.

(A) Rumors. Congregations. Inſurrections.

¶ (A) And firſt, where the proheme of this ſtatute beginneth with rumours, congregatiōs, and inſurrections, &c. As it is not like, that if theſe men had intended any forcible entrees or rebelliō againſt ẏ king, they would haue made any rumours therof before the deed done: ſo is it more credibly to be ſuppoſed, all theſe floriſhes of wordes to be but wordes of courſe, or of office, and to ſauer rather of the rankenes of the inditers penne, who diſpoſed either per amplificationem rhetoricam to ſhew his copy, or els per malitiam Papiſticam, to aggrauate ẏ crime. And to make mountains of mollhilles, firſt of rumours maketh congregations, & from congregations riſeth vp to inſurrections: where as in all theſe rumours, congregations, & inſurrections, yet neuer a blow was geuen, neuer a ſtroke was ſtroken, no bloud ſpilt, no furniture nor inſtruments of war, no ſigne of battaile, yea no expreſſe ſignification either of any rebellious word, or malitious fact deſcribed, neither in recordes, nor yet in any Chronicle. Againe, if theſe rumours were wordes ſpoken againſt the king, as calling him a tirant, an vſurper of the crowne, the Prince of Prieſtes, &c. why then be none of theſe wordes expreſſed in their inditements, or left in recordes? Doth M. Cope thinke for a man to be called a traitour, to be enough, to make him a traytour, vnleſſe ſome euident profe be brought for him to bee ſo in deed, as he is called? Rumours (ſayth he) congregations, and inſurrections were made. Rumours are vncertaine: Congregations haue bene and may bee among Chriſten men in dangerous times for good purpoſes, and no treaſon againſt their princes ment. The terme of inſurrections may be added ἐκ τοῦ περίσσου by practiſe, or ſurmiſe of the Prelates and pen men, who to bring them the more in hatred of the king, might adde this rather of their owne gentlenes, then of the others deſeruing. Certayne it is and vndoubted, that the Prelates in thoſe dayes being ſo mightely inflamed againſt theſe Lollards, were not altogether behind for their parts, nor vtterly idle in this matter, but practiſed againſt them what they could, firſt to bring them into hatred, and then to death.

Examples of which kinde of practiſe among the Popiſh Cleargy, haue not lacked neither before, nor ſince. Moreouer, if theſe men had made ſuch a rebellious inſurrection againſt the king, as is pretended in the preamble before this ſtatute, which were a matter of high treaſon: How chaunceth then, that the whole body of the ſtatute folowing after the ſaid preface or preamble, runneth in all the parts and braunches thereof both in maner of arreſt, of inditement, information, requeſt, alowance of officers, cogniſance of ordinaries, of the forefact, &c. vpon caſes of hereſie and not of treaſon, as by particular tractation ſhall be (Chriſt willing) declared.

Inſurrection of the Lollordes againſt the king not lykely.

And for ſo much as theſe men be ſo greuouſly accuſed of Alanus Copus, for congregating & riſing againſt their K. & the whole Realme, if I had ſo much layſure to defend, as he hath pleaſure to diffame: Here might be demaunded of him, to keepe him ſome further pley (touching this mighty inſurrection, where as they came in nūber of xx. thouſand againſt the king) in what order of battaile ray they marched, what Captaines, vnder Captaines, and pety Captaines they had to guide the wyngs, and to lead the army? whether they were horſemen, or footemen. If they were horſemen (as is pretenſed) what ment they then to reſort to the Thicketes neare to S. Gyles field, which was no meet place for horſes to ſtirre? If they were footemen: how ſtandeth that with the author, which reporteth them to be horſemē? Moreouer, is to be demanded, what inſignes or flagges, what ſhot, what pouder, what armour, weapōs, and other furniture of war: alſo what treaſure of money to wage ſo many, to yͤ nūber of xx. thouſand, what trumpets, drommes, & other noiſe neceſſary for yͤ purpoſe they had. All theſe preparations for ſuch an enterpriſe is requiſite & neceſſary to be had. And peraduenture, if truth were well ſought, it would be found at lēgth, that in ſtead of armies and weapon, they were comming onely with theyr bookes, and with Beuerlay their preacher, into thoſe thickets. But as I was not there preſent at the fact (as is before ſaid) ſo haue I neither certeinely to define vpon theyr caſe, nor yet M. Cope to exclame againſt them, vnles peraduenture he taking an occaſion of the time, will thus argue againſt them: That becauſe it was the hoate moneth of Ianuary, the 2. day after the Epiphany, therefore it is like, that Sir Iohn Oldcaſtle with xx. thouſand Lollards camped together in the fields in al the heate of the wether, to deſtroy the king and all the nobles, and to make hymſelfe Regent of England. And why not as well the King, as regent of England, ſeeing all the nobles ſhould haue bene deſtroyed, & he onely left alone to reigne by himſelfe?

(B)

A ſlaūder of the L. Cobham, that he intēded to deſtroy Chriſten fayth.

¶ It followeth more in the preamble of yͤ foreſaid ſtatute (B) to adnull, deſtroy, and ſubuert the Chriſten fayth, and the law of God, & holy Church, &c. He yͤ was the forger & inuēter of this report (as it appeareth to proceed frō the Prelates) ſeemeth no cunning Dædalus, nor halfe hys craftes maiſter in lying for the whetſtone. Better he might haue learned of Sinō in Virgill, more artificially to haue framed and conueied his narration. Which although in no caſe could ſound like any truth, yet ſome colour of probabilitie ſhould haue bene ſet vpon it, to giue it ſome countenance of a like tale. As if he had firſt declared the L. Cobham to haue bin before in ſecret cōfederacie with the great Turk, or if he had made him ſome termagāt or Mahound out of Babylonia, or ſome Herode of Iudea, or ſome Antichriſt out of Rome, or ſome grandpanch Epicure of this world: and had ſhewed, that he had receiued letters from the great Souldan, to fight againſt the faith of Chriſt and law of God, then had it appeared ſomwhat more credible, that the ſaid Sir Iohn Oldcaſtle with his ſect of hereſie, went about to adnull, deſtroie, and ſubuert the Chriſtian faith, and law of God within the Realme of England, &c.

But now, where will either he or M. Cope finde men ſo mad to beleeue, or ſo ingenious yͭ can imagine this to be true: that the Lord Cobham (being a Chriſtian) and ſo faithfull a Chriſtiā, would or did euer cogitate in his mind to deſtroy and adnull the faith of Chriſt in the Realme of England? Whatſoeuer the report of this purſuant or preface ſaith, I report me vnto the indifferent Reader, how ſtandeth this with any face of truth? That he which before through the reading of Wickliffes works, had bene ſo earneſtly cōuerted to the law of God, who had alſo approued himſelfe ſuch a faithfull ſeruant of Chriſt, that for the faith of Chriſt he being examined and tried before the Prelates, page. 553. not only ventred his life: but ſtood conſtant vnto the ſentence of death, defined againſt him: being a cōdemned and a dead man by law, Et qui, quantum ad eius deuotionem pertinet & timorem, paſſus ſit, quicquid pati potuit, who had as much as to deuotion and feare appertained, ſuffered already what he might or could ſuffer, as Cyprian ſaid by Cornelius. That he (I ſay) which a little before in the moneth of September, ſtoode ſo conſtant in defence of Chriſtes faith, would now in the moneth of Ianuary riſe to deſtroy, adnull, & ſubuert Chriſtes faith, and the law of God, and holy Church within the Realme of England?

Cyprian. lib.4. Epiſt.2.

How can it be not like only but poſſible to be true that he which neuer denied the faith: which euer confeſſed the faith ſo conſtantly, which was for the ſame faith condemned, yea and at laſt alſo burned for the faith, would euer fight againſt the faith, and law of God, to adnull and to ſubuert it? Let vs proceed yet further, and ſee when that he ſhould haue ſo deſtroied and adnulled the Chriſtian faith and law of God in England, what faith or law then could he or did he entend to bring into the realme of England? The Turks faith? or the Iewes faith? or the Popes faith? or what faith elſe, I pray you? For he that will be an enemie to the faith of Chriſt, and will ſhew himſelfe frend to no other faith beſide, I accompt him not out of his right faith, but out of his right wits.

(C)

The Lord Cobham falſely ſlaūdered for intending to deſtroy the king.

(C) And therefore euen as it is true, that ſir Iohn Oldcaſtle with his cōfederates & abettours were vp in armes to ſubuert, and extinguiſh the faith of Chriſt and law of God in yͤ realme of England: ſo by the like truth it may be eſtemed, that yͤ ſame perſons roſe alſo to deſtroy their ſoueraigne Lord the king and his brethren. Firſt thanks be to God, that neither the king, nor any of his brethren had any hurt by him. But his intent, ſaith the preface, was to deſtroy his ſoueraigne Lord the king. Whereunto I anſwere, with this interrogatorie, whether his intent was priuily to haue deſtroied him, or by opē force of armes? If priuily, what needeth then ſuch a great army of xx. thouſand men to atcheue yͤ ſecret feate? Rather I would think, that he needed more the help of ſuch as were neare about the king: as ſome of the kinges priuie chamber, or ſome of his ſecret counſaile: whereof, neither Chronicle nor record doth inſinuate any mention. If his intent was openly to inuade the kyng: You muſt vnderſtand (M. Cope) that to withſtand a king in his owne Realme, many thinges are required, long time, great preparation, many frendes, great aſſiſtance, and ayd of kindred, money, horſe, men, armour, and all other things apperteining for the ſame.

How vnlyke it is that the L. Cobham did riſe againſt the king.

Examples what an heard matter it is to riſe againſt the king.

Earle Godwin of Weſtſaxe, who had maried Canutus daughter being a man both ambitious, and as falſe a traitour, for al his ſixe ſonnes, and great alliance, yet durſt not ſet vpon king Edward to inuade him within his Realme, although he ſought manye occaſions ſo to do, yet neuer durſt enterpriſe openly, that which his ambition ſo greedely preſumed vnto, page 163.

The nobles againſt K. Henry.3.

In the time of King Henry the third, Symon Montford Earle of Gloceſter, Gilbert Clare Earle of Leiceſter, Humfrey Rone Earle of Ferrence, with a great number of Lords and Barons, thought themſelues to haue great right on their ſides, yet durſt not for all their power openly aſſaile the King in his Realme, before great debatemēt and talke firſt had betweene, page 330.

The nobles againſt K. Edward.2.

Likewiſe what murmuring and grudging was in the realme againſt king Edward the ſecond, among the peres and nobles and alſo prelates (only Walter Biſhop of Couentry except) firſt for Gaueſton, then for the Spenſers, at what time Thomas Earle of Lancaſter, Guido Earle of Warwike, with the moſt part of al other Earles and Barons concordly conſenting together to the diſplacing firſt of Gaueſton, then of the Spenſers, yet neither raſhly, nor without great feare durſt ſtirre vp warre in the land, or diſquiet or vexe the king, but firſt by all meanes of moderate counſaile, and humble petition, thought rather to perſwade, then to inuade the king, page 308.

The nobles againſt. K Rich. 2.

In like maner, and with like grudging mindes, in the reigne of King Richard.2. Thomas Wodſtocke Duke of Gloceſter the kings vncle, with the Earles of Arundell, of Warwike, and Darby, with the power almoſt of the whole commons, ſtood vp in armes againſt the king: And yet notwithſtanding all their power ioined together, being ſo great, and their cauſe ſeming to them ſo reaſonable, yet were they not ſo hardy, ſtraightwayes to flee vpon the king, but by way of Parliament thought to accompliſhe that which their purpoſe had conceiued, and ſo did, without any warre ſtriking againſt the king, page. 513.

The nobles againſt K. Henry.4.

After King Richard.2. was depoſed, and was in priſon yet liuing, diuers noble men were greatly inflamed againſt K. Henry the fourth, as Sir Iohn Holland Earle of Huntington, Thomas Spenſer Earle of Gloceſter, yͤ Earles likewiſe of Kent, and of Saliſbury, with ſir Iohn Cheney & other mo, whereof diuers had beene Dukes before, & now depoſed by King Henry.4. although they had conceiued in their harts great grudge and malice againſt the ſaid King Henry: yet had they neither hart nor power openly with mans force to aſſaile the king, but ſecretly were cōpelled to atchieue their conceiued intēt, which notwithſtanding they could not accompliſh. Ex hiſt. D. Alban.

Thus,

The inſurrection of the L. Cobham againſt the king iudged by circumſtãce

Thus, you ſee Maiſter Cope, or els maiſter Harpſfield, or whatſoeuer ye be, to gainſtand a king, and with open force to encounter with him in his owne land, and in his owne chamber of London, where he is ſo ſure and ſtrong, what a matter of how great cheuance it is, wherin ſo many and ſo great difficulties do lye, the attempt ſo dangerous, the chances ſo vncertaine, the furniture of ſo manie things required, that ſcarce in any kings daies heretofore, any peeres or nobles of the Realme, were they neuer ſo ſtrongly aſſiſted with power, wit, or counſaile, yet either were able, or els well durſt euer enterpriſe vpon the caſe ſo dangerous, notwithſtanding were they neuer of themſelues ſo far from all feare of God, and true obedience. And ſhal we then thinke, or cã we imagine (maiſter Cope) that Syr Iohn Oldcaſtle, a man ſo well inſtructed in the knowledge of Gods word, beyng but a poore Knight by his degree, hauing none of all the peeres and nobles in all the world to ioyne with him, being priſoner in the Tower of London a litle before in the moneth of December, could now in the moneth of Ianuary, ſo ſodenly, in ſuch an hoat ſeaſon of the yeare, ſtart vp an army of xx. thouſand fightyng men to inuade the kyng, to kill two Dukes his brethren, to adnulle Chriſten fayth, to deſtroy Gods law, and to ſubuert holy Church? And why doth not he adde moreouer, to ſet alſo all London on fire, and to turne all England into a fiſhepoole? Belike theſe men which geue out theſe figmentes of Syr Iohn Oldcaſtle, dyd thinke him to be one of Deucalions ſtocke, who caſtyng of ſtones ouer his ſhoulder, could by and by make men at his pleaſure, or els that he had Cadmus teeth to ſowe, to make ſo many harneſt men to ſtart vp at once.

A rebellion to be of 20. thowſand, and yet no countrey to be knowen from whẽce they came, it is not like.

But let vs conſider yet further of theſe xx. M. ſouldiours ſo ſodenly without wages, without vitall, or other prouiſion cõgregated together, what they were, frõ whẽce out of what quarter, countrey, or cõtreys they came. In an other kyngs dayes, whenſoeuer any rebelliõ is againſt the king, moued by the commons, as when Iacke Strawe and Wat Tyler of Kent, & Eſſex roſe in the tyme of kyng Richard 2. when William Mandeuill of Abingdon, Iack Cade of Kent, in the tyme of kyng Henry the 6. In the tyme of kyng Henry the 8. when the cõmotion was of rebels in Lyncolnſhyre, then in Yorkeſhyre. When in kyng Edward the 6. tyme Humfrey Arundell in Deuonſhyre, Captaine Kyte in Northfolke made ſtyrre againſt yͤ king, the cõtrey & partes from whence theſe rebels did ſpring, were both noted and alſo diffamed. In this ſo trayterous cõmotion therfore let vs now learne, what mẽ theſe were, and from what cõtrey or countreys in all England they came. If they came out of any, let the Chroniclers declare what countreys they were. If they came out of none (as none is named) then let them come out of Outopia, where belike this figment was firſt forged, and inuented. Wherfore ſeyng neither the countreys from whence they came, nor yet the names of any of all theſe xx. M. doe appeare what they were either in Chronicle or in recorde, but remaine altogether vnknowen, I leaue it (gentle reader) to thy iudgement, to thinke thereupõ, as thy wiſedome ſhall lead thee.

Neuer was any rebelliõ of commons in England but the ſpeciall cõtrey from whẽce they came was noted and knowen.

(D) Another falſe reporte of ſir Iohn Oldecaſtle that he intẽded to kill all maner of eſtates in the realme.

(D) It foloweth more in the foreſaid preface: And to deſtroy all other maner of eſtates, of the ſame Realme of England, as well ſpirituall as temporall, &c. By yͤ courſe of this preamble it appeareth, that the ſayd ſir Iohn Oldcaſtle, was a wonderfull cruell tirant and murderer, who being not yet ſatiſfied with the bloud of the king, nor of the two Dukes his brethren, would alſo make hauoke and ſwepeſtake, of all maner of eſtates in the Realme of England. What, & leaue no maner of eſtate aliue? No, neither Lord ſpiritual nor temporall, but altogether ſhould be deſtroied. And what had all theſe eſtates done, thus ſo miſerably to be deſtroied? Although percaſe the moode of this mã might haue bene incenſed & kindled againſt the king, and the Lords ſpiritual, by whom he had bene cõdemned, as is aforeſaid: yet why ſhould all other maner of other eſtates both ſpiritual and temporal be killed? If none of all the eſtates in Englãd, neither Duke, Earle, Baron, Lord, Knight or other gentleman had bene his frend, but all his enemies, how then is it like, that he hauing all the eſtates, peeres, nobles, and gentlemen of the Realme againſt him, and none to ſtand with him, either could or durſt attempt any commotiõ againſt the whole power of the land, he being but one gentleman onely with ſir Roger Acton, and maiſter Browne left alone? At leaſt, good reaſõ yet would, that thoſe hundreth Knightes ſhould haue bin ſpared out of this bloudy ſlaughter, whom he offred to produce vnto the king before, for his purgation, page. 159. And finally, if this was his purpoſe that all theſe eſtates both ſpiritual & temporall ſhould haue bin cut down, what needed then that he ſhould haue made himſelfe a Regent, when hee might as well haue made himſelfe a king, or what elſe he would, being left then Prince alone?

An hard matter to deſtroy all policie and lawes of a land.

(E) The preamble as it began with vntruth, and continued in the ſame figure, heaping one vntruth vpon another: ſo now endeth with another miſreport as vntrue as the reſt, ſhewing & declaring, the intent of ſir Iohn Oldcaſtle was alſo to deſtroy all maner of policie, & finally the lawes of yͤ land, &c. We read of William Cõquerer, otherwiſe named William Baſtard: who being a puiſant Duke in his countrey, whẽ that the crown of Englãd was alotted to him, and he cõming ouer with all his peres, nobles, & barons of his whole land, into this Realme, & had with great difficulty obteined victorie againſt king Harold: yet to alter and deſtroy the policy and the lawes of the land: it paſſed his power. Inſomuch that it had not bin permitted vnto him to haue proceded ſo far as he did, vnleſſe he had firſt ſworne to the nobles of this lande, to retaine ſtill the lawes of King Edward, as he found them. And albeit he afterward forſware himſelfe, breaking his othe in altering and changing many of the foreſaid lawes, yet wild he, nild he, could not ſo deſtroy them all (for the which much war and great commotiõs endured long after in the Realme) but that he was conſtrained and alſo contented to allow and admit a great part of the ſaid lawes of king Edward, page. 167. And if he being king and Conquerour with all his ſtrength of Normands and Engliſhmen about him, was too weake and inſufficient to deſtroy all maner of policie, and lawes of this land, which he had conquered: how much leſſe then is it to be ſuppoſed, that Sir Iohn Oldcaſtle being put a priuate ſubiect, and a poore Knight, and a condemned priſoner, deſtitute and forſaken of al Lords, Earles, and Barons, who to ſaue his owne life, had more to do, then he could well compaſſe, would either take in hand, or conceiue in his head anye ſuch exployt, after the ſubuerſion of Chriſtian faith, and law of God, after the ſlaughter of the king, and of all maner of eſtates, as well ſpirituall as temporall, in the Realme of England, after the deſolation of holy Church, to deſtroy alſo all maner of policie, and finally the lawes of the land? Which monſtruous and incredible figment, how true it may ſeeme to M. Cope, or to ſome other late Chroniclers of the like credulitie, I can not tell: Certaine to me, and as I thinke to all indifferent readers it appeareth as true, as is the Verſe of the Satyre, wherewith it may well be compared.

Nil intra eſt oleam, nil extra eſt in nuce duri.

Obiection.

But heere will be ſayd again perhaps, that the matter of ſuch preambles and prefaces being but purſuantes of ſtatutes, and containing but wordes of courſe, to aggrauate, and to geue a ſhew of a thing, which they would to ſeeme more odible to the people, is not ſo preciſely to bee ſcande or exquiſitely to be ſtand vpon, as for the ground of a neceſſary caſe of trouth.

Aunſwere.

This is it (M. Cope) that I ſaide before, and now doo well grant & admit the ſame, that ſuch preambles or forefaces lyned with a non ſequitur, containyng in them matter but of ſurmiſe, and wordes of courſe (and rather monſters out of courſe) and many tymes riſing vpon falſe informatiõ, are not alwayes in themſelues materiall, or neceſſary probatiõs in all pointes to be followed: as appeareth both by this ſtatute, & alſo by the ſtatute of this kynges father. an. 2. Henr. 4. chap. 15. beginnyng Excellentiſsimo. &c. And yet notwithſtandyng out of theſe ſame preambles, & forefrontes of ſtatutes, & other inditementes, which cõmonly riſing vpõ matter of informatiõ, runne onely vpõ wordes of courſe of office, and not vpõ ſimple truth, a great part of our Chroniclers do oftẽ take their matter, which they inſert into their ſtories, hauyng no reſpect or examination of circumſtaunces to be compared, but onely following bare rumours, or els ſuch wordes as they ſee in ſuch fablyng prefaces, or inditementes expreſſed. Whereby it commeth ſo to paſſe, that the younger Chronicler followyng the elder, as the blind leadyng the blind, both together fall into the pit of errour. And you alſo (maiſter Cope) followyng the ſteppes of the ſame, do ſeeme likewiſe to erre together with them, for good felowſhyp. And thus concernyng the face of this ſtatute hetherto ſufficiently.

Ex originali ſtatut. Hen. 4. cap. 15.

The reaſon and cauſe, how chroniclers oft times be deceiued.

Alanus Copus deceiued by his chroniclers.

Now let vs cõſider and diſcuſſe in like maner, firſt the coherence, then the particular contentes of the ſaid ſtatute. As touchyng the which coherence, if it be well examined, a mã ſhall finde almoſt a Chimera of it. In which neither the head accordeth with the body, nor yet the braunches of the ſtatute well agree with themſelues. Wherein he that was the drawer, or firſt informer thereof, ſeemeth to haue forgot his Verſe and art Poeticall.

Horat. art. Poet.

Atque ita mentitur, ſic veris falſa remiſcet,
Primum ne medio, medium ne diſcrepet imo.

For where as the preface of the ſtatute ſtandeth onely vpon matter of treaſon, conceiued by falſe ſuggeſtion and wrong information. The body of the ſayd ſtatute whiche ſhould follow vpõ the ſame, runneth onely vpõ matter of hereſie, pertaining to the Ordinaries, as by euery brãche therof may appeare.

(F) The body of the ſtatute an. 2. Reg Hen.5.cap. 7. examined.

(F) For firſt where he ſayth, at the inſtaunce & requeſt of the ordinaries or their cõmiſſaries. &c. Hereby it appeareth, this to be no cauſe of treaſõ, nor felony. For that euery man of duety is boũd, and by the lawes of the Realme may arreſt & apprehend a traitour, or a felõ, if he cã: where otherwiſe by this ſtatute an officer is not bound to arreſt him which offẽdeth in caſe of this ſtatute, without requeſt made by the ordinaries or their commiſſaries, and therefore this offence ſeemeth neither to be treaſon, nor felonie.

(G)

(G) Secondly, where it foloweth that the ſame ordinaries and commiſſaries doe pay for their coſtes, &c. This allowance of the officers charges in this ſort, proueth this offence neither treaſon nor felonie.

(H)

(H) Thirdly, where the ſtatute willeth the king to bee anſwered of the yeare, day, & waſt, &c. By this alſo is proued the offence not to be treaſon. Or els in caſes of treaſon, the whole inheritance (I trow, maiſter Cope, ſpeaking as no great ſkilfull lawyer) is forfait to the prince.

(I)

(I) The fourth argument I take out of theſe words of the ſtatute, where as ſuch lands and tenements which be holden of the ordinaries, are willed wholy to remaine to the king as forfait, &c. wherby it is manifeſt, that the Prelates (for their matter of Lollardie onely) were the occaſioners and procurers of this ſtatute: and therefore were barred of the benefite of anye forfetriſing thereby, as good reaſon was, they ſhould. And thus it is notorius, that the preface running ſpecially and principally vpon treaſon, and the ſtatute running altogether vpon points of hereſie, do not well cohere nor ioine together.

(K)

(K) Fiftly, In that ſuch perſons indited, ſhal be deliuered vnto the Ordinaries of the places, &c. It can not bee denied, but that this offence concerneth no maner of treaſon. For ſo much as Ordinaries can not be iudges in caſes of treaſon, or felonie, by the lawes of our Realme, Bracton, in fine. 1. Libri.

(L)

(L) Sixtly, by the inditements prouided not to be taken in euidence, but onely for information, before the Iudges ſpirituall, &c. it is likewiſe to be noted: to what end theſe inditements were taken, to wit, only to informe the ordinaries, which can not be in caſes of treaſon.

(M)

Iuſtice Stanford of the plees of the crowne. lib. 1. cap. 33.

(M) Laſtly, where it foloweth toward the end of ẏ ſtatute, touching eſcape or breaking of priſon, &c. by this it may lightly be ſmelt, whereto all ẏ purpoſe of this ſtatute driueth, that is, to the ſpeciall eſcape of the L. Cobham out of ẏ Tower, to this end to haue his lands & poſſeſſiõs forfait vnto the King. And yet the ſame eſcape of the Lord Cobham in this ſtatute conſidered, is taken by Maiſter Iuſtice Stanford in Lib. primo of the plees of the crowne cap 33. to be an eſcape of one arreſted for hereſie, where he ſpeaketh of the caſe of the Lord Cobham.

The firſt procurers of this ſtatute.

Practiſe of prelates to couple treaſon with hereſie.

Moreouer as touching the partes of this foreſaid ſtatute, how will you ioine theſe two braunches together, where as in the former part is ſaid, that the lands of ſuch perſons conuict, ſhall be forfait to the king, not before they be dead: And afterward it foloweth, that their goodes and poſſeſſions ſhall be forfait at the day of their arreſt, to that king. But heerein ſtandeth no ſuch great doubt nor matter to be weied. This is without all doubt, and notoriouſly, euidently, and moſt manifeſtly may appeare, by all the arguments and whole purport of the ſtatute: that as well the preamble and preface thereof, as the whole body of the ſaid ſtatute was made, framed, & procured onely by and through the inſtigation, information, and excitation of the Prelates, & the Popiſh Cleargie, not ſo much for any treaſon committed againſt the king: but only for feare and hatred of Lollardy, tending againſt their law, which they more dreded & abhorred, then euer any treaſõ againſt the Prince. And then to ſet the king & all the ſtates againſt them, whereby the more readily to worke their diſpatch, they thought it beſt and none ſo compendious a policie, as pretely to ioine treaſon together with their Lollardry. Wherein the poore men beeing once intangled, coulde no wayes eſcape deſtruction. Papæ concilium callidum.

This M. Cope, haue I ſaid, and ſay againe, not as one abſolutely determining vpon the matter. At the doyng whereof as I was not preſent my ſelfe, ſo with your owne Halle, I may and do leaue it at large, but as one leadyng the reader by all coniectures and arguments of probabilitie and of due circumſtances, to conſider with themſelues, what is further to be thought in theſe old accuſtomed practiſes and procedings of theſe prelates. Proteſting moreouer (M. Cope) in this matter to you, that thoſe Chroniclers which you ſo much ground vpon, I take them in this matter, neither as witneſſes ſufficient, nor as Iudges competent. Who as they were not themſelues preſent at the deed done, no more then I, but onely folowing vncertaine rumours, and words of courſe and office, bringing with them no certaine triall of that which they do affirme, may therein both be deceiued themſelues, and alſo deceiue you, and other which depend vpon them.

And hetherto concerning this ſtatute enough. Out of which ſtatute you ſee (M. Cope) that neither your Chroniclers, nor you can take any great aduantage, to proue any treaſon in the Lord Cobham or in his felowes, as hath bene hetherto aboundantly declared in the premiſſes.

Alanus Copus. pag. 833. lin. 4.

It remaineth further, that for aſmuch as you in your ſixt Dialogue with your author Edward Halle, do alledge the records Et publica iudicij Acta, to diffame theſe men for traytours (although what records they be, you bring forth neuer a word) I therefore in their defence do anſwere for them, whiche can not now aunſwere for themſelues. And becauſe you, to accuſe them do mention a certaine recorde, and yet do not ſhew vs what record it is, and peraduenture can not, if ye would: I haue taken the paines therfore, for the loue of them whom you ſo hate, to ſearch out ſuch Recordes, whereby any occaſion can be raiſed againſt them. And firſt will declare the commiſſion granted, then the inditement commenſed againſt them.

The which commiſſion, and inditement, albeit in countenance of words will ſeeme to miniſter much ſuſpition againſt them, to the ſimple Reader, before he be better acquainted with theſe ſubtile dealings and practiſes of Prelates: yet truſting vpon the goodneſſe of the cauſe, which I ſee here ſo falſely and ſleightly to be handled, I nothing feare nor doubt, to produce the ſame out of the Records in Latine as they ſtand: to the intent that when the craftie handling of the aduerſaries ſhall be diſcloſed, the true ſimplicitie of the innocent, to the true harted Reader, ſhall the more better appeare. The words firſt of the Commiſſion, here folow vnder written: which when thou ſhalt heare, let thẽ not trouble thy minde, gentle reader, I beſech thee, before thou vnderſtand further, what packing and ſubtile conueyance lieth couered and hid vnder the ſame.

By theſe high and tragicall wordes in this commiſſion ſent downe againſt the Lord Cobham, Sir Roger Acton, and their felowes: It may peraduenture ſeeme to the ignorant and ſimple reader, ſome hainous crime of treaſon to reſt in them, for conſpiring againſt God, the Churche, the kyng & their countrey. But what cannot the fetchyng practiſe of the Romiſh Prelates bryng about, where they haue once conceiued a malice? wherfore maruel not (good reader) at this, nor iudge thou accordinge to the wordes which thou heareſt. But ſuſpēd thy iudgemēt a while, till the matter be more opened vnto thee. Exāples of like hādlyng be not ſo rare, but yͤ maiſt ſoone iudge by other tymes the like alſo of theſe. George Egle, of whom mētion was made before, did but preach in tyme of Queene Mary, and yet cōmiſſiō was directed againſt him, as in caſe of raiſing vp a cōmotion againſt yͤ Queene. Adā Damlip in Calice did but preach, & yͤ receiuing of one poore crowne 2. yeares before at Rome was inough to make him a traitour. In the tyme of K. Henry yͤ 8. one Tingleton chaplein to Queene Anne, the Queenes maieſties mother that now is, did but preach yͤ Goſpel, moued by zeale (as I haue credible witnes of his owne ſcholer that heard him ſpeake it being with him) & yet by vertue of cōmiſſion it was obiected to hym: for rayſing vp commotion agaynſt the kyng, yea and alſo for killing of Pakington, & ſuffered for the ſame as a traytor. So here, what matter or maruell is it, if the kyng incenſed, or rather circumuented by the wrong information of the Prelates (whom he beleued) gaue out his cōmiſſion, agaynſt thynges neuer wrought nor thought.

Examples of diuers falſely accuſed for treaſons.

Wherfore I exhort thee (Chriſtian Reader) as I ſayd before, iudge not by and by the truth, by the wordes of the Commiſſiō: but iudge the wordes rather of the Commiſſion by the truth. Neither meaſure thou the lyne by the ſtone: But the ſtone rather by the line. At leaſt yet differ thy ſentence, till both the Commiſſion and the Inditemēt beyng layd together, thou mayeſt afterward ſee and perceiue more, what is to be iudged in the caſe.

(A)

In the meane ſeaſon marke well theſe wordes of the kyng in this Commiſſion, (A) Cum nos plenius informemur &c. By the which wordes it is eaſie to be vnderſtand, that the kyng himſelfe had no certaine knowledge thereof, but onely by information of others, (of Byſhops no doubt & Prelates) & thereupon gaue forth his Commiſſion aforeſayd. And then how will this ſtand with our Chroniclers & other Epitomes and Summaries whō Maiſter Cope doth alledge. For if it be certaine that Robert Fabiā ſayth, that the kyng himſelfe beyng in the field tooke certayne of them, as Syr Roger Acton, Maiſter Browne, and Iohn Beuerlay, & your owne Edw. Hall, alſo & your Epitome agreeth to the ſame, and ſayth moreouer that they were brought before yͤ kynges preſence. Tho. Couper alſo whō you alledge, addeth further and ſayth, that the kyng there by ſtrength dyd take them.

Our Engliſh Chroniclers examined by the wordes of this Commiſſion.

I pray you (Maiſter Cope) what needed the kyng to write this by information, when as he both himſelfe was preſent at the fact, was the taker of them, and a witneſſe of the deede? The which and if it be true, that the kyng heard this but by way of information, how will you then defend your Chronicos and your Epitomas. But herein I will neither greatly ſticke with you, nor contend with them: Deſiring thee Reader this onely to beare in mynde the date of this preſent Commiſſion when it was geuen, (B) which ſoundeth to be the x. day of Ianuary, & afterward to compare the ſame with the date of Inditemēt here vnder followyng, whiche I will (the Lord willyng) alſo hereunto annexe, leauyng nothyng out: Yea rather miniſtryng to the aduerſary all manner of helpes, whatſoeuer they can ſeeke or require for their moſt aduauntage in this matter, to be deſired. So ſure and confident I am in the innocent cauſe of theſe good men nor fearing whatſoeuer blind malice can cauill agaynſt them. (B

¶Notes or conſiderations vpon the Inditement and Commiſsion aboue prefixed.

(A) The firſt note concerning the date and day both of the Commiſſion & of the verdicte of the Iurers concurring on one day.

(A) Die Mercurij proximo poſt feſtū Epiphaniæ. &c. ¶First here is to be noted & conſidered (good reader) the day and date of geuing out the Commiſſion, & then of the Verdict preſented by the Iurers, which was both in one day, that is, on the wedneſday next after the Epiphanie, in the firſt yeare of the reigne of kyng Henry 5. which was the x. day of the moneth of Ianuary (as the date of the Commiſſion ſayth) an. 1413. after the vſe of Englād, or after the Romiſh vſe. an. 1414. So that after the vſe euer we count whether it be an. 1413. or els an. 1414. the Dominicall letter begynning at the firſt day of Ianuary to chāge, muſt needes be G. for the yeare: & ſo neceſſarily make wedneſday next after the Epyphanie, to be the x. day of the ſayd moneth of Ianuary. Thus then this preſent wedneſday, which was the tenth day of the moneth, being well noted and borne in minde, on the which day both the Commiſſion was directed, & alſo the Verdict preſented, let vs now proceede further ther in the foreſayd Inditement. It foloweth.

The ſecōd note of the names of the Iurers left out.

(B) Per Sacramētum xij. iuratorum extitit præſentatum. &c. ¶ If there had bin true dealing in this, the Iurers ſhould haue bene named. But it is not like, that there was euer any ſuch Inditement found by any Iurers, and therefore they did beſt, not to name the Iurours, leaſt they would haue denied this Inditement to be their Acte: it foloweth more in proces of the Inditement.

(C)

The 3. argumēt by making a Regent, the king being not yet gone ouer.

(C) Et dictum Ioan. Oldcaſtel Regentem Eiuſdem regni conſtituere.&c. ¶ If there were no other argument, this were ſufficient to diſproue the manifeſt vntruth of this ſurmiſed Inditement. When as the king was not yet gone to Fraunce, nor determined to go, how could they conſpire then to make a Regent? For the king went in July folowing, vidz. the ſecond yeare of his raigne, leauing behinde him the Queene his mother in law, for Regent, whereby it may be gathered, that this matter was vntruly entred and ſtolen into the Records with an antedate, or els at the leaſt, there appeareth manifeſt vntruth, that they ſhould conſpire to make a Regent, when a Regent was not thought vpon, vnleſſe it were all ready run into the heads of the Cleargie, who ſhortly after fearing their temporalities (as Caxton ſaith) perſwaded the King to make warres in Fraunce. This word Regent therefore proceedeth of the ſecret ſpirit of the Cleargy, and maketh the whole matter very ſuſpicious, to be grounded altogether vpon the malice of the Cleargie, and their vntrue ſurmiſes. It foloweth moreouer.

The 5. argumēt by cōtrarietie.

(D) Quaſi gens ſine capite in finalem deſtructionem. &c. ¶ How doth this ſtand with that goeth before, that they conſpired to make a Regent, except you will ſay that to make a Regent is to be a people without an head? It foloweth.

The 6. argumēt, by the perſons vnknowen.

(E) Cum quam pluribus rebellibus dicti regis ignotis ad numerum viginti millium hominum. &c. ¶ A ſtraunge matter that they ſhould knowe of the conſpiracie of twentie thouſand, and yet knowe of no moe names of the rebels, but the Lord Cobham onely, or one or two mo. And all the reſt were ignoti.

(F)

The 7. argumēt by the vnſkilfull penning.

(F) Priuatim inſurgentes. &c. ¶ This ſmelleth of the Cleargies owne penning, without any great aduiſe of learned counſaile: for otherwiſe ſuch as had bene herein ſkilfull, would neuer haue put in priuatim inſurgentes.

(G)

The 8. argumēt by the date and tyme.

(G) Die Mercurij proximo poſt feſtum Epiphaniæ D. anno R.R. prædicto, &c. ¶ This wedneſday next after the Epiphanie, was the x. day of the moneth of January, and the ſame day when both the conſpiracie was put in execution, and the ſame day when the commiſſion was giuen out to enquire, alſo when the fact was by enquirie preſented, whereby it may ſeeme a ſtrange thing that ſo great a conſpiracy knowne beforehand, was not ſuppreſſed nor enquired of by any commiſſion, but onely by a commiſſion bearing date of the ſame day, vpon which day by the purport of the Inditement, the conſpiracie ſhould haue bene put in execution, by open rebellion, as it is aforeſayd.

(H)

The 9. argumēt, by errour and wrong naming the Dukes.

(H) Prædictum D. noſtrum Regem fratres ſuos videl. Thomam Ducem Clarentiæ, Ioannem de Lancaſtre, & Humfredum de Lancaſtre, &c. ¶ If the kings learned counſaile had dealt in this Inditement, as in caſe of treaſon they ſhould haue done, if it had bene a matter of truth, they would neuer haue handled it ſo ſlenderly, and wrongly, as to name the Dukes of Bedford, and of Glouceſter: John of Lancaſter, and Humfrey of Lancaſter, who were made Dukes in the 13. yeare of the raigne of King Henry the fourth their father, as appeareth by Caxtones Chronicle.

(I)

The 10. note or argumēt by the abſence of the partie.

(I) Et ibidem verſus campum prædictum, modo guerrino arriati proditorie modo inſurrectionis, contra ligeantias ſuas equitauerunt ad rebellandum dictum D. noſtrum regem, &c. ¶ This is falſified by plaine euidence of hiſtories. And Cope hymſelfe confeſſeth no leſſe. For he ſo ſayth and confeſſeth page line That Sir John Oldcaſtle was not there in perſon, but onely, that his conſent and good will was there.

The 11. note or argument.

Againe, ſeeing this equitation or riding toward Saint Giles field was vpon the wedneſday next after the feaſt of Epiphany (as in this Inditement and proceſſe of outlawry is aboue teſtified) which was the tenth daye of January, and commiſſion alſo the ſame day was charged, and the Iewry moreouer impanelled the ſame daye, & yet no Iewrer named: Item, the verdict the ſame day preſented, how all theſe can concurre together, and all in one day, let the reader after he haue well conſidered the matter, vſe his iudgement therin, not only whether it be like, but alſo whether it be poſſible.

The 12. note or argument.

Ouer and beſide all this it is to be noted, that if thys matter had bene truely and duly handled, as touching the treaſon, then had it not bene needefull to haue brought ſir John Oldcaſtle into the Parliament houſe, before the Lordes to haue had his iudgement. For by the outlawrie (if it had bene true) he was attainted, and without anie more adoe ſhould haue had iudgement in the Kings Bench as a Traytor. But the chiefe Iuſtice knowing the handling of the matter, durſt not belike enterpriſe ſo far. Wherefore it was deuiſed, that he ſhould certifie the record into the Parliament, which he did together, with the Biſhops ſentence filed to the record, which was verie ſtrange.

The L.Cob, ſir R. Actō, &c. proued no traitors.

And thereupon the Lords gaue ſuch a iudgement, as was not due for a Traytor. For that they gaue no iudgement, that he ſhould be drawne, hanged, and let downe aliue, and then bowelled and quartered, which is the iudgement of a Traytor. And albeit the Parliament might haue attainted him without any more ado: And by the ſame Act of attainder haue ordeined a ſpeciall iudgement, as they ſhould thinke good: yet when hee was before atteinted by the outlawrie, they could not lawfully varie from the common iudgemēt of treaſon. At leaſt how could or ſhould the iudgement of Sir Roger Acton, Maiſter Browne, and John Beuerley, who were iudged in the Guildhall before and without the Parliament, vary from the ſaid common iudgement of Traytors, if they had truly committed, and bene conuicted of ſuch high treaſon?

The 13. note or argumēt.

Adde this moreouer to the foreſaid Notes: that if Sir John Oldcaſtle after his eſcape out of priſon, had bene culpable and ſo atteinted of that high treaſon, wherby his lands had bene immediately forfait vnto the King by the proceſſe of his outlawry: what neded the king then in the ſecond yeare of his raigne, in the Parliament after holden at Leyceſter, haue made that prouiſo to haue his lands forfaite to him by vertue of Parliament, vpon his eſcape on the day of his areſt: when as the lands and cattaile of his had bene forfeite before, by the proceſſe of the outlawry, as is before ſpecified?

Thus you ſee (Maiſter Cope) how little aduantage you can wraſt out of this Commiſſion and inditement againſt the Lord Cobham and his fellowes to proue them traytors. And admit the ſaid Lord Cobham was attainted of treaſon by the Acte, and that the King, the Lordes, and the Commons aſſented to the Act: yet it bindeth not in ſuch ſort (as if in deed he were no Traytour) that anye man may not by ſearch of the truth vtter and ſet forth ſincerely and iuſtly the very true cauſe whereby his death hapt and followed.

Anſwere to the allegations of Fabian, Polydore, and Hall, &c.

Thus then hauing ſufficiently cleared the Lord Cobham and his parteners, from all that you can obiect vnto them out of records and ſtatutes: let vs now come to your Engliſh Chroniclers, wherwith you ſeeme to preſſe me, & to oppreſſe them whome ye name to be Robert Fabian, Edward Halle, Polydor Virgilius, Thomas Cooper, Richard Grafton, with other briefe Epitomes and Summaries, &c. Concerning which authors, as I haue not to ſay, but to their commendation in this place: ſo if that you had auouched the ſame, to the commendation rather then to the reproofe of other, I would better haue commēded your nature, and beleued your cauſe. But now like a ſpidercatcher ſucking out of euery one, what is the worſt, to make vp your leyſtall, you heape vp a donghill of dirtie Dialogues conteining nothing in them but malicious railing, virulent ſlanders, manifeſt vntruths, opprobrious contumelies, & ſtinking blaſphemies, able almoſt to corrupt & infect ỹ aire. Such is the maladie & cacoethes of your pen, ỹ it beginneth to barke, before it hath learned well to write. Which pen of yours notwithſtanding I do not heere reproch nor contemne, as neither do I greatly feare ỹ ſame. God of his mercy keepe ỹ ſword out of the Papiſts hand, it is not the pen of the papiſts I greatly paſſe vpō, though xx. Copes, and ſo many ſurpleſſes, were ſet againſt the booke of Monuments, were I ſo diſpoſed (Maiſter Cope) to dally, or as the Greekes do ſay ἀντιπαίζειν, and to repay againe as I am prouoked. But in deſpightful railing, and in this Satyricall ſort of barking I geue you ouer, and ſuffer you therin to paſſe not only your ſelfe, but alſo Cerberus himſelf if ye will, the great bandog of Pluto. Mildnes and humanitie rather beſeemeth and is the grace of the Latine phraſe. If ye could hit vpon the vaine therof, it would win you much more honeſtie, with all honeſt men. But the Lord hereafter may cal you, which I beſeech him to do, and to forgiue you that you haue done.

Modeſtie commended in writers.

In the meane time ſeeing this your pratling pen muſt nedes be walking, yet this you might haue lerned of theſe your own authors whom you aledge, more ciuilly to haue tēpered your fume, in exclaiming againſt thē, whoſe cauſe is to you not perfectly known. And now briefly to anſwer to theſe your foreſaide wryters, as witneſſes produced againſt theſe men: there be 2. things (as I take it) in theſe chronicle wryters to be cōſidered: Firſt the groūds which they follow: ſecondly in what place they ſerue.

Two things to be obſerued i. ſtory writers.

As touching the order and ground of wryting among theſe Chroniclers, ye muſt conſider, and cānot be ignorant that as none of all theſe by you forenamed, was preſent at the deede, nor witneſſe of the fact, ſo haue they nothyng of thēſelues herein certainely to affirme, but either muſt follow publike rumor and hearſay for their autor, or els one of them muſt borrow of another. whereof neither ſeemeth to me ſufficient. For as publike rumor is neuer certain: ſo one author may ſoone deceiue an other.

The ground of hiſtories to be cōſidered.

By reaſon whereof it commeth oft to paſſe, that as theſe ſtory wryters hit many times the truth; ſo againe al is not the goſpell that they doe wryte. wherefore great reſpect is here to be had, either not to credite raſhly euery one that wryteth ſtories, or els to ſee what groundes they haue whome we doe followe.

All thinges not true, that be foūd in ſtories.

Now to demaund (M. Cope) of you, what authoritye or foundation hath your Robert Fabian, hathe Polydore Virgil, Edward Hal, and other of your authors to proue theſe men to be traytors? what authority do they auouch? what actes, what regiſters, what recordes, or out of what court do they ſhewe? or what demōſtration do they make? And do you thinke it ſufficient, becauſe theſe men doe only affirme it, wythout any further probation, wyth youre αὐτὸς ἔφη, therfore we are boūd to beleue it? Take me not ſo (M. Cope) that I do here diminiſh any thing or derogate from the credit of thoſe wryters you alledge, whoſe labors haue deſerued well, and ſerue to great vtilitie: but cōming now to triall of a matter lying in cōtrouerſie betwene vs, we are now forced to ſeeke out the fountaine and bottome of the truthe, where it is not enough to ſay, ſo it is, but the cauſe is to be ſhewed, why it is ſo affirmed. And what though Robert Fabian, Polydore Virgile, and Edwarde Hall, ſhould all together (as they do not) agree in the treaſon of ſir Iohn Oldcaſtle and of the reſt, yet neither is this any ſufficient ſurety to proue them traitors. Conſidering that wryters of ſtories for moſt part folowing either blind reporte: or els one taking of an other, vſe commonly all to ſound together after one tune, tanquam Dodonæi lebetes, ſo that as one ſayth, all ſay, and if one erre, all do erre. wherfore you ſee M. Cope, howe it is not ſufficient nor ſure to ſticke onely to the names and authorities of Chronographers, vnleſſe the ground be found ſubſtantial wherupon they ſtand themſelues. which yet in none of theſe whome you haue produced, doth appeare.

Wordes without probation are not ſufficiēt in ſtory matters,

Secondly, in alleaging and wryting of Chronicles is to be conſidered to what place and effect they ſerue. If yee would ſhew out of them the order & courſe of times, what yeres were of dearth and of plēty, where kings kept their Chriſtenmaſſe, what condites were made, what Maiors and ſhirifes were in London, what battails were fought, what triumphs and great feaſts were holdē, when kings began their raigne, and when they ended. &c. In ſuch vulgare and popular affairs, the narration of the Chronicler ſerueth to good purpoſe, & may haue his credite, wherein the matter forceth not much, whether it be true or falſe, or whether any liſteth to beleue them. But where as a thyng is denied, and in caſes of iudgement, and in controuerſies doubtfull, which are to be decided and boulted out by euidence of iuſt demonſtration: I take them neither for Iudges of ẏ bench, not for arbiters of the cauſe, nor as witneſſes of themſelues ſufficient neceſſarily to be ſticked vnto. Albeit I deny not but hyſtories are takē many times, and ſo termed for witneſſes of times, and glaſſes of antiquitie. &c. yet not ſuch witneſſes, as whoſe teſtimony beareth alwaies a neceſſary truth and bindeth beliefe.

Chroniclers how farre, and to what effect they ſerue.

The two witneſſes whych came againſt Suſanna, being ſeniours both of auncient yeares, bare a great countenance of a moſt euidēt teſtimony, wherby they almoſt both deceiued the people, & oppreſſed the innocent: had not yōg Daniel by the holy ſpirite of God, haue takē thē aſide, and ſeuerally examining them one from the other, found them to be falſliers both, leauing to vs therby a leſſon of wholſome circumſpection, not raſhly to beleeue euery one that commeth: and alſo teaching vs, how to try thē out. wherfore (M. Cope) following here the like example of Daniel in trying theſe your records whom ye inferre againſt theſe men we wil in like maner examine them, ſeuerally one frō an other, and ſee how their teſtimonie agreeth: firſt beginning wyth your Robert Fabian. which Robert Fabian being neither in the ſame age, nor at the deede doing, can of himſelfe geue no credite herein, without due proofe, and euidence conuenient.

Hiſtories not raſhely to be beleued.

The teſtimony of Fabian againſt the L. Cobham examined.

How thē doth Rob. Fabian proue this matter of treaſon true? what probation doeth he bring? what authoritie doth he alleage? And doth Rob. Fabian thinke, if he were not diſpoſed to conceiue of the L. Cobham, and thoſe men a better opinion but to be traitors, that men are bounde to beleue him only at his word, without any ground or cauſe declared, why they ſhuld ſo do, but only becauſe he ſo ſaith and pleaſed him ſo to write? And if yee thinke (M. Cope) the word only of this witnes ſufficient to make authority ſpeaking againſt the Lord Cobham, and prouing nothing which followed ſo many yeres after him: why may not I as well and much rather take the worde and teſtimonie of Richard Belward a Northfolke man, and of the towne of Criſam, who liuing both in his time, & poſſible knowing the party, & puniſhed alſo for the like trueth, is not reported, but recorded alſo in the regiſters of the church of Norwich, to geue this teſtimonie among other his articles, for the foreſaid L. Cobham, that is, ẏ ſir Iohn Oldcaſtle was a true Catholike man and falſely condemned, and put to death wythout a reaſonable cauſe. &c. Ex Regiſt. Noruic.

The teſtimony of Rich. Belward for the L. Cobham;

Ex Regiſt. Epiſc Noruic.

Agaynſt this man if you take exception & ſay, that one hereticke will hold with an other: why may not I with ẏ like exception reply to you agayne, & ſay as well, one Papiſt hold with an other, and both cōiure together, to make and ſay the worſt agaynſt a true Proteſtant.

Further, yet to examine this foreſayd Fabian, witnes agaynſt Sir Iohn Oldcaſtle, as Daniell examined ẏ witneſſes agaynſt Suſanna. I will not here aſke vnder what tree theſe adherentes of ſir I. Oldcaſtle conſpired agaynſt the king, & ſubuerſion of ẏ land, but in what time, in what yeare and moneth this conſpiracie was wrought? Fabian witneſſeth that it was in the moneth of Ianuary. Cōtrary Edward Hall & other our Abridgementers followyng him, doe affirme that they were condemned in the Guildhall the xij. of December, and that their executiō vpon the ſame was in Ianuary followyng, ſo that by their ſentence the fact was done either in the moneth of Decēber, or els before, & ſo Fabianus mentitus eſt in caput ſuum, vt cū Daniele dicam, or if it were in the moneth of Ianuary as Fabian ſayth, then is Hall and his followers deceiued, teſtifying the fact to be done in the moneth of December.

Witneſſes againſt the L. Cobham agree not togeather.

And yet to obiect moreouer againſt the ſayd Fabiā, for ſo much as he is ſuch a raſh witnes agaynſt theſe burned perſons whom he calleth traytors: it would be demaūded further of him, or in his abſence of Maiſter Cope, in what yeare this treaſon was conſpired? If it were in the ſame yeare (as he cōfeſſeth himſelfe) in which yeare Iohn Cleidon the Skinner, & Richard Turmine Baker were burned, then was it neither in the moneth of Ianuary, nor in the firſt yeare of kyng Henry the fift. For in the regiſter of Cāterbury it appeareth playne, that Iohn Claydon was condemned neither in the tyme of Thom. Arundell Archbyſhop nor yet in the firſt nor ſecond yeare of kyng Henry the v. but was cōdemned in the ſecond yeare of the tranſlation of Henry Chichelly, Archbyſhop of Canterbury, the. 17. day of Auguſt, which was the yeare of our Lord. 1415. So that if this conſpiracie was in the ſame yeare (after the witneſſe of Fabiā) in which yeare I. Cleydon was burned, then doth the teſtimony of Fabian neither accord with other witneſſes, nor to him ſelfe, nor yet with truth. And thus much concerning the witnes of Rob. Fabian.

Fabian. part. 7. in vita Henr. 5. pag. 390.

Ex regiſt. Archiep. Cant.

Let vs next procede to Polidore Virgill, whoſe parciall and vntrue handling of our hiſtory in other places of of his bookes, doth offer vnto vs ſufficient exception not to admit his credite in this. And yet becauſe we will rather examine him, then exclude him, let vs heare a little what he ſayth, & how he fayleth, & in how many pointes, numbring the ſame vpon my fiue fingers.

The teſtimony of Polydore examyned.

Firſt ending with the life of king Henry 4. hee ſayeth, that hee raigned 14. yeares and 6. moneths and 2. dayes. Angl. hiſt. lib. 21. whyche is an vntruth, worthy to be punyſhed wyth a whole yeares baniſhment (to ſpeake after the maner of Apulenis) when as truth is, he raigned by the teſtimony of the ſtory of S. Albones, of Fabian, of Hall, of our old Engliſh Chronicle, and of Scala mundi, but 13. & 6. moneths, lacking as ſome ſay 5. dayes, Hal ſaieth he raigned but 12. yeares.

5. Vntruthes of Polydore noted in one ſtory.

1. Vntruth.

The ſecond vntruth of Polydore is this, where as hee ſpeaking of this ſedition of ſir Iohn Oldcaſtle and his adherents, affirmeth the ſame to be done after the burning of Iohn Hus, and of Hierome of Prage, whych was ſayeth he An. 1415. in which yere (ſayth he) Thomas Arundell died. Hys wordes be theſe: In eodem concilio damnata eſt Ioh. Wicliffi hæreſis, ac Ioan. Hus, & Hieronymus Pragenſis in ea vrbe combuſti ſunt. Quod vbi reliquis conſocijs, qui etiam tunc in Anglia erant, pateſit, tanquam furijs agitati primùm coniurationes in omnes ſacerdotes, deinde in regē &c. In which wordes he not onely erreth, falſly aſſigning the cauſe and occaſion of this ſedition to the death of Iohn Hus, and of Ierome, but alſo miſſeth as muche in the order and computation of the yeres. For neither was ſir Roger Acton with his foreſaid fellowes aliue at the time of the councell, neither doth hee agree therein with any of our Engliſh wryters, except onely with Hall, who alſo erreth therein as wide as he.

2. Vntruth.

3. 4. Vntruth.

For the third and fourth vntruth I note this, where he addeth and ſayth, that after this rebelliō raiſed againſt the king, the ſayd ſir Iohn Oldcaſtel being there preſent himſelfe, was taken and priſoned in the tower, and afterward eſcaped out of the ſaide tower by night, wherein is conteined a double vntruth. For neither was Sir Iohn Oldcaſtle there preſent himſelfe, if we beleue Fabian and Cope, Dial.6.pag.833 lin 11. nether yet did he euer eſcape out of the Tower after that conſpiracie, if euer any ſuch conſpiracie was.

Copus pag. 833. lin 11.

5. Vntruth.

His v. but not the laſt vntruth in Polydore is this, that he ſayth, Tho. Arundel to haue died in the ſame yeare, noting the yere to be An.1415. where as by the true regiſters he died. An.1413.

An other Vntruth in Polydore noted.

To this vntruthe an other alſo may be ioyned, where he erring in the computation of the yeres of the ſaid Thomas Arundel Archbiſhop of Canterbury, reporteth hym to ſit 33. yeares, who was there Archbiſhop but onely 18. yeres, as is to be ſene in the recordes of Canterbury. The wordes of Polydore be theſe: Thomas Arundellius Cantuarienſis antiſtes annum iam tunc ſedēs tertium & trigeſimum e vita exceſsit lib.22. Ang.hiſt. All be it in thys I doe not greatly contend wyth Polydore, and peraduenture the aduerſary will finde ſome eaſie ſhift for thys matter.

The teſtimony of Hall againſt the L. Cobham examined.

But let vs paſſe now from Polydore, not (as they ſay) out of the hal into the kitchine, but out of the kitchine vnto the hall, examining and perpending what ſayth Edward Hall an other witnes in this matter: vpon whom maiſter Cope bindeth ſo faſt, that hee ſuppoſeth hys knot is neuer able to be loſed. And moreouer ſo treadeth me downe vnder his feete in the dirt (as a man would thinke hym ſome dirtdaubers ſonne) ſo that the ſpots thereof he ſayeth, will neuer be gotten out while the world ſtandeth, & a day longer. Notwythſtanding I truſt M. Cope that your dirtie penne with your cockiſh brags hath not ſo bedaubed and beſpotted me, nor yet conuicted me to be ſuch a deprauer of hiſtories, but I hope to ſpunge it out. At leaſt way, with a little aſperges of the Popes holy water, I truſt to come to a dealbabor, well enough.

But certes, M. Cope, your maiſterſhip muſt firſt vnderſtand, that if yee thinke ſo to depreſſe me, and diſproue me of vntruth in my hiſtory, you muſt go more groūdly to worke, and bring againſt me other authors then Edward Hal: You muſt conſider (M. Cope) if you will be a cōtroller in ſtorie matters, it is not enoughe for you to bryng a railing ſpirit, or a minde diſpoſed to carpe and cauil where any matter may be picked, diligence is required, and great ſearching out of bookes and authors not only of our time, but of all ages. And eſpecially where matters of religion are touched pertaining to the church: it is not ſufficient to ſee what Fabian, or what Hall ſayth, but the records muſt be ſought, the Regiſters muſt be turned ouer, letters alſo and ancient inſtruments ought to be peruſed, and authors wyth the ſame compared, finally the writers among them ſelues one to be conferred wyth another. And ſo wyth iudgement to be waied, wyth diligence to be labored, and wyth ſimplicitie pure from all addiction and partialitie to be vttered.

Cope a carper of ſtoryes whereof he hath no ſkill.

Thus did Auentinus, thus did Sleidanus wryte. Theſe helpes alſo the eldeſt and beſt Hiſtoricians ſemed to haue, both Titus Liuius, Saluſtius, Quintus Curtius, and ſuche lyke, as by their letters and records inſerted may wel appeare. The ſame helps likewiſe both in your Fabian and in your Edwarde Hall were to be required, but eſpecially in you (M. Cope) your ſelfe, whych take vppon you ſo cockiſhly (rather then wiſely) to be a controller and maiſter moderatour of other mens matters. In which matters (to ſay the truth) you haue no great ſkil, and leſſe experience, neyther haue you either ſuche plenty of authors meete for that purpoſe, nor yet euer trauailed to ſearch out the origens & groundes of that whereof ye write. But onely contented with ſuch as commeth next to hande, or peraduenture receiuing ſuch almoſe as ſome of your poore frends beſtowe vpon you, think it ſufficient if you can alledge Fabian and Hall for your purpoſe.

Now what purpoſe & affection herein doth lead you, rather doeth driue you to the carping and barking againſt the hiſtory of theſe good men, yͭ be hence gone and had their puniſhment, all men may ſee it to be no ſimple ſinceritie of a mind indifferent, but yͤ zeale only of your ſect of Popery, or rather of fury, which ſetteth your railing ſpirite on fire.

Aunſwere to Ed. Hall.

But now out of the fiery kitchin, to come to the hal againe let vs ſee what matter lyeth in the teſtimony of Edward Hall, to proue theſe men to be traytors. And here for ſo much (Maiſter Cope) as you ſeeme neither ſufficiently acquainted with this your owne maiſter and authour Maſter Hall, nor yet well experienced in the ſearchyng out of hiſtories, I wil take a litle paynes for you, in this behalfe, to certifie you concernyng the ſtory of this author, whereof percaſe you your ſelfe are yet ignoraunt.

The truth whereof is this, that as the ſayd Edward Hall, your great maſter & teſtis, was about the compiling of his ſtory, certayne there were which reſorted to hym of whom ſome were drawers of his petigree & vineat, ſome were grauers, the names of whom were Iohn Bets, and Tyrral, which be now both dead. And other there were of the ſame ſodalitie, who be yet aliue, & were then in yͤ houſe of Richard Grafton, both the Printer of the ſayd booke, & alſo (as is thought) a great helper of the pēning of yͤ ſame. It ſo befell that as Hall was entring into the ſtory of Syr Iohn Oldcaſtle, of Syr Roger Acton, & their felowes, the booke of Iohn Bale touching the ſtory of the L. Cobham, was yͤ ſame time newly come ouer, which booke was priuely cōueied by one of his ſeruaūts into the ſtudy of Hall, ſo that in turnyng ouer his bookes, it muſt needes come to his handes. At the ſight whereof, when he ſaw the groūd & reaſons in that booke contained, he turned to the authors in the foreſayd booke alledged, whereupon within two nightes after, moued by what cauſe I know not, but ſo it was, that hee taking his pen, raſed and cancelled all that he had written before, agaynſt Syr Iohn Oldcaſtle & his fellowes, & was now ready to go to the Print, contaynyng neare to the quantitie of three pages. And leaſt (M. Cope) you, or any other ſhould thinke me to ſpeake beſide my booke, be it therefore knowen both to you and to all other, by theſe preſentes, that the very ſelfe ſame firſt copy of Hall raſed and croſſed with his owne penne, remaineth in my handes to be ſhewed & ſeene, as need ſhall require. The matter which he cancelled out came to this effect. wherein he following the narratiō of Polidore, began with like wordes, to declare how the Sacramētaries here in England, after the death of Iohn Huſſe, and Hierome of Prage, beyng pricked as he ſayth, with a demoniacall ſting, firſt conſpired agaynſt the Prieſtes, and after againſt the king, hauing to their Captaines ſir Iohn Oldcaſtle the Lord Cobham, and Syr Roger Acton Knight, with many moe wordes to the like purpoſe and effect, as Polydore & other ſuch like Chronicles doe write agaynſt him. All which matter notwithſtandyng, the ſayd Hall with his penne at the ſight of Iohn Bales booke, did vtterly extinct and aboliſh. Addyng in the place thereof the wordes of M. Bales booke, touchyng the accuſation and condemnation of the ſayd Lord Cobham, before Thomas Arundell Archbyſhop of Canterbury, taken out of the letter of the ſayd Archbyſhop, as is in his owne ſtory to be ſene. In vita Henr.5 .pag.2.lin.30.

Hall raceth out his owne ſtorie writē againſt the L. Cobhā.

Hal. in vita Hen.5.pag.2.b.lin.30.

And thus Edward Hall your author, renoking & calling backe all that he had deuiſed before agaynſt the Lord Cobham (whereof I haue his owne hand to ſhew, & witnes ſubſtaūciall vpō the ſame) in his printed booke recordeth of him no more, but onely ſheweth yͤ proces betwene the Archbyſhop of Cāterbury and him for matters of religion. And ſo ending with Sir Iohn Oldcaſtle, proceedeth further to the aſſemble of ſir Roger Actō (whom he falſely calleth Robert Actō) Iohn Browne, and Beuerley, the narration wherof he handleth in ſuch ſort, that he neither agreeth with yͤ record of other writers, nor yet with truth it ſelfe. For where he excludeth the Lord Cobham out of that aſſemble, he diſcordeth therein from Polidore and other, And where he affirmeth the fact of that conſpiracie to be wrought before, or at the xij. day of December: that is manifeſtly falſe, if the recordes before alledged be true. And where he reporteth this aſſemble to be after the burnyng of Iohn Hus, and of Hierome of Prage, therein he accordeth with Polydore, but not with truth. Moreouer, ſo doubtfull he is and ambiguous in declaration of this ſtory, that no great certaintie can be gathered of him.

Hall in the ſtorie of the L.Cobham. & ſir Roger Acton, agreeth not with other ſtories.

Vntruth in Hall noted.

First, as touchyng the confeſſion of them, he confeſſeth himſelfe, that he ſaw it not, & therfore leaueth it at large. And as cōcernyng the cauſes of their death, he leaueth the matter in doubt, not daring (as doth M. Cope) to define or pronoūce any thing therof, but onely reciteth the ſurmiſes and myndes of diuers men diuerſly, ſome thinkyng it was for cōueying the Lord Cobhā out of the tower, ſome that it was for treaſon and hereſie, and here cōmeth in the mētiō onely of a record, but what record it is neither doth he vtter it, nor doth he examine it: other ſome againe affirming (as he ſayth) yͭ it was for fayned cauſes ſurmiſed by

Hall doubtfull in the ſtory of ſir R. Actō. &c.

the ſpiritualtie, more of diſpleaſure then trueth. And thus your autor Hall, hauing recited yͤ varietie of mens opinions, determineth himſelfe no certaine thing therof, but as one indifferent, neither boũd to the coniectures of al men, nor to the wrytings of all men, referreth the whole iudgement of the matter free vnto the reader. And ſo concluding his narratiõ forſomuch as he was neither a witnes of the fact, nor preſent at the dede, he ouerpaſſeth the ſtory therof.

Halle no witnes in ſir Roger Actons caſe.

And what witnes then wil you, or can you (M. Cope) take of Edwarde Halle, which denieth himſelfe to be a witneſſe? will you compell him to ſay that he ſawe not? and to witneſſe that he can not? wherfore like as Suſanna, in the ſtorye of Daniel was quite by right iudgement in the caſe of adultry, becauſe her accuſers and teſtes being examined a ſonder were found to vary and halt in their tale, and not to agree in the two trees: So why may not in like caſe of treaſon, ſir Roger Acton, ſir Iohn Oldcaſtle, Browne & the reſt, claime the ſame priuiledge? ſeeing among the teſtes and witneſſe produced agaynſt them, ſuch diſcorde is found, and ſuch halting among them, that neyther do they agree in place, perſon, yeare, day, nor moneth.

Repugnaũce noted in the witnes againſt the L. Cobham & ſir Roger Acton.

1, Repugnaũce in the place.

1. For firſt where Fabian and his fellowes ſay: that they were aſſembled together in a great company, in the fielde neare to S. Gyles, the forged inditement aboue alledged, ſayth, they were but riding toward the fielde.

2. Repugnaunce in the place. Ala. Copus pag. 833. lin. 12.

2. Secondly, where the foreſaid inditement and Polydore, geue the Lorde Cobham to be preſent perſonally in that aſſemble, Halle, and Alanus Copus Anglus, doe exclude hys perſonal preſence from thence: and ſo doth Fabian alſo ſeme to agree, ſpeaking onely of the adherentes of Syr Iohn Oldcaſtle.

3. Repugnaũce in the yeare.

3. Thirdly, where Halle and Polydorus report thys aſſemble to be after the burning of Iohn Hus, and of Hierome at the councel of Conſtance, which was An. 1415. that cannot be, but if there were any ſuche conſpiracie in the firſt yeare of Henry 5. it muſt needes be An. 1413. And heere by the way, why do certaine of your Epitome wryters ſpeaking of the Lord Cobham committed firſt to the tower for hereſie, referre the ſayd his impriſonment to the yere 1412. where as, by their owne counte, reckoning the yeare from the Annunciation, it muſt nedes be an. 1413. being done in harueſt time.

4. Repugnaũce in the month.

4. Fourthly, where Halle with his followers affirme that ſyr Roger Acton, Brown and Beuerley were condemned the 12. day of December, the recorde is euident againſt it, which holdeth the fact to be in working the 10. day of Ian.

5. Repugnaũce in the day.

5. Fiftly, where as the foreſayde record of the Inditement geueth the wedneſday next after the Epiphany, whyche was the 10. day of Ian. that preſent yeare, both the facte to be committed, the ſame day, the Commiſſion alſo to be graunted and deliuered to the Cõmiſſioners the ſame day, The ſaide Commiſſioners to ſit in Commiſſion the ſame day: The Shriffes of Midleſex to returne a iurie out of the body of Midleſex the ſame day: and the Iurers to find the inditement the ſame day, and yet no iurer in the inditemẽt named the ſame day.

Item, the L. Cobham, the ſame day, to be founde conſpiring to make him ſelfe Regent, when as the king, that day and yeare, was not yet paſſed into Fraunce: howe all theſe can concurre and hang together and all in one day: I ſuppoſe it wil coſt you two dayes, before you, with al your learned counſel wil ſtudy it out. And whẽ you in your vnlawfull aſſembles haue conſpired and conferred together, all ye can, yet wil ye make it (as I thinke) iij. dayes, before you honeſtly diſpatch your handes of the matter.

And where ye thinke, yͭ you haue impreſſed in me ſuch a foul note of lying, neuer to be clawed of while the world ſtandeth, yet ſhal the poſterity to come iudge betwene you & me, whether ſhall appeare more honeſt and true, my defence for that worthy lord, then your vncourteous and viperous wrangling againſt him, moued wᵗ no other cauſe, but onely with the peuiſh ſpirite of Poperie, whych can abide nothing, but that ſauereth of your owne ſecte. For els how many loud lying legends, yea what legion of lies are daily vſed and receiued in the popiſh church? what doltiſh dreames? what fained myracles? what blaſphemous tales and frierly fables, and idle inuẽtions, fighting againſt the ſincere religion, doctrine and croſſe of Chriſt? And coulde you holde your penne from al theſe, and finde nothing els to ſet your idleneſſe on worke, but onely to wryte agaynſt the Lorde Cobham, Syr Roger Acton, Browne, Onley, Cowbrige, with a fewe other whome wyth much a doe, at length you haue ſought out, not ſo much for any true zeale to rebuke iniquitye, as craftely ſeeking matter by theſe to deface and blemiſh the booke of Actes and Monumentes. which ſeemeth belike to make you ſcratche there, where it itcheth not. And if I ſhoulde after the like dealing take in hand your Popiſh portues, and with like diligence excuſſe euery Popiſh martyr and Saint there canoniſed: thinke you maiſter Cope, I coulde not make you out halfe doſen as ranke traitours and rebels to their kings and princes, as euer were any of theſe of your picking out? what pope almoſt hath there bene theſe laſt 500. yeares, whych hathe not bene a traitour to his Emperor and Prince, and to his countrey? either openly rebelling againſt them, or priuely conſpiring their deſtruction, or proudly ſetting theyr feete vpon their necks, or ſpurning their crownes of from their heads, or making the ſonne to fight againſt yͤ father? How many haue they depoſed, and ſet vp other in theyr ſeates? how many Emperours and kings haue they wrongfully curſed? what Conſulles of Rome haue they reſiſted, depoſed, and put to death? what warres haue they raiſed vp againſt theyr owne countrey of Rome? Yea the continuall holding of the City of Rome, from hys lawfull Emperor, what is it but a continuall poynt of treaſon?

Papiſtes can not ſee great beames in their owne eyes, which ſpye ſmall motes in other.

Popes traytours to their Emperours & princes.

What will you anſwere mee (M. Cope) to the Pope, which conſpired to let fall downe a ſtone vpon the Emperours head, kneeling at his prayers, pag. 177.

And though this treachery being as big as a milſtone, ſeemed but a ſmal mote in your eye, that it could not be eſpied: yet what will you ſay by the Monke of Swinſtede, that poyſoned king Iohn, who was both abſolued by his abbot before his treaſon committed, and after hys treaſon had a perpetuall Maſſe ſonge for him, to helpe hym out of Purgatorie?

The Popes ſaintes and confeſſours many were traytours.

And what thinke ye in your conſcience is to be ſayde of Thomas Becket, who did inough, and more then became him, to ſet the French king, and the king of Englande together by the eares? Of Anſelme likewiſe, and of Stephen Langhton, who departed both out of the Realme to complaine of their princes & ſoueraines? The like may be ſaid alſo of Iohn Peckham. Iohn Stradford Archbyſhop of the ſame ſea notoriouſly reſiſted the Kinges commaundement, being ſent for by king Edward 3. to come to the parliament at Yorke, through the default of whoſe comming, the preſent oportunitie of getting Scotland was the ſame time loſt,

Richard Scrope Archb. of Yorke, was opẽly in armes to rebell & fight againſt K. Henry 4. for the which he was condemned & put to death. And yet notwᵗſtanding Commiſſion was ſent downe from the pope ſhortly after, to excõmunicate them which put him to death, his treaſon notwᵗſtanding. Read yͤ ſtory ſincerely of pope Benedict 12. and of pope Clement 6. And ſee howe the traiterous rebellion of theſe two popes againſt Ludouicus their rightful Emperor can be defended: which Emperor at laſt was alſo empoyſoned, & that not without the practiſe of Pope Clement, as doth Hieronimus Marius credibly witneſſe.

R. Scrope Archb. of Yorke traytor and yet coũted a holy man.

Popes cõmonly traytours.

In the raigne of K. Edward the 2. mention was made before of Thomas Earle of Lancaſter. Who with a great number of other nobles and Barons of the realme, roſe in armour againſt their prince, and therefore at lengthe were put to death as traitours. And yet notwythſtanding thys treaſon committed (M. Cope) if you be ſo ignorant in our ſtories, that you know it not, ſet your ſetters on to ſearch, and you ſhall finde it true, that certaine Noble men went vp to Rome, for the canoniſing of the ſayde Thomas of Lancaſter to be made a Saint, and obtained the ſame. In ſo much that in a certayne olde Calendare, the name of the ſayd S. Thomas of Lancaſter is yet extant to be ſeene.

Tho. Lancaſter traitor and yet made a Sainct by the Pope.

In the former booke of theſe Actes and Monumentes aboue, about the pag. 353. or 354. mention was made of Edmund of Abbenden Archb. of Cant. whom although I do not diſproue, but rather commend in my hiſtory, for his bold and ſage counſail geuen vnto K. Henry the 3. and alſo for offering the cenſure of excommunication againſt the king in ſo neceſſary a cauſe: yet notwithſtanding the ſame Edmund, afterward about his latter end, went vp wyth a rebelling minde to complaine of his king vnto the Pope, and in his iourney died, before his return: who afterward for the ſame, was canoniſed by the Pope, and now ſhineth among the Saintes in the popes Calender.

Edmũd Archb. of Cant. rebelled againſt his princ, and yet made a Saint by the Pope.

Let vs come more neare to theſe dayes and times, and conſider the doings of Tho. Arundell Archb. of Canterb. who being firſt depoſed and exiled for hys contemptuous deſertes againſt the king, and afterward comming in, wyth Henry Bolynbroke Duke of Herford, in open armes and with main force roſe againſt his natural and lawful king: thinke you (M. Cope) thys is not as greate a poynte of treaſon, as that which was done in Thickets fields? And though he be not placed among the portuous Saintes, yet I thinke nothing contrary, but in your heart you will not greatly ſticke to ſay, Sancte Thoma ora pro nobis.

Tho. Arundel a ranck traitour againſt his king, and yet a great piller counted in the popes church.

All theſe thinges well conſidered, tell me (M. Cope) I pray you, is treaſon ſuche a ſtraunge and vnketh thyng in your popecatholike churche, that your burning zeale of obedience to kings and princes, can not read the story of the L. Cobham & ſir Roger Acton, but your pen muſt needes be inflamed to wryte againſt them, and yet ſo many traytors in your owne Calenders neither ſeene, nor once ſpoken of? And if the traiterous conſpiracy and rebellion of ſo many your Calender Saintes committed againſt Emperours, Kings, and Princes, can not ſtirre your zeale, nor moue your pen: Nor if the treaſon of pope Gregory 9. raiſing warre againſt his owne city of Rome, and cauſing 30. thouſande citizens in one battaile to be ſlaine, pag. 281. deſerueth not to be eſpied, and accuſed as much as this treaſon of the Lorde Cobham: yet what will you or can you anſwer to me (M. Cope) as touching the horrible treaſon of pope Gregory the 7. committed not againſt Emperour nor king, nor any mortall man, but againſt the Lord hymſelfe, euen againſt your God of your owne making, being therein as you ſay no ſubſtance of bread, but the very perſonall body, fleſh, bloud, and bone of Chriſt himſelf, which body notwythſtanding the foreſayd Pope Gregory the 7. tooke and caſt with his owne hands into the burning fire, becauſe he would not aunſwere him to a certaine doubt or demaund Benn.Card.pag.172. Southly, if ſir John Oldcaſtle had taken the body of king Henrye the 5. and throwne him into the fire, the facte being ſo notoriouſly certaine as thys is, I would neuer haue beſtowed any worde in hys defence. And could thys, and ſo many other hainous treaſons paſſe throughe your fingers (M. Cope) and no other to ſticke in your pen but the Lord Cobham.

Pope Gregory 7 a traytor againſt the Lords owne body.

Vide ſupra.pag. 172.

Finally and ſimply to conclude wyth you (M. Cope) and not to flatter you, what is ẏ whole working, the procedings, actions, & practiſes of your religion, or hath bene almoſt theſe 500. yeares, but a certaine perpetuall kinde of treaſon, to thruſt downe your princes and magiſtrates, to derogate from their right and iuriſdiction, and to aduance your owne maieſties and dominations: as hath bene ſufficiently aboue proued and laid before your faces in a parliament holden in Fraunce by the Lord Peter de Cugnerijs. vide pag.383. Wherefore if the aſſemble of theſe forenamed perſons, either within or wythout S. Giles field be ſuch a great mote of treaſon in your eies, firſt loke vpõ the great blocks and milſtones of your owne traytors at home, and whẽ you haue well diſcuſſed the ſame, then after poure out your wallet of your trifeling Dialogues or Trialogues if ye liſt againſt vs and ſpare vs not. Not that I ſo thincke thys to be a ſufficient excuſe to purge the treaſon of theſe men, if your popiſh Calenders and legeands be found ful of traytours. Multitudo enim peccatorum non parit errori patrocinium: But thys I thincke, that the ſame cauſe whyche made them to ſuffer as traitors, hath made you alſo to rail againſt them for traitors, that is, mere hatred only againſt their Relygion, rather then any true affection you haue to your princes and gouernors. Who if they had bene as feruent in your Popery, and had ſuffred ſo much for the holy father of Rome, or for ẏ liberties of the holy mother church of Rome, I doubt not, but they as holy children of Rome had bene rong into your Romiſh Calendare with a feſtum duplex, or at leaſt with a feſtum ſimplex of 9. leſſons, alſo wt a vigil peraduenture before them.

Vide ſupra.pag. 383.

Religion cõmõly maketh treaſõ among the papiſtes.

Nowe becauſe they were on the contrary profeſſion, & enemies to your Magna Diana Epheſiorum, you playe wyth them as the Epheſian caruers dyd wyth Saint Paule and worſe. Ye thruſt them out as ſeditious rebels, not only out of life and body, but alſo can not abide them to haue any poore harbour in theyr owne friendes houſes, among our Actes and Monuments to be remembred. In the whyche Actes and Monuments, and if gentle maiſter Ireneus, with hys fellow Critobulus in your clerkely Dialogues, will not ſuffer them to be numbred for martyrs: yet ſpeake a good word for them (M. Cope) they may ſtande for teſtes or witneſſe bearers of the trueth. And thus muche for defence of them.

Now to the other part of his accuſation, wherein this Alanus Copus Anglus in hys ἑξαπλᾶ, or ſixfolde Dialogues contẽdeth and chaſeth againſt my former edition, to proue me in my hiſtory to be a lier, forger, impudent, a miſreporter of trueth, a deprauer of ſtories, a ſeducer of the worlde, and what els not? whoſe virulent words and contumelious termes, howe wel they become his popiſh perſone, I knowe not. Certes for my part I neuer deſerued thys at his handes wittingly, that I do know. Maiſter Cope is a man whome yet I neuer ſawe, and leſſe offended, nor euer heard of him before. And if hee had not in the fronte of hys booke intituled himſelf to be an Engliſh man, by his wryting I would haue iudged hym rather ſome wilde Iriſhman, lately crept out of S. Patrikes Purgatory, ſo wildely he wryteth, ſo ſumiſhly he fareth.

Aũſwere to the ſecond part of Copes accuſatiõ concerning his vntrue charging of the booke of Actes & Monũ.

But I ceaſe here, and temper my ſelfe conſidering not what M. Cope deſerueth to be ſayd vnto, nor howe far the pen here could run if it had his ſcope, but cõſidering what the tractatiõ rather of ſuche a ſerious cauſe requireth. And therfore ſeriouſly to ſay vnto you (M. Cope) in thys matter, wher you charge my hiſtory of Acts and Monuments ſo cruelly, to be full of vntruthes, falſe lies, impudent forgeries, deprauations, fraudulent corruptions, and fayned fables, briefly and in one word to anſwere you, not as the Lacones anſwered to the letters of their aduerſary, wyth ſi, but with oſi. Would God (M. Cope) that in al the whole booke of Actes and Monumentes, from the beginning to the latter end of the ſame, were neuer a true ſtorie, but that all were falſe, all were lies, & all were fables. Would God the cruelty of your Catholikes had ſuffred all them to liue, of whoſe death ye ſay now that I doe lie. Although I deny not but in that booke of actes and monumentes containing ſuch diuerſity of matter, ſome thing might ouerſcape me: yet haue I beſtowed my poore diligence. My intent was to profit all men, to hurt none.

The booke of Actes & Monum. to true, if it had pleaſed god otherwiſe.

If you (maiſter Cope) or any other can better my rude doings, and finde things out more finely or truely, with al my hart, I ſhall reioyce with you and the commõ wealth, taking profit by you. In perfectiõ of wryting, of wit, cunning, dexterity, fines or other induments required in a perfect writer, I contend neither with you, nor any other. I graunt that in a laboured ſtory, ſuch as you ſeeme to require, conteyning ſuche infinite varietie of matter, as thys doth, much more time would be required: but ſuch time as I had, ẏ I did beſtow, if not ſo laboriouſly as other could, yet as diligently as I might.

But here partly I heare what you will ſay: I ſhoulde haue taken more leyſure and done it better. I graunt and confeſſe my fault, ſuch is my vice, I can not ſitte all the day (M. Cope) fining and minſing my letters, and coming my head, and ſmoothing my ſelfe all the day at the glaſſe of Cicero. Yet notwythſtanding doing what I can, and doing my good will, me thinkes I ſhould not be reprehended, at leaſt not ſo much be railed on at maiſter Copes hand. Who if he be ſo pregnant in finding faulte with other mens labours (which is an eaſy thing to do) it were to be wiſhed, that hee had enterpriſed himſelfe vppon the matter, and ſo ſhould haue proued what faults might haue bene found in him. Not that I herein doe vtterly excuſe my ſelfe, yea rather am ready to accuſe my ſelfe, but yet notwythſtanding thynke my ſelfe vngently dealt with all at Maiſter Copes hande: who being mine owne countreyman, an Engliſh man as he ſayeth, alſo of the ſame vniuerſitye, yea colledge and ſchoole that I was of: knowing that the firſt edition of theſe Acts and monuments was begon in the farre parts of Germany, where few frendes, no conference, ſmall information coulde be had. And the ſame edition afterwarde tranſlated out of Latin into Engliſh by others, while I in the meane time was occupied about other Regiſters. And now the ſayde Cope hearing moreouer and knowing that I was about a new edition of the ſame Actes and Monuments, at this preſent time, to be ſet forth, for the amẽding of diuers things therein to be reformed: if he had knowen any fault nedefull to be corrected, he might gentlely by letters admoniſhed me therof. Gentlenes ſo would haue required it. Time would well haue ſuffred it. Neither was he ſo far off, but might ſooner haue wrytten a letter to me, then a boke againſt me. Neither was I ſo ingratefull and inhumane, but wold haue thanked him for hys monition: neither yet ſo obſtinate, but being admoniſhed, wold haue corrected willingly where any fault had bene committed.

But herein your nature (M. Cope) doth right wel appeare. Firſt in the ſayde booke of Actes and Monuments, where many other good things be conteyned, not vnfrutefull nor vnprofitable peraduẽture for ẏ inſtruction of your cõſcience, and wherin my labors perhaps might haue deſerued your thanks, all that you diſſemble and paſſe ouer, only excerping thoſe matters whych make for cauillation. Thus the blacke ſpider out of pleaſant flowres ſucketh his poiſon. And what booke is ſo pleaſant or frutefull, though it were the popes owne Portous, yea hys own decretals, yea hys owne very Maſſe booke, to the reading whereof if I brought the like minde ſo diſpoſed to cauil, as you bring to the reading of my hyſtorie, but I coulde finde out twiſe as many mendacia, maculas, impudentias, dolos malos fabulas, fucos, as you haue done in theſe Actes and Monumentes. And yet you haue done pretely well.

Vngentelenes noted in Cope.

The nature of the ſpider

Beſides al this, yet better to marke the goodnes of your gentle nature: Be it ſo I had bene in ſome piece of my ſtory deceiued, as I do not iuſtify my ſelfe in all poynts therin: yet you vnderſtanding that I was about the correction of my booke againe, might eyther haue taken the beſt, and left the worſt: or els gently take the paines to haue aduertiſed me of ſuche notes as you had, wythout further exclamation, or at leaſt might haue deferred your dialogues for a time, till the comming out of my booke, to ſee firſt what would in the latter edition be altered. But belike your gal was full, your haſt could not tary, your venim muſt nedes bruſt out.

Etſi non aliqua nocuiſſes mortuus eſſes.

Copus Sycophanta.

Seeing therfore the order of your doings to be ſuch, and diſpoſition of your nature ſo farre from al humanity, dealing with me ſo extremely, if I thus prouoked wyth your extremity againe, ſhould now after thys your curriſh nature ſhape you a name accordingly, and in ſteade of Cope godfather you to be a perpetual ſycophāt, could you much blame me? and doth not your ſycophanticall booke wel deſerue it? or thinke you I could not repay you againe wyth like extremitie as you bryng, and dreſſe your drouſie or rather louſie Dialogues in their right colours, if I were ſo diſpoſed? But my purpoſe is wyth pacience to ſpare you, and rather to pray for you, God make you a good manne. Peraduenture he may hereafter call you. And rather had I to win you, then to ſting you. Leauing therefore the conſideratian of your ingrateful doings, I will nowe conſider onely the poyntes wherein you charge me in your booke, anſwering briefly vnto the ſame. Briefly I ſay, becauſe the greatneſſe of thys volume, and aboundance of other more frutefull matter, geueth me little laiſure at thys preſent to ſtand about brawling wordes.

The Calendare of the Actes and Mon. defended.

Ex proœmio ad lectorem.

Firſt he ſeemeth highly to be greued with mee, for my Calendare prefixed before the boke of monuments. wherin hee hath no cauſe eyther to be offended wt me, or to chafe with himſelf. As touching which Calendare I haue ſufficiently and expreſſely declared before ſo muche, as myghte quickly ſatiſfy this ſcruple of M. Cope if he eyther woulde haue taken the paines, or els had had ye laiſure to reade the wordes contained in the Latine preface before the Booke prefixed, whych are thus: Quanquam a me quidem non aliter Calendarium hoc inſtitutum eſt, niſi vt pro Indice duntaxat ſuum cuiuſque Martyris menſem & annum deſignante, ad priuatum lectoris ſeruiret vſum &c. In whych wordes preuenting before the cauilling obiection of the aduerſary, I forewarned the Reader afore hand, touching the Calendare, wherfore it was ordained and prefixed, for no other purpoſe, but to ſerue the vſe only of the reader, in ſtead of a table, ſhewing the yere and moneth of euery Martyr, what time he ſuffered &c. what hurt I pray you is in this Calendar prefixed before the booke of Monumentes, more then in the Table of M. Copes booke, ſet after his Dialogues? But mayſter Cope had no laiſure to peruſe thys place: it made not for hys humour.

Obiection for Martyrs in the Calendare.

Aunſwere.

But this greeueth him in the Calendare, and that very ſore. For that I place in this Calendar, ſir Iohn Oldcaſtle ſir Roger Acton, Browne, Beuerley and other for Martyrs, and diſplace for them, other holy auncient Martyrs and Saints, as Antholius, Sother, Dorothe, Clarus, Lucianus, Seuerinus. &c. Anſwer: If M. Cope can not abide the Lord Cobham, ſir Roger Acton, Browne, and Beuerley, which were hanged (as he ſayeth for treaſon) to haue the name of martyrs, then let them beare the name of witnes bearers, or teſtes of the truth, becauſe they were alſo burned for the teſtimony of their faith. Seing there is no difference in the ſayd names, all is one to me by which they are called.

In præfatione ad dict. lectorem. li. Actes and Mon.

And where hee chargeth me for thruſting & ſhouldring out the olde and auncient holy Saintes aforenamed out of this Calendare, and placing other new come Sayntes in their rowmes: this is not the firſt vntruth that M. Cope hath made in his dialogues, nor yet the leaſt, vnto whome I might therefore fitly anſwere againe with his owne familiar phraſe, or rather the phraſe of Cicero, which he doth ſo muche affectate: Quod nimirum hic ipſe Alanus Copus Anglus, vnde me mendacij coarguit, inde ſibi ipſi ſempiternam ac ineluibilem turpiſsimi mendacij, ac ſingularis impudentiæ notam inurat. For why haue not I as iuſt cauſe to ſay this to him, as he to me? For ſomuch as in the firſt beginning and preface of the ſayde booke of Actes and Monuments, I ſo diligently and expreſſely do warne all men before, firſt that I make here no Calendare purpoſely of any Saintes, but a Table of good and godly men that ſuffered for the truth, to ſhew the day and moneth of their ſuffering. My wordes be extant and euident, whych are theſe: Neque vero ideo inter diuos a me referuntur iſti, quòd inſeruntur in Calendarium. &c. And declaring afterward how the ſayde Calendare dothe ſtand but in ſtede of a table, my words do folow thus: Haud aliter Calendarium hoc inſtitutum eſt, niſi vt pro Indice duntaxat ſuum cuiuſque Martyris menſem & annum deſignante, Lectori ad vſum atque ad manum ſeruiat. &c.

Beckets bloud ſet vp, to the iniury of Chriſtes bloud.

Againe, neither did I receiue theſe men into that Kalendare, that holy Anatholius, Sother, Dorothæa, wyth other ancient holy Saintes ſhoulde be remoued out, as you doe falſly & vntruly affirme, but becauſe the courſe of that ſtory reaching but 500. yeares, did not comprehende thoſe former times of ſuche auncient Martyres, but onely of ſuche as ſuffered in theſe latter dayes: therfore requiſite it was that in the table ſuch ſhould be placed chiefly, of whom ye whole booke did then principally and onely entreat, to demōſtrate thereby the time and day of their Martyrdome. Neither yet were the other excluded out of thys newe Kalendare, whyche were neuer inſerted in the ſame before, but onely becauſe both together coulde not there haue ſtanding, neceſſity ſo required theſe in no caſe to be omitted, and yet no iniury meant to the other to be excluded out of their owne Kalēdars, wherto properly they did perteine. As for thys Kalendare or this table, becauſe they were not pertinent vnto it, they could not therin, neither was it neceſſary, they ſhould be included. And yet neither did I (M. Cope) wtout due & ſolemne proteſtation omit the ſame in my foreſayde Catalogue, to preuent and ſtop all cauilling mouthes: As by ſpeciall words in the ſayd proeme of my booke vnto the Reader doth appeare, folowing in this wiſe: Interim nullius ego boni ſanctique viri (modo qui verè ſanctus ſit) cauſam lædo, nec memoriam extinguo, nec gloriam minuo. Et ſi cui hoc diſpliceat Calendarium, meminerit, non in templis à me collocari, ſed domeſticæ tantum lectioni præparari. &c. And wher is now (M. Cope) thys your reiecting, expelling, remouing, expulſing, exempting, deturbating and thruſting out of Antholius, Sanct. Dorothæ and other holye Saintes out of Catalogues, faſtes, and Calenders? Or what man is that, or where dwelleth he, Qui veros Chriſti Martyres è Cœlo ad Tartara deturbat? That is. which tumbleth downe true Martyrs from heauen, into hell? which if ye meane by me: In one worde I aunſwere, ye falſely belie me maiſter Copus, I had almoſt called you maiſter Capus, ſo lyke a Capon ye ſpeake. Neyther haue you nor any other euer heard me ſo ſay. Neither haue I euer heard of any ſo madde to play ſo the giants with their mountains to clime the heauens, to tumble downe Gods true & holy martyrs out of heauen, downe into hell, vnleſſe it were your ſelfe (as yet ye are, ye may be better) and ſuch other of your gilde and popiſh fraternity, which make of Gods true ſaintes, ſtinking dunghils, (for ſo yee terme them in your bookes) and not onely thruſt into heauen your Pſeudoſanctos, ſaintes of your own making, whom God by his word doth not allow: but alſo depulſe downe from heauen, and make dunghils of Gods welbeloued ſeruants, his faithful people, and bleſſed martyrs, which haue died for the word of god. And what maruel then, if in your blaſphemous bokes, ye caſt down from heauen to hell, the poore Saintes of Chriſt, when in effecte you deiecte alſo the bloude and croſſe of the ſonne of God Chriſt Ieſus himſelfe, ſetting vp in his office and place, tu per Thomæ ſanguinem, quem pro te impendit, fac nos Chriſte ſcandere, quò Thomas aſcendit. Say, maſter Cope, your conſcience indifferently, ſet al Popiſh parcialitie a part, where as the Scripture teacheth vs ſimplely. Quòd citra ſanguinem nulla fit remiſsio. i. wythout blud there is no remiſſion: whether ye thinke, by this bloud of the new Teſtament is meant the bloud of Chriſt alone, or the bloud of other moe beſides? If the bloud of one muſt ſtand alone, why doe yee then with the giants build vp your mountains, and make a ladder of Beckets popiſh bloud, for men to ſcale the heauens? Or in ſo doing, howe can you, but eyther wyth the Proteſtauntes wipe out of your Kalendare, Thomæ ſanguinem, or els demoliſh from heauen Sāguinem Chriſti with the papiſts?

Papiſtes deuout to ſet vp Chriſts croſſe in earth, but enemies to Chriſtes croſſe in heauen.

A double vntruth in Copus

And heere by the way, I cannot but muſe, why you are ſo deuout in ſetting vp the croſſe of Chriſt in your church, which are ſuch enemies to the true croſſe of Chriſt to ſtand in heauen. Looke vpon thys (maſter Cope) and tel me, vtra pars verius veros Chriſti Martyres è cœlo in tartara detrudat? And therfore as you falſely belie me in thys, for detruding and tombling out of heauen Anatholius, Iulianus, Clarus, Lucianus, Agatha, Dorothea and other, againſt whome I neuer yet ſpake any reproching word, but rather in this my volume haue ſet forth their commendatiō: ſo is it vntrue likewiſe, where you affirm that in thys my Kalendar I make an ἀποθέωσιν, or Canoniſation of falſe Martyrs. I tolde you before, when yee were in Englande, I tell you again, being nowe in your tranſmigration, in wordes as plaine as I coulde, Hanc ego Apotheoſin mihi nunquam ſumpſi, quam ſibi tam confidenter ſumpſit Gregorius nonus. Were not theſe wordes of my Proteſtation manifeſt ynough? were they not ſufficient to ſatiſfie a reaſonable Momus? And to make the matter more playne, dyd I not adde moreouer as followeth: Porrò neque eò ſpectat hoc Calendarium, vt nouam aliquam feſtorum dierum legem præſcribam eccleſiæ.&c. And not contented wyth thys foreſeeyng before ſuche wrangling ſpirites to come, as now I ſee in you: I ſhewed alſo the cauſe why I needed not ſo to doe, my wordes were theſe: Feſtorum dierum iam plus ſatis erat in mundo.&c. And yet further, becauſe no caviller ſhould take holde here of any iniurie done to the holy Saintes, eyther old or new in the Church, therefore in expreſſe wordes I remoued away all ſuſpition of any iniurie, preuenting the obiection of the aduerſary in theſe wordes. Habeat & Eccleſia ſuos ſanctos, tum recentes, tum veteranos, modo probatos, modo interim iidem ne adorentur, modo quàm ſint vetuſti, tam etiam verè ſancti ſint.&c.

These places of my booke, if ye did ſee: why do you diſſemble them? If yee had not ſomuch leiſure to read them: howe had you ſo much laiſure to wryte againſt any mans booke, not knowing what is in the booke contained? And howe ſtands it then wyth trueth, that ſo like a Mome yee cry out ſo in your booke, againſt theſe new made martyrs, qui non poſſunt niſi per aliorum iniuriam creſcere.&c. And again, where you exclaime againſt me, and ſay that I thruſt out the auncient Martyrs out from their ſeat and poſſeſſion, and place new in their rowmes.&c.

Alſo where you continuing yet ſtill in your common place of lying (out of which you cannot digreſſe) do charge me farther, that I do appoint out holy dayes and working daies by colours of red and blacke, in my foreſayd Calendare to be obſerued: theſe leude notes of yours, if they had bene picked out of my Calendare by you, wythout myne owne ſpecial declaration before made to the contrary, they might ſeeme to haue ſome bluſh of credite. Now what wil the reader ſay, or what may he iudge, cōſidering and conferring thys your cauilling, with the matter of my premonition made before, but that you are al together ſet to play the perpetuall Syc. I had almoſt called you by your right name maſter Cope. But God make you (as I ſaid) a good man. Reading further in your boke I could not but ſmile and laugh at this your ridiculous and moſt loud lying Hyperboliſmum: where as you cōparing my making of ſaints, with the Popes making, can finde (as ye ſay) in the Pope no ſuch impudent arrogancie in preſuming, as ye finde in me.&c. If the Pope had not abuſed hys arrogant iuriſdiction in canoniſing and deifying his Saintes, more then I haue done: the yeare ſhould not be combred wyth ſo many idle holy dayes, nor the Calendares wyth ſo many raſkall Saintes, ſome of them as good, as euer were they that put Chriſt to death.

Double abhomination in the popes Calendare.

The great Saint maker of Rome and who be his Saintes.

But where will you finde (M. Cope) any man to beleue thys your hyperbolical compariſon to be true, whych ſeeth and knoweth the infinit and vnmeaſurable exceſſe of the Popes arrogancie, not only in ſhrining ſuch a rable of blind ſaintes of his owne creating: but alſo in preſcribing the ſame to be receaued vniuerſally in the whole worlde, and not to be receaued onely, but alſo to be inuocated for gifts and graces, alſo to be worſhipped for aduocates and mediatours. Wherin riſeth a double abhomination of the pope, the one for his idolatrous making and worſhipping of ſaintes: the other for his blaſphemous iniurie and derogation to Chriſte, in repulſing him out of his office of mediation, & placing other mediatours of his owne making. And nowe to conſider what Saintes theſe were, or what were the cauſes of their ſancting: what S. almoſt among all the Popes Saintes ſhall you finde (M. Cope) made within theſe 500. yeres, but commonly he was either ſome Pope, or ſome rich Biſhop and Prelate, or ſome fat abbat, or ſome blind Frier, ſome Monke, or Nunne, ſome ſuperſtitious regulare, or ſome builder of monaſteries, or ſome geuer and benefactour to the popiſh clergy, or mainteiner agoniſing for the dignities and liberties of the Popyſhe church? what poore lay man or lay womā, were their liues neuer ſo Chriſtian, their faith and confeſſion neuer ſo pure, their death neuer ſo agoniſing for the witnes of Chriſt, and truth of his word, ſhall finde any place or fauour in all the Popes πονηρόπολις, that is in the Popes Calendar, either in red colour, or els in blacke.

The great Godmaker of Rome.

But heere (M. Cope) if yee had the wit, ſomuch to defend, as yee haue to ouerwhart, you myght take mee wyth the maner, and replie againe for the defence of your great Saintmaker, or rather Godmaker of Rome: that he maketh mo martyrs & Saints of theſe foreſayd poore laymen, & laywomen, then euer he did of any other. For he burneth them, he hangeth them, hee drowneth them, impriſoneth & famiſheth them, & ſo maketh truer martyrs of Chriſt, then any other of his new ſhrined ſaints, whom he hath ſo dignified in his Calendar. For the one he doth rubricate, only wt his red letters, the other he doth rubricate wt their owne bloud. And therefore to aunſwere you (M. Cope) to your compariſon made betwene the pope and me, for making of holy Martyrs and Saintes: Briefly I ſay, and report me to al the world, ẏ herein is no compariſon. For if ye ſpeake of true Martyrs, who doth make them, but the pope? if ye ſpeake of falſ martyrs, who doth make them, but the pope? And farthermore, to compare together the cauſes of theſe Martyred Saintes in my Calendare, wyth them whyche ſhine ſhrined in the Popes Calendare (taking the ſame proportion of time as I do, wythin theſe laſt 500. yeares) why may not I haue as good cauſe to celebrate theſe in my Calendar, which loſt their liues and were ſlain, principally for the cauſe of Chriſt and of hys word: as the pope hath to celebrate his double and ſimple feaſted ſaintes in hys Calendar, who in their doinges, doctrine, and life, as they ſeemed rather to ſerue the Pope, then Chriſt the Lord: ſo in their death appeared no ſuch cauſe, why they ſhuld be ſanctified in the church beyond all other. Let not the Church of Chriſt (M. Cope) be deluded with hypocritical names, nor fained apparitions, and fabulous miracles, neither be you deceiued your ſelfe, but let vs reſort ſincerely to the worde of God. What was in S. Fraunces, looke vpon his ſuperſtitious life, & preſumptuous teſtament, wrought no dout by Sathan, to diminiſh and obſcure the Teſtament of Ieſus Chriſt, why he ſhould be made a Saint, and not an enemy rather of Chriſt?

No cauſe why the popes newe ſaints ſhuld be put in the Calendare.

Tho. Becket

Aldelmus. Anſelmus. Dunſtanus.

S. Elizabeth

What was likewiſe in Frier Dominicke, who before Fraunces x. yeares together perſecuted the poore Waldenſes to death and deſtruction, why ſhould he ſtand a S. and a pillar of the church? I pray you what ſee you in Thomas Becket, but that he died for the ambitious libertyes of the popiſhe church? what in Aldelmus, and in Anſelmus, but only that they chaſed away maried prieſts from the churches, and planted in idle Monkes in their ſteade? The like alſo did Dunſtanus, who was rubricated wyth a duplex feſtum. Elizabeth who was the wife of the Marqueſſe of Thuring, when ſhee had with much perſwaſions got out her huſbande to fight againſt the Turkes, and was there ſlaine, ſhe afterward encloyſtered her ſelfe, and was made a Nunne. And doe you thinke theſe cauſes to be ſufficient, why they ſhuld be made ſaintes, worſhipped in churches, and ſet in Calendares? Long it were to make rehearſal of all this riffraffe, and almoſt infinite. One example may ſuffice for many. S. Gilbert of Sempringhā, was the ſonne of Iocelin a knight, who for his deformitie of his body was ſet to learning, & afterward made Chanon, and was author of the Gilbertines, in the time of king Iohn.

The canoniſation of S. Gilbert of Sempringham.

This Gilbert after he had erected 13. monaſteries of hys order of Sempringham, was afterwarde labored for vnto the Pope to be made a Saint: who hearing of hys myracles, wrote hys letters to Hubert Archbiſhop of Canterbury, in the behalfe of the foreſayd Gilbert, willing & commaundyng per Apoſtolica ſcripta, that the feaſt of the ſayde Gilbert ſhoulde be ſolemniſed through all the prouince of Canterb. Vt meritis nimirum eius & precibus apud miſericordiſsimum iudicem miſericordiam conſequamur.&c.

Ex lib. de Vita S. Gilberti Confeſſoris.

The Popes letter & the Archb. for the canoniſing of ſaint Gilbert.

Whereuppon Hubert the Archb. directeth downe hys wrytings to all the biſhops within hys prouince, the contents of whych his wrytings do folow: Hubertus Dei gratia Cant. Archiepiſcop. totius Angliæ primas, dilectis in Chriſto frat. Epiſco. per prouinciam Cant. Sal. grat. & benedictionem. D. Papa, ſicut ex literis ipſius manifeſtè perpéditur, de conuerſatione, meritis, & moribus b. Gilberti magiſtri ordinis de Sempringham, & miraculis a Deo per eum factis per teſtes & teſtimonia ſufficienter inſtructus, de conſilio fratrum Cardin. ipſum mag. Catalogo ſanctorum decreuit aſcribi, ſolemnitatem eius conſtituit & mandauit per Cant. prouinciam ſolemniter celebrari. Inſuper & corpus eius cum requiſiti fuerimus præcepit ad honorem Dei & gloriam eleuari. Veſtra igitur vniuerſitas huic mandato cum deuotione congaudeat, & ſecundum formam in ipſo mandato præſcriptam, prædicti confeſſoris Domini depoſitionem annuam faciatis cum reuerentia & ſolemniter obſeruari: vt apud Dominum & ab illo veſtra debeat & poſsit deuotio commēdari, necnon & ipſius ſancti ſupplex interceſsio vobis proficiat ad ſalutem. Valete.

The ſumme of the whiche wryting of the Archb. tendeth to thys effecte. That forſomuch as the Pope hearyng of the life and myracles of Gilbert, Maiſter of the order of Sempringham, by ſufficiēt witnes and teſtimonies, hath in his letters commanded him by the aduiſe of hys Cardinals, that the ſayde Gilbert ſhould be canoniſed & aſcribed in the Cataloge of ſaintes, and that his ſolemnity ſhoulde be celebrate ſolemnely throughout al the prouince of Canterb. And alſo hys body to be taken vp and ſhrined to the honour and glory of God: He therefore at the Popes commaundement wryting vnto them, wylleth all the Suffraganes within his prouince of Canterb. yearely to ſolemniſe, and cauſe to be ſolemnized reuerētly the depoſition of the ſayd Saint Gilbert Confeſſor: to the entent that they deuotion may be commended of the Lord, and of him. And alſo, that the humble interceſſion of the ſayd Saint may profite them to their ſaluation.

The blaſphemous collect of the Popes making for S.Gilbert.

Furthermore, for the more full canoniſing (canniſing I had almoſt ſayd) of this new made ſaint, the ſaide Pope Innocent writing to Hubert aforeſayd, adioyneth withall a collect of his owne making, which is this: Plenam in nobis æterne ſaluator tuæ vertutis operare medelam, vt qui præclara beati Gilberti confeſſoris tui merita veneramur, ipſius adiuti ſuffragijs a cunctis animarum noſtrarum languoribus liberemur. Qui viuis & regnas. &c. That is: worke in vs O eternal ſauior full remedy of thy vertue, that we which worſhip the worthy merites of bleſſed Gilbert thy confeſſour, being ſuccoured by his ſuffrages, may be deliuered from all languors & diſeaſes of our ſoules, who liueſt and raigneſt. &c.

Copus pag. 119. lin 7.

The cõſecration of this one Saint (who perhaps was not the worſt) I thought here to cõmemorate, to the intent that the reader meaſuring by this one the Canoniſation of al the reſt, may iudge the better vpõ this cõpariſon of maſter Cope, whether of vs doth venditate more impudent authoritie, the Pope in his Callender, or I in mine: or to make the compariſon more fit, whether is more impudent the pope in his Callendar, or els maiſter Cope in his Dialogues more doltiſhe.

Cope counſailed to ceaſe hys rayling.

No good commeth of rayling.

But briefly to make an end of this matter with you to canoniſe or to authoriſe any ſaintes, for man it is preſumptuous: to preſcribe any thing here to be worſhipped, beſide God alone, it is idolatrous: to ſet vp any mediatours but Chriſt onely, it is blaſphemous. And whatſoeuer the pope doth or hath done in his Calendar, my purpoſe in my Calendare, was neither to deface any old ſaint, or to ſolemniſe any new. In my booke of Actes and Monuments entreating of matters paſſed in the churche, theſe latter fiue hundreth yeares, I did regulate out a Callendare, not for any Canon to conſtitute Saintes, but onely for a table of them which within the ſame time did ſuffer for the teſtimony of the word, whom I did and doe take to be good and godly men. If any haue other iudgement of them, I binde no man to my opinion, as the pope doth to his. The day will come which ſhall iudge both them and you. In the meane ſeaſon it ſhall be beſt for you (M. Cope) in my iudgement to keepe a good thing in your head, and to quiet your rayling mode. A hard thinge it is to iudge before the Lord. Mans iudgement may faile and is vncertayne, the iudgement of God is alwayes ſure. Beſt is therfore either to be ſure by the word and iudgement of God before, what you do ſay, or els to ſay the beſt. Of ſuch ſlaunderous, and intemperate rayling, can come no good, neither to whome ye rayle vpon: nor to your ſelfe, whiche rayleth: nor to the church of God that heareth you rayle. For them you can not hurt, they are gone. To your ſelfe, and thoughe your matters be true, yet little honeſty it will bring, to be counted a rayler, and if it be vncertayne, your ſtate is daungerous, and if be falſe, moſt miſerable: And as to the Church what great edification can proceede of ſuche contentious brawling and barkinge one againſt an other, I doe not greatly ſee. And if the zeale of the biſhop of Romes church haue ſo much ſwallowed you vp, that ye cannot but ſtamp and ſtare at traytours when ye ſee them put in Calenders: (firſt M. Cope) be ye ſure firſt that they be traytours, wiſdome would, whome you call traytours. And if ye can ſo proue thẽ (as ye haue not yet) then let your Irenæus or Critobulus tell me, why doth not this flagrant zeale of yours as hote as purgatory, burne out, and flame as wel againſt your owne traytors, hauing ſo many in your own Calendare and Church at home?

The zeale of M. Cope expended.

And if there be ſuch a Catholicke zeale in you, that hath ſet your gentle breſt on ſuch a pelting chaſe, why then is not this your Catholicke zeale equally indifferent? why take ye on ſo fell on the one ſide agaynſt ſir Iohn Oldcaſtle, ſir Roger Acton, M. Browne &c? A man wold think you played Hercules furens in Orcheſtra. On the other ſyde agayne ye are Oleo tranquillior. What indiffirencie (maiſter Cope) call you this? Or what zeale make you this to be? Albeit your zeale, I iudge not, as I know it not. Swifte iudgement ſhall not become me, which go about to correct the ſame in you. But this I exhorte you, to beware (maiſter Cope) that by your owne fruites and doinges euident ye do not bewray this zeale in you to be Non ſecundum ſcientiam, nor ſuch a zeale as fighteth Pro Domo Dei, ſed pro demo Pontificis. As I ſayde I iudge you not. You haue your iudge to whome ye ſtand or fall. My counſayle is, that ye do not ſo zeale the Byſhop of Rome, that for his ſake ye loſe your owne ſoule. Ye remember the olde vulgar voice it is not good Ludere cum ſanctis, worſe it is Illudere: worſe of all it is Debacchari in immerentes: Becauſe that Deus ipſe vltionum Dominus Many times taketh theyr cauſe in hand according as it is written: Opprobria opprobrantium tibi ceciderũt in me. i. The rebukes of thy rebukers fell vpon me. And ſeldome haue I ſeene any ſuche blaſphemous raylers agaynſt the ende or puniſhment of Gods ſaintes and ſeruauntes, without great repentaunce, to come to anye good end themſelues.

And admit this (as graunted vnto you M. Cope) that theſe mẽ had bene traitors, which ye are not able to proue: well, they had their puniſhment therfore, the worlde can go no further: & what would you haue more? who and if they repented, why may they not haue as good part in Chriſtes kingdome as your ſelfe? Now forſomuch as the ſayd perſons alſo ſuffering a double puniſhement were ſo conſtant in the way of trueth, and moſt principally for the ſame were perſecuted, and chiefly therfore brought to their death: that part of example, becauſe I ſawe, it pertayne to the profite of the church, why might I not inſert it with other church ſtoryes in my booke? Let the churche take that which belongeth to the churche. Let the worlde take that, which to the world pertaineth and go no further. And if ye thinke it much, that I would exemplifie theſe whome you call traytors in the booke of martyrs: firſt ye muſt vnderſtand, that I wrote no ſuche booke bearing the title of the booke of Martyrs, I wrote a booke called the Actes and Monumentes, of thinges paſſed in the church. &c. wherin many other matters be contayned beſide the martyrs of Chriſt. But this peraduenture moueth your colar, that in the Callendar I name them for martyrs. And why may I not in my Calẽdar cal them by the name of martyrs, which were faythfull witneſſes of Chriſtes truth and Teſtament for the which they were alſo chiefly brought vnto that end? Or why may I not call them holy ſayntes, whome Chriſt hath ſanctified with hys bleſſed bloud? And what if I ſhold alſo call the theefe and murderer hanging on the right ſide of the Lord, by the name of an holy ſaint, and confeſſour, for hys witneſſing of the Lord, what can mayſter Cope ſay agaynſt it?

The name of Martyrs in the Calendare defended.

What is a Martyr.

Holy ſaintes of Chriſt.

Martyrs in the Calẽdar coloured with red.

The painter coloureth with redde.

The pope coloureth with bloud.

And as for colouring the names of certaine Martirs in the ſayd Calendare in read or ſcarlet letters (althoughe that pertayneth nothing to me, whiche was as pleaſed the Painter or Printer) yet if that be it that ſo muche breaketh pacience, why rather doth he not expoſtulate in thys behalfe with the great ſaynt maker of rome, who hath readed them much more then euer did I. For he did red and dyed them with theyr owne bloude, where as I did but onely colour them with redde letters. And thus for matter of my Calendar enough.

The authour cleareth himſelfe of lyes and vntruthes laid againſt him

Proceeding now out of the Calendar vnto the booke, where hee chargeth me with ſo many lyes, impudencies, vanities, deprauations, and vntruthes, it remayneth likewiſe I cleare my ſelf, anſwering firſt to thoſe lyes and vntruthes, which to the ſtory of ſir Roger Acton, & ſir Iohn Oldcaſtle do appertain. And after to other particulars, as in order of my booke doe follow. And firſt where he layeth againſt me whole heapes, and cartlodes, I cannot tel how many of lyes and fallities: I here briefly anſwere maiſter Cope agayne (or what Engliſh Harpeſfeld els ſoeuer lieth couered vnder this Engliſh Cope) that if a lye be (after the definition of S. Auguſtine) whatſoeuer thing is pronoũced with the intent to deceaue an other: then I proteſt to you mayſter Cope, and to all the world there is neuer a lie in all my booke. What the intent and cuſtome is of the papiſtes to doe, I cannot tell: for mine owne, I will ſay, although many other vices I haue, yet frõ thys one I haue alwayes of nature abhorred, wittingly to deceaue any mã or childe, ſo neare as I could, much leſſe the church of God whom I with all my hart do reuerence, and with feare obey. And therfore among diuers cauſes, that haue wythdrawne my minde from the Papiſtes faction, almoſt there is none greater then thys, becauſe I ſee them ſo little geuẽ to truth, ſo farre from all ſerious feeling and care of ſincere religion, ſo full of falſe pretenced hipocriſie and diſſimulation, ſo litle regarding the church of Chriſt in their inward hartes, which they ſo much haue in theyr mouthes: ſo, as vnder the title thereof they may hold vp theyr own eſtate, Otherwiſe ſo little reuerence they yeld to the true & honorable church of Ieſus the ſonne of God, that with vnworthy and raſcall miniſters they take into it they paſſe not, what fictions, what lyes and fables, what falſe miracles and abſurde forgeries they inuent to delude it, they care not. I ſpeake not of all.

toward the churche of Chriſt, not muche regarding what corruption encreaſed therein, ſo that there commodities might not decreaſe. Thus out of this fountayne haue guſhed out ſo many prodigious lyes in Churche Legendes, in Saintes liues, in monkiſhe fictions, in fabulous miracles, in falſe and forged Reliques, as in peeces of the holye croſſe, in the bloud of hales, in our Ladies milke in ẏ nails of Chriſt, which they make to a great number. Likewiſe in their falſe and blind errours, corrupt doctrines, abſurd inuentions repugnant to ẏ truth of the worde. Item in their baſtard bookes, forged Epiſtles, their Apocripha, and Pſeudopigrapha. Here commeth in their forged Canons, theyr foyſting and cogging in ancient councels & decrees, as in ὡς ἀπὸ ἐμου πέτρου in Canons of the Apoſtles (if thoſe Canons were the Apoſtles) Excepta Romana ſede, foyſted into the decrees by Gratianus, alſo the cogging in a falſe Canon to the councell of Nice for the mayntenaunce of the ſea of Rome, as appeareth in the 6. Synode of Carthage.

To ſpeake moreouer of the liturges of S. Iames, of Chriſoſtome and other, of the firſt maſſe ſayde by ſainct Peter at Rome, and that S. Peter ſate 25. yeares Byſhop of Rome. To ſpeake alſo of the works of Auguſtine, Ambroſe, Hierome, and Gregorye, what doctour or famous writer hath there bene in the churche, vnder whoſe name ſome counterfayted bookes haue not falſely bene fathered, and yet ſtand ſtill authoriſed vnder their patronage, to the great detriment of the churche? what ſhoulde I ſpeake of Abdias, Amphilochius, Dionyſius Areopagita. The Dialoges of Gregory, which falſely to this day haue ben aſcribed to Gregory the firſt, where in deede they were firſt written in Greeke, by Gregory the 3. and afterward tranſlated out of Greeke into Latine, by pope Zachary. vide ſupra. pag. 130. Likewiſe that worthy and Imperiall ſermon intituled Euſebij pamphili Sermo ad Conuentum Sanctorum, hath to thys day wrongfully borne the name of Euſebius. where as in very truth it was made by the good Emperour Conſtantinus himſelfe in his owne heroicall ſtile in latine, and afterward tranſlated out of Latine into Greeke by Euſebius, as he himſelfe confeſſeth in hys worke De vita Conſtant. lib. 4. But as touching this ſermon although the name be chaunged, ſo godly and fruitful it is, that it mattereth not much, vnder whoſe name it be read, yet worthy to be read vnder ẏ name of none ſo much, as of the Emperor Cōſtantine himſelfe, who was the true author and owner therof.

A maiſter lie.

Briefly except it be the bookes onely of the new Teſtament, and of the olde, what is almoſt in the popes church, but either it is mingled or depraued, or altered, or corrupted, either by ſome additions interlaced, or by ſome diminutiō mangled and gelded, or by ſome gloſe adulterate, or with manifeſt lies contaminate. So that in theyr doctrine ſtandeth little truth, in theyr Legendes, Portues, & maſſe bookes leſſe trueth, in their miracles and Reliques leaſt truth of all. Neyther yet doe theyr ſacramentes remayne cleare and voyd of manifeſt lyes and corruption. And ſpecially here commeth in the mayſter bee, whiche bringeth in much ſweet hony into Popes hiues, ẏ maiſter lye, I meane of all lyes, where the P. leauing not one cromme of bread nor drop of wine in the reuerent communion, vntruly and idolatrouſly taketh away all ſubſtaunce of bread from it, turning the whole ſubſtaunce of bread into the ſubſtaunce of Chriſtes owne body: which ſubſtaunce of bread, if the Pope take from the ſacrament, then muſte he alſo take the breaking from it: for breaking and the body of Chriſt, can in no wiſe ſtand litterally together by the ſcripture. Thus then as this is proued by the word of God to be a manifeſt lye: ſo thinke not much (good Reader hereat, as though I paſſed the bondes of modeſtie in calling it the Archlye or maiſter lie of all lies. Becauſe vppon this one, an infinite number of other lyes and errours in the popes churche, as handmaydes doe wayte and depend.

But forſomuch as I ſtand here not to charge other mē ſo muche, as to defende my ſelfe, ceaſing therefore, or rather differing for a time to ſtir this ſtinking pudle of theſe wilfull and intended lyes and vntruthes whiche in the Popes Religion and in papiſtes bookes be innumerable I will now returne to thoſe vntruthes and impudent lies which M. Cope hath hunted out in my hiſtory of Actes & Monuments, firſt beginning with thoſe vntruthes which he carpeth in the ſtorye of the foreſayde ſyr Iohn Oldcaſtle, and ſyr Roger Acton, Browne and the reſt.

And firſt, where he layeth to my charge, that I cal them Martyrs, whiche were traytors and ſeditious rebels agaynſt the king, and theyr Country: to this I haue anſwered before ſufficiently.

Now here then muſt the reader needes ſtay a little at M. Copes requeſt, to ſee my vanitie and impudencye yet more fully and amply expreſſed in refuting a certain place in my Latine ſtory, concerning the kinges ſtatute made at Leiceiſter, whiche place and wordes by him alledged, be theſe, pag. 167. Quocirca Rex indicto Leceſtriæ concilio (quod fortaſsis Londini ob Cabhami fautores non erat tutum) propoſito edicto immanem denunciat pœnam his, quicunq; deinceps hoc doctrinæ genus ſectarentur, vſq; adeo in eos ſeuerus, vt non modo hæreticos, ſed perduelliones etiam haberi, ac pro inde gemino eos ſupplicio, ſuſpendio ſimul & incēdio afficiendos ſtatuerit. &c. Vpon theſe wordes out of my foreſayd Latine booke alledged, maiſter Cope perſwadeth himſelfe, to haue great aduauntage agaynſt me, to proue me a notorious lyer, in three ſondry pointes. Firſt, in that, whereas I ſay, that the king did hold his parliament at Leiceſter, adding thys by the way of Parentheſis (quod fortaſsis Londini ob Cobhami fautores non erat tutum &c.) here he concludeth thereby ſimpliciter and preciſely, that the Lord Cobham and ſyr Roger Acton with his fellowes, were traytors &c. whereby a man may ſoone ſhape a cauiller, by the ſhadowe of mayſter Cope. For where as my Dialyſis out of ẏ texte ſpeaketh doubtfully and vncertaynely by this word (fortaſsis) meaning in deede, the king to be in feare of the Goſpellers, that he durſt not hold his Parliament at London, but went to Leiceiſter: he argueth preciſely therfore, that the Lord Cobham, ſir Roger Acton, and his fellowes went about to kil the king. Secondly, where I affirme that the king in that Parliament made a grieuous law agaynſt al ſuch did hold the doctrine of Wickliffe, that they ſhould be taken hereafter: not for heretiques, but alſo for fellons, or rebels, or traytors, and therefore ſhould ſuſtayne a double puniſhement, both to be hanged, and alſo to be burned &c. Here cōmeth in maiſter Momus, with his Cope on his backe, and prouing me to be a lyer, denyeth playnly ẏ the king made any ſuche ſtatute. vid. pag. 835. line 6. where hys wordes be theſe: Atqui quod hæretici pro perduellionibus & deinceps geminatas pœnas ſuſpēdij & incendij luerent, vt nugatur Foxus, nullo modo illic traditur. &c.

Firſt here woulde bee aſked of maiſter Cope, what hee calleth patriæ hoſtes, et proditores? if he call theſe traytours, then let vs ſee whether they that followed the ſect of Wycliffe, were made traytours & heretiques by the kings law, or not. And firſt let vs heare what ſayth Polydore Virgil, his owne witnes in this behalfe, whoſe words in his xxij. booke, pag. 441. be theſe: Quare publice edixit, vt ſi vſpiam deinceps reperirentur, qui eam ſequerentur ſectam, patriæ hoſtes haberentur, quò ſine omni lenitate ſeuerius ac ocyus de illis ſupplicium ſumeretur &c. That is, wherefore it was by publique ſtatute decreed, that whoſoeuer were founde hereafter to follow the ſect of Wyckliffe, ſhould be accounted for traytors, whereby without all lenitie, they ſhoulde be puniſhed more ſeuerely and quickly. &c.

Tho. Wald in tomo primo. Doctrinali, ad Mart. papā in prologo.

Waldē tomo 1. De doctrinali eccleſia. cap. 46. lib. 2

Thus haue you (maiſter Cope) the playne teſtimonie of Polydore with mee. And becauſe ye ſhall further ſee your ſelfe more impudent in carping, then I am in deprauing of hiſtories, you ſhall vnderſtand moreouer and heare, what Thomas Walden, one of your owne catholique brotherhode, & who was alſo himſelfe aliue, & a doer in the ſame Parliament, being the prouincial of the Carmelites, ſaith in this matter writing to Pope Martin, whoſe very wordes in Latine here follow, written in his Prologue to the ſayd Martine, in this wiſe: Nec mora longa proceſsit, quin ſtatutum publicum per omne regni concilium in publico emanauit edicto, quod omnes Wicleuiſtæ ſicut dei proditores eſſent, ſic proditores regis, proſcriptis bonis cenſerentur et regni, duplici pœnæ dandi, incendio propter deum, ſuſpendio propter regem &c. That is. And it was not long after, but a publicke law and ſtatute came out, by the common aſſent of the generall parliamēt of the whole Realme, that al Wicleniſtes, as they were traytours to God, ſo alſo ſhould be counted traytors to the king and to the realme, hauing their goods loſt and confiſcate vnto the king. And therefore ſhould ſuffer double puniſhment, as to be burnt for God, and to bee hanged for ẏ king &c. And thus haue you (Maiſter Cope) not onely my ſentence, but alſo the very wordes of my ſtory confirmed by this author: becauſe ye ſhall not think me to ſpeake ſo lightly or impudently without my booke. And moreouer to confirme the ſaid ſentence of Tho. Walden, it followeth alſo in an other place of the foreſayde authour. Tomo. 1. lib. 2. De doctrinali fidei Eccleſie Cathol. Cap. 46. where he writeth in theſe wordes. Et tamen iam cum regnare cœpiſſet Illuſtris rex Henricus 5. qui adhuc agit in ſceptris, et de eorū perfidia per catholicos bin doctos, legem ſtatui fecit, vt vbiq; per regnum Wickliuiſta probatus, vt reus puniretur de crimine leſæ maieſtatis &c. That is. And yet, when the noble king Henry the v. who as yet doth liue and raigne, began firſt to raigne, began to ſet forth a law, by his learned catholickes which were about him, againſt the falſenes of theſe men, ſo that whoſoeuer was proued to be a wickleuiſt, through the whole Realme, ſhould be puniſhed for a traytour. &c. what wordes can you haue M. Cope, more playne then theſe? or what authoritie can you require of more credite, which liued in the ſame tyme, and both did ſee and heare of the ſame thinges done? who alſo writing to Pope Martine, was by the ſayd pope Martine allowed, approued, & ſolemnly commended, as appeareth by the popes Epiſtle to him, wherein yͤ pope declareth: how he cauſed his bookes, Per ſolennes viros videri, & examinari. That is, by ſolemne perſons to be ſeene and examined &c. So that you muſt needes graunt, either this to be true, that walden writeth or els that the Pope (tanquam Papa) in allowing his writings may erre and be deceaued. Chuſe ye (mayſter Cope) of theſe two options whether you will take.

Either Walden writeth true, or els the pope erreth.

Rog. Wallus lib. de geſtis Hē.5 fol.10.

And if ye thinke this my aſſertion yet not ſufficiently reſcued with theſe authorities aboue ſayd, I will alſo here vnto adioyne the teſtimony of an other writer named Roger Walle, who writing De Geſtis Henric 5. and ſpeaking of the ſayd ſtatute of this parliament ſome thing more plainly then the reſt, hath theſe wordes, In hoc etiam Parliamento nobilitas regia hoſtes Chriſti ſibi reputans proditores, volens dare intelligere vniuerſis, quòd ipſe abſq; cuiuſcunq; fluctuationis dubio, q̃ diu auras hauriret vitales, verus & perfectus Chriſtianæ fidei ęmulator exiſteret: ſtatuit & decreuit, vt quotquot Ipſius ſectæ, quæ dicitur Lollordorum, inuenirentur æmuli & fautores eo facto rei proditorij criminis in maieſtatem regiam haberétur &c. In Engliſh. Alſo in this parliament, the noble K. reputing Chriſtes enemies, to be traytors to himſelfe, to yͤ intent that all men ſhould know withall doubt, that ſo lōg as he liued, he woulde be a true and perfect follower of Chriſten faith: did enact & decree, that whoſoeuer ſhoulde be found followers and mayntayners of this ſect, whiche is called the Lollards ſect, Ipſo facto, ſhould be counted and reputed giltie of treaſon againſt the kings maiſtie. &c.

K.Hen. the 5 called Princeps Sacerdotum.

Reg. Wallus. ibid.

By theſe hetherto alledged if M. Cope, will not be ſatiſfied, yet let the reader indifferent iudge: Vtrum in hac re magis nugatur Foxus, an Copus calumniatur. And yet moreouer to make the matter more certayne, marke the clamation of the ſayd Roger walle, added to yͤ end of thoſe wordes aboue recited, whereby we haue to vnderſtand more clearly, both what were the proceedings of the king in the ſaid Parliament & alſo what was the blinde affection of mōks and Prieſtes at that time towarde their kinge and Prince (which was then called princeps ſacerdotum) in condemning and deſtroying the poore Lollardes. The wordes of the monke be theſe, O verus amicus, qui amico illa tam iniuriam ſibi inferri cōſimiliter arbitratur, præiudicium illi intentū reputat eſſe ſuum, & ad eius onera conferenda, auxiliationis humeros ſupponere non veretur. &c. That is: O true frend, who taketh and reckoneth that iniury no leſſe done to him ſelfe which is done to his frend: and that preiudice whiche is intended againſt him, reputeth to bee as his owne. And to beare together the burdens of his friend, ſticketh not to lay to his owne ſhoulders, for the eaſing and helping of him &c.

How can it now be denied (M. Cope) in reading theſe authors, and ſeeing theyr teſtimonies, but that Lollardery in this Parliament was made both treaſon. and hereſie, & had therfore a double iudgement of puniſhment annexed, to be hanged for for the one, and to be burned for the other according as in my former Latin ſtory I recorded, and yet I truſt, I trifled not?

But you will ſay agayne (as ye doe) that there is no mention made for hereſie to be made treaſon, nor of anye double puniſhment to be inflicted for the ſame: In the body of the ſtatute (I graunt) there is no expreſſe mention in wordes of hereſie to be made treaſon, expreſly ſignified in rigour of wordes: but incluſiuely it is ſo inferred, that it can not be denied. For firſt where landes, goodes and cattell of the ſayd Lollardes were loſt and forfeit to the kyng, what doth this importe els, but treaſon or felonie?

Stat. an. 2. Hē.5. cap.7

And where the Lorde Cobham (for whoſe cauſe ſpecially this ſtatute ſeemed to be made) did ſuſtaine afterward both hanging and burning by the vigor of the ſame ſtatute what is here contained: but a double penalty? Again wher in the beginning of the ſtatute mention is made of rumors and congregations, and after vpon the ſame followeth the ſeruices of the king, whereunto the officers be firſt ſworne ſhould firſt be preferred for libertie of holy Churche, & puniſhment of hereticks, made before theſe dayes and not repealed, vt ſupra, pag. 000. what meaneth this, but to make theſe congregations of the Lollardes, to be forcible entres riotes, great ridings, vnlawful aſſemblies, affrayres of the people, armour, routes, & inſurrections, & ſo ſendeth them to the former ſtatutes not repealed, that is, to the ſtatute. an. 13. Henr. 4. chap. 7? where the puniſhment is left to the diſcretion of the king? or els to the ſtatute. an. 15. Richard chap. 2. where the penalty is made fine and raunſome: Or els to the ſtatute. an. 5. Richar. 2. chap. 6. where ſuche aſſemblies be made playne treaſon, in fine ſtatuti.

And as here is matter of treaſon ſufficiently contained ſo for hereſie likewiſe the ſame ſtatute referreth them to yͤ ordinaries, and to the lawes, properly to hereſie appertayning, and to the ſtatute. an. 2. Henr. 4. chap. 15. where the penaltie is burning. Alſo to the ſtatute. an. 5. Richard 2. chap.

So that in this preſent ſtatute here mention is conteined, as ye ſee although not in expreſſe words, yet incluſiuely (by referring to other ſtatutes not repealed) bothe Lollardery which is puniſhed with burning, and forcible entrees which is puniſhed at the kinges pleaſure. And thus much concerning the ſecōd vntruth, which M. Cope vntruely noted in me.

3. The third vntruth which he noteth in me concerning this matter, is this, wherein he reporteth mee, that I ſay, there was no other cauſe of deuiſing this ſharp law & puniſhment againſt theſe mē, but onely for hauing the ſcripture bookes. And therfore here is noted in the margent Foxi dolus malus, but let M. Cope take heede, hee deceiue not himſelf and other. For my part I remember no ſuch place in this my Latine ſtory where I ſo ſay. Onely my wordes be theſe, added in the latter ende of the place aboue recited: Wicleuiani verò dicebantur quicunq; id temporis Scripturas Dei ſua lingua lectitarent. &c. That is. They were called wicleuiſtes, whoſoeuer at that time read the Scripture in engliſh or vulgare tongue. &c. I ſay not, that for the ſcriptures being read in yͤ engliſh tongue, therfore the law was enacted, but ſo is M. Cope diſpoſed to conſtrue it. What law & ſtatuts were made againſt writing or reading of any booke in Engliſh or in any other tonge cōtrary to yͤ Catholick (that is yͤ Romiſh) fayth, or to the determinatiō of the holy Church (that is of Rome) read I beſeech thee the bloudy ſtatute made. an. 2. Hen. 4. chap. 15. aboue ſpecifyed pag. 523, Alſo read the conſtitution prouinciall of Thomas Arundell aboue mentioned, pag. 524. lin. 9. where it was decreed, that the text of holy ſcripture ſhould not be had or read in the vulgare tongue frō the time of M. Iohn wickliffe, for euer after, vnleſſe the ſayd tranſlation be approued firſt by the ordinary or by prouinciall councell, vnder pain and puniſhment of hereſy. Now let the reader iudge whether yͤ reading of ſcripture bookes in the engliſh tongue, by the making or tranſlating of wickliffe, or from the tyme of wicliffe downward, be coūted hereſy or not. As for the approuing of the ordinary or of the prouincial councell added in the end of the ſayd conſtitution, maketh more for a ſhew or pretence, then for any iuſt exception, or any true intention. For what man hauing thoſe Scriptures tranſlated in Engliſh, would either preſent them to their ordinaries being ſo ſet againſt the reading of ſuch bookes? or what ordinarie would or did euer yet ſince Arundels tyme approue any ſuch tranſlation, preſented vnto them? Or els why did the good Martyrs of Amerſam ſuffer death, in the begynning of kyng Henry the viij. for hauing and reading certaine bookes of Scripture, which were (as is ſaide) onely foure Epiſtles of S. Paule, with certaine other prayers. And the other which heard them but onely reade, did beare fagottes, and the ſame tyme, the children compelled to ſet fagots vnto their fathers, at which time Longlande being then Byſhop of Lincolne, & preaching to them at yͤ ſtake, ſayde: that whatſoeuer they were, that did but moue hys lippes in reading thoſe chapters, were damned for euer: as when we come to that tyme, by the grace of Chriſt, ſhall hereafter more amply and notoriouſly appear. And where thē is this Dolus malus Foxi, margined againſt me, for craftie dealing in my ſtory?

Moreouer where M. Cope proceeding farther in this matter, aſketh me: how was the Lorde Cobham obedient to the king, whē as for the feare of him, the king durſt not then keepe his parliament at London? To whom I aunſwere agayne, aſking likewiſe of M. Cope, howe was the king then afrayd to hold his parliament at London for the Lord Cobham, when the Lord Cobham at that time was in wales: And here M. Cope, thinking to haue me at a narow ſtraight, and to holde me faſt, biddeth me tell him, howe it coulde be otherwiſe, but the Lorde Cobham muſt needes haue fautours. And who ſhould theſe fautours be (ſayth he) but ſyr Roger Acton, Browne & their fellowes.

The which mighty queſtion of M. Cope, I anſwer agayn howe can ſir Roger Acton, Browne and their fellowes be then fautors of the Lord Cobham, for whome the King durſt not hold his parliament at Londō, when as the ſayd Roger Acton, Browne, and the reſt were put to death, a whole yeare almoſt before the Parliament at Leyceſter began?

And now as I haue hitherto briefly, and truely aunſwered your aſkinges (M. Cope) let me be ſo bolde wͭ you agayne, to propounde to you likewiſe an other queſtion, For ſo much as you haue put me to the ſearching of yͤ ſtatutes in this matter, wherewith before I was not muche acquainted: now out of the ſame ſtatutes riſeth a doubtfull ſcruple or queſtiō, worthy to be ſolued. The cauſe is this, yͭ for aſmuch as ſo many good martyrs and Saintes of God hetherto in this realme of England, haue bene burned frō the time of king Henry 4. Hen. 5. Hen. 6. Hen. 8. to yͤ time and in the time of Queene Mary, my queſtion is that you wͭ all your learned councell about you wil tel me, by what law or ſtatute of the realme were theſe men brent? I know the auncient cuſtome hath bene, that hereticks conuicted by a prouinciall councell were wont to be left to the ſecular power. But how wil ye proue me, theſe hereticks were either conuict by ſuch prouinciall councell, or that theſe ſeculare men ought to be your butchers in burning them, whō ye haue committed to them?

If ye alledge the vi. Articles made in the reigne of king Henry the 8. thoſe articles neither did ſerue before the time of king Hēry the viii. neither yet were they reuiued after his time. If ye alledge to yͤ ſtatute made. an. 5. Richar. 2. cap. 5. In that ſtatute (I aunſwere) is conteined no matter of burning, but onely of arreſt to be done at the certificatiōs of the prelates, wͭout any further puniſhmēt there mentioned. To conclude, if ye alledge the ſtatute made. an. 2. Henr. 4. chap. 15. and reuiued in the reigne of Queene Mary, mentioned before pag. 523 To that ſtatute I anſwere, that although yͤ pretenſed ſtatute appeareth in forme of wordes in the Printed book to geue vnto the temporall officers authoritie to bring them to the ſtake, and to burne them, whom the Biſhop deliuereth: Yet is it not to be proued, either by you, or any other, that ſtatute to be law or warrant ſufficient to burne anye perſon or perſons committed to the ſeculare power by the Clergy. And that I proue thus, for although the ſame ſtatute of king Henry the fourth in the bookes printed, appeare to haue law and authority ſufficient, by the ful aſſent both of the king, of the Lordes, and of the cōmons: yet being occaſioned by M. Cope to ſearch further in yͤ ſtatutes, I haue found that in the Rolles and firſt originals of that Parliament, there is no ſuch mention either of any petitiō or els of any aſſent of the commons annexed or contained in that ſtatute, according as in the printed bookes vſual in the Lawyers handes to craftely and falſely ſoyſted in, as by the playne wordes thereof may well appeare.

For where the ſaid ſtatute. an. 2. Henry. 4. chap. 15. beyng thus intituled in the Rolles: Petitio cleri contra hæreticos, and aſſented vnto in this forme: hath theſe wordes.

❧ Statut. an. 2. Henri. 4. cap. 15. Intituled in the Rolle thus: Petitiō Cleri contra hæreticos, and aſſented vnto in this forme.

The printed ſtatute an. 2. Hen. 4. cap. 15. falſely corrupted.

QVas quidem petitiones prælatorum & cleri ſuperius expreſſatas do. noſter Rex, de conſenſu magnatum & aliorum procerum regni ſui, in præſenti Parliamento exiſtentium conceſſit, & in omnibus & ſingulis iuxta formam & effectum eorundē ordinauit & ſtatuit de cætero firmiter obſeruari, and ſo forth according to the petition: and moe wordes, are there not in yͤ ſtatute Rolle. wherfore wher as the ſtatute booke printed hath thus: Super quibus quidem nouitatibus & exceſsibus ſupereus recitatis (videlicet in the petition of the Prelates & clergy) prælati & clerus ſupradicti ac etiam communitates dicti Regni in eodem Parliamento exiſten. dicto Domino Regi ſupplicarunt. &c. Qui quidem Dominus Rex. &c. ex aſſenſu magnatum & aliorum procerum eiuſdem Regni &c. conceſsit ordinauit, &c. Theſe wordes Ac etiam communitates dicti Regni. &c. are put in further then the Rolle doth warrant, and ſeemeth to be the practiſe of the clergie, to make that as an Acte of Parliament, and to ſeeme to haue the force of a law, which was neuer aſſented vnto by the commons.

Ex conſtitutionibus prouincialibus oxonia celebratis. Ioan. Antho.

And thus you ſee howe this foreſayd ſtatute, Printed both in Engliſh and in Latine among yͤ Prouincial councels of Oxford (by the vertue whereof ſo many good men haue bene burned ſo long in England) doth vtterly ouerthrow it ſelfe, for that it ſwerueth from the recorde bothe in forme and in matter, and lacketh the aſſent of the commons which doubt I thought at this preſent to propound vnto you (mayſter Cope) for that you haue ſo vrged me to the ſearching out of the ſtatutes, by your declayming agaynſt the Lord Cobham.

Vid Stat. an. 5. Ric. 2. cap. 5

Moreouer vnto this ſtatute aforeſayd, ioyne alſo with all an other Memorandum of like practiſe done. an. 5. Rich. 2. In the which yeare, where as a ſtatute was concluded yͤ parliament. an. 5. Rich. 2. chap. 5. agaynſt certayne preachers ſpecified in yͤ ſame ſtatute, which going about in certaine habites from place to place, did drawe the people to ſermons. And commiſſions were made and directed in the ſayd parliament to the ſhrines, to arreſt all ſuch preachers and to impriſon the ſame, at the certifications of the Prelates. Here is then to be noted, that the ſame ſtatute an. 5. Rich. 2. cap. 5. was reuoked by the king in the parliament. an 6. Rich. 2. vpon the wordes of the commons being theſe videl. Foraſmuch as the ſame ſtatute was neuer aſſented, ne graunted by the commons, but that which therein was done, was done without their aſſent, and now ought to be vndone, for that it was neuer their meaning to be iuſtified and to bind themſelues and their ſucceſſors to the prelates no more, then their auncetours had done before them. Ex Rotul. And yet thys foreſayd reuocation notwithſtanding in Queene Maryes tyme, they inquired vppon that ſtatute.

Ex Rotul. Parliam.

The perſecutors in burning Gods people haue done againſt the lawe.

In ſearching of theſe ſtatutes, as you haue accaſioned me to find out theſe ſcruples: ſo being foūd out, I thought here not to diſſemble them, for ſo muche as I ſee and heare many now a dayes ſo boldly to beare themſelues vpō this ſtatute, and thinking ſo to excuſe themſelues do ſay, yͭ they haue done nothing but the law the law: to the intent that theſe men ſeeing now how inexcuſable they be both before God and man hauing no law to beare them out, may yͤ ſoner repent their bloudy and vnlawfull tyranny, exerciſed ſo long agaynſt Gods true ſeruauntes, yet in time before that the iuſt law of God ſhall finde out their vniuſt dealinges, which partly he beginneth already to do, and more no doubt will doe hereafter.

A neceſſary admonition to the Commons of England.

In the meane tyme this my petition I put vp to the Commons, and to all other which ſhall hereafter put vp any petition to the Parliamēt: that they being admoniſhed by this abuſe, wil ſhew thēſelues heare after more wiſe & circumſpect: both what they agree vnto in Parliamentes, & alſo what commeth out in their name. And as theſe good Commons in this time of king Henry 4. would not conſent nor agree to this bloudy ſtatute, nor to anye other like For ſo we read that the Commons in that bloudy time of king Henry 4. when an other like cruell byll was put vp by the Prelates in an. 8. Hen. 4. againſt the Lollards, they neither conſented to this, and alſo ouerthrow the other: ſo in like maner it is to be wiſhed, that the commons in this our time, or ſuch other that ſhall haue to do in parliaments hereafter following the ſteppes of theſe former times, will take vigilant heede to ſuch cruell billes of the Popes prelacy, being put vp, that neither their conſent do paſſe raſhly: nor that their names in any condition be ſo abuſed, Cōſidering with themſelues that a thing once being paſſed in the parliament, cannot afterward be called back: And a litle inconuenience once admitted, may grow afterward to miſchiefes that cannot be ſtopped. And ſometime it may ſo happen that through raſhe conſent of voices, the ende of thinges being not well aduiſed, ſuch a thing being graunted in one day, that afterward many dayes may cauſe the whole realme to rue. But I truſt men are bitten enough with ſuche blacke parliamentes to beware of afterclaps. The Lord Ieſus onely protector of his church, ſtop al crafty deuiſes of ſubtile enemies, and with his wiſedom direct our Parliamentes, as may be moſt to the aduauntage of his word, and comfort of hys people. Amen. Amen.

And thus much hauing ſayd for the defence of the Lord Cobhā, of ſyr Roger Acton knight, maiſter Iohn Browne Eſquier, Iohn Beuerly preacher, and of other their fellowes agaynſt Alanus Copus Anglus, here I make an ende with this preſēt Interim, till furthur leyſure ſerue me here after (Chriſt willing) to pay him the whole Intereſt which I owe vnto him. Adding this in the meane time, and by the way: that if mayſter Cope had bene a Monus anye thing reaſonable, he had no great cauſe ſo to wrangle with me in this matter, who as I did commend the Lord Cobham & that worthyly, for hys valiaūt ſtanding by yͤ truth, of his doctrine before Thomas Arundell the Archbiſhop ſo touching the matter of this conſpiracie, I did not affirm or define any thing therof in my former hiſtorie ſo preciſely that he could well take any vauntage of agaynſt me, who in writing of this conſpiracy layd agaynſt ſyr Roger Acton, And ſyr Iohn Oldcaſtle, do but diſiūctiuely or doubtfully ſpeake thereof, not concluding certainly this conſpiracie eyther to be true or not true, but only mouing yͤ ſame not to be true at that time, as Polydore Virgill. and Edward Hall in their hiſtories doe affirme: which ſay that this conſpiracie began after the burning of Iohn Huſſe and Hierome of Prage. which could not be. And thereto tendeth my aſſertion. My wordes are playne, and are theſe. pag. 174. col. 2. line. 13. wherefore it is euident that there was eyther no conſpiracie at all agaynſt the king: or els that it was at ſome other tyme, or done by other Captaynes. &c.

Lib. Act. & Monu. 174.

These be my wordes with other moe, pag. col. and line aboue noted. In the which propoſition disiunctiue, if eyther part be true, it is enough for me. His part it was to refell both, which he hath not done. But onely ſtanding faſt vpon the one part, diſſimuleth the other. And this is Alanus Copus Anglus, who by that he ſhall come frõ Rome (whether he is nowe gone as I heare ſay) I truſt he will returne a better Logician home agayne in ſuam Angliam.

Sir Roger Acton contrary to the Biſh. of Rome.

Cauſes coniecturall why Sir Roger Acton with the reſt, were put to death for traytours & Lollardes.

But to the truth of our matter, as I ſayde before, ſo I ſay agayne, whatſoeuer this worthy, noble and vertuous knight ſyr Roger Acton was otherwiſe, this is certaine ẏ he was alwaies of contrary minde, and opinion to the biſhop of Rome, & to that kind of people, for the which cauſe he had great enuy and hatred at their hands: and could as litle beare it: neither do I greatly diſſent from them, which do ſuſpect or iudge that the Lord Cobham, by his friendly helpe eſcaped out of the Tower, and that peraduenture was the cauſe why he was apprehended and brought to trouble, and in the end came to his death. Other cauſes alſo theyr might be, that theſe good men percaſe did frequent among themſelues, ſome cõuenticles (which conuenticles was made treaſon by the ſtatute aforeſayd) either in thoſe Thickets or in ſome place els: for the hearing of Gods word, and for publique prayer, and therefore had they thys Beuerly theyr preacher with them.

But to conclude whatſoeuer this ſir Roger Acton was this is ẏ truth, which I may boldly record, as one writing the Actes and thinges done in the Church, that he was at length apprehended, condemned and put to death or martirdome. 3. yeares and more before the Lord Cobham died Likewiſe M. Iohn Browne, and Iohn Beuerly the preacher, ſuffered with him the ſame kinde of death (as ſome ſay) in the field of S. Giles with other moe, to the number of 36. if the ſtoryes be true. Whiche was in the month of Ianuary. an 1413. after the computation of our Engliſh ſtories, counting the yeare from the annunciation, but after the Latine writers counting from Chriſtes natiuitie. an. 1414. according as this picture is ſpecified.

These men as is ſaid, ſuffered before the Lord Cobham aboot 3. yeares, of whoſe death diuers do write diuerſly. Some ſay they were hanged and burnt in S. Gyles field, of whom is Fabian, with ſuch as follow him. Other there be which ſay that ſome of them were hanged & burnt. Polydorus ſpeaking onely of their burning maketh no mētiõ of hanging. An other certain engliſh Chronicle I haue in my handes borowed of one M. Bowyer, who ſomewhat differing frõ the reſt, recordeth thus of ſir Roger Acton, that hys iudgement before the iuſtice was thus, to be drawne through London to Tyborne, and there to be hanged, and ſo he was naked ſaue certayne partes of him couered with a clothe. &c. And when certayn dayes were paſt (ſayth the author) a Trumpeter of the kinges called Thomas Cliffe gat graunt of the king to take hym downe, and to burye hym, and ſo he did &c. And thus haue you the ſtorye of ſyr Roger Acton, and hys fellow brethren. As touching theyr cauſe whether it were true or els by error miſtaken of the king, or by the fetch of the biſhops ſurmiſed, I referre it to the iudgement of him which ſhal iudge both the quick and dead, & ſeculum per ignem. To whõ alſo I commit you M. Cope, God ſpeed your iorny well to Rome, whether I heare ſay you are going, and make you a good man.

But as I dyd the other before, ſo this alſo I do refer, to the ſecret iudgement of the Lord, who once ſhal iudge all ſecrets openly.

In the mean time this may ſeeme ſtrange, that the ſame Tho. Arundell, who a litle before ſitting vpon iudgement

Feb. 20. Ex hiſt. S. Albani & multis. Furthermore concerning the death of this Arundell, and the maner therof, who had not bene ſo heauy a troubler of Chriſtes ſaints in his time, becauſe the thing ſemeth worthy of noting, to behold the puniſhment of God vpon hys enemies, this is to report, as I haue found it alledged out of Thomas Gaſcoin in Dictionario Theologico: Whoſe playne wordes be theſe: Anno. 1414. Tho. Arundel Cant. Archiepiſcop. ſic lingua percuſſus erat: vt nec deglutire, nec loqui per aliquot dies ante mortem ſuam potuerit, diuitis epulonis exemplo: & ſic tantum obijt. Atque multi tunc fieri putabant, quia verbum alligaſſet, ne ſuo tempore prædicaretur. &c.

Tho. Gaſcohius in Dictionario theologico.

An example of Gods working hand againſt the enemies of his word.

That is, Thomas Arundel archbiſhop of Cant. was ſo ſtrikẽ in his tongue that neither he could ſwallow, nor ſpeake for a certayne ſpace before hys death, much lyke after the example of the rich glotton, and ſo dyed vpon the ſame. And thys was thought of many to come vpon him, for that he ſo bound the word of the Lord, that it ſhould not be preached in hys dayes &c. Whiche if it be true, as it doth well here appeare, theſe and ſuch other horrible exãples of gods wrath, may be terrible ſpectacles for ſuch as occupy theyr tongues and braynes ſo buſily to ſtop ẏ courſe of gods wrath, ſtriuing but againſt ẏ ſtreame againſt the force whereof, neither they are able to reſiſte, & many times in reſiſting are ouerturned thẽſelues & drowned therin. And thus much for the death of Tho. Arundel, who cõtinued archb. in ẏ ſee of Cant. the ſpace of 18. yeres.

The maruelous hand of God vpon Tho. Arũdell Archb of Cant.

It is in vaine to gainſtand Gods word.

Hen. Chicheſly Archb. of Cant.

After this Arundel, ſucceeded next in the ſaid ſee of Cãterb. Henry Chicheſly made archb. an. 1414. and ſate xxv. yeares. This Henry following likewiſe the ſteps of hys predeceſſour, ſhewed himſelfe no ſmall aduerſary againſt ẏ fauourers of the truth. In whoſe time was much trouble and great afflictiõ in the church. For as the preaching and teaching of the word did multiply and ſpread abroad daily more and more, ſo on the contrary ſide, more vigilant care and ſtraight inquiſition followed and increaſed againſt the people of God, by reaſon wherof diuers did ſuffer, & were burned, ſome for feare fled ẏ country. Many were brought to examinatiõ, and by infirmitie conſtrained to abiure. Of whome hereafter (Chriſt willing) particularly in order of theyr times we will entreat.

Sion & Bethleẽ builded.

As true pietie, and ſincere preaching of Chriſtes worde began at this time to decay: So idle mõkery and vaine ſuperſtitiõ in place therof begã to encreaſe. For about ẏ ſame yere the king began the foundation of 2. monaſteries, one of the one ſide of Thames of Friers obſeruaunt, ẏ other on the other ſide Thames called Shene and Syon, dedicated to Charter houſe monkes, with certaine Brigit nonnes or recluſes, to the nũber of 60. dwelling within the ſame precinct, ſo that the whole number of theſe with prieſtes, mõkes, deacons and nonnes ſhoulde equall the number of 13. Apoſtles and 72. diſciples. The order of theſe was according to the diſcription of S. Paule the Apoſtle, Col. 1. Eat not, taſt not, touch not, &c. to eat no fleſhe, to weare no linnen, to touch no mony. &c.

About Michaelmas, the ſame yeare the king began his Parliament at Leiceſter, aboue mentioned. In the whiche Parliament the commons put vp theyr bill agayn, which they had put vp before, an. 11. Henr. 4. the tẽpporalties diſorderly waſted by men of the church, might be conuerted & employed to the vſe of the king, of his Earls and knights and to the reliefe of ẏ poore people, as is before recited, pag. 557. In feare of which bill leaſt the king woulde geue therunto any comfortable audience (as teſtifieth Rob. Fabian and other writers) certayne of the Prelates & other headmen of the church put the king in mind to clayme his right in Fraunce. Whereupon Hen. Chicheſly Archbiſh. of Caunterbury made a long and ſolemne oration before the king to perſwade him to the ſame, offering to the king in the behalfe of the Clergie great and notable ſummes. By reaſon wherof (ſayth Fabian) the bill was agayne put of, and the king ſet his minde for the recouery of the ſame: ſo that ſoone after he ſent his letters and meſſengers to the French king concerning that matter, and receiued from him againe anſwere of deriſion, wt a pype of tennis balles (as ſome recorde) ſent from the Dolphin, for him to playe with at home. Whereby the kinges minde was incenſed ẏ more toward that viage. Who then furniſhing hymſelfe wt ſtrength and armour, with powder & ſhot, and gunſtones to play with in Fraunce, and with other artillarye for that purpoſe conuenient, ſo ſet ouer into France, where he got Harfflew with diuers other townes and caſtles in Normandy and Picardy, and at Agyncourt had a great victory ouer the french army, they being counted but 7. thouſand, by pricking ſharp ſtakes before them, &c. After that he wan Cane, Towke, Rowan with other townes mor, as Meldune, or Melione, and maryed with Katherine the french kinges daughter. And yet notwithſtanding the third time he made hys viage agayne into Fraunce, where at length at Bloys he fell ſicke and dyed, Concerning all which viages, becauſe they are ſufficientlye diſcouried in Fabian, Halle, and other Chronographers, referring therfore the reader vnto them, I will return my ſtory to other matters of the Church more effectuall.

The Bohemians receiuing the Goſpell.

I Declared a little before howe by the occaſion of Queene Anne, which was a Bohemian and maried to king Richard 2. the Bohemians cõming therby to the knowledge of Wickliffes bookes here in England, began firſt to taſte and ſauor Chriſtes goſpell, til at length by the preaching of John Huſſe, they increaſed more and more in knowledge. In ſo much that pope Alexander the v. hearing thereof, began at laſt to ſtyrre coales, and directeth his Bul to ẏ archbiſhop of Suinco, requiring hym to looke to the matter, & to prouide that no perſon in Churches, Schooles or other places ſhould mayntayne that doctrine, citing alſo J. Hus to appeare before him. To whom the ſayd John aunſwering againe, declared that mandate or Bull of the pope vtterly to repugne agaynſt the manifeſt examples & doinges both of Chriſt and of hys Apoſtles, and to be preiudiciall to the liberty of the Goſpell, in binding ẏ word of God not to haue free recourſe. And therefore from this mandate of the P. he appealed to the ſame Pope better aduiſed. But while he was proſecuting hys appeale, Pope Alexander died, as is aforeſayd, pag, 553. Ex Cochleo, in hiſt. Huſsit.

The pope againſt the Bohemiãs. Iohn Hus cited of the Pope. Iohn Huſſe appealeth from the pope to the Pope.

Pope Iohn. 23.

After whome ſucceded Pope John the xxiij. who alſo playing hys part here in this matter like a Pope, ſought by all meanes poſſible how to repreſſe and keep vnder the Bohemians, firſt beginning to worke his malice vpõ the foreſayd John Huſſe theyr preacher. Who at the ſame tyme preaching at Prage in the temple of Bethleem, becauſe he ſeemed rather willing to teach the Goſpell of Chriſt, then the traditions of Biſhops, was therefore accuſed of certayn to the forenamed P. John the 23. for an heretick. The Biſhop committed the whole matter vnto Cardinall de Collumna, who when he had heard the accuſation, he appoynted a day to John Huſſe, that he ſhold appeare in the court of Rome: whiche thing once done, Wenceſlaus king of the Romaynes & of Boheme, at the requeſt ſpecially of his wife Sophia, and of the whole nobility of Boheme, as alſo at the earneſt ſute and deſire of the towne and vniuerſitie of Prage: He ſent his Embaſſadours to Rome, to deſire the byſhop to quit & clearely deliuer John Huſſe from that ſentence and iudgement, and that if the byſhop did ſuſpect the kingdome of Boheme to be infected with anye heretical or falſe doctrine, that he ſhold ſend his ambaſſadors the which might correct and amẽd the ſame, if there be any errour or fault in them. And that all this ſhould be done at the onely coſtes and charges of the king of Boheme, and to promiſe in his name that he would ayde and aſſiſte the Biſhops Legates with all hys power and authoritie, to puniſhe all ſuch as ſhoulde be taken or found in any erroneous doctrine. In the meane ſeaſon alſo John Huſſe before his day appointed, ſent his lawfull and meete procurators vnto the court of Rome, and with moſt firme and ſtronge reaſons, dyd proue hys innocency, whereupon he truſted ſo, that he thought he ſhoulde haue eaſely obtayned that he ſhould not haue bene compelled, by reaſon of the great dãger, to appeare the day appoynted. But when as the Cardinall de Collumna, (vnto whoſe will and iudgement the whole matter was committed) would not admit no defence or excuſe: John Huſſe his procurators, appealed vnto the high Biſhop: yet notwithſtanding, this laſt refuge did not ſo much preuaile with Cardinall de Collumna, but that he would opẽly excommunicate John Huſſe as an obſtinate hereticke, becauſe he came not at hys day appoynted vnto Rome.

Iohn Hus accuſed to pope Iohn.

Iohn Hus excõmunicate by Cardinall de Collumna.

Nothwithſtanding for ſo much as his procurators had appealed vnto the high biſhop, they had other iudges appointed vnto them, as cardinal Aquileianus and cardinal Venetus with certayne others. The which iudges after they had prolonged and differred the matter by the ſpace of one yere and a halfe, at the laſt they returned to the ſentēce and iudgement of cardinall de Columna, and confirming yͤ ſame, commaunded John Hus his Procurators that they ſhould leaue of to defend him any more, for they would ſuffer it no longer. Wherupon when his Procurators would not ceaſe theyr inſtant ſute, certayne of them were caſt into priſō, and greuouſly puniſhed, the other leauing theyr buſines vndone, returned into Boheme.

The Bohemians againſt the Pope & his doings. Ex Cochleo in Hiſt. Huſſit. lib. 1

The Bohemians notwithſtandinge little cared for all this, but continuing ſtil as they grew more in knowledge, ſo the leſſe they regarded the Pope, complayning dayly agaynſt him and the Archb. for ſtopping the word of God, and the goſpel of Chriſt to be preached, ſaying that by their indulgences and other practiſes of the court of Rome, and of the biſhops Conſiſtory, they ſought their owne profit, & not of Jeſus Chriſt: that they pluckt from the ſheepe of Chriſt the wool and milke, and did not feed them, neyther with the word of God nor with good examples. Teaching moreouer and affirming, that the commaūdements of the Pope and Prelates are not to be obeyed, but ſo far as they follow the doctrine and life of Chriſt and of his Apoſtles, and that lay men ought to iudge the workes of the prelates as Paule iudged the workes of Peter in correcting him. Gal. 2. Farthermore, they had amongſt thē certayne notes and obſeruations, whereby they might diſcerne how far & wherin they might obey theyr prelates: they derided alſo & ſcorned the Popes iuriſdiction, becauſe of the ſchiſme that was then in the church, whē there were 3. popes together one ſtriuing agaynſt another for the papacy.

Doubtes of John Hus propounded

Ouer and beſides this, at the ſame time John Hus did propoūd publickly, and by the Notaries cauſed to be written 3. doubtfull queſtions, the tenor wherof foloweth here word for word & is this: Foraſmuch ſayth he as it is good for men being in doubt to aſke counſell, whereby all dubitatiō remoued, they may be able the more firmly to adhere the truth. 3. doubtes here ariſe to be ſolued. The firſt doubt is whither we ought to beleeue in the Pope. The ſecond, whither it be poſſible for any man to be ſaued, which confeſſeth not with his mouth vnto a mortal prieſt. The third doubte is, whither any of the doctors doe holde or ſay that ſome of Pharaos hoſt being drowned in the red ſea, and of the Sodomites being ſubuerted, be ſaued.

Credere in Deum. Credere Deo. Credere Deum. Pet. Lomb. lib. 4. diſt. 17. cap. 11. Againſt Auricular confeſſion.

As concerning the firſt, he did hold negatiuely, alleadging the ſaying of Bede vpon this place of the Apoſtle: To him that beleeueth vpon him which iuſtifieth the wicked, his fayth is imputed to righteouſnes. Rom. 4. Vpon thys place ſayth Bede: Aliud eſt credere in deum, aliud credere deo, aliud credere deum. &c. The ſecond doubt ſayth he, the maiſter of the ſentence doth anſwere. lib. 4. diſt. 17. cap. 11. in theſe wordes: what is then to be holden or ſayd herein? Certes, that without the confeſſion of the mouth, and aſſoyling of the outward payne, ſinnes be forgeuen through contrition and humility of the hart. &c. For the third doubt he brought in the wordes of S. Jerome vpon the Prophet Nahum, ſpeaking of the Egiptians deſtroyed in the ſea, and of the Sodomites deſtroyd with fire, & of the Iſraelites deſtroyed in the deſert. Know you (ſayth Jerome) that God therfore puniſhed them for their ſinnes here temporally, becauſe they ſhould not be puniſhed hereafter perpetually, & therfore becauſe they were here puniſhed, they ſhall not be puniſhed hereafter for els the ſcripture ſhould lie, which is not to be graunted. Theſe 3. queſtiōs belike John Hus did bring in to declare howe the doctors doe not agree in all things neither with the church of Rome, neither are to be followed in all poyntes of all men.

Councell of the prelates of Prage againſt the Goſpellers.

It foloweth moreouer after the death of the Archbiſh. Swinco aboue mentioned, that one named Cōradus was placed by yͤ pope there to be chief general, which Cōradus conferring with the diuines and doctors of the vniuerſity of Prage, required their aduiſes and counſelles, what way they might beſt take to aſſwage the diſſentions & diſcordes betwene the clergy and the people. Wherupon a certayne councell was deuiſed to be holden after this ſort and maner as foloweth.

1. Firſt, that all doctors and maiſters of the vniuerſity of Prage ſhould be aſſēbled in the court of the Archb. and in his preſence that euery doctor and maiſter ſhoulde ſweare, not to holde or mayntayne any of the 45. articles of John Wickliffe before condemned.
2. Item, concerning the 7. ſacraments of the Church, the keyes & cenſures of the church, the maners, rites, ceremonies, cuſtomes, and liberties of the church, concerning alſo the worſhipping of reliques and indulgēſes, the orders & religions of the church, that euery one ſhall ſweare that he doth hold, beleue & mayntayn, and will maintayn as doth the church of Rome and no otherwiſe, of the which church of Rome the Pope is the head, & the colledge of Cardinals is the body: who are the true and manifeſt ſucceſſours of bleſſed S. Peter prince of the Apoſtles, and of the colledge of the other Apoſtles of Chriſt.
3. Item, that euery one ſhall ſweare, that in euery catholicke matter belonging to the Church that he will ſtand to the determination of the Apoſtolicall ſea, and that he wyll obey the prelates in all maner of thinges whereſoeuer, the thing which is pure good is not forbidden: or that which is mere ill, is not commaunded: but is meane or indifferēt betwene both. Which mean or indifferent thing, yet notwithſtanding by circumſtances of time, place or perſon, may be either good or euill.

Purum bonum. Purum malum, Medium.

4. Item, that euery one ſhall ſweare & confeſſe by his oth, that the opinions of Wickliffe and others, touching the 7. ſacraments of the church and other things aboue notified, being contrary to the ſayd church of Rome be falſe.
5. Item, that an othe be required of them all, that none of them ſhall hold, defend or maintaine any of the 45. articles of John Wickliffe aforeſayd; or in any other matter catholick, and eſpecially of the 7. Sacraments and other articles aboue ſpecified, but only as doth the Church of Rome, and no otherwiſe.
6. Item, that euery ordinary in his dioces ſhall cauſe the ſayd premiſſes contained in the 1. 2. 3. 4. articles aforeſayde to be publiſhed in his Sinodes, and by his preachers to be declared to the people in the kingdome of Boheme.
7. Item, that if any Clerke, ſtudent, or lay man ſhal withſtād any of the premiſſes, that the ordinary haue authority if he be conuicted therof to correct him, according to the old lawes and Canons, and that no man ſhal defend ſuch one by any meanes, for none but the ordinary hath power to correct ſuch a man, becauſe the Archbiſhop is chauncellour both of the kingdome and vniuerſity of Prage.
8. Item, that the ſonges lately forbidden, being odious, ſlaūderous and offenſiue to others fame, be not ſong neyther in ſtreetes, tauernes, nor any other place.
9. Item, that maiſter John Hus ſhall not preach ſo long as he ſhall haue no abſolution of the court, neither ſhal hinder the preaching in Prage by his preſence, that by this, his obedience to the Apoſtolicall ſea may be knowne.
10. Item, that this Councell doth appeare to be good and reaſonable for the putting away of ill report and diſſentiō that is in the kingdome of Boheme.
11. Item, if maiſter John Hus, with his complices will performe this, which is conteined in the 4. former Articles, then we will be ready to ſay as they woulde wiſhe vs and haue vs, whenſoeuer need ſhall require, that we do agree with them in matter of fayth, otherwiſe if they wyll not ſo doe, we in geuing this teſtimony ſhould lye greatly vnto our Lord the King & to the whole world. And moreouer, we will be content to write for them to the Court of Rome, and do the beſt we can for them, our honors ſaued.

This counſell and deuiſe being conſidered amongeſt the head of the vniuerſity of Prage, the foreſayd adminiſtrator named Conradus, preſented to the king and to the barons of the realme, and alſo to the Senate of Prage. Wherof as ſoone as word came to John Hus and his adherents, they likewiſe drew out other Articles in maner and forme of a councell as foloweth.

For the honor of God & the true preaching of hys goſpell, for the health of the people, and to auoyd the ſiniſter & falſe infamy of the kingdome of Boheme, and of the Marquiſhip of Morauia, & of the city and vniuerſity of Prage, and for the reforming of peace & vnity betweene the clergy and the ſcholers of the vniuerſity.

1. Firſt, let the right and iuſt decrement of the princes and of the kinges councell, be holden and ſtand in force, which betwene the L. Archbi. Suinco on the one party, and betwene the rector & maiſter John Hus on the other party, was made, proclaimed, ſealed, and ſolemnly on both parts receiued and allowed in the court of our ſoueraigne Lord the king.
2. Item, that the kingdome of Boheme remain in his former rites, liberties & common cuſtomes, ſo as other kingdomes & landes do enioy, that is, in all approbations, condemnations, and other actes concerning the holy mother vniuerſall church.
3. Item, that maiſter J. Hus, agaynſt whom the foreſayd Lord Suinco, could obiect no crime before the coūcell, that the ſayd John Hus may be preſent in the congregation of the Clergy and there whoſoeuer will obiect to him either hereſy or error, let him obiect, binding himſelf to ſuffer the like payne, if he do not proue it.

4. Item, if no man will ſet himſelfe on yͤ contrary part againſt him, then let the cõmaundement be made by our ſoueraigne Lord the king through all his Cittyes, and likewiſe let it be ordeined and proclaimed through all villages and townes, that maiſter Iohn Hus, is ready to render account of his fayth, and therfore if any will obiect vnto him any hereſy or errour, let him write his name in the chauncery of the Lord Archbiſhop, and to bring forth his probations openly before both the parties.

5. Item, if no ſuch ſhalbe founde to obiect, or which will write his name, then let them be called for, which cauſed to be noiſed & rumored in the Popes Court, that in the kingdome of Boheme, in the City of Prage, and in the Marqueſdome of Morania, many there be whoſe harts be infected with hereſy and error, that they may proue who they be: and if they be not able to proue it, let them be puniſhed.

6. Item, that commaundement be directed to Doctors of Diuinity and of the Canon law, and to the Chapter of Cathedrall churches, and that it be required of them all and of euery one particularly, that they wil bring forth his name, if they know any ſuch to be an heretick or erroneous. And if they deny to know any ſuch, then let them make recognition therof, before the publike Notary, confirming yͤ ſame with their ſeales.

7. Item, theſe things thus done & premiſed, then that our ſoueraigne Lord the king, & alſo that the Archb. will geue commaundement vnder payne that no man ſhall call one another hereticke or erroneous, vnles he will ſtand to the probation of that hereſy or error, as it becommeth him.

8. Item, after theſe thinges obteined that our ſoueraigne lord the king, with the conſent of his Barons, will thẽ leuy a ſubſidy, or collect of the clergy, & direct an honeſt ambaſſy to the Popes court, with the which embaſſadors, let thẽ alſo go vpõ theyr owne proper charges or expenſes for theyr purgation, which haue cauſed this kingdome falſly & greuouſly to be infamed in the Apoſtolicall court.

9. Item, in the meane ſeaſon for the preſence of maſter I. Hus no Interdict ought to be made, as it was made of late contrary to the order and determination of our holye mother church. &c.

The Pope maketh warre.

As this matter was thus in altercatiõ betwene yͤ two parts, yͤ one obiecting, yͤ other anſwering in articles, as is aforſayd: In the meane time it happened by the occaſiõ of Ladiſlaus king of Naples, who had beſieged the Popes townes and territories, that Pope Iohn raiſing vp warr agaynſt the ſayd Ladiſlaus, gaue ful remiſſion of ſinnes to all them which would warre of his ſide to defẽd yͤ church. When this Bul of yͤ popes indulgẽce was come to Prage, and there publiſhed, the king Wenſelaus, who thẽ fauored that pope, gaue cõmaundement that no man ſhould attẽpt any thing againſt the ſayd Popes indulgẽces. But Hus wͭ his folowers, not able to abide yͤ impiety of thoſe pardõs, began manifeſtly to ſpeake agaynſt them, of the which cõpany were 3. certayn artificers, who hearing yͤ prieſt preaching of theſe indulgences, did opẽly ſpeak againſt them, & called the pope Antichriſt, which would ſet vp the croſſe to fight agaynſt his euenchriſtened. Wherefore they were brought before the Senate, and committed to warde. But the people ioyning thẽſelues together in armes: came to yͤ magiſtrates, requiring thẽ to be let looſe. The magiſtrates with gẽtle wordes and fayre promiſes ſatiſfied the people, ſo that euery man returning home to his own houſe, yͤ tumult was aſſwaged. But the captiues being in priſon, notwithſtanding were there beheaded, whoſe names were Iohn, Martin, and Stascon. The death and martirdome of theſe three being knowne vnto the people, they tooke the bodies of them that were ſlaine, and with great ſolemnitye brought them vnto the church of Bethlem. At whoſe funerall diuers prieſtes fauoring that ſide, did ſing in this wiſe These be the Sayntes whiche for the teſtament of God gaue their bodies. &c. And ſo their bodyes were ſumptuouſly interred in the church of Bethlem, I. Hus preaching at the ſame funerall, much commending them for theyr conſtancye, and bleſſing God the father of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, whyche had hidde the way of his verity ſo from the prudent of this world, and had reuealed it to the ſimple lay people and inferior prieſtes, which choſe rather to pleaſe God then men.

Iohn. Martine. Stalcon. Martyrs.

Steuen Paletz a great enemy to Iohn Hus.

I. Huſſe baniſhed out of Prage.

Thus this City of Prage was deuided. The prelates with the greateſt part of the clergy, & moſt of the Barons, which had any thing to loſe, did hold wͭ the pope, eſpecially Steuen Paletz, being the chiefeſt doer on that ſide. On the contrary part the commons, with part of the clergy & ſtudentes of the vniuerſity went with Iohn Hus. Wenſlaus the king fearing leaſt this would grow to a tumult, being moued by the doctors and prelates and councell of his barons thought beſt to remoue Iohn Huſſe out of the City, who had bene excommunicated before by the Pope: And further to ceaſe this diſſention riſen in the church, committed the matter to the diſpoſition of the doctors and the clergy. They cõſulting together among thẽſelues, did ſet forth a decree, ratified and confirmed by the ſentẽce of the king, contayning the ſumme of 18. articles for the mayntenaunce of the Pope and the ſee of Rome, agaynſt the doctrine of Wickeliffe and Iohn Huſſe. The names of the Doctors of Diuinity were theſe: Steuen Paletz: Staniſlaus de Znoyma: Petrus de Ikoyma: Ioannes Heliæ: Andreas Broda: Iohannes Hildeſen: Mattheus Monachus: Hermannus Heremita: Georgius Bota: Simon Wenda. &c. Iohn Hus thus departing out of Prage, went to his cõtry, where he being protected by the Lord of the Soile, continued there preaching, to whom reſorted a great concourſe of people, neither yet was he ſo expelled out of Prage, but that ſometimes he reſorted to his church of Bethleem, and there alſo preached vnto the people.

Moreouer agaynſt the ſayde decree of the doctours, I. Hus with his companye replied agayne, and aunſwered to their articles, with cõtrary articles agayn as foloweth.

✻ The obiections of Iohn Hus and of his part, agaynſt the decree of the Doctors.

Firſt, the fõdation of the Doctors wherupon they fõd all their writings and counſels, is falſe, which fõdatiõ is this, where as they ſay that part of the clergy in yͤ kingdome of Boheme is peſtilent and erroneous, and holdeth falſely of the Sacramentes,

2. The Doctors hereby do defame the kingdome of Boheme, and do rayſe vp new diſcordes.

3. Let them ſhew therefore thoſe perſons of the Clergye, whom they call peſtilent, & ſo let them verify theyr report, binding themſelues to ſuffer the like paine, if they be not able to proue it.

4. Falſe it is yͤ they ſay, the Pope & the cardinals to be the true & manifeſt ſucceſſors of Peter & of the Apoſtles, neyther that any other ſucceſſors of Peter or the Apoſtles, can be fõd vpon earth beſides thẽ. Whẽ as no man knoweth whether he be worthy of hatred or of fauour. And all Byſhops and prieſts be ſucceſſors of Peter & of the Apoſtles.

5. Not the pope, but Chriſt onely is the head: and not the Cardinals, but all Chriſtes faythfull people be the body of the Catholick church, as all holy Scripture and decrees of the holy fathers do teſtify and affirme.

6. And as touching yͤ pope, if he be a reprobate, it is plain that he is no head, no nor member alſo of yͤ holy Church of God, but of the deuill, and of his ſinagogue.

7. The clergy of the goſpellers agreeing with the ſaying of S. Auſten which they alledge, and according to the ſanctions of the fathers, and determinations of the holy mother church, do ſay and affirme laudably: that the condẽnation and prohibition of the 45. articles is vnlawful, and vniuſt, and raſhly done: for that not onely becauſe the doctors, but alſo all Biſhops and Archbiſhops, in ſuche great cauſes, namely, touching faith (as theſe articles doe) haue no authority at all, as appeareth. De baptiſmo et eius effectu cap. Maiores. Et in Can. 17. diſt. cap. Hinc ſedi. &c.

8. The ſecond cauſe of the diſcord which they alledge, alſo is moſt falſe: ſeing the fayth of whole Chriſtendome cõcerning the church of Rome, is deuided in 3. parts by the reaſon of 3. popes, which now together do raigne: And the 4. part is newtrall. Neither is it true, that we ought to ſtand in all things to the determination of the pope, & of the cardinals, but ſo farr forth as they do agree with yͤ holy ſcripture of the old and new Teſtament, from whence the ſanctions of the fathers, did firſt ſpring as is euident. De accuſationibus cap. qualiter. &c.

9. In the 4. Article they braſt out into a certayne dotage, & are contrary to themſelues. By reaſon that they doltiſhly haue reprehẽded the goſpellers, who in all their doings receiue the holy ſcripture (which is the law of God, yͤ way of trueth and life) for their iudge and meaſure: and afterward they themſelues doe alleadge the ſcripture. Deut. 17. where all iudges both popes and Cardinals are taught to iudge & diſcern betwene leaper & leaper, & in euery eccleſiaſticall cauſe, only after yͤ rule of gods law. And ſo are they cõtrary vnto their ſecõd article, wherin they ſay: yͭ in euery catholicke matter we muſt runne to the pope: which is cõtrary to the fooliſh condemnation of the Articles aforeſaid.

26.q.1. Hæ eſt fides.

Auſten called Pope.

10 Conſequently, like idiots they doe moſt falſly alledge for their purpoſe the Canon, vnder the name and authority of Ierome written 24.q.1. Hæc eſt fides papa. &c. where they do apply the wordes of Ierome moſt impertinentlye to the pope of Rome, which he writeth to S. Auſten, calling him a moſt bleſſed Pope.

11. By the whiche place of Ierome, it is manifeſt that the firſt article of thoſe doctors is falſe. Foraſmuch as by theſe wordes appeareth that other beſides the biſhop of Rome and his Cardinals, are called bleſſed Popes, holding the fayth and ſeat of Peter, and are ſucceſſours of the Apoſtles as was Auſten and other holy byſhops moe.

11. Wherof it followeth moreouer, that yͤ church of Rome is not that place, where the Lord did appoint yͤ principall ſea of his whole Church. For Chriſt, which was the head prieſt of all, did firſt ſit in Jeruſalem, and Peter did ſit firſt in Antioch, and afterward in Rome. Alſo other popes dyd ſit ſome in Bonony, ſome at Peruſium, ſome at Auinion.

13. Item, the foreſayde Prelates are falſifiers of the holy Scriptures and Canons, & therfore are worthy to be puniſhed: which affirme and ſay, that we muſt obey the pope in all thinges. For why it is knowne that many Popes haue erred, and one Pope was alſo a woman. To whome not onely it was not lawful to geue obediẽce, but alſo vnlawfull to communicate with them. As all Rubrices, and infinite Canons do declare.

Pope Ioane a woman.

14. Item, their 6. 7. 8. 9. 10. 11. Articles doe ſtand and are grounded vpon vntrue and falſe perſuaſions. And therfore are to be reiected and deteſted like the other before: Seyng they doe induce not to peace and veritye, but to diſſention and falſity.

15. It is manifeſt alſo to the laitye, that this diſſention among the clergy riſeth for no other cauſe, but onely for the preaching of the Goſpell, which reprehendeth ſuch Simoniacks and ſuch herericks in the church of God, as namely haunt the court of Rome, ſpreading out theyr braunches abroad into all the world. Who deſerue to be remoued & extirpate not onely of the clergy goſpellers, but alſo of the ſecular power. And ſo theſe three vices, to witte, Simonye, Luxurity, & Auarice (which is Idoll worſhip) be the cauſes of all this diſſention amonge the Clergye in the kingdome of Boheme, and not the other, which they falſely aſcribe to the Goſpellers of Prage. Theſe three vices beyng remoued, peace and vnity woulde ſoone be reformed in the Clergy.

Simonie, Luxurie, Auarice, three cauſes of diſſention in the clergie.

16. Moreouer, their laſt article is to much groſſe, and not onely is without all law, but alſo wout all coulour of law: whereas they fondly and childiſhly doe argue thus: that the proceſſes made agaynſt M. John Hus ought to be obeyed, becauſe forſooth the common ſort of the Clergye of Prage, hath receiued them: By the ſame reaſon they may argue alſo, that we muſt obey the deuil, for our firſt parẽts Adam and Eue obeyed him. Alſo our fore auncetours before vs were Paganes, wherfore we muſt obey them, and alſo the Paganes.

18. Finally, whoſoeuer wittingly & obſtinately do defend and execute (the ſayd proceſſes made) or conſenteth vnto thẽ, are all to be counted as blaſphemers, excommunicate, and heretickes, as hath bene afore written and exhibited to yͤ Lord generall biſhop Olomucenſe. And more ſhalbe declared and proued, if audience may be geuen openly before all the Doctors. Ex Ænea Sylui. & Chocleo.

¶ Unto theſe obiections of J. Hus & his part, the Catholique Doctors agayn did anſwer in a long tedious proces: The ſcope wherof principally tended to defend yͤ principality of the Pope, & to mayntayne his obedience aboue all other potentates in yͤ world: affirming & cõtẽding, that although Chriſt is the head alone of the whole multitude of them that are ſleeping in Purgatory, and whiche are labouring in the Church militant, and which are reſting in heauen: yet this letteth not, but the Pope is heade of the church here militant, that is, of all the faithfull, which here in this world liue vnder his office. Like as Chriſt is kyng of all kings, and yet Charles may be the king of Fraunce: So ſay they, Chriſt may be the vniuerſall head, and yet the Pope may be head vnder him of the whole Churche. And thus concluded they that the pope is the head, and that the Colledge of Cardinals is the body of the Romiſh church, which church of Rome is placed in the eccleſiaſticall office here ouer the earth, to know and define vpõ euery eccleſiaſticall and catholicke matter, to correct errors, and to purge them, and to haue care vpon all ſuch vniuerſall matters, & cure vpon all vniuerſall churches, and vpon the vniuerſal flocke of faythfull chriſtians. Foraſmuch as in the regimẽt of the church through yͤ vniuerſal world, there muſt nedes remayne in ſuch office alwayes ſome ſuche manifeſt & true ſucceſſors of Peter, prince of the Apoſtles & of the colledge of the other Apoſtles of Chriſt: neither can there be found or geuen vpon earth any other ſucceſſors, but only yͤ Pope which is the head, and the colledge of Cardinals, which is the body of the forſayd church of Rome. And although the whole vniuerſall multitude of the faythfull do make yͤ body of Chriſt, yet the ſame body of Chriſt is not placed here in office to exerciſe ſuch authority vpon earth. Becauſe that vniuerſal multitude was neuer yet, nor euer can be cõgregate together.

As Charles may be king of Fraunce: So alſo we graunt, the pope may be Biſh. of Italy, and ſo it is a good conſequent. He may ſo be, if God had ſo appointed him but where doth he ſo appoint.

Ex Cochleo in hiſt. Huſsit.

Catholique that is vniuerſal.

And therfore neceſſary it is, that ſome ſuch true and manifeſt ſucceſſors & iudges be appoynted, to whom recourſe muſt be had, in all ſuch catholick and eccleſiaſtical matters determinable. For like as in earthly regiments, euery caſe of diſcord is brought before his iudge, & hath his place aſſigned where to be decided: So like reaſon would requyre, that in principall matters and controuerſies of fayth, ſome ſuch preſidents & places be limited for the purpoſe to haue ſuch doubtes reſolued. And this being graunted, then the doctors proceed, & here muſt nedes cõclude (ſay they) that there cannot be geuen in all the world any other place, but onely the church of Rome: the head wherof is the Pope, & the body is the colledge of Cardinals. For like as Chriſt departing out of this world in his corporal preſẽce, left his body here with vs, vnder the Sacramẽt in another forme, whereby he remayneth with vs (according to his promiſe Mat. vlt.) vnto the conſummation of the worlde: Euen ſo while Chriſt walked here on earth in his bodily preſẽce, he was Pope himſelfe & chiefe biſhop, & ſo head of the church here militant in earth, corporally cõioyned with the ſame, as yͤ head is to his body. But after that he departed out of yͤ world becauſe his body which is the church militant, vpon the earth, ſhould not be headleſſe, therfore he left Peter, & his ſucceſſors to his church, for an head in his place, vnto the conſummation of the world, ſaying to him: Thou art Peter, & vpon this rocke I will build my church. &c. Mat. 16. And agayne he ſayth, feede my ſheepe. Ioan. vlt. That is to ſay, be thou Peter the head ouer thy brethren.

If ye go to humaine policie, who euer ſawe any priuate caſe of Englande brought to the Emperours court to be decided. If ye goe to Gods policy, then ſhew gods word for it.

The promiſe of Chriſt doctourly applyed.

O deepe diuinitie of theſe doctours.

Tedious it were to recite all the bibblebabble of theſe doctors in this their long reſponſall. Who ſo liſteth to ſee yͤ bottome of their profounde writing & knowledge, may reſort either to the hiſtory of Siluius, or els to M. Cochleus, in his firſt booke De hiſt Huſsit.

Vide Eneam. Silu. & Corleum. De Hiſt. Huſsit. lib. 1.

Thus then M. John Hus being driuen out of Prage (as is afore touched) by the motion of theſe Doctours, and moreouer being ſo excõmunicate, that no Maſſe nor other muſt be ſayd there where he was preſent. The people begã mightily to grudge and to cry out agaynſt the Prelates & other popiſh prieſts, which were the workers therof, accuſing thẽ to be Simoniacks, couetous, whoremaiſters, adulterers, proud, ſparing not to lay opẽ their vices to their great ignominy and ſhame. And much crauing a reformation to be had of the clergy.

The king ſeing the inclination of the people, being alſo not ignorant of the wickednes of the clergy, vnder pretence to reforme the church, began to require greater exactions vpon ſuch Prieſtes and men of the Clergy, as were knowne and accuſed to be wicked liuers. Whereupon they on the other part, that fauored John Hus, taking that occaſion preſent, complayned of all, accuſed many, and ſpared none, whomſoeuer they knew to be of the Catholicke faction, or enemies to John Hus. By reaſon wherof yͤ prieſts of the popiſh Clergy were brought, ſuch as were faultye, into great diſtreſſe, and ſuch as were not faulty, into great feare. In ſo much that they were glad to fall in, at leaſt not to fall out with the Proteſtantes, being afrayd to diſpleaſe them. By this meanes maiſter Hus beganne to take ſome more liberty vnto him, & to preach in his church at Bethleem, & none to controll him: by the ſame meanes the people alſo receiued ſome comfort, and the king much gayne & mony by the reaſon.

The prieſtes of Boheme deſplayed and taxed for their yll life.

And thus the popiſh Clergy, while they went about to perſecute John Hus, were inwrapped thẽſelues in great tribulation, and afflicted on euery ſide, as wel of lay mẽ, as of learned men of the clergy. In ſo much that womẽ alſo & children were agaynſt thẽ. And by yͤ ſame reaſõ, wherwith they thought to entangle him, they were ouerthrown thẽſelues. For the Doctors which before condemned this doctrine in John Hus, for an intollerable hereſye, & cried out ſo much agaynſt him, for teaching yͤ tẽporall Lords might take away tẽporall liuings frõ yͤ clergy ſinning habitualiter that is, lying and continuing ſtill in the cuſtome of iniquity: now when the king and the Lords temporall began to mearſe them and bereue them of their tẽporalties for their tranſgreſſions, the ſayd Doctors did keepe ſilence & durſt ſpeake neuer a word. Agayne where the foreſayd doctors, before could not abide in John Hus, that tithes wer to be couted for pure almes, now comming to yͤ Guildhal, were faine to entreat for theyr temporall goodes, not to be taken from them, pleading the ſame temporalties to be mere almoſe and deuotion of good men, geuen vnto the church. Ex Cochleo.

And thus now did they themſelues graunt the thing, which before they did condemne. The more that the popes clergy was pinched, the more grudge & hatred redounded to Iohn Hus, although he was in no cauſe therof, but onely their owne wicked deſeruinges, for the which cauſe Stephen Paletz, and Andræas de Broda, being the chiefe champions of that faction, though they could not remedy the caſe, yet to eaſe theyr mindes, wrote ſharpe and cruell letters to Maiſter Hus. And to helpe the matter forward, the Pope alſo here muſt helpe at a pinche, who likewiſe writeth hys letters to Wenceſlaus king of Bohemia, which was brother to Sigiſmund Emperor, for the ſuppreſſing of Iohn Hus & of his doctrine. Which was in the fifth and laſt yere of his Popedome. an. 1414. The tenour of whoſe letters to king Wenceſlaus in this wiſe proceedeth.

Steuen Paletz, Andr. Broda, write againſt Iohn Hus.

¶ The letter of Pope Iohn to K. Wenceſlaus.

The letter of Pope Iohn to K. Wenceſlaus.

IOhn Biſhoppe ſeruaunt of Gods ſeruanntes, to his welbeloued ſonne in Chriſt Wenceſlaus, King of Romaines and of Boheme, greeting and apoſtolicall benediction. Among other deſires and delightes of our hart: who although vnworthy to repreſent the roome of Chriſt here in earth: this doth chiefly redounde to our ſingular comfort ſo often as we do heare of the brotherly entreaty of peace and of concord (by which concord kingdoms do encreaſe, as contrary by diſcorde they are deminiſhed) which is betweene your honour, and our welbeloued in the Lord Sigiſmund your brother germane & coſin, for the noble king of the Romans &c. And furthermore it foloweth in theſe words. And as we haue cauſe to ioy at the premiſſes: ſo likewiſe agayne the heauy rumors which are here, do trouble and dampe our mindes. For we heare that in diuers places vnder your dominiō, there be certain which do folow and leane to the errors of that archhereticke Wickliffe, whoſe bookes haue bene long ſince condemned in the generall Romain councell to bee erroneous, hereticall, and ſwaruing from the catholicke fayth. And furthermore whiche is worſt of all, the ſayd perſons cleauing to the opinions of the heretickes (leaſt they ſhould be corrected of their ſuperior powers for their exces, to couer theyr naughtines and ſtubberneſſe in deſpiſing the commaundements of the Apoſtolicall ſeat) do openly teach diſobedience and contempt of the keies and eccleſiaſticall cenſure, to the ſubuerſion of the Apoſtolicall dignity, ſetting at nought the decrees of the holy fathers & canons. Wherefore we do exhort your worſhip for the mercy of our God, as hartely as we may or cā, that it would pleaſe you as we deſire & hope you will (ſo effectuouſly) to ſhew forth your regall power, both for the glory of God, & defence of the catholicke fayth (which you go about to defend) and for the conſeruation of your kingly name, ſtate and honor, for the proſperous ſafe gouernement of your kingdome and dominions, as it becommeth a catholicke prince, whereby this blot of hereſye (which doth ſo lamentably and miſerablye ſpring and creepe in thoſe partes and doth ſo infect the mindes of mortall men, to the deſtruction of their ſoules, and doth ſequeſter them from the congregation of the pure and catholick fayth and truth) may be rooted out. &c. Geuen at Bononia in the Ides of Iune, in the v. yeare of our popedome. &c.

In this epiſtle of Pope Iohn aboue prefixed, forſomuch as mention is made of a certaine councell before holden at Rome (which was 4. yeares before) agaynſt the articles & books of Iohn Wickliffe: it ſhall not be impertinēt nor out of purpoſe to repeat a certayn mery hiſtory & worthy otherwiſe to be noted at, written by Nicholas Clemangis of a certayne ſpirite, which ruled the Popiſh Councelles, hys worde are theſe.

The ſame pope called a Cōūcell at Rome about foure yeares before, at the earneſt ſute of diuers men. And a mas of the holy Ghoſt being ſayd at the entraunce into the ſayd Councell (according to the accuſtomed maner) the Councell being ſet, and the ſayde Iohn ſitting higheſt in a chayre prepared for him for that purpoſe: Behold a ougly & dreadfull Owle, or as the common prouerbe is, the euill ſigne of ſome miſchaunce of death to followe, comming out of the backe halfe of him, flew to and fro, with her euill fauoured voyce, and ſtanding vpon the middle beame of the church, caſt her ſtaring eyes vpon the Pope ſitting, the whole cōpany began to maruell, to ſee the night Crowe, whiche is wont to abide no light, how ſhe ſhould in ẏ midday come in the face of ſuch a multitude, & iudged (not without cauſe) that it was an illfauored token. For beholde ſayde they, (whiſpering one in on others eare) the ſpirite appereth in the ſhape of an Owle. And as the ſtode beholding one an other, and aduiſing the pope, ſcarcely could keep their coūtenaunce from laughter, Iohn himſelfe, vppon whom the Owle ſtedfaſtly looked, bluſhing at the matter, beganne to ſweate and to fret and fume with himſelfe, and not finding by what other meanes he might ſalue the matter, being ſo confuſed diſſoluing the Councell, roſe vp and departed. After that there followed an other ſeſſion. In the whiche the Owle again, after the maner aforeſayd, although, as I beleue, not called, was preſent looking ſtedfaſtly vpon the biſhop, whom he beholding to become agayne, was more aſhamed then he was before (and iuſtly) ſaying he could no longer abide the ſight of her, & commaũded that ſhe ſhould be driuen away with battes and ſhottinges: but ſhe being afrayde neither with their noyſe, neither of any thing els, would not away, vntill that with the ſtrokes of the ſticks, which were throwne at her, ſhe fell downe dead before thẽ all. This I learned of a faythfull frend, who at the ſame time came to Rome, the which thing I ſcarſely crediting for the rarenes of the matter, he affirmed by his othe, that it was moſt certayn & true: adding moreouer that all there preſent were much offẽded, & did greatly deride that Coũcell called for ſuch a purpoſe, and by little and litle the Coũcel was diſſolued, nothing done ther as he ſaith. Although it hath not bene alwayes ſeene that ſuch ſpirituall Doues haue bene preſent with Popes and their Councels, & gouerned thẽ: yet their euill doctrine declareth no leſſe. Read gentle reader the booke of Clemangis, and thou ſhalt not thinke thy labor euill beſtowed. For he hath both learnedly, truely, freely, and godly, bewayled the filthines of Antichriſt, and his miniſters, their wickednes, impiety and crueltie, and the miſerable ſtate and face of the Church. &c. And thus much for Pope Iohn.

The councell of Cõſtance.

HEre by the way is to be noted and vnderſtand, that during all this time of Pope Iohn, there were 3. Popes raigning together, neither was yet the the ſchiſme ceaſed, which ſo long time had continued, the ſpace (as I ſayde) of 29. yeares. By the reaſon wherof a generall Councel was ordeined & holden at Conſtance in the ſame yeare. an. 1414. being called by Sigiſmund the Emperor, and Pope Iohn the 23. for the pacifiyng of the foreſayd ſchiſme, which was then betweene three Popes, ſtriuing for the Popedome. The firſt whereof was Iohn, whom the Italians ſet vp. The ſecond was Gregory, whom the Frenchmen ſet vp. The third was Benedict, whom the Spaniardes placed, In this ſchiſmaticall ambitious conflict, euery one defended his Pope, to the great diſturbans of chriſtian nations. This councell endured foure yeares long, wherin all their matters were decided moſt by foure natiõs, to ſay the Engliſh, Germaine, French, & Italian nation. Out of which foure nations were apoynted & choſen foure Preſidentes to iudge and determine the matters of the Councell. The names of which Preſidentes were theſe, Iohn the Patriarke of Antioche for Fraunce, Anthony Archbiſhop of Rigen for Italy, Nicholas Archbiſhoppe of Geneſuenſis for Germany, and Nicholas Biſhop of Bathe for England by whom many great and profitable things to the glory of God, and publike profit, might haue bene concluded, if the rotten fleſh of the churchmen could haue bidden the ſalt of the Goſpell, and if they had loued the truth: but as Gregorius Nazienzenus writeth, there lightly come few generall Councels, but they end more with diſturbance, then tranquility. So it happened in this councell, for wheras Iohn the 13. in the firſt Seſſion exhorteth them by theſe wordes taken out of the 8. of Zachary. Viritatem diligite, that is to ſay: Loue the truth, further, moniſhing them, and ſpecially the Deuines euery man to do his endeuour for the vnitye of the Church, and to ſpeake their minde freely: but howe ſoone this his exhortation was forgottẽ, it appeared ſhortly after by the deſpiſing of the Prophetes, and perſecuting of Chriſt in his mẽbers, as by the grace of Chriſt ſhall appeare hereafter in the proceſſe of this ſtory. Firſt this Iohn did reſigne his Papacy, the Emperor geuing him thankes kiſſed his feet.

Three popes together ſtriuing for the Popedome,

The prelats aſſembled in this councel were numbred together with their deputies. 1940. Philip and Cheyney. &c.

Gregorius in Epiſtola quadam.

Afterward the ſayd Iohn repenting him that he had ſo done, ſought meanes to flee, whereunto Fredericke Duke of Auſtrich did aſſiſt him, for he chaunging his garments, fled by night with a ſmall cõpany. And when he was now come vnto Schaffehouſe to goe into Italy, the Emperour purſuing, tooke him, and proclaymed Fredericke traytour, & for that cauſe tooke away certayne Cittyes from him. At the laſt the matter was appeaſed vnder this cõdition, that Fredericke ſhould require grace of the Emperour, and reſigne all his poſſeſſions vnto him. wherupõ the Emperor receiued him againe into fauor, & reſtored him to his dukedome, This pope being thus depoſed, was committed vnto the County Pallatine, and by him caried to the Caſtle of Manheime, where he was kept priſoner by the ſpace of 3. yeares. Afterward he was agayne by Pope Martine, admitted to the number of Cardinals.

Duke Fredericke of Auſtrich proclamed traytor.

Pope Iohn taken and caſt in priſon

This Pope Iohn was depoſed by the decree of ỹ councell, more then 40. moſt greuous and haynous crimes being obiected and proued agaynſt him: as that he had hyred Marcilus Permenſis a Phyſition, to poyſon Alexander his predeceſſour. Further, that he was an heretick, a ſimoniake, a lyer, an hipocrite, a murderer, an inchaũter, a diceplayer, an adulterer, and a ſodomite, & finally what crime is it, that he was not infected withall?

Marke the good qualities of pope Iohn.

And now to returne vnto the councell, firſt we wil declare the order of their Seſſions, with things therin concluded, in generall: then we will (Chriſt willing) adioyne the ſpeciall tractation of ſuch matters, as perteyne to the ſtory of the Bohemians, and Iohn Hus, and Hierome of Prage, who in the ſame vngodlye councell were condemned and burned.

This councell therfore of Conſtance, which was ſummoned by the Emperour Sigiſmund, and Pope Iohn 23. about the natiuity of our Lord Ieſus, an. 1414. began the ſame yeare to be aſſembled about the latter end of the yere. which firſt beginning as the maner is, with a Maſſe of the holy Ghoſt, as they were ſinging according to their cuſtõe the Hymne, Veni ſancte ſpiritus, there was at the ſame time a certayne Bill ſet vp in the Church by ſome well diſpoſed man, as it ſeemed, wherein was conteyned theſe wordes folowing: Alijs rebus occupati nunc adeſſe vobis nõ poſſumus. That is to ſay. We are otherwiſe occupyed at this tyme, we can not intend to come to you. Here is alſo to be remẽbred the worthye ſaying of the Emperour Sigiſmund, when talke was miniſtred as touching the reformation of the ſpiritualtye, and ſome ſayde quod oporteat in cipere a minoritis, that is, that reformation ought firſt to beginne at the Minorites. The Emperour aunſwering againe: Non a minoritis, ſed a maioritis, that is, not with the Minorites ſayth he, but with the Maiorites. Meaning the reformation ought firſt to begin with the Pope, Cardinals, & Byſhops and other ſuperior ſtates of the church, and ſo to diſcend after to the inferiors. This much by the way, & now to the purpoſe and order of the Seſſions as we promiſed. The which counſell continued as is aforeſayd by the ſpace of iiij. yeares, and had in it 45. Seſſions, wherein many things were concluded, the which altogether were to long to be recited in this place: as the depoſition of three ſeueral Popes, whiche were before ſpoken of, the hearing of certaine Legates. Yet I minde to make ſome briefe recapitulation of the moſt principall matters there done in the ſeſſions orderly enſuing.

A writing ſet vp how the holy Ghoſt had no leyſure to come to the councell of Conſtance.

The worthy anſwere of the Emperour touching the order of reformation.

1. In the firſt Seſſion chiefly was cõcluded, firſt that this Councell was lawfully congregate.

2. Item, that the going away of the pope ſhould be no let or ſtay, but the Councell might proceed.

Wherein note (gentle Reader) that the authority of the generall Councell is aboue the Pope, contrary to their owne doctrine.

Note by this example, the authoritie of councels preferred before the Pope.

3. Item, this Councell ſhould not be diſſolued before the Church were reformed, as well in the ſuperiours, as inferiours.

4. In the 4. Seſſion amongeſt other thinges, this was firſt concluded: That a Synode congregate in the holy Ghoſt, making a generall councel, repreſenting the whole Catholicke Church here militant, hath power of Chriſt immediately, to the which power euery perſon, of what ſtate or dignity ſo euer he be: yea being the pope himſelfe, ought to be obedient in all ſuch things as concerne the generall reformation of the Church, aſwell in the heades, as in the ſubiectes.

Anno. 1415.

Item, the ſayd Pope ſhould not tranſlate the Court of Rome, and the officers of the ſame from the City of Conſtance. And that all his cenſures, doinges and workinges after the time of his departure, whatſoeuer he ſhoulde enterpriſe to do to the preiudice of this Councell, ſhould be of no effect.

5. In the 5. Seſſion the ſame Articles were repeated and concluded agayne.

6. In the 6. Seſſion procuration and citation was ſent out agaynſt the Pope.

Item, commiſſioners were appointed out of the foure nations for the hearing of Iohn Hus, which ſhalbe hereafter mentioned in his ſtory folowing.

Commiſſioners appointed to heare I. Hus.

Item, the memory of Iohn Wickliffe was condemned and the ſentence geuen in the Councel holden at Rome vpon the condemnation and burning of Wickliffes bookes, was there confirmed.

Item, in the ſame Seſſion, Citation was ſent out agaynſt Ierome of Prage. The tenor wherof foloweth after in the ſtory of the ſayd Ierome.

Citation graũted againſt Ierome of Prage.

Item, in this Seſſion, was decreed agaynſt libelles of infamy.

7. In the 7. Seſſion nothing was handled, but that the tenour of the citation agaynſt Pope Iohn was recited.

8. In the 8. Seſſion, the ſentence and condemnation of Sentence geuen for the burning of Wickliffes bones.

Iohn wickliffe, and his 45. Articles was recited, and ſentence geuẽ againſt his memory & bones to be burned. The tenor whereof is rehearſed in the hiſtory of Iohn wickliffe before paſſed. fol. 449.

9. In the 9. Seſſion, The matter & cauſe of Pope Iohn was agayn intreated, and commiſſioners appoynted to enquire vpon his cauſe, and iudges for the ſame.

10. In the 10. Seſſion, Suſpenſion was geuen out & reade agaynſt the ſayd Pope.

11.12. In the 11. and 12. Seſſions, Notaries were aſſigned & definitiue ſentence geuen agaynſt the ſaid Pope, where alſo was decreed that none of them that contended before for the Papacy, ſhould be choſen Pope.

13. The people of Chriſt excommunicated from the communion of the holy cup.

In the 13. Seſſion was decreed, Quod nullus præſbiter ſub pena excommunicationis comunicet populo ſub vtraque ſpecie panis & vini. This is, that no Prieſt vnder payne of excommunication ſhall communicate vnto the people vnder both kindes of bread aud wine.

14. In the 14. Seſſion, came in yͤ reſignation of pope Gregory the 12. which was one of the 3. before mentioned, ſtriuing for the Papacy, with certayne other Articles concerning the election of the Biſhop of Rome, and the ratification of their reſigning, which gaue ouer the Papacy.

15. The ſolemne publiſhing of the ſentence of condemnation againſt I. Hus.

Then enſueth the 15. Seſſion, in the which ſilence was commanded on all partes vnder pain of excommunicatiõ, and the great curſe that no perſõ or perſons high or low of what eſtate or degree ſo euer he were, Emperour, Kyng, Cardinall, or other ſhould diſturbe the ſayd Seſſion wyth any maner of noiſe, either by hand, foot, or voyce. This being done, the ſentence & condemnation againſt Iohn Hus was read and puliſhed, whiche after in the ſtory of Iohn Hus, foloweth to be ſene more at large.

16. In the 16. Seſſion, Ambaſſadors were aſſigned by the Councell to go into Arragon to Benedictus the 13. to entreat with him for the reſignation of his Papacy, as the other two had done before.

Item, power was geuen to iudges, to cite vnder pain of depriuation, all ſuch as priuily departed away from the Councell, in the whiche Seſſion alſo the ſentence agaynſt Iohn Hus was confirmed and ratified.

17. The Emperours iourney into Arragon.

In the 17. Seſſion, the Emperour tooke vpon him a iourney to the king of Arragon, to entreat with pope Benedictus. An excommunication denounced agaynſt al ſuch as ſhould go about to empeche the Emperours iourney about that matter. &c.

Pardons were here dogge cheape.

Item, prayers and proceſſions were determined to be made by the Councell, euery Sonday for the ſame cauſe, with an hundred dayes of pardon geuen to thẽ that would be preſent thereat, and that all Prelats ſhould be preſent at euery of theſe ſayd Maſſes and proceſſions in theyr Pontificalibus. Graunting beſides to euery Prieſt that ſayd one Maſſe, for the ſame a 100. dayes of pardon. And to all other that once a day ſhould ſay one Pater noſter, and one Aue, for the ſafety of the Emperour xl. dayes of pardon.

18. In the 18. Seſſion, certayne iudges were aſſigned for the hearing of matters, which the Councell had no leaſure to heare.

It was there alſo decreed that ſuche letters and Buls as were written in the name of that councell, ſhould be receiued with no leſſe credite and authority, then the Bulles proceeding from the Sea Apoſtolicall, and that the falſifyers of the ſame ſhould incurre no leſſe penalty then the falſifyers of the other. Legates alſo and Ambaſſadours were ſent into Italy.

19. In the 19. Seſſion which was yͤ ſame yeare in the moneth of September, Ierome of Prage who was cited as is before ſayd, was accuſed of hereſy & caſt in priſon by the ſayd councell, & conſtrayned to abiure. The which his abiuration hereafter foloweth to be ſeene in his hiſtory.

Concilium Foedifragum.

Item, it was decreed: Quod non obſtantibus ſaluis cõductibus Imperatoris Regum. &c. poſsit per iudicem competentem de hæretica prauitate inquiri. &c. That is, notwithſtanding yͤ ſafe conduct geuen by the Emperour and kinges. &c. Inquiry may be made agaynſt a man for hereſy by a ſufficient iudge and proceſſe, to be made according to the law.

The cauſes of hereſies were committed to certain iudges and deputyes.

And how chaũceth it that the charte of Conſtantines donation is not here mentioned.

Item, the Chart called Carolina, and diuers other Chartes and conſtitutions concerning the libertyes of the Church of Rome, being brought forth were approued and confirmed,

20. Prouide that the churchmen looſe nothing in no caſe.

In the 20. Seſſion, letters & inſtrumentes were made and ſet vpon Church dores to require and admoniſh duke Fredericke to reſtore agayne vnto George Biſhop of Auſtriche, ſuch landes, rentes, and reuenues as he deteyned & withheld, vnder payne of interditement, ſuſpending and excommunication.

During the time of this Seſſion, the Ambaſſadors returned out of Arragon from the Pope Benedict and were heard with great audience, wheras certayne Articles and conditions betwene the Pope & the councell were brought forth and agreed vpon to the number of 12.

21. Ann. 1416.

In the yeare of our Lord 1416. was the 21. Seſſion beginning after theyr maner with a Maſſe of the holy ghoſt with proceſſions and ſuch other rites, in the time of which Maſſe, Iames Biſhop of Londy made a Sermon, taking for his Theame theſe wordes. Ex probrauit Deus incredulitatem eorum & duritiam: That is, the Lord rebuked theyr miſbeliefe and hardnes. &c. This ſermon being ended, Ierome of Prage which had abiured, as is ſayd the yeare before, being preſent thereat, ſtoode vp vpon a certayne bench or fourme. Replying agaynſt the foreſayd Iames and hys Sermon, alleadging and preaching diuers and ſundrye thinges, whereupon the Patriarch of Conſtantinople, one of the commiſſioners proceeded agaynſt him, pronouncing the ſentence definitiue, which he had in writing agaynſt the ſayd Ierome, which ſentence being red and approued by the councell (the tenor whereof inſueth in his hiſtorye) the ſayd Ierome was deliuered vnto the ſecular power, & burned.

Ierome of Prage replied agaynſt the ſermon of the Byſhop of Lõdy.

22.23. The 22. and 23. Seſſions contayne no worthy matter, bnt onely the placing of the Ambaſſadours of Alphanſus K. of Arragon, & graunting them voyces in the Councell.

24. In the 24. Seſſion, citatiõ was geuen out agaynſt Benedict, keeping with Alphonſus, king of Arragon.

25. The 25. Seſſion conteineth nothing but a certayne Comendam geuen to the Church of Olemucenſis.

26. The 26. Seſſiõ, there was nothing els handled, but the vniting and incorporating of the Ambaſſadors of the king of Nauarre into the Councell, and alſo concerning the derogation of the priority of voyces.

27.28. Anno. 1417.

After this folowed the 27. and 28. ſeſſions, which were in the yeare 1417. wherein was intreated the relation and declaratiõ, concerning the cauſe betwixt Duke Frederick, and the biſhop of Trident, and proceſſe geuen out agaynſt the ſayd Duke, accuſing him of ſacriledge, and alſo excommunicating him, for not obeying the admonitiõ of the coũcell concerning the vſurpation and deteyning of the city of Tridẽt and other poſſeſſions from Biſhop George, as is afore ſpecified.

29.30. In the 29. and 30. Seſſions, Proctors and Notaryes were geuen out in the cauſe agaynſt Pope Benedict, and order decreed vpon his obſtinacye, wherein alſo the withdrawing of the king of Arragon from the ſame Pope, was recited and approued by the Councell.

31. In the 31. Seſſion, certayne inſtrumentes, and ſpeciall letters monitory were directed from the Councell to a certaine Earle of Italy named Comes virtutum, for laying violent handes vpon Albert, Biſhop of Aſce, and for bringing him to priſon, requiring the ſayd Earle vnder paine of interdiction, and excommunication to ſet the ſayd Byſhop at liberty. Alſo an other decree was ſet forth for the reſtoring agayne the liberties of the Church of Baron.

32.33. Pope Benedict accuſed.

In the 32. and 33. Seſſions, the accuſation of pope Benedict was renued, and his obſtinacy accuſed, and witnes brought in, at which thing doing, the Emperour Sigiſmund was preſent.

34. In the 34. Seſſion, the cauſe of the foreſayd Pope was heard, and proceſſe geuen out agaynſt him.

35. In the 35. Seſſion, the Ambaſſadours of the king of Caſtle were brought in, and vnited to the Councel, and inſtrumentes thereof made and read. Alſo that notwithſtanding the othes made to the foreſayd Pope, mẽ might lawfully forſake his obedience.

36. The Pope curſeth the councell.

In the 36. Seſſion, a certayne citation was made and read againſt the Pope, conteining his depriuation and the ſentence agaynſt him, & inſtruments made vpon the ſame. And whereas this Pope had thundred out his curſes, depriuations and excommunicatiõs agaynſt them: The ſayd Sinode did adnihilate all his doinges.

37. The 37. Seſſion did renue agayne the accuſation of the foreſaid pope, and the ſentence definitiue agaynſt him was publiſhed.

38. In the 38. Seſſiõ certaine decrees were made touching the adnihilating of the penalties of the Ambaſſadours of king Henry ſonne of Alphonſus king of Arragon. Alſo an other decree was made touching the reuocatiõ of yͤ voyces graunted to the Ambaſſadors of the king of Arragon.

39. Thus Pope Benedict being depoſed and excommunicated as is aforeſayd, in the next Seſſions following, they addreſſed themſelues to the election of a new Pope, beginning firſt in the 39. Seſſion to geue out decrees concerning generall Councels, & prouiſion, for the auoyding of ſuche like ſchiſmes hereafter. Decreeing euery x. yeare to haue a general generall Councell, after the two Councels that ſhould folow immediatly after this, of the which the one ſhould be kept within fiue yeares, then next folowing, and the ſecond within ſeauen yeares after that.

Decrees for generall counſels.

Item, in the ſame Seſſion was drawen out a forme touching ſuch thing as the Pope ſhould profeſſe and bind himſelfe, to obſerue at time of his election, of the which forme the order and tenour is this.

The profeſsion which the pope is bound to.

I N. elected for Pope, profeſſe with hart and mouth vnto almighty God, whoſe Church I take vpon me to gouerne, by his helpe, and to bleſſed S. Peter the Prince of the Apoſtles, ſo long as I ſhall endure in this fraile and brittle life, firmely to beleeue and hold the holy Catholick faith after the traditions of the Apoſtles, of generall Councels, and of other holy fathers, and namely of the eight generall Councels. Nicene the firſt, the ſecond of Conſtantinople, Epheſine the third, Calcedone ẏ fourth, the fift and ſixe of them in Conſtantinople, the ſeauenth of Nice, the eight of Conſtantinople. And alſo of the generall Councels of Laterane, Lyons, and Vienne, willing to obſerue the ſame faith vnuiolate euen to the vttermoſt, and to preach and defend the ſame, euen to the ſpending of my life and bloud, and alſo by all meanes poſſible to proſecute and obſerue the rite of the Sacraments canonically deliuered to the Catholike Church. And this my profeſſion and confeſſion by my commandement, being written out by the Notary of the Arches of the holy Church of Rome, I haue ſubſcribed with mine owne hand, and ſincerely with a pure mind and deuout conſcience, I offer it vnto thee almighty God vpon ſuch an aulter, &c. In the preſence of ſuch witnes. &c. Yeuen. &c.

It was alſo decided in this Seſſion, that no Prelates ſhould be tranſlated againſt their wils.

40. The third of the ſame moneth, and the ſame yeare folowed the 40. Seſſion, wherein certaine decrees were conſtitute and read, as touching reformatiõs to be made thorough the whole church by the Pope, that next ſhould be, with the Councell, before this Synode ſhould breake vp.

Item, that they ſhould ſo proceed to the election of the Byſhop of Rome, notwithſtanding the abſence of thoſe Cardinals which were wyth Pope Benedict in Spaine. This done, the order and maner was decreed for the election of the Pope.

41. After theſe things thus decreed, in the next Seſſion, which was fourty one, the conſtitution of Clement the ſixt was read, concerning the order and diet of the Cardinals being in the Conclaue about ẏ chuſing of the Pope, and vpon the ſame othes were miniſtred vnto the Cardinals and other Electours, binding them to obſerue and keepe all ſuch things as they ſhould be bound to, during the time of the election.

The order & maner of the Conclaue in chuſing the Pope.

Firſt, that they ſhould enter into the Conclaue within ten daies after the fourty Seſſion, which was this preſent day after ſunne ſet.

Secondly, that euery Cardinall ſhould haue but two ſeruitours attending vpon him at the moſt, either of the Laity or Cleargie, as they would themſelues.

Thirdly, that they ſhould remaine together in the ſayd Cõclaue, without any wal betwixt thẽ, or any other couer, ſaue only bare Curtains, if any were diſpoſed to ſleepe.

Fourthly, that the Conclaue ſhould ſo be ſhut vp, and the entry to the priuie chamber to be kept ſo ſtraightly, that none of them ſhould come in or out, nor any to haue recourſe vnto them to talke with them priuely or apertly, nor they to admit any man to come to them, except by the conſent of them all, certaine ſhould be called about matters concerning the election.

Fiftly, that no man ſhould ſend to them either meſſenger or writings.

Sixtly, that a competent windowe ſhould be aſſigned vnto them to receiue in their victuals, but that no perſon might come in thereat.

Seuenthly, that no day after their firſt ingreſſe into the Conclaue, beſide bread, wine and water, they ſhould haue any more diſhes but one of one onely kinde, either of fleſh or fiſh, egges, pottage, made of fiſh or fleſh, not after the deintieſt ſort, beſides ſalades, cheeſe, frute, and conſerues, whereof there ſhall be no principall meſſe made but for ſauce and taſte.

Eightly, that not one ſhould be compelled to go into the Conclaue: But if they did all refuſe to go in, then they ſhould be compelled thereunto.

Ninthly, that ſuch as would go out, might, but if they would all go out before ẏ Pope were elect, they ſhould be compelled to go in againe, except ſuch whome infirmitie did excuſe, but without the excuſe of infirmitie, if anye went out, he ſhould no more be admitted, except they went all out together.

Tenthly, that ſuch as went out by reaſon of infirmitie, for to be abſent, and returne before the election be determined: may be admitted againe into the Conclaue in the ſame ſtate wherein they ſhall finde the election to ſtand.

Further and beſides the keepers of the Cõclaue, ſhould alſo be ſworne to ſee all theſe premiſes obſerued and kept without fraude or guile, and that they ſhould not ſtreighten the Cardinals and other Electours aboue the order here taken.

And if the King be there himſelfe ſitting in his throne of eſtate, he ſhould receiue the ſame othe of the Cardinale.

Vpon this ſuch as ſhould be electours beſide the Cardinals, were choſen.

Furthermore, for as much as the goods and ſubſtance of ſuch as were elect, were accuſtomed to be geuen & granted vnto ſuch as could catch them: whereupon vnder the pretence of the ſame, many did inuade the goods of the Cardinals, and others which were in the Conclaue, falſely faining them to be elected which were not to be elected. To ſtop the greedy rauening of ſuch, a decree alſo was publiſhed in the ſame Seſſion.

Theſe were wiſe Cardinalls, they would not goe into the Conclaue, but they would be ſure to haue their goods ſafe vnſpoyled.

Theſe things thus prepared and ſet in order, the Patriarch of Conſtantinople, with the Cardinals and other Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbots, Priours. Deanes, Archdeacons, Doctours, with other electours entring into the Conclaue vpõ Monday, on Thurſday after they had hatched out a Pope, being S. Martins euen, whereupon they named him Martin: This Martin thus being elected, was ſtraight forth brought in by the Emperour and the Councel, into the Church of Conſtance, and there inthroniſed for Pope, not without great ſolemnitie & triumph. The xxi. day of the ſaid moneth, this foreſaid Martin according to their accuſtomed pompe was honourably brought in to bee crowned with ſumptuous proceſſion from the high Church of Conſtance vnto the Monaſterie of S. Auſten. The Emperour on foote, leading his horſe by the bridle on the right hand: And the Marques of Bradenburge Prince Electour, likewiſe leading his horſe on the left hand, the Pope himſelfe riding in the middeſt vpon his palfrey.

Pope Martine hatched. The Emperour leadeth the Popes horſe by the bridle, on the right hand. The prince electour leadeth the popes horſe on the left hand.

And thus being brought into the Monaſtery aforeſaid, and ſo reduced round about againe from thence to the high Church of Conſtance, was there crowned with all magnificence.

42. Notwithſtanding all this, yet all the trifling and fond vanitie of this Councell more great then wiſe, did not end thus, for in the next Seſſion which was the xlij. came out a decree in the name of the Pope and the Councell, diſcharging the bound of the Emperour and the County Palatine, touching the ſafe cuſtody of Pope Iohn, who was by bond committed vnto them to be kept in ſafetie.

43. In the xliij. Seſſion, certaine other decrees and ſtatutes were made by Pope Martin in the ſaid Synod. Annullating and repromuing all the actes and procedings of the other Popes before during the time of the ſchiſme from the time of Gregory the xi. As in matters concerning exemptions, vnions, fruites and profites of the Church, benefices, ſimonie, diſpenſations, tithes and other burdens of the Church. Alſo concerning the apparell of the Cleargy and ſuch other things.

Apparell of the clergie.

44. In the xliiij. Seſſion, the ſage fathers of this Councell were occupied about the determining in what place the next Councell ſhould be kept in, the xlv. Seſſion brake vp and diſſolued this Synode.

45. Now to finiſh our tedious rehearſall of this Synode. The Cardinall Vmbald by the cõmandement of the Pope and the Councell, with a high and loud voice pronounced theſe words Domini ite in pace, which is, Lords depart in peace, whereunto the ſtanders by anſwered, Amen.

Thus the councell being diſſolued, Frier Iohn Biſhop of Catthan by the conſent and commandement of the Pope and the Councell, went vp into the Pulpit to make a Sermon, taking for his theame: Vos autem triſtitiam habetis: iterum autem videbo vos, & gaudebit cor veſtrũ. You are now in ſadnes: I will ſee you againe, and then your harts ſhall reioice. The which collation being ended, an other Cardinall named Anthony, was ſent vp by the Pope and the Councell, with this proclamation, firſt to diſmiſſe the Synode, and to geue euery man leaue to depart home. Alſo to declare the Popes indulgence vnto them, who by the authoritie of God almighty, had granted to them all and euery one preſent at that Councell, full abſolution once in their life, ſo that euery one within two moneths after the hearing of this indulgence, ſhould procure the ſame in forme of writing. Alſo another indulgence was graunted in like maner of plenary remiſſion at the hour of death, and that was vnderſtand as well of the houſhold, as of the maiſters themſelues. But vnder this condition, that from the time of notification of the ſame, they ſhould faſt by the ſpace of one whole yeare euery Friday, for the abſolution in their life time. And for the abſolution at the houre of death, to faſt the ſame Friday another yeare, except they had ſome lawfull impediment to the contrary, ſo that after the ſecond yeare, they ſhould faſt vnto their liues end, or elſe to do ſome other good worke. The which being in this maner proclaimed, the Synode brake vp, and euery man departed home.

Smell here reader, this made well for the popes purſe.

FF.iiii. and

So that the whole multitude which were vewed to be in the Towne of Conſtance betweene Eaſter and Whitſontide, were numbred to be 60500. ſtrangers and forreners at that Councell.

The generall councell aboue the pope.

Here is to be noted that in this Councell of Conſtance, nothing was decreed or enacted worthy of memorie, but this only, that the Popes authoritie is vnder the Councell, and that the Councell ought to iudge the Pope.

Communion in both kindes denyed by this councell.

And as touching the Communion in both kindes, although the Councell did not denie, but that it was vſed by Chriſt and his Apoſtles, yet notwithſtanding by the ſame Councell it was decreed to the contrary.

Hetherto wee haue comprehended the order and diſcourſe of this Councell, with the actes and Seſſions concerning the ſame: which Councell although it was principally thought to be aſſembled, for quieting of the ſchiſme betweene the three Popes: yet notwithſtanding, a great part thereof was for the cauſe of the Bohemians, and eſpecially for Iohn Hus: As appeared by their preparation before the Councell. For before the Councell began, the Emperour Sigiſmund aforeſaid, ſent certain Gentlemen Bohemians, which were of his owne houſhold, giuing them in charge to bring Iohn Hus Bacheler of Diuinitie, vnto the ſaide Councell, and that vnder his ſafe conduict, the meaning and intent thereof was, that Iohn Hus ſhould purge and cleare himſelfe of the blame which they had laid againſt him: and for the more better aſſurance, the Emperour did not only promiſe him ſafe conduict that he might come freely vnto Conſtance: but alſo to returne againe into Boheme without fraud or interruption, he promiſed alſo to receiue him vnder his protection and vnder ſauegard of the whole Empire. For the ſame onely cauſe the Emperour ſent him afterwards the ſaid ſafeconduicts double written, both in Latine and Almaine, the forme whereof doth heereafter enſue.

The ſafe cōduct geuen to maiſter Iohn Hus.

¶ Sigiſmund by the grace of God King of the Romaines, of Hungary and Denmarke, Croatia, &c. To all Princes as well Eccleſiaſticall as Seculer, Dukes, Marqueſſes, and Earles, Barrons, Captaynes, Borowmaiſters, Iudges, and Gouernours, officers of townes, burgages and villages, and vnto all rulers of the cominalty, and generally to all the ſubiects of our Empire, to whome theſe letters ſhall come, grace and all goodnes.

Wee charge and commaund you all, that you haue reſpect vnto Iohn Hus, the which is departed out of Boheme, to come vnto the generall Councell, the which ſhall be celebrate and holden very ſhortly at the towne of Conſtance. The which Iohn Hus we haue receiued vnder our protection and ſafegard of the whole Empire, deſiring you that you will chearefully receyue hym when he ſhall come towards you, and that you intreat and handle hym gently, ſhewing hym fauour and good will, and ſhew hym pleaſure in all thyngs, as touchyng the forwardnes, eaſe, and aſſurance of hys iourney, as well by land as by water.

Moreouer, we will that he and all his company with hys carriage and neceſſaries, ſhall paſſe throughout all places, paſſages, portes, bridges, lands, gouernances, Lordſhips, liberties, cities, townes, bourgages, caſtels and villages, and all other your dominions, wythout payeng of anye manner of impoſition or dane money, peage, tribute, or anye other manner of tolle whatſoeuer it be: we will alſo that you ſuffer hym to paſſe, reſt, tarie, and to ſoiourne at libertie, without dooing vnto hym anye maner of impeachment, or vexation, or trouble, and that if neede ſhall ſo require, you do prouide a faythfull company to conduct hym withall, for the honour and reuerence which you owe vnto our imperiall maieſty. Yeuen at Spire the xviij. of October, in the yeare of our Lord GOD 1414.

¶ By this it may appeare that this ſafe conduct was graunted not in the time of the Councell by the Biſhops, but before the Councell by the Emperour: who was or ought to be the principall ordeiner and directer of the Councell vnder God. Now whether the Biſhops in breaking and adnulling this promiſe of the Emperour, againſt the Emperours mind, becauſe the diſcuſſion therof belongeth Ad materiam iuris, non facti, being a matter rather of lawe then of ſtory, I will differ to reaſon this caſe with maiſter Cope, to ſuch time, as may be more conuenient to the full tractation thereof.

Ala. Copus, pag. 929.

Aunſwer to Ala. Copus.

Notwithſtanding, briefly to touch and paſſe, let vs conſider part of the reaſons of the ſaide Cope, how friuolous and falſe they be, and eaſie to be refelled. What (ſaith he) if he preached by the way comming vp? Firſt that is falſe, vide infra page. What (ſaith he) if he ſtood obſtinate in his hereſie: what if he ſought to eſcape away after hys comming vp? To this the Lords of Boheme doo aunſwere, that his ſafeconduct was broken, and he impriſoned, not onely before he attempted to eſcape, or before hee was condemned for an hereticke, but alſo before he was heard of the Councell what he was. Vide infr. page. Further, where Cope ſayth that the generall Councell was aboue the Emperour, and hath power in caſe of hereſie to breake publique leagues and graunts: to that I ſay, that this ſafeconduct ſtood not only vpon the Emperour, but alſo vpon the conſent of the Pope himſelfe, vide infr. page. And admit that to be true, that the councell had power to make this decree, to breake promiſe wyth hereticks: yet this can not be denied, but that Iohn Hus was condemned and iudged before that decree in the xix. Seſſion was made. Finally, when Cope hath prooued by what ſcripture the councels haue power to defeat the authoritie of their Emperours in ſuch ſecular cauſes touching ſafeconductes, and outward ſafetie: then will I anſwere him more fully heerein. But to the purpoſe againe of the ſtory.

Iohn Hus taketh the Emperours ſafe cōduct.

Iohn Hus ſeeing ſo many faire promiſes, and the aſſurance which the Emperour had geuen vnto him, ſent anſwere vnto the Emperour that he would come vnto the Councell: But before hee departed out of the Realme of Boheme, and ſpecially out of the towne of Prage, he did write certaine billes long inough afore, as well in Latine as in the Bohemian language, and Almaine, and cauſed them to be ſet and faſtened vpon the gates of the Cathedrall Churches and pariſh Churches, Cloyſters and Abbayes, ſignifieng vnto them all, that he would go to the generall Councell at Conſtance, wherof if any man haue any ſuſpition of his doctrine, that he ſhould declare it before the Lord Conrade, or Biſhop of Prage, or if he had rather, at the generall Councell, for there he would render and giue vp vnto euery one, and before them all, an accompt and reaſon of his fayth. The example of his letters and intimations ſet vp were theſe, the copie whereof here followeth.

Letters of Iohn Hus ſet vp.

MAiſter Iohn Hus, Bacheler of Diuinitie, will appeare before the moſt reuerend father the Lord Conrade, Archbyſhop of Prage, and Legate of the Apoſtolicke ſeate in the next conuocation of all the Prelates and Cleargy of the kyngdome of Boheme, being ready alwayes to ſatisfie all men which ſhall require him to giue a reaſon of hys fayth and hope that he holdeth. And to heare and ſee all ſuch as will lay vnto his charge either any ſtubburnes of errour or hereſie, that they ſhould write in their names there, as is required both by Gods law and mans. And if ſo be that they could not lawfully prooue any ſtubbornes of errour or hereſie againſt him, that then they ſhould ſuffer the like puniſhmentes that he ſhould haue had, vnto whome altogether he will aunſwer at the next generall Councell at Conſtance, before the Archbyſhop and the Prelates, and according to the decrees and Canons of the holy Fathers, ſhew foorth his innocencie in the name of Chriſt. Dated the Sonday next after the feaſt of Sainct Bartholomew.

¶ The Intimations folowing, were drawne out of the Bohemian tongue.

An other intimation of I. Hus ſet vp for his going to Cōſtance.

I Maiſter Iohn Huſnetz, do ſignifie vnto all men, that I am ready to come and ſtand before the face of my Lorde the Archbiſhop, and to aunſwere to all things whereof I am falſely accuſed in the next conuocation of Bachelers, and cheſly to this point, that in many places they doo report me an hereticke, not hauing reſpect vnto iuſtice or to law, neither yet to my merits or deſerts. Therefore ſince that you which do neuer ceaſe to ſclaunder and backebite me with your words, doo vnderſtand and knowe theſe things, come foorth openly before the face and preſence of the Lord Archbyſhop, and with an open mouth, declare and ſhew foorth what falſe doctrine or other things you haue heard me teach contrary to Catholicke fayth, and if that I ſhall be found faultie in neuer ſo ſmall a matter, contrary or againſt the faith of Chriſt, or in any falſe doctrine, and that I do choſe that or other things contrary to the faith of Chriſt, then I will hold my peace, and ſuffer puniſhment as an hereticke. And if there be no man that will reſiſt againſt me, or accuſe me in this point, once againe I ſay vnto you, that I am ready to appeare at Conſtance in the famous congregation, to the end that I may ſtand in the company of the Diuines, euen before the face of the Pope. Therefore whoſoeuer knoweth any falſe doctrine contrary to the faith of Chriſt in me, let him come thether, and ſhew it foorth boldly, if he haue any thing to lay againſt me, and for my part I will not be ſlacke, if I may vnderſtand or knowe it, to anſwere as well to ſmall as great, as touching the truth which I haue receiued of God, and deſire to be defended. All you good men therefore which loue the truth, ſay now whether by theſe my words I do thinke or go about any thing, either contrary to the law of God or man. If I be not admitted then to be heard, be it knowne and manifeſt vnto all men, that it hapneth not thorough my fault the ſame day.

The offer of I. Hus to his enemies.

A writing of I Hus at the kinges gates.

VNto the Kings maieſtie, the Queene, and to all ſuch as are of his Councell, and to all other Rulers and Magiſtrates, which now are in the Kings Court, I Iohn Hus, doo ſignifie and publiſh, that I haue vnderſtand, not by any vayne rumor or tale, that there be letters brought from the Pope to the Kings Maieſtie, the contents whereof, is this: That the Kyngs Maieſtie ſhoulde bring to paſſe, that the heretickes which were now lately ſprong vp in hys kyngdome and dominions, ſhould not take any firme or ſtrong roote. For ſo much as without any deſert, as I truſt by Gods grace, the fame or noiſe is ſproong and blowne abroade: it ſhall bee our part to foreſee and take heed, that neyther the Kyngs Maieſtie, neyther the noble Kyngdome of Boheme, ſhould bee driuen to beare or ſuffer anye reproche or ſlaunder for mee. Wherefore now of late I haue ſent my letters too and fro, whych I haue with great labour and diligence, cauſed to be openly ſet vp, to thys intent, that I myght thereby cauſe the Archbyſhop to be carefull and diligent about the matter, ſignifyeng openly, that if there were any man in all Boheme, which did knowe mee to be a follower of anye falſe or corrupt doctrine, that he ſhould profeſſe hys name in the Archbyſhop hys Court, and there to ſhew foorth and declare what he thought. And for aſmuch as there would none be fonnd or come foorth, which would accuſe me, the Archbyſhop commaunded me and my procurers to depart in peace. Wherefore I require and deſire the Kings Maieſtie, which is the defender of the truth, alſo the Queene and theyr Counſellers, and all other Rulers and Magiſtrates, that they woud geue me a faithfull teſtimoniall of this matter. For ſomuch as I haue oftentimes willed and attempted this, and no man hath eyther accuſed mee or troubled mee. I doo it moreouer to bee knowne vnto all Boheme, and to all nations, that I wil bee preſent euen at the firſt time before the Councell of Conſtance, in the moſt famous place, in the preſence of the Pope, the Pope beeyng preſident. And finally, in the preſence of all others which will come to that moſt famous place, and that whoſoeuer hath any ſuſpition of me, that I haue eyther taught or defended anye thyng contrarye vnto the fayth of Chriſt, let hym come thether alſo, let hym declare there before or in the preſence of the Pope, and all the Doctors of Diuinitie, what erroneous or falſe doctrine I haue at any tyme followed or holden. More, if hee ſhall conuince me of any errour, or prooue that I haue taught anye thing contrarie vnto the Chriſtian fayth, I will not refuſe to ſuffer whatſoeuer puniſhment ſhall be due for an hereticke. But I hope and truſt euen from the bottome of my hart, that God wyll not geue the victory to vnfaithfull and vnbeleeuing men, the which do willingly kicke and ſpurne againſt the truth.

The ſame time Iohn Hus ſente his procurers to the Lorde Byſhop of Nazareth, ordeyned by the Apoſtolicke Sea Inquiſitour of hereſie of the Citie and Dioces of Prage, requiring hym, that if he had found any errour in him, he would declare it openly. But the ſayd Biſhop before the ſayd procurour, and the publike Notary, wyth many other credible witneſſes aunſwered, that he had often talked with Iohn Hus, and that he neuer knew anye thing in him, but as becommeth a godly and faithfull man, and this his teſtimonie of Iohn Hus, he approoued by his letters, the copie whereof is heere vnder written.

The teſtimony of the good biſh. of Nazareth.

WE Nicholas by the grace of God Byſhop of Nazareth, and Inquiſitor, ſpecially deputed by the Apoſtolicke ſeate for hereſies both of the Citie and Dioces of Prage, by theſe preſents we do it to be knowne vnto all men, that wee in times paſt haue often communed and talked with that honorable man, mayſter Iohn Hus, Bacheler of Diuinitie, of the famous vniuerſitie of Prage, and haue had diuers and ſondry conferences with hym, both of the Scriptures and diuers other matters, and in all hys ſayings, doyngs, and behauiour, we haue prooued and found him to be a faithfull and a Catholicke man, finding no maner of euill, ſiniſter, or by any meanes, erroneous doings in him vnto thys preſent. We doo witneſſe and proteſt moreouer, how the ſayd Iohn Hus, of late, in the Cathedrall Church of Prage, and in other both Collegiate and Pariſh Churches, and in the Colledges of the Vniuerſitie of Prage, and in the gates and porches of the moſt noble Prince and Lord, the Lord Wenceſlaus King of Romaines and of Boheme. Alſo in the gates of the reuerend father the Lord Conrade Archbyſhop of Prage, Legate of the Apoſtolicke Sea, and Chauncelour of the Vniuerſitie of Prage, and of other Princes and Barons, then being in the Citie of Prage, hath ſet vp his letters written both in Latine, and in the Bohemian tongue, containing ſententially in effect, how the foreſayd Mayſter Iohn Hus, would appeare before the reuerend father the Lord Conrade, the foreſayd Archbyſhop of Prage, and all the Prelates and Cleargy of the kingdome of Boheme, that ſhall bee congregated and called together by the ſayd Archbyſhop, at the day appoynted in the ſayd Citie of Prage, readie alwayes to ſatisfie euery man that ſhall deſire and require him to ſhew a reaſon of his fayth and hope that he holdeth, and to ſee and heare all and euery one which could prooue any obſtinacie of errour or hereſie, lawfully againſt him, vnder the payne to receyue the like puniſhment: vnto whome altogether he would by Gods helpe, aunſwere in the Councell of Conſtance, which was now at hand, before the ſayd Lord Archbyſhop and vs, with all other Prelates, and there in Chriſtes name, according to the decrees and Canons of the holy Fathers, to declare and ſhew foorth his innocencie. After the which letters as is aforeſayd by the ſayd maiſter Iohn Hus openly ſet vp, there did no man appeare before vs, the which would accuſe the ſayd Maiſter Iohn Hus, of any errour, eyther of any hereſie. For the euident witneſſe of all whyche things, we haue commaunded theſe preſent letters to be made, and confirmed the ſame with the ſetting too of our ſeale. Dated in Prage xxx. of Auguſt, an. M.iiij.C.xiiij.

The Biſh. of Nazareth witneſſeth with Iohn hus.

Vpon which matter alſo, a publicke inſtrument was drawne, teſtified with the hand and ſeale of the publicke Notary, named Michel Pruthatietz. The copie of whych inſtrument heere vnder followeth.

¶ An Inſtrument of Recognition, or proteſtation of the Lord inquiſitor of Hereſies.

IN the name of God, Amen. In the yeare of hys natiuitie 1414. the thirtith of Auguſt, in the fift yeare of the Byſhoprike of the moſt holy Father in Chriſt Iohn by the grace of GOD Pope, the three and twentith of that name, in the vppermoſt parlor of the houſe of the famous man the Lord Peter of Zwogſta, called Znirglits, maiſter of the mynte, of the moſt famous Prince and Lord, the Lord Wenceſlaus, Kyng of Romaines and of Boheme, in the greater Citie of Prage, about the Abbey of Saint Iames the Apoſtle, in the preſence of me the publique Notary heere vnder written, and certayne witneſſes heere within written, ſpecially called for that purpoſe. There was perſonally preſent Mayſter Iohn Ieſſenitz, mayſter of Art, procuror in the name of the honourable man, Mayſter Iohn Hus, Bacheler, formed in Diuinitie of the Vniuerſitie of Prage. He moſt humblie and earneſtly requyred the reuerende father in Chriſt and Lord, Nicholas Byſhop of Nazareth, Inquiſitour of Hereſies for the Citie and dioceſe of Prage, ſpecially appoynted by the Apoſtolike Sea, beeing there alſo preſent, ſayeng: Reuerend father, doe you knowe any error or hereſie in Mayſter Iohn Huſnetz, otherwiſe called Hus. The which ſayd Lord Nicholas, not compelled or conſtrained but of his owne will and accord, freely and openly did there recogniſe, ſayeng theſe or the like words in the Bohemian tongue.

I haue often and many times bene conuerſant with Mayſter Iohn Hus, and haue eaten and dronke with him: alſo I haue bene often preſent at his Sermons, and diuers of his collations which he hath made vpon diuers places of the ſcripture, and I neuer found or perceiued in him any errour or hereſie, but in all his words and deedes I haue found him alwaies a true and a Catholike man, neither haue I found any thing that doth ſauour of any errour or hereſie.

Againe, the ſaid maiſter Iohn his procurer, in the behalfe as aboue, required and asked the ſaid Lord Nicholas Byſhop and inquiſitour, whether any man haue accuſed the ſaid maiſter Iohn Hus of any hereſie before him, being inquiſitour for hereſie, and hath conuicted him of hereſie. He aunſwered, that ſince the time he knew Iohn Hus, and that he was made inquiſitour for hereſie in the Citie and dioceſe of Prage (as is afore ſaide) neuer anie man accuſed, either conuinced the ſaid maiſter Iohn Hus of any hereſie before him vnto this preſent time. Adding moreouer, that he the ſaid maiſter Iohn Hus did openly ſet vp his letters patents this preſent yeare afore ſaid, in the ſaid moneth of Auguſt, vpon the porches of the Cathedrall Church of Prage, and other Collegiate and pariſh Churches of the Citie of Prage, and vpon the gates of our ſaide Lord, our Lord the King, and the Archbyſhop of Prage, conteining in them this effect, how that he would appeare before Conrade Archbiſhop of Prage, and all the Prelates and Cleargy of the kingdome of Boheme, which ſhould be congregated and called together at a certaine day of the moneth aforeſaid, ready alwaies to ſatisfie all men as touching the faith and hope which he helde, and to ſee and heare all and ſinguler that woulde laye anye obſtinacie of error or hereſie vnto him, that they ſhould determine themſelues there, to ſuffer the like puniſhment, according to the extremitie both of Gods lawe and mans lawe, vnto whome altogether he would anſwere in his owne right before the ſaide Archbiſhop of Prage, and the ſayd Lord Nicholas, Biſhop and inquiſitour aforeſaide, and the Prelates, euen in the next generall Councell of Conſtance, and there according vnto the Canons and decrees of the holy Fathers, declare and ſhewe foorth his vprightnes and innocencie, vpon all and ſinguler, which proceedings, maiſter Iohn de Ieſenitz procurer, and in the procurours name or behalfe as afore, required and deſired, that he might haue one or many publique inſtruments made vnto him by me the publique Notary heere vnder written. Theſe things were done the yeare, indiction, day, monthe, houre, place, and byſhopricke, as is afore ſaide, in the preſence of theſe noble and famous men, the Lords William de Zwirgelitz, Baron of the Kingdome of Boheme, Peter his ſonne, the Lord Hlawaczion de Renow, likewiſe Barron, Wenceſlaus de Lunarx, Vnſſone de Miekoniz, Burgraue of the Caſtell of Liechetenburg, Cztiborius de Bodanetz Eſquier, and William de Dupore Knight of the ſaide dioceſe of Prage, with manye other woorthy and credible witneſſes, which were ſpecially deſired and required vnto the premiſſes. And I Michaell, ſometimes the ſonne of Nicholas de Prachatitz, of the dioceſe of Prage, and by the Imperiall authoritie, publique Notary, was preſent, with the witneſſes afore named, at the affaires afore ſaid, at the requeſt, demaund, aunſwere, and petition, and all and ſinguler the dooings within written, and did ſee and heare all theſe things to be done in foreſayd maner and fourme. But being buſied with other matters, I haue cauſed this to be faithfully drawne and written, and ſubſcribing the ſame with mine owne hand, haue publiſhed and reduced it into this forme, and haue ſigned it with my ſeale and name, accuſtomed being called and required to beare witnes of all and ſinguler the premiſſes.

After this, as all the Barons of Boheme were aſſembled in the Abbay of Sainct James, about the affayres of the Realme, where as the Archbyſhop of Prage was alſo preſent: There the ſayde John Hus preſented ſupplications: by the whiche he moſt humbly deſired the Barons, that they woulde ſhewe hym thys fauour towards the ſayde Archbyſhop, that if the ſayd Archbyſhop did ſuſpect him of any errour or hereſie, that he woulde declare it openly, and that he was ready to endure and ſuffer correction for the ſame at hys hands. And if that he had founde or perceiued no ſuch thing in hym, that hee would then gyue hym a teſtimoniall thereof, through the which he being as it were armed, he might the more freely go vnto Conſtance. The ſayde Archbiſhop confeſſed openly before all the aſſembly of Barons, that he knew not that the ſayd John Hus was culpable or faulty in anye crime or offence, and thys was hys onely counſell, that the ſayd John Hus ſhould purge himſelfe of the excommunication he had incurred: this report, which the Archbiſhop had giuen of John Hus, doth appeare by the letters which the Barons of Boheme ſent vnto the Emperour Sigiſmund by the ſaid Hus in the towne of Conſtance.

Conrade the Archb. cleareth Iohn Hus.

Finally, all the Prelates and Cleargie aſſembled together in the Towne of Prage, in the Archbiſhop hys Court, where as appeared perſonally the worſhipfull maiſter John Jeſenitz, Doctour of decretals and procurer, in the name and behalfe of the honourable man maiſter John Hus, requiring that either the ſayde mayſter John Hus, or that hee in the name and behalfe of hym, might bee ſuffered to come into the ſayde Archbiſhops Court, to the preſence of the Archbiſhop, and the Prelates which were there congregated together, forſomuch as maiſter John Hus is readye to ſatiſfie all men which ſhall require hym to ſhew any reaſon of his faith or hope, which he holdeth, and to ſee and heare all and ſingular, whych were there gathered together, that is to ſaye, the Lord Archbyſhop and Prelates, or any of them, whych would lay any maner of obſtinacie, or errour, or hereſie vnto hym, that they ſhould there write in their names, and according both vnto Gods lawe and mans, and the Canon law, prepare themſelues to ſuffer lyke puniſhment, if they could not lawfully proue any obſtinacie of errour or hereſie againſt him: vnto whome altogether he would, by Gods helpe, aunſwere before the ſayd Archbyſhop and the Prelates in the next generall Councell holden at Conſtance, and ſtand vnto the law, and according to the Canons and Decretals of the holy Fathers, ſhewe forth and declare hys innocencie in the name of Chriſt: Unto the which maiſter John of Jeſſenetz Doctour, one called Ulricus Swabe of Swabenitz, Marſhall of the ſayde Archbyſhop, comming forth of the ſayd Court, did vtterly deny vnto the ſayd maiſter Doctour and his partie all manner of ingreſſe and entrance into the Court, and to the preſence of the Archbiſhop aforeſayd, and of the Prelates there gathered together. Pretending that the Archbyſhop, with the Prelates aforeſayd, were occupied about the Kings affaires, requiring the ſayde maiſter Doctour, that hee woulde tary in ſome place without the ſayd Court, that when the Archbyſhop and the Prelates had finiſhed the Kings affaires, hee might then returne, and haue libertie to come into the Court there. The ſaid maiſter John Hus, and the Doctour of lawe tarried a while, intreating to bee admitted into the Archbyſhops Courte. But ſeeing hee coulde preuayle nothyng, he made there a ſolemne proteſtation of hys requeſt, that both hee and alſo maiſter John Hus and his part, could not be ſuffered to come into the Archbyſhops Court, to the preſence of the Archbyſhop and the Prelates. Requiring of the foreſayde Notarie, publicke inſtruments to be made of the ſame, which alſo was done.

Iohn Hus requireth to geue teſtimony of his faith and could not be admitted.

And theſe were the things which were done, before John Hus tooke hys iourney to the generall Councell of Conſtance, the which J minded briefly to reharſe, whereunto J will alſo annexe ſomewhat, as touching his iourney thetherwards.

About the Jdes of October 1414. John Hus being accompanied with two noble Gentlemen, that is to wit, Wencelat of Duba, and John of Clum, he parted from Prage, and tooke hys iourney towardes Conſtance. And in euery place as hee paſſed, he notifyed hys preſence by hys letters which he ſent abroade, and eſpecially in euery good towne or citie of name, the tenour whereof enſueth.

Iohn Hus taketh his iourney to Conſtance.

¶ The copy of the letters which Iohn Hus ſet vp in the common places of the Cities which he paſſed thorough going to the Councell.

Maiſter Iohn Hus goeth now vnto Conſtance, there to declare his fayth which he hath hitherto holden, and euen at this preſent doth hold, and by Gods helpe will defend and keepe euen vnto death. Therefore euen as he hath manifeſted throughout all the kingdome of Boheme by his letters and intimations, willing before his departure to haue ſatisfied and giuen an accompt of his fayth vnto euery man which ſhould obiect or lay anie thing againſt him in the generall conuocation holden in the Archbiſhop of Prages Court: So likewiſe he doth manifeſt and ſignifie, that if there be any man in this noble and Imperiall Citie, the which will impute or lay any errour or hereſie vnto him, that he ſhould prepare himſelfe to come vnto the Councell, for ſo much as the ſayd maiſter Iohn Hus is ready to ſatisfie euery man at the ſayd Councell, which ſhall lay any thing vnto hys charge as touching his faith.

The letters which Iohn Hus ſet vp in cities as he paſſed to Conſtance.

Jn all Cities as he paſſed by, and principally when he was parted out of Boheme, and entred into Almaine, a great number of people did come vnto him, and he was very gently receiued and entertained of hys hoſtes thorough all the townes of Germany, and ſpecially of the Citizens and burgeſes, and oftentimes of the Curates.

How I. Hus was receiued by the way going vp to the counſell.

Inſomuch, as the ſayd Hus did confeſſe in a certayne Epiſtle, that hee founde in no place ſo great enimies as in Boheme. And if it happened that there were any bruite or noiſe before of his comming, the ſtreetes were alwayes full of people, which were deſirous to ſee John Huſſe and gratifie him: and amongſt all other ſpecially at Nurrenberge, where as certaine Merchaunts which went before, certified the Citizens of his comming. In the ſame Citie there were many Curates which came vnto hym, deſiring that they might talke with him ſecretly aparte, vnto whome he aunſwered, that he loued much rather to pronounce and ſhew forth his mind and opinion openly before all men, than in huggermugger, for he would kepe nothing cloſe nor hidden. So after dinner vntill it was night, he ſpake before the Prieſts and Senatours, and diuers other Citizens, inſomuch that they all had hym in great eſtimation and reuerence one onely doctor except, which was a Charterhouſe Monke, and the Curate of Sainct Sebaulde, which did improue all that he had ſaid.

A Charterhouſe mõke againſt Iohn Hus.

The twentith day after that, he parted out of the towne of Prage, which was the third day of Nouember, he came vnto Conſtance, and lodged at an honeſt matrons houſe being a widow named Faith, in ſaint Galles ſtreete.

John Huſſes Hoſtes named faith.

The morrow after, the Gentleman maiſter John de Clum, and maiſter Henry Latzemboge, went to ſpeake with the Pope, and certified him, that John Huſſe was come, whome they had brought to Conſtance to the generall Counſell, vnder the Emperour his ſafe conduict, deſiring him alſo that he on his part would graunt the ſayd John Huſſe libertie to remaine in Conſtance, without anie trouble, vexation, or interruption: vnto whome, the Pope aunſwered, that albeit that John Huſſe had killed his brother, yet would he go about as much as in him lay, that no outrage or hurt ſhould be done vnto him, during his abode in the towne of Conſtance.

The Pope cõſenteth to the ſafe conducte of Iohn Hus.

In this meane time, the greateſt aduerſary that John Huſſe had, named maiſter Steuen Palletz, the which was alſo a Bohemian, was come vnto Conſtance. But hys companion maiſter Stanislaus Znoma, was not yet paſſed the borders of Boheme, when he was ſtriken with an impoſtume, whereof he died. As ſoone as the ſaid Palletz was come to Conſtance, he did aſſociate vnto him one Michael de Cauſis, the which had before falſly accuſed and blamed the ſaide John Huſſe. And this may not be forgotten, that the ſaid Palletz had bene familiarly conuerſant and acquainted with the ſaid John Huſſe from hys youth vpward, but after that there was a bull brought vnto Prage from Pope John the 23. againſt the King of Apulia, named Ladiſlaus, the ſayd John Hus withſtood it openly, for ſo much as he ſaw that it was wicked and nought.

Staniſlaus Znoma Huſſes enemy, going to Conſtance, died by the way.

Steuen Palletz, Michaell de Cauſis cheife enemies to Hus.

And as touching the ſaid Palletz, albeit that he had cõfeſſed at a certaine banquet in the preſence of the ſaid John Hus that the ſaid Bull was contrary to al equity & right: yet notwithſtanding forſomuch as he was obliged & boũd vnto the Pope by meanes of certain benefices receiued at his hand, he mainteined and defended the ſaid bull againſt John Hus. And this was the cauſe of the diſcord and falling out betwene thẽ. As for Michaell de Cauſis the companion of maiſter Palletz, he was ſomtime the Curate of new Prage, but he not being content therwith, but ſeking after a further pray, dreamed and imagined out a new deuiſe how to attayne vnto it, for he made a ſemblaunce that he had found out a new inuention or meane, whereby the mines of gold in Gilory, which were periſhed and loſt, might be renued and ſet on worke againe. By this means he did ſo much with the king Wenceſlaus, that he did put a great ſumme of mony into his hands, to do that withall which he had promiſed.

A Bull againſt Ladiſlaus king of Apulia.

Michaell de Cauſis.

This honeſt man after he had laboured and trauelled certaine daies about it, and perceiuing that he brought nothing to paſſe, and that by that meanes he was vtterly in deſpaire of his purpoſe, hee conueied himſelfe priuily out of the Realme of Boheme with the reſt of the money, and withdrewe himſelfe as a worthy bird for ſuch a neſt, into the court of Rome. Such a man of ſuch conditions was eaſily corrupt with mony, and that by the aduerſaries of the ſaid Hus, & promiſed thẽ to do what he coulde for them, the which hee did ſhortly after. The two iolly roiſters Steuen Palletz, & Michaell de Cauſis drew out certaine articles againſt yͤ ſaid Huſſe, ſayeng that they had gathered them out of his own writings, and ſpecially out of his treatiſe, which he had written of the Church. They trotted vp & downe, hither & thither, taking great paines to ſhewe the ſaide articles vnto the Cardinals, Biſhops, Monks, and ſuch others of that ſort, doing them alſo to vnderſtand, that there were other matters of greater importance which the ſaid J. Hus had committed and done againſt the holy conſtitutions and other ordinances of the Pope and the Church: which if neede were, they ſaid they would propound before yͤ Councell. Through yͤ kindling of this their fire, they did ſo incenſe the Cardinals & all the Prieſts, that all they with one mind and conſent thought to cauſe the good man to be taken and laid hands on.

The wicked life of Mich. de Cauſis Huſſes enemie deſcribed.

The enemies of Hus practiſe againſt him.

The 26. day after the ſaid Hus was come to Conſtãce, during all which time, he was occupied in reading, writing, and familiar talke with his friends, the Cardinals which through the inſtigation and motion of Palletz and Michael de Cauſis, ſent two Biſhops, to wit, the Biſhop of Auguſta, and of Trident, and with them the Borowmaiſter of the towne of Conſtance, and a certaine knight, to the place where John Hus lodged about dinner time, which ſhould make report vnto him, that they were ſent by the Pope and his Cardinals, to aduertiſe him that hee ſhould come to render ſome knowledge or witnes of hys doctrine before them, as he had oftentimes deſired, and that they were readie for to heare him.

Unto whome John Huſſe aunſwered, I am not come for no ſuch intent, as to defend my cauſe particularly before the Pope & his Cardinals: proteſting yͭ I neuer deſired no ſuch thing, but that I would willingly appeare before the whole aſſemble of the Councell, and there anſwer for my defence openly, without any feare or doubt, vnto all ſuch things as ſhould be demanded or required of me. Notwithſtanding ſaid he, foraſmuch as you require me ſo to do, I will not refuſe to go with you before the Cardinals. And if it happen that they euill entreate or handle me: yet neuertheles I truſt in my Lord Jeſus, that he wil ſo comfort and ſtrengthen me, that I ſhall deſire much rather to die for his glory ſake, then to denie the veritie and truth which I haue learned by his holy ſcriptures. Wherfore it came to paſſe that the Biſhops being inſtant vpon him, and not ſhewing any outward ſemblance, that they bare any malice or hatred againſt him in their harts, albeit they had priuily laid garriſons both in the houſe, where they were aſſembled, and alſo in other houſes: John Hus tooke his horſe which he had at his lodging, and went vnto the Court of the Pope and the Cardinals.

I. Hus deſired to plead his cauſe before the whole councell.

When he was come thither and had ſaluted the Cardinals, they began to ſpeake to him in this ſorte: We haue heard many reports of you, the which if they be true, are in no caſe to be ſuffered. For mẽ ſay that you haue taught great and manifeſt errours, and contrary and againſt the doctrine of the true Church, and that you haue ſowed your errours abrode through all the Realme of Boheme, by a long ſpace of time, wherefore we haue cauſed you to bee called hether before vs, that we might vnderſtande and know how the matter ſtandeth.

I. Hus is come before the Pope & the cardinals.

The wordes of the pope & the Cardinals to I. Hus.

Unto whom John Hus anſwered in few words: Reuerend fathers, you ſhall vnderſtand yͭ I am thus minded and affectioned, that I would rather chooſe to die, then I ſhould be found culpable of one only errour, much leſſe of many & great errours: for this cauſe I am the more willingly come vnto the generall Councell which is here appointed, to ſhewe my ſelfe ready euen with all my hart to receiue correctiõ, if any man can proue any errours in me. The Cardinals aunſwered him againe, that his ſayengs pleaſed them very well, and vpon that they went theyr way, leauing the ſaid John Hus with maiſter John de Clum, vnder the gard and keeping of the armed men.

The aũſwere of Iohn Hus to the Pope and the Cardinals.

In the meane ſeaſon, they did ſuborne and furniſh out a certaine diuine, a Frier Franciſcane, a ſubtile and craftie man, and a malicious hypocrite, for to queſtion with the ſaid John Hus, which was compaſſed round about with armed men. This man drawing neare, in his monkiſhe geſture, ſayd: Reuerend maiſter, I a ſimple and rude ideot am come vnto you for to learne, for I haue hard many ſtrange and contrary things againſt yͤ catholike fayth, to be aſcribed vnto you, the which doo diuerſly moue my mind, being wholy inclined to the truth. Wherefore I do deſire you, euen for the loue which you beare vnto yͤ truth, and to all good and godly men, that you woulde teache me moſt ſimple and miſerable mã, ſome certaintie and truth. And firſt men ſay that you hold opinion after the cõſecration and pronuntiation of the words in the Sacrament of the altar, there remaineth only materiall bread. J. Huſſe aunſwered, that it was falſly attributed and imputed to him. Then ſaid he: I pray you is not this your opinion? No verely ſaid John Hus, I do not ſo thinke of it. When the Monke aſked this queſtion the thirde time, Maiſter John de Clum being ſomewhat moued with him, ſayde: Why art thou ſo importunate vpon him? Verely if anye man had affirmed or denied any thing vnto me but once, I woulde haue beleeued him. And thou, albeit hee hath ſhewed thee his mind ſo often, yet ceaſeſt not to trouble him. Then ſaide the Monke: gentle maiſter I pray you pardon me a poore idiot and ſimple Frier, ſurely I did it of a good mind & intẽt, being willing & deſirous to learne. This Frier put forth another queſtion vnto him, proteſting his ſimplicitie and ignorance, what maner of vnitie of the Godhead & manhood was in the perſon of Chriſt? when I. Huſſe had heard this queſtiõ, he turned himſelfe vnto Maiſter Iohn de Clum in the Bohemian language ſaid: truly this Frier is not ſimple as he doth pretend, for he hath propoũded vnto me a very hard queſtion. And afterward turning himſelfe to yͤ frier, he ſaid vnto him: brother, you ſay that you are ſimple, but as I haue heard of you, I perceiue very well, that you are double and craftie, & not ſimple. It is not ſo verely ſaid the frier. well, ſayde Iohn Hus, I will cauſe you well to vnderſtand that it is ſo: For as touching the ſimplicitie of a man, it is required in things that concerne ciuilitie & maners, that the ſpirite, the vnderſtãding, the hart, the words, & the mouth ſhould agree together, and I do not perceiue that this is in you. There is in your mouth a certaine ſemblance of ſimplicitie, the which would very well declare you to be an ideot and ſimple, but your deedes ſhew plainely and euidently a great ſubtiltie and craft in you, with a great quicknes and liuelines of wit, in that you haue proponed vnto me ſo hard and difficult a queſtion.

Notwithſtanding I will not feare to ſhew you my mind in this queſtion. And when he had made an end, the Monke gaue him great thanks for his gentlenes and ſo departed. After that, the Popes garriſon which were about the ſaid Iohn Hus, told him, that this frier was called Maiſter Didace, who was eſteemed and counted the greateſt and moſt ſubtile diuine in all Lumbardy. Oh ſaid Hus that I had knowne that afore, I would haue handled him after another ſort and faſhion, but I would to God they were all ſuch, then through the help and aide of the holy Scriptures, I would feare none of them. In this maner the ſaid Hus and maiſter Iohn de Clum, were left vnder the keeping of theſe men of Armes, vntill foure of the clocke at after noone. After which time the Cardinals aſſembled againe in the Popes Court, to deuiſe and take counſaile what they ſhould do with Iohn Hus. Then Steuen Palletz & Michaell de Cauſis, with diuers other of their adherents, made earneſt ſute that he ſhould not be let go at libertie againe, and hauing the fauor of the iudges on their part, they bragged vp and downe in a maner as they had bin mad men, and mocked the ſaid Iohn Huſſe: ſayeng, now we will hold thee well enough, thou art vnder our power and iuriſdiction, and ſhalt not depart, vntill ſuch time as thou haſt paid the vttermoſt farthing.

Didace a crafty Frier.

Many a man beguiled vnder the cloke of ſimplicitie.

I. Huſſes accuſers triumphe ouer him when he was taken.

A little afore night, they ſent yͤ Prouoſt of the Romain court vnto M. Iohn de Clum, to ſhew him that he might returne to his lodging, for as for I. Hus, they had otherwiſe prouided for him, whẽ M. Iohn de Clum hard theſe newes, he was wonderfully diſpleaſed, forſomuch as through their crafts, ſubtleties & gloſing words, they had ſo trained this good man into their ſnares, whereupon he went vnto yͤ Pope, declaring vnto him all that was done, moſt humbly beſeching him, that he would call to remembrance the promiſe which he had made vnto him and maiſter Henry Latzembog, and that he woulde not ſo lightly falſifie and breake his faith and promiſe. The Pope anſwered that all theſe things were done without his cõſent or commandement, and ſaide further to maiſter Clum apart, what reaſon is it that you ſhould impute this deede vnto mee, ſeeing that you knowe well inough that I my ſelfe am in the hands of theſe Cardinals and Biſhops?

The pope breaketh promiſe.

In mine opiniõ, for ſo much as Pope Iohn feared that, which in deed did after follow, that he ſhould be depriued of his dignitie, he thought to win the fauour of theſe Herodian Cardinals and Biſhops, by betraieng this good man vnto thẽ. So the ſaid M. Clum returned very penſifull & ſory: he complained very ſore both priuely & openly, of the iniury and outrage that the Pope had done, but all profited nothing. After this, the ſaide I. Hus was led by the officers to the chapter houſe of the great Church of Conſtance, where hee was kept priſoner by the ſpace of eight daies, frõ thence he was caried vnto the Iacobines, hard by the riuer of Rhine, and was ſhut vp in the priſon of the Abbey, the which was hard by the Bogardes.

The pope to pleaſe the councel was againſt I. Hus.

After he had bene incloſed there a certaine time, he fell ſore ſicke of an agew, by meanes of the ſtench of the place, and became ſo weake, that they deſpaired of his life. And for feare leaſt this good mã ſhould die in priſon, as others are wont to do, the Pope ſente vnto him certaine of hys Phiſitions for to cure and helpe him. In the middeſt of his ſicknes his accuſers made importunate ſute to the principals of the Councell, that the ſayde Iohn Hus might bee condemned, and preſented vnto the Pope, theſe Articles heere vnderwritten.

The impriſomẽt and ſickenes of Iohn Hus.

¶ Articles preſented againſt Iohn Huſſe.

First he doth erre about the Sacraments of the church, and ſpecially about the Sacramẽt of the body of Chriſt, for ſo much as he hath openly preached, that it ought to be miniſtred openly vnto the people vnder both kinds, that is to ſay, the body and bloud. This article is euident, forſomuch as his diſciples at this inſtant in Prage, do miniſter the ſame in both kinds. Moreouer, it is affirmed by diuers, that he hath taught both in the ſchooles and in the Church, or at the leaſt that he doth hold this opinion, that after the words of conſecration pronounced vpon the aulter, there remaineth ſtill materiall bread in the Sacrament, this article ſhall be knowne by his examination.

Articles againſt Iohn Hus.

The ſupper of the Lord.

Secondly, he doth erre, as touching the miniſters of the church, forſomuch as he ſaith that they cannot cõſecrate or miniſter the Sacraments when they are in mortall ſinne. This article ſhall likewiſe be known by his examination. Notwithſtanding all that, which is here conteined, may be gathered by his writings De eccleſia, the which if he denie, let there then be ſome deuines and others appointed, to peruſe and looke ouer his ſaid writings of the Church. Moreouer he ſaith, that other men beſide prieſts may miniſter the Sacraments, this article is euident, for ſo much as his diſciples do the ſame at Prage, the which of themſelues do violently take the Sacrament out of yͤ treaſurie, and communicate among themſelues, whẽ the holy communion is denied vnto them: by this and other things, alſo it is ſufficiently euident, that he hath taught that euerie man being without mortall ſinne, hath yͤ power of orders or prieſthood, for ſo much as ſuch only as hath taken orders, ought to miniſter the ſacraments vnto themſelues. And becauſe he proceedeth from ſmall matters vnto great and waightier, it doth conſequently appeare and followe, that thoſe which be in ſtate of grace, can binde and looſe.

Of the adminiſtration of Sacraments.

Thirdly he doth erre as touching the Church, and ſpecially for that he doth not allow & admit that the Church ſignifieth the Pope, Cardinals, Archbiſhops, and yͤ Clergie vnderneath them, but ſaith that this ſignification was drawne out from the ſchoolemen. And in no caſe to be holden or allowed, this article is manifeſt by his ſaid treatiſe vpon the Church.

Of the Church.

Moreouer he doth erre concerning the Church, in that he ſaith, that the Church ought not to haue any temporall poſſeſſions. And that the temporall Lords may take them away from the Church & the clergy without any offence: this errour is euident, forſomuch as through his doctrine and intiſements many churches in yͤ kingdom of Boheme & in the citie of Prage, are already ſpoiled and robbed of a great part of their temporalties and goods. He ſaith alſo that Conſtantinus & other ſecular princes erred by enriching and enduing churches & monaſteries. This article is manifeſt by that which goeth next before.

Ecleſiaſtical reuenues.

Fourthly, he erreth as touching the Church, in that hee ſayth, that all prieſts are of like power, and therfore affirmeth that the reſeruations of the Popes caſualties, the ordering of Biſhops, and the conſecration of the Prieſtes were inuented only for couetouſnes. This Article doth ſomewhat appeare by thoſe afore going, but by his examination ſhall be more euident.

The biſhops power.

Fiftly, he erreth concerning the church, in that he ſayth, that the church being in ſinne, hath no power of the keies, when as the Pope, Cardinals, and all other of the prieſts and cleargie are in deadly ſinne, the which he ſayth is poſſible enough, this alſo doth appeare in his treatiſe vppon the Church, in his firſt errour as touching the miniſters of the Church.

The power of the keies of the Church.

Sixtly he erreth touching the Church, for as much as through contempt he doth not feare excommunication. This doth notoriouſly appeare by his owne doings, in that he did contemne and deſpiſe the Apoſtolike and ordinary cenſure, and in all the Apoſtolike excommunications & iniunctions he hath borne himſelfe vpon the diuine commandements, and in contempt of the keyes to the ſetting out of his hypocriſie, he hath ſaid maſſe all the wayes betweene this and the citie of Prage, and therby hath prophanate the proceſſe and authoritie of the Church.

Excommunication.

Seuenthly he erreth againe, as touching the Church, becauſe he kepeth not the inſtitutions & inueſtitures thereof, but holdeth opinion that euery man hath authority to inueſt & appoint any man to the cure of ſoules. This is euident by his owne doings. For ſo much as many in the kingdome of Boheme, by their defenders and fauourers, or rather by himſelfe were appoynted and put into pariſh churches, the which they haue long ruled and kept, not being appoynted by the Apoſtolike ſea, neither yet by the ordinarie of the citie of Prage.

Inueſtitures

The office of preaching.

Eightly, he erreth as touching the Churche, in that he holdeth opinion, that a man being once ordained a Prieſt or a deacon cannot be forbidden or kept backe from the office of preaching, this is likewiſe manifeſt by his own doings, for ſomuch as he himſelfe could neuer be letted from preaching, neither by the Apoſtolick ſea, neither yet by the Archbiſhop of Prage.

Lupus agnũ accuſat quod turbarit fontem.

A heaping togeather of many greeuous crimes.

And to the intent that the ſayd John Hus, who is clothed in ſheepes clothing, & inwardly a rauing wolfe, may be the better knowen by his fruits, for the better information of you moſt reuerend fathers, I ſay, that from the firſt time ẏ he tooke in hand or went about to ſow hys errours and hereſies, ẏ which afterward he did in deede, he vnderſtanding and perceiuing himſelf to be withſtanded and gainſayde by the Germaines, which were in the vniuerſitie of Prage, for ſomuch as he coulde conclude nothing, becauſe they had 3. voyces, and he on hys parte, had but one onely voyce: he went about and brought to paſſe, and that by the ſecular power, that the Germaines ſhoulde haue but one voyce, and he and his partes 3. voyces, the which thing, when ẏ Germanes once perceiued, rather then they wold looſe or forſake any parte of their right, whych they had in voyces, or be in danger in theyr perſons, the which would then haue enſued vppon it, to ſaue themſelues, they wholy with one conſent agreed together to depart out of Prage, and by this meanes this ſolemne & famous vniuerſitie of Prage was made deſolate that had brought forth ſo many notable mẽ in diuers ſciences. Beholde this his firſt fruits which deuided that ſo famous vniuerſitie, for ſo muche as grapes are not gathered of thornes, neyther figs of brambles.

The departure of the Germaines from the vniuerſitie of Prage.

The 45. articles of Wickliffe.

Moreouer, when there were queſtiõs moued amongſt the deuines of the vniuerſitie of Prage vppon the 45. articles of John wickliffe, and that they had called a conuocation, and all the deuines of Boheme, for the Germaines were all ready departed, they concluded that euery one of thoſe Articles were either heretical, ſeditious, or els erroneous. He alone held the cõtrary opinion, ẏ none of thoſe articles were either hereticall, ſeditious, or erroneous, as afterward he did diſpute, holde, and teache in the common ſchooles of Prage, where by it is euidẽtly inough foreſene, that he doeth affirme thoſe articles of wickliffe, the whych are not onely condemned in England, but alſo by ẏ whole church, becauſe they were firſt inuented and ſet forth by the members of Antichriſt.

Moreouer, he being complained of to the Archbyſhop of Prage, ẏ he preached & ſet foorth certaine articles which were heretical, falſe and ſeditious, he was forbidden by the ſayd Archbiſhop to preach any more, and proceded againſt him, according to the canonicall ſanctions, the whych proceſſe is confirmed by the Apoſtolike ſea, and publiſhed as well in the courte of Rome, as wythout: the whych John Hus and his adherents haue diuers and manifold wayes violate & prophanate. And whoſoeuer did ſpeake againſt him, they were depriued of their benefices, and others placed in, which haue ruled, and yet do rule the ſaid churches, & the flockes pertaining to the ſame, not hauing any cure or charge of the ſoules cõmitted vnto them, neyther by the Apoſtolike ſea, neither yet by the ordinary of the place.

The office of preaching forbidden by the Archb.

Alſo as many, as well prieſts as lay men in the citie of Prage & kingdom of Boheme, which haue ſpoken againſt the doctrine of Hus, and the prophanation of the proceſſe aforeſaid, or at the leaſt not alowing the ſame, haue ſuffred moſt mortall hatred and perſecutions, and yet to thys day do ſuffer. But that at this preſent it is diſſimuled vntill the ende of the proceſſe againſt John Hus. wherefore if he be nowe let goe againe, without doubt they ſhall ſuffer great perſecution both in body and goodes, and throughout all the realm of Boheme, houſe ſhalbe againſt houſe, and this miſchiefe will creepe, yea ſodeinly ſpring vp throughout al Germany, and innumerable ſoules ſhalbe infected, ſo that there ſhall be ſuch perſecution of the cleargie and faithfull, as hath not bene ſince the time of the Emperor Conſtantine to this preſent day, for he ceaſeth not to mooue and ſtir vp the laity, againſt the clergy and faithfull chriſtians. And when any of the clergie would draw him away, or cal him from his hereſie, & for that cauſe doth forbid him to preach, that he doe not teach no hereſies: Then ſayeth he, and teacheth that the clergie doth that of enuie and malice, becauſe he rebuketh their vices and faultes: that is to ſay, their ſimonie and pride, and couetouſneſſe.

Inſurrectiõs feared in Boheme againſt the clergie.

Moreouer, hee ſtirreth vp the ſeculare princes againſt the prelates of churches, monaſteries, & vniuerſities, and generally againſt the whole clergy. Going about by thys meanes, he preacheth and teacheth that prelates and other men of the church ought not to haue any temporal goodes or poſſeſſions, but only to liue vppon almes. And by thys meanes he hath done already very much hurt, and auoided diuers and many Prelates, clearkes and Churches in the kingdome of Boheme and citie of Prage. For ſo muche as thereby they are already ſpoiled and robbed of their poſſeſſions. Yea, hee teacheth alſo that it is lawfull for the lay people wythout ſinne, to wythholde and keepe backe the tithes and oblations, or to geue the Church goodes to any other miniſter: all the ſeculare princes are greatly inclined hereunto, but ſpecially the laitie, who foloweth euery mã his owne will.

He hath generally to lay for himſelf all thoſe heretikes which do but very ſmally regard the eccleſiaſtical cenſures and hate the authority of the Romaine church, yea doe vtterly deteſt & abhorre the ſame, the which thing will more and more encreaſe, except it be effectually and manfully withſtand, and if he do by any meanes eſcape from the councel, he and his fauourers wil ſay that hys doctrine is iuſt and true, and that it is allowed by the authority of the vniuerſall ſacred Councell, and that all hys aduerſaries are wicked and noughty men, ſo that he would do more miſchief, then euer any hereticke did ſince the tyme of Conſtantinus Magnus.

Cayphas propheſied.

Wherefore moſt holy fathers prouide and take heede to your ſelues, and to the whole flocke, amongſt whome the holy Ghoſt hath placed you to rule the Churche of Chriſt, the whych he hathe purchaſed wyth his owne bloude, and whileſt the diſeaſe is new and freſh, helpe and remedye it, as well touching him which doth ſo infect and trouble the Church of God, as alſo concerning the occaſions, through the which he hath preſumed, & might doe the ſame: becauſe the Prelates do abuſe the eccleſiaſticall cenſures, & as well the Prelates as thoſe that are vnder them doe not keepe and obſerue the order of the churche whych is appoynted them by God, whereby it commeth to paſſe, that whyleſt they themſelues do walke the broken & vnknowne paths, their flocke falleth headlong into the ditch.

Maiſter Palletz lyeth, for the holy Ghoſt had no leaſure to come to that councell

Wherefore let our ſoueraigne Lord the Pope, and this moſt ſacred Councel ordaine and depute Commiſſioners, the which may examine the ſayd John Hus vpon all afore wrytten, and other thyngs in the preſence of them whych knowe the matter. Let there be alſo certaine Doctors and Maiſters appoynted to reade ouer and peruſe hys bookes which he hath written, whereof ſome are here preſent, that the churche may be ſpedily purged and cleanſed from theſe errours.

Upon this hys accuſation, they ordeined and appoynted 3. commiſſioners or iudges, that is to ſay, the patriark of Conſtantinople, and the byſhop of Caſtle, & the byſhop of Lybuſſe. The which prelates being thus deputed, hard the accuſation & the witnes which was brought in by certaine babling prieſtes of Prage, confirmed by theyr othes, & afterward recited the ſayd accuſation vnto the ſayd Hus in the priſone, at ſuche time as hys ague was feruent and extremely vpõ him.

I. Hus ſicke of an agew in priſon.

Uppon thys John Hus required to haue an aduocate to anſwer for hym, the whych was plainly and vtterly denied him. And the reaſon that the maſters Commiſſioners brought againſt it was this, that the plain canon doth forbid that any man ſhould be a defender of any cauſe of hys, which is ſuſpect of any kind of hereſy: The vanity and folly of the witneſſes was ſuche, that if in caſe they had not bene both the accuſers and iudges themſelues, there ſhuld haue neded no diſtinct confutation. I would haue reherſed the teſtimonies in thys place but that I knew them to to be ſuch, as the prudent and wiſe reader coulde not haue red without great tediouſnes. Howbeit ſome of them ſhal be declared, when we come to the proceſſe of hys iudgement.

I. Hus debarred of his aduocate.

Afterwarde, when John Huſſe had recouered lyttle ſtrength or health by the commandement of the three commiſſioners there was preſented vnto hym certaine Articles, many in number, which they ſayd they had gathered out of his booke which he made of the Churche: of whych articles ſome were forged and inuented by maiſter Palletz, & other ſome were gathered onely by halues, as ſhall be more plainly declared hereafter whẽ we come to ſpeake of the iudgement pronounced and geuen againſt the ſayd Hus.

Thus John Hus remained in the priſon of the couent of the Franciſcanes, vntill the wedneſday before Palme Sonday, and certaine appoynted to keepe hym, and in the meane ſeaſon to employ and ſpende his time wythall, he wrote certaine bookes: That is to ſay, of the ten commandements, dementes, of the loue and knowledge of God, of Matrimony, of Penaunce, of the three enemies of mankinde, of the prayer of our Lord, and of the Supper of our Lord.

The bookes which I. Hus wrote in priſon.

Pope Iohn fled out of Cōſtance

The ſame day Pope Iohn the 23, chaūged his apparell & conueyed himſelfe ſecretly out of Conſtance, fearing the iudgemēt by the which afterward he was depriued of his Papall dignitie, by meanes of moſt execrable & abhominable forfaites and doynges. This was the cauſe that Iohn Hus was trāſported and caried vnto an other priſon: for the Popes ſeruauntes which had the charge and keeping of Iohn Hus, vnderſtanding that their Maiſter was fled & gone, deliuered vp the keyes of the priſon vnto the Emperour Sigiſmund, and to the Cardinals, and followed their Maiſter the Pope. Then by the whole cōſent of the Councell, the ſayd Iohn Hus was put into the handes of the Byſhop of Conſtance, who ſent him to a Caſtle on the other ſide of the Riuer of Rhine, not very farre from Cōſtance, whereas he was ſhut vp in a Tower, with fetters on his legges, that he could ſcarſe walke in the day tyme, and at night hee was faſtened vp to a racke agaynſt the wall hard by his bed.

Noble men of Boheme labour for Iohn Hus.

In the meane ſeaſon certaine noble men and Gentlemen of Pole & Boheme, did al their indeuour to purchaſe his deliueraunce, hauing reſpect to the good renowne of all the Realme, the which was wonderfully defamed and ſlaundered by certaine naughty perſons. The matter was growne vnto this pointe, that all they which were in the towne of Conſtance, that ſeemed to beare any fauour vnto I. Hus, were made as mockyng ſtocks, and derided of all men, yea euen of the ſlaues and baſe people. wherfore they tooke counſell and cōcluded together to preſent their requeſt in writing vnto the whole Coūcell, or at the leaſt vnto the foure nations of Almaine, Italie, Fraunce, and England: this requeſt was preſented the 14. day of May. an. 1415. The tenour here enſueth.

¶The firſt ſchedule or Bill, whiche the nobles of Boheme deliuered vp to the Councell for the deliueraunce of Iohn Hus, the 14. day of May. Anno. 1415.

Moſt reuerēd Fathers and Lordes. The Nobles and Lordes of Boheme and Pole here preſent, by this their preſent writynges doe ſhew and declare vnto your Fatherly reuerences how that the moſt noble Kyng and Lord, the Lord Sigiſmund kyng of Romaines, alwayes Auguſtus kyng of Hungary, Croatia, Dalmatia, &c. hearyng of the great diſſention that was in the kyngdome of Boheme as heyre, Kyng and Lord ſucceſſour, willyng & myndyng to foreſee and prouide for his owne honour, he ſent theſe Noble men Maiſter wenceſlate de Duba and Iohn de Clum here preſent, that they would bryng and aſſure Maiſter Iohn Hus vnder the kyng his name and ſafe conduct. So that he would come to the ſacred generall Councell of Conſtance, vnder the ſafe conduct of the ſayd kyng, and the protection of the ſacred Empire, openly geuen and graunted vnto the ſayd Maiſter Iohn Hus, that hee might purge himſelfe and the kyngdome of Boheme from the ſlaunder that was rayſed vpon them, and there to make an open declaration of his Fayth to euery man that would lay any thyng to his charge. The which the ſayd Nobles with the forenamed Maiſter Iohn Hus haue performed and done, accordyng to the kynges commaundement.

The ſafe cōduct of the Emperor chalenged.

when as the ſayd Maiſter Iohn Hus was freely of his owne accorde come vnto Conſtance, vnder the ſayd ſafe conduct, & greuouſly impriſoned before he was heard, and at this preſent is tormented both with fetters and alſo with hunger and thirſt. Albeit that in tymes paſt at the Councell holden at Payſan. 1410. yeare of our Lord, the heretickes whiche were condemned, were ſuffered to remayne there at libertie, and to depart home freely: Notwithſtandyng this Maiſter Iohn Huſſe, neither beyng conuicted nor condemned, no not ſo much as once heard, is taken and impriſoned, when as neither any kyng or any Prince Elector, either any Embaſſadour of any Vniuerſitie was yet come or preſent. And albeit the Lord the Kyng, together with the Nobles and Lordes here preſent moſt inſtantly required and deſired, that as touchyng his ſafe conduct they would foreſee and haue reſpect vnto his honour. And that the ſayd Maiſter Iohn Hus might be openly heard, for ſo much as he would render and ſhew a reaſon of his fayth, and if he were found or conuicted obſtinately to affirme or maintayne any thyng agaynſt the truth or holy Scripture, that then he ought to correct and amend the ſame, according to the inſtruction and determination of the Councell: yet could hee neuer obtayne this.

The extremities Iohn Hus ſuffered in priſon

But the ſayd Maiſter Iohn Huſſe, notwithſtandyng all this, is moſt greuouſly oppreſſed with fetters and yrons, and ſo weakened with thinne and ſlender diete, that it is to be feared leaſt that his power and ſtrength beyng hereby conſumed and waſted, hee ſhould be put in daunger of his witte or reaſon.

And although the Lordes of Boheme here preſent are greatly ſlaundered, becauſe they ſeyng the ſayd Maiſter Iohn Hus, ſo to be tormēted and troubled contrary to the kyngs ſafe conduct, haue not by their letters put the kyng in mynde of his ſayd ſafe conduct, that the ſayd Lord and kyng ſhould not any more ſuffer any ſuch matters, for ſo much as they tend to the contempt and diſregard of the kingdome of Boheme, which frō the firſt originall and begynnyng, ſince it receaued the Catholicke fayth, it neuer departed or went away frō the obedience of yͤ holy Church of Rome: yet notwithſtandyng they haue ſuffered & borne all theſe thynges patiently hetherto, leaſt by any meanes occaſion of trouble or vexation of this ſacred Councell might ariſe or ſpryng therof.

Wherfore moſt reuerend fathers & Lordes: The Nobles and Lordes before named do wholy & moſt earneſtly deſire & require your reuerences here preſent, that both for the honour of the ſafe conduct of our ſayd Lord the kyng, & alſo for the preſeruation and encreaſe of the worthy fame and renowme both of the foreſayd Kyngdome of Boheme, & your own alſo, that you will make a ſhort end about the affayres of M. Iohn Hus: for ſo much as by the meanes of his ſtraite handling he is in great daunger by any lōger delay, euē as they do moſt ſpecially truſt vpō the moſt vpright conſciences & iudgementes of your fatherly reuerēces. But foraſmuch as moſt reuerēd fathers and Lordes, it is now come to the knowledge and vnderſtādyng of the Nobles & Lordes of Boheme here preſent, how that certaine backbiters and ſlāderers of the moſt famous kingdom of Boheme aforeſayd, haue declared & told vnto your reuerences how that the Sacrament of the moſt precious bloud of our Lord is caried vp & downe through Boheme in veſſels not cōſecrated or halowed, and that Coblers do now heare confeſſions & miniſter the moſt bleſſed body of our Lord vnto others: The Nobles therfore of Boheme here preſent require and deſire you that you will geue no credit vnto falſe promoters & tale tellers, for that as moſt wicked and naughty ſlaunderers & backbiters of yͤ kingdome aforeſaid, they do report & tel vntruthes: requiring alſo your reuerences, that ſuch ſlanderous perſons of the kingdome aforeſaid, may be named & knowne. And yͤ lord the king together with your reuerēces, ſhal well perceiue and ſee that the Lordes of Boheme will go about in ſuch maner to refell and put away the falſe & friuolous ſlaunders of thoſe naughty perſons, that they ſhall be aſhamed to appeare hereafter before the lord the kyng and your reuerences.

The confutation of certain ſlanders.

The Byſhop of Luthonis.

As ſoone as this their ſupplication was red, yͤ byſhop of Luthonis riſing vp ſaid. Moſt reuerend fathers I well perceiue and vnderſtand that the laſt part of this writing doth touch me, my familiars & frends, as though yͤ kingdom of Boheme were ſlaundered by vs. wherfore I deſire to haue time & ſpace of deliberation that I may purge my ſelfe from this crime that is laid againſt me. The principal of the counſel appointed him yͤ 17. day of May, at yͤ which day the lords of Boheme ſhould be preſent again, to heare both the aunſwer of the councell, and alſo the excuſe of the biſhop of Luthonis, yͤ which thing in dede was afterward performed: for the 17. day of May, which was the 4. day before the whitſontide they met there againe, where firſt of all a certaine biſhop in yͤ name of the whole councel anſwered by worde to the nobles of Boheme, the contentes of whoſe aunſwer may eaſely be knowen by the ſecōd ſupplication, which the Bohemiams put vp to yͤ councel. But firſt I haue here in theſe few wordes following, ſhewed how the biſhop Luthonis defended himſelfe agaynſt that which is before written.

¶The aunſwer of the Biſhop of Luthonis, to the laſt part of the ſupplication, which the nobles of Boheme preſented vnto the Councell.

The anſwer and accuſation of the Biſh. of Luthonis againſt Iohn Hus.

Moſt reuerend fathers and noble Lordes, as Peter de Mladoneywitz bacheler of Arte: in yͤ name of certain of the nobles of yͤ kingdome of Boheme in his writings, amongeſt other thyngs did propounde how that certaine ſlaunderers and backebiters of the ſayd kyngdome haue brought to the eares of your reuerēces, that the moſt precious bloud of Chriſt is caried vp and downe in Boheme in bottels, & that Coblers do heare confeſſions, and miniſter the body of Chriſt vnto others, wherupon moſt reuerend fathers and Lordes: Albeit that I together wyth the other prelates, doctors, maiſters and other innumerable catholikes of the ſayde kingdome, the whych doe deſire as much as in them lieth to defend the faith of Chriſt, haue laboured for the extirpation & rooting out of that moſt wicked and deteſtable ſect of wickliffes, which nowe (alas for ſorow) beginneth to ſpring and riſe in the ſayd kingdome, as it is well knowne. Notwythſtanding, here in thys my oration, not for any ſhame or reprofe, but for the honour of the kingdome aforeſayd, I haue propounded, and declared a certaine new ſect, whych is nowe lately ſprong vp in the ſayd kingdome, the folowers whereof do miniſter & communicate the ſacraments in many cities, townes, & places of the ſaid kingdom, vnder both kindes both of breade and wine, and doe conſtantly teache the common people bothe men and women that it is ſo to be cōmunicated, obſtinatly affirming the ſame, and that the clergy which do repugn or ſay nay vnto it, are to be counted church robbers, as by the wrytings of their aſſertions being directed and preſented hether, ſhall openly appeare.

Moreouer by the report and fame whych goeth here abroade, & by the wrytings which were ſent ouer vnto me, I haue propoūded that it came to my knowledge, that the bloud of Chriſt is caryed about in veſſels not conſecrated, approuing the foreſaide erroneous aſſertion of the wicleuiſts, that affirme it neceſſary for ſaluation, that the people ſhuld communicate vnder both kindes of bread and wine, and that it is neceſſary, as the body of Chriſt is caryed in the pixe or boxe, ſo the bloude of Chriſt ſhould be caryed in bottles, or other neceſſary veſſels from place to place, and ſpecially about the miniſtration of the ſick. Alſo I declared not of my ſelfe, but I hearde it to be declared by others, both great and credible perſons, that there was a certaine woman a folower of that ſecte, the which taking by violence the body of Chriſte out of a prieſts handes, did communicate vnto her ſelfe, and affirmed that all men oughte to doe ſo, if the Prieſts would denye them the Communion. And the ſame woman amongſt many other errours, of the whych ſhee was conuicted, did affirme that a good lay woman myght better conſecrate and geue abſolution, then an euill prieſt: affirming that an euill prieſt can neyther conſecrate nor abſolue. But I know that neyther I, neither any of my aſſiſtance in this matter haue broughte thys at any time into your eares, that coblers in the ſayde kingdome doe heare confeſſion, or miniſter the ſacrament of the body of Chriſt, as is alleaged by the ſayde Peter, in the behalfe of the ſayde ſupplicantes. Notwythſtanding, that we did feare if meanes were not founde to recounter or ſtoppe the offences before named, that thys would immediatly folow vpon it. Wherfore moſt reuerend fathers, leaſt that the kingdome mighte bee defamed any more by ſuch peſtiferous ſectes, and that the Chriſtian faith myght happen to be indaungered: with all reuerence and charity I do deſire you, euen by the bowels of mercy, of our Lord Ieſus Chriſte, that thys moſt ſacred Councel, would prouide ſome ſpeedy remedy for this kingdome, as touchyng the premiſſes.

Moreouer, whether be they backbiters and ſlanderers or wicked and falſe enuiers of the kingdome of Boheme, the which do let the errors aforeſaid, & many others more, which are ſowen by the wicleuiſts in the ſayd kingdome, and alſo els where, whych alſo both do labor and haue laboured for the extirpation and roting out of thoſe errours out of the kingdome aforeſayd, and as catholicke men, for the zeale of their faith haue manfully put forth themſelues againſt the maintainers of the ſayd errours or ſuch as doe maintaine and defend the teachers of thoſe errours. This anſwere I haue here preſented before your reuerences alwaies, wholy ſubmitting my ſelf and aſſiſtance vnto your iudgement, and to the definition of this moſt ſacred councell of Conſtance.

The byſhop of Luthonius anſwere confuted.

THe day before Whitſontide, the nobles of Boheme dyd confute this theyr aunſwer made 2. dayes before in the Councel to their former wryting, as here foloweth: Moſt reuerend fathers and Lordes, for ſo much as vpon thurſday it was anſwered in the behalfe of your reuerences to the requeſts of the nobles and Lords of Boheme, that the ſayde Lordes were miſinformed of diuers poynts contained in the declaration of their ſaid bil: therfore the foreſayd Lords haue now determined and decreed to declare their former propounded requeſts more at large vnto your reuerences, not minding hereby to argue or reproue your fatherly wiſedomes and circumſpections, but that youre reuerences (theyr deſires being partly on thys behalf fulfilled) might the more effectuouſly & diſtinctly diſcerne and iudge as touching thys matter.

And firſt of all, where as the Lordes alleaged and ſayd how that maiſter Iohn Hus was come hether vnto Conſtance, freely of his owne good will, vnder the ſafe conduct of the Lorde the king, and the protection of the ſacred Empire: It is aunſwered on the behalfe of your reuerences, how that the ſaid Lords are miſinformed, as touching the ſafe conduict, and that you haue vnderſtand by ſuch as are worthy credit, that the frends and fauorers of the ſayd M. Iohn Hus, did firſt procure and get his ſafe conduicte 15. dayes after hys impriſonment.

The byſhops do quarell about the ſafe conduct of Iohn Hus.

The Lords of Boheme, and ſpecially the Lorde Iohn de Clum heere preſent, whome thys matter doeth chiefely touche, doeth aunſwere, that not onely the 15. day after, but euen the very ſame day that Iohn Hus was apprehended and taken, when as our reuerende father the Pope, in the preſence of all his Cardinals, demaunded of M. Iohn de Clum, whether M. Iohn Hus had any ſafeconduict from the king hys ſonne: he anſwered, moſt holy father & Cardinals, knowe ye that he hath a ſafe conduict, and when he was aſked the queſtion againe the ſecond time, he anſwered in like maner.

The ſafe cōduct of Iohn Hus obteyned and ſhewed before the impriſonment of Iohn Hus.

Yet notwithſtādyng none of them required to haue the ſafeconduict ſhewed vnto them: and againe the thirde day following, the Lord Iohn de Clum complained vnto our Lord the Pope, how notwythſtanding the ſafe conduict of oure ſoueraigne Lorde the king, he detained and kept M. Iohn Hus as priſoner, ſhewing the ſaid ſafeconduict vnto many. And for a further truth herein, he referreth hymſelf vnto the teſtimonies and witneſſes of diuers Earles, Byſhops, knightes, gentlemen, and famous Citizens of the city of Conſtance, the whych altogether at this preſent did ſee the ſaid ſafe conduict, and heard it read, whereupon the ſayde Iohn de Clum is ready to binde hymſelfe vnder what penalty ſhalbe required, euidently to proue and cōfirme that which hee hath promiſed, who ſoeuer ſay to the contrary.

Moreouer, the Lordes of Boheme referre themſelues vnto the knowledge of certaine Princes electors & other Princes, Byſhops, & many other noble men, which were preſent before the kings maieſtie, where and when as the ſaid ſafe conduct was graunted and geuen out by the ſpeciall commaundement of our ſayd Lord the king.

Hereby your fatherly reuerences may vnderſtand and perceiue that the ſayd Lordes of Boheme are not euill informed as touching the ſaide ſafe conducit: But rather they which by ſuch reportes haue falſly and vntruely informed your reuerēces. And firſt of al they haue offended agaynſt the Lord our king, and hys chauncellours. Secondarely, againſt the Lords and nobles of Boheme, as thoughe we had priuely & by ſtealth, purchaſed the ſayde ſafe conduict. Wherefore the Lords aforeſaid moſt humbly require & deſire your reuerēces that you wil not ſo lightly beleue ſuch as be not worthy of credit, but rather hearing the contrary part, to labour and diſcuſſe that the trueth may the more euidently appeare.

The byſhops of the councell falſly enformed touching the ſafe conduct of Iohn Hus.

Secondly, where as the Lordes aforeſayde, alleaging how M. Iohn Hus, cōming vnto Conſtance, of his owne free will, being neither condemned nor heard, was impriſoned, your reuerences haue made aunſwer therunto, that he the ſayd M. Iohn Hus in the time of Alexander 5. was infamed and ſlandered vppon certaine hereſies, and thereupon cited perſonally to apeare in the court of Rome, and there was heard by hys procurers.

Iohn Hus, impriſoned before he was either condemned or heard.

And for ſomuch as he refuſed obſtinatly to appeare, he was excommunicated, in the which excommunication he continued (as you affirme) by the ſpace of fiue yeares, for the whych he was iudged, and counted not onely a ſimple and plaine hereticke, but an hereſiarke, that is to ſay, an inuenter and ſower of newe and ſtraunge hereſies, and that he comming towarde Conſtance, did preache by the way openly. To this the Lordes aforeſayd do aunſwere, that as touching hys ſlaunder and citation, they can affirme nothing, but by report. But as touching that he dyd not perſonally appeare, they ſay they haue heard both him ſelfe, and diuers other credible perſones ſay: yea euen the moſt famous Prince Wenceſlaus king of Boheme, and almoſt all the whole nobilitie is witnes, that he would willingly haue appeared at Rome, or els where, if he myghte ſafely haue commen thether, and that deadly enmitie had not letted: and moreouer his procurers, which he ſent vnto the court of Rome, alleaging reaſonable cauſes for hys non apparance, ſome of them were caſt into pryſon, and others very euill intreated.

Alexander the 5. The anſwere touching the citation of I. Hus to the court of Rome.

I. Hus his procurers euill entreated at Rome.

As for the excommunication which he hath ſo long ſuſtained, they haue heard him often ſay, that he hath not reſiſted againſt the ſame by contumacye, or ſtubberneſſe, but vnder euident appellation, and therupon referreth himſelf vnto the Actes of his cauſes, whyche were pleaded in the court of Rome, wherin all this is more largely contained, the which your reuerences may euidently perceiue and ſee in this our preſent publike tranſumpt, which wee haue offred vnto you vpon certaine poynts aforeſayd.

I. Hus falſly reported to preach openly at Conſtance.

As cōcerning his preaching, wherwithal his enemies do report and charge, that M. John Hus did preach openly in the Citie of Conſtaunce: The Lordes aforeſaide, and ſpecially the Lord John de Clum here preſent do anſwere that hee hath continually lodged wyth the ſayde M. John Hus here in Conſtaunce, and that whoſoeuer they be, that haue bene ſo bolde, or dare be ſo bolde to ſay & affirme that M. John Hus had preached (as is premiſed) or yͤ whyche leſſe is, ſince the time of his comming vnto thys citie, euen vnto the very day & time of hys captiuitie and impryſonment, that he went but one ſtep out of the houſe of his lodging, that the ſaid Lord John de Clum, will and is content to binde himſelfe with any ſuche, as ſhall affirme the ſame, vnder what penalty ſo euer it be, of money or otherwyſe, that which hee hath falſly reported vnto your reuerences, he ſhal neuer be able iuſtly & truely to affirme and proue.

I. Hus falſely charged to preach comming to the councell.

Thirdly, whereas your reuerences do ſay, that you do not vnderſtād or know, what the Lords do meane, by the herettickes condemned, at the councel holden at Piſa, whether the mocking or deriding yͤ Pope, whoſe ambaſſadors came thither for vnitie or concorde, the which were ſuffered and gently entreated, as theyr Lordes were moſt enclined vnto vnitie and peace, or els that they did vnderſtande or meane yͤ perticuler heretickes, which were there condemned adioyning therunto: that the heretickes alſo comming vnto the councell, vnder the pretence of that vnitie, ſhould be gently handled and entreated. &c. Reuered fathers and Lordes, whether they be counted the firſte, or that they be thought the ſecond or laſt, yͤ Lordes aforeſaid require none other thing, but that the ſaid M. John Hus may vſe ſuche liberty as they vſed: forſomuch as he came willingly vnto this moſt ſacred cōucel, not for any other purpoſe, but onely publikely to recogniſe his faith. And in what poynt ſoeuer he ſhall ſeeme to vary from the worde of God, and the vnion of the holy mother the church, that in that poynte he will willingly be vnited and reconciled againe therevnto, and not only himſelf, but alſo his fauorers and adherents, he would moue and prouoke therunto: of whom the greater number are in the kingdō of Boheme. Alſo he is come hether that he might purge and cleare the noble kingdome of Boheme, from the ſiniſter and euil ſlaunder which was raiſed vpon it.

I. Hus had many welwillers in Bohemia.

Laſt of all moſt reuerend fathers & Lordes, for ſo much as your reuerences haue moſt fauourably anſwered vnto the principal requeſt made by the Lords aforeſayd, that the proceſſe of M. John Hus through Gods helpe ſhoulde be determined and ended wͭal expedition and gentlenes: The Lordes aforeſayd do render moſt harty thanks vnto your reuerences, and when ſoeuer theyr deſire by Gods helpe ſhall come to the ende or effecte long wiſhed or looked for, they wil not onely here, but alſo before the whole kingdom of Boheme, and in all other places whereſoeuer they come render moſt immortall thankes vnto your reuerences for euer.

¶ Thys declaration of the nobles of Boheme aboue prefixed, may ſerue not only to the cōfutation of the biſhop Luthonius thys Bohemian, but alſo againſt the cauillacions of Alanus Copus Anglus. Dial. 6. pag. 929. touching the ſafe conduct of John Hus, wherof ſufficiently before hath ben ſayd, vide ſupra, pag. 596.

When as the noble men of Boheme by lōg time could receiue no anſwer of thoſe ſupplications, whych they had alredy put vp, they determined yͤ laſt day of May following by an other ſupplication being put vp vnto the principals of the councell, to entreat that John Hus myght be deliuered out of priſon, and defend his owne cauſe openly: they alſo put the teſtimonial of the biſhop of Nazareth, as touching John Hus. The copy wherof is expreſſed in the beginning of this hyſtorie, word by word.

Vide ſupra. pag. 597.

¶ Another ſupplication of the nobles of Boheme.

An other ſupplication of the Bohemians for Iohn Hus.

MOſt reuerend fathers and Lordes in Chriſt, of late there was a ſupplication put vp vnto your reuerences on the behalfe of the Lordes & nobles of Boheme, and the nation of Pole, wherin they moſt humbly deſired your reuerences to conſider how the informations which were put vp vnto your reuerences, by the enemies of M. Iohn Hus, were inſufficient. And with reuerence be it ſpoken, in many poynts vntrue, as in the ſafeconduict graunted by the kings maieſtie, and alſo in other articles, as more plainely appeareth in the Scedule, which was then offred vnto you: vppon the whych ſayde Scedule and other things at that preſence being put vppe, they coulde not as yet receiue no aunſwere. Wherefore the Lordes aforeſayde, moſte humbly require your fatherly reuerences, that it would pleaſe you to conſider the ſaid ſupplication, and to geue ſome anſwere to the Lordes aforeſayd, therupon and ſpecially hauing reſpect vnto the great iniuries and griefs which are done vnto the ſayd M. Iohn Hus, the which may be vnderſtād and knowen by the Scedule aforeſayde, that you will mercifully conſider and foreſee, that all thoſe griefes and euils ſo farre different from all brotherly loue and charitie are done vnto hym by his enemies euen for very malice and hatred.

To the intent therefore that the rancour and malice may be confounded and ouerthrowne, and the plaine and euident truth appeare, it may pleaſe your fatherly reuerēces to vnderſtand that it is notified and knowen vnto the Barones, Nobles, Citizens, Clergie and Laitie of the kingdome of Boheme, that M. Iohn Hus in all his actes and doings as well Scholaſticall as Eccleſiaſticall, and ſpecially in all his publike and open ſermons, he hathe made and hathe accuſtomed to make theſe maner of proteſtations, the which without any thing to the contrary, hee hath alwaies endeuoured to haue them ſtrong and firme, as by this his proteſtation here folowing, which he made about the determination of a certaine queſtion, it may moſt euidently and plainely appeare vnto euery man which would beholde and looke vpon the ſame: the forme and tenour whereof here followeth, and is ſuch.

The proteſtation of I. Hus.

FOr ſo much as aboue all things I doe deſire the honor of God, the profite of the holy Churche, and that I my ſelfe may be a faithfull member of our Lorde Ieſu Chriſt, which is the heade and husband of the holy Church whych hee hath redemed: Therefore as heretofore oftentimes I haue done, euen ſo now againe I make this proteſtation, that I neuer obſtinately ſayd, or heereafter will ſay any thing that ſhall be contrary vnto the truth and verity: and moreouer that I haue alwayes holden, do hold, and firmely deſire for to holde the very true and infallible trueth and veritie, ſo that before that I would defende and maintaine any erroure contrary therunto, I would rather chuſe by the hope and help of the Lorde to ſuffer extreeme puniſhment, euen vnto death: yea, and thorowe the helpe of God I am ready, euen to offer this my miſerable lyfe vnto death for the law of Chriſt, the which I do beleue euery part and parcell thereof to be geuen and promulgate for the ſaluation of mankinde, by the counſaile and determination of the moſt holy Trinitie, and the ſaintes of God. &c.

Vid. in priore edit. pag. 207.

By the whiche his proteſtation, and alſo other proteſtations by the ſayde M. Iohn Hus, being well obſerued and noted, it may be eaſily gathered and known that his whole intent and purpoſe was and is, that hee neither would nor will haue ſpoken or written any thing in hys bookes, treatiſes, doctrines, or publike ſermones, or els to haue affirmed any articles, the whyche willingly and wittingly he did vnderſtand or know to be either erroneous, offenſiue, ſeditious, hereticall, or offending the godly eare. All beit that theſe and ſuche like things are falſely imputed vnto hym by hys enemies. But it hath alwayes bene his chiefe intent and purpoſe, and ſo is, that euery poynt, concluſion or article contained in his bookes or articles, to haue put and affirmed them to thys ende, according to the truth of the Goſpell, the holy Doctors and wryters vppon the holy Scriptures, and to that end and purpoſe, as is before expreſſed in his proteſtations: and if in any poynt, he ſhoulde be founde to varie or goe aſtray, or that he were not well vnderſtanded of others by like information to be informed, vnderſtanded, corrected and amended, and that he wil by no meanes ſuſtaine or defend any maner of article againſt the holy Churche of Rome, or the Catholicke faith.

Wherefore moſt reuerende fathers, the premiſſes notwythſtanding, his ennemies, through the extreeme hatred whych they beare vnto him, hath picked and taken out by piece meale certain articles out of the booke of M. Iohn Hus, reiecting and not looking vppon the allegations and reaſons, neither hauing any relation vnto the diſtinction of their equiuocations, haue compounded and made thereof certaine falſe and fained articles againſte him, to thys ende, that all charitie and loue being ſette aparte, they might the better ouerthrow hym, and bryng hym vnto death contrary vnto the ſafe conducte vppon good and iuſt occaſion openly aſsigned, and geuen vnto the ſayde maiſter Iohn Hus, by the moſt noble Prince the Lorde Sigiſmund king of the Romanes and of Hungarie, for his iuſt defence, againſt all the friuolous accuſations and aſſaultes of the ennemies, not onely of the ſayd M. Iohn Hus, but alſo of the famous kingdome of Boheme, and for the quiete appeaſing of all ſuch tumultes and rumours, riſing and ſpringing in the ſayde kingdome of Boheme, or elſe where: the auoiding of which moſt perillous vprours, the ſaide king of Romaines doth greatly deſire and wiſh, as the right heire and ſucceſſour of the ſayd kingdome.

Whereuppon the Barons and Nobles aforeſayde, moſt humbly deſire and require, the premiſſes being conſidered, and reſpect had vnto the great infamie and ſlaunder which may happen by the premiſſes vnto the ſayde kingdome and inhabitants thereof, that you will put to your handes, and take ſome order & meane, that maiſter Iohn Hus may be diſtinctly hearde by ſome famous men, deuines already deputed, or otherwiſe to be appoynted vpon all and ſingulare ſuch articles as ſhall be laide vnto him to declare his owne minde and intent, and alſo the minde of the doctours alleadged for his purpoſe, with the manifolde diſtinctions and equiuocations: in the which the drawers out of the moſt part of his articles haue alſo made equiuocations, that ſo according vnto the diſpoſition of witneſſes, of the which a great number of them are and haue a long time bene his mortall ennemies, that at the friuolous inſtigation of his enemies, when hee was miſerably deteined priſoner, that he ſhould not be condemned vnheard. For ſo muche as by the ſayde declarations your fatherly reuerences might be the more better informed of the trueth, hee hymſelfe is ready alwaies to ſubmit himſelfe vnder the determination of thys moſt ſacred councell. For your reuerences, by the craftie and faiined perſwaſions of his ennemies, are thus informed, that M Iohn Hus hath bene vncurably obſtinate by a long time in moſt perillous articles, the which your reuerences may nowe plainely perceiue to be vntrue, and for the more euidence heerein to be ſhewed, there is preſented vnto your reuerences an inſtrumente of publike recognition of the moſte reuerend father in Chriſte, the Lorde Nicholas Biſhop of Nazareth and Inquiſitour of hereſies, ſpecially appoynted by the Apoſtolike ſea in the dioces of Prage, the which by your reuerences is more diligently to be hearkened vnto.

The councell euil informed againſt Iohn Hus.

Wherefore it may pleaſe your fatherly reuerences to commaund the ſayd M Iohn Hus neither conuicted nor condemned, to be taken and brought out of his bondes and chaines, in the which he is nowe moſt greeuouſly deteined and kept, and to put him into the hands of ſome reuerend Lordes, Byſhops, or commiſſioners appoynted or to be appoynted by this preſent councell. That the ſayd M. Iohn Huſſe may ſomewhat be releued and recouer againe his health, and be the more diligently and commodiouſlye examined by the Commiſſioners: and for the more aſſurance, the Barons and Nobles aforeſayd of the kingdome of Boheme, will prouide moſt ſure and good ſureties, the which wil not breake their fidelity and faith for any thing in the worlde. Which alſo ſhall promiſe in his behalfe, that hee ſhall not flee or departe out of their handes, vntill ſuche time as the matter be fully determined by the ſayd Commiſſioners. In the execution of the which promiſes wee haue determined to prouide and foreſee vnto the fame and honour of the ſaid kingdome of Boheme, and alſo to the ſafeconducte of the moſte worthy Prince, the king of Romaines, leaſt that the enemies and detractours of the honoure and fame of the kingdome aforeſayd, might not a little ſlander and reproue the ſaid Lordes, pretending and ſhewing forth hereafter, that they had made vnreaſonable or vnlawfull requeſts: for the withſtāding of which miſchiefe, we require your fatherly reuerences, that you will decree, & moſt graciouſly conſent that this our petition and ſupplication may be drawen out againe by your Notarie, and reduced into a publicke forme and order.

The nobles required that Iohn Hus not being conuicte nor cōdemned, ſhoulde be deliuered out of priſon.

A petition for M. Iohn Huſſes deliuerance out of priſon.

After this ſupplication was read before the deputies of the 4. nations, the Patriarche of Antioch anſwered in the name of them all vnto euery article of the ſayd ſupplication, but it was done in few wordes.

First, as touching the proteſtation of Iohn Hus, whether it be true or falſe, it ſhalbe made euident in the proceſſe of his cauſe. Moreouer, wheras they ſay that the aduerſaries of Iohn Hus hath peruerſly drawen certaine thinges out of his bookes, that alſo the matter it ſelfe ſhall declare in the end. where as if it ſhalbe found & decreed that Iohn Hus is vniuſtly & vntruly accuſed, that thē it ſhal come to paſſe, yͤ his aduerſaries ſhall incurre perpetuall ignominy and ſlaunder. But as touching ſureties, albeit there might be a thouſand put in or boūd, yet can it not by any meanes be, that the deputies of the Councell with a ſafe conſcience may receiue or take them in this mans cauſe, vnto whome there is no faith or credite to be geuē. Howbeit thus much they wil do, vpon the 5. day of Iune next, Iohn Hus ſhall be brought againe vnto Conſtance, and there haue free libertie to ſpeake his minde before the Councell, & that they wold louingly and gently heare him: but the matter in the ende fell out farre contrary to thys promiſe.

The anſwer of the councell to the ſupplication

I. Hus in no caſe muſt be baled.

No credite to be kept with an heretique.

The ſame day the ſaide Barons and Lordes preſented a ſupplication of thys tenour vnto the Emperor: Vnto the moſt highe and mighty Prince, the Lorde Sigiſmund king of the Romaines, alwaies Auguſtus king of Hungarie, Croatia, and Dalmatia, our moſt gracious Lord faithful & true ſeruice in al things, and at all times. Moſt noble Prince and gracious Lord, we ſignifie vnto your worthineſſe, that we all together with one minde, conſent and accord haue deliuered vp vnto the reuerend fathers and Lordes, the deputies of the 4 nations, and to the whole ſacred Councel of Conſtance, this our ſupplication here vnder wrytten. as reaſonable, iuſt, and worthy of conſideration, the tenour wherof here followeth word by word, and is this.

Supplication to the Emperour Sigiſmund.

¶ The copie of the ſupplication, which was preſented vnto the deputies of the councel, is before written, whereunto this which followeth was annexed.

WHerefore we moſt humbly require and deſire your princely maieſtie, that both for the loue of iuſtice, and alſo of the fame and renowme of that moſte famous kingdome of Boheme, whereof wee acknowledge you vndoubtedly the true Lorde and heire ſucceſſour, and alſo foreſeeing vnto the liberty of your ſafeconduct, that you wil with your fauourable countenance, beholding theſe moſt reaſonable and iuſt ſupplications, which we haue put vp to the Lordes aforeſayd, put to your helping hand toward the ſayd moſt reuerend fathers and Lordes, that they will effectually heare vs, in this our moſt iuſt petition, which we haue offered vp to them, as is aforeſaide: leaſt that the enemie of the renowme and honour of the famous kingdome of Boheme, and ſuch as oure ſlaunderers alſo hereafter may detracte and ſclaunder vs, that wee ſhould make vnreaſonable and vnlawfull requeſts vnto the ſayde reuerend fathers and Lordes, and therefore we required and deſired of them that it would pleaſe them to decre by ſetting to their publicke hand & ſeale to authoriſe our ſaid ſupplication. Likewiſe we do moſt hartily require your highnes, that you would vouchſafe in like maner to geue vs your teſtimonie of the premiſes.

The Barons ſupplication to the king for I. Hus.

But what anſwere the Emperor made heereunto, we could neuer vnderſtand or know, but by the proceſſe of the matter a man may eaſily iudge, that thys good Emperour was brought and lead euen vnto thys poynt, through the obſtinate miſchiefe of the cardinals and biſhops, to breake and falſify his promiſe and faith, whych hee had made and promiſed, and this was their reaſon, whereby he was driuen thereunto: that no defence coulde or might be geuen either by ſafe conducte, or by any other meane vnto hym, whych was ſuſpected or iudged to be an hereticke. But by the Epiſtles and letters of Iohn Hus, a man may eaſily iudge: what the kings minde was. Now we will procede in the hiſtorie.

The king forced by the importunity of the Cardinals to breake promiſe.

The 5. day of Iune, the Cardinals, Byſhops, and the reſt of the prieſts, al that were almoſt in Conſtance, aſſembled to a great number, at the Couent of the Franciſcanes in Conſtance, and there it was commaunded, that before Iohn Hus ſhoulde be brought forth, in hys abſence they ſhould rehearſe the witneſſes and articles, which they had ſlaunderouſly gathered out of his bookes: the whych articles with Iohn Huſſes anſwer we will hereafter repeate. By chance there was then preſent a certaine Notary, named Peter Mladoniewitz, the whych bare great loue and amity vnto the ſaid Hus, who aſſoone as he perceiued that the Biſhops and cardinals were already determined and appoynted to condemne the ſayde articles in the abſence of Iohn Hus, hee went withall ſpeede vnto maiſter Wenceslate de Duba, and Iohn of Clum, & tolde them al the matter: who incontinent made report therof to the Emperour: who vnderſtanding their intent, ſent Lewes the Countie Palantine of Heydelberge, and the Lord Frederick, Burgraue of Nuremberge, to ſignify vnto them, whych ruled the councel, that nothing ſhould be reſolued or done in the caſe of Iohn Hus, before that it wer firſt heard with equity: and that they ſhould ſend him all ſuch articles as were laid againſt the ſayd Hus, which were either falſe or hereticall, & he would do ſo much, that the ſaid articles ſhoulde be examined by good and learned men. Then according to the Emperors will, the iudgement of the principals of the Councell was ſuſpended, vntill ſuche time as Iohn Hus were preſent.

The miſchieuous counſell of the popiſh band

The craftie coūſaile of the papiſtes ſtopped by the Emperour.

In the meane ſeaſon theſe gentlemen, maſter of Dube and of Clum, did geue vnto the two Princes whych the Emperor had ſent, certaine ſmal treatiſes which the ſayde Hus had made, out of yͤ which they had drawn certain articles to preſent vnto them which ruled the councel, vnder this condition, that they would render them againe, when they ſhould demand them. The intent & meaning of theſe Barons was, yͭ by thys meanes the aduerſaries of Iohn Hus might yͤ more eaſily be reproued, yͭ which of a naughty and corrupt conſcience, had picked out corrupt ſentēces out of the ſaid bookes of Iohn Hus. The bookes were deliuered vnto the Cardinals and Byſhops, and that done, Iohn Hus was brought forth, and the Princes whiche were ſent by the Emperour, departed backe agayne. After they ſhewed the bookes vnto Iohn Hus, and he cõfeſſed openly before the whole aſſembly that hee had made them, & that he was ready, if there were any fault in thẽ, to amend the ſame.

I. Hus forced to keepe ſilence by outrage of the biſhops and prieſtes.

Now harken a litle to the holy proceedynges of theſe reuerẽd fathers, for here happened a ſtraunge & ſhamefull matter. With much a do they had ſcarſly read one article, & brought forth a few witneſſes vpõ the ſame agaynſt him, but as hee was about to apen his mouth to aunſwere, all this mad heard or flocke begã ſo to cry out vpon him, that he had not leaſure to ſpeake one onely worde. The noyſe & trouble was ſo great and ſo vehemẽt, that a man might well haue called it a brute or noyſe of wild beaſts, and not of men, much leſſe was it to be iudged a cõgregatiõ of men gathered together, to iudge and determine ſo graue and waightie matters. And it it happened that the noyſe and cry did neuer ſo litle ceaſe, that hee might aunſwere any thyng at all, out of the holy Scriptures or Eccleſiaſticall Doctours, by and by he ſhoulde here theſe goodly replyes vpon him: That maketh nothyng to the purpoſe.

The like practiſe in theſe latter dayes was vſed at Oxford againſt the godly fathers.

An outragious councel.

Beſide all this, ſome did outrage in wordes agaynſt him, & other ſome ſpitefully mocked him: ſo ẏ he ſeing him ſelfe ouerwhelmed with this rude and barbarous noyſes & cryes, & that it profited nothing to ſpeake, he determined finally with himſelfe to hold his peace & keepe ſilence. Frõ that tyme forward all the whole route of his aduerſaries, thought that they had wonne ẏ battaile of him, and cryed out altogether, now he is dũme, now he is dumme. This is a certaine ſigne and token, that he doth conſent & agree vnto theſe his errours. Finally, the matter came to this poynt, that certaine of the moſt moderate & honeſt among thẽ, ſeing this diſorder, determined to proceede no further, but that all ſhould be deferred & put of vntil an other time. Through their aduiſe the Prelates & others departed frõ the Councell for that preſent, & appointed to meet there agayne the morrow after to proceede in iudgement.

A great Eclipſe of the Sunne.

They wẽt forth with ſwordes & ſtaues, as it had bene to take a theiſe.

The next day, which was the vij. of Iune, on whiche day the ſunne was almoſt wholy eclipſed, ſomwhat after about vij. of the clocke, this ſame flocke aſſembled agayne in the cloiſter of the Friers Minors, and by their appointment Iohn Hus was brought before them, accompanyed wͭ a great number of armed men. Thether went alſo the Emperor, whom the gentlemen, maſter of Dube, & Clum, and the Notarie named Peter, which were great friendes of the ſayd Hus, did folow to ſee what the end woulde be. When they were come thether, they heard that in the accuſation of Michael de Cauſis, they reade theſe wordes folowing: Iohn Hus hath taught the people diuers and many errours both in the chapell of Bethleem, and alſo in many other places of the Citie of Prage, of the which errours ſome of them he hath drawen out of Wickleffs bookes, and the reſt he hath forged and inuented of his owne head, and doth maintaine the ſame very obſtinately and ſtifly.

Peter and Iohn, follow Chriſt into the biſhops houſe.

Matter made againſt I. Hus

Falſe witnes againſt Iohn Hus

Firſt, that after the conſecration and pronunciatiõ of the words, in the ſupper of the Lord, there remaineth materiall bread, and this is proued by the witneſſe of Iohn Protiwate pariſhe Prieſt of ſ. Clements in Prage, Iohn Pecklow preacher at ſ. Giles in Prage, Beniſe preacher in the caſtle of Prage, Andrew Brod, Chanon of Prage, and diuers other Prieſtes. Unto thys Iohn Hus takyng a ſolemne othe, anſwered that he neuer ſpake any ſuch worde, but thus much he did graunt, that at what tyme the Archbiſhop of Prage forbad hym to vſe any more that terme or word bread, he could not allow the biſhops commaundement: for ſo much as Chriſt in the 6. chapter of Iohn doth oftentimes name himſelfe the bread of angels, which came downe from heauẽ, to geue life vnto the whole world. But as touching materiall bread, hee neuer ſpake any thing at all. Then the Cardinall of Cambray taking a certaine bill in hys hand, which he ſayd he receiued the day before, ſayd vnto Iohn Hus, will you put any vniuerſalities a parte rei. i. as touching the thing? When Iohn Hus aunſwered, that he wold, becauſe S. Anſelme, and diuers other had ſo done, the Cardinall did proceed to gather his argument in this maner.

The aunſwer of Iohn Hus.

Naming of bread forbid by the archb.

The Cardinall ſophiſticateth with I. Hus.

It followeth then, ſayde he, that after the conſecration is made, there remaineth the ſubſtance of materiall bread, & that I do thus proue: That the conſecration being done, whiles the bread is chaunged & tranſubſtanciated into the body of Chriſt, as you ſay, either there doeth remaine the common ſubſtaunce of materiall bread, or contrariwiſe. If the ſubſtance do remaine, then is our purpoſe at an end. If contrariwiſe, then doth it folow, that by the deciſion of the ſingularitie, the vniuerſall ceaſeth any more to be, Iohn Hus anſwered, truely it ceaſeth to be in this ſingular materiall bread, by meanes of this trãſubſtantiatiõ, whẽ as it is changed & tranſubſtanciated into the body of Chriſt: but notwithſtanding in other ſingularities, it is made ſubiect.

The diſputation of the Engliſh mẽ.

Then a certaine Engliſh man by ẏ argument woulde proue out of the firſt poſitiõ, that there remained materiall bread. Then ſayd Iohn Hus, that is a childiſh argument, which euery boy in the ſchooles knoweth, and thereuppon gaue a ſolution. Then an other Engliſh man wold proue, that there remained materiall bread in the ſacrament, becauſe the breade after the conſecration was not anihilate. Unto whom Iohn Hus anſwered: Although, ſaid he, that the breade be not anihilate or conſumed, yet ſingularly it ceaſeth there to be by meanes of the alteration of hys ſubſtance into the body of Chriſt. Here an other Engliſh mã, ſtepping forth, ſayd: Iohn Hus ſeemeth vnto me, to vſe the ſame kinde of crafty ſpeach, which Wickleffe vſed, for hee graunted all theſe things, which this man hath done, & yet in very deede was fully perſwaded that material bread remained in the ſacrament after the cõſecration. The whych when Iohn Hus had denied, ſaying that he ſpake nothing but only ſincerely & vprightly, according to his conſcience, the Engliſh man proceeded to demaunde of hym againe, whether the body of Chriſte be totally and really in the ſacrament of the altar. Wherunto Iohn Hus anſwered: verely, I do thincke that the body of Chriſt is really and totally in the ſacrament of the alter, the which was borne of the virgine Mary, ſuffered, died, & roſe againe, and ſitteth on the right hande of God the father almighty. When they had diſputed a good while to and froe, as touching vniuerſalities, the Engliſh man whych before would proue that material bread remained in the ſacrament, becauſe that the bread was not anihilate, interrupting and breaking theyr talke, ſayd: to what purpoſe is this diſputation vpon vniuerſalities, the which maketh nothing to the purpoſe, as touching faith: for as farre as I can perceiue or here, this man holdeth a good opinion, as touching the Sacrament of the aultare.

An Engliſh man.

Iohn Hus agreeth with that blinde rime in the ſacrament.

Stokes an Engliſhe man.

Then an other Engliſh man, named Stokes, ſayd: I haue ſeene at Prage (ſayd he) a certaine treatiſe, the whych was aſcribed vnto thys man Iohn Hus, wherein it was plainely ſet forth, that after the conſecration, there remained materiall bread in in the Sacramẽt. Uerely ſaid Iohn Hus, ſauing your reuerence, that is not true.

False witnes

Then they returned againe vnto the witneſſes of them which were ſpoken of a litle before, who euery mã for himſelfe affirmed with an othe, that which he had ſaid. Amongeſt whom Iohn Protyway pariſhe prieſt of S. Clemẽts in Prage, whẽ he ſhould come to confirme his teſtimony, added more, that Iohn Hus ſhould ſay, that S. Gregory was but a rimer, whẽ he did alleadge his athoritie againſt him. Unto whõ Iohn Hus anſwered, that in this point they did him great iniury, for ſomuch as he alwaies eſteemed and reputed S. Gregory for a moſt holy doctor of the Church.

Iohn Hus falſely accuſed for calling S. Gregory a rimer

The Cardinall of Florence.

These contentions and diſputations being ſomewhat appeaſed, the Cardinall of Florence turned himſelfe toward Iohn Hus, & ſaid: Maiſter, you know well inough that it is written that in the mouth of two or three witneſſes all witnes is firme and ſtable: and heere you ſee nowe almoſt 20. witneſſes againſt you, men of authority & worthy of credite, amongſt the whych ſome haue hearde you teach theſe things themſelues, the other by report & common brute or voice, do teſtify of your doctrine, and altogether generally bring firme reaſons & proofes of theyr witneſſe, vnto the which wee are forced & conſtrained to geue credite, and for my part I ſee not howe you can maintaine & defend your cauſe againſt ſo many notable & wel learned men. Unto whom Iohn Hus anſwered in this maner: I take God and my conſcience to witnes, ẏ I neuer taught any thing, neither was it euer in my minde or fantaſie to teach in ſuch ſort or maner, as theſe men here haue not feared to witneſſe againſt me, that which they neuer hearde. And albeit they were as many more in nũber as they are, for all that, I do much more eſteme, yea and wͭout compariſon regard the witnes of my Lord God, before the wytnes and iudgement of al mine aduerſaries, vpon whom I do in no poynt ſtay my ſelfe. Then ſayde the Cardinall againe vnto him, it is not lawfull for vs to iudge according to your conſcience, for we can not chuſe, but that wee muſt nedes ſtay our ſelues vpon the firme & euident witnes of theſe men heere. For it is not for any diſpleaſure or hatred that theſe men do witnes thys againſt you (as you doe alleadge) for they alleadge and bring forth ſuche reaſons of their witneſſe, that there is no man that can perceyue any hatred in them, or that we can in any caſe be in dout thereof. And as touching M. Steuen Paletz, whereas you ſay, you do ſuſpect him that he hath craftily & deceitfully drawen drawen out certaine poyntes or articles out of your bookes for to betray them afterward: It ſemeth that in this point you do hym great wrong, for in myne aduiſe he hath vſed and ſhewed a great fidelitie and amitie towarde you, in yͭ he hathe alleuiated and moderated many of your articles much more then they are in your owne bookes. I vnderſtand alſo that you haue like opinion of diuers other notable men, and ſpecially you haue ſayd, that you do ſuſpect M. Chauncellour of Paris, then whome there is no more excellent and Chriſtian man in all the whole world.

Twenty witneſſes preuayled againſt Iohn Hus, but the teſtimony of al Boheme would not ſerue on his part.

The Cardinall of Cambray.

He meaneth Gerſon.

An other accuſation for defending of Wickliffes articles.

Then was there read a certayne article of accuſation in yͤ which it was alledged that Iohn Hus had taught & obſtinately defended certayne erroneous Articles of Wickliffes in Boheme. Whereunto Hus anſwered, that he neuer taught any errours of Iohn Wickliffes, or of anye other mans. Wherefore if it be ſo that Wickliffe : haue ſowed any errours in England, let the Engliſh men look to yͤ themſelues. But to confirme theyr article, there was alleaged that Iohn Huſſe did withſtande the condemnation of Wickliffes articles, the which was firſt condemned at Rome, & afterward alſo, whē the Archb. Swinco with other learned men, held a conuocation at Prage for yͤ ſame matter, when as they ſhould haue bene there condemned for this cauſe, that none of them were agreeing to the Catholicke faith or doctrine, but were either hereticall, erroneous or offenſiue: he aunſwered that he durſt not agree thereunto, for offending hys conſcience, and ſpecially for theſe Articles: that Siluester the pope and Cōſtantine dyd erre in beſtowing thoſe gret gifts & rewards vpō yͤ church Alſo that the pope or Prieſt being in mortall ſinne, can not conſecrate nor baptiſe. This article ſaid he, I haue thus determined, as if I ſhould ſay that he doth vnworthely conſecrate or Baptiſe, when as he is in deadly ſinne, and that he is an vnworthy miniſter of the Sacramentes of God. Here his accuſers, with their witneſſes, were earneſt and inſtant, that the article of Wickliffe was written by the very ſame wordes in the treatiſe which Iohn Huſſe made agaynſt Stephen Paletz. Verely ſaid Iohn Huſſe I feare not to ſubmit my ſelfe, euen vnder the daunger of death, if you ſhall not find it ſo, as I haue ſayd. When the book was brought forth, they founde it written as Iohn Huſſe had ſayd. He added alſo moreouer that he durſt not agree vnto them which had condemned Wickliffes articles, for this Article: the tenthes were pure almes.

Certaine Articles of Wickliffe that I. Hus ſtoode in.

A treatiſe againſt Steuē Palletz.

Whether tenthes be pure almoſe

Here the Cardinal of Florence obiected vnto him this argument, as touching yͤ almes: it is required that it ſhold be geuē freely without bond or duety. But tenthes are not geuen freely without bond or duety: therefore are they no almes. Iohn Hus denying the Maior of this Sillogiſmus brought this reaſon agaynſt him. For ſomuch as rich men are bounden vnder the payne of eternall damnation, vnto the fulfilling of yͤ 6. works of mercy, which Chriſt repeteth in the 25. chap. of Mathew: and theſe workes are pure almes: Ergo, almes is alſo geuen by bond & duety. Then an Archbiſhop of Englād ſtepping vp, ſayd, if we all be boūd vnto thoſe 6. workes of mercy, it doth followe that poore men, which haue nothing at al to geue, ſhould be damned. I anſwere, ſayd Huſſe, vnto your antecedent, that I ſpake diſtinctly of rich men, and of thoſe which had where withall to doe thoſe workes: they I ſay were bound to geue almes vnder payne of damnation.

Almoſe ſtādeth of duty

He anſwered moreouer vnto the Minor of the firſt argument, that tenthes were at firſt geuen freely, and afterward made a bond and duetie. And when as he woulde haue declared it more at large, he could not be ſuffered. He declared alſo diuers other cauſes, why he coulde not with ſafe conſcience, conſent vnto the condemnatiō of Wickliffes articles. But howſoeuer the matter went he did affirme & ſay, that he did neuer obſtinately confirme any Articles of Wickleffes, but only that he did not alow and conſent that Wickliffes Articles ſhould be condemned before that ſufficient reaſons were alleadged out of the holy Scripture for theyr condemnation, & of the ſame minde, ſaith Iohn Hus are a great many other Doctors and mayſters of the Vniuerſitie of Prage. For when as Swinco the archbiſhop commanded all Wickliffes bookes to be gathered together in the whole City of Prage, and to be brought vnto him, I my ſelf brought alſo certayn books of Wickliffes, which I gaue vnto yͤ Archbiſhop deſiring him yͭ if he found any error or hereſie in them that he would note and mark thē, and I my ſelfe would publiſh them openly. But the archbiſhop, albeit that he ſhewed me no errour nor hereſie in them, burned my bookes together with thoſe that were brought vnto him, notwithſtanding that he had no ſuch commaundement from Pope Alexander the fifth of that name. But notwithſtanding by a certaine pollicie he obtayned a Bull from the ſayd Pope by meanes of Iaroſlaus Biſhop of Sarepte of the order of Franciſcanes, that all Wickleffs books for the manifold errours, contayned in them (whereof there was none named) ſhould be taken out of all mens handes.

I. Hus his minde touching the cōdemnation of Wickliffes articles.

Wickliffes bookes burned in prage by Archb. Suinco.

A narration touching Wickliffes bookes.

The archb. vſing the authoritie of this Bull, thought he ſhould bring to paſſe that the king of Boheme and the Nobles ſhold conſent to the condemnation of Wickliffes bookes, but therein he was deceiued. Yet neuertheleſſe he calling together certayn deuines, gaue them in cōmiſsiō to ſit vpon Wickliffes bookes and to proceede agaynſt them by a diffinitiue ſentence in the Canon law. Theſe men by a generall ſentence iudged all thoſe books worthy to be burned. The which when the Doctors, Mayſters and Sholers of the vniuerſitie heard report of, they altogether with one conſent & accord (none excepted but onely they, which before were choſen by the Archbiſhop to ſit in iudgement) determined to make ſupplication vnto the king to ſtay the matter. The king graunting their requeſt, ſent by and by certain vnto the Archbiſhop to examine the matter. There he denyed that he woulde decree anye thing as touchinge Wickleffes bookes contrary vnto the kinges will & pleaſure. Wherupon, albeit that he had determined to burn thē the next day after, yet for feare of the king, the matter was paſſed ouer.

The vniuerſitie of prage maketh ſupplication to the king for ſauing of Wickliffes bookes.

In the meane tyme Pope Alexander the fifth beyng dead, the Archbiſhop fearing leaſt the Bull whiche he had receiued of the pope, would be no longer of any force or effect, priuily calling vnto him hys adherentes, and ſhutting the gates of hys Court round about him, being garded wͭ a number of armed ſouldiors, he conſumed and burned all Wickleffes bookes. Beſide this great iniurie the Archbyſhop by meanes of his Bull aforeſayd, committed an other leſſe tollerable. For he gaue out commaundement that no man after that time vnder payne of excōmunication ſhold teach any more in Chappels. Wherunto I did appeale vnto the Pope, who being dead, and the cauſe of my matter remayning vndetermined, I appealed likewiſe vnto his ſucceſſor Iohn 23. Before whom when as by the ſpace of 2. yeres, I could not be admitted by my aduocates to defend my cauſe, I appealed vnto the high Iudge Chriſt. When I. Hus had ſpoken theſe wordes, it was demaunded of hym whether he had receiued abſolution of the pope or no he aunſwered, no. Then agayne whether it were lawfull for him to appeale vnto Chriſt or no. Whereunto Iohn Hus anſwered: Verely I doe affirme here afore you all that there is no more iuſt or effectuall appeale, then that appeale which is made vnto Chriſt, for aſmuch as the law doth determine that to appeale is no other thinge then in a cauſe of griefe or wrong done by an inferior iudge, to implore and require ayde and remedy at a higher Iudges hand. Who is then an higher Iudge then Chriſt? Who I ſay cā know or iudge the matter more iuſtly or with more equitie? when as in him there is found no deceit, neyther can he be deceiued: or who can better helpe the miſerable & oppreſſed thē he? While Iohn Hus with a deuout and ſober countenaunce was ſpeaking and pronouncing thoſe words, he was derided and mocked of all the whole councell.

Wickliffs bookes burned in Prage againſt the kings will.

A decree that no mā ſhould teach any more in chappels.

Iohn Hus appealed to the pope & from the pope to Chriſt.

A queſtiō of the councell whether it be lawfull to appeale to Chriſt or no.

The popiſhe church derideth Chriſt.

Then was there rehearſed an other Article of his accuſation in this maner: that Iohn Hus for to confirme the hereſie which he had taught the common and ſimple people out of Wickleffes bookes, ſayd openly theſe wordes, that at what time a great number of Monkes and Friers and other learned men, were gathered together in Englād in a certayne Church, to diſpute agaynſt Iohn Wickliffe, & could by no meanes vanquiſhe him or geue him the foyle, ſodenly the church doore was broken open with lightning ſo that with much a doe Wickleffes enemies hardly ſcaped without hurt. He added moreouer that he wiſhed his ſoule to be in the ſame place where Iohn Wickleffes ſoule was. Whereunto Iohn Hus anſwered: that a dowſeine yeares before that any bookes of Diuinitie of Iohn Wickleffes were in Boheme, he did ſee certayne workes of Philoſophie of hys, the which, he ſayd, did meruellous delite and pleaſe hym. And when he vnderſtoode the good and godly life of the ſayd Wickleffe, he ſpake theſe wordes: I truſt ſayde he that Wickleffe is ſaued, and albeit that I doubt whether he be damned or no, yet with a good hope I wiſh that my ſoule were in the ſame place where Iohn Wickleffes is. Then agayne did all the company ieſt and laugh at hym.

Hus accuſed for truſting that Wickliffes ſoule is ſaued.

It is alſo in hys accuſation that Iohn Hus did counſaile the people according to the example of Moyſes, to reſiſt with the ſword agaynſt all ſuch as did gaynſay his doctrine. And the next day after he had preached the ſame, there were found openly in diuers places certaine intimations that euery man being armed with hys ſword about him, ſhould ſtoutly procede: and that brother ſhoulde not ſpare brother, neyther one neighbor an other. Iohn Huſſe annſwered that all theſe thinges were falſly layd vnto hys charge by his aduerſaries, for he at all times when he preached did dilligently admoniſhe, and warne the people, that they ſhould all arme themſelues to defend the truth of the Goſpell, according to the ſaying of the Apoſtle, with the helmet and ſworde of ſaluation, and that he neuer ſpake of any material ſword, but of that which is the word of God. And as touching intimations or Moyſes ſword, he neuer had nothing to doe withall.

Hus accuſed for mouing certaine tumultes againſt the clergie and deuiſion in the vniuerſitie of Prage.

It is moreouer affirmed in hys accuſation and witnes that many offences are ſprong vp by the doctrine of Hus. For firſt of all he ſowed diſcord betweene the Eccleſiaſtical and the politick ſtate: whereupon folowed the perſecution, ſpoiling: and robbery of the Clergie & Biſhops. And moreouer that he through his diſſention, diſſolued the vniuerſitie of Prage. Hereunto Iohn Hus briefly aunſwered that theſe thinges had not happened by hys meanes or default. For the firſt diſſention that was betweene the Eccleſiaſticall and politicke ſtate, ſprang and grew vpon this cauſe, that pope Gregory the 12. of that name, promiſed at his election that at all times at the wil and pleaſure of the Cardinals: he would depart from, and geue ouer hys ſeate agayne: for vnder that condition he was electe and choſen. This man contrary and againſt Winceſlaus king of Boheme, who was then alſo king of the Romaynes, made Lewes Duke of Bauaria Emperour.

A ſtory of popes

A few yeares after it happened that when as P. Gregory would not refuſe and geue ouer his ſeate and office at the requeſt of the Cardinalles, that the whole Colledge of Cardinalles ſent letters to the king of Boheme requiring him, that together with them he would renounce & forſake his obedience vnto pope Gregory, and ſo it ſhoulde come to paſſe that by ẏ authoritie of a new Byſhop he ſhould recouer againe his imperial dignity. For this cauſe the king cõſẽted to the wil of ẏ Cardinals as touching a neutrality that is to ſay, that he would neyther take part with Pope Gregory, neyther yet with Benedict the xii. Byſhop of Auinion, whiche was then named Pope as it doth appeare by Chronicles. In this cauſe then, for ſomuch as the archbiſhop Swinco with the Clergy, were agaynſt the kyng, and abſtayning from the deuine ſeruice many of them departed out of the Citty, and the archbiſhop hymſelfe breaking down the tombe of the Lord Wincelate contrary and agaynſt the kinges will, did alſo take Wickliffes bookes & burned them: therupon the king without any gaynſaying ſuffered that certayne goodes of theyrs, which of their own wils were fled away, ſhould be ſpoyled, becauſe they ſhold not conſent or accord with the biſhop. Wherupon it is eaſie to be vnderſtanded and knowne, that Iohn Huſſe was falſely accuſed for that matter. Howbeit a certayn man one Naſo riſing vp, ſayd, the Clergy (ſayd he) did not abſtayne from the deuine ſeruice becauſe they woulde not ſweare to conſent vnto the king, but becauſe that they were ſpoyled and robbed of theyr goodes and ſubſtaunce. And the Cardinall of Cambray, who was one of the Iudges ſayd: here I muſt ſay ſomewhat, which is come into my minde.

The cauſe why Swinco & other of the Clergie did flie out of Prage.

This doctor Naſo was counſailer to king Wenceſlus.

When as I came from Rome, the ſame yeare that theſe thinges were done, by chaunce I met on the way certayne Prelates of Boheme. Whome when I demaunded what newes they had brought out of Boheme, they aunſwered that there was happened a wonderfull cruel and haynous fact, for all the Clergy were ſpoyled of all theyr ſubſtaunce and very ill intreated and handled. Then Iohn Hus alledging the ſame cauſe which he did before, went forward vnto the ſecõd part of the Article which was obiected againſt him, denying alſo that it happened thorough his fault, that the Germaynes departed from the Vniuerſitie of Prage. But when as the king of Boheme, according to the foundation of Charles the fourth, his father granted three voices vnto the Bohemes, & the fourth vnto the Germaynes whereat the Germaynes grudging, that they ſhoulde be exemted from theyr voices, of theyr owne accorde departed & went theyr wayes: binding themſelues with a great oth and vnder a great penalty, both of their fame and alſo money, that none of them ſhould returne agayne vnto Prage Notwithſtading: I am not aſhamed to confeſſe that I did approue and allow the doinges of the king, vnto whom of duty I ow obedience for the commoditie and profite of my country. And becauſe you ſhal not thinke that I haue ſpoken any vntrueth, here is preſent Albert Warren Trauius, whiche was deacon of the faculties, who hadde ſworne to depart with the reſt of the Germaynes: he, if that he wil ſay the truth, ſhal eaſly clere me of this ſuſpitiõ.

A declaration how the Germaines departed frõ the vniuerſitie of Prage.

The penaltie of money was 100. ſiluer ſhocke.

But when as Albert would haue ſpoken, he could not be heard. But the foreſayd Naſo, of whome before is made mention, after he had aſked leaue to ſpeak, ſayd, this matter do I vnderſtand wel inough, for I was in the Kinges court, when theſe thyngs were done in Boheme, when as I ſawe the mayſters of the 3. nations of the Germaynes, Bauarians, Saxons, and Sileſians, amongſt whome the Pollonians were alſo numbred, moſt humbly come vnto the king, requiring ẏ he would not ſuffer the right of their voyces to be takẽ from them. Then the kyng promiſed thẽ that he would forſee and prouide for theyr requeſtes. But Iohn Hus and Ierome of Prage with diuers others, perſwaded the king that he ſhould not ſo do. Wherat the king at the firſt being not a little moued, gaue him a ſore checke that he and Hierom of Prage did ſomuch intermedle themſelues, and moued ſuch open controuerſies, in ſomuch that he threatned them, that except they woulde forſee and take heede, hee woulde bring it to paſſe that the matter ſhoulde be determined and decreed by fire. Wherfore moſt reuerẽd fathers, you ſhall vnderſtand that the king of Boheme did neuer fauour with his hart, theſe men whoſe vnſhamefaſtnes is ſuch, that they feared not euen of late, to entreat me euill, being ſo much in the kinges fauour and credite. After hym ſtepped forth Paletz, ſaying: verely moſt reuerend fathers, not onely the learned men of other nations, but alſo of Boheme it ſelfe: are through the Councell of Iohn Hus and his adherentes, baniſhed out of Boheme, of the which number ſome remayne yet in exile in Morauia. Hereunto Iohn Hus anſwered, how can thys be true, ſayd he, ſithẽs I was not at Prage at that tyme, when as theſe men you ſpeake of, departed and went awaye from thence? Theſe thynges were thus debated the day aforeſayd as touching Iohn Hus.

The ſlãder of the vnſhamefaſt Sycophant.

Palletz ſpeaketh againſt Iohn Hus.

This done, the ſayd Iohn Hus was committed to the cuſtody of the biſhop of Rigen, vnder whome Ierome of Prage was alſo priſoner. But before that he was led away ẏ Cardinall of Cambray, calling him backe agayne in the preſence of the Emperour, ſayd Iohn Hus, I haue heard you ſay, that if you had not ben willing of your own mind to come vnto Conſtance, neyther the Emperour himſelfe, neither the king of Boheme coulde haue compelled you to do it. Vnto whom Iohn Hus anſwered, vnder your licẽce moſt reuerend father, I neuer vſed any ſuch kinde of talke or wordes. But this I did ſay, that there was in Boheme a great number of gentle mẽ and noble men, which did fauour and loue me, the whiche alſo might eaſely haue kepte me in ſome ſure and ſecret place, that I ſhoulde not haue bene conſtrayned to come vnto thys towne of Conſtance neyther at the will of the Emperour, neyther of the king of Boheme. With that the Cardinall of Cambray, euen for very anger began to chaunge hys colour, and deſpitefully ſaid do you not ſee the vnſhamefaſtnes of ẏ man here? And as they were murmuring and whiſpering on all partes, the L. Ioh. de Clum, ratifying and confirming that which Iohn Hus had ſpoken, ſayd: that Iohn Hus had ſpoken very well, for on my part (ſayd he) which in compariſon of a great many others am but of ſmall force in the realme of Boheme, yet alwayes if I would haue taken it in hand, I could haue defended hym eaſely by the ſpace of one yeare, euen agaynſt all the force & power of both theſe great and mighty kinges. How much better might they haue done it which are of more force or puiſſance then I am? and haue ſtronger caſtles and places then I haue? After that the L. de Clum had ſpoken, the Cardinal of Cambray ſayd, let vs leaue thys talke. And I tell you Iohn Hus, and counſaile you, that you ſubmit your ſelfe vnto the ſentence and mind of the Councel, as you did promiſe in the priſon, and if that you wyll do ſo, it ſhall be greatly both for your profite and honour.

Hus cõmitted to cuſtodie.

Ierome of Prage.

The Cardinall of Cambray.

Iohn de Clum.

The emperours oratiõ to I. Hus.

And the Emperour hymſelfe began to tell hym ẏ ſame tale, ſaying: Albeit that there be ſome which ſay that the 15 day after you were committed to priſon, you obtayned of vs our letters of ſafe conducte, notwithſtãding I can well proue by the witnes of many Princes and noble men, that the ſayd ſafe conducte was obtayned and gotten of vs by my Lord de Dube and de Clum, before you were parted out of Prage, vnder whoſe garde we haue ſent for you, to the end that none ſhold do you any outrage or hurt, but ẏ you ſhold haue full liberty to ſpeake freely before all the Councell, and to anſwere as touching your fayth and doctrine, and as you ſee my Lords the Cardinalles and Byſhops, haue ſo dealt with you, that we doe very well perceaue theyr good will towardes you, for ẏ whych we haue great cauſe to thanke thẽ. And for ſomuche as diuers haue told vs, ẏ we may not or ought not of right, to defend anye man which is an hereticke or ſuſpecte of hereſie: therefore now we geue you euen the ſame Councell, which the Cardinal of Cambray hath geuen you already, that you be not obſtinate to maynteyne any opinion, but ẏ you do ſubmit your ſelfe vnder ſuch obedience as you owe vnto the authoritie of the holy Councell in all thinges, that ſhall be laid againſt you and confirmed by credible witneſſes. The which thing if you do according to our Counſaile, we will geue order that for the loue of vs and of our brother yͤ whol realme of Boheme, the Councell ſhall ſuffer you to depart in peace, with an eaſie and tollerable penance & ſatiſfactiō. The which thing if you do contrariwiſe refuſe to do, yͤ preſidentes of yͤ Councell, ſhall haue ſufficient wherwithal to procede agaynſt you. And for our part be ye well aſſured, that we will ſooner prepare and make the fire wͭ our own handes to burne you withall, then we wil endure or ſuffer any longer that you ſhal maintayn or vſe this ſtifnes of opinions, which you haue hitherto mayntayned and vſed. wherfore our aduiſe and councell is, that you ſubmit your ſelf wholy vnto yͤ iudgement of the coūcell. Unto whome I. Hus anſwered in this ſort: O moſt noble Emperour, I render vnto your highnes moſt immortall thankes for your letters of ſafeconduct. Uppon this L. Iohn de Clum did break him of his purpoſe, and admoniſhed him, that he did in no poynt excuſe himſelfe of the blame of obſtinacie.

The anſwer of I. Hus vnto the Emperour.

Then ſaid I. Hus, O moſt gentle lord, I do take God to my witnes, that I was neuer minded to mayntain any opinion euer obſtinately, and that for this ſame intent and purpoſe, I did come hether of myne owne good will, that if any man could lay before me any better or more holy doctrine then mine, that then I would chaunge myne opinion without anye further doubt. After he had ſpoken and ſayde theſe thinges, he was ſent awaye with the Sergeantes.

The morow after, which was the viii. day of Iune, the very ſame company which was aſſembled the day before, aſſembled now againe at the Couent of the Franciſcanes. And in this aſſembly were alſo I. Huſſe, hys friends Lord de Dube, and Lord de Clum, and Peter the Notary. Thether was Iohn Hus alſo brought: & in his preſence there were reade about 39. Articles, the which they ſayde, were drawne out of his bookes. Hus acknowledged all thoſe that were faythfully and truly collected and gathered to be his, of the which ſort there were but very few. The reſidue were counterfayted and forged by his aduerſaryes: & ſpecially by Stephen Palletz, the principall authour of this miſchiefe for they could finde no ſuch thinge in the bookes out of the which they ſayde they had drawne and gathered them, or at the leaſt, if they were: they were corrupted by ſlaunders, as a man may eaſely perceiue by the number of Articles.

39. Articles laide to I. Hus.

Theſe be the ſame Articles in a matter whiche were ſhewed before in the priſon to Iohn Hus, and are rehearſed here in an other order. Howbeit, there were more Articles added vnto thē and other ſome corrected & enlarged. But now we will ſhew them one with an other, and declare what the ſayde Hus did aunſwere both openly before them all, as alſo in the priſon, for he left his aunſweres in the priſon briefly written with hys owne hand in theſe wordes.

I Iohn Hus, vnworthy miniſter of Ieſus Chriſt, maſter of Arte and Bachelour of Diuinitie do confeſſe that I haue written a certayne ſmall treatiſe intituled of yͤ church, the copy whereof was ſhewed me by the Notaryes of the three Preſidentes of the Councell, that is to ſaye, the Patriarche of Conſtantinople, the Byſhop of Caſtle, and the Byſhop of Libuſſe: the whiche deputies or preſidentes in reproſe of the ſayd treatiſe, deliuered vnto me certayne articles, ſaying, that they were drawne out of the ſayd treatiſe, and were written in the ſame.

The anſwer of Iohn Hus concerning his booke of the church.

The firſt Article. There is but one holy vniuerſall or Catholicke Church, which is the vniuerſall company of al the predeſtinate. I doe confeſſe that thys propoſition is mine and is confirmed by the ſaying of S. Auguſtin vpon S. Iohn.

The ſecond article. S. Paule was neuer any member of the deuill: albeit that he committed, and did certayne actes like vnto the actes of the malignant Churche. And likewiſe S. Peter which fell into an horrible ſinne of periurie and deniall of his mayſter, it was by the permiſſion of God that he might the more firmely and ſtedfaſtly riſe agayne and be confirmed. I aunſwere, according to Sainct Auguſtine, that it is expedient that the elect and predeſtinate ſhould ſinne and offend.

S.Paule was neuer any member of the deuill.

Hereby it appeareth, that there is two maner of ſeperations from the holy church. The firſt is, not to perdition as all the elect are deuided from the Church. The ſecond is to perdition, by the which certayne heretickes are through theyr deadly ſinne, deuided from the Church. Yet notwithſtanding, by the grace of God they may returne agayne vnto the flocke and be of the fold of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt of whome he ſpeaketh himſelfe ſaying, I haue other ſheep which are not of thys fold. Iohn. xx.

Two maner of ſeparatiōs from the church.

The third article. No part or member of the Churche doth depart or fall away at any time from the bodye, for ſo much as the charitie of predeſtination, whiche is the bond and chayne of the ſame, doth neuer fall. Thys propoſition is thus placed in my booke: As the reprobate of the church proceed out of the ſame, & yet are not as partes or mēbers of the ſame, for ſo much as no part or member of the ſame doth finally fall away, becauſe that the charitie of predeſtination, which is the bond and chayne of the ſame, doth neuer fall away. This is proued by the 13. chapter of the firſt to the Corinthians and to the Romaynes the 8. chapter: All thinges turne to good to them whiche loue God. Alſo I am certayne that neyther death nor life can ſeperate vs from the charitie and loue of God, as it is more at large in the booke.

The members of the church neuer fall finally away.

The fourth Article. The predeſtinate although he be not in the ſtate of grace according to preſent iuſtice, yet is he alwayes a member of the vniuerſall Churche. Thys is an errour, if it be vnderſtand of all ſuch as be predeſtinate, for thus it is in the booke about the beginning of the fift chapter where it is declared that there be diuers maners and ſortes of being in the Church, for there are ſome in the Church according to a miſſhappen fayth, and other ſome according to predeſtination, as Chriſtians predeſtinate now in ſinne, but ſhall returne agayne vnto grace.

The predeſtinate is alwaies a member of the vniuerſal church although not in preſent iuſtice.

The fift article: There is no degree of honor or dignitie neyther any humain election, or any ſenſible ſigne, that can make any man a member of the vniuerſall Church. I aunſwere this article is after this maner in my book. And ſuch ſubtilties are vnderſtanded & knowne by conſidering what it is to be in the Churche, and what it is to be a part or member of the Church, & that predeſtination doth make a man a member of the vniuerſall Church, the whiche is a preparation of grace, for the preſent, and of glory to come: & not degree of dignitie, neyther election of man, neyther any ſenſible ſigne. For the accuſer Iudas Iſcarioth notwithſtanding Chriſtes election, & the temporall graces which were geuen him for his office of Apoſtleſhip, and yͭ he was reputed and counted of men a true Apoſtle of Ieſus Chriſt yet was he no true Diſciple but a wolf couered in a ſheps ſkinne, as ſainct Auguſtine ſayth.

To be in the church: and a member of the church.

Predeſtination.

The vi. Article: A reprobate man is neuer no member of the holy Church. I anſwere, it is in my booke with ſufficient long probation out of the 26. Pſalme, and out of the v. chapter to the Epheſians, & alſo by S. Barnarde ſaying the Church of Ieſus Chriſt is more playnly and euidently his body, then the body which he deliuered for vs to death I haue alſo written in the v. chap. of my booke, that the holy church is the barne of the Lord, in the whiche are bothe good and euill, predeſtinate and reprobate, the good being as the good corne or grayne, and the euill as the chaffe, & thereunto is added the expoſition of S. Auguſtine.

Both good and bad in the Church.

The ſeuenth article: Iudas was neuer no true Diſciple of Ieſus Chriſt. I anſwere and I do confeſſe the ſame. This appeareth by the fift article, which is paſſed afore, & by S. Auguſtine in his booke of penaunce, where he doth expound the meaning of S. Iohn in hys firſt Epiſtle and ſecond chapter, where he ſayd: They come out frō amōgſt vs, but they were none of vs. He knewe from the beginning all them whiche ſhould beleeue, and him alſo whiche ſhould betray him and ſayd: And therefore I ſay vnto you that none commeth vnto me, except it be geuen hym of my father. From that time many of the Diſciples parted from him, and were not thoſe alſo called Diſciples accordyng the wordes of the Goſpell? And yet notwithſtanding they were no true Diſciples, becauſe they did not remayne and continue in the word of the ſonne of God, according as it is ſaid: If you remayne in my word, you be my Diſciples. For ſo much then as they did not continue with Chriſt as hys true Diſciples, ſo likewiſe are they not the true ſonns of God: although they ſeeme ſo, vnto him they are not ſo, vnto whom it is knowen what they ſhall be: That is to ſay of good, euill. Thus much writeth S. Auguſtine. It is alſo euident that Iudas could not be the true Diſciple of Chriſt, by meanes of hys couetouſneſſe for Chriſt himſelfe ſayd in the preſence of Iudas, as I ſuppoſe, except a man forſake all that he hath, he can not be my Diſciple. For ſo much then as Iudas did not forſake all thinges, according to the Lordes will, and follow him he was a theefe as it is ſayd, Iohn the 12. and a deuill, Iohn the 6. whereby it is euident by the worde of the Lord, that Iudas was not hys true, but fayned Diſciple. Whereupon S. Auguſtine writing vpon Iohn, declaring how the ſheepe heare the voice of Chriſt, ſayth, what maner of hearers, thinke we, hys ſheepe were? Truely Iudas heard him and was a wolfe, yet followed he the ſhepherd, but being clothed in a ſheeps ſkinne he lay in wayt for the ſhepheard.

The Church is taken ſometime for the congregation of the elect & faithful, & ſo is the article taken in the Creede.

The eight article: The congregatiō of the predeſtinate whether they be in the ſtate of grace or no, according vnto preſent iuſtice, is the holy vniuerſall Church, and therefore it is an article of fayth, and it is the ſame Churche, whiche hath neither wrinckle neyther ſpot in it, but is holy & vndefiled, the which the ſonne of God doth cal his own. The anſwere. The wordes of the booke out of the which thys Article was drawne are theſe: Thirdly, the Church is vnderſtand and taken for the congregation and aſſembly of ẏ faythfull, whether they be in the ſtate of grace, according to preſent iuſtice or not. And in this ſort it is an Article of our fayth, of the whiche S. Paule maketh mention in the fifth chapter to the Epheſians: Chriſt ſo loued his Church that he deliuered and offered himſelf for the ſame &c. I pray you then, is there any faythful man, the which doth doubt that the Church doth not ſignifie all the elect and predeſtinate the which we ought to beleue to be the vniuerſall Church the glorious ſpouſe of Ieſus chriſt holy and without ſpot? wherfore this Article is an article of fayth, the whiche we ought firmely to beleue according to our Creede. I beleue the holy Catholicke Church, and of this Churche doth S. Auguſtine, S. Gregory, S. Ierome, and diuers other make mention.

Peter neuer was head of the whole vniuerſal Church.

The ix. article: Peter neuer was, neither is the head of the holy vniuerſall Church. The aunſwere. This Article was drawne out of theſe wordes of my booke: All men do agree in this poynt, that Peter had receiued of the rocke of the church (which is Chriſt) humilitie, pouertie, ſtedfaſtnes of fayth, and conſequently bleſſednes. Not as though the meaning of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt was, when he ſaid vpon this rocke I will build my Churche, that he woulde build euery Militant Church vppon the perſon of Peter, for Chriſt ſhould buyld hys Church vpon the rocke which is Chriſt himſelfe, from whence Peter receiued hys ſteadfaſtnes of fayth, for ſomuche as Ieſus Chriſt is the onely head and foundation of euery Church, and not Peter.

The Church builded vpon Peter, how.

The vicare of Christ how he is to be taken.

10. The tenth Article: If he that is called the vicar of Ieſus Chriſt, do followe Chriſt in his life, then he is his true vicare. But if ſo be it, he do walke in contrary pathes and wayes, then is he the meſſenger of Antichriſt, & the enemy and aduerſary of S. Peter, & of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſte, and alſo the vicare of Iudas Iſcarioth. I aunſwere the wordes of my book are theſe: If he which is called the vicare of S. Peter walke in the wayes of Chriſtian vertues aforeſayd, we do beleue verely that he is the true vicar and true Byſhop of the Church whiche ruleth: but if he walke in contrary pathes and wayes, then is he the meſſenger of Antechriſt, cōtrary both to S. Peter, and our Lord Ieſus Chriſt. And therfore S. Bernard in hys 4. book did write in this ſort vnto pope Eugenie: Thou delitеſt & walkeſt in great pride and arrogancie, being gorgeouſly and ſumptuouſly arayd, what fruit or profite do thy flocke or ſheepe receiue by thee? If I durſt ſay it, theſe be rather the paſtures and feedinges of deuils, then of ſheepe. S. Peter & S. Paul did not ſo, wherfore thou ſeemeſt by theſe thy doings to ſucceede Conſtantine, & not S. Peter. These be the very wordes of S. Bernard. It followeth after in my booke that if the maner and faſhion of his life and liuing, be contrary to that which S. Peter vſed, or that he be geuen to auarice and couetouſnes, then is he the vicar of Iudas Iſcarioth, which loued and choſe the reward of iniquitie, & dyd ſet out to ſale the Lord Ieſus Chriſt. As ſoone as they had read the ſame, thoſe which ruled and gouerned the coūcell, beheld one an other, making mockes and moes, they nodded theyr heades at hym.

Bernard, ad Eugenium. lib. 4.

11. The xi. article: Al ſuch as doe vſe Symmony, & prieſts liuing diſſolutely and wantonly, do hold an vntrue opinion of ẏ 7. Sacramentes, as vnbeleuing baſtardes, and not as Children, not knowing what is the office & duety of the keyes or cenſures, rites, and ceremonies, neither of the diuine ſeruice of the Churche, or of veneration or worſhipping of reliques, neither of ẏ orders conſtituted and ordeined in the Church, neither yet of indulgences or pardons. I anſwere, ẏ it is placed in this maner in my book. Thys abuſe of authoritie or power is committed by ſuch as doe ſell & make marchandiſe of holy orders, and get and gather together riches by Symonie, making fayres and markets of the holy Sacramentes, and liuing in all kynd of voluptuouſnes and diſſolute maners, or in any other filthy or vilanous kind of liuing. They do polute and defile the holye eccleſiaſticall ſtate. And albeit that they profeſſe in wordes that they do know God, yet doe they deny it again by their deeds, and conſequently beleue not in God: But as vnbeleeuing baſtardes they holde a contrarye and vntrue opinion of the 7. Sacramentes of the Church. And this appeareth moſt euidently, for ſomuch as all ſuche doe vtterly contemne and deſpiſe the name of God, according to the ſaying of Malachy, the firſt chapter: Unto you O Prieſtes be it ſpoken, which doe deſpiſe and contemne my name.

Prelates making marchandiſe of holy orders.

12. The Pope taketh his originall frō the Emperours.

96. diſt.

The xii. Article: The papall dignitie hath hys original from the Emperours of Rome. I anſwere, and mark wel what my wordes are. The preeminence and inſtitution of the Pope is ſprong and come of the Emperours power & authoritie. And this is proued by the 96. diſtinction, for Conſtantine graunted thys priuiledge vnto the Biſhop of Rome, and other after hym confirmed the ſame: That like as Auguſtus for the outward and temporal goodes beſtowed vpon the Churche, is counted alwayes the moſt high king aboue al others: ſo the byſh. of Rome ſhold be called ẏ principal father aboue all other biſhops. This notwithſtanding the papall dignitie hath hys original immediately from Chriſt, as touching hys ſpirituall adminiſtration and office, to rule the Church. Then the Cardinall of Cābray ſayd: in the tyme of Conſtantine there was a generall Councell holden at Nice, in the whiche, albeit the higheſt rowme and place in the Church was geuen to the Biſhop of Rome, for honours cauſe, it is aſcribed vnto the Emperour: wherefore then do you not aſwell affirme and ſaye ẏ the Papall dignitie tooke hys originall rather from that councel, then by the Emperours authoritie and power?

13. The pope is not the head of any particuler church

The 13. article: No man would reaſonably affirme (without reuelation) neyther of hymſelfe nor of any other, that hee is the heade of any particular Churche. I aunſwere I confeſſe it to be written in my booke, and it followeth ſtraight after: Albeit that through hys good liuing he oght to hope and truſt that he is a member of the holy vniuerſal Church, the ſpouſe of Ieſus Chriſt, according to the ſaying of the Preacher: No man knoweth whether he be worthy and haue deſerued grace and fauour, or hatred. And Luke the 17. when ye haue done all that ye can, ſay that you are vnprofitable ſeruauntes.

14. The 14. Article: It ought not to be beleeued that the pope, whatſoeuer he be, may be the head of any particular Churche, vnles he be predeſtinate or ordayned of God. I aunſwere, that I doe acknowledge thys prepoſition to be myne, and thys is eaſie to proue, forſomuche as it is neceſſary that the Chriſtian faith ſhuld be depraued, for ſomuch as the Churche was deceiued by N. as it appeareth by S. Auguſtine.

15. The popes power vaine

The 15. article. The popes power as Vicare, is but vayne and nothing worth, if he do not confirme & addreſſe hys lyfe accordyng to Ieſus Chriſt, and not followe the maners of S. Peter. I anſwere that it is thus in my book that it is meet and expedient that he which is ordayned vicar ſhould addreſſe and frame himſelfe in maners and conditions, to ẏ authoritie of hym, which did put him in place. And Iohn Hus ſayd: Moreouer before the whole councell I vnderſtand that the power and authoritie in ſuch a pope as doth not repreſent the maners of Chriſt, is fruſtrate and voyd as touching the merite and rewarde, which he ſhold obtayne and get therby, and doth not get the ſame: but not as concerning hys office. Then certayne others ſtanding by aſked of hym ſaying, where is that gloſe in your book? I. Hus anſwered, you ſhall finde it in my treatiſe agaynſt M. Palletz, wherat all the aſſiſtaunce (looking one vppon an other) began for to ſmile and laugh.

Diſtinction of merite, and of office

16. Holynes cōmeth not by ſitting, but by folowing

The 16. Article. The pope is moſt holy, not becauſe hee doth ſupply and hold the rowme and place of S. Peter, but becauſe he hath great reuenues. I anſwere that my words are mutilate, for thus it is written: He is not moſt holy becauſe he is called the vicar of S. Peter, or becauſe he hathe great and large poſſeſſions: But if he be the follower of Ieſus Chriſt in humilitie, gentlenes, paciēce, labour and trauayle, and in perfect loue and charitie.

17. The Cardinalles do count it hereſie that they ſhould be compelled to be followers of the Apoſtles

The 17. Article. The Cardinals are not the manifeſt and true ſucceſſours of the other Apoſtles of Ieſus Chriſt if they liue not according to the faſhion of the Apoſtles keping the commaundementes and ordinaunces of the Lord Ieſus, I anſwere, that it is thus written in my booke, and it proueth it ſelfe ſufficiently. For if they enter in by an other way then by the dore whiche is the Lord Ieſus, they be murtheres and theeues.

Then ſayde the Cardinall of Cambray, beholde both this and all other articles before rehearſed, he hath written much more deteſtable thinges in his booke, then is preſented in hys articles. Truely Iohn Hus ẏ haſt kept no order in thy ſermons and writings. Had it not ben your part to haue applyed your ſermons according to your audiēce? For to what purpoſe was it, or what did it profite you before the people to preach agaynſt the Cardinals, when as none of them were preſent? It had bene meeter for you to haue told them theyr faults before them all, then before the laity. Then aunſwered Iohn Hus, reuerend father, for ſo much as I did ſee many prieſtes & other learned men preſent at my ſermons, for their ſakes I ſpake thoſe wordes. Then ſayd the Cardinal thou haſt done very ill, for by ſuch kinde of talke thou haſt diſturbed and troubled the whole ſtate of the Church.

I. Hus condẽneth the crueltie of the prelates in ſeeking the death of heretickes.

18. The 18. Article. An hereticke ought not to be committed to the ſecular powers to be put to death, for it is ſufficient onely that he abide and ſuffer the eccleſiaſticall cenſure. Theſe are my wordes. That they might be aſhamed of their cruel ſentence and iudgement, ſpecially for ſomuch as Ieſus Chriſt byſhop both of the old and newe Teſtament would not iudge ſuch as were diſobedient by ciuill iudgement, neither condemne them to bodily death. As touching the firſt poynt, It may be euidently ſeene in the 12. Chapter of S. Luke. And for the ſecond it appeareth alſo by the woman which was taken in adultery, of whõ it is ſpoken in the 8. chapter of Sainct Iohn. And it is ſayde in the 18. Chapter of Sainct Mathew: If thy brother haue offended thee. &c. Marke therfore what I do ſay: That an hereticke whatſoeuer he be, ought firſt to be inſtructed and taught with Chriſtian loue, and gentlenes by the holy ſcriptures and by the reaſons drawne and taken out of the ſame, as S. Auguſtine and others haue done, diſputing agaynſt the heretickes. But if there were any, which after al theſe gentle and louing admonitions and inſtructions, woulde not ceaſe from, or leaue of their ſtiffnes of opinions, but obſtinately reſiſt agaynſt the truth, ſuche I ſay ought to ſuffer corporall or bodily puniſhment.

The betraying and condemning of innocents.

And how coulde this biſhop of Cambray vnderſtand the bookes of I. Hus being written in Bohemiã ſpeach, which he vnderſtoode not.

As ſoone as Iohn Hus had ſpoken thoſe thinges, the iudges red in hys booke a certayne clauſe, wherein he ſeemed greeuouſly to enuey agaynſt them which deliuered an hereticke vnto the ſecular power, not being confuted or conuicted of hereſie, and compared thẽ vnto the high prieſtes, Scribes, and Phariſeis, which ſayd vnto Pilate, it is not lawfull for vs to put any man to death, and deliuered Chriſt vnto him: And yet notwithſtanding according vnto Chriſtes owne witneſſe, they were greater murtherers then Pilate: for he, ſaid Chriſt: which hath deliuered me vnto thee, hath committed the greateſt offence. Then yͤ Cardinals and Biſhops, made a great noyſe and demaunded of I. Hus, ſaying, who are they, yͭ thou doſt compare or aſſimule vnto the Phariſeis? Then he ſayd, all thoſe whiche deliuered vp anye innocent vnto the ciuill ſworde, as the Scribes and Phariſeis deliuered Ieſus Chriſt vnto Pilate. No, no, ſayd they agayne, for all that, you ſpake here of doctors. And the Cardinall of Cambray, according to his accuſtomed maner ſayd: Truly, they which haue made and gathered theſe articles, haue vſed great lenitie and gẽtlenes, for his writings are much more deteſtable & horrible.

19. The 19. article. The Nobles of the world ought to cõſtrayne and compel the miniſters of the Church to obſerue and keepe the law of Ieſus Chriſt. I anſwere, that it ſtandeth thus word for word in my booke. Thoſe which be on our part do preach and affirme that the church militant, according to the partes, which the Lord hath ordayned, is deuided and conſiſteth in theſe partes. That is to ſay: Miniſters of the Church, which ſhould keepe purely and ſincerely the ordinaunces and commaundementes of the ſonne of God, and the Nobles of the world that ſhould compel and driue them to keepe the commaundementes of Ieſus Chriſt, and of the common people, ſeruing to both theſe partes and endes according to the inſtitution and ordinaunce of Ieſus Chriſt.

The church militant ſtandeth in three partes.
1. Miniſters.
2. Nobles.
3. Commõs

20. The 20. Article. The eccleſiaſticall obedience, is a kynd of obedience, which the prieſtes and monks haue inuented wout any expreſſe authority of yͤ holy ſcriptures. I anſwer and confes, that thoſe words are thus written in my book. I ſay, that there be three kindes of obedience, ſpirituall, ſecular and eccleſiaſticall. The ſpirituall obedience is that which is onely due according to the lawe and ordinance of God, vnder the whiche the Apoſtles of Ieſus Chriſt dyd lyue, and all Chriſtians ought for to liue. The ſecular obedience, is that which is due according to the Ciuill lawes and ordinances. The eccleſiaſtical obedience is ſuch as the Prieſtes haue inuented without any expreſſe authoritie of Scripture. The firſt kinde of obedience doth vtterly exclude from it all euill, as well on his part which geueth the commandement, as on his alſo which doth obey the ſame. And of this obedience it is ſpoken in the 24. chap. of Deut. Thou ſhalt do all that which the prieſtes of the kindred of Leuy ſhall teach and inſtruct thee, according as I haue cõmanded them.

Three kinds of obediẽce.
1. Spirituall.
2. Secular.
3. Eccleſiaſticall.

True obedience ruled by Gods cõmaũdemẽt. Deut. 24.

21. The 21. Article. He that is excõmunicated by the pope, if he refuſe and forſake the iudgement of the Pope, and the generall Councell, and appealeth vnto Ieſus Chriſt, after he hath made hys appellation all the excommunications and curſes of the Pope cannot annoy or hurt hym. I aunſwere, that I do not acknowledge this propoſition, but in deede I did make my complaynt in my booke, that they had both done me and ſuch as fauoured me great wrong, & that they refuſe to heare me in the popes court. For after the death of one pope I dyd appeale to hys ſucceſſor, and all that did profite me nothing. And to appeale from the P. to the Councell, it were to long, & that were euen as much as if a man in trouble ſhould ſeeke an vncertayne remedy. And therfore laſt of all I haue appealed to the head of the Church my Lord Ieſus Chriſt, for he is much more excellent and better, then any pope to diſcuſſe and determine matters and cauſes, for ſomuch as he cannot erre, neyther yet deny iuſtice to him that doth aſke or require it in a iuſt cauſe, neither can he condemne the innocent. Then ſpake yͤ Cardinall of Cambray vnto hym and ſayd: wilt thou preſume aboue S. Paule, who appealed vnto the Emperour and not vnto Ieſus Chriſt? Iohn Hus anſwered: for ſomuch then as I am the firſt yͭ do it, am I therfore to be reputed & counted an hereticke? And yet notwithſtanding S. Paule did not appeale vnto the Emperoure of hys owne motion or will, but by the will of Chriſt, which ſpake vnto hym by reuelation and ſayd: be firme and conſtant for yͧ muſt go vnto Rome. And as he was about to rehearſe his appeale agayne, they mocked hym.

The appeale of Iohn Hus from pope Iohn 23. vnto Chriſt.

The feruent cõplaint & prayer of chriſt againſt wicked iudges.

FOraſmuch as the moſt mighty Lorde one in eſſence, 3. in perſon, is both the chiefe and firſt, & alſo the laſt and vttermoſt refuge of al thoſe which are oppreſſed, and that he is the God which defendeth verety and truth throughout all generations, doynge iuſtice to ſuch as be wronged, being ready and at hand to al thoſe whiche call vppon him in veritie and truth, and bindyng thoſe that are bond: and fulfilleth the deſires of all thoſe which honour and feare hym: defending and keeping al thoſe that loue him, and vtterly deſtroyeth and bringeth to ruine the ſtiffnecked and vnpenitent ſinner, and that the Lorde Ieſus Chriſt very God and man, being in great anguiſh compaſſed in with the prieſtes, Scribes and Phariſeis, wicked iudges and witneſſes, willing by the moſt bitter and ignominious death, to redeme the choſen children of God, before the foundation of the world, from euerlaſting damnation, hath left behinde him this godly example for a memory vnto them which ſhould come after hym, to the intent they ſhould commit al their cauſes into the handes of God, who can doe all thinges, and knoweth and ſeeth all thinges, ſaying in this maner: O Lorde, beholde my affliction, for my enemy hath prepared hymſelfe againſt me, and thou art my protector and defendor. O Lorde thou haſt geuẽ me vnderſtanding and I haue acknowledged thee: thou haſt opened vnto me all their enterpriſes, and for mine owne parte I haue bene as a meeke lambe, which is led vnto ſacrifice, and haue not reſiſted agaynſt them. They haue wrought their enterpriſes vpon me, ſaying: Let vs put wood in hys bread, and let vs banyſh him out of the land of the liuing that hys name be no more ſpokẽ of, nor had in memory. But thou O Lord of hoſtes whiche iudgeſt iuſtly and ſeeſt the deuiſes and imaginations of theyr hartes, haſten thee to take vengeance vpon them, for I haue manifeſted my cauſe vnto thee, for ſo much as the number of thoſe which trouble me is great, and haue counſayled together, ſaying: the Lorde hath forſaken hym, purſue hym and catch hym. O Lord my God, behold their doinges, for thou art my pacience, deliuer me from myne enemies, for thou art my God: doe not ſeperate thy ſelfe far from me: for ſo much as tribulation is at hand, and there is no mã which will ſuccour me. My God my God looke downe vpon me wherefore haſt thou forſaken me? So many doggs haue compaſſed me in, and the company of the wicked haue beſieged me round about, for they haue ſpoken agaynſt me with the deceitfull tonges, and haue compaſſed me in with wordes, full of deſpite, and haue inforced me without cauſe. In ſtead of loue towardes me, they haue ſlaundered me and haue recompenſed me wyth euill for good, and in place of charitie, they haue conceaued hatred agaynſt me.

After the example of Chriſt he maketh his prayer to God.

A godly prayer of Iohn Hus.

Wherfore behold I ſtaying my ſelfe vppon this moſt holy and fruitfull example of my ſauiour and redeemer, do appeale before God for this my grief and hard oppreſſiõ from thys moſt wicked ſentence, and iudgement, and the excommunication determined by the Byſhop, Scribes, Phariſeis, and Iudges, which ſit in Moyſes ſeate, and reſigne my cauſe wholly vnto hym, ſo as the holy Patriarke of Conſtantinople Iohn Chriſoſtome appealed twiſe from the Councell of the Byſhops and Clergy. And Andrew Byſhop of Prage, and Robert Byſhop of Lincolne, appealed vnto the ſoueraign and moſt iuſt iudge, the which is not defiled with crueltye, neyther canne he be corrupted with giftes and rewardes, neyther yet be deceiued, by falſe witneſſe. Alſo I deſire greatly that all the faythfull ſeruauntes of Ieſus Chriſt, and eſpecially the Princes, Barons, Knightes, Eſquires aud all other whiche inhabite our Country of Boheme, ſhould vnderſtand & know theſe things and haue compaſſion vpon me which am ſo greeuouſly oppreſſed by the excommunication whiche is out agaynſt me, the whiche was obtayned and gotten by the inſtigation and procurement of Michaell de Cauſis my great enemy, and by the conſent and furtheraunce of the Canons of the Cathedrall Churche of Prage, and geuen and graunted out by Peter of Sainct Angelles Deane of the Church of Rome, and Cardinall and alſo ordayned iudge by Pope Iohn the xxiij. who hath continued almoſt theſe two yeares and would geue no audience vnto my Aduocates and Procurators (which they ought not to deny: no not to a Iew or Pagan, or to any hereticke, whatſoeuer he were) neyther yet woulde he receiue any reaſonable excuſe for that I did not appeare perſonally neyther would he accept the teſtimonials of the whole Vniuerſity of Prage with the ſeale hãging at it, or the witnes of the ſworn Notaries, and ſuch as were called vnto witneſſe. By thys all men may euidẽtly perceiue that I haue not incurred any fault or crym of contumacie or diſobedience, for ſomuche as that I did not appeare in the Court of Rome, was not for any contempte, but for reaſonable cauſes.

Chriſoſtome. Andrew of Prage.

Robert biſhop of Lincolne appealed from mẽ to chriſt.

John Hus complaineth of Michaell de Cauſis, his great enemie.

And moreouer, for ſomuch as they had layd embuſhmentes for me on euery ſide by wayes where I ſhoulde paſſe, and alſo becauſe the perils & dangers of others, haue made me the more circumſpect and aduiſed, and for ſomuche as my procurours were willing and contented to bind themſelues euen to abide the puniſhment of the fire, to anſwere to all ſuch as would appoſe or lay any thing agaynſt me in the Court of Rome, as alſo becauſe they dyd impriſon my lawfull procuratour in the ſayd Court, without any cauſe, demerite or faulte as I ſuppoſe. For ſomuch then as the order and diſpoſition of all auncient lawes, as well deuine of the old and new teſtament, as alſo of the Canon lawes is this, that the Iudges ſhould reſorte vnto the place where the crime or faulte is committed or done, and there to enquire of al ſuch crimes as ſhal be obiected and layd agaynſt hym which is accuſed, or ſlandered and that of ſuch men as by conuerſation haue ſome knowledge or vnderſtanding of the party ſo accuſed (the whiche may not be the euill willers or enemies of hym which is ſo accuſed or ſlaundered but muſt be men of an honeſt conuerſation, no common quarrell pickers or accuſers, but feruent louers of the law of God) and finally that there ſhold be a fit and meete place appoynted whether as the accuſed party might without daunger or perill, reſorte or come, and that the Iudge and witneſſes ſhould not be enemies vnto hym that is accuſed. And alſo forſomuche as it is manifeſt that all theſe conditions were wanting and lacking, as touching my appearaunce for the ſafegard of my life, I am excuſed before God from the friuolous pretended obſtinacie and excommunication. Wherupon I I. Hus do preſent, & offer this my appeale vnto my Lord Ieſu Chriſt, my iuſt iudge, who knoweth defendeth, and iuſtly iudgeth euery mans iuſt and true cauſe.

The procurator of I. Hus laid in priſon at Rome.

A knot found in a ruſhe.

The 22. Article. A vicious and naughty man liueth viciouſly and naughtely: but a vertuous and godly man lyueth vertuouſly and godly. I anſwer: my wordes are theſe That the deuiſion of all humaine works is in two parties that is, that they be eyther vertuous or vicious: For ſomuch as it doth appeare that if any man be vertuous and godly, and that he do any thing, he doth it then vertuouſly and godly. And contrariwiſe if a man be vicious & naught that whiche hee doth is vicious and naught. For as vice which is called crime or offence, and thereby vnderſtande deadly ſinne, doth vniuerſally infect or depraue all the acts and doinges of the ſubiect, that is of the man whiche doth them: ſo likewiſe vertue and godlines doth quicken all the actes and doyngs of the vertuous & godly man: in ſomuch that he being in the ſtate of grace, is ſayd to praye and doe good works euen ſleping, as it were by a certayn meanes working. As S. Auguſtine, S. Gregory and diuers other affirme. And it appeareth in the ſixt chapter of Luke: If thine eye that is to ſay, the minde or intention be ſimple, not depraued with the peruerſenes of any ſinne or offence all the whole body, that is to ſay, all the actes and doinges ſhall be cleare and ſhyning, that is, acceptable and grateful vnto God. But if thine eye be euil, the whole body is darkned And in the ſecond to the Corin. x. Chapter. All thinges that you do, do them to the glory of God. And lykewiſe in the firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians, and laſt chapter it is ſayd: Let all your doinges be done with charitie. wherfore all kinde of lyfe and liuing according vnto charitie, is vertuous and godly: and if it be without charitie, it is vicious and euill. This ſaying may well be prooued out of the 23. chapter of Deuteronomy, where God ſpeaketh vnto ẏ people that hee that keepeth hys commaundementes, is bleſſed in the houſe and in the field, out goyng and in comming, ſleeping and waking: but he that doth not keepe his commaundementes is accurſed in the houſe and in ẏ fieldes in goyng out and comming in, ſleeping, and waking &c. The ſame alſo is euident by S. Auguſtine vpon the Pſal. where he writeth, that a good man in all hys doinges doth prayſe the Lord. And Gregory ſaith that the ſleep of ſaints and holy men doth not lack their merite. How much more then hys doinges which procede of good zeale, be not without reward and conſequently be vertuous and good? And contrariwiſe it is vnderſtanded of hym, which is in deadly ſinne, of whome it is ſpoken in the law, that whatſoeuer the vncleane man doth touch, is made vncleane.

The tree that is good bringeth forth good fruit.

2. Cor. 10.

1. Cor. vlt.

Deu. 23.

To this end doth that alſo appertayne which is before repeated out of the firſt of Malachie. And Gregorie in the firſt booke and firſt queſtion, ſayth: we doe defile the bread, which is the body of Chriſt, when as we come vnworthely to the table, and when we being defiled, doe drinke hys bloud. And S. Auguſtine vpon the 146. Pſalme, ſayth: if thou doeſt exceed the due meaſure of nature, & doeſt not abſtayne from glottony, but gorge thy ſelfe vp in dronkennes whatſoeuer laude or prayſe thy tongue doth ſpeake, of the grace and fauour of God, thy life doth blaſpheme the ſame When he had made an end of this article, the Cardinall of Cambray ſayd: The ſcripture ſayth that we be all ſinners. And agayne, if we ſay we haue no ſinne, we deceiue our ſelues, and ſo we ſhould alwayes liue in deadly ſinne. Iohn Hus aunſwered, the Scripture, ſpeaketh in that place of veniall ſinnes, the whiche doe not vtterly expell or put away the habite of vertue from a man, but do aſſociate themſelues together. And a certayne Engliſh man whoſe name was W. ſayd: but thoſe ſinnes do not aſſociate themſelues with anye acte morally good. Iohn Hus alledged agayne S. Auguſtines place vpon 146. Pſalme the whiche when he rehearſed, they all with one mouth ſayd, what makes this to the purpoſe?

Cardinall of Cambray obiecteth.

Iohn Hus aunſwereth.

The 23. article. The miniſter of Chriſt liuing according to his law, and hauing the knowledge and vnderſtanding of the ſcriptures, and an earneſt deſire to edifie the people, ought to preach, notwithanding the pretended excommunication of the pope. And moreouer if the pope or anye other ruler, doe forbid any prieſtes or miniſter ſo diſpoſed, not to preach, that he ought not to obey him. I aunſwere, that theſe were my wordes. That albeit the excommunication were eyther threatned or come out agaynſt hym, in ſuch ſort that a Chriſtian ought not to doe the commandementes of Chriſt, it appeareth by the wordes of S. Peter, and the other Apoſtles, that we ought rather to obey God, then man. whereupon it followeth that the miniſter of Chriſt lyuing according vnto this lawe. &c. ought to preach notwithſtanding any pretended excommunication For it is euident that it is commanded vnto the miniſters of the Church to preach the word of God. Actes 5. GOD hath commaunded vs to preach and teſtifie vnto the people, as by diuers other places of the ſcripture, and the holy fathers, rehearſed in my treatiſe it doth appeare more at large. The ſecond part of this article foloweth in my treatiſe in this maner.

23.

Forbidding to preach, whether it ought to be obeyed.

Act. 5.

By this it appeareth that for a miniſter to preache, and a rich man to geue almes, are not indifferent workes, but duties and commaundementes. wherby it is further euident, ẏ if the pope or any other ruler of the Church do commaund any miniſter diſpoſed for to preach, not to preach, or a rich man diſpoſed for to geue almes, not to geue, that they ought not to obey hym. And he added moreouer, to the intent that you may vnderſtand me the better. I call that a pretended excommunication, the whiche is vniuſtly diſordered and geuen forth contrary to the order of the law and Gods commaundements. For the which the meete Miniſter appointed therunto ought not to ceaſe from preaching neyther yet to feare damnation.

Preaching & almoſe geuing be not workes indifferent, but duties & commaundementes.

To forbid a miniſter to preach: And to forbid a rich man to geue almoſe, is both one.

Then they obiected vnto him, that he had ſayd ẏ ſuche kinde of excommunications were rather bleſſinges. Verely ſaid Hus, euẽ ſo do I now ſay again, that euery excommunication, by the whiche a man is vniuſtly excommunicate: is vnto him a bleſſing afore God, according to ẏ ſaying of the Prophet: I will curſe where as you bleſſe: and contrariwiſe, they ſhal curſe, but thou O Lord ſhalt bleſſe. Then the Cardinal of Florence, which had alwayes a Notary ready at his hand to write ſuch thinges as he cõmanded him, ſaid: The law is, that euery excommunication, be it neuer ſo vniuſt, ought to be feared. It is true ſayd Iohn Hus, for I do remember eight cauſes, for the whiche excõmunication ought to be feared. Then ſayd the Cardinall, is there no more but eight? It may be, ſaid Iohn Hus, that there be more.

How the popes curſinges are bleſſinges.

The Cardinall of Florence with his Notarie.

8. Cauſes why excommunication ought to be feared.

24.

The xxiiii. Article. Euery man which is admitted vnto ẏ miniſtery of the Church, receiueth alſo by ſpeciall cõmaundement, the office of a preacher, and ought to execute and fulfil that commaundement, notwithſtanding any excommunicacommunication pretendeth to the contrary. The aunſwere. My wordes are theſe: For ſo muche as it doth appeare by that which is aforeſayd, that whoſoeuer commeth, or is admitted vnto the miniſtery, receiueth alſo by eſpeciall commaundement, the office of preaching he ought to fulfill that commaundement, any excommunication to the contrary pretended notwithſtanding. Alſo no Chriſtian ought to doubte but that a man ſufficientlye inſtructed in learning, is more bound to counſel and inſtruct the ignoraunt, to teach thoſe which are in doubt, to chaſtiſe thoſe which are vnruly, and to remitte and forgeue thoſe that do him iniury, then for to to any other works of mercy. For ſo much then as he that is rich and hath ſufficient, is bounden vnder the payne of damnation to miniſter and geue temporall and bodely almes, as appeareth in the 25. chapter of Mathew: how much more is he bound to doe ſpirituall almes?

A miniſter once admitted is more bounde to preach: then to doe any other work of mercy, the popes prohibitió notwithſtanding.

25. The 25. Article. The Eccleſiaſticall cenſures are Antichriſtian, ſuch as the clergy hath inuented for theyr owne preferment, and for the bondage and ſeruitude of the common people. Whereby if the Laity be not obedient vnto the Clergy at theyr will and pleaſure, it doth multiplye theyr couetouſneſſe, defendeth theyr malice, and prepareth a way for Antichriſt. Whereby it is an euident ſigne and token, that ſuch cenſures procede from Antichriſt, the which cenſures in theyr proceſſes they do call Fulminations or lightninges, whereby the Clergy doth chiefly proceede agaynſt ſuch as doe manifeſt and open the wickedneſſe of Antichriſt, which thruſt themſelues into the office of the Clergye. Theſe thinges are conteined in the laſt chapter of his treatiſe of the Church. I aunſwere, and I deny that it is in that forme. But the matter therof is largely handled in the 23. chapter. And in the examination of the audience, they haue gathered certayne clauſes moſt contrary thereunto. The which when they had reade, the Cardinall of Cambray renewed his old ſong, ſaying: truly theſe are much more greeuous and offenſiue, then the Articles which are gathered.

Cenſures of the Popes Churche, multiplyeth the Popes couetouſnes

26. The 26. Article. There ought no interditement to be appoynted vnto the people, for ſo much as Chriſt the high Byſhoppe, neither for Iohn Baptiſt, neither for any iniury that was done vnto him did make any interditement. My wordes are theſe: when as I complayned, that for one Miniſters ſake, an Interditement was geuen out, and thereby all good men ceaſed from the laude and prayſe of God. And Chriſt the high Byſhoppe, notwithſtanding that the Prophette was taken and kept in priſon, then whome there was no greater amongeſt the children of men, did not geue out any curſe or interditement, no not when as Herode beheaded him, neither when he himſelfe was ſpoyled, beaten, and blaſphemed of the Souldiours, Scribes and Phariſies, he did not then curſe them, but prayed for them, and taught his Diſciples to doe the ſame, as it appeareth in the fift chapter of Saynt Mathew. And Chriſtes firſt Vicare folowing the ſame doctrine and learning, ſayth in his firſt Epiſtle of Saynt Peter and the ſecond chapter: Hereunto are ye called: For Chriſt hath ſuffered for vs, leauing vs an example that we ſhould follow his footſteppes, who when he was curſed and euill ſpoken of did not curſe agayne. And Saynt Paule following the ſame order and way in the xij. chapter of the Romaynes, ſayth: bleſſe them that perſecute you. There were beſides theſe many other places of ſcripture recited in that booke, but they being omitted, theſe were onely rehearſed, whiche did helpe or preuayle to ſtyrre vppe or mooue the iudges mindes.

Chriſt interdited none, but prayed for all

And theſe are the Articles which were alledged out of I. Hus his booke intituled Of the Church.

Other Articles moreouer out of other his bookes were collected, & forced agaynſt him, firſt out of his treatiſe written agaynſt Steuen Paletz, to the number of 7. Articles. Alſo 6. other Articles ſtrayned out of his treatiſe agaynſte Staniſlaus Znoyma. Whereunto his aunſweres likewiſe be adioyned, not vnfruitfull to be read.

¶ Here followeth ſeuen Articles, which are ſayde to be drawen out of hys Treatiſe which he wrote agaynſt Stephen Pallets.

1. Articles drawen out of the treatiſe written againſt Steuen Palletz.

The firſt Article. If the Pope, Byſhop, or Prelate, be in deadly ſinne, he is then no Pope, Byſhoppe, nor Prelate. The aunſwere, I graunt thereunto, and I ſend you vnto Saynt Auguſtine, Ierome, Chriſoſtome, Gregory, Cyprian, and Bernarde, the which doe ſay, moreouer that whoſoeuer is in deadly ſinne, is no true Chriſtian, howe much leſſe then is he Pope, or Byſhop, of whom it is ſpoken by the Prophet Amos in his 8. chapter. They haue raigned and ruled and not through me, they became Princes, and I knew them not. &c. But afterward I doe graũt that a wicked Pope, Byſhop, or Prieſt, is an vnworthye miniſter of the Sacrament, by whom God doth baptiſe, conſecrate, or otherwiſe worke to the profit of his Church, and this is largely handled in the text of the booke by the authorityes of the holy Doctours, for euen he which is in deadly ſinne is not worthely a kyng before God, as it appeareth in the firſt booke of kynges 15. chapter. Where as God ſayth vnto Saule by the Prophet Samuel, ſayinge: for ſo muche as thou haſt refuſed and caſt of my worde, I will alſo refuſe and caſt thee off, that thou ſhalt be no more King. Whiles theſe thinges were thus intreating, the Emperour looking out at a certayne window of the cloyſter, accompanyed with the Countye Palentine, and the Burgraue of Norenberg, conferring and talking much of Iohn Hus. At lẽgth he ſayd, that there was neuer a worſe or more pernitious heretické then he. In the meane while when Iohn Hus had ſpoken theſe wordes, as touchinge the vnworthy king, by and by the Emperour was called, and he was commaunded to repeat thoſe wordes agayne, which after that he had done, his duety therein being conſidered, the Emperour aunſwered, no man ſayth he, doth liue without faulte, then the Cardinall of Cambray, being in a great fury ſayd, is it not enough for thee that thou doeſt contemne and deſpiſe the Eccleſiaſtical ſtate, and goeſt about by thy writinges and doctrine to perturbe and trouble the ſame, but that now alſo thou wilt attempte to throw kinges out of theyr ſtate and dignity? Thẽ Paletz began to alleadge the lawes whereby he would proue that Saule was king, euen when thoſe words were ſpoken by Samuel, and therefore that Dauid did forbidde that Saul ſhould not be ſlayne, not for the holyneſſe of his life, the which there was none in him, but for the holyneſſe of hys annoynting. And when as Iohn Hus repeated out of S. Cyprian, that he did take vpon him the name of Chriſtianity in vayne which did not followe Chriſt in his liuing, Paletz aunſwered, beholde and ſee what a folly is in thys man which alleadgeth thoſe thinges which make nothing for the purpoſe, for albeit any man be not a true Chriſtian, is he not therefore true Pope, Byſhop, or Kyng? when as theſe are names of office and to be a Chriſtian is a name of merite and deſert, and ſo may any man be a true Pope, Byſhoppe, or King, although he be no true Chriſtian. Then ſayd Iohn Hus, if Pope Iohn the xxiij. were a true Pope, wherefore haue ye depriued him of hys office? The Emperour aunſwered, the Lordes of the Councell haue now lately agreed thereupon that he was true Pope, but for his notorious and manifeſt euill doinges wherewithall, he did offend and trouble the Church of God, and dyd ſpoyle and bring to ruine the power thereof, he is reiected and caſt out of his office.

The Emperours iudgement of I. Hus.

The Cardinall of Cambray.

The ſecond Article. The grace of predeſtination is the bond whereby the body of the Church and euery parte and member thereof is firmely knitte and ioyned vnto the head. The aunſwere. I acknowledge this Article to be mine, and it is proued in the text out of the eight chapiter to the Romaynes, who ſhall ſeperate vs from the charity and loue of Chriſt. &c. And in the tenth chapter of Iohn, My ſheepe heare my voyce, and I know them, and they followe me, and I geue them eternall life, neyther ſhall they periſh eternally, neither is there any man which ſhal take them out of my handes. This is the knotte of the body of the Church, and of our ſpirituall head Chriſt, vnderſtanding the Church to be the congregation of the predeſtinate. 2.

The third Article. If the Pope be a wicked man, and ſpecially a reprobate, then euen as Iudas the Apoſtle, he is a Deuill, a Theefe, and the Sonne of perdition, and not the head of the holy mylytant Churche, for ſo muche as he is no parte or member thereof. The aunſwere. My wordes are thus, if the Pope be an euill or wicked man, and ſpecially if he be a Reprobate, then euen as Iudas, ſo is he a Deuill, a Theefe, and the Sonne of perdition. How then is he the head of the holy militant Church? where as he is not truely no member or part thereof, for if he were a member of the holy Churche, then ſhoulde he be alſo a member of Chriſt, and if he were a member of Chriſt, then ſhoulde he cleaue and ſticke vnto Chryſte by the grace of Predeſtination and preſent iuſtice, and ſhoulde be one ſpirite with God, as the Apoſtle ſayth in the firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians, the ſixt Chapter: knowe ye not that your bodyes are the members of Chriſt? 3.

4. The 4. Article. An euill Pope or Prelate, or reprobate is no true paſtour, but a theefe and a robber. The anſwere. The text of my booke is thus. If he be euill or wicked, thē is he an hireling, of whom Chriſt ſpeaketh, he is no ſheepe heard, neither are the ſheepe his owne. Therefore when he ſeeth the wolfe comming he runneth away, and forſaketh the ſheepe, and ſo finally doth euery wicked and reprobate man. Therefore euery ſuch reprobate or wicked Pope or Prelate is no true Paſtour. But a very theefe and a robber, as is more at large proued in my booke. Thē ſayd John Hus, I doe ſo limitte all thinges, that ſuch as touching theyr deſert, are not truely and worthely Popes and ſhepheardes before God, but as touching their office and reputation of men, they are Popes, Paſtors, and Prieſtes.

Then a certayne man riſing vp behinde John Huſſe clothed all in ſilke, ſayd: my Lordes take heede leaſt that John Hus deceiue both you, and himſelfe with theſe hys gloſes, and looke whether theſe thinges be in his booke or not, for of late I had diſputation with him, vpon theſe Articles, in the which I ſayd, that a wicked Pope. &c. was no Pope, as touching merite and deſert, but as touchyng his office, he was truely Pope. whereupon he vſed theſe gloſes which he had heard of me, and did not take them out of his booke. Then John Hus turning himſelfe vnto him, ſayd: did you not heare that it was ſo readde out of my booke, and this did eaſily appeare in John xxiij. whether he were true Pope or a very theefe and robber. Then the Biſhoppes and Cardinals looking one vpon another, ſayd: that he was true Pope, and laughed John Hus to ſcorne. 5.

The 5. The Pope is not, neither ought to be called according vnto his office moſt holy. For then the king ought alſo to be called moſt holy, according to his office. Alſo the tormentors, lictors and deuilles, ought alſo to bee called holy. The aunſwere: My wordes are otherwiſe placed in this maner, ſo ought a fayner ſay, that if any man be a moſt holy Father, then he doth moſt holyly obſerue and keepe hys Fatherlyneſſe. And if he be a naughty and wicked Father, then doth he moſt wickedly keepe the ſame. Likewiſe if the Byſhoppe be moſt holyeſt, then is he alſo moſt good, and when as he ſayth that he is Pope, it is the name of his office.

wherupon it foloweth that the man which is Pope being an euill and reprobate man, is a moſt holy man. And conſequently by that hys office, he is moſt good. And forſomuch as no man can be good by hys office, except he do exerciſe & vſe the ſame, his office very well, it followeth that if the Pope be an euill & reprobate man, he cannot exerciſe or vſe his office wel. Forſomuch as he cannot vſe the office wel, except he be morally good. Mat. 12. How cā you ſpeak good things, when you your ſelues are euil, & immediatly after it foloweth. If ẏ Pope by reaſō of his office be called moſt holy, wherefore ſhould not the King of Romaynes be called moſt holy by reaſon of his office and dignitye? when as the Kyng, according vnto Saynt Auguſtines minde, repreſenteth the Deitye and Godhead of Chriſt, and the Prieſt repreſenteth onely hys humanity. wherefore alſo ſhould not iudges: yea, euen tormentours be called holy, forſomuch as they haue theyr office by miniſtring vnto the Church of Chriſt. Theſe thinges are more at large diſcourſed in my booke, but I cannot finde or knowe ſayth John Huſſe any foundation whereby I ſhoulde call the Pope moſt holy, when as thys is onely ſpoken of Chriſt. Thou onely art moſt holy. Thou onely art the Lord. &c. Shoulde I then truely call the Pope moſte holy? 6.

The 6. Article. If the Pope liue contrary vnto Chriſt. Albeit he be lawfully and Canonically elect and choſen, according to humayne election, yet doth he aſcende and come in another way then by Chriſt. The aunſwere. The text is thus, if the Pope liue contrary vnto Chriſt in pride and auarice, how then doth he not aſcend and come another way into the ſheepe folde, then by the lowlye and meeke doore our Lord Ieſus Chriſt? But admitte as you ſay, that he dyd aſcend by lawfull election, the which I call an election principally made of God, and not according vnto the common and vulgare conſtitution and ordinaunce of men, yet for all that, it is affirmed and proued that he ſhoulde aſcende and come in another way, for Iudas Iſcariot was truely and lawfully choſen of the Lorde Ieſus Chriſt vnto his Biſhopricke, as Chriſte ſayth in the ſixt of John, and yet he came in an other way into the ſheepe folde, and was a theefe and a Deuill, and the ſonne of perdition. Did he not come in another waye? when as our Sauiour ſpake thus of him, he that eateth breade with me, ſhall lift vp his heele agaynſt me.

The ſame alſo is proued by Saynte Bernarde vnto Pope Eugenius. Then ſayde Paletz: beholde the furor and maddeneſſe of this man, for what more furious or madde thing canne there be then to ſay, Iudas is choſen by Chriſt, and notwithſtanding he did aſcende an other way, and not by Chriſt. John Huſſe aunſwered, verely both partes are true, that he was electe and choſen by Chriſt, and alſo that he did aſcende, and come in an other way, for he was a Theefe, a Deuill, and the ſonne of perdition. Then ſayde Palettez, cannot a manne be truely and lawefully choſen Pope or Byſhoppe, and afterwarde liue contrarye vnto Chriſte? and that notwithſtanding he doth not aſcende any other wayes. But I, ſayde John Huſſe doe ſaye that whoſoeuer doth enter into anye Byſhoppricke or like office by Simonye, not to the intent to labour and trauell in the Church of God, but rather to liue delicately, voluptuouſlye and vnrighteouſly, and to the intent to aduaunce hymſelfe with all kinde of pride, euery ſuche man aſcendeth and commeth vppe by an other way, and according vnto the Goſpell, he is a theefe and a robber.

7. The 7. Article. The condemnation of the forty fyue Articles of wickliffe made by the Doctours is vnreaſonable and wicked, and the cauſe by them alleadged is fayned and vntrue: That is to ſay, that none of thoſe Articles are Catholicke, but that euery of them be either hereticall, erronious or offenciue. The aunſwere: I haue wrytten it thus in my treatiſe. the forty fyue Articles are condemned for this cauſe, that none of thoſe forty fyue, is a Catholicke Article, but eache of them is either hereticall, erronious or offenciue.

The Cardinal of Cambray.

O Mayſter Doctour, where is your proofe, you fayne a cauſe which you doe not poue, &c. As it appeareth more at large in my Treatiſe. Then ſayd the Cardinall of Cambraye, John Huſſe, thou diddeſt ſaye that thou wouldeſt not defend any errour of John wickliffes. And now it appeareth in your bookes, that you haue openly defended his Articles. John Hus aunſwered. Reuerend Father, euen as I ſayde before, ſo doe I now ſay agayne, that I will not defende any errours of John wickliffes, neyther of anye other mannes, but for ſo muche as it ſeemed vnto me to be agaynſt conſcience, ſimply to conſent vnto the condemnation of them, no Scripture beyng alledged or brought contrary and agaynſt them, thereupon I woulde not conſent or agree vnto the condemnation of them, And for ſo much as the reaſon whiche is copulatiue can not be verifyed in euery poynt, according to euery part thereof.

Articles drawen out of his treatiſe written againſt Stanislaus de Znoyma.

Nowe there remayneth ſixe Articles of 39. Theſe are ſayd to be drawen out of an other treatiſe which he wrote agaynſt Stanislaus de Znoyma.

1. The firſt Article. No man is lawfully elect or choſen, in that the Electours or the greater part of them haue conſented with a liuely voyce according to the cuſtome of men to elect and chooſe any perſon, or that he is thereby the maniſeſt and true Succeſſour of Chriſt, or Vicare of Peter in the Eccleſiaſticall office, but in that that any man doth moſt aboundantlye worke meritoriouſlye to the profitte of the Churche, he hath thereby more aboundant power geuen him of God thereunto. The anſwere. Theſe things which follow are alſo written in my booke. It ſtandeth in the power and handes of wicked Electours to chooſe a woman into the Eccleſiaſticall office, as it appeareth by the election of Agnes, whiche was called John, who held and occupyed the Popes place & dignitye by the ſpace of two yeares and more.

It may alſo be that they doe chooſe a Theefe, a Murderer, or a Deuil, and conſequently they may alſo elect and chooſe Antichriſt.

It may alſo be, that for loue, couetouſneſſe, or hatred, they doe chooſe ſome perſon whom God doth not allowe. And it appeareth that that perſon is not lawfully elect and and choſen: In ſo much as the Electours or the greater part of them haue conſented and agreed together, according to the cuſtome of men vpon any perſon, or that he is thereby the maniſeſt Succeſſour or Vicare of Peter, the Apoſtle or any other in the Eccleſiaſticall office.

Therefore they which moſt accordingly vnto the ſcripture doe elect and chooſe, reuelation being ſette a parte, doe onelye pronounce and determine by ſome probable reaſon vppon hym they doe electe and chooſe, whereuppon whether the Electours doe ſo chooſe good or euill, we ought to geue creditte vnto the workes of hym that is choſen, for in that poynt that any manne doth moſte aboundauntly worke meritoriouſly to the profitte of the Church, he hath thereby more aboundaunt power geuen 2. him of God therunto. And hereupon ſayth Chriſt in the 10. of Iohn, geue credit vnto workes.

The 2. Article. The Pope being a reprobate, is not the head of the holy Church of God. The aunſwere. I wrote it thus in my Treatiſe, that I woulde willinglye receiue a probable and effectuall reaſon of the Doctour, howe thys queſtion is contrary vnto the fayth, to ſay, that if the Pope be a reprobate, how is he the head of the holy churche. Beholde the trueth cannot decay or fayle in diſputation, for did Chriſt diſpute agaynſt the fayth, when he demaunded of the Scribes and Phariſyes. Math. 12. ye ſtocke and offſpring of Vypers, how can ye ſpeake good thinges, when you your ſelues are wicked and euill? and beholde I demaunde of the Scribes if the Pope be a reprobate, and the ſtocke of Vipers, how is he the head of the holy Church of GOD, that the Scribes and Phariſyes which were in the Councell houſe of Prage make aunſwere hereunto? For it is more poſſible that a reprobate man ſhoulde ſpeake good thinges, for ſo much as he 7. may be in ſtate of grace according vnto preſent iuſtice, then to be the head of the holy Church of God.

Alſo in the 5. of Iohn, our Sauiour complayneth vpon the Iewes, ſaying. How can you beleue which doe ſeeke for glory amongeſt your ſelues, and doe not ſeeke for the glory that commeth onely of God. And I likewiſe doe complayne how that if the Pope be a reprobate, can he be the head of the Church of God, which receiueth hys glory of the world, and ſeketh not for the glory of GOD? For it is more poſſible that the Pope being a Reprobate ſhould beleue, then that he ſhould be the head of the 3. Churche of God. For ſo much as he taketh his glory of the world.

The 3. Article. There is no ſparke of apparance, that there ought to be one head in the ſpiritualtye, to rule the Church, the which ſhoulde be alwayes conuerſant with the militant Church. The aunſwere. I do graunt it. For what conſequent is this. The king of Boheme is head of the kingdome of Boheme. Ergo, the Pope is head of the whole militant Church. Chriſt is the head of the ſpiritualtye, ruling and gouerning the militant Church by much more and greater neceſſity then Ceſar ought to rule the temporalty. For ſo much as Chriſt which ſitteth on the ryght hand of God the Father doth neceſſaryly rule the militant Church as head. And there is no ſparke of apparance that there ſhould be one head in yͤ ſpiritualty ruling the church, that ſhould alwaies be conuerſant with the militant churche, except ſome infidell would heretically affirme, that the militant Church ſhould haue here a permanent and continuall Citty or dwelling place, and not to enquire and ſeeke after that which is to come. It is alſo further euident in my booke, how vnconſequent the proportion of the ſimilitude is for a reprobate Pope to be the head of the 4. militent church, and a reprobate king to be the head of yͤ kingdome of Boheme.

The 4. Article. Chriſt would better rule his Churche by his true Apoſtles diſperſed through out the whole world without ſuch monſtrous heades: I aunſwere, that it is in my booke, as here foloweth, that albeit that yͤ doctor doth ſay, that the body of the militant Church, is oftentimes without a head: yet notwithſtanding we do verelye beleue that Chriſt Ieſus is the head ouer euery Churche, ruling the ſame without lacke or default, pouring vpõ the ſame a continuall motion and ſence, euen vnto the latter day, neither can the doctor geue a reaſon why the Churche in the time of Agnes, by the ſpace of 2. yeares and 5. monethes, liuing according to many members of chriſt in grace and fauour, but that by the ſame reaſon the Church might be without a head, by yͤ ſpace of many yeares. For ſo much as Chriſt ſhould better rule his Church by his true diſciples diſperſed throughout the whole world, without ſuche monſtrous heads. Then ſayd they all together: Beholde now he prophecieth, and Iohn Hus proſecuting his former talke ſayd, but I ſay that the Church in the time of the Apoſtles was farre better ruled and gouerned then now is. And what doth let or hinder that chriſt ſhould not now alſo rule the ſame better by his true Diſciples without ſuch monſtrous heades, as haue bene now a late? For beholde euen at this preſent we haue no ſuch head. And yet Chriſt 5. ceaſeth not to rule his Church, when he had ſpoken theſe wordes, he was derided and mocked.

The 5. Article. Peter was no vniuerſall Paſtour or ſhepheard of the ſheepe of Chriſt, much leſſe is the Byſhop of Rome. The anſwere. Theſe words are not in my book, but thoſe which do follow. Secondly it appeareth by the wordes of Chriſt, yͤ he did not limit vnto Peter for his iuriſdiction, the whole world, no not one onely prouince. So likewiſe neither vnto any other of the Apoſtles. Notwithſtanding certayne of them walked through many regions and other ſome fewer, preaching and teaching the kingdome of God, as Paule which laboured & trauelled more then all the reſt did corporally viſite and conuert moſt prouinces, whereby it is lawfull for any Apoſtle or his vicar to conuert and confirme as much people, or as many prouinces in the fayth of Chriſt, as they are able; neither is there any reſtraynt of their liberty or iuriſdiction. But only by diſability or inſufficiency.

6. The 6. Article. The Apoſtles and other faythfull prieſtes of the Lord haue ſtoutly ruled the Church in al things neceſſary vnto ſaluation before the office of the Pope was brought in to the Church, and ſo would they very poſſibly doe ſtill, if there were no Pope euen vnto yͤ latter day. Then they all cryed out agayne and ſayd: Behold the prophet, but Iohn Hus ſayde verely it is true that the Apoſtles did rule the Churche ſtoutly, before the office of the Pope was brought into the Churche. And certaynely a great deale better then it is now ruled. And likewiſe may other faythfull men which doe follow their ſteppes doe the ſame, for as now we haue no Pope, and ſo peraduenture it may continue and endure a yeare or more. Beſides this were brought agaynſt him other 19. articles obiected vnto him being in priſon which with his anſweres to the ſame here likewiſe follow. Of the whiche Articles, the firſt is thys.

1. Article. Paule how he was both a blaſphemer, & alſo a member of Chriſt.

The firſt Article. Paule according vnto preſent iuſtice was a blaſphemer and none of the Church, and therwithall was in grace, according vnto predeſtination of life euerlaſting. The aunſwere. This propoſition is not in the booke, but this which foloweth: whereby it doth ſeme probable, that as Paule was both a blaſphemer accordyng to preſent iuſtice, and therewithall alſo was a faythfull childe of our holy mother the Church, and in grace accordyng to predeſtination of life euerlaſting. So Iſcariot was both in grace according vnto preſent iuſtice, and was neuer of our holy mother the Church, according to the predeſtination of life euerlaſting, for ſo much as he lacked that predeſtination. And ſo Iſcariot albeit he was an Apoſtle, and a Byſhop of Chriſt, which is the name of his office, yet was he neuer no part of the vniuerſall Church.

2. Article. Predeſtination.

The 2. Article. Chriſt doth more loue a predeſtinate man being ſinnefull, then any reprobate in what grace poſſible ſoeuer he be. The aunſwere. My wordes are in the 4. chapter of my booke intituled of the Church, and it is euident that God doth more loue any predeſtinate beynge ſinnefull, then any reprobate, in what grace ſo euer he be for the time: for ſo much as he will, that the predeſtinate ſhall haue perpetuall bleſſedneſſe, and the reprobate to haue eternall fire. Wherefore God partly infinitely louing them both as his creatures, yet he doth more loue the predeſtinate becauſe he geueth him greater grace, or a greater gift: that is to ſay, life euerlaſting, which is greater & more excellent then onely grace, according vnto preſent iuſtice. And the third Article of thoſe Articles before, ſoundeth much neare vnto this, that the predeſtinate cannot fall frõ grace, for they haue a certayne radicall grace rooted in thẽ, although they be depriued of the aboundant grace for a time. Theſe thinges are true in the compound ſence.

3. Article.

Who ſo committeth deadly ſinne ſwarueth from the faith.

The 3. Article. All the ſinnefull according vnto preſent iniuſtice, are not faythfull, but doe ſwerue from the true Catholicke fayth, for ſo much as it is impoſſible that any man can committe any deadly ſinne but in that point, that he doe ſwerue from the fayth. The aunſwere. I acknowledge that ſentence to be mine, and it appeareth, that if they did thinke vpon the puniſhment which is to be laid vpon ſinners, and did fully beleue, and had the fayth of the diuine knowledge and vnderſtanding. &c. then vndoubtedly they would not ſo offend and ſinne. This propoſition is verified by the ſayinge of the Prophette Eſay. Thy rulers are vnfaythfull, miſbeleuers, fellowes and companions of theeues, they all loue bribes, and followe after rewardes. Beholde the Prophet calleth the rulers of the Church infidels for their offences, for all ſuch as do not keep theyr fayth inuiolate vnto theyr principall Lorde, are vnfaythfull ſeruauntes, and they alſo are vnfathfull children wich keepe not theyr obedience, feare, and loue vnto God their father.

Tit. cap. 1.

Item, this propoſition is verified, by the ſaying of the Apoſtle, the 1. chap. to Titus: They doe confeſſe that they know God, but by their works they do deny him. And for ſo much as they which are ſinnefull, do ſwerue away from yͤ meritorious work of bleſſednes, therfore they do ſwerue from the true fayth grounded vpon charity, for ſo much as ſayth without workes is dead. To this end doth alſo pertaine, that which the Lord ſpeaketh Math.23. of the faythfull and vnfaythfull ſeruaunt.

4.Article.

The 4.Article. Theſe wordes of Iohn in his 22.chap. Receiue the holy Ghoſt: And whatſoeuer you ſhall binde vpon earth.&c. And Mathew 16. and 18.chapter for lack of vnderſtanding ſhall terrifye many Chriſtians, and they ſhalbe wonderfully afrayd, and others ſhalbe deceiued by them, preſuming vpon the fulnes of theyr power and authority. The anſwere. This ſentence I do approue and allow, and therefore I ſay in the ſame place, that it is firſt of all to be ſuppoſed that the ſaying of our Sauiour is neceſſary, as touching the vertue of the word, foraſmuch as it is not poſſible for a Prieſt to binde and looſe, except that binding and looſing be in heauen. But for the lacke of the true vnderſtanding of thoſe wordes, many ſimple Chriſtians ſhalbe made afrayd, thinking with themſelues that whether they be iuſt or vniuſt, the Prieſtes may at their pleaſures, whenſoeuer they will, binde them. And the ignorant Prieſtes do alſo preſume and do take vpon thē to haue power to binde and looſe whenſoeuer they wil. For many fooliſh and ignorant prieſtes do ſay that they haue power and authority to abſolue euery man confeſſing himſelf, of what ſinne or offence ſoeuer it be, not knowing that in many ſinnes it is forbidden them, and that it may happen that an hypocrite do confeſſe himſelfe, or ſuch one as is not cōtrite for his ſinne, wherof proofe hath oftentimes bene founde and it is euident for ſo much as the letter doth kill, but the ſpirite doth quicken.

The wordes of Chriſt for binding and loſing, vnles they be well vnderſtanded, miniſter to much feare or preſumption.

5.Article. Binding & looſing chiefly and principally belong to Chriſt.

The v.Article, The binding and looſing of God, is ſimply & playnly the chiefe and principal. Theanſwere. This is euident, forſomuch as it were blaſphemous preſumption to affirme, that a man may remit and forgeue an euill fact or offence done agaynſt ſuch a Lord, the Lord himſelfe not approuing or allowing the ſame. For by the vniuerſall power of the Lord, it is neceſſary that he doe firſt abſolue and forgeue, before that his vicare doe the ſame, neyther is there one Article of our fayth, which ought to be more cōmon or knowne vnto vs, then that it ſhould be impoſſible for any man of the militant Church to abſolue or binde, except in ſuche caſe as it be conformable vnto the head of the Churche Ieſu Chriſt. wherefore euery faythfull Chriſtian ought to take heed of that ſaying: if the Pope or any other pretend by any maner of ſigne to binde or looſe, that he is thereby bound or looſed, for he that doth graunt or confeſſe that, muſt alſo conſequently graunt and confeſſe that the Pope is without ſinne, and ſo that he is a God, for otherwiſe he muſt needes erre, and doe contrary vnto the keyes of Chriſt. This ſaying proueth the fact of the Pope, who alwayes in his abſolution preſuppoſeth contrition and cōfeſſion. Yea moreouer, if any letter of abſolution be geuen vnto any offender, which doth not declare the circumſtances of the offence which ought to be declared, it is ſayd that thereby the letter of abſolution is of no force and effect. It is alſo hereby euident, that many Prieſtes do not abſolue thoſe which are cōfeſſed, becauſe that either through ſhamfaſtnes they do cloke or hide greater offences, or els yͤ they haue not due contrition or repentance, for vnto true abſolution there is firſt required contritiō. Secondly a purpoſe & intent to ſinne no more. Thirdly, true cōfeſſiō. And fourthly ſtedfaſt hope of forgeuenes, The j.appeareth by Ezech. if the wicked do repent him.&c. The ij. in the v. & 8. of Iohn do thou not ſinne any more. Thethird part by this place of Luke: ſhew your ſelues vnto the Prieſtes. And the fourth is confirmed by the ſaying of Chriſt: My ſonne beleue, and thy ſinnes are forgeuen thee. I alſo added many other probations in my treatiſe out of the holy fathers, Auguſtine, Ierome, and the maiſter of the ſentences.

To true abſolution 4.thinges are required.

6.Article.

The 6.Article. The Prieſtes do gather and heape vppe out of the Scriptures thoſe things which ſerue for the belly but ſuch as pertayne to the true imitation and folowing of Chriſt, that they reiect and refuſe as impertinent vnto ſaluation. The aunſwere. This Saynt Gregory doth ſufficiently proue in his 17. Homely, alledging the ſayinge of Chriſt: The harueſt is great, the workemen are few, ſpeaking alſo that which we cannot ſay without griefe or ſorrow, that albeit there be a great number which willingly heare good things, yet there lacketh ſuch as ſhould declare the ſame vnto them, for behold the world is full of prieſts, but notwithſtanding there is a ſcarcitye of workemen in the harueſt of the Lord. we take vpon vs willingly prieſthood, but we do not fulfil & do the workes & office of prieſthood. And immediately after he ſayth, we are fallen vnto outward affayres & buſines, for we take vpō vs one office for honour ſake, and we do exhibite & geue an other to eaſe our ſelues of labour. we leaue preaching and as farre as I can perceiue we are called Biſhops to our paine, which do retayne the name of honour, but not the verity.

Ex Gregorio.

Prieſtes more geuen to their owne lucre and belly, then to the ſeruice of Chriſt.

And unmediatly after he ſayth, we take no care for our flocke, we dayly call vpon for our ſtipend & wages, we couet and deſire earthly thinges with a gredy mind, we gape after worldly glory, we leaue the cauſe of God vndone, and make haſte about our worldly affayres & buſines, we take vpō vs the place of ſanctity and holines, and we are wholy wrapped in worldly cares & troubles.&c. This writeth ſaynt Gregory with many other thinges more in the ſame place. Alſo in his Paſtorall, in his Morals, in his regiſter. Alſo Saynt Bernard with many other places. Likewiſe in his xxxiij. Sermon vpon the Canonicalles, he ſayth, all frendes, and all enemies: all kinſfolkes and aduerſaryes, all of one houſeholde, and no peace makers: they are the Miniſters of Chriſt, and ſerue Antichriſt: they goe honourably honoured with the goodes of the Lord, and yet they do honour.&c.

7.Article.

The 7. Article. The power of the pope, which doth not folow Chriſt, is not to be feared. The anſwere. It is not ſo in my treatiſe, but contrariwiſe, that the ſubiects are boūd willingly & gladly to obey the vertuous and good rulers, and alſo thoſe which are wicked and euill. But notwithſtāding, if the pope do abuſe his power, it is not thē to be feared as by bondage. And ſo the Lordes the Cardinals as I ſuppoſe, did not feare the power of Gregory the xij. before his depoſition, whē as they reſiſted him, ſaying that he did abuſe his power contrary vnto his owne othe.

The Popes power doing vngodly is not to be feared.

8.Article.

The 8. Article. An euill and a wicked Pope is not the ſucceſſor of Peter, but of Iudas. The aunſwere. I wrote thus in my treatiſe: If the pope be humble and meeck, neglecting and deſpiſing the honors and lucre of the world: if he be a ſhepheard taking his name by the feeding of yͤ flock of God (of the which feeding the Lord ſpeaketh, ſayinge: feede my ſheepe) if he feede the ſheepe with the worde, and with vertuous example, and that he become euen lyke hys flocke with his whole hart and minde: if he doe diligently and carefully labour and trauell for the Church, then is he without doubt the true Vicare of Chriſt. But if he walke contrary vnto theſe vertues, for ſo much as there is no ſociety betwene Chriſt and Belial, and Chriſt himſelfe ſaith: he that is not with me, is agaynſt me: how is he then the true vicar of Chriſt or Peter, and not rather the Vicare of Antichriſt? Chriſt called Peter himſelfe Sathanas, when he did cōtrary him but onely in one word, and that wyth a good affection, euen him whom he had choſen his Vicare, and ſpecially appoynted ouer his church. why ſhould not any other then, being more contrary vnto Chriſt be truely called Sathanas, and conſequently Antichriſt, or at leſt the chiefe and principall miniſter or vicar of Antichriſt? There be infinite teſtimonyes of this matter in S. Auguſtine, S. Ierome, Ciprian, Chriſoſtom, Bernard, Gregory, Remigius, and Ambroſe.&c.

The Pope doing contrarye to Chriſt is not the vicare of chriſt, but Antichriſt.

9.Article. I.Hus neede not proue this article the pope will proue it himſelfe.

The 9. Article. The Pope is the ſame beaſt of whome it is ſpoken in the Apoc. power is geuen vnto him to make warre vpon the ſayntes. The anſwere. I deny this Article to be in my booke.

10.Article. To preach againſt the popes commandement.

The 10. Article. It is lawful to preach, notwithſtāding the Popes inhibition. The anſwere. The Article is euidēt forſomuch as the Apoſtles did preach contrary to the commaundement of the biſhops at Ieruſalem. And S. Hillary did the like, contrary to the cōmaūdement of yͤ pope which was an Arrian. It is alſo manifeſt by the example of Cardinals, which contrary vnto the cōmaundement of Pope Gregory the xij. ſēt throughout all realmes ſuch as ſhould preach agaynſt him. It is alſo lawfull to preach vnder appeale, contrary vnto the Popes commaundement. And finally he may preach which hath the commaundement of God, wherunto he ought chiefly to obey.

11.Article.

The 11. Article. If the Popes commaundement be not concordant and agreeable with the doctrine of the Goſpell or the Apoſtles, it is not to be obeyed. The anſwer. I haue thus written in my booke: The faythfull diſciple of Chriſt ought to wey and conſider whether the popes commaundement be expreſſely & plainely the cōmaūdement of Chriſt or any of his Apoſtles, or whether it haue any foundatiō or groūd in their doctrine or no: and that being once knowne or vnderſtand, he ought reuerētly and humbly to obey the ſame. But if he do certaynly know that the popes cōmaūdement is contrary and agaynſt the holy Scripture, and hurtful vnto the Church: then he ought boldely to reſiſt agaynſt it, that he be not partaker of the crime and offēce by cōſenting thereunto. This I haue handled at large in my treatiſe, and haue confirmed it by the authorityes of Saint Auſtine, Hierome, Gregory, Chriſoſtome, Bernard and Bede, and with the holy Scripture and Canons, the which for breuities cauſe I do here paſſe ouer. I will onely reherſe the ſaying of Saint Iſydore, who writeth thus: He

How farre prelates are to be obeied which doth rule, and doth ſay or commaund any thing cõtrary and beſides the will of God, or that which is euidently commaunded in the Scriptures, he is honoured as a falſe witneſſe of God, and a Church robber. whereupon we are bounden to obey no Prelate, but in ſuch caſe as he do commaund or take councell of the Councels and commaundements of Chriſt.

Concilia. precepta.

Likewiſe S. Auguſtine vpon this ſaying: vpon the chayre of Moyſes. &c. ſayth: Secondly, they teach in the chayre of Moyſes the law of God: Ergo, God teacheth by them: but if they will teach you any of theyr owne inuentions, do not geue eare vnto them, neither doe as they cõmaund you. Alſo in the ſaying of Chriſt, he that heareth you heareth me, all lawfull and honeſt thinges be comprehended, in the which we ought to be obedient, according to Chriſtes ſaying: it is not you which doe ſpeake, but the ſpirite of my father whiche ſpeaketh in you. Let therfore my aduerſaryes and ſlaunderers learne that there be not onely 12. Counſels in the Goſpell, in the which ſubiectes ought to obey Chriſt and his appoynted miniſters, but that there are ſo many Counſels and determinations of God, as there be lawfull and honeſt thinges ioyned with preceptes and commaundementes of God, bindinge vs thereunto, vnder the payne of deadly ſinne: for euery ſuch thing doth the Lord commaund vs to fulfill in tyme and place, with other circumſtaunces at the will and pleaſure of their miniſter.

12. Article. The clergie and laitie may iudge of the works of their prelates.

The 12. Article. It is lawfull for the clergy and laytye by their power and iuriſdiction to iudge and determine of all things pertayning vnto ſaluation, and alſo of the workes of the Prelates. The aunſwere. I haue thus written it in my booke, that it is lawfull for the clergy and laity to iudge and determine of the works of their heades and rulers. It appeareth by this, that the iudgement of the ſecret counſelles of God, in the court of conſcience is one thyng, & the iudgement of the authority and power in the church is an other. wherefore ſubiectes firſt ought principally to iudge and examine themſelues 1. Corinthians. 11. chapter. Secondly they ought to examine all thinges whiche pertayneth vnto their ſaluation, for a ſpirituall man iudgeth and examineth all thinges. And this is alleadged, as touching the firſt iudgement, and not the ſecond, as the enemy doth impute it vnto me. whereupon in the ſame place I doe ſay that the lay man ought to iudge and examine the workes of his Prelate, like as Paule doth iudge the doinges of Peter in blaming him. Secondly to auoyd them according to this ſaying: Beware of falſe Prophets. &c. Thirdly to rule ouer the miniſtery: For the ſubiect ought by reaſon to iudge and examine the works of the Prelats. And if they be good, to prayſe God therefore and reioyce: But if they be euill, they ought with patience to ſuffer them, and to be ſorry for them, but not to do the like, leaſt they be damned with them: according to this ſaying: If the blinde lead the blinde, both fall into the ditch.

Iudgement double. Secret in the court of cõſcience. Open in the court of authoritie.

13. Article.

To Godwarde all wicked miniſters be ſuſpended.

The 13. Article. God doth ſuſpend of himſelfe, euery wicked Prelate from his miniſtery, while he is actually in ſinne. for by that meanes that he is in deadly ſinne, he doth offend and ſinne whatſoeuer he do: and conſequẽtly is forbidden ſo to do: therefore alſo is he ſuſpended from his miniſtery. The aunſwere. This is proued as touching ſuſpenſion from dignitie, by Oſee the iiij. chapter, and Eſay, and Malachy the firſt. And Paule in the 1. Corinthians. 11. chapter, ſuſpendeth all ſuch as be ſinnefull or in any greeuous crime or offence, from the eating of the bodye of the Lord, and the drinking of his bloud, and conſequently ſuſpendeth all ſinneful Prelates from the miniſtration of the reuerent Sacrament. And God doth ſuſpend the wicked and ſinnefull from the declaration of his righteouſneſſe. Pſalme. 49. For ſo much then as to ſuſpend in effect, is to prohibite the miniſtery or any other good thing for the offence ſake, or as the new lawes do terme or cal it, to interdict or forbidde: It is manifeſt by the Scriptures afore rehearſed, that God doth prohibite the ſinnefull, being in ſinne to exerciſe or vſe theyr miniſterye or office, whiche by Gods commaundement ought to be exerciſed without offence. whereupon he ſayth by Eſay the Prophet: ye that cary the veſſels of the Lord, be ye clenſed and made cleane. And to the Corinthians it is ſayd: Let all thinges be done with loue and charity. &c. The ſame thing alſo is cõmaunded by diuers and ſundry Canons, the which I haue alleged in my treatiſe.

14 Article. The laye people ſupplanted by the Clergy.

The 14. Article. The aunſwere which he made to the 25. Article in priſon ſuffiſeth for this, that is to ſay, that the Clergye for theyr owne preferment and exaltation, doth ſupplant and vndermine the lay people, doth increaſe and multiply theyr couetouſnes, cloaketh and defendeth theyr malice and wickednes, and prepareth away for Antichriſt.

The firſt part he proueth by experience, by the example of Peter de Luna, which named himſelfe Benedict: by the example of Angelus Coriarius, which named himſelfe Gregory the 12. and alſo by the example of Iohn 23. Likewiſe by the xiij. and xxiiij. of Ezechiel, and out of Gregory, which ſayth, what ſhalbe come of the flock, when the ſhepheardes themſelues, are become wolues. &c. Alſo out of Oſee, Miche, and other of the Prophets, and many places of S. Barnard.

The ſecond part is proued by the 8. chapter of Ieremy, Gregory in his 17. Homely, and S. Barnard vpon the Canonicals.

The third part of this Article is alſo proued by experience: for who defendeth the wickednes of any ſchiſme but onely the Clergy alledging Scriptures, and bringing reaſons therfore? who excuſeth Simony, but onely the Clergy? likewiſe couetouſnes in heaping together many benefices, luxuriouſnes and fornication? For how many of the Clergy is there now a dayes which do ſay it is no deadly ſinne alledging (albeit diſorderly) the ſaying of Geneſis, increaſe and multiply.

Hereby alſo is the 4. part of the Article eaſily verified. For the way of Antichriſt is wickedneſſe and ſinne: of the which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh to the Theſſalonians: Gregory in his regiſter Paſtorall and moralls: Alſo S. Barnard vpon the Canonicalles playnely ſayth: wicked and euyll Prieſtes prepare the way for Antichriſt.

15. Article. The diſhoneſtie of ſuch as gathered falſe accuſatiõs againſt Iohn Hus.

The 15. Article. Iohn Hus doth openly teach and affirme that theſe concluſions aforeſayd are true. The aunſwere is manifeſt by that which I haue afore written. For ſome of theſe propoſitions I did write and publiſhe, other ſome my enemy did fayne, now adding, then diminiſhing and taking away, now falſely aſcribing and imputing the whole propoſition vnto me: the which thing the commiſſioners themſelues did confeſſe before me. whome I deſired for the falſe inuention and fayning of thoſe Articles, that they would puniſh thoſe, whom they thẽſelues knew and confeſſed to be mine enemies.

16. Article.

The 16. Article. Hereby alſo it appeareth, that it is not true which they haue affirmed in the article followyng: that is to ſay, that all the aforeſayd concluſions be falſe, erronious, ſeditious, and ſuch as do weaken and make feeble the power and ſtrength of the Churche, inuented contrary to the holy Scriptures and the Churche. But if there be any ſuch, I am ready moſt humbly to reuoke and recant the ſame.

17. Article.

The 17. Article. There was alſo an obiection made agaynſt me as touching the Treatiſes whiche I wrote agaynſt Paletz and Staniſlaus de Znoyma. The which I deſired for Gods ſake, they might be openly read in the audience of the whole Councell, and ſayd that I, notwithſtanding my former proteſtation, would willingly ſubmit my ſelfe to the iudgement of the whole Councell.

18. Article.

The 18. article. There was alſo an other article obiected agaynſt me in this forme. Item, Iohn Huſſe ſayd and preached that he ſhoulde goe to Conſtance, and if ſo be that for any maner of cauſe he ſhoulde be forced to recant that he had before taught, yet notwithſtanding he neuer purpoſed to doe it with his minde: for ſo much as what ſo euer he had before taught, was pure and true, and the ſounde doctrine of Chriſt. The aunſwere. This article is full of lyes: to the inuenter whereof I ſuppoſe the Lord ſayth thus: All the day long thou haſt imagined miſchiefe and wickedneſſe, and with thy toung as with a ſharpe raſour, thou haſt wrought deceypte. Thou haſt delighted and loued rather to talke of wickedneſſe and miſchiefe then of equity and iuſtice. Verely I do graunt that I left behinde me a certayne epiſtle to be read vnto the people, the which did conteine that all ſuch as did wey and conſider my carefull labors and trauelles, ſhould pray for me, and ſtedfaſtly perſeuere and continue in the doctrine of our Lord Ieſu Chriſt, knowing for a certainty that I neuer taught them any ſuch errours as mine enemies do impute or aſcribe vnto me, and if it ſhould happen that I were ouercome by falſe witneſſe, they ſhoulde not be vexed or troubled in their mindes, but ſtedfaſtlye continue in the truth.

19. Article.

The 19. Article. Laſt it was obiected agaynſt me, that after I was come into Conſtance, I did write vnto the Kingdome of Boheme, that the Pope and the Emperour receiued me honourablye and ſent vnto me two Byſhoppes to make agreement betweene me and them, and that thys ſeemeth to be wrytten by me to thys ende and purpoſe, that they ſhoulde confirme and eſtabliſhe me and my hearers in the errours, whiche I had preached and taught in Boheme. Thys Article is falſely alledged euen from the beginning. For how manifeſtly falſe ſhould I haue written yͤ the pope & the Emperour did honour me, when as otherwiſe I had written before, that as yet we knew not where yͤ Emperour was: and before the Emperour himſelfe came vnto Conſtance, I was by the ſpace of 3. weekes in pryſon. And to wryte that I was honoured by my impriſonment, the people of the kingdome of Boheme would repute the honour as no great renowne and glory vnto me. Howbeit my enemies may in deriſion ſay vnto me, that according to their willes & pleaſures, I am exalted and honored. wherfore this article is wholy throughout falſe and vntrue.

Articles 19. drawen out by the Pariſians againſt I. Hus.

John Gerſon Chauncelor of Paris.

Vnto theſe articles aboue prefixed, were other articles alſo to be annexed, which the Pariſians had drawne out agaynſt M. John Hus, to the number of 19. The chiefe author wherof, was John Gerſon Chauncellour of the vniuerſity of Paris, a great ſetter on of the Pope againſt good men. Of theſe articles John Hus doth often complayne in his Epiſtles that he had no time nor ſpace to make anſwere vnto them. which articles being falſly collected and wrongfully depraued although John Hus had no time to aunſwere vnto, yet I thought not vnfit here to ſet downe for the reader to ſee and iudge.

¶ Articles formally contayned or picked out of the Treatiſe of Iohn Hus of Prage, which he intituled of the Church folowing in this part or behalfe the errours they terme them of Iohn Wickelyffe.

1. The firſt article. No reprobate is true Pope, Lorde or Prelate. The errour is in the fayth and behauiour and manners, being both of late and many times before condemned, as well agaynſt the poore men of Lions, as alſo agaynſt the waldenſes and Pikardes. The affirmation of which error is temerarious, ſeditions, offenſiue and pernitious, and tending to the ſubuerſion of all humaine policy and gouernance, foraſmuch as no man knoweth whether he be worthy of loue or hatred, for that all men doe offend in many poyntes, and therby ſhoulde all rule and dominion be made vncertayne and vnſtable, if it ſhoulde be founded vpon predeſtination and charity: neither ſhoulde the commaundement of Peter haue bene good, which willeth all ſeruauntes to be obedient vnto their maiſters and Lordes although they be wicked.

2. The 2. article. That no man being in deadly ſinne, whereby he is no member of Chriſt, but of the Deuill, is true Pope, Prelate or Lord. The error of this is like vnto the firſt.

3. The 3. article. No reprobate or otherwiſe being in deadly ſinne, ſitteth in the Apoſtolicke ſeate of Peter, neither hath any Apoſtolical power ouer yͤ chriſtian people This error is alſo like vnto the firſt.

4. The 4. Article. No reprobrate are of the Church neither likewiſe any which doe not followe the life of Chriſt. This error is agaynſt the common vnderſtanding of the doctors, concerning the church.

5. The 5. Article. They onely are of the church, and ſit in Peters ſeat, and haue Apoſtolicke power whiche followe Chriſt and his Apoſtles in their life and liuing. The error hereof is in faith and maners, as in the firſt article, but contayning more arrogancy and raſhnes.

6. The 6. article. That euery man which liueth vprightly according to the rule of Chriſt may and ought openlye to preach and teach, although he be not ſent, yea although he be forbidden or excommunicate by any Prelate or Biſhop euen as he might and ought to geue almes: for his good life in liuing together with his learning doth ſufficientlye ſend him.

This is a raſh and temerarious errour offenſiue and tending to the confuſion of the whole eccleſiaſtical hierarchy.

7. The 7. article. That the Pope of Rome being contrary vnto Chriſt, is not the vniuerſall Biſhop, neither hath the church of Rome any ſupremacy ouer other Churches, except peraduenture it be geuen him of Ceſar, and not of Chriſt. An error lately and playnely reproued.

8. The 8. article. That the Pope ought not to be called moſt holy, neither that his feet are holy and bleſſed, or that they ought to be kiſſed. This error is temerarius vnreuerently and offenſiuely publiſhed.

9. The 9. article. That according vnto the doctrine of Chriſt, heretickes, be they neuer ſo obſtinate or ſtubburne, ought not to be put to death, neither to be accurſed or excōmunicated. This is the error of the Donatiſtes, temerariouſly, and not without great offence affirmed agaynſt the lawes of the eccleſiaſticall diſcipline as S. Auguſtine doth proue.

10. The 10. Article. That ſubiectes and the common people may and ought publickly and openly to detect and reproue the vices of their ſuperiours and rulers, as hauing power geuen them of Chriſt, and example of Saynt Paul ſo to doe: this error is pernitious, full of offence, inducing all rebellion, diſobedience and ſedition, and the curſe and malediction of Cham.

11. The 11. article. That Chriſt onely is head of the church and not the Pope. It is an errour accordyng vnto the cōmon vnderſtanding of the Doctors, if all the reaſon of the ſupremacy, and of being head be ſecluded and taken away from the Pope.

12. The 12. article. That the onely church which comprehendeth the predeſtinate and good liuers, is the vniuerſall Church, whereunto ſubiectes do owe obedience. And this is conſequent vnto the former article. The error is conteined as in the former articles.

13. The 13. article. That tithes and oblations geuen vnto the Church are publicke and common almes. This error is offencive, and contrary to the determination of the Apoſtle. 1. Cor. 9. chapter.

14. The 14. article. That the clergy liuing wickedly, ought to be reproued and corrected by the lay people by the taking away of theyr tithes and other temporall profites. A moſt pernicious errour and offenciue, inducing the ſecular people to perpetrate ſacriledge ſubuerting the eccleſiaſticall liberty.

15. The 15. article. That the bleſſinges of ſuch as are reprobate or euill liuers of the clergye are maledictions and curſinges before God according to the ſaying. I will curſe your bleſſinges. This error was lately reproued of Saynt Auguſtine, agaynſt Saynct Cyprian and his followers, neither is the maiſter of the ſentences allowed of the mayſters in that poynt that he ſemeth to fauor this article.

16. The 16. article. That in theſe dayes and in long tyme before, there hath bene no true Pope, no true Church, or fayth, which is called the Romiſhe Churche, whereunto a man ought to obey, but that it both was and is the ſinagogue of Antichriſt and Sathan. The errour in this article is in this poynt that it is deriued, and taketh his foundation vpon the former articles.

17. The 17. article. That all gift of money geuen vnto the miniſters of the Church, for the miniſtration of any ſpirituall matter, it doth make ſuch miniſters in that caſe vſers of Simony. This errour is ſeditious and temerarius, for ſo much as ſome thing may be geuen vnto the clergy, vnder the title of ſuſtentation or mayntaynyng the miniſter, without the ſelling or buying of any ſpirituall thing.

18. The 18. article. That whoſoeuer is excommunicate of the pope if he appeale vnto Chriſt, he is preſerued that he need not feare the excommunication, but vtterlye to contemne and deſpiſe the ſame. This errour is temerarious and full of arrogancy.

19. The 19. article. That euery deed done with out charity is ſinne. This errour was reproued and reuoked before this time at Paris, ſpecially if it be vnderſtand of deadlye ſinne, for it is not neceſſarye that he whiche lacketh grace ſhould continually ſinne and offend a new. Albeit he be cōtinually in ſinne.

¶ This following, the Maiſters of Paris by theyr whole voyce and conſent did adde and adioyne vnto theſe ninetene articles, for theyr reaſon and determination.

We affirme that theſe articles aforeſayd are notoriouſly hereticall, and that they are iudicially to be condemned for ſuch, and diligently to be rooted out with theyr moſt ſeditious doctrines, leaſt they do infect other. For albeit they ſeeme to haue a zeale againſt the vices of the Prelates and the clergy, the which (the more is the pittye and griefe) do but to much abound, yet is it not according vnto learning, for a ſober and diſcreete zeale, ſuffereth and lamenteth thoſe ſinnes and offences, whiche he ſeeth in the houſe of God, that he cannot amend or take away, for vyces cannot be rooted out, and taken away by other vices and errours, for ſo much as Deuilles are not caſt out thorowe Belſabub, but by the power of God whiche is the holy Ghoſt, who willeth that in correction the meaſure and meane of prudence be alwayes kept, according to the ſaying. Marke, who, what, where and why, by what meanes and when, Prelates and Byſhoppes are bound vnder greeuous and expreſſe penaltyes of the lawe diligently and vigilancly to beare themſelues agaynſt the foreſayd errours and ſuch other like, and the mayntayners of them, for let it alwayes be well vnderſtand and noted that the errour which is not reſiſted is allowed, neither is there any doubt of priuie affinitie or ſocietie of him, which ſlacketh to withſtand a manifeſt miſchiefe.

These things are entermedled by the way vnder correction, as by way of doctrine.

John Gerſon Chauncellour of Paris, vnwoorthie.

THeſe things thus declared, a man may eaſily vnderſtand, that John Huſſe was not accuſed for holding any opinion contrary to the Articles of our faith, but becauſe hee did ſtoutly preach and teach againſt the kingdome of Antichriſt for the glorye of Chriſt, and the reſtoring of the Churche.

The wordes of the Cardinall of Cambray vnto I. Hus after his accuſation.

Now to returne vnto the ſtory: when as the firſt 39. articles, which I haue before rehearſed, were all read ouer together with their teſtimonies, the Cardinal of Cambray calling vnto John Hus, ſaid: thou haſt heard what greeuous and horrible crimes are laid againſt thee, and what a number of them there are: and now it is thy part to deuiſe with thy ſelfe what thou wilt do. Two waies are proponed and ſet before thee of the Councell, whereof the one of them, thou muſt of force and neceſſitie enter into.

A double inconuenience for I. Hus to fall in.

Firſt, that thou do humbly and meekely ſubmit thy ſelfe vnto the iudgement & ſentence of the Councel, that whatſoeuer ſhall be there determined by their cõmon voice and iudgement, thou wilt paciently beare and ſuffer the ſame. The which thing if thou wilt doe, we of our part both for the honour of the moſt gentle Emperour here preſent, and alſo for the honour of his brother the King of Boheme, & for thy owne ſauegard and preſeruation, will intreate and handle thee with as great humanitie, loue, and gentlenes, as we may. But if as yet thou art determined to defende any of thoſe Articles which wee haue propounded vnto thee, and doeſt deſire or require to be further heard thereupon, we will not denie thee power and licence thereunto: but this thou ſhalt well vnderſtand that heere are ſuch maner of men, ſo cleare in vnderſtãding and knowledge, and hauing ſo firme and ſtrong reaſons and argumentes againſt thy articles: that I feare it will be to thy greate hurt, detriment, and perill, if thou ſhouldeſt any longer will or deſire to defend the ſame.

This do I ſpeake and ſay vnto thee to counſaile and admoniſh thee, and not as in maner of a iudge.

I. Hus aunſwereth.

This Oration of the Cardinals many other proſecuting, euery man for himſelfe, did exhort and perſuade John Hus to the like: vnto whom with a lowly countenance he aunſwered: Moſt reuerend fathers, I haue often ſaid that I came hither of mine owne free wil, not to the intent obſtinately to defende any thing, but if that in any thing I ſhould ſeeme to haue conceiued a peruerſe or euill opiniõ, that I would meekely and paciently be content to be reformed and taught. Whereupon I deſire that I may haue yet further libertie to declare my minde. Whereof except I ſhall alledge moſt firme & ſtrong reaſons, I wil willingly ſubmit my ſelfe (as you require) vnto your informatiõ.

Then there ſtart vp one, which with a loud voice ſayd: Behold how craftely this man ſpeaketh. He termeth it information and not correction or determination. Verely ſayd John Hus, euen as you will tearme it, information, correction, or determination: for I take God to my witnes, that I ſpeake nothing but with my hart and mind.

The Cardinal of Cambray appointeth I. Hus certaine conditions, wherby he may be deliuered.

Then ſayde the Cardinall of Cambray, forſomuch then as thou doeſt ſubmit thy ſelfe vnto the information and grace of this Councell, this is decreed almoſt by threeſcore Doctours, whereof ſome of them are now departed hence, in whoſe roome and place the Pariſians are ſucceeded: and alſo it is approued by the whole Councell, not one man ſpeaking the contrary thereunto.

Firſt of all, that thou ſhalt humbly and meekely confeſſe thy ſelfe to haue erred in theſe Articles, which are alledged and brought againſt thee.

Moreouer, that thou ſhalt promiſe by an othe, that frõ henceforth thou ſhalt not teach, holde, or maintayne anie of theſe Articles. And laſt of all that thou ſhalt openly recant all theſe Articles.

The anſwer of I. Hus.

Upon the which ſentence, when as many others had ſpoken their minds, at the length John Hus ſaid: I once againe do ſay, that I am redy to ſubmit my ſelfe to the informatiõ of the Councell: but this I moſt humbly require and deſire you all, euen for his ſake, which is yͤ God of vs all, that I be not cõpelled or forced to do the thing, which my conſcience doth repugne or ſtriue againſt, or the which I cannot do without danger of eternall damnation: that is, that I ſhould make reuocation by othe to all yͤ Articles which are alledged againſt me. For I remẽber yͭ I haue red in the booke of vniuerſalities, that to abiure is to renounce an error which a man hath before holden. And for ſo much as many of theſe Articles are ſayde to bee myne, which were neuer in my mind or thought to hold or teach, how ſhoulde I then renounce them by an othe? But as touching thoſe articles which are mine in deed, if there be any man which can teach me contrarywiſe vnto them, I will willingly performe that which you deſire.

The Emperour exhorteth Iohn Hus to recant.

Then ſaid the Emperour, why mayeſt not thou without danger alſo renounce all thoſe articles which thou saieſt are falſly alleged againſt thee by the witneſſes? For I verily would nothing at al doubt to abiure all errors, neither doth it follow that therfore by and by I haue profeſſed any errour. To whom John Hus anſwered: Moſt noble Emperour, this word to abiure, doth ſignifie much otherwiſe then your maieſty doth heere vſe it. Then ſayde the Cardinall of Florence: John Hus, you ſhall haue a forme of abiuration, which ſhal be gentle and tollerable inough, written and deliuered vnto you, and then you will eaſily & ſone determine wͭ your ſelfe, whither you will do it or no.

The Emperour rehearſeth the Cardinall of Cãbrayes wordes.

Then the Emperour repeating againe the wordes of the Cardinall of Cambray, ſaid: thou haſt heard that there are two waies layd before thee. Firſt, that thou ſhouldeſt opẽly renounce thoſe thy errors, which are now cõdẽned, and ſubſcribe vnto the iudgement of the Councel, wherby thou ſhouldeſt try and find their grace and fauour. But if thou proceed to defend thy opiniõs, the Councell ſhal haue ſufficient, wherby according to their lawes & ordinances, they may decree and determine vpõ thee. To whom John Hus anſwered: I refuſe nothing (moſt noble Emperour) whatſoeuer yͤ Councell ſhall decree or determine vpõ me. This only one thing I except, that I do not offend God and my cõſcience, or ſay that I haue profeſſed thoſe errors which was neuer in my mind or thought, for to profeſſe. But I deſire you al, if it may be poſſible, yͭ you will grant me further libertie to declare my mind and opiniõ, that I may anſwere as much as ſhall ſuffice, as touching thoſe things which are obiected againſt me, and ſpecially cõcerning eccleſiaſticall offices, and the ſtate of the miniſterie.

The force of falſe witnes.

But when as other men began to ſpeake, the Emperor himſelfe began to ſing the ſame ſong which he had ſong before. Thou art of lawfull age ſaid yͤ Emperor, thou mighteſt haue eaſily vnderſtand what I ſaide vnto thee yeſterday and this daye: for wee are forced to giue credit vnto theſe witneſſes which are worthy of credit: for ſo much as the Scripture ſaith, that in the mouth of two or three witneſſes, all truth is tried: How much more then by ſo manie witneſſes of ſuch worthy men.

The Emperour to Iohn Hus.

Wherfore if thou be wiſe, receiue penance at the handes of the Councell, with a contrite hart, and renounce the manifeſt errors, and promiſe by an othe that from henceforth thou wilt neuermore teach or preach againſte them. The which if thou refuſeſt to do, there are lawes and ordinances, whereby thou ſhalt be iudged of the Councell.

An olde biſhop of Pole.

Heere a certaine very old Biſhop of Pole put to his verdict. He ſaide the lawes are euident as touching heretickes, with what puniſhment they ought to be puniſhed. But John Hus conſtantly anſwered as before: in ſomuch that they ſaide he was obſtinate and ſtubborne. Then a certaine well fed prieſt and gaily apparelled, cried out vnto the preſidents of the Councell, ſayeng: he ought by no meanes to be admitted to recantation: for he hath written vnto his frends, that although hee do ſweare with hys tong, yet he will keepe his mind vnſworne without othe: wherefore he is not to be truſted. Unto this ſlander John Hus anſwered as is ſaid in the laſt Article, affirming that he was not guilty of any errour.

Obiection of a prieſt better fed then taught.

Pallet against Iohn Hus.

Then ſaid Palletz, to what end is this proteſtation, for ſo much as thou ſaieſt that thou wilt defend no error, neyther yet Wickliffe, and yet doeſt defend him? When he had ſpoken theſe words, he brought forth for witnes 9. Articles of John Wickliffes, and red thẽ openly: & afterward he ſaide: when as I and M. Staniſlaus in the preſence of Erneſtus of Auſtrich duke of Prage, preached againſt thẽ, he obſtinately defended the ſame, not only by his ſermõs, but alſo by his bookes which he ſet forth. The which except you do here exhibite, we will cauſe them to be exhibited. So ſaid the Emperor alſo. Unto whome John Hus anſwered, I am very well contented that not onely thoſe, but alſo all other my bookes be brought forth and ſhewed.

A new heape of ſlaunders.

In the meane time there was exhibited vnto the Cõcell a certaine Article, wherein John was accuſed, that he had ſlaunderouſly interpreted a certaine ſentence of the Popes: the which he denied that he did, ſaieng, that he neuer ſawe it, but in priſon, when as the Article was ſhewed him by the Commiſſioners. And when he was demaunded who was the authour thereof, he aunſwered that hee knew not, but that he hard ſay that maiſter Jeſſenitz was the author thereof.

What (ſayd they) then do you thinke or iudge of the interpretation thereof? Then aunſwered Iohn Hus, what ſhould I ſay thereunto, when as I ſaid I neuer ſaw it, but as I haue heard it of you. Thus they were all ſo greuous and troubleſome vnto him, that he waxed faint & wearie, for he had paſſed all yͤ night before without ſleepe, through the paine of his teeth.

I. Hus waxeth faint and weary.

An other quarel againſt I. Hus, touching theſe three men beheaded at Prage. Vide ſupra. pag. 590.

Then was there another Article read, in the which was conteined that three men were beheaded at Prage, becauſe that through Wickleffes doctrine and teaching, they were contumelious and ſlanderous againſt the Popes letters: and that they were by the ſame Hus, with the whole pompe of the Scholers, and with a publike conuocation or congregation caryed out to be buryed, & by a publicke Sermon placed amongſt the number of Saints. And the ſame Doctour Naſo, of whome you haue heard certaine teſtimonies already recited, affirmed the ſame to be true, and that he himſelfe was preſent, when as the king of Boheme commanded thoſe blaſphemers ſo to be puniſhed.

I. Hus belied.

Ex puris affirmatiuis non conſiſtit. argum. in 2 figura.

Then ſaid Iohn Hus: both thoſe partes are falſe, that the King did command any ſuch puniſhment to be done, and that the coarſes were by me conueyed with any ſuch pompe vnto their ſepulture or buriall: wherefore you do both iniury vnto me and the King. Then Palletz confirmed the affirmation of Doctour Naſo, his fellow, with this argumēt (for they both laboured to one end and purpoſe:) That it was prouided by the Kings commaundement, that no man ſhould once ſpeake againſt the Popes Bulles: And theſe three ſpake againſt yͤ Popes Bulles: Ergo, by vertue of the kings commanndement they were beheaded. And what Iohn Huſſe his opinion and mind was as touching theſe men, it is euident inough by hys booke intituled Of the Church, wherein he writeth thus: I beleeue they haue read Daniell the Prophet, where as is ſaid: And they ſhall periſh with ſword and fire, and with captiuitie, and many ſhall fraudulently & craftely aſſociate themſelues vnto thē. And afterward he ſaith: how is this fulfilled in theſe two lay men, who not cōſenting, but ſpeaking againſt the fained lies of Antichriſt, haue offred their liues therfore, and many other were ready to do the ſame, and many were fraudulently aſſociate vnto them, which being feared by the threatnings of Antichriſt, are fled, and haue turned their backes, &c.

When theſe things were read, one looking vpon another, as though they had bene all in a maruellous ſtrange ſtudy, they held their peace for a certaine ſpace. For this Palletz, & the foreſaide Doctour Naſo had alſo added that Iohn Hus in an ouen Sermon had inflamed & ſtirred vp the people againſt yͤ Magiſtrates, in ſo much that a great number of the citizens did openly ſet themſelues againſt yͤ magiſtrates: and by yͭ meanes was it, that he ſaid thoſe iij. were ready to ſuffer death for the truth. And this ſedition was hardly appeaſed by any benefite, or help that the king could do. Then the Engliſhmē exhibited the copy of a certaine Epiſtle, which they ſaide was falſely conueyed vnto Prage, vnder yͤ title of the Vniuerſitie of Oxford, & that Iohn Hus did reade the ſame out of yͤ Pulpit vnto yͤ people, that he might cōmend and praiſe Iohn Wickleffe vnto the Citizens of Prage. When they had read the ſame before the Councell, the Engliſhmen demaunded of Iohn Hus, whether he had read the ſame openly or no. Which whē he had confeſſed, becauſe it was brought thether by two ſcholers vnder the ſeale of the Vniuerſitie: they alſo inquired of him what ſcholers they were. He aunſwered: this my frend (meaning Stephen Palletz) knoweth the one of them as well as I, the other I know not what he was.

An other quarel picked by Engliſhe men againſt Iohn Hus

The teſtimonial of Oxford, for Wikliff brought to Prage.

Then they firſt enquired of him, as touching the laſt man, where he was. Iohn Hus aunſwered: I heard ſay (ſaid he) that in his returne into England, he died by the way. As touching the firſt, Palletz ſaid, that he was a Bohemian, and no Engliſhman, and that he brought out of England a certaine ſmall peece of the ſtone of Wickleffes ſepulchre, which they that are yͤ followers of his doctrine at this preſent, do reuerence and worſhip as a thing moſt holy. Hereby it appeareth for what intent all theſe things were done, and that Iohn Hus was the author of thē all.

A peece of the ſtone of Wickliffes ſepulchre brought for a relique to Prage.

Then the Engliſhmen exhibited another Epiſtle, contrary to the firſt, vnder the ſeale of the Vniuerſitie, the effect and argument whereof was this: The Senate of the vniuerſitie, not without great ſorrow and griefe hath experimented & found that the errours of Wickleffe are ſcattered, & ſpread out of yͤ Vniuerſitie throughout all England. And to the intent that through their helpe & labour, meanes may be found to remedy this miſchiefe, they haue appointed for that purpoſe twelue Doctours, men of ſinguler learning, and other maiſters, which ſhould ſit in iudgement vpon the bookes of Wickleffe.

Theſe men haue noted out aboue th[illegible]umber of C C. articles, the which the whole Vniuerſitie haue iudged worthy to be burnt: but for the reuerence of the ſaid ſacred Councell, the ſaid Vniuerſitie hath ſent them vnto Conſtance, referring and remitting the whole authoritie of the iudgement vnto this Councell.

Heere was great ſilence kept for a while. Then Palletz riſing vp, as though he had finiſhed now his accuſation, ſaid: I take God to my witnes before the Emperours maieſtie here preſent, & the moſt reuerend fathers, Cardinals and Biſhops, that in this accuſation of Iohn Hus, I haue not vſed any hatred or euill will: but that I might ſatiſfie the othe which I tooke, when I was made Doctour, that I would be a moſt cruell and ſharpe enemie of all maner of errours, for the profite and commoditie of the holy Catholike Church. Michaell de Cauſis did alſo the like. And I, ſaid Iohn Hus, do commit all theſe things vnto the heauenly Iudge, which ſhall iuſtly iudge yͤ cauſe or quarell of both parties. Then ſaide the Cardinall of Cambray, I cannot a little commend and praiſe the humanitie and gentlenes of Maiſter Palletz, which he hath vſed in drawing out the articles againſt maiſter Iohn Hus. For as we haue heard, there are many things conteined in his booke, much worſe and deteſtable.

The othe of Palletz.

The othe of Michael de Cauſis.

Iohn Hus witneſſeth the Lord.

When he had ſpoken theſe words, the Byſhop of Rygen vnto whom Iohn Hus was committed, commanded that the ſaid Iohn Hus, ſhould be carried againe ſafely vnto priſon. Then Iohn de Clum folowing him, did not a little incourage and comfort him. No toung can expreſſe what a courage and ſtomacke he receiued by the ſhorte talke which he had with him: when as in ſo great a broile and greuous hatred, he ſaw himſelfe in a maner forſaken of all men. After that Iohn Hus was caried away, the Emperour began to exhort the preſidents of the Councell in this maner, ſaieng:

I. de Clum doth cōfort Iohn Hus.

YOu haue heard the manifold and greuous crimes which are layd againſt Iohn Hus, which are not onely prooued by manifeſt and ſtrong witneſſes, but alſo confeſſed by him: of the which euery one of them by my iudgement and aduiſe haue deſerued, and are worthy of death. Therefore, except he do recant them all, I iudge and thinke meete that he be puniſhed with fire: and albeit he doo that which hee is willed and commanded to do: notwithſtanding I do counſell you, that he be forbid the office of preaching and teaching, and alſo that he returne no more into the kingdome of Boheme. For if he bee admitted againe to teach and preach, and ſpecially in the kingdome of Boheme, hee will not obſerue and keepe that which he is commaunded, but hoping vpon the fauour and good will of ſuch as be his adherents and fautours there, he will returne againe vnto his former purpoſe and intent, and then beſides theſe errours, he will alſo ſow new errours amongſt the people, ſo the laſt errour ſhall be worſe than the firſt.

The Emperours oratiō to the preſident of the councell.

Moreouer, I iudge and thinke it good that his articles which are condemned, ſhould be ſent vnto my brother the king of Boheme, and afterward into Pole and other prouinces, whereas mens minds are repleniſhed with his doctrine, with this commandement, that whoſoeuer do proceed to hold or keepe the ſame, they ſhould by the common ayde both of the Eccleſiaſticall and Ciuill power, be puniſhed. So at the length ſhall remedy bee founde for this miſchiefe, if the boughes together with the roote, be vtterly rooted and pulled vp: and if the Byſhops and other Prelates, which heere in this place haue laboured and trauelled for the extirpating of this hereſie, be commended by the whole voices of the Councell vnto the Kings and Princes, vnder whoſe dominion they are. Laſt of all, if there be any founde heere at Conſtance, which are familiars vnto Iohn Hus, they alſo ought to be puniſhed with ſuch ſeueritie and puniſhment as is due vnto them, and ſpecially his ſcholer Hierome of Prage. Then ſaide the reſt, when the maiſter is once puniſhed, we hope wee ſhall finde the Scholer much more tractable and gentle.

That which god plāteth man ſhall neuer roote vp

Hierome of Prage mentioned and promoted by the Emperour.

After they had ſpoken theſe wordes, they departed out of the Cloyſter, where they were aſſembled and gathered together. The day before his condemnation, which was the ſixt of Iuly, the Emperour Sigiſmond ſent vnto him foure Biſhops, accompanied with maiſter Wencelate de Duba, and Iohn de Clum, that they ſhould learne and vnderſtand of him what he did intend to do. When as hee was brought out of priſon vnto them, Iohn de Clum began firſt to ſpeake vnto him, ſaieng.

4. Biſhops ſent to Iohn Hus.

MAiſter Iohn Hus, I am a man vnlearned, neither am I able to counſell or aduertiſe you, being a man of learning and vnderſtanding: notwithſtanding I do require you, if you know your ſelfe giltie of any of thoſe errours, which are obiected and laid againſt gainſt you before the Councell, that you will not be aſhamed to alter & change your mind to the will and pleaſure of the Councell: if cõtrarywiſe, I will be no author vnto you, that you ſhould do any thing contrary or againſt your conſcience, but rather to ſuffer and endure any kinde of puniſhment, than to denie that which you haue knowne to be the truth. Vnto whome, Iohn Hus turning himſelfe, with lamentable teares, ſayd: verely as before I haue often times done, I do take the moſt high God for my witnes, that I am ready with my whole hart and minde, if the Councell can inſtruct or teach me any better by the holy Scripture: I will be ready with all my hart to alter and change my purpoſe. Then one of the Byſhops which ſate by, ſayde vnto him, that hee would neuer be ſo arrogant or proude, that he would prefer his owne mind or opinion before the iudgemẽt of the whole Councell. To whome Iohn Hus aunſwered, neither doo I otherwiſe minde or intend. For if he which is the meaneſt or leaſt in all this Councell, can conuict me of errour, I will with an humble hart and mind performe and do whatſoeuer the Councell ſhall require of me. Marke ſaid the Biſhops, how obſtinately he doth perſeuer in his errours. And when they had thus talked, they commaunded the keepers to cary him againe vnto priſon, and ſo they returned againe vnto the Emperour with their commiſſion.

The pitifull and louing oration of I. de Clum vnto I. Hus.

The maruelous conſtance of Iohn Hus.

That is no right modeſtie that more regardeth to obey man, then manifeſt veritie.

Iohn Hus aunſwereth.

The next day after, which was Saterday, and the ſixte day of July, there was a generall Seſſion holden of the Princes and Lords, both of the Eccleſiaſtiall and Temporall eſtates in ŷ head Church of the Citie of Conſtance, the Emperour Sigiſmund being Preſident in his Imperiall robes and habite: in the middeſt whereof, there was made a certaine high place being ſquare about like a table, and hard by it there was a deſke of wood, vpon the which the garments and veſtiments pertaining vnto Prieſthode were laide, for this cauſe, that before John Huſſe ſhould be deliuered ouer vnto the Ciuill power, he ſhould be openly depriued and ſpoiled of his Prieſtly ornaments. when John Huſſe was brought thether, he fell downe vpon his knees before that ſame high place, and praied a long time. In the meane while ŷ Biſhop of Londy went vp into the Pulpit, and made this Sermon following.

⁂ The Sermon of the Byſhop of Londy, before the ſentence was giuen vpon Iohn Huſſe.

IN the name of the Father, the Sunne, and of the holy Ghoſt. Truſting by humble inuocation vpon the diuine helpe and ayde, moſt noble Prince, and moſt Chriſtian Emperour, and you moſt excellent Fathers, and reuerend Lords, Byſhops, and Prelates, alſo moſt excellent Doctours and Maiſters, moſt famous and noble Dukes and high Countes, honourable Nobles, and Barons, and all other men woorthie of remembraunce: that the intent and purpoſe of my minde may the more plainelie and euidently appeare vnto this moſt ſacred congregation, I am firſt of all determined to intreate or ſpeake of that which is read in the Epiſtle on the next Sonday, in the ſixt Chapter to the Romaines. That is to ſay: Let the bodie of ſinne be deſtroied, &c.

The ſermon before the ſentence.

The theame

His theame confirmed by Ariſtotle.

It appeareth by the authoritie of Ariſtotle, in his booke intituled De cælo & mundo, how wicked, dangerous, and fooliſh a matter it ſeemeth to be, not to withſtand peruerſe and wicked beginnings. For he ſaith, that a ſmall errour in the beginning, is very great in the end. It is very damnable and dangerous to haue erred, but more hard to be corrected or amended. Whereupon that worthy Doctour S. Hierome, in his booke vpon the expoſition of the Catholicke faith, teacheth vs how neceſſarie a thing it is, that heretickes and hereſies ſhould be ſuppreſſed, euen at the firſt beginning of them, ſaieng thus: the rotten and dead fleſh is to be cut off from the body, leaſt that the whole body doo periſh and putrifie. For a ſcabbed ſheepe is to be put out of the fold, leaſt the whole flocke be infected. And a little fire is to be quenched, leaſt the whole houſe be conſumed and burned. Arrius was firſt a ſparke in Alexandria, who becauſe hee was not at the firſt quenched, he preſumed and went about with his wicked and peruerſe imaginations, and phantaſticall inuentions, to ſpot and defile the Catholicke faith, which is founded and eſtabliſhed by Chriſt, defended with the victorious triumphes of ſo manie Martirs, and illuminate and ſet foorth with the excellent doctrines and writings of ſo manie men. Such therefore muſt be reſiſted: ſuch heretickes of neceſſitie muſt be ſuppreſſed and condemned.

Wherefore I haue truely propounded, as touching the puniſhment of euery ſuch obſtinate hereticke, that the body of ſin, is to be deſtroied. Whereupon it is to be conſidered according vnto the holy traditions of the fathers, that ſome ſins are aduerſe and contrarie vnto another. Otherſome are annexed or conioyned together: otherſome are, as it were, branches and members of others. And ſome are as it were the rootes and head of others. Amongſt all which, thoſe are to be counted the moſt deteſtable, out of the which the moſt and worſt, haue their originall and beginning. Wherefore, albeit that all ſinnes and offences are to be abhorred of vs: yet thoſe are ſpecially to be eſchewed, which are the head and roote of the reſt. For by how much the peruerſenes of them is of more force and power to hurt, with ſo much the more ſpeede and circumſpection, ought they to be rooted out and extinguiſhed, with apt preſeruatiues and remedies. For ſo much then as amongſt all ſinnes none doth more appeare to be inueterate, then the miſchiefe of this moſt execrable Schiſme, therefore haue I right well propounded, that the bodie of ſinne ſhould be deſtroied. For by the long continuance of this Schiſme, great and moſt cruell deſtruction is ſproong vp amongſt the faithfull, and hath long continued, abhominable diuiſions of hereſies are growne: threatnings are increaſed and multiplied: the confuſion of the whole Cleargie is growne thereupon, and the opprobries and ſclaunders of the Chriſtian people are aboundantlie ſproong vp and increaſed. And truely it is no maruell, for ſo much as that moſt deteſtable and execrable Schiſme, is as it were, a bodie and heape of diſſolution of the true faith of God: for what can be good or holie in that place, where as ſuch a peſtiferous Schiſme hath raigned ſo long a time? For as Sainct Bernard ſayth, like as in the vnitie and concord of the faithfull, there is the habitation and dwelling of the Lord, ſo likewiſe in the Schiſme and diſſipation of the Chriſtians, there is made the habitation and dwelling of the Diuell. Is not Schiſme and deuiſion the originall of all ſubuerſion, the denne of hereſies, and the nouriſher of all offences? for the knot of vnitie and peace being once troubled and broken, there is free paſſage made for all ſtrife and debate. Couetouſnes is vttered in othes for lukers ſake, luſt and will is ſet at libertie, and all meanes opened vnto ſlaughter. All right and equitie is baniſhed, the Eccleſiaſticall power is iniuried, and the calamitie of this Schiſme bringeth in all kinde of bondage, ſwords and violence doth rule, the laitie haue the dominion, concord and vnitie are baniſhed, and all preſcript rules of Religion vtterly contemned and ſet at naught.

They cannot abide the laitie to rule in any caſe.

Conſider moſt gentle Lords, how that during this moſt peſtiferous Schiſme, how manie hereſies haue appeared and ſhewed themſelues, how manie heretickes haue ſcaped vnpuniſhed, how manie Churches haue beene ſpoiled and pulled downe, how manie Cities haue beene oppreſſed, and regions brought to ruine, what confuſion hath there happened in the Cleargie? What and how great deſtruction hath bene amongſt the Chriſtian people? I pray you marke how the Church of God, the ſpouſe of Chriſt, and the mother of all faithfull, is contemned and deſpiſed. For who doth reuerence the keies of the Church, who feareth the cenſures or lawes, or who is it that doth defend the liberties thereof? But rather who is it, that doth not offend the ſame, or who doth not inuade it, or elſe what is he that dare not violentlie lay hands vpon the patrimonie or heritage of Ieſus Chriſt? The goods of the Cleargie, and of the poore, and the reliefe of Pilgrimes and ſtraungers, gotten together by the bloud of our Sauiour, and of manie Martyres, are ſpoyled and taken awaie, behold the abhomination of the deſolation brought vpon the Church of God, the deſtruction of the faith, and the confuſion of the Chriſtian people, to the ruine of the Lordes flocke or folde, and all the whole companie of our moſt holy Sauiour and redeemer. This loſſe is more great or greeuous then anie which could happen vnto the Martires of Chriſt, and thys perſecution much more cruell then the perſecution of anie tyrants, for they did but only puniſh the bodies, but in this ſchiſme, and diuiſion the ſoules are tormented. There the bloud of men was only ſhed, but in this caſe the true faith is ſubuerted and ouerthrowne. That perſecution was ſaluation vnto many: but this Schiſme is deſtruction vnto all men. When the tirants raged, then the faith did increaſe: but by this diuiſion it is vtterly decaied. During their crueltie and madnes, the primatiue Church increaſed, but through this ſchiſme it is confounded and ouerthrowne. Tiraunts did ignorantly offende: but in this ſchiſme many do wittingly and willingly euen of obſtinacie offend. There came in heretikes, vſers of Symonie, and hypocrites, to the great detriment and deceit of the Church: vnder thoſe tirants the merites of the iuſt were increaſed.

All the popiſhe religion lieth in landes, lordſhips and liberties.

Note here the popes diuinitie, how the bloud of chriſt ſerueth to purchaſe their patrimonie.

But during this Schiſme, miſchiefe and wickednes are augmented, for in this moſt curſed and execrable diuiſion, truth was made an enimie vnto all Chriſtians, faith is not regarded, loue and charitie hated, hope is loſt, iuſtice ouerthrowne, no kinde of courage or valiantnes, but onely vnto miſchiefe: modeſtie and temperance cloked, wiſedome turned into deceit, humilitie fained, equitie and truth falſified, pacience vtterly fled, conſcience ſmall, all wickednes intended, deuotion counted folly, gentlenes abiect and caſt away, religion deſpiſed, obedience not regarded, and all maner of life reprochfull and abhominable. With how great and greeuous ſorowes is the Church of God repleniſhed & filled, whiles that tirants do oppreſſe it, heretikes inuade it, vſers of Symonie do ſpoile and rob it, and ſchiſmatikes go about vtterly to ſubuert it? O moſt miſerable and wretched chriſtian people, whome now by the ſpace of forty yeares, with ſuch indurate and continuall ſchiſme, they haue tormented and almoſt brought to ruine. O the little barke and ſhip of Chriſt, whiche hath ſo long time wandred and ſtraied now in the middeſt of the whorlepooles, and by and by ſticketh faſt in the rocks, toſſed too and fro with moſt greeuous and tempeſtuous ſtormes. O miſerable and wretched boate of Peter, if the moſt holy father would ſuffer thee to ſinke or drowne, into what dangers and perils haue the wicked pirates brought thee? amongſt what rockes haue they placed thee? O moſt godly and louing Chriſtians, what faithfull deuout man is there, which beholding and ſeeing the great ruine and decay of the Church, would not be prouoked vnto teares? what good conſcience is there that can refraine weeping? becauſe that contention and ſtrife is powred vpon the eccleſiaſticall rulers, which haue made vs to erre in the way: becauſe they haue not founde, or rather would not finde the way of vnitie and concord: Whereupon ſo many hereſies and ſo great confuſion is ſproong vp, and growne in the flocke of Peter, and the fold of our Lord.

This Schiſme cõtinued 40. yeares

He ſtirreth vp the Emperour. Sigiſmund.

Many Princes, Kings and Prelates, haue greatly laboured and trauelled for the rooting out heereof, but yet could they neuer bring to paſſe, or finiſh that moſt holeſome and neceſſary worke. Wherefore moſt Chriſtian King, this moſt glorious and triumphant victory hath tarried only for thee, the crowne and glorie therof ſhal be thine for euer, and this moſt happy victory ſhall be continually celebrate to thy great honour and praiſe, that thou haſt reſtored againe the Church which was ſo ſpoiled, thou haſt remoued and put away all inueterate and ouergrowne Schiſmes and diuiſions, thou haſt troden downe vſers of Symony, & rooted out all hereticks. Doeſt thou not behold & ſee how great perpetuall and famous renowne & glory it wil be vnto thee? For what can be more iuſt, what more holy, what more better, what more to be deſired, or finally, what can be more acceptable, than to roote out this wicked and abhominable Schiſme, to reſtore the Church againe vnto hir auncient libertie, to extinguiſh and put away all Simony, and to condemne and deſtroy all errours and hereſies from amongſt the flocke of the faithfull? Nothing truly can be better, nothing more holy, nothing more profitable for the whole worlde, and finally, nothing more acceptable vnto God. For the performance of which moſt holy and godly worke, thou waſt elect and choſen of God, thou waſt firſt deputed and choſen in heauen, before thou waſt elect and choſen vpon earth. Thou waſt firſt appointed by the celeſtiall and heauenly Prince, before the electours of the Empire did elect or chooſe thee, and ſpecially, that by the Imperiall force and power, thou ſhouldeſt condemne and deſtroy thoſe errours and hereſies, which wee haue preſently in hand to be condemned and ſubuerted. To the performance of this moſt holy worke, God hath giuen vnto thee the knowledge & vnderſtanding of his diuine truth and veritie, power of princely maieſtie, and the iuſt iudgement of equitie and righteouſnes, as the moſt higheſt himſelfe doth ſay: I haue geuen thee vnderſtãding and wiſedome, to ſpeake and vtter my words, and haue ſet thee to rule ouer nations and kingdomes, that thou ſhouldeſt helpe the people, plucke down and deſtroy iniquitie, & by exerciſing of iuſtice, thou ſhouldeſt, I ſay, deſtroy all errours and hereſies, and ſpecially this obſtinate heretike heere preſent, through whoſe wickednes & miſchiefe, many places of the world are infected with moſt peſtilent and hereticall poiſon, and by his meanes and occaſion, almoſt vtterly ſubuerted & deſtroyed. This moſt holy and godly labour, O moſt noble Prince, was reſerued only for thee, vpon thee it doth only lye, vnto whome the whole rule and miniſtration of iuſtice is giuen. Wherfore thou haſt eſtabliſhed thy praiſe & renowne, euen by the mouthes of infants & ſucking babes, for thy praiſes ſhall be celebrate for euermore that thou haſt deſtroied & ouerthrowne ſuch and ſo great enimies of the faith. The which that thou maiſt proſperouſly & happely performe & bring to paſſe, our Lord Ieſu Chriſt may vouchſafe to grant thee his grace & help, who is bleſſed for euer & euer, Amen.

The proctor of the councell calleth for the ſentence.

When this Sermon was thus ended, the Procurer of the Councell riſing vp, named Henricus de Piro, required that the proceſſe of the cauſe againſt Iohn Hus might be continued, and proceed vnto the difinitiue ſentence. Then a certaine Byſhop, whych was appointed one of the Iudges, declared the proceſſe of the cauſe, which was pleaded long ſince in the Court of Rome and elſewhere, betweene Iohn Hus, and the Prelates of Prage.

The Cardinall of Cãbray cõmãded Iohn Hus. to keepe ſilence. Iohn Hus could not be heard in the councell.

At the laſt he repeated thoſe articles which we haue before remembred, amongſt the which he rehearſed alſo one article, that I. Hus ſhoulde teach the two natures of the Godhead and manhead to be one Chriſt. Iohn Hus went about briefly with a word or two to aunſwer vnto euerie one of them, but as often as he was about to ſpeake, the Cardinall of Cambray cõmanded him to hold his peace, ſaieng: heereafter you ſhall anſwere to all together, if you will. Then ſaid Iohn Hus, how can I at once aunſwere vnto all thoſe things which are alledged againſt me, whẽ as I cannot remember them all? Then ſayde the Cardinall of Florence, we haue heard thee ſufficiently. But whẽ as I. Hus for all that, would not hold his peace, they ſent the officers which ſhould force him therunto. Then began he to intreate, pray, and beſeech them that they woulde heare him, that ſuch as were preſent, might not credite or beleeue thoſe things to be true which were reported of him. But when all this would nothing preuaile, he kneeling downe vpon his knees, committed the whole matter vnto God, and the Lord Ieſus Chriſt, for at their handes he beleeued eaſely to obtaine that which he deſired.

Iohn Hus committeth his cauſe to the Lord Chriſt.

When the articles aboueſaid were ended, laſt of all there was added a notable blaſphemy, which they all imputed vnto Iohn Hus. That is, that he ſaide there ſhoulde be a fourth perſon in diuinitie, and that a certaine Doctour did heare him ſpeake of the ſame. When Iohn Hus deſired that the Doctour might be named, the Biſhop which had alledged the article, ſaid, that it was not needefull to name him. Then ſaid Iohn Hus, O miſerable and wretched man that I am, which am forced and compelled to beare ſuch blaſphemy and ſlaunder.

Marke the vnſhamefaſtnes of thẽ to faine what they liſt.

Iohn Hus againe ſlaundered.

The counceel doth call it hereticall to appeale to Chriſt.

Afterward the Article was repeated, how he appealed vnto Chriſt, and that by name, was called hereticall. Whereunto Iohn Hus anſwered: O Lord Ieſu Chriſt, whoſe word is openly condemned heere in this Councell, vnto thee againe I do appeale: which when thou waſt euill intreated of thine enimies, diddeſt appeale vnto God thy father, committing thy cauſe vnto a moſt iuſt Iudge, that by thy example we alſo being oppreſſed with manifeſt wrongs and iniuries, ſhould flee vnto thee. Laſt of all, the Article was rehearſed, as touching the contempt of the excommunication by Iohn Hus. Whereunto he anſwered as before, that he was excuſed by his aduocates in yͤ court of Rome, wherefore he did not appeare when he was cited: and alſo that it may be proued by the actes, that the excommunication was not ratified: and finally, to the intent he might cleare himſelfe of obſtinacie, he was for that cauſe come vnto Conſtance, vnder the Emperours ſafeconduct. When he had ſpoken theſe words, one of them which was appointed Iudge, reade the definitiue ſentence againſt him, which followeth thus word for word.

Contempt of the popes excõmunication laide to Iohn Pus.

⁂ The ſentence or iudgement of the Councell of Conſtance geuen againſt Iohn Huſſe.

The ſẽtence read againſt Iohn Hus.

The moſt holy and ſacred generall Councell of Conſtance, being congregate and gathered together, repreſenting the Catholike Church for a perpetuall memory of the thing, as the veritie & truth doth witnes, an euill tree bringeth forth euill fruite: hereupon it commeth, that the man of moſt damnable memory Iohn Wickleffe, through his peſtiferous doctrine, not through Ieſu Chriſt by the Goſpell, as yͤ holy Fathers in times paſt, haue gottẽ faithfull children, but cõtrary vnto the holeſome faith of Ieſus Chriſt, as a moſt venemous roote, hath begotten many peſtilent & wicked children, whome he hath left behind him, ſucceſſours and folowers of his peruerſe and wicked doctrine, againſt whome this ſacred Synode of Conſtance is forced to riſe vp, as againſt baſtards and vnlawfull children, and with diligent care, with the ſharpe knife of the Eccleſiaſticall authoritie, to cut vp their errours out of the Lords field, as moſt hurtfull brambles and briers, leaſt they ſhould growe to the hurt and detriment of others.

For ſomuch then as in the holy generall Councell lately celebrated and holden at Rome, it was decreed that the docrine of I. Wickleffe of moſt damnable memory ſhould be condemned, & that his bookes which cõteined the ſame doctrine, ſhould be burned as hereticall, & this decree was approued & confirmed by the ſacred authoritie of yͤ whole Cõſcell: neuertheles one Iohn Hus here perſonally preſent in this ſacred Councell, not yͤ Diſciple of Chriſt, but of Iohn Wickliffe, an Archheretike, after, and contrary or againſt the cõdemnation and decree, hath taught, preached & affirmed the Articles of Wickleffe, which were condemned by the Church of God, and in times paſt by certaine moſt reuerend fathers in Chriſt, Lords, Archbiſhops, and Byſhops, of diuers kingdomes & Realmes, Maiſters of diuinitie of diuers Vniuerſities: eſpecially reſiſting in his open Sermons, and alſo with his adherents and complices in the ſcholes, the condemnation of the ſaid Articles of Wickleffes, oftentimes publiſhed in the ſaid Vniuerſitie of Prage, and hath declared him the ſaid Wickleffe, for the fauour and commendation of his doctrine, before yͤ whole multitude of the Cleargy and people, to be a Catholicke man, and a true Euangelical Doctour. He hath alſo publiſhed and affirmed, certaine & many of his Articles worthely condemned to be Catholicke, the which are notoriouſly conteined in the bookes of the ſaid Iohn Hus.

Wherfore, after diligent deliberation & full information firſt had vpon the premiſſes by the reuerend fathers and Lords in Chriſt of the holy Church of Rome, Cardinals, Patriarkes, Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and other Prelates, & Doctours of diuinitie and of both lawes in great number aſſembled and gathered together, this moſt ſacred & holie Councell of Conſtance declareth & determineth yͤ articles aboue ſaid (the which after due conference had, are found in his bookes written with his owne hand, the which alſo yͤ ſaid Iohn Hus in opē audience, before this holy Councell, hath confeſſed to be in his bookes) not to be Catholicke, neither worthy to be taught, but that many of them are erroneous, ſome of them to be wicked, otherſome to be offenſiue vnto godly eares, many of thē to be temerarious and ſeditious, and the greater part of them to be notoriouſly hereticall, and euē now of late by yͤ holy fathers and generall Councels, reproued & condēned. And for ſo much as yͤ ſaid Articles are expreſly conteined in the bookes of the ſaid Iohn Hus, therefore this ſaid * ſacred Councell, doth cōdemne & reproue all thoſe bookes which he wrote, in what forme or phraſe ſoeuer they be, or whether they be trāſlated by others, & doth determine and decree, that they all ſhall be ſolemnely & openly burned in the preſence of yͤ clergy & people of yͤ city of Conſtance, & elſewhere: adding moreouer for the premiſſes, that all his doctrine is worthy to be deſpiſed & eſchewed of all faithfull Chriſtians. And to the intent this moſt pernicious & wicked doctrine, may be vtterly excluded & ſhut out of the Church, this ſacred Synode doth ſtraightly cōmand, that diligent inquiſition be made by yͤ ordinaries of the places by the Eccleſiaſticall cenſure, for ſuch treatiſes and works, and that ſuch as are found, be conſumed & burned with fire. And if there be any found, which ſhall contemne or depiſe this ſentence or decree, this ſacred Synode ordeineth and decreeth that the ordinaries of the places, and the inquiſitours of hereſies, ſhal proceed againſt euery ſuch perſon as ſuſpect of hereſy.

* They ſhall bring you before their councells, they ſhall perſecute you, and caſt you in priſō and bring you before kings & preſidents for my nāe. &c. Luke, 21.

* The ſayde concilium malignantium.

Wherefore, after due inquiſition made againſt the ſayd Iohn Huſſe, and full information had by the Commiſſaries and Doctours of both lawes, and alſo by the ſaienges of the witneſſes which were worthy of credite, and many other things opēly read before the ſaid Iohn Hus, and before yͤ fathers and prelates of this ſacred Councell (by the which allegatiōs of the witneſſes it appeareth that yͤ ſayd Iohn Hus hath taught many euill & offenſiue, ſeditious, and perilous hereſies, and hath preached the ſame by a long time) this moſt ſacred & holy Synode lawfully congregate and gathered together in the holy Ghoſt, the name of Chriſt being inuocate & called vpon, by this their ſentence which here is ſet forth in writing, determineth, pronounceth, declareth, & decreeth, that Iohn Hus was and is a true and manifeſt hereticke, and that he hath preached openly errours & hereſies lately condemned by the church of God, and many other ſeditious, temerarious, & offenſiue things to no ſmall offence of the Diuine maieſtie, and of the vniuerſall Church, and detriment of the Catholicke faith & Church, neglecting and deſpiſing the keyes of the Church, & Eccleſiaſticall cenſures. In the which his errours he continued with a minde altogether indurate and hardned by the ſpace of many yeares, much offending the faithfull Chriſtians by his obſtinacie & ſtubburnes, when as he made his appeale vnto the Lord Ieſu Chriſt, as the moſt high iudge, omitting and leauing all Eccleſiaſticall meanes. In the which his appeale he alledged many falſe, iniurious, and offenſiue matters, in contempt of the Apoſtolicke ſea, and the Eccleſiaſticall cenſures and keyes.

Many ſhall come in my name and ſhal deceiue many. Marke 13.

To appeale to Chriſt is derogatory to the popes holynes.

Whereupon both for the premiſſes & many other things, the ſaid Synode pronounceth I. Hus to be an hereticke, & iudgeth him by theſe preſents to be condemned & iudged as an heretike, & reproueth yͤ ſaid appeal as iniurious, offenſiue, & done in deriſiō vnto yͤ eccleſiaſtical iuriſdictiō, & iudgeth the ſaid Hus, not only to haue ſeduced the chriſtian people by his writings & preachings, and ſpecially in the kingdome of Boheme, neither to haue bene a true preacher of the Goſpell of Chriſt vnto yͤ ſaid people, according to the expoſition of yͤ holy Doctours: but alſo to haue bene a ſeducer of them, & alſo an obſtinate and ſtifnecked perſon, yea and ſuch a one as doth not deſire to returne againe to the lappe of our holy mother the Church, neither to abiure the errours and hereſies which he hath openly preached and defended. Wherefore this moſt ſacred Councell decreeth and declareth that the ſaid Iohn Huſſe, ſhall be famouſly depoſed and diſgraded from his Prieſtly orders and dignitie, &c.

Veritie condemned for hereſie.

Whileſt theſe things were thus read, Iohn Huſſe, albeit he were forbidden to ſpeake, notwithſtāding he did often interrupt them, and ſpecially whē he was reproued of obſtinacie, he ſaid with a loude voice: I was neuer obſtinate, but as alwaies heretofore, euē ſo now againe I deſire to be taught by the holy Scriptures, and I do profeſſe my ſelfe to be ſo deſirous of yͤ truth, that if I might by one only word ſubuert the errours of all heretickes, I would not refuſe to enter into what peril or dāger ſoeuer it were. When his bookes were condēned, he ſaid: wherefore haue you cōdemned thoſe books, when as you haue not proued by any one Article, that they are cōtrary to the ſcriptures or Articles of faith? And moreouer, what iniury is this yͤ you do to me, that you haue cōdēned theſe bookes written in the Bohemian toung, which you neuer ſaw, neither yet read? And oftētimes looking vp vnto heauē, he prayed.

I. Hus cleareth himſelf of obſtinacy

They condemne the bokes written in the Bohemian tongue, which they neuer read.

Whē the ſentence and iudgement was ended, kneeling downe vpon his knees, he ſaid: Lord Ieſu Chriſt, forgeue mine enimies, by whome thou knoweſt that I am falſely accuſed, and that they haue vſed falſe witnes and ſlanders againſt me: forgeue them I ſay, for thy great mercies ſake. This his praier and oration the greater part, and ſpecially the chiefe of the Prieſts did deride and mocke.

Hus prayeth for his enemies.

At the laſt, the ſeuen Biſhops which were choſen out to diſgrade him of his prieſthood, commanded him to put on the garments pertaining vnto prieſthood, which thyng when he had done, vntill he came to the putting on of the Albe, he called to his remembraunce the white veſture which Herode put vpon Ieſus Chriſt to mock him withall. So likewiſe in al other things he did comfort himſelfe by the example of Chriſt. When he had now put on all his prieſtly veſtures, the Biſhops exhorted him that he ſhould yet alter and change his minde and purpoſe, and prouide for his honour and ſafegard. Then he (according as yͤ maner of the ceremony is) going vp to the top of the ſcaffold, being full of teares, hee ſpake vnto the people in this ſort.

I. Hus commanded to put on the prieſtes garmentes.

Theſe Lords and Biſhops do exhort and councell mee, that I ſhould heere confeſſe before you all that I haue erred, the which thing to do, if it were ſuch as might be done with the infamy and reproch of anye man, they might peraduenture eaſily perſwade me therunto: but now truly I am in the ſight of the lord my God, without whoſe great ignominy, and grudge of mine owne conſcience, I can by no meanes do that which they require of mee. For I doo well knowe, that I neuer taught any of thoſe thinges which they haue falſly alledged againſt mee, but I haue alwayes preached, taught, written, and thought contrary thereunto. With what countenance then ſhould I behold the heauens? with what face ſhould I looke vpon them, whome I haue taught, whereof there is a great number, if thorough me it ſhould come to paſſe that thoſe things which they haue hetherto knowne to bee moſt certaine and ſure, ſhould now be made vncertaine? Should I by this my example aſtoniſh or trouble ſo manye ſoules, ſo manye conſciences, endewed with the moſt firme and certaine knowledge of the Scriptures, and Goſpell of our Lord Ieſu Chriſt and his moſt pure doctrine, armed againſt all the aſſaults of Satan? I will neuer do it, neither commit any ſuch kinde of offence, that I ſhoulde ſeeme more to eſteeme this vile carcas appoynted vnto death, then their health and ſaluation. At this moſt godly worde he was forced againe to heare by the conſent of the Biſhops, that hee did obſtinately and maliciouſly perſeuere in his pernicious and wicked errours.

I. Hus his oration vnto the people.

Then he was commanded to come downe to the execution of his iudgement, and in his comming downe, one of the ſeauen Biſhops afore rehearſed, firſte tooke awaye the chalice from him which he helde in his hand, ſaieng: O curſed Iudas, why haſt thou forſakē the counſell & waies of peace, and haſt counſailed with the Iewes? we take away frō thee this chalice of thy ſaluation. But Iohn Hus receiued this curſe in this maner: but I truſt vnto God the father omnipotent, and my Lorde Ieſus Chriſt, for whoſe ſake I do ſuffer theſe things, that hee will not take away the chalice of his redemption, but haue a ſtedfaſt and firme hope that this day I ſhall drinke thereof in his kingdome. Then followed the other Biſhops in order, which euery one of them tooke away the veſtiments from him, which they had put on, eche one of them geuing hym their curſe. Whereunto Iohn Hus anſwered, that hee did willingly embrace and beare thoſe blaſphemies for the name of the Lord Ieſus Chriſt. At the laſt they came to the raſing of his ſhauen crowne. But before the Biſhops would go in hand with it, there was a great contention betweene them, with what inſtrument it ſhould be done, with a raſour, or with a paire of ſheares.

The diſgrading of Iohn Hus.

In the meane ſeaſon, Iohn Hus turning himſelfe toward the Emperour, ſaide: I maruell that forſomuch as they be all of like cruell minde and ſtomacke, yet they can not agree vpon their kinde of crueltie. Notwithſtanding, at the laſt they agreed to cut off the ſkinne of the crowne of his head with a paire of ſheares. And when they had done that, they added theſe words: now hath the Church taken away all her ornaments and priuilegies from hym. Now there reſteth nothing elſe, but that he be deliuered ouer vnto the ſecular power. But before they did that, there yet remained another knacke of reproch. For they cauſed to be made a certaine crowne of paper, almoſt a cubite deepe, in the which were painted three deuils of wonderfull ougly ſhape, and this title ſet ouer their heads, Hereſiarcha. The which when he ſaw, he ſayde: My Lord Ieſus Chriſt for my ſake did weare a crowne of thorne: why ſhould not I then for his ſake againe weare thys light crowne, be it neuer ſo ignominious? Truly I will do it, and that willingly. When it was ſet vpon his head, the Biſhops ſaide: now we commit thy ſoule vnto the deuill. But I, ſayde Iohn Huſſe (lifting his eies vp towardes the heauens) doo commit my ſpirite into thy handes: O Lord Ieſu Chriſt, vnto thee I commend my ſpirit which thou haſt redeemed. These contumelious opprobries thus ended, the Biſhops turning themſelues towards the Emperour, ſaid: This moſt ſacred Synode of Conſtance, leaueth now Iohn Huſſe, which hath no more any office, or to do in the Church of God, vnto the ciuill iudgement and power. Then the Emperour commaunded Lodouicus Duke of Bauaria, which ſtoode before him in his robes, holding the golden apple with the croſſe in his hande, that he ſhould receiue Iohn Huſſe of the Byſhops, and deliuer him vnto them which ſhould do the execution. By whome, as hee was led to the place of execution, before the Church doores hee ſawe his bookes burning, whereat hee ſmiled and laughed. And all men that he paſſed by, he exhorted, not to thinke that he ſhould dye for any errour or hereſie, but only for the hatred and ill will of his aduerſaries, which had charged him wyth moſt falſe and vniuſt crime. All the whole Citie in a maner being in armour, followed him.

The proteſtation of Iohn Hus as he was ledde to the place of execution.

The place appointed for the execution, was before the gate Gotlebian, betweene the gardens and the gates of the ſuburbs. When as Iohn Huſſe was come thether, kneeling downe vpon his knees, and lifting his eies vp vnto heauen, he praied, and ſaide certaine Pſalmes, and specially the 50. and 31. Pſalmes. And they which ſtoode by, heard him oftentimes in his praier, with a merrie and cheerefull countenance repeate this verſe, Into thy hands, O Lord, I commend my ſpirit, &c. Which thing when the lay people beheld which ſtood next vnto him, they ſaid: what he hath done afore, wee knowe not, but now wee ſee and heare that hee doth ſpeake and pray very deuoutely and godly. Otherſome wiſhed that he had a Confeſſor. There was a certaine Prieſt by, ſitting on horſebacke in a greene gowne drawne about with red ſilke, which ſaid, he ought not to be heard, becauſe he is an hereticke. Yet notwithſtanding whileſt he was in priſon, he was both confeſſed, and alſo abſolued by a certaine Doctour, a Monke, as Hus himſelfe doth witnes in a certaine Epiſtle which he wrote vnto his frendes out of priſon. Thus Chriſt raigneth vnknowne vnto the world, euen in ye middeſt of his enimies. In the meane time whileſt he praied, as he bowed his necke backward to looke vpward vnto heauen, the crowne of paper fell off from his head vpon the grounde. Then one of the ſouldiours taking it vp againe, ſaid: let vs put it againe vpon his head, that he may bee burned with his maiſters the diuels whome he hath ſerued.

Ex epiſt. Ioan. Hus 31.

The paper with deuils fell from his head.

At the praier of Hus the paper with deuils fell downe.

When as by the commandement of the tormentours, he was riſen vp frõ the place of his praier, with a loud voice he ſaide: Lord Ieſu Chriſt aſſiſt and help me, that with a conſtant and pacient mind, by thy moſt gracious helpe, I may beare & ſuffer this cruel & ignominious death, whereunto I am condemned for the preaching of thy moſt holie Goſpel and word. Then as before, he declared the cauſe of his death vnto the people. In ye meane ſeaſon the hangmã ſtripped him of his garments, and turning his hands behinde his backe, tied him faſt vnto the ſtake with ropes that were made wet. And where as by chance he was turned towards the Eaſt, certain cried out that he ſhould not looke towards the Eaſt, for he was an heretick: ſo he was turned towards the weſt. Then was his necke tied with a chaine vnto the ſtake, the which chaine when he beheld, ſmiling he ſaid, that he woulde willingly receiue the ſame chaine for Ieſu Chriſtes ſake, whom he knew was bound with a farre worſe chaine. Vnder his feete they ſet two fagots, admixing ſtraw withall, and ſo likewiſe frõ the feete

But before the wood was ſet on fire, Lodouicus Duke of Bauaria, with another Gentleman with hym, whiche was the ſonne of Clement, came and exhorted Iohn Hus, that he would yet be mindfull of his ſafegard, and renounce his errours. To whome he ſaide, what errour ſhould I renounce, when as I knowe my ſelfe giltie of none? For, as for thoſe things which are falſly alledged agaynſt mee, I knowe that I neuer did ſo much as once thinke them, much leſſe preach them. For thys was was the principall ende and purpoſe of my doctrine, that I might teach all men penaunce and remiſſion of ſinnes, according to the verity of the Goſpel of Ieſus Chriſt, and the expoſition of the holy Doctours: wherefore wyth a chearefull minde and courage I am heere ready to ſuffer death. When he had ſpoken theſe wordes, they left him, and ſhaking hands together they departed.

The laſt cõfeſſion of Iohn Hus.

Then was the fire kindled, and Iohn Hus began to ſing with a loud voice, Ieſu Chriſt the ſonne of the liuing God haue mercy vpon me. And when he began to ſay the ſame the third time, the winde droue the flame ſo vpon his face, that it choked him. Yet notwithſtanding he mooued a while after, by the ſpace that a man might almoſt ſay three times the Lordes prayer. When all the wood was burned and conſumed, the vpper parte of the body was left hanging in the chaine, the which they threwe downe ſtake and all, and making a newe fire burned it, the heade being firſt cut in ſmall gobbets, that it might the ſooner be conſumed vnto aſhes. The heart, which was founde amongeſt the bowels, being well beaten with ſtaues and clubbes, was at laſt pricked vppon a ſharpe ſticke, and roaſted at a fire a parte vntill it was conſumed. Then with great diligence gathering the aſhes together, they caſt them into the riuer of Rhene, that the leaſt remnaunt of the aſhes of that man ſhoulde not be left vppon the earth, whoſe memorie notwythſtanding cannot be aboliſhed out of the minds of the godly, neither by fire, neither by water, neither by anye kinde of torment.

¶ I know very well that theſe things are very ſlenderly wrytten of me as touching the labours of thys moſt holy Martyr Iohn Hus, with whome the labors of Hercules are not to be compared. For that auncient Hercules ſlew a few monſters: but this our Hercules with a moſte ſtout and valiant courage hath ſubdued euen the worlde it ſelfe, the mother of all monſters and cruell beaſtes. Thys ſtory were worthy ſome other kind of more curious handling, but for ſo muche as I cannot otherwiſe perfourme it my ſelfe, I haue endeuored according to the very truth, as the thing was in deede, to commend the ſame vnto al godly mindes: neither haue I heard it reported by others, but I my ſelfe was preſent at the doing of all theſe things, and as I was able I haue put them in wryting, that by thys my labour, and indeuor howſoeuer it were, I might preſerue the memory of this holy man and excellent Doctour of the Euangelicall truth.

The author and witnes of this ſtory.

What was the name of this author which wrote thys ſtory, it is not here expreſſed. Cochleus in his 2. boke contra Huſſitas, ſuppoſeth his name to be Ioannes Pizibram, a Bohemian. Who afterward ſucceeding in the place of I. Hus at Prage, at laſt is thought to relent to the Papiſts.

M. Iohn Pizibram is thought to be his name. Ex Cochleo lib. 2. de Hiſt. Huſſit.

This godly ſeruaunt and Martyr of Chriſt was condemned by the cruel councel, and burned at Conſtance an. 1415. about the moneth of Iuly.

Howe grieuouſly this death of Iohn Hus was taken among the nobles of Boheme and of Morauia, heereafter (Chriſt willing) ſhall appeare by their letters which they ſent vnto the councell, & by the letters of Sigiſmund the king of Romaines, wrytten vnto them, wherin he laboureth, all that he can, to purge and excuſe himſelfe, of Huſſes death. All be it he was not altogether free from that cruell fact, and innocent frõ that bloud: yet notwithſtanding hee pretendeth in words ſo to wipe away that blot from hym, that the greateſt part of that crime ſeemeth to reſt vpon the bloudy prelates of that councel, as the wordes of the king do purport in forme as followeth.

Ex Cochleo de hiſt. Huſſ. lib. 4.

INterea (inquit) nobis adhuc in partibus Rheni exiſtentibus, peruenit ad Conſtantiam &c. i. In the meane time as we were about the coaſtes of Rhene, Iohn Hus went to Conſtance, and there was arreſted, as is not to you vnknowen. Who if he had firſt reſorted vnto vs, & had gone with vs vp to the Coũcel, perhaps it had bene otherwiſe with him. And God knoweth, what griefe and ſorrowe it was to our heart, to ſee it ſo to fall out, as with no wordes can be well expreſſed. Whereof all the Bohemians, which were there preſent, can beare vs witneſſe, ſeeing and beholding howe carefull and ſollicitous we were in labouring for him: In ſo much that wee many times with anger and furie departed out of the Councell: and not onely out of the Councell, but alſo went out of the City of Cõſtance taking his part, vnto ſuch time as the rulers of the Councell ſending vnto vs, ſayde: That if wee woulde not permit them to proſecute that, which right required in the Councell, what ſhould they then do in the place? Whereupon thus we thought with our ſelues, that here was nothing els for vs more to doe, nor yet to ſpeake in this caſe, for aſmuche as the whole Councell otherwiſe had ben diſſolued. Where is to be noted moreouer, that in Conſtance the ſame time there was not one clearke, or two, but there were Ambaſſadours for all kinges and princes in Chriſtendome, eſpecially ſince the time that (Petrus de Luna geuing ouer) all thoſe kinges and princes which tooke his part, came to vs: ſo that whatſoeuer good was to be done, it was nowe to be paſſed in this preſent Councell. &c. Ex Epiſt. Imper. Sigiſmundi. ad Nobiles. &c.

The Emperour excuſeth him ſelf of the death of I. Hus.

¶ By this it may appeare that the Emperour as partly aſhamed and ſory of that which was done, wold gladly haue cleared himſelfe therof, and haue waſhed hys handes with Pilate: yet he coulde not ſo cleare himſelfe, but that a great portion of that murder remained in him to be noted, and well worthy of reprehenſion: as may both appeare by his laſt wordes ſpoken in the Councel to I. Hus, whereof Iohn Hus in his Epiſtles complaineth, wryting to certaine of his friendes in Bohemia in his 33. Epiſtle, as by hys wordes may appeare here following.

Ex epiſt. Iohn Hus. 33.

I Deſire you yet againe for the loue of God, that the Lordes of Boheme ioyning together, will deſire the king for finall audience to be geuen me. For ſo muche as he alone ſaide to me in the Councell, that they ſhoulde geue me audience ſhortly, and that I ſhoulde aunſwer for my ſelfe briefly in wryting: it will be to hys great confuſion, if he ſhall not perfourme that which he hath ſpoken. But I feare that worde of his will be as firme and ſure, as the other was concerning my ſafeconducte graunted by him. Certaine there were in Bohemia, which willed mee to beware of hys ſafeconducte. And other ſayde: he will ſure geue you to your ennemies. And the Lord Mikeſt Dweky told me before M. Ieſſenitz, ſaying: Maiſter, know it for certaine you ſhalbe condemned. And this I ſuppoſe he ſpake, knowing before the intẽtion of the king. I hoped well that hee had bene well affected towarde the lawe of God and trueth, and had therein good intelligence: nowe I conceiue that he is not greatly skilfull nor ſo prudently circumſpecte in himſelfe. He condemned me before mine ennemies did. Who, if it had pleaſed him, might haue kept the moderation of Pilat the Gentile, which ſayde: I finde no cauſe in this man: or at leaſt if hee had ſayde but thus: beholde I haue geuen him his ſafeconducte ſafely to returne. And if hee will not abide the deciſion of the councell, I will ſend him home to the king of Boheme, with youre ſentence & atteſtations, that he with his cleargie may iudge him. But nowe I heare by the relation of Henry Leffl, and of other, that he will ordaine for me ſufficient audience: And if I will not ſubmit my ſelfe to the iudgement of the councel, he wil ſend me ſafe, the contrary way. &c.

The Emperour vncurteous to Iohn Hus.

Pilate more moderate to Chriſt, then this Emperour to Iohn Hus.

This Iohn Hus being in priſon, wrote diuers treatiſes, as of the commaundements, of the Lordes prayer, of mortal ſinne, of matrimony, of the knowledge and loue of God, of 3. ennemies of mankinde, the world, the fleſh, and the deuill, of penaunce, of the Sacrament of the body and bloud of the Lord: of the ſufficiencie of the lawe of God to rule the church. &c. He wrote alſo diuers Epiſtles and letters to the Lordes and to his frendes of Boheme: And in hys wrytings did foreſhewe many things before to come, touching yͤ reformation of the Churche: and ſeemeth in the priſon to haue had diuers prophetical reuelations ſhewed to him of God. Certaine of which his letters, and predictions, I thought here vnderneath to inſert, in ſuch ſort, as neither in reciting all I will ouercharge the volume too much: nor yet in reciting of none, I will be ſo brief, but that the reader may haue ſome taſte, and take ſome profit of the Chriſtian wrytings and doings of this bleſſed man: Firſte beginning, with the letter of the Lorde Clum, concerning the ſafeconduct of Iohn Hus.

⁂ A letter of the Lorde Iohn de Clum concerning the ſafeconduict of Iohn Hus.

TO all and ſingulare that ſhall ſee and heare theſe preſentes, I Iohn de Clum doe it to vnderſtande, howe maiſter Iohn Hus Bacheler of diuinitie, vnder the ſafeconduicte and protection of the renowmed prince and Lorde Sigiſmund of Romaines ſemper Auguſtus, and king of Hungarie, &c. My gracious Lorde, and vnder the protection, defence, and ſafegarde of the holy Empire of Rome, hauing the letters patent of the ſaid my Lorde king of Romaines. &c. came vnto Conſtance to render a full counte of hys faith in publicke audience to al that would require the ſame. This the ſaide M. Iohn Hus, in this Imperiall Citie of Conſtance, vnder the ſafeconduict of the ſaid my Lord king of Romaines, hath bene and yet is deteined. And although the Pope with the Cardinalles haue bene ſeriouſly required, by ſolemne Ambaſſadours of the ſayd my Lord king of Romaines. &c. in the kings name & behalfe, that the ſaid maiſter Iohn Hus ſhould be ſet at libertye, and be reſtored vnto me, yet notwythſtanding, they haue and yet do refuſe hitherto to ſet him at liberty, to the great cõtempt & derogation of the ſafeconduct of the king, & of the ſafegard and protection of the Empire or Emperial maieſtie. Wherefore I Iohn aforeſaide in the name of the king, do here publiſh and make it known, that the apprehending and deteining of the ſayde M.Iohn Hus, was done wholy againſt the wil of the fornamed king of Romains my Lord, ſeeing it is done in the contempt of the ſafeconducte of hys ſubiects, and of the protection of the Empire, becauſe that the ſayde my Lord was then abſent farre from Conſtance, and if he had ben there preſent, woulde neuer haue permitted the ſame. And when hee ſhall come, it is to be doubted of no man, but that hee for this great iniury, and contempt of this ſafeconducte done to him & to the Empire, wil greuouſly be moleſted for the ſame. Geuen at Cõſtance in the day of the natiuitie of the Lord 1414.

¶In this inſtrument aboue prefixed note (gentle reader) 3. things.

Firſt, the goodnes of this gentle Lord Iohn de Clum, being ſo feruent and zelous in the cauſe of Iohn Huſſe, or rather in the cauſe of Chriſt.

Secondly, the ſafeconduct graunted vnto the ſayde I. Hus, vnder the faith and protection of the Emperor, and of the Empire.

Thirdly, here is to be ſene the contempt and rebellion of theſe proud prelates in diſobeying the authority of their high Magiſtrate, who contrary to his ſafeconduct geuen, and the mind of the Emperor, did areſt and impriſon this good man, before the comming of the ſayd Emperor, & before that Iohn Hus was heard. Let vs nowe, as we haue promiſed, adioyne ſome of the epiſtles of this godly man.

An Epiſtle of Iohn Hus, vnto the people of Prage in his owne vulgare ſpeeche.

A letter of Iohn Hus to the people of Prage.

GRace and peace from our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt, that you being deliuered from ſinne, may walke in his grace, and may growe in all modeſty and vertue, and after this may enioy eternall life.

Derely beloued, I beſeeche you which walke after the law of God, that you caſt not away the care of the ſaluatiõ of your ſoules, whẽ as you hearing the word of God, are premoniſhed wiſely to vnderſtand that you be not deceiued by falſ apoſtles: which do not reprehend the ſinnes of men, but rather doe extenuate and diminiſh them: which flatter the prieſts, and doe not ſhewe to the people their offences which magnify themſelues boaſt their own workes, and marueilouſly extol their owne worthines: but follow not Chriſt in his humility, in pouerty, in the croſſe and other manifold afflictions. Of whome our merciful ſauiour did premoniſh vs before, ſaying: falſe Chriſtes and falſ Prophets ſhal riſe, and ſhall deceiue many. And when he had forewarned his welbeloued diſciples, he ſaid vnto them: beware and take hede of falſe Prophets, which come to you in ſhepes clothing, but inwardly are rauening wolues: ye ſhal know them by their fruits. And truth it is, that the faithful of Chriſt haue much neede diligently to beware, and take hede vnto themſelues. For as our ſauiour himſelfe doth ſay: the elect alſo, if it were poſsible, ſhalbe brought into error. Wherefore my welbeloued, be circumſpect and watchful, that ye be not circumuented with the crafty trains of the deuil. And the more circumſpect ye ought to be, for that antichriſt laboureth the more to trouble you. The laſt iudgement is nere at hande: death ſhal ſwallow vp many, but to the electe children of God, the kingdome of God draweth nere, becauſe for them he gaue his own body. Feare not death, loue together one an other, perſeuere in vnderſtanding the good wil of God without ceaſing. Let the terrible & horrible day of iudgement, be alwaies before your eies, that you ſinne not: and alſo the ioy of eternal life, wherunto you muſt endeuor. Furthermore, let the paſsion of our ſauioure be neuer out of youre minds: that you may bear with him & for him gladly, whatſoeuer ſhalbe laid vpon you. For if you ſhal conſider well in your mindes his croſſe & afflictions, nothing ſhalbe greuous vnto you, & patiently you ſhal geue place to tribulations, curſings, rebukes, ſtripes, and priſonment, and ſhal not dout to geue your liues moreouer for his holy truth, if nede require. Knowe ye welbeloued that antichriſt being ſtirred vp againſt you, deuiſeth diuers perſecutions. And many he hath not hurte, no not the leaſt heire of their heads, as by mine owne example I can teſtify, although hee hathe ben vehemently incenſed againſt me. Wherefore I deſire you all, with your praiers to make interceſsiõ for me to the lord, to geue me intelligence, ſufferance, patience and conſtancie, that I neuer ſwarue from his diuine verity. He hath brought me now to Conſtance. In all my iourney openly and manifeſtly, I haue not feared to vtter my name as becommeth the ſeruant of God. In no place I kept my ſelfe ſecrete, nor vſed any diſsimulation. But neuer did I finde in any place more peſtilent and manifeſt ennemies then at Conſtance. Which enemies neither ſhould I haue had there, had it not ben for certain of our owne Bohemians, hypocrites & deceiuers, who for benefits receiued and ſtirred vp with couetouſnes, with boaſting and bragging haue perſwaded the people that I wẽt about to ſeduce them out of the right way. But I am in good hope that through the mercy of our God, and by your prayers I ſhall perſiſte ſtrongly in the immutable veritie of God, vnto the laſt breath. Finally, I wold not haue you ignorãt, that wheras euery one here is put in his office, I only as an outcaſt am neglected. &c. I cõmend you to the merciful Lord Ieſu Chriſt, our true God, and the ſonne of the immaculate virgin Mary, which hath redeemed vs by his moſte bitter death, without all our merites, from eternall paines, from the thraldome of the Deuill, and from ſinne. From Conſtance, the yere of our Lord. 1415.

¶An other letter of Iohn Hus to his benefactours.

An other letter of I. Hus,

MY gracious benefactours and defendours of the truthe, I exhort you by the bowels of Ieſus Chriſt, that now ye ſetting aſide the vanities of this preſent world, will giue your ſeruice to the eternall king, Chriſt the Lord. Truſt not in Princes nor in the ſonnes of men, in whome there is no health. For the ſonnes of men are diſſemblers and diſceitfull. To day they erre, to morrowe they peariſh, but God remaineth for euer. Who hath his ſeruants, not for any neede he hath of them, but for their owne profite: vnto whõ he performeth that, which he promiſeth, & fulfilleth that which he purpoſeth to geue. He caſteth of no faithful ſeruant from him, for he ſayth: where I am there alſo ſhal my ſeruãt be. And that Lorde maketh euery ſeruaunt of his to be the Lorde of all his poſſeſsion, geuing himſelfe vnto him, and with himſelfe, all thinges: that without all tediouſneſſe, feare, and without al defect, he may poſſeſſe all thinges, reioycing with all Saintes in ioy infinite. O happie is that ſeruaunt, whome, when the Lorde ſhall come, hee ſhall finde watching. Happy is the ſeruaunt which ſhall receiue that king of glory with ioy. Wherefore, well beloued Lordes, and benefactours, ſerue you that king in feare: which ſhall bring you, as I truſt, nowe to Boheme at this preſent, by his grace in health, and hereafter, to eternal life of glory. Fare ye wel: For I think that this is the laſt letter that I ſhall write to you: who to morrowe, as I ſuppoſe, ſhall be purged in hope of Ieſu Chriſt, throughe bitter death, from my ſinnes. The things that happened to me this night, I am not able to wryte. Sigiſmund hath done all things wyth mee diſceitfully, God forgeue him and onely for your ſakes. You alſo heard the ſentence which he awarded againſt me. I pray you haue no ſuſpition of faithfull Vitus.

An other letter to the Lord Iohn de Clum.

An other letter of I. Hus,

MOſte gracious benefactour in Chriſte Ieſu, dearely beloued, yet I reioyce not a little, that by the grace of God I maye wryte vnto your honour. By your letter, which I receaued yeſterday, I vnderſtand, firſt how the iniquitie of the great ſtrompet, that is, of the malignaunt congregation (whereof mention is made in the Apocalips) is detected and ſhall be more detected. Wyth the which ſtrumpet the kinges of the earth doe commit fornication, fornicating ſpiritually from Chriſte, and as is there ſayde, ſliding back from the truth, and conſenting to the lies of antichriſt, thoroughe his ſeduction and thoroughe feare, or thoroughe hope of confederacie, for getting of worldly honour. Secondly I perceaued by your letter, how the enemies of the truth, begin nowe to be troubled. Thirdly, I perceiued the feruent conſtancie of your charitie, wherewith you profeſſe the truth boldly. Fourthly, with ioy I perceiued that you minde now to geue ouer the vanity and the painefull ſeruice of this preſent world, and to ſerue the Lorde Ieſus Chriſt quietly at home. Whome to ſerue, is to raign, as Gregory ſayeth. Whome he that ſerueth faithfully, hath Chriſte Ieſus himſelfe in the kingdome of heauen to miniſter vnto him, as hee himſelfe ſayeth: Bleſſed is that ſeruaunt, whome when the Lorde ſhall come, he ſhall finde waking, and ſo doing. Verely I ſay vnto you, that hee riſing, ſhall girde himſelfe, and ſhall miniſter to him. This do not the kings of this worlde to their ſeruauntes: whome onely they doe loue ſo long as they are profitable and neceſſary for their commodities &c.

⁂An other Epiſtle of Iohn Hus, wherein he declareth why God ſuffreth not his to periſh, bringing diuers examples, wherwith he doth comfort and confirme both himſelfe and other.

THe Lord God be with you. Many cauſes there were, welbeloued in God my deare frends, which moued me to thinke that thoſe letters were the laſt, which before I ſent vnto you, lookinge that ſame time for inſtant death. But now vnderſtanding the ſame to be deferred, I take it for great cõfort vnto me, that I haue ſome leſ leſ more to talke with you by letters: & therfore I write again to you, to declare & teſtify at leaſt, my gratitude & mindfull duty toward you. And as touching death, God doth know why he doeth defer it both to me and to my welbeloued brother M.Hier. who I truſt will die holily and without blame: and do know alſo that he doth, and ſuffereth nowe more valiauntly, then I my ſelfe a wretched ſinner. God hath geuen vs a long time, that we myghte call to memorie our ſinnes the better, and repent for the ſame more feruently. Hee hath graunted vs time, that our longe and greate temptation ſhuld put away our greuous ſinnes, & bring the more conſolation.He hath geuen vs time,wherin we ſhould remember the horrible rebukes of our mercifull king and Lorde Ieſus, and ſhoulde ponder his cruell death, and ſo more paciently myght learne to beare our afflictions. And moreouer that we might kepe in remembraunce, how that the ioyes of the life to come,are not geuen after the ioyes of this world immediatly, but through many tribulations the Saints haue entred into the kingdõ of heauen. For ſome of them haue bene cutte and chopt all to peeces, ſome their eies bored through,ſome ſodde: ſome roſted, ſome ſlaine aliue,ſome buried quicke,ſtoned,crucified, grineded betwixt mill ſtones,drawne & hailed hither and thither vnto execution,drowned in waters,ſtrangled and hanged, torne in pieces, vexed wyth rebukes before their death, pined in priſons, & afflicted in bands. And who is able to recite all the tormentes and ſuffringes of the holy Saintes,which they ſuffered vnder the olde and newe Teſtament for the verity of God:namely thoſe which haue at any time rebuked the malice of the prieſtes, or haue preached againſt their wickedneſſe. And it will be a meruaile if any man nowe alſo ſhall eſcape vnpuniſhed,who ſo euer dare boldly reſiſt the wickedneſſe and peruerſity,eſpecially of thoſe prieſts,which can abide no correction. And I am glad that they are compelled now to reade my bookes, in the which, their malice is ſomewhat deſcribed: and I know they haue reade the ſame more exactly and diligently,then the holy Goſpell, ſeeking therein to finde out errours. Geuen at Conſtance vppon Thurſday,the 28.day of Iune. An.1415.

The tormẽts of the martirs vnder the olde and new Teſtament.

¶An other letter of Iohn Hus,wherein he rehearſeth what iniuries he receiued of the Councel,and of the deputies.

IF my letter be not ſent yet to Boheme,keepe it and ſend it not, for hurt may come thereof,&c.

He meaneth belike that he ſhould moue the king in theſe matters contayned in this Epiſtle.

Item, if the king doe aske who ought to be my iudge, ſince that the Councel neither did call me,nor did cite me,neither was I euer accuſed before the Councell, and yet the Councell hath impriſoned me,and hath appoynted their proctor againſt me.

Item, I deſire you right noble and gracious Lord Iohn,if audience ſhall be geuen me,that the king will be there preſent himſelfe, and that I may haue a place appoynted neare vnto him,that he may heare me well and vnderſtand what I ſay:and that you alſo with the Lord Henry,and with Lord Wenſelaus and other mo, if you may,will be preſent, and heare what the Lorde Ieſus Chriſt my procuratour and aduocate,and moſt gracious iudge,will put in my mouth to ſpeake,that whether I liue or die,you may be true and vpright witneſſes with me,leaſt lying lips ſhall ſay heereafter that I ſwarued away from the truth which I haue preached.

Item,know you that before witneſſes and notaries in the priſon,I deſired the commiſsioners that they would depute vnto me a proctor and an aduocate, who promiſed ſo to do,and afterward would not performe it. Wherefore I haue committed my ſelfe to the Lorde Ieſus Chriſt that he will be my procuratour and aduocate and iudge of my cauſe.

Item, know you,that they haue as I ſuppoſe no other quarell againſt mee, but onely this, that I ſtoode againſt the Popes Bull, which Pope Iohn ſent downe to Boheme,to ſanctifie warre wyth the ſigne of the croſſe & full remiſsion of ſinnes,to all them which would take the holy croſſe to fight for the patrimonie of the Romiſh church againſt Ladiſlaus king of Naples,and they haue mine owne wryting which was read againſt me,and I do acknowledge it to be mine. Secondly,they haue alſo againſt me,that I haue cõtinued ſo long in excommunication, and yet did take vppon mee to miniſter in the church and ſay Maſſe.Thirdly they haue againſt me,becauſe I did appeale from the Pope to Chriſt. For they reade my appeale before me,in the which with a willing minde,ſmiling I confeſſed before them all to be mine. Fourthly,becauſe I left a certaine letter behind me, which was read in the church of Bethleem, the which letter my aduerſaries haue very euill fauouredly tranſlated and ſiniſterly expounded, in the which I did wryte that I went out without a ſafeconducte. Whereunto you your ſelues can ſay and beare me recorde, that I in my going out, had no ſafe conducte of the Pope,neither yet did knowe whether you ſhould goe out with me when I wrote that letter.

Vide ſupra. pag. 553.

Item,if audience may be geuen to me,and that after the ſame audience the king would ſuffer me not to be returned againe into priſon,but that I may haue your counſels & others my frends: and if it may pleaſe God that I may ſay ſome thing to my ſoueraigne Lord the king, for the behalfe of Chriſtianitie, and for hys owne profite.&c.

¶An other letter of Iohn Hus, wherein he confirmeth the Bohemians,and deſcribeth the wickedneſſe of that Counſell.

An other letter of Iohn Hus.

IOhn Huſſe in hope the ſeruaunt of GOD, to all faythfull in Boheme, which loue the Lord, greetyng thorough the grace of GOD. It commeth in my mynde, wherein I muſt needes admoniſh you, that be the faythfull and beloued of the Lord,how that the Councell of Conſtance beyng full of pride, auarice, and all abhomination, hath condemned my bookes written in the Boheme tounge, for hereticall, whiche bookes they neuer ſaw, nor neuer heard them read: And if they had heard them,yet they could not vnderſtãd the ſame,being ſome Italians, ſome Frenchmen, ſome Britaines, ſome Spanyardes, Germaines, with other people of other nations moe: vnleſſe peraduenture Iohn Biſhop of Litomiſhe vnderſtoode them, whiche was preſent in that Councell, and certaine other Bohemians, and Prieſtes whiche are agaynſt me, and labour all they may how to depraue both the veritie of God, and the honeſty of our countrey of Boheme: Which I iudge in the hope of GOD, to be a Godly land, right well geuen to the true knowledge of the Fayth, for that it doth ſo greatly deſire the word of GOD, and honeſt maners. And if you were here at Conſtance, ye ſhould ſee the greeuous abhomination of this Councell, which they call ſo holy, and ſuch as can not erre. Of the which Councell I haue heard it by the Swechers reported, that the Citie of Conſtaunce is not able in 30. yeares to be purged of thoſe wicked abhominations in that Cõucell committed. And all be offended almoſt with that Councell, beyng ſore greeued to behold ſuch execrable thynges perpetrate in the ſame.

The Councell condẽne bookes which they vnderſtand not.

Prayſe of Bohemia.

The abhomination of the Cõucell of Cõſtance deſcribed.

When I ſtoode firſt to aunſwere before myne aduerſaries, ſeyng all thynges there done with no order, and hearyng them alſo outragiouſly crying out, I ſayd playnely vnto them, that I looked for more honeſt behauiour, and better order and diſcipline, in that Councell. Then the chief Cardinall aunſwered, ſayeſt thou ſo? but in the tower thou ſpakeſt more modeſtly. To whome, ſayd I: in the Tower no man cryed out agaynſt me, where as now all doe rage agaynſt me. My faythfull and beloued in Chriſt, be not afrayde with their ſentence in condemnyng my bookes. They ſhall bee ſcattered hether and thether abroad, like light Butterfleis, and their Statutes, ſhall endure as Spiderwebbes. They went about to ſhake my conſtancie from the veritie of Chriſt: but they could not ouercome the vertue of God in me, They would not reaſon with the ſcriptures againſt me, as diuers honourable Lordes can witneſſe with me, which being ready to ſuffer contumely for the trueth of God, tooke my part ſtoutly; namely Lorde Wenceſlaus de Duba, and Lorde Iohn de Clum: for they were let in by king Sigiſmund into the Councell. And when I ſayde, that I was deſirous to be inſtructed, if I did in any thing erre, then they heard the chiefe Cardinall aunſwere againe: becauſe thou wouldeſt be informed, there is no remedy, but that thou muſt firſt reuoke thy doctrine, according to the determination of 50. Bachelers of Diuinitie appoynted. O high inſtruction.

I. Hus ſeemeth here to propheſie of the Councell as it came to paſſe.

The Councell afraide to be tried by the ſcriptures.

This cardinall was Cardinall Cambrenſis.

After like maner S. Katherine alſo ſhoulde haue denied and reuoked the veritie of God and faith in Chriſt, becauſe the 50. maiſters likewiſe did withſtand her: which notwithſtanding, that good virgine would neuer doe, ſtanding in her faith vnto death: But ſhee did winne thoſe her maiſters vnto Chriſt, when as I can not win theſe my maiſters by any meanes. Theſe things I thought good to wryte vnto you, that you might knowe howe they haue ouercome me, with no grounded Scripture nor with any reaſon: but onely did aſſay with terrours and diſceits to perſwade me to reuoke and to abiure. But our mercifull God, whoſe lawe I haue magnified, was and is with me, and I truſt, ſo will continue, and will kepe me in his grace vnto death. Wrytten at Conſtance after the feaſt of Iohn Baptiſt, in priſon and in bandes, daily looking for death, although for the ſecrete iudgements of God, I dare not ſay whether this be my laſt Epiſtle: for nowe alſo almighty God is able to deliuer me.

S. Katherine diſputed with 50. doctors, couerted them but I. Hus could not conuert his 50. Doctors.

⁂ An other letter of Iohn Hus, wherein he comforteth his frendes and willeth them not to be troubled for the condemnyng of his bookes: and alſo declareth the wickedneſſe of the Clergy.

MAiſter Iohn Huſſe, in hope the ſeruaunt of God, to all the faythfull which loue him and his ſtatutes, wiſheth the truth and grace of God.

Beloued, I thought it needefull to warne you that you ſhould not feare or bee diſcouraged becauſe the aduerſaries haue decreed that my bookes ſhall be burnt. Remember how the Iſraelites burned the preachynges of the Prophet Ieremy and yet they could not auoyde the thynges that were Prophecied of in them. For after they were burnt, the Lord commaunded to write the ſame Prophecie agayne, and that larger: which was alſo done. For Ieremie ſittyng in priſon ſpake, and Baruch which was ready at his hand, wrote. This is written either in the 35. or 45. chapiter of the Viſion of Ieremie. It is alſo written in the bookes of the Machabees, that the wicked did burne the law of God, and killed them that had the ſame. Agayne, vnder the new Teſtament, they burned the Saintes, with the bookes of the law of God. The Cardinals condemned and committed to fire certaine of S. Gregories bookes, & had burnt thẽ all if they had not ben preſerued of God by the meanes of Peter, Gregories miniſter. Hauing theſe things before your eyes, take heede leaſt through feare, you omit

Good bookes of good men haue bene burned of olde time.

Good men with their bookes to be burned, no newes.

I. Hus ſeemeth to propheſie of the Councell of Conſtance.

The blaſphemous opinion of Lawiers and papiſtes, touching the ſoueraintie of the Pope.

One Symoniſt condemneth an other.

The biſhops of the Councell noted of Symonie.

Pope Ioh. made a pope being knowen to be a murderer.

to read my bookes, and deliuer them to the aduerſaries to bee brent. Remember the ſayings of our mercifull ſauiour, by whych he forewarneth vs. Math. 24. There ſhall be (ſayeth he) before the day of iudgement, great tribulation, ſuch as was not from the beginning, vntill this day, neither ſhall be afterwardes: So that euen the elect of God ſhoulde be deceiued if it were poſsible. But for their ſakes, thoſe dayes ſhal be ſhortened. Whē you remēber theſe things (beloued) be not afraid, for I truſt in God that that ſchoole of Antichriſt ſhall be afraide of you, and ſuffer you to be in quiet, neither ſhall the Councell of Conſtance extende to Bohemia For I thinke, that many of them, which are of the Councell, ſhall die before they ſhall get from you my bookes And they ſhall departe from the Councel and be ſcattred abroad, throughout the partes of the world, like ſtorkes, and then they ſhall knowe when winter commeth, what they did in ſommer. Conſider that they haue adiudged their heade the Pope worthy of death, for many horrible factes that he hath done. Go to nowe: Aunſwer to this you preachers which preach that the Pope is the God of the earth, that he may as the Lawyers ſay, make ſale of the holy things: that he is the head of the whole holy Church in verity wel gouerning the ſame: that he is the heart of the Church in quickening the ſame ſpiritually: that hee is the well ſpring from the which floweth all vertue and goodneſſe: that he is the ſonne of the holy church: that hee is the ſafe refuge to which euery Chriſtian mā ought to flie for ſuccour. Beholde nowe that head is cutte off with the ſworde, nowe the God of the earth is bound, now his ſinnes are declared openly, nowe that well ſpring is dried vppe, that ſunne darkened, that heart is plucked out and throwne away, leaſt that any man ſhould ſeeke ſuccour thereat. The Councell hath condemned that head, and that for this offence, becauſe hee tooke money for indulgences, Biſhopprickes and other ſuch like. But they condemned hym by order of iudgement, which were themſelues the buiers and ſellers of the ſame marchandiſe. There was preſent Iohn Byſhop of Lytomiſsia, who went twiſe about to buy the biſhoprike of Prage, but others preuented him. O wicked men, why did they not firſt caſt out the beame out of their owne eyes? Theſe men haue accurſed and cōdemned the ſeller, but they themſelues which were the buiers and conſenters to the bargaine, are without daunger. What ſhall I ſay that they doe vſe in this maner of buying and ſelling at home in their owne countreis? For at Conſtance there is one Biſhop that bought, & an other which ſold, and the Pope for allowing of both their factes, tooke bribes of both ſides. It came ſo to paſſe in Bohemia alſo as you knowe. I woulde that in that Councell God had ſayde, he that amongſt you is without ſinne, let him geue the ſentence againſt Pope Iohn: Then ſurely they had gone all out of the Councelhouſe, one after another. Why did they bowe the knee to him alwaies, before this his fall, kiſſe hys feete, and call him the moſt holy father, ſeeing they ſaw apparantly before, that he was an hereticke, that hee was a mankiller, that he was a wicked ſinner? all which things nowe they haue found in him. Why did the Cardinals chuſe him to be Pope, knowing before that he had killed the holy Father? Why ſuffered they him to meddle with holy thinges, in bearing the office of the Popedome? for to this ende they are his counſailours, that they ſhoulde admoniſh him of that which is right. Are not they themſelues as guiltie of theſe faults as he? ſeeing that they accoūted theſe things vices in him, and were partakers of ſome of them themſelues? why durſt no man lay ought to his charge, before he had fledde from Conſtance, but aſſone as the ſecular power, by the ſufferaunce of God, laide holde vpon him, then, and neuer afore, they conſpired altogether that he ſhoulde not liue any longer. Surely, euen as at this day is the malice, the abhomination and filthineſſe of Antichriſt reuealed in the Pope and others of this Councell.

Antichriſt now firſt beginneth to be reuealed in the Pope.

A propheſie of Iohn Hus.

Nowe the faithfull ſeruaunts of God may vnderſtande what our ſauiour Chriſt meant by this ſaying: when you ſhal ſee the abhomination of deſolation, which is ſpoken of Daniel. &c. who ſo can vnderſtand it, &c. Surely theſe be great abhominatiōs, pride, couetouſneſſe, ſymonie, ſitting in a ſolitarie place, that is to ſay, in a dignitie voide of goodneſſe, of humilitie, and other vertues: as we do now clearely ſee in thoſe that are conſtituted in any office and dignitie. O howe acceptable a thing ſhould it be (if time would ſuffer me) to diſcloſe their wicked actes, which are nowe apparant, that the faithfull ſeruaunts of God might knowe them? I truſt in God that he wil ſend after me, thoſe that ſhall be more valiant: and there are aliue at this day, that ſhall make more manifeſt the malice of Antichriſt. and ſhall geue their liues to the death, for the truth of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt: who ſhall geue both to you and me the ioyes of life euerlaſting. This Epiſtle was written vppon S. Iohn Baptiſtes day in priſon and in colde yrons, I hauing thys meditation with my ſelfe, that Iohn was beheaded in his priſone and bondes, for the worde of God.

¶ An other letter of Iohn Hus.

IOhn Huſſe in hope the ſeruant of God to all the faithfull at Boheme, which loue the Lord, wiſheth to ſtand and die in the grace of God, and at laſt to attaine to eternall life. Amen.

Ye that beare rule ouer other and be rich, and ye alſo that be poore, well be loued and faithfull in God, I beſeeche you, and admoniſh you all, that ye will be obedient vnto God, make muche of his worde, and gladly hearing the ſame, will humbly perfourme that which yee heare. I beſeeche you ſticke faſt to the veritie of Gods worde, which I haue written and preached vnto you out of his lawe, and the Sermons of his Saintes. Alſo I deſire you if any man either in publicke Sermon or in priuate talke heard of me any thing, or haue read any thing written by me which is againſte the verity of God, that he do not follow the ſame. Albeit I do not finde my conſcience guiltie that I euer haue ſpoken or wrytten any ſuch thing amongſt you.

A note for all noble mē to marke & to folow.

I deſire you moreouer if any man at any time haue noted any leuitie either in my talke or in my conditions, that he doe not follow the ſame: but pray to God for me, to pardon me that ſinne of lightnes. I pray you that ye will loue your prieſts and miniſters which be of honeſt behauiour, to prefer and honor them before others: namely ſuch prieſts as trauaile in the worde of God. I pray you take hede to your ſelues and beware of malitious and deceitful men, and eſpecially of theſe wicked prieſts, of whom our Sauiour doth ſpeake that they are vnder ſhepes clothing, & inwardly are rauening wolues. I pray ſuche as be rulers & ſuperiors, to behaue them ſelues gently towardes their poore inferiours, and to rule them iuſtly. I beſeche the citizens that they will walke euery man in his degree, and vocation with an vpright conſcience. The Artificers alſo I beſeeche, that they will exerciſe their occupations diligently, and vſe them with the feare of God. I beſeeche the ſeruauntes, that they wil ſerue their maiſters faithfully. And likewiſe the ſcholemaiſters I beſeeche, that they liuing honeſtly, will bryng vp their Scholers vertuouſly, and to teach them faythfully: Firſt to learne to feare GOD: then for the glory of GOD and the publicke vtilitie of the common wealth, and their owne health, and not for auarice or for worldly honor, to employ their myndes to honeſt Artes. I beſeech the Studentes of the Vniuerſitie and all Scholes, in all honeſt thynges to obey their Maiſters, and to follow them, and that with all diligence, they will ſtudy to be profitable both to the ſettyng foorth of the glory of God, and to the ſoules health as well of themſelues, as of other men. Together I beſeech and pray you all, that you will yeld moſt harty thankes to the right honorable Lordes, the Lord Wencelaus de Duba, Lord Iohn de Clum, Lord Henry Lumlouio, Lord Vilem Zagecio, Lord Nicholas and other Lordes of Boheme, of Morauia and Polony: that their diligence towardes me, may bee gratefull to all good men: becauſe that they like valiaunt champions of Gods trueth, haue oftentymes ſet themſelues agaynſt the whole Councell for my deliueraunce, contendyng and ſtandyng agaynſt the ſame to the vttermoſt of their power: but eſpecially Lord Wencelaus de Duba, and Lord Iohn de Clum. What ſo euer they ſhall report vnto you, geue credite vnto them: for they were in the Councell when I there aunſwered many. They know who they were of Bohemia, and how many falſe and ſlaunderous thynges they brought in agaynſt me, and that Councell cryed out agaynſt me, and how I alſo aunſwered to all thynges wherof I was demaunded. I beſeech you alſo that ye will pray for the kyng of Romaines, and for your kyng, and for his wife your Queene, that God of his mercy would abide with thē and with you, both now and henceforth in euerlaſtyng life. Amen.

This Epiſtle I haue writtē to you out of priſon and in bandes, lookyng the next day after the writyng hereof, for the ſentence of the Councell vpon my death, hauyng a full truſt that he will not leaue me, neither ſuffer me to deny his truth and to reuoke the errours, whiche falſe witneſſes maliciouſly haue deuiſed agaynſt me. How mercyfully the Lord GOD hath dealt with me, and was with me in maruailous temptations, ye ſhall know, when as hereafter by the helpe of Chriſt, we ſhall all meete together in the ioye of the world to come. As concernyng M. Hierome my dearely beloued brother and fellow, I heare no other but that he is remaynyng in ſtraight bandes, lookyng for death as I doe: and that for the fayth which he valiauntly mainteyned amongeſt the Bohemians, our cruell enemies of Boheme, haue geuen vs into the power and handes of other enemies, and into bandes. I beſeech you pray to God for them.

Moreouer I beſeech you, namely you of Prage, that we will loue the temple of Bethleem, and prouide ſo long as God ſhall permit, that the word of God may be preached in the ſame For, becauſe of that place, the Deuill is angry, and agaynſt the ſame place he hath ſtirred vp Prieſtes and Canons, perceiuyng that in that place his kyngdome ſhould be diſturbed and diminiſhed. I truſt in GOD that he will keepe that holy Church ſo long as it ſhall pleaſe him, and in the ſame ſhall geue greater encreaſe of his worde by other, then he hath done by me a weake veſſell. I beſeech you alſo that ye will loue together, and withholdyng no man from the hearyng of Gods word, ye will prouide and take care that good men be not oppreſſed by any force and violence. Written at Conſtance, the yeare of our Lord. 1415.

¶ An other right godly letter of Iohn Hus, to a certaine prieſt admoniſhing him of his office, and exhorting him to be faithfull: worthy to be red of all Miniſters.

A worthie leſſon for all miniſters & prelates.

THe peace of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt.&c. My deare brother be diligent in preaching the Goſpel, and do the worke of a good Euangeliſt: neglect not your vocation: labour like a bleſſed ſouldiour of Chriſt. Firſt liue godly and holily. Secondly, teach faithfully and truely. Thirdly, be an example to other in well doing, that you be not reprehended in your ſayings: correct vice and ſet foorth vertue. To euill liuers threaten eternall puniſhmēt: but to thoſe that be faithfull and godly, ſet forth the comforts of eternall ioy. Preach cōtinually, but be ſhort and fruitfull, prudētly vnderſtanding, & diſcretly diſpēſing the holy Scriptures. Neuer affirme or maintaine thoſe things that be vncertaine and doubtfull, leaſt that your aduerſaries take holde vpon you, which reioyce in deprauing their brethren, whereby they may bring the miniſters of God into contempt. Exhort men to the confeſsion of their faith, and to the communion of both kindes, both of the body & bloud of Chriſt, wherby ſuch as do repent earneſtly of their ſinnes, may the more often come to the holy communion. And I warne you that you enter into no tauernes with gheſtes, & be not a cōmon cōpany keper. For the more a preacher keepeth him frō the company of men, the more he is regarded. All be it, deny not yet your helpe and diligence, where ſoeuer you may profite other. Againſt fleſhlye luſt preache continuallye all that euer you can: For that is the raging beaſt, which deuoureth men, for whom the fleſh of Chriſt did ſuffer. Wherfore my heartily beloued, I beſeech you to flie fornication: for where as a man woulde moſt profite and doe good, there this vice vſeth moſt to lurke. In any caſe flie the company of yong women, and beleeue not their deuotion: For S. Auſten ſayth, the more deuout ſhe is, the more procliue to wantonneſſe, and vnder the pretence of religion, the ſnare and venome of fornication lurketh. And this knowe my welbeloued, that the conuerſation with them, ſubuerteth many, whome the conuerſation of this worlde coulde neuer blemiſh nor beguile. Admit no wom͂e into your houſe, for what cauſe, ſo euer it be, and haue not much talke with them otherwiſe, for auoiding of offence. Finally, howſoeuer you do, feare God and keepe his precepts: ſo ſhall you walke wiſely, and ſhall not peariſh: ſo ſhall you ſubdue the fleſh, contemne the world, and ouercome the deuill: ſo ſhall you put on God, finde life, and confirme other, and ſhall crowne your ſelfe wyth the crowne of glory, the which the iuſt iudge ſhall geue you. Amen.

S. Auguſtin meaneth not here of all, but of the common ſort of light perſons.

¶ This letter of Iohn Hus conteineth a confeſsion of the infirmitie of mans fleſh: Howe weake it is, and repugnant againſt the ſpirite. Wherein he alſo exhorteth to perſeuere conſtantly in the truth.

This Palletz was the chiefeſt enemy of I.Hus, & procurer of his death.

HEalth be to you from Ieſus Chriſt.&c. My deare frend, knowe that Palletz came to me to perſwade me that I ſhuld not feare the ſhame of abiuration, but to conſider the good which thereof will come. To whome I ſayd, that the ſhame of condemnation and burning is greater then to abiure: and why ſhuld I feare then that ſhame? But I pray you tel me plainly your minde. Preſuppoſe that ſuch articles were laid to you, which you knewe your ſelfe not to be true: what would you do in that caſe? would you abiure? Who aunſwered. The caſe is ſore, & began to weepe. Many other things wee ſpake which I did reprehende. Michael de Cauſis, was ſome times before the priſon with the deputies. And when I was wyth the deputies, thus I heard him ſpeake vnto the keepers: Wee by the grace of God wil burne this hereticke ſhortly: for whoſe cauſe I haue ſpent many Florenes. But yet vnderſtand that I wryte not this to the intent to reuenge mee of him, for that I haue committed to God, and pray to God for him with all my heart.

Michael de Cauſis another bitter enemy of Iohn Hus. Iohn Hus prayeth for his enemies.

Yet I exhort you again, to be circumſpect about our letters: for Michael hath taken ſuche order that none ſhall be ſuffered to come into the priſone: no not yet the keepers wiues are permitted to come to me. O holy God, howe largely doth Antichriſt extend his power and crueltie? But I truſt that hys power ſhall be ſhortned, and his iniquitie ſhalbe detected more & more amongſt the faithfull people.

A prophecy of Iohn Hus

Almighty God ſhal confirme the hearts of his faithful, whom he hath choſen before the cōſtitution of the world, that they may receiue the eternall crowne of glory. And let Antichriſt rage as much as he will, yet he ſhal not preuaile againſt Chriſt, which ſhal deſtroy him with the ſpirite of his mouth, as the Apoſtle ſayeth: And then ſhall the creature be deliuered out of ſeruitude of corruption, into the libertie of the glorye of the ſonnes of God, as ſayeth the Apoſtle in the wordes following: we alſo wythin oure ſelues doe grone, waiting for the adoption of the ſonnes of God, the redemption of our body.

I am greatly comforted in thoſe wordes of our Sauiour: happy be you when men ſhall hate you and ſhall ſeperate you, and ſhall rebuke you, and ſhall caſt out your name as execrable, for the ſonne of man. Reioyce and be glad, for beholde, great is your rewarde in heauen, Luke 6. O worthy, yea O moſt worthy conſolation, which not to vnderſtande, but to practiſe in time of tribulation, is a hard leſſon.

This rule ſainct Iames with the other Apoſtles, did well vnderſtand, which ſaieth: count it exceeding ioy my brethren, when yee ſhall fall into diuers tentations, knowing that the probation of your faith woorketh patience: let patience haue her perfecte worke. For certainely it is a great matter for a man to reioyce in trouble, and to take it for ioy to be in diuers temptations. A light matter it is to ſpeake it and to expounde it: but a great matter to fulfill it: For why, our moſt patient and moſt valiaunt champion him ſelfe, knowing that hee ſhoulde riſe againe the thirde day, ouercomming his ennemies by his death, and redeeming from damnation his electe after his laſt Supper was troubled in ſpirite and ſayde: My ſoule is heauie vnto death. Of whom alſo the Goſpell ſayeth, that hee began to feare, to be ſadde and heauie. Who being then in an agonie, was confirmed of the Aungell, and his ſweat was like the droppes of bloud falling vpon the ground. And yet he notwithſtanding, being ſo troubled, ſayde to his diſciples: let not your hearts be troubled, neither feare the crueltie of them that perſecute you: for you ſhall haue me with you alwaies, that you may ouercome the tyranny of your perſecutours. Whereupon thoſe his ſouldiours, looking vppon the Prince and king of glory, ſuſtained great conflictes. They paſſed throughe fire and water and were ſaued, and receiued the crowne of the Lord God, of the which S. Iames in his canonicall Epiſtle, ſayeth. Bleſſed is the man that ſuffereth temptation, for when he ſhall be proued, he ſhall receaue the crowne of life, which God hathe promiſed to them that loue him. Of this crowne I truſt ſtedfaſtly the Lord wil make mee partaker alſo with you, which be the feruent ſealers of the trueth, and with all them which ſtedfaſtly and conſtantly doe loue the Lord Ieſus Chriſt, which ſuffred for vs, leauing to vs example that we ſhould follow his ſteppes. It behooued him to ſuffer, as hee ſayeth: and vs alſo it behooued to ſuffer, that the members may ſuffer together with the head. For he ſayeth: If any man will come after mee, let him denie himſelfe and take vp hys croſſe and followe me.

The example of Chriſt.

O moſt mercyfull Chriſt, draw vs weake creatures after thee, for except thou ſhouldſt draw vs, we are not able to follow thee. Geue vs a ſtrong ſpirite, that it may be ready, and although the fleſh be feeble, yet let thy grace goe before vs, goe with vs, and follow vs: for without thee we can do nothyng, and much leſſe enter into the cruell death for thy ſake. Geue vs that prompt and ready ſpirite, a bold hart, an vpright fayth, a firme hope and perfect charitie, that we may geue our lyues paciently and ioyfully for thy names ſake. Amen. Written in priſon and in bondes in the Vigill of holy S. Iohn the Baptiſt, who beyng in priſon and in bondes for the rebuking of wickedneſſe, was beheaded.

The prayer of I. Hus to Chriſt.

¶ Among diuers other letters of Iohn Hus, which he wrote to the great conſolation of others: I thought alſo here to intermixt an other certaine godly letter writtē out of England, by a faythfull Scholler of Wickleffe, as appeareth, vnto Iohn Hus and the Bohemians, which for the zealous affectiō therein cōteined, ſeemeth not vnworthy to be read.

¶ A letter to Iohn Hus, and to the Bohemians from London.

A zealous letter to I.Hus from London.

GReetyng, and whatſoeuer can be deuiſed more ſweete, in the bowels of Chriſt Ieſu. My dearely beloued in the Lord, whom I loue in the trueth, and not I onely, but alſo all they that haue the knowledge of the trueth, whiche abydeth in you, and ſhall be with you through the grace of G O D for euermore: I reioyſed aboue meaſure, when our beloued brethren came and gaue teſtimony vnto vs of your trueth, and how you walke in the trueth. I haue heard brethren, how ſharpely Antichriſt perſecuteth you, in vexyng the faithfull ſeruauntes of Chriſt with diuers and ſtraunge kyndes of afflictions. And ſurely no maruaile, if amongeſt you (ſince it is ſo almoſt all the world ouer) the law of Chriſt be too too greuouſly impugned, and that redde Dragon hauyng ſo many heades (of whom it is ſpoken in the Apocalyps) haue now vomited out of his mouth that great floud, by whiche he goeth about to ſwallow vp the woman: but the moſt gracious God will deliuer for euer his onely and moſt faythfull ſpouſe Let vs therfore cōfort our ſelues in the Lord our God, and in his vnmeaſurable goodnes, hopyng ſtrongly in him which will not ſuffer thoſe that loue him, to be vnmercifully defrauded of any their purpoſe, if we according to our duety, ſhall loue him with all our hart: for aduerſitie ſhould by no meanes preuaile ouer vs, if there were no iniquitie raignyng in vs. Let therefore no tribulation or ſorrow for Chriſts cauſe, diſcourage vs, knowing this for a ſurety, that whōſoeuer the Lord vouchſafeth to receaue to be his childrē, thoſe he ſcourgeth: For ſo the mercifull father will haue them tried in this miſerable life by perſecutions, that afterwardes hee may ſpare them. For the golde that this high artificer hathe choſen, he purgeth and trieth in this fire, that he may afterwardes lay it vp in his pure treaſurie. For we ſee that the time which we ſhall abide here, is ſhort and tranſitory: the life which we hope for after this, is bleſſed and euerlaſting. Therefore whileſt we haue time, let vs take paine, that we may enter into that reſt. What other thyng do we ſee in this brickle life, then ſorow, heauineſſe aud ſadneſſe, and that which is moſt greuous of all to the faithfull, too much abuſing and contempt of the lawe of the Lord. Let vs therefore endeuoure our ſelues as much as we may, to lay holde of the things that are eternall and abiding, deſpiſing in our mindes all tranſitory and fraile things. Let vs conſider the holy fellowſhip of our fathers that haue gone before vs. Let vs conſider the Sainctes of the olde and newe Teſtament. Did they not paſſe through this ſea of tribulation and perſecution? were not ſome of them cut in peces, other ſome ſtoned, & others of them killed with the ſword? Some others of them went about in pelts and goates skinnes, as the Apoſtle to the Hebrues witneſſeth. Surely they all walked ſtraight wayes, following the ſteppes of Chriſt, which ſayde, he that miniſtreth vnto me, let him follow me, whether ſo euer I go. &c. Therfore let vs alſo, which haue ſo noble examples geuen vs of the Saintes that went before vs, laying away as muche as in vs lyeth, the heauy burden, and the yoke of ſinne which compaſſeth vs about, runne forwarde through patience, to the battaile that is ſet before vs, fixing our eyes vppon the author of faith, and Ieſus the finiſher of the ſame: who ſeeing the ioy that was ſet before hym, ſuffred the paines of the croſſe, deſpiſing death. Let vs call vppon him, which ſuffred ſuche reproche againſt himſelfe of ſinners, that we be not wearied, fainting in our hearts, but that we may heartely pray for helpe of the Lorde, and may fight againſt his aduerſary Antichriſt: that we may loue his law, and not be deceitfull labourers, but that we may deale faithfully in all things, according to that, that God hath vouchſafed to geue vs, and that wee may labour diligently in the Lordes cauſe vnder hope of an euerlaſting reward. Behold therefore brother Hus, moſt dearly beloued in Chriſte, although in face vnknowen to me, yet not in faith and loue (for diſtance of places cannot ſeparate thoſe whom the loue of Chriſt doth effectually knit together) be comforted in the grace which is geuen vnto thee, labour like a good ſouldiour of Chriſt Ieſus, preach, be inſtant in word and in example, and call as many as thou canſt, to the way of truth: for the truth of the goſpel is not to be kept in ſilence becauſe of friuolous cenſures and thunderboltes of Antichriſt. And therefore to the vttermoſt of thy power ſtrengthen thou and confirme the members of Chriſt, whych are weakened by the deuil: and if the Lord wil vouchſafe it, Antichriſt ſhall ſhortly come to an end. And there is one thing wherein I do greatly reioyce, that in your realm and in other places, God hath ſtirred vp the harts of ſome men that they can gladly ſuffer for the word of God, impriſonment, baniſhment and death.

F·amples of the olde martirs

Further, beloued I knowe not what to wryte vnto you, but I confeſſe that I could wiſh to powre out my whole heart, if thereby I might comfort you in the lawe of the Lorde. Alſo I ſalute from the bottome of my heart, all the faithfull louers of the law of the Lord, and ſpecially Iacobellus your coadiutor in the goſpell, requiring that he will pray vnto the Lorde for me in the vniuerſall churche of Ieſus Chriſt. And the God of peace which hath raiſed from the dead the ſhepheard of the ſheepe, the mighty Lorde Ieſus Chriſt, make you apt in all goodneſſe to doe his will, working in you that which may be pleaſant in his ſight. All your friendes ſalute you which haue heard of your conſtancie. I would deſire alſo to ſee your letters wrytten backe to vs, for knowe yee that they ſhall greatly comfort vs.

¶ An other letter of Iohn Hus to his friendes of Boheme.

THe Lord God be with you. I loue the counſaile of the Lorde, aboue gold and precious ſtone. Wherfore I truſt in the mercy of Ieſus Chriſt, that he wil geue me his ſpirit to ſtand in his truth. Pray to the Lord, for the ſpirit is ready and the fleſh is weake. The Lord almighty be the eternal reward vnto my Lords, which conſtantly, firmely and faithfully do ſtand for righteouſnes: to whom the Lorde God ſhall geue in the kingdome of Boheme, to knowe the truth. For the following of which truth, neceſſary it is that they returne againe into Boheme, ſetting apart all vaine glory, & following not a mortall and miſerable king, but the king of glory which geueth eternall life.

O howe comfortable was the geuing of the hande of Lorde Iohn de Clum vnto me, which was not aſhamed to reache foorth his hand to me a wretche, and ſuch an abiecte hereticke, lying in fetters of yron, and cried out vpon all men. Nowe peraduenture I ſhall not ſpeake much hereafter with you: Therfore ſalute in time as you ſhall ſee them, all the faithfull of Boheme.

Palletz came to me into priſone. His ſalutation in my vehement infirmitye, was this before the Commiſſaries, that there hath not riſen a more perillous hereticke ſince Chriſt was borne, then was Wickliffe and I. Alſo he ſayd that al ſuch as came to heare my talke, were infected with this hereſie, to thinke that the ſubſtance of bread remained in the ſacrament of the altare. To whome I anſwered and ſayd: O maiſter, what a grieuous ſalutation haue you geuen me? and how greatly do you ſinne? Behold I ſhal die, or peraduenture to morow ſhall be burnt. And what rewarde ſhall be recompenced to you in Boheme for your labour?

Wicked Palletz.

This thing peraduenture I ſhoulde not haue wrytten, leaſt I might ſeeme to hate him. I haue alwayes had this in my heart, truſt not in princes. &c. And againe, curſed be the man whiche truſteth in man, and maketh fleſh to be his arme. For Gods ſake be you circumſpecte how you ſtand and how you returne. Carie no letters with you. Directe your bookes not all by one, but diuerſly by diuers frendes.

Knowe this for certaine, that I haue had great conflictes by dreames, in ſuch ſort as I had much a doe to refraine from crying out. For I dreamed of the Popes eſcape before he went. And after the Lord Iohn had told me therof, immediately in the night it was told me that the Pope ſhuld returne to you again. And afterward alſo I dreamed of the appreheding of maiſter Hierome, although not in ful maner as it was done. Al the priſonments, whether and howe I am caryed, were opened to mee before, although not fully after the ſame fourme and circumſtance. Many ſerpents oftentimes appeared vnto me hauing heads alſo in their taile: but none of them could bite me, and many other things more.

The viſions of I. Hus by dreames.

Theſe thinges I wryte, not eſteeming my ſelfe as a prophet, or that I extoll my ſelfe, but onely to ſignifie vnto you what temptations I had in body and alſo in mind, and what great feare I had, leaſt I ſhoulde tranſgreſſe the commaundement of the Lord Ieſus Chriſt. Nowe I remember with my ſelfe the wordes of maiſter Hierome which ſayde, that if I ſhoulde come to the Councell, hee thoughte I ſhoulde neuer returne home againe. In like maner there was a good and godly man, a tailor, which taking his leaue of me at Prage, ſpake to me in theſe words: God be wyth you (ſaid he) for I thinke verely, my deare and good maiſter Iohn, that you ſhall not returne again to vs with your life. The king, not of Hungarie, but of heauen, rewarde you with all goodnes, for the faithfull doctrine which I at your hands haue receiued. &c.

A Propheſie of Maiſter Hierome of Prage.

This taylers name was Andrew, a Polonian.

¶ And ſhortly after the writing hereof, he ſendeth alſo vnto them an other propheticall viſion of his to be expouded, touching the reformation of the church, written in his 44. Epiſtle: the contentes whereof be theſe.

¶ An other letter of Iohn Hus, ſent to the Lord Iohn de Clum.

I Pray you expound to me the dreame of thys nyght. I ſawe how that in my churche of Bethleem, they came to raſe and put out all the images of Chriſt, and did put them out. The next day after I aroſe and ſawe many painters, which painted and made more fairer Images & many more then I had done before: which Images I was very glad and ioyfull to behold. And the painters wyth much people about them, ſayde, let the biſhops and prieſtes come now, & put vs out theſe pictures. Which being done, much people ſeemed to me in Bethleem to reioyce, and I with them. And I awaking therewith, felt my ſelfe to laugh. &c.

Prophetia.

¶ This viſion Lorde Iohn de Clum, and Iohn Hus himſelfe in his booke of Epiſtles in the 45. Epiſt. ſemeth to expounde, and applyeth theſe Images of Chriſt vnto the preaching of Chriſt and of his lyfe. The which preachyng and doctrine of Chriſt, though the Pope and his Cardinals ſhould extinguiſh in him, yet did he foreſee & declare, that the time ſhould come, wherin the ſame doctrine ſhuld be reuyued againe by others, ſo plenteouſly, that the pope with al his power, ſhuld not be able to preuaile againſt it. Thus much as cōcerning this viſiō of Iohn Hus. wherunto doth wel accord the Propheſie of Hierome of Prage, printed in the coyne called Moneta Huſsi: of the which coyn I haue my ſelfe one of the plates hauing this ſuperſcriptiō folowing printed about it: Centum reuolutis annis Deo reſpondebitis & mihi. That is. After a hundreth yeres come and gone, you ſhal geue a count to God and to me. Wherof (God willyng) more ſhalbe ſayd hereafter.

Furthermore in 48. Epiſt. the ſayd I. Hus ſeemyng to ſpeake with the like ſpirit of Prophecy, hath theſe wordes folowing: Sed ſpero, quod quæ dixi ſub tecto, prædicabuntur ſuper tecta: That is: but I truſt that thoſe thinges which I haue ſpoken within the houſe, hereafter ſhalbe preached vpon the top of the houſe.

Prophetia.

And becauſe we are here in hand with the Propheſies of Iohn Hus, it ſhall ſerue well in place, here moreouer to recorde his wordes in a certayne treatiſe by hym written, De Sacerdotum & Monachorum carnalium Abhominatione, wherein the ſayd Iohn Hus ſpeaking prophetically of the reformation of the Church, hath theſe wordes following. Ex iſtis vlterius aduerte incidentaliter, quod Dei eccleſia nequit ad priſtinam ſuam dignitatem reduci.&c. That is in engliſh.

Propletia.

Moreouer, hereupon note and marke by the way, that the church of God, cannot be reduced to his former dignitie, or be reformed, before all thinges firſt be made new. The truth whereof is playne by the Temple of Salomon Like as the Clergie and Prieſts, ſo alſo the people and laity: Or els vnleſſe all ſuch as now be addict to auarice, from the leaſt to the moſt, be firſt conuerted and reclaymed, as wel yͤ people as the clergy and Prieſts. Albeit as my mind now geueth me, I beleue rather the firſt, that is, that then ſhall riſe a new people, formed after the new man, whiche is created after God. Of the which people new Clerkes & Prieſtes ſhall come, and be taken: whiche all ſhall hate couetouſnes, and glory of this life, haſting to an heauenly cōuerſation. Notwithſtanding all theſe thinges ſhall come to paſſe and be brought by little and little in order of times diſpenſed of God for the ſame purpoſe. And this God doth and will do for his owne goodnes and mercy, and for the riches of his great longanimity and pacience, geuing time and ſpace of repẽtance to them yͭ haue lōg liue in theyr ſins to amend, and flye from the face of the Lordes fury, whyle that in like manner the carnall people, and carnal prieſtes ſucceſſiuely and in time, ſhall fall awaye and be conſumed as with the moth.&c.

¶ An other letter of Iohn Huſſe.

MAiſter Martin my deare brother in Chriſt, I exhorte you in the Lord, that you feare God, keepe hys commaundementes and flee the company of women, and beware of hearing their confeſſions, leaſt by the hipocriſie of women, Sathan deceiue you, truſt not their deuotion. You know how I haue deteſted the auarice and the inordinate life of the Clergy, wherefore through the grace of God I ſuffer now perſecution, which ſhortly ſhalbe conſummate in me, neither doe I feare to haue my hart powred out for the name of Chriſt Ieſus. I deſire you hartely be not greedy in ſeeking after benefices. And yet if you ſhalbe called to anye cure in the country, let the honour of God, the ſaluation of ſoules, and the trauaile therof moue you therunto, and not the hauing of the liuing or the commodities thereof. And if you ſhall be placed in any ſuch benefice, beware you haue no yong womā for your cook or ſeruant, leaſt you edifie and encreaſe more your houſe, then your ſoule. See that you be a builder of your ſpirituall houſe, being gentle to the poore, and humble of mind, and waſte not your goodes in great fare. I feare alſo if you do not amend your life, ceaſing from your coſtly and ſuperfluous apparell, leaſt you ſhalbe greuouſly chaſtiſed, as I alſo wretched mā ſhalbe puniſhed, which haue vſed the like, being ſeduced by cuſtome of euill men and wordly glory, wherby I haue bene wounded agaynſt God wyth the ſpirite of pride. And becauſe you haue notably knowne both my preaching and outward conuerſation euen from my youth, I haue no neede to write many thinges vnto you, but to deſire you for the mercy of Ieſus Chriſt, that you do not followe me in anye ſuch leuitie and lightnes, whiche you haue in ſeene in me. You knew how before my prieſthoode, whiche greueth me nowe, I haue delighted to playe oftentimes at cheſſe, and haue neglected my time, and thereby haue vnhappily prouoked both my ſelf and other to anger many times by that play. Wherfore, beſides other my innumerable faultes, for thys alſo I deſire you to inuocate the mercy of the Lord, that he will pardon me, and ſo directe my life, that hauing ouercome the wickednes of this preſent life, the fleſh the world and the deuill, I may finde place in the heauenly country, at the leaſt in the day of iudgement. Fare ye well in Chriſt Ieſus, with all them which keepe hys law. My gray coate if you will keepe to your ſelfe for my remembraunce, but I thinke you are aſhamed to wear that gray colour: therfore you may geue it to whō you ſhall thinke good. ¶ The ſuperſcription

I pray you that you doe not open this letter, before you be ſure and certayne of my death.

✻ The conſolation of Mayſter Hierome to Mayſter Hus.

MY maiſter, in thoſe thinges which you haue both written hetherto and alſo preached after the law of God agaynſt the pride, auarice, an other inordinate vices of the Prieſtes, goe forward, be conſtant and ſtrong And if I ſhall know that you are oppreſſed in the cauſe, and if neede ſhal ſo require, of myne own accorde, I will folow after to helpe you, as much as I can.

BY the lyfe, actes and letters of Iohn Hus hetherto rehearſed, it is euident and playne, that he was condemned, not for any errour of doctrine, which they coulde well proue in hym, who neyther denyed their popiſhe tranſubſtantiation, neither ſpake againſt the authoritie of yͤ church of Rome, if it were well gouerned, nor yet the 7. Sacraments, & alſo ſayd maſſe himſelf, and almoſt in al their popiſh opinions was a papiſt wͭ them: but onely of euil wil was accuſed of his malicious aduerſaries, becauſe he ſpake agaynſt the pompe, pride, and auarice, & other wicked enormities of the pope, Cardinals, & Prelates of yͤ Church; and becauſe he could not abide the high dignities & liuings of the Churche, and thought the doinges of the pope to be Antichriſtlike. For this cauſe he procured ſo many enemies & falſe witneſſes agaynſt him. who ſtrayning and picking matter out of hys bookes and writinges, hauing no one iuſt article of doctrine to lay vnto him, yet they made hym an hereticke, whether he would or no, and brought him to hys condemnation. This can hatred and malice do, where the charitie of Chriſt hath no place. whiche being ſo, as thy charitie (good reader) may eaſely vnderſtand, in peruſing the whol courſe of hys ſtory: I beſeech thee thē, what cauſe had Iohn Cochleus to write his 12. bookes agaynſt Iohn Hus and Huſſites? In which bookes how bitterly & intemperately he miſuſeth hys penne, by theſe few words in hys ſecond booke thou mayſt take a little taſt: which wordes I thought here briefly to place in Engliſh to the ende that all Engliſh men may iudge thereby, with what ſpirite and truth theſe Catholickes be caryed. Hys wordes be theſe. Lib.2.Hiſt. Dico igitur Ioan Huſſ neque ſanctum neque beatum habendum eſſe, ſed impium potius.&c. That is, I ſay therfore Iohn Huſſe is neither to be counted holy nor bleſſed: but rather wicked and eternally wretched: inſomuche that in yͤ day of iudgement, it ſhalbe more eaſie, not onely with the infidell Pagans, Turks, Tartarians, and Iewes, but alſo wͭ the moſt ſinfull Sodomites, & the abhominable Perſians, which moſt filthily doe lye with their daughters, ſiſters or mothers,, yea & alſo with moſt impious Cain killer of hys owne brother, with Thyeſtes killer of hys own mother, and yͤ Leſtrygones & other Andropophagi, which deuour mans fleſh, yea more eaſie wͭ thoſe infamous murderers of infants, Pharao, & Herode, then wͭ him &c. Theſe be the words of Cochleus. whoſe rayling books although they deſerue neyther to be read, nor aunſwered, yet if it pleaſed God, it were to be wiſhed that the Lord would ſtir vp ſome towardly yong man, that hath ſo much leaſure, to defend the ſimplicitie of thys Iohn Hus, whiche cannot now aunſwere for himſelfe. In the meane tyme, ſomething to ſatiſfie or ſtay the readers mynde agaynſt thys immoderate, hyperbole of Cochleus, in like fewe wordes I wyll bryng out Iohn Hus to ſpeake and to cleare hymſelfe agaynſt this ſlaunder: whoſe wordes in hys booke De ſacerdotum & Monachorum abhominatione deſolationis.pag.84.&c. I beſeech the reader to note. Nam & iſta ſcribens fateor, ꝙ nihil aliud me in illis perurget, niſi dilectio Dom. Noſtri Ieſu cruſſifixi.&c. That is. For in writing theſe things, I confeſſe nothinge els to haue moued me hereunto, but onely the loue of our Lorde Ieſus crucified, whoſe printes and ſtripes, (according to the meaſure of my weakenes and vilenes) I couet to beare in my ſelfe, beſeeching hym ſo to geue me grace, that I neuer ſeek to glory in my ſelfe or in any thing els, but onely in his croſſe, and in the ineſtimable ignominy of his paſſion which he ſuffered for me. And therefore I write and ſpeake theſe thinges, which I do not doubt will like all ſuch as vnfaynedly do loue the Lord Chriſt crucified: and contrary will miſlike not a little all ſuche as be of Antichriſt. Alſo agayne, I confeſſe before the moſt mercifull Lord Ieſus Chriſt crucified, that theſe thinges which I do now write, and thoſe that I haue written before, neither I could haue writtē, nor knew how, nor durſt ſo haue written, vnleſſe he by hys inward vnction had ſo commaunded me. Neither yet do I write theſe things as of authority, to get me fame and name: For as S. Auguſtine & Hierome do ſay, that is onely to be geuen to the ſcriptures and writinges of the Apoſtles, Euangeliſtes and Prophetes, and to the Canonicall Scriptures, which doe abounde in the fulnes of the ſpirite of Ieſus. And whatſoeuer is there ſayd, is full of veritie and wholeſome vtilitie.&c. And here place alſo would require ſomething to ſay to Æneas Siluius to Antoninus, and to Laziardus, which falſly impute articles to him, whiche he neuer mayntayned. But becauſe tyme ſuffereth not, I wil proceed to the ſtory of maiſter Hierom of Prage.

Iohn Hus condemned for no erroneous doctrine wherein he was culpable

Cochleus railleth againſt Iohn Hus without cauſe.

Ex Chocleo. Lib. 2. Hiſt. Huſſitarum. pag. 88.

✠ The Tragicall and lamentable hiſtory of the famous learned man and godly Martyr of Chriſt, maiſter Hierome of Prage, burned at Conſtance for like cauſe and quarrell as Maiſter Iohn Hus was. 1416.

The ſtory of Hierome of Prage.

These thinges hetherto being diſcourſed touching the lyfe, Actes and Conſtant martyrdom of M. Iohn Hus with part alſo of his letters adioyned to the ſame, whoſe death was on the 6. of Iuly. an. 1416. now remayneth cōſequently to deſcribe the like Tragedy and cruell handeling of his Chriſtian companion and fellow in bandes M. Hierome of Prage: who grieuouſly ſorrowing the ſlaunderous reproch and diffamation of his coūtry of Boheme, and alſo hearing tell of yͤ manifeſt iniuries done vnto that man of worthy memory M. Iohn Hus: freely and of hys own accord came vnto Conſtance, the 4. day of Aprill. an. 1415. who there perceiuing that Iohn Hus was denyed to be heard, and that watche and wayte was layd for hym on euery ſide, he departed to Iberling a Citty of the Empire, vntill the next day: the which Citty was a myle of frō Conſtance, and from thence he wrote hys letters by me vnto Sigiſmund kyng of Hungry and hys Barons, and alſo vnto the Councell, moſt earneſtly requiring that the kyng and the Councell would geue him a ſafe conduct freely to come and go, and that he woulde then come in open audience to aunſwere vnto euery man, if there were any of the Councell that would lay any cryme vnto hym, as by the tenour of his intimation, ſhall more at large appeare.

Hierome commeth to Conſtance.

The ſafe cōduct was required but in vaine of the Emperour.

When as the ſayd king of Hungary was required therunto, as is aforeſayd, being in the houſe of the Lord Cardinall of Cambray, he denyed to geue M. Hierome anye ſafeconducte excuſing himſelfe for the euil ſpeede he had wͭ the ſafe conduct of Iohn Hus before, and alleadging alſo certayne other cauſes. The deputies alſo of the foure nations of yͤ Councell, being moued thereunto by yͤ Lords of yͤ kingdome of Boheme, aunſwered: wee (ſay they) will geue hym a ſafeconduct to come, but not to depart. Whoſe aunſweres, when they were reported vnto maiſter Hierome, he the next day after wrote certaine intimations according to the tenour here vnder written, which he ſent vnto Conſtance to be ſet vpon the gates of the Citty, and vpon the gates of the Churches and Monaſteries, and of the houſes of the Cardinals, and other nobles and prelates. The tenour wherof here followeth word for word in thys maner.

The intimations of Hierome of Prage, ſet vp in diuers places of the towne of Conſtance.

Unto the moſt noble Prince and Lord, the Lord Sigiſmund, by the grace of God king of the Romanes, alwaies Auguſtus, and of Hungary &c. I Hierome of Prage maiſter of Arte of the generall vniuerſities of Paris, Colleyn, Heldeberg & Prage, by theſe my preſent letters do notifie vnto the King together with the whole reuerend Councell and as much as in me lyeth, do all men to vnderſtand and know, that becauſe of the crafty ſlaunderers, backbiters & accuſers, I am ready freely & of myne owne will, to come vnto Cōſtance, there to declare openly before the Councell the puritie and ſinceritie of my true fayth and myne innocencie, and not ſecretly in corners before any priuate or particulare perſon. Wherfore if there be any of my ſlaūderers, of what natiō or eſtate ſoeuer they be, which will obiect agaynſt me anye crime of errour or hereſie: let them come forth openly before me in the preſence of the whole Councell, and in theyr owne names obiect agaynſt me, and I will be ready, as I haue written, to aunſwere openly and publikely before the whole Councell of myne innocencie, and to declare the puritie and ſinceritie of my true fayth. And if it be that I ſhalbe foūd culpable in errour or hereſie, then I will not refuſe openly to ſuffer ſuch puniſhment as ſhall be meete and worthy for an erroneous perſon, or an hereticke.

Wherefore I moſt humbly beſeech my Lord the King and the whole ſacred Coūcell, that I may haue to this end and purpoſe aforeſayd, ſafe and ſure acceſſe. And if it happē that I offering ſuche equitie and right as I do, before any fault be proued agaynſt me, be areſted impriſoned, or haue any violence done vnto me, that thē it may be manifeſt vnto the whole worlde that this generall Councell doth not proceede according to equitie and iuſtice, if they woulde by any meanes put me backe from this profoūd and ſtraight iuſtice, being come hether freely and of myne owne minde and accorde. The whiche thing I ſuppoſe to be farre from ſo ſacred and holy Councell of wiſe men.

Safe conduct denied to Hierome.

When as yet he through ſuch intimations copied out in the Bohemian, Latine, and Germayne tongue, being ſet vp as is aforeſayd, could not get any ſafeconduct thē the Nobles, Lords, and Knightes ſpecially of the Bohemian nation, preſent in Conſtance, gaue vnto maiſter Hierome their letters patentes, cōfirmed with their ſeales for a teſtimony and witneſſe of the premiſſes. With the which letters the ſayd M. Hierome returned agayne vnto Boheme, but by the treaſon and conſpiracy of his enemies was taken in Hirſaw by the officers of Duke Iohn, and in Zultzbach was brought backe agayne to the preſence of the Duke. In the meane time ſuch as were the ſetters forward of the Councell agaynſt M. Iohn Hus, and M. Ierome, that is to ſay Michael de Cauſis and M. Palletz and other their accomplices, required that the ſayde mayſter Hierome ſhould be cited by reaſon of hys intimations: & certayne dayes after the citation hereunder written, was ſet vpon the gates and porches of the citty, and Churches, which followeth here in this maner.

Hierome returneth toward Boheme, with the teſtimonies of the Lordes of Boheme.

Hierom apprehēded in the way by Duke Iohn. Michaell de Cauſis, and Palletz enemies to Hierome.

Hierome of Prage cited by the councell whē he was taken.

This moſt ſacred and holy Synode and general councell of Conſtance, faithfully congregated and gathered together in the holy Ghoſt, repreſenting the vniuerſall militant Church, vnto Hierome of Prage, which writeth himſelfe to be a mayſter of Arte of ſo many Uniuerſities, and pretendeth thoſe things which are onely pertayning vnto ſobriety and modeſty, and that he knoweth no more then he ought. &c. Know thou that there is a certayne writinge come vnto our vnderſtanding and knowledge, the whiche was ſet vp as it were by thine owne perſon vpon yͤ gates of the Churches and Citty of Conſtance, vppon the Sonday, when there was ſong in the Church of God: Quaſi modo geniti. Wherein thou doeſt affirme, that thou wilt openly anſwere vnto thy accuſers and ſlaunderers which ſhall obiect any crime, errour or hereſie agaynſt thee, whereof yͭ art meruailouſly infamed and accuſed before vs, and ſpecially touching the doctrine of Wickleff, and other doctrines contrary vnto the catholicke fayth, ſo that thou mighteſt haue graunted vnto thee a ſafe conduct to come. But for ſo much as it is our part principally and chiefly to foreſee and looke vnto theſe crafty Foxes which goe about to deſtroy the vyneyarde of the Lord of hoſtes, therefore we do cite & and call forth by the tenour of theſe preſentes, thy perſon manifoldly defamed and ſuſpected for the temerarious affirming and teaching of manifold errours, ſo that within the term of 15. dayes to be accompted from the date of theſe preſentes, wherof 5. dayes are appoynted for the firſt term fiue for the ſecond, and other fiue for the third, we do ordein and appoynt by Canonicall admonition and warninge, that thou do appeare in the publique Seſſion of the ſacred Councell, if there be any holden the ſame day, or els yͤ firſt day immediately following, when as any Seſſion ſhalbe, according to the tenour of thy ſayd writing, to anſwere to thoſe thinges, which any perſon or perſons ſhall obiect or lay agaynſt thee in any cauſe of thy fayth, and to receiue & haue, as iuſtice ſhall require. Wherupon, ſo much as in vs lyeth, & as catholike faith ſhall require, we offer & aſſigne to thee by the tenour hereof, our ſafe cōduct frō all violence (iuſtice alwayes being ſaued) certifying thee yͭ whether yͧ doeſt appeare or not, the ſayd terme or tyme appoynted notwithſtanding, proceſſe ſhall goe forward agaynſt thee by the ſayd ſacred Councell, or by their Cōmiſſary or Cōmiſſaries, for the time aforeſayd not obſerued and kept, thy contumacie or ſtubburnes in any thing notwithſtanding Geuen in the 6. Seſſion of the generall Councell, the 17. day of Aprill, vnder the ſeale of the preſidentes of the foure nations.

¶ Grumpert Faber Notary of the Germaynes.

After that Sigiſmund king of Hungary with the reſt of the Councell, vnderſtood by the foreſaid Duke Ioh, that M. Hierome was taken, they were earneſtly in hand, requiring that M. Hierome ſhold be brought before them vnto the Councell. The whiche Duke Iohn, after hee had receiued letters of the kyng and the Councell, brought M. Hierom bound vnto Conſtance, whom his brother Duke Ludouicus lead through the Cittie to the Cloyſter of the Friers Minors in Conſtance, whereas the chiefe Prieſtes and Elders of the people, Scribes & Phariſeis, were gathered together attending and wayting for hys comming. He the ſayd mayſter Hierome caryed a great handbolte of iron with a long chayne in hys hand, and as he paſſed the chayne made a great ratlyng and noyſe, and for the more confuſion and deſpite towardes hym, they led him by the ſame chayne after Duke Ludouicus aforeſaid, holding and ſtretching out the chayne a great way from him: with the whiche chayne, they alſo kept him bounde in the Cloyſter. When he was brought into the Cloyſter, they reade before hym the letter of Duke Iohn, which was ſent with yͤ ſayd mayſter Hierome vnto the Councell, contayning in effect how that the ſayd Duke Iohn had ſent mayſter Hierome

This Duke Iohn in hiſtorics is cōmōly called the ſonne of Clement.

Hierome is brought bound vnto Conſtance by Duke Iohn.

vnto the councell, who by chance was fallen into his handes, becauſe he heard an euill report of hym, ẏ he was ſuſpected of the hereſies of wickleffe: that the Councell might take order for him, whoſe part it was to correct & puniſh ſuch as did erre and ſtray from the truth, beſides many other flattering tales which were written in the ſayd letter for the prayſe of the Councell. After this they read the citation which was geuen out by the councell agaynſt maiſter Hierome, wherof we haue ſpoken before. Then certayne of the Byſhops ſayd vnto hym: Hierom why diddeſt thou flye & runne awaye, and diddeſt not appeare when ẏ waſt cited? He anſwered, becauſe I could not haue any ſafecōduict, neither from you, neither from the king, as it appeareth by theſe letters patentes of the Barons, whiche you haue, neither by my open intimations could I obtain any ſafe conduict.

The coūcell neither would geue him libertie ſafely to come nor freely to go.

wherfore I perceauing many of my greuous & heauy frendes to be here preſent in the Councell, would not my ſelfe be the occaſion of my perils and daungers, but if I had known or had any vnderſtanding of this citation, without al doubt, albeit I had bene in Boheme, I would haue returned agayne. Then all the whole rabble riſing vp, alledged diuers and ſondry accuſations and teſtimonies agaynſt him with a great noyſe and tumulte. when the reſt held their peace, then ſpake maiſter Gerſon the Chauncellour of Paris: Hierome when thou waſt at Paris, thou thoughteſt thy ſelfe by meanes of thy eloquence to be an Angell, & diddeſt trouble the whole Uniuerſitie, alledging openly in the ſchooles many erroneous concluſions with their correlaria, and ſpecially in the queſtion de vniuerſalibus & de Idæis, with many other very offenſiue queſtiōs. Unto whom Mayſter Hierome ſayd: I anſwere to you mayſter Gerſon: Thoſe matters which I did put forth there in the Schooles at Paris, in the whiche alſo I aunſwered to the argumentes of the Mayſters, I did put them forth Philoſophically and as a Philoſopher, and mayſter of the Uniuerſitie: and if I haue put foorth anye queſtions whiche I ought not to haue put forth, teache me that they be erroneous, and I will moſt humbly be informed, and amend the ſame.

M. Hierome was accuſed by M. Gerſō with cōmendation of his eloquence.

Gerſon reneweth olde matters.

whiles he was yet ſpeaking, an other (as I ſuppoſe, the mayſter of the Uniuerſity of Colleyne vpon the Riuer of Rheine) riſing vp ſayd: when thou waſt alſo at Colcyn in thy poſition whiche thou diddeſt there determine, thou diddeſt propound many erroneous matters. Then ſayd M. Hierome vnto hym, ſhew me firſt one errour whiche I propounded. wherwithall he being in a maner aſtoniſhed, ſayd, I do not remember them now at the firſt, but hereafter they ſhalbe obiected agaynſt you.

The maiſter of the vniuerſitie of Coleine. This man would accuſe but he lacked matter.

And by and by the thirde man riſing vp, ſayde: when ẏ you were alſo at Heidelberg, you propounded many erroneous matters as touching the Trinitie, and there painted out a certayne ſhield or ſcutchine, comparing the Trinitie of perſons in diuinitie vnto water, ſnow, and yſe, and ſuch like. Unto whō M. Hierome anſwered: Thoſe thinges that I wrote or paynted there, the ſame will I alſo ſpeake, write and paynt here, and teach me that they be erroneous, and I will moſt humbly reuoke and recant the ſame.

The maiſter of the vniuerſitie of Heidelberg.

Then certayne cryed out, let hym be burned, let him be burned. Unto whom he anſwered: if my death doe delight or pleaſe you, in the name of God let it be ſo.

Crucifige, Crucifige eum.

Then ſayd the archbiſhop of Saliſburg, not ſo mayſter Hierome, forſomuch as it is written: I will not the death of a ſinner, but rather that he conuert and liue. when theſe and many other tumultes and cryes were paſſed, whereby they did then moſt diſorderly and outragiouſly witnes agaynſt them, they deliuered the ſayd mayſter Hierome being bound, vnto ẏ officers of the City of Conſtance, to be caryed to priſon for that night: and ſo euery one of them returned to their lodginges.

In the meane tyme, one of the friendes of M. I. Hus, looking out at a window of the Cloyſter, ſayd vnto hym, M. Hierome. Then ſayd hee, you are welcome my deare brother. Then ſayd Peter vnto hym: Be conſtant & feare not to ſuffer death for the truth ſake, of the whiche whē you were in tymes paſt at libertie, you dyd preache ſo muche goodnes. Unto whome Hierome aunſwered, truely brother I do not feare death, and forſomuch as we know that we haue ſpoken much therof in times paſt: let vs now ſee what may be knowne or done in effect. By and by hys keepers comming to the window, threatning hym wyth ſtrokes, dyd put away the ſayd Peter from the window of the Cloyſter.

Hierome is cōforted by the Notarie.

Then came there one Uitus vnto M. Hierome & ſayd mayſter how doe you? Unto whom he aunſwered: truely brother, I do very well. Then hys keepers comming about him, layd hold of the ſayd Uitus, ſaying, this is alſo one of the number, and kept hym. when it drew towardes euening, the archb. of Rigen, ſent certayne of hys ſeruants which lead away M. Hierome, being ſtrōgly bound with chaynes, both by the handes and by the neck, and kept him ſo for certayne houres. when night drew on, they caryed hym vnto a certayn tower of the Citie in Sainct Paules Churchyarde, where as they tying him faſt vnto a great blocke, and his feete in the ſtockes: hys handes alſo being made faſt vppon them, they left hym: where as the blocke was ſo high, that he could by no meanes ſit therupon, but that his head muſt hang downward. They caryed alſo the ſayd Uitus vnto the archbiſhop of Rygen, who demaunded of him, why he durſt be ſo bold to talk with ſuch a man being a reprobate of all men, and an hereticke: and when as he could finde no cauſe of impriſonment in hym, and ẏ he ſayd he was maiſter Iohn de Clums friend (taking an othe and promiſe of him that he ſhould not go about to endamage the Councell, by reaſon of that impriſonment and captiuitie) ſo diſmiſſed hym and ſent him away.

Maiſter Hierom, vnknowen vnto vs whether he was caryed, lay in the ſayd tower two dayes & two nightes releeued onely with bread and water. Then one of hys keepers comming vnto M. Peter, declared vnto him howe ẏ M. Hierome lay hard by in bondes and chaines, and how he was fed. Then M. Peter deſired that hee might haue leaue geuen hym to geue him meat, becauſe he would procure the ſame vnto hym. The keeper of the priſon graunting hys requeſt, caryed meate vnto hym. within eleuen dayes after, ſo hanging by the heeles: he vſed ſo ſmall repaſt, that he fell ſore ſicke euen vnto the death. when as he lying then in that captiuitie and priſon, deſired to haue a Confeſſor, they of the Councell, denyed that he ſhold haue any, vntill ſuch time as by great importunitie he obtayned to haue one: hys friends being then there preſent in ẏ ſame priſon and tower, wherein he then lay by the ſpace of one yeare lacking but ſeuen dayes.

M. Hierome was kept in irons in priſō the ſpace of one yeare.

After they had put Iohn Hus to death, then about the feaſt of the natiuitie of Mary the Uirgine, they brought forth M. Hierome, whom they had kept ſo long in chains, vnto the Churche of S. Paule: and threatning hym with death, being inſtant vpon him, they forced him to abiure & recant, and cōſent vnto the death of M. Iohn Hus, that he was iuſtly and truely condemned and put to death by thē. He, what for feare of death and hopyng thereby to eſcape out of their handes, according to their will and pleaſure: & according to the tenour whiche was exhibited vnto hym: did make abiuration, and that in the Cathedrall Churche and open Seſſion, the draught whereof penned to hym by the Papiſtes, here enſueth.

¶ The abiuration of M Hierome of Prage.

The forced abiuration of Hierome.

I Hierome of Prage, Mayſter of Arte, acknowledging the Catholicke Church and the Apoſtolicke fayth: do accurſe and renounce all hereſies, & ſpecially that, whereof I haue hetherto bene infamed, and that which in tymes paſt Iohn Hus and Iohn wickleffe haue holden and taught in theyr workes, treatiſes and ſermons, made vnto the people and Clergy: for the whiche cauſe the ſayde wickliffe and Hus, together with the ſayde doctrines & errours, are condēned by this Sinode of Conſtance, as hereticackes and all the ſaid doctrine ſentencially condemed, and eſpecially in certayne articles expreſſed in the ſentences and iudgementes geuen agaynſt them by this ſacred Councell.

Alſo I do accorde and agree vnto the holy Churche of Rome, the Apoſtolick ſeate in this ſacred Councel, & with my mouth and hart do profeſſe in al thinges, and touching all thinges, and ſpecially as touching the keyes, Sacramentes, orders and offices and eccleſiaſticall cenſures, of pardons, reliques of Saintes, Eccleſiaſticall libertie, alſo ceremonies and all other thinges pertayning vnto Chriſtian Religion, as the Church of Rome, the Apoſtolick ſea and this ſacred Councel do profeſſe: and ſpecially that many of the ſayd Articles are notoriouſly hereticall and lately reproued by the holy fathers, ſome of them blaſphemous, other ſome erroneous: ſome offenſiue vnto godly eares, & many of them temerarious and ſeditious. And ſuche alſo were counted the Articles lately condemned by the ſacred councell, and it was inhibited and forbidden to all and ſingular Catholicke men hereafter to preach, teach or preſume to hold or mayntayne any of the ſayd Articles, vnder payn of being accurſed.

And I the ſayd Hierome, forſomuch as I haue laboured by Scholaſticall Artes, to perſwade the opinion, De Vniuerſalibus realibus, and that one ſubſtance of the common kinde ſhould ſignifie many thinges ſubiect vnder the ſame and euery one of them as S. Ambroſe, Hierom, Auguſtin do affirme, and likewiſe others. For the teaching hereof by a playne example I deſcribed as it were a certayne triangle, forme or figure, the which I cald the ſhield of fayth.

Therfore vtterly to exclude and take away the erroneous and wicked vnderſtanding therof, the which peraduẽture ſome men may gather thereby: I do ſay, affirme: & declare, that I neuer made the ſayd figure, neither named it the ſhield of faith to yͤ intent or purpoſe, yͭ I woulde extoll or preferre the opinion of vniuerſalities aboue or before yͤ contrary opinion, in ſuch ſort as though that were yͤ ſhield of faith, & yͭ without the affirmation therof, the Catholicke faith coulde not be defended or maintained, when as I my ſelfe would not obſtinately ſticke thereunto. But this I ſaid, becauſe I had put example in the deſcription of the Triangle or form, that one diuine eſſence conſiſted in three ſubiectes or perſons in themſelues diſtinct: that is to ſaye, the father, the ſonne, and the holy Ghoſt. The article of the which Trinitie, is the chiefe ſhield of fayth, and foundation of the Catholicke truth.

Furthermore that it may be euident vnto all mẽ what the cauſes were for yͤ whiche I was reputed & thought to ſtick to, and fauour ſome time I. Hus. I ſignifie vnto all men by theſe preſentes, that when as I heard him oftentimes both in his ſermons and alſo in the ſchooles: I beleued that he was a very good man, neither that he dyd in any poynt gaynſay the traditions of our holy mother the Church or holy doctors: in ſomuch as when I was lately in this Citty, and the articles, which I affirmed were ſhewed vnto me, whiche were alſo condemned by the ſacred Councell, at the firſt ſight of them I did not beleeue that they were hys, at the leaſt not in that forme. But when as I had further vnderſtood by certayn famous Doctours & mayſters of Diuinitie, that they were hys articles: required for my further information and ſatiſfaction, to haue yͤ bookes of hys own hand writing ſhewed vnto me, wherein it was ſayd, thoſe articles were contayned. The which books, when they were ſhewed vnto me written with his owne hand, which I did know as well as mine owne, I found all, and euery one of thoſe articles therein written in like forme as they are condemned. Wherfore I do worthely iudge and thinke him and his doctrine with his adherents to be condemned and reproued by this ſacred coũcell, as hereticall and without reaſon. Al which yͤ premiſſes with a pure minde and conſcience I do heare pronounce & ſpeake, being now fully and ſufficiently informed of yͤ foreſaid ſentences and iudgementes geuen by the ſacred councell agaynſt the doctrines of the ſayd Iohn Wickleffe and Iohn Hus, and agaynſt their own perſons: vnto yͤ which iudgement, as a deuout Catholike in all thinges, I doe moſt humbly conſent and agree.

Hierom is made here to ſay not his own minde, but what pleaſed them.

Alſo I the foreſayd Hierom, which before the reuerend fathers the Lordes Cardinals, and reuerend Lordes Prelates and Doctours, and other worſhipful perſons of this ſacred Councell in this ſame place, did heretofore frely and willingly declare and expound myne intent, and purpoſe amongeſt other thinges ſpeaking of the Churche, did deuide the ſame into three partes. And as I did perceaue afterward, it was vnderſtanded by ſome yͭ I would affirme that in the triumphant Church, there was fayth. Whereas I do firmly beleue that there is the bleſſed ſight and beholding of God, excluding all darke vnderſtanding & knowledge: And now alſo I do ſay, affirm & declare, that it was neuer my intent and purpoſe, to proue that there ſholde be fayth, ſpeaking of fayth as fayth is commonly defined, but knowledge farre exceeding fayth. And generally whatſoeuer I ſayd, eyther there, or at any time before, I do referre and moſt humbly ſubmit my ſelfe vnto the determination of this ſacred Councell of Conſtance.

Moreouer, I do ſweare both by the holy Trinitie, and alſo by the moſt holy Goſpell, that I will for euermore remayne and perſeuere without all doubt, in the truth of the Catholicke Churche. And all ſuch as by their doctrine and teaching, ſhall impugne this fayth, I iudge them worthy together with their doctrines, of eternall curſe. And if I my ſelfe at any time (which God forbid I ſhould) doe preſume to preach or teach, contrary thereunto, I will ſubmit my ſelf vnto the ſeueritie of the Canons, and be bound vnto eternall payn and puniſhment. Whervpon I do deliuer vp this my cõfeſſion and tenour of my profeſſion willingly before this ſacred generall councell, and haue ſubſcribed and written all theſe thinges with myne owne hand.

Hierome after his abiuration returned into priſon.

AFter all this, they cauſed hym to be caryed agayn vnto the ſame priſon, but not ſo ſtraightly chayned & bound as he was before: notwithſtanding kept euery day wyth ſouldiors and armed men. And when as afterward, his enemies which were appoynted agaynſt him, as Michaell de cauſis, & wicked Palletz, with other their companions in theſe affayres, vnderſtood & knew by the wordes & talke of M. Hierome and by other certayn tokens, that he made the ſame abiuration & recantation, not of a ſincere & pure minde, but onely to the intent thereby to ſcape their hands they together with certayne Friers of Prage, of the order of Carmelites, then comming in, put vp new accuſations agaynſt the ſayd M. Hierome, and drew the ſame into Articles, being very inſtant and earneſt that he ſhoulde anſwere thereunto. And forſomuch as his iudges & certaine Cardinals, as the Cardinall of Cambray, the Cardinal de Vrſinis, the Cardinall of Aquilegia, and of Florence, conſidering the malice of the enemies of M. Hierome, dyd ſee the great iniurie that was done vnto him, they laboured before the whole Councell for hys deliuery.

Hierom accuſed a new by Cauſis, Palletz, and the Carmelites.

The Cardinal of Cambray with certaine other Cardinalles labour for the deliuery of Hierome.

It happened vpon a certayn day, as they were labouring in the Councell for the deliuery of the ſayd M. Hierome: that the Germaynes and Bohemians his enemies, with al force and power reſiſted againſt it, crying out, that he ſhould in no caſe be diſmiſſed. Then ſtart vp one called Doctor Naſo, which ſaid vnto the Cardinalles, we maruaile much of you moſt reuerend fathers, that your reuerences will make interceſſion for ſuch a wicked hereticke, for whoſe ſake we in Boheme with the whole clergy, haue ſuffered much trouble & miſchiefe, and peraduenture your fatherhoodes ſhall ſuffer: and I greatly feare leaſt that you haue receiued ſome rewardes, eyther of yͤ king of Boheme or of theſe heretickes. When as the Cardinalles were thus rebuked, they diſcharged themſelues of mayſter Hieromes cauſe and matter.

Si dimittis hunc non es amicus Cæſaris.

Then his enemies aforeſaid, obtayned to haue other iudges appointed, as the Patriarcke of Conſtantinople, & a Germayne doctour, forſomuch as they did knowe that the Patriarch was a greeuous enemy vnto M. Hierome, becauſe he being before appoynted iudge by the Councell, had condemned Iohn Hus vnto death.

The Patriarke of Cõſtantinople gaue ſentẽce of death both againſt M. Hus, and M. Hierome of Prage.

But M. Hierome would not aunſwere them in priſon requiring to haue open audience, becauſe he woulde there finally declare vnto them hys minde, neyther would he by any meanes conſent vnto thoſe priuate iudges. Wherupon the Preſidents of yͤ Councell thinking yͭ the ſayd M. Hierome woulde renue hys recantation, before the ſayd audience and confirme the ſame: did graunt him open audiẽce.

{ Ann. 1416. }

In the yeare of our Lord. 1416. the 25. day of May, which was the Saterday before the Aſcention of our Lord the ſayd M. Hierom was brought vnto open audience before the whole Councell, to the great Cathedrall church of Conſtance, whereas by the Commiſſioners of the Councell, in the behalfe of hys foreſayd enemies, there was layd agaynſt him of new. C. and vii. Articles, to the intent that he ſhould not ſcape the ſnare of death, which they prouided and layd for him: in ſo much as the iudges had before declared that by the ſaying of the witneſſes it was already concluded in the ſame audience. The day aforeſayd, from morning vntill noone, he aunſwered vnto more then 40. Articles, moſt ſubtletie obiected agaynſt him: denying that he held or mayntayned any ſuch articles as were either hurtfull or falſe, & affirming yͭ thoſe witneſſes had depoſed thẽ agaynſt him falſly and ſlaunderouſly as his moſt cruel and mortall enemies. In the ſame Seſſion they had not yet proceeded vnto death, becauſe that the noone time drew ſo faſt on, that he could not anſwere vnto the Articles. Wherfore for lacke of time ſufficient to aunſwere vnto the reſidue of the Articles, there was an other time appoynted, which was the third day after the foreſaid Saterday, before the Aſcenſion of our Lord, at whiche time againe early in the morning, hee was brought vnto the ſayde Cathedrall Church to anſwere vnto all the reſidue the Articles.

Hierome brought againe before the councell

Falſe witneſſe againſt Hierome.

In all which articles, as well thoſe which he had aunſwered vnto the Saterday before: as in the reſidue, he cleared himſelfe very learnedly, refelling his aduerſaries (who had no cauſe) but onely of malice & diſpleaſure were ſet agaynſt him, & did him great wrong) in ſuche ſort that they were themſelues aſtonyed at his oration, and refutation of their teſtimonies brought agaynſt him, and with ſhame enough were put to ſilence: As when one of them had demanded of him, what he thought by yͤ ſacrament of the aultar: He anſwered, before conſecration (ſayd he) it is bread & wine: after the conſecration it is the true body and bloud of Chriſt, adding withall moe wordes according to theyr catholicke fayth. Then an other riſing vp, Hierome, ſayde he: there goeth a great rumor of thee, that thou ſhouldeſt hold, bread to remain vpon the aultar. To whom he pleaſantly anſwered, ſaying: that he beleued bread to be at the Bakers. At which wordes being ſpoken, one of the Dominicke Friers fumiſhly tooke him vp and ſayd, what doeſt yͧ deny, that no man doubteth of? whoſe peuiſhe ſauſines, Hierome wͭ theſe wordes did well repreſſe: holde thy peace (ſaid he) thou monke, thou hipocrite And thus the monke being nipped in the head, ſate downe dumme. After whom ſtarted vp an other, who with a loude voyce cryed out: I ſweare (ſayd he) by my conſcience, that to be true, that thou doeſt deny. To whom ſayd Hierome agayne, ſpeaking in latine: Heus inquit, ſic iurare per conſcientiam tutiſsima fallendi via eſt. That is, thus to ſweare by your conſcience, is the next way to deceiue. An other there was, a ſpitefull and a bitter enemy of his, whom he called by no other name then dogge, or aſſe. After he had thus refuted them: one after an other, that they could finde no crime againſt him, neyther in this matter nor in anye other, they were all driuen to keepe ſilence.

This done, then were the witneſſes called for, who cõming in preſence, gaue teſtimony vnto the Articles before produced. By reaſon wherof, yͤ innocent cauſe of Hierome was oppreſſed, and began in the councell to be concluded. Then Hierome riſing vp begã to ſpeak, forſomuch (ſayth he) as you haue heard mine aduerſaries ſo diligẽtly hether to, conuenient it is, that you ſhould alſo nowe heare me to ſpeake for my ſelfe. whereupon wͭ much difficultie, at laſt audience was geuẽ in yͤ Councell for hym to ſay his mind which being granted, he from morning to noon continuyng, entreated of diuers and ſondry matters, with great learning and eloquẽce. who firſt beginning with his prayer to God, beſought him to geue him ſpirite, habilitie and vtterance, which might moſt tend to the profite & ſaluation of his own ſoule. And ſo entring into hys Oration.

Audience hardly geuẽ to Hierome to ſpeake for himſelfe.

The oration of Hierome had before the councel.

I Know ſayth he, reuerend Lords, yͭ there haue bene many excellẽt men, which haue ſuffered much otherwiſe thẽ they haue deſerued, being oppreſſed with falſe witneſſes, & condemned with wrong iudgementes. And ſo beginning with Socrates he declared howe hee was vniuſtly condemned of hys countrimen, neither woulde he eſcape when hee might: taking from vs the feare of two thinges, whiche ſeeme moſt bitter to men, to wit, of priſonment and death. Then he inferred the captiuitie of Plato, the baniſhment of Anaxagoras, and the tormentes of Zeno. Moreouer he brought in the wrongfull condemnation of many gentiles as the baniſhment of Rupilius: reciting alſo the vnworthy death of Boetius and of others, whom Boetius himſelfe doth write of.

From thence he came to the examples of the Hebrues, and firſt began with Moyſes the deliuerer of the people, & the law geuer, how he was oftentimes ſlaundered of hys people as being a ſeducer and contemner of the people. Ioſeph alſo, ſayth he, for enuy, was ſold of hys brethren, and for falſe ſuſpicion of whoredome, was caſt into bandes. Beſides theſe, he reciteth Eſayas, Daniell, and almoſt all the Prophetes, who as contemners of god, and ſeditious perſons, were oppreſſed with wrongfull condemnation. Frõ thence he proceeded to the iudgement of Suſanna, and of diuers other beſides, who being good and holy men, yet were they vniuſtly caſt away with wrongfull ſentence. At the length he came to Iohn Baptiſt, and ſo in long proceſſe he deſcended vnto our ſauiour, declaring how it was euident to all men, by what falſe witneſſes both he and Iohn Baptiſt, were condemned. Moreouer how Stephen was ſlayne by the Colledge of the prieſtes, and how all the Apoſtles were condemned to death, not as good men but as ſeditious ſtyrrers vp of the people, and contemners of the Gods, and euil doers. It is vniuſt ſayth he, vniuſtly to be condemned one prieſt of an other, and yet he proued that yͤ ſame hath ſo happened moſt vniuſtly in that Councell of Prieſtes. Theſe thinges did he diſcourſe at large, wͭ marueilous eloquẽce, and with ſinguler admiration of all that heard hym.

And foraſmuch as all the whol ſumme of the cauſe dyd reſt only in the witneſſes, by many reaſons he proued that no credite was to be geuen vnto them, eſpecially ſeing they ſpake all thinges of no truth, but onely of hatred malice, & enuy. And ſo proſecuting the matter, ſo liuely and expreſſely he opened vnto them the cauſes of their hatred, that hee had almoſt perſwaded them. So liuely and likely their hatred was detected, that almoſt no truſt was geuen to their teſtimonies, ſaue onely for the cauſe and quarrell wherein they ſtood touching the popes doctrine. All mens mindes here were moued and bending to mercye towardes hym. For he told them how that he of hys owne accord came vp to the Councell, and to purge hymſelfe he did open vnto them all hys life and doinges, being full of vertue & godlines. This was (ſayth he) the old maner of auncient and learned mẽ and moſt holy Elders, that in matters of fayth they did differ many times in argumentes, not to deſtroy the fayth, but to finde out the veritie. So did Auguſtine and Hierome diſſent, not onely being diuers, but alſo contrary one from the other & yet wͭout al ſuſpition of hereſy.

The falſe witneſſe of Hierome refelled.

All this while the popes holy Councell did wayt ſtill, when he would beginne to excuſe himſelfe, and to retracte thoſe thinges, whiche were obiected agaynſt him, and to craue pardon of the Councell. But he perſiſting ſtill in hys conſtant oration, did acknowledge no errour, nor gaue any ſignification of retractation.

At laſt entring into the prayſe & commendation of M. Iohn Hus, he affirmed that he was a good, iuſt, and holy man, and much vnworthy that death, whiche he did ſuffer. whom he did know from his youth vpward, to be neither fornicator, drunkard, neither anye euill or vicious perſon: but a chaſt & ſober man, & a iuſt and true preacher of yͤ holy Goſpell: and whatſoeuer things mayſter Iohn Hus and wicklyff had holden or written ſpecially agaynſt the abuſe and pompe of the clergie, he would affirme euen vnto the death, that they were holy and bleſſed men, and that in all pointes of the Catholicke fayth, he doth beleue as the holy Catholicke Church doth hold or beleue. And finally he did conclude that al ſuch articles, as Iohn wickleffe & Iohn Hus had written & put forth agaynſt yͤ enormities, pompe and diſorder of the Prelates, he would firmely & ſteadfaſtly, without recantation, hold & defend euẽ vnto the death, And laſt of all, he added yͭ al the ſinnes that euer he had cõmitted, did not ſo much gnaw and trouble his conſcience, as did yͤ onely ſinne, whiche he had committed in that moſt peſtiferous fact, when as in his recantation, he had vniuſtly ſpoken againſt that good and holy man & his doctrine, & ſpecially in cõſenting vnto his wicked cõdẽnation concluding yͭ he did vtterly reuoke & deny that wicked recantatiõ which he had made in that moſt curſed place, & that he dyd it through weakenes of hart and feare of death: And moreouer that whatſoeuer thing he hath ſpokẽ againſt that bleſſed man, he hath altogether lyed vpõ him, and that he doth repent him with his whole hart, that euer he did it.

Hierome commendeth the life, and bewayleth the death of Iohn Hus.

Hierome repenteth his ſpeaking againſt Iohn Hus.

And at the hearing hereof, the hartes of yͤ hearers were not a little ſory. For they wiſhed and deſired greatly that ſuch a ſingular man ſhold be ſaued if otherwiſe their blind ſuperſtition would haue ſuffered it. But he continued ſtill in his prefixed ſentence, ſeeming to deſire rather death then lyfe. And perſiſting in the prayſe of Iohn Huſſe, he added moreouer, that he neuer mayntayned anye doctrine agaynſt the ſtate of the Church, but onely ſpake agaynſt the abuſes of the clergye, againſt the pride, pompe and exceſſe of the Prelates. For ſomuch as yͤ patrimonies of the churches were firſt geuen for the poore, then for hoſpitality and thirdly to the reparations of the Churches: it was a griefe to that good man (ſayd he) to ſee the ſame miſſpent and caſt away vpon harlots, great feaſtings, and keping of horſes and dogges, vpõ gorgeous apparell and ſuch other things vnſeming Chriſtian Religion. And herein he ſheweth himſelfe marueilous eloquent: yea neuer more.

Hus neuer maintained any doctrine againſt the Churche of Rome: but onely ſpake againſt their naughtie lyfe.

And when his oration was interrupted many tymes by diuers of them, carping his ſentences as he was in ſpeaking: yet was there none of all thoſe that interrupted hym which ſcaped vnblanckt, but he brought them all to confuſion, and put them to ſilence. when any noiſe began, he ceaſed to ſpeake, & after began againe, proceeding in his Oration and deſiring them to geue him leaue a while to ſpeak whõ they hereafter ſhould heare no more: neither yet was his mind euer daſhed at all theſe noyſes and tumults.

Hierome did put them to ſilence.

And thys was marueilous in him to behold, notwithſtanding he continued in ſtrait priſon, 340. dayes, hauing neither booke, nor almoſt light to read by: yet how admirably his memory ſerued him: Declaring howe all thoſe paynes of his ſtrait handling, did not ſomuch greeue him, as he did wonder rather to ſee their vnkind humanitie towardes him.

Hierome in priſon 340. dayes. The excellent memory in M. Hierome.

when he had ſpoken theſe and many other thinges as touching the prayſe of Iohn wickleffe, & Iohn Hus, they which ſat in the Councell, whiſpered together, ſaying: by theſe his wordes it appeareth that he is at a poynt wͭ hym ſelfe. Then was he agayne caried into priſon, & greeuouſly fettered by the hands, armes and feete with great chaines and fetters of yron.

M. Hierome brought agayne before the cõucell.

The Saterday next before the Aſcenſion day, early in the morning he was brought with a great number of armed men vnto the Cathedral Church before the open congregation, to haue his iudgement geuen hym. There they exhorted him, that thoſe thinges which he had before ſpokẽ in the open audience, as is aforeſayde touching the prayſe and commendation of M. Iohn wickleffe, and M. Iohn Hus, confirming and eſtabliſhing their doctrine, he would yet recant the ſame: but he merueilous ſtoutly without all feare, ſpake agaynſt them, & amõgſt other things ſaid vnto them: I take God to my witnes, and I proteſt here before you all, that I do beleeue and holde the articles of the fayth, as the holy Catholicke Church doth hold and beleue the ſame: but for this cauſe ſhall I now be condemned, for that I will not conſent with you vnto the condemnation of thoſe moſt holy and bleſſed men aforeſayd, whome you haue moſt wickedly condemned for certaine articles, deteſting and abhorring your wicked and abhominable life. Then he confeſſed there before them all his beliefe, and vttered many thinges very profoundly and eloquently, in ſo much that all men there preſent, could not ſufficiently cōmend & prayſe hys great eloquēce & excellent learning and by no means could they induce or perſwade him to recant.

The eloquence of M.Hierome.

Then a certayne biſhop named the Biſhop of Landy made a certayne ſermon exhortatiue agaynſt M.Hierome perſwading to his condemnation.

The prophesie of M.Hierome.

After the Byſhop had ended the ſayd ſermon, M.Hierome ſayd agayn vnto them: You ſhall condemne me wickedly and vniuſtly. But I after my death will leaue a remorſe in your conſcience, and a nayle in your hartes, ET CITO VOS OMNES, VT RESPONDEATIS MIHI CORAM ALTISSIMO ET IVSTISSIMO IVDICE POST CENTVM ANNOS: that is. And here I cite you to aunſwere vnto me before the moſt high and iuſt Iudge, within a C. yeares.

No penne can ſufficiently write or note thoſe thinges which he moſt eloquently, profoundly, & Philoſophically had ſpoken in the ſayd audience, neither can anye tongue ſufficently declare yͤ ſame, wheerfore I haue but onely touched here the ſuperficiall matter of his talke, partly, & not wholly noting the ſame, Finaly, when as by no meanes he might be perſwaded to recant the premiſſes, immediately euen in his preſence, the ſentence & iudgement of hys concondemnation was geuen againſt him, & read before him.

The ſentence read againſt M. Hierome.

IN the name of God Amen. Chriſt our God and our Sauiour being the true vyne, whoſe father is the huſbandman, taught hys Diſciples and all other faythful men, ſaying: If anymā dwel not in me, let him be caſt out as a bow or braunch, & let him wither and dry. &c. The doctrine and preceptes of which moſt excellent doctor and mayſter, this moſt ſacred Synode of Conſtance, executing & following in the cauſe of inquiſition agaynſt hereticks, being moued by this ſaid ſacred Sinode, through report, publicke fame, and open infamation: procedeth agaynſt Hierome of Prage, Mayſter of Arte, lay man. By the Actes & proceſſes of whoſe cauſe it appeareth that the ſayd mayſter Hierome hath holdē, mayntayned, and taught diuers Articles hereticall and erroneous, lately reproued and condemned by the holy fathers, ſome being very blaſphemous, other ſome offēding godly eares, & many temerarious & ſeditious which haue bene affirmed, mayntayned, preached and taught by the men of moſt damnable memory I. Wickleffe & Iohn Hus, the which are alſo written in diuers of their workes & books. Which articles of doctrine and books of the ſayd Iohn Hus and Wickleffe together with their memory, and the perſon of the ſayd Iohn Hus, were by the ſayd ſacred Synode condemned of hereſie. The which ſentence of condemnation this Hierome afterward during yͤ time of inquiſition, acknowledged in the ſayd ſacred Synode, & approued the true Catholicke & Apoſtolicke faith, thereunto conſenting, accurſing all hereſie, ſpecially that whereof he was enfamed, & confeſſed himſelf to be infamed & that which in times paſt I. Hus & I. Wickleffe maintained & taught in their works, ſermōs & books: for yͤ which the ſayd Wickleffe & Hus together with theyr doctrine and errors, were by the ſayd ſacred Synode as hereticall, condemned. The condemnatiōs of all which the premiſſes, he did openly profeſſe and allow, and did ſweare that he wold perſeuere and continue in the veritie of that fayth. And if that he ſhold preſume at any time to hold opiniō or preach contrary thereunto, that he would ſubmitte himſelfe to the triall and truth of the Canons, and be bound to perpetual puniſhment. And this his profeſſion writtē with his own hand, he deliuered vp into the holy Councell. Many daies after hys ſayd profeſſion and abiuration, as a dogge returning vnto hys vomite, to yͤ intent he might openly vomit vp the moſt peſtilent poyſon whiche had long lurked and laien hid in his breſt, he required and deſired that he might be openly heard before the Councell. The whiche being graunted vnto him, he affirmed, ſayd and profeſſed before the whole Synode, being publickely gathered together, yͭ he had wickedly conſented and agreed to the ſentence & iudgement of the condemnation of the ſaid Wickleffe and Hus, and that he had moſt ſhamefully lyed in approuing and allowing the ſayd ſentēce, neyther was he aſhamed to confeſſe that he had lyed: yea he did alſo reuoke and recant his confeſſion, approbation and proteſtation, which he had made vpon their condemnation, affirming that he neuer at any tyme had read any errours or hereſie in the bookes & treatiſes of the ſaid Wickleffe and Hus. Albeit he had before confeſſed it, and it is euidently proued that he did dilligently ſtudy, read and preache their bookes, wherein it is manifeſt that theyr are contayned many errours and hereſies. Alſo the ſayd Mayſter Hierome did profeſſe as touching the Sacrament of the aulter, and the tranſubſtantiation of the bread into the body of Chriſt, that he doth hold ⁊ beleue as the church doth hold ⁊ beleeue, ſaying alſo that he doth geue more credit vnto S. Auguſtine, and the other Doctors of the Church, then vnto wickliffe and Hus. It appereth moreouer by the premiſſes, that the ſayd Ierom is an adherent ⁊ maintainer of the ſaid wickliffe ⁊ Hus, ⁊ theyr errors, and both is and hath bene a fauourer of them. wherfore the ſaid ſacred Synode determineth the ſayd M. Hierome as a rotten and withered braunch not growing vpon the vine, to be cut of and caſt out. The ſayd Synode alſo pronounceth, declareth ⁊ condemneth him as an heretick, and drowned in all kinde of hereſies, excommunicate and accurſed, leauing him vnto the arbitrement and iudgement of the ſecular iudge, to receiue iuſt and due puniſhment, according to the quality of ſo great an offence: The ſayd ſacred Synode notwithſtanding intreating that the ſayd iudge would moderate his ſentence of iudgemẽt without perill of death.

Hierome geuen to the ſecular power.

A paper with redde deuilles put vpon the head of M. Hierome, by deueliſhe papiſtes.

The which ſentence ſo geuen before his face, ⁊ ended. A great ⁊ lõg miter of paper was brought vnto him, painted about with red deuils: the whiche when he beheld and ſaw, throwing away his hood vpon the ground amongeſt the Prelates, he tooke the miter, and put it vpon his head: ſaying, Our Lorde Ieſu Chriſt, when as he ſhoulde ſuffer death for me moſt wretched ſinner, did weare a crowne of thorne vpon his head: and I for his ſake in ſtede of that crowne, will willingly weare this miter and cappe. Afterward he was layd hold of by the ſecular power.

M. Hierome committed to the ſecular power.

M. Hierome went ſinging vnto his martirdome.

After that he was ledde out of the ſayde Church to the place of execution, when he was going out of the Churche with a cherefull coũtenance ⁊ a loud voyce lifting his eyes vp into heauen, he began to ſing Credo in vnum Deum, as it is accuſtomed to be ſong in yͤ church. Afterward as he paſſed a long, he did ſing ſome Canticles of the Church. The which being ended, in the entring out of the gate of the city, as men go vnto Gothlehem, he did ſing this himne, fœlix namque And that reſpond being ended, after he came to the place of execution where as Maiſter Iohn Hus before had ſuffred death innocently, kneeling downe before an image which was like vnto the picture of M. Iohn Hus, which was there prepared to burne M. Hierom, he made a certayne deuout prayer.

M. Hierome prayeth.

M. Hierome tied to an Image like to Iohn Hus.

Whyle he was thus praying, the tormentors tooke him vp and lifting him vp from the ground, ſpoyled him of all his garmentes, and left him naked, and afterward girded him about the loynes with a linnen cloth, and bound him faſt with cordes and chaynes of Iron to the ſayde Image, whiche was made faſt vnto the earth: and ſo ſtandinge vpon the ground, when as they beganne to lay the woode about him, he ſonge Salue feſta dies. And when the himne was ended, he ſonge agayne with a loude voyce, Credo in vnum Deum, vnto the end. That being ended, he ſayde vnto the people in the Germaine toung in effect as foloweth. Dearely beloued children, euen as I haue now ſong, ſo do I beleue and none otherwiſe. And this Creede is my whole fayth: notwithſtanding nowe I dye for this cauſe, becauſe I would not conſent, and agree to the councel, and with them affirme and hold that maiſter Iohn Hus, was by thẽ holily and iuſtly condemned: For I did know well enough that he was a true preacher of the Goſpell of Ieſu Chriſt.

M. Hierome ſingeth at his burning.

The wordes of Hierome to the people.

M. Hierome geueth teſtimony of Iohn Hus.

After that he was compaſſed in with the wood vp to the crowne of the head, they caſt all his garments vpõ yͤ wood alſo, and with a firebrand they ſet it on fire. The which being once fired, he began to ſing with a loud voyce: In manus tuas domine commendo ſpiritum meum: when that was ended, and that he began vehemently to burne, he ſayd in the vulgar Bohemian tongue: O Lord God father almighty, haue mercy vpon me and be mercifull vnto mine offẽces, for thou knoweſt how yͤ ſincerely I haue loued thy trueth. Then his voyce by the vehemency of the fire, was choked ⁊ ſtopped, that it was no longer heard, but he moued continually his mouth and lips, as though he had ſtill prayed or ſpoken within himſelfe.

The laſt wordes of M. Hierome

The crueltie of his death.

When as in a maner his whole body ⁊ his beard was burned round about, and that there appeared through the great burning vpon his body certayne great bladders, as big as an egge, yet he continually very ſtrongly ⁊ ſtoutlye moued, ⁊ ſhaked his head ⁊ mouth, by the ſpace almoſt of one quarter of an houre. So burning in the fire, he liued in great paine ⁊ Martyrdome, whiles one might eaſily haue gone from S. Clementes ouer the bridge, vnto our Lady Church: he was of ſuche a ſtout and ſtrong nature. After that he was thus deade in the fire, by and by they brought his bedding, his ſtrawbed, his bootes, his hood, ⁊ all other thinges that he had in the priſon, and burned them all to aſhes in the ſame fire. The which aſhes, after that the fire was out, they did diligently gather together, and cary thẽ in a cart, and caſt them into the riuer of Rheine, which ran hard by the City.

The aſhes of M. Hierome caſt into the riuer of Rheine.

The witnes of the writer.

That man whiche was the true reporter hereof, and which teſtified vnto vs the actes and doinges about the condemnation Maiſter Hierome, and ſent the ſame vnto vs to Prage in writinge, doth thus conclude: All theſe thinges (ſayth he) I did beholde, ſee and heare to be done in this forme ⁊ maner. And if any man do tell you the contrary, do not credite him, for al thoſe things which happened vnto him, when he came toward Conſtance, and alſo at his firſt comming vnto Conſtance of his own free will, and afterward when he was brought bounde vnto Conſtance, as is aforeſayd, I my ſelfe did ſee and perfectly beholde: and for a perpetuall memory thereof to be had for euer, I haue directed the ſame vnto you, not lying or falſifying any poynte thereof, as he which is the ſearcher of all mennes hartes can beare me witneſſe: willing rather to ſuſtaine the note of ignoraunce ⁊ rudeneſſe of ſtile, to beare witneſſe vnto the trueth, then I would by any meanes bee compelled by tickling or flattring the eares of the hearers, with fayned and cloked ſpeach to ſwerue or goe aſide from the truth,

The truth of this ſtorie.

Thus end the tragicall hiſtories of M. Iohn Hus, and M. Hierom of Prage, faythfully gathered and collected by a certain Bohemian, being a preſent witnes and beholder of the ſame, written and compiled firſt in Latine, ⁊ ſo ſent by the ſaid Bohemian into his country of Boheme: and agayne tranſlated out of the Latine with like fidelitye, into our Engliſh toung.

In the meane time while Maiſter Hierome was in this trouble, and before the Councell, the nobles and Lordes of Boheme and of Morauia (but not a little agreeued thereat) directed theyr letters vnto this barbarous Councell of popiſhe murderers, in tenour and forme of wordes as followeth.

¶ The letter of the 54. Nobles of Morauia written vnto the Councell of Conſtaunce in the defence of Mayſter Iohn Hus, and Hierome of Prage.

☞ To the right reuerend Fathers and Lordes in Chriſt, the Lordes, Cardinals, Patriarkes, Primates, Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Amballadours, Doctors, ⁊ Mayſters, and to the whole Councell Conſtaunce. we the Nobles, Lordes, Knightes and Eſquyres, of the famous Marqueſdome of Morauia, wiſhe the deſyre of al goodnes, and the obſeruation of the commaundementes of our Lord Ieſu Chriſt.

FOrſomuch as euery man both by the law of nature, and alſo by Gods law, is commaunded to doe that vnto an other man, which he woulde haue done vnto himſelfe, and is forbidden to do that thing vnto an other, which he would not haue done vnto himſelfe, as our Sauiour ſayth: all things whatſoeuer you wyll that men ſhould do vnto you, the ſame doe you vnto thẽ, for this is the law and the Prophetes, yea the lawe is fulfilled in this one poynt: thou ſhalt loue thy neighbour as thy ſelf: We therfore (God being our author) hauing reſpect asmuch as in vs lieth vnto the ſaid law of God: & the loue of our neighbor, before did ſend our letters vnto Conſtaunce for our dearelye beloued frende of good memorye Mayſter Iohn Huſſe Bacheler of Diuinitye and Preacher of the Goſpell. Whome of late in the Councell of Conſtaunce (wee knowe not with what ſpirite beeing ledde) you haue condemned as an obſtinate hereticke: neither hauing confeſſed any thing, neither being lawfully conuict as were expediẽt: hauing no errours or hereſies declared or layde agaynſt him, but onely at the ſiniſter, falſe and importune accuſations, ſuggeſtiõs and inſtigations of his mortall enemies, and the traytours of our kingdome and Marqueſdome of Morauia. And being thus vnmercifully condemned, you haue ſlayne him with moſt ſhamefull and cruell death: to the perpetuall ſhame and infamy of our moſt chriſtian kingdome of Boheme, and the famous Marqueſdome of Morauia (as we haue written vnto Conſtance, vnto the moſt noble Prince and Lord, the Lord Sigiſmund king of Romaynes, and of Hungary, the Heyre and Succeſſor of our kingdom) the which was alſo read and publiſhed in your congregations, whiche wee will here alſo haue enrolled: and haue burned him, as it is reported, in the reproch and contempt of vs.

Rom. 13.

The cauſe of I. Hus cleared by the teſtimony of the nobles of Bohemia.

Wherfore we haue thought good, euen now to direct our letters patentes to your reuerences nowe preſent, in the behalfe of Maiſter Iohn Hus, openly profeſsing and proteſting both wyth hart and mouth, that he the ſayd Mayſter Iohn Hus, was a iuſt, good and Catholicke man, and a long ſeaſon worthely commended and allowed in our kingdome, for his life and conuerſation. He alſo preached and taught vs and our ſubiectes the law of the Goſpell, and of the holy Prophets, and the bookes of the olde and new Teſtament, according to the expoſition of the holy Doctors approued by the church, & left many Monumẽts in writing, moſt conſtantly deteſting and abhorring all errors and and hereſy, continually admoniſhing both vs and all faithfull chriſtians to do the like, diligently exhorting all men as muche as in him lay by hys words, writings and trauel, vnto quietneſſe and concord: ſo that vſing all the diligence that we might, we neuer heard or coulde vnderſtand, that Mayſter Iohn Hus had preached, taught or by any meanes affirmed any error or hereſy in his Sermons, or that by any maner of meanes he had offended vs or our ſubiectes, either by word or deed, but that he alwayes led a quiet and a godly life in Chriſt, exhorting all men diligently, both by his word and workes, as much as he might, to obſerue and keepe the law of the Goſpel, and the inſtitutiōs of the holy fathers, after the preaching of our holy mother the church, & to the edifying of mens ſoules. Neither did theſe premiſſes, which you had ſo perpetrated to the reproch both of vs and our kingdom and Marqueſdom, ſuffice & content you, but that alſo without all mercy and piety, you haue apprehended, impriſoned, and condemned, and euen now peradventure, like as you did Mayſter Iohn Hus, you haue moſt cruelly murdered the worſhipfull man, Mayſter Ierome of Prage, a man abounding in eloquence, Mayſter of the ſeuen liberall artes, and a famous Philoſopher, not being ſeene, heard, examined, neither conuict: but onely at the ſiniſter and falſe accuſation of hys and our accuſers and betrayers.

All that will liue godly in Chriſt. 2. Tim. 3.

Defence of M. Hierome of Prage.

Furthermore, it is come to our knowledge and vnderſtanding (which we do not without great grieſe rehearſe) as we may alſo euidently gather by your writings, how that certayne detractors, odible both to God and men, priuy enuyers and betrayers, haue wickedly and greuouſly, albeit falſly and trayterouſly, accuſed vs, our kingdome, and Marqueſdome aforſayde, before you in your councell, that in the ſayde kingdome of Boheme and Marqueſcome of Morauia, diuers errors are ſprong vp, which haue greuouſly and manifoldely infected both our hartes, and alſo the hartes of many faythfull men: in ſo much, that without a ſpeedy ſtop or ſtay of correction, the ſayd kingdome and Marqueſdome together with the faythfull Chriſtians therein, ſhould incurre an irrecuperable loſſe and ruine of theyr ſoules.

These cruell and pernitious iniuries which are layd vnto vs, and to our ſayd kingdome and Marqueſdome, albeit moſt falſly & ſlaunderouſly, howe may we ſuffer? for ſo muche as through the grace of God (when in a maner all other kingdomes of the world haue oftentimes wauered, making Schiſmes and Antipapes) our moſt Chriſtian kingdome of Boheme, and moſt noble Marqueſdome of Morauia, ſince the time they did receiue the Catholicke fayth of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, as a moſt perfecte * quadrant haue alwayes without reproofe ſtucke vnto the Church of Rome, and haue ſincerely done theyr true obedience. Alſo with how greate coſtes and charges and great trauell, with what worſhip and due reuerence they haue reuerenced the holy mother the church and her paſtors, by theyr princes and faythfull ſubiects, it is more manifeſt then the day light vnto the whole world: and your ſelues, if you will confeſſe the truth, can witnes the ſame alſo.

He meaneth the longe ſchiſme ſpoken of before where three popes were ſtriuing one againſt an other.

* A quadrant being foure ſquare prouerbially ſignifieth a man that is conſtant and immutable. Rom. 12.

Wherfore that we, according to the mind of the Apoſtle, may procure honeſt and good thinges, not onely before God but before men alſo, and leaſt by neglecting the famous renowne of the kingdom and Marqueſdom, we be foūd cruel towards our neighbours: hauing a ſtedfaſt hope, a pure and ſincere conſcience and intent, and a certayne true fayth in Chriſt Ieſu our Lord, by the tenour of theſe we ſignify and declare vnto your fatherhoods, & to all faythfull Chriſtians, openly profeſsing both with hart and mouth, that whatſoeuer man, of what eſtate, preheminence, dignity, condition, degree, or religion ſo euer he be, which hath ſayd or affirmed, eyther doth ſay or affirme, that in the ſayd kingdome of Boheme and Marqueſdome of Morauia, hereſyes haue ſprong vp which haue infected vs and other faythfull Chriſtians, as is aforeſayd (the onely perſon of our moſt noble prince and Lord, Sigiſmund king of Romaynes and of Hungary. &c. our Lord and heire ſucceſſor, being ſet apart, whom we truſt and beleue, not to be guilty in the premiſſes) all and euery ſuch man (as is aforeſaid) doth lye faſly vpon his head, as a wicked and naughty traytour & betrayer of the ſayd kingdome and Marſqueſdome, and moſt traiterous vnto vs, & moſt pernitious hereticke, the ſonne of all malice and wickedneſſe, yea and of the deuill himſelſe, who is a lyar and the father of all lyes.

Iohn 8. Deut. 38. Pſal. 30.

Notwithſtanding, we for this preſent committing the foreſayd iniuryes vnto God, vnto whom vengeance perteyneth, who will alſo aboundantly reward workers of iniquity, will proſecute them more amply before him whom God ſhall appoynt in the Apoſtolicke ſea, to gouerne his holy Churche as the onely and vndoubted Paſtour. Vnto whom God willling, we exhibiting our due reuerence & obedience as faythfull children, in thoſe things which are lawfull, honeſt, and agreeable to reaſon and the law of God, wil make our requeſt and petition, that ſpeedy remedy may be prouided for vs, our ſayde kingdome and Marqueſdome, vpon the premiſes, according to the law of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, and the inſtitutions of the holy fathers. The premiſſes notwithſtanding we ſetting apart all feare and mens ordinances prouided to the contrary, will maynetayne and defend the law of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, and the deuout, humble and conſtant preachers thereof, euen to the ſhedding of our bloud.

These noble men offered their obedience to the Pope, no further then was lawful, honeſt and agreeable to reaſon and the lawe of God. Marke this and learne you noble men.

Dated at Sternberg, in the yeare of our Lord. 1415. vpon S. Wēceſlaus day, Martyr of our Lord Ieſu Chriſt.

Round about the ſayd letters there were 54. Seales, hanging and their names ſubſcribed, whoſe Seales they were. The names of which noble men, I thought it good here to annexe with all, partly for the more credite of that hath bene ſayd, partly alſo for examples ſake, to the intent that our noble men and gentlemen in this our Realme of England, now liuing in this cleare light of the Goſpell, may by their example vnderſtand, that if they ioyne themſelues with the Goſpell of Jeſus, zealouſlye and as they ſhould do, yet are they neither the firſt, nor the moſt that ſo haue done before them: if not, yet the trueth may here remayne in the ſtory to theyr ſhame, or els to theyr inſtruction, ſeing ſo many noble and worthy gentlemen, within the ſmall kingdome of Bohemia, to be ſo forward in thoſe ſo darcke dayes and among ſo many enemyes 200. yeares agoe, to take part with Chriſt: And yet our Gentlemẽ here in ſuch long cõtinuance of time, being ſo diligẽtly taught, are neyther in number nor in zeale to thẽ to be compared, but will ſtill take part, contrary both to Chriſt, and to the example of theſe nobles whoſe names they may ſee & read here folowing.

After theſe things thus declared and diſcourſed cōcerning the hiſtory of John Hus, and Hierome of Prage, the order of place and countrye next woulde require, conſequently to infer and comprehend the great troubles & perturbations, which happened after & vpō the death of theſe men in the cōutry of Boheme: but the order of time calleth me backe, firſt to other matters here of our owne country, which paſſed in yͤ meane time with vs in England, which things being taken by the way and finiſhed, we wil (Chriſt willing) afterward returne to the tractation hereof, to proſecute the troubles and conflictes of the Bohemians, with other things beſide perteyning to the latter end of the coūcell of Conſtance, and choſing of Pope Martin, as the order of yeares and time ſhall require.

Vid ſupra. pag. 588. Henry Chicheſley Archb. of Caunt.

Ye heard before pag. 588. how after the death of Thomas Arundell Archb. of Caunt. ſucceeded Henry Chicheſley. an. 1414. and ſate 25. yeres. In whoſe time was much trouble and great affliction of good mē here in England: of whom many were compelled to abiure, ſome we burned, diuers were driuē to exile. Wherof partly now to entreat, as we finde them in regiſters & hiſtoryes recorded, we will firſt begin with Iohn Claydon Currier of Londō, & Richard Turming, whom Rob. Fabian, doth falſly affirm to be burned in the yeare wherein Syr Roger Acton and M. Browne ſuffered: who in deed ſuffered not before the ſecōd yeare of Henry Chicheſley being Archb. of Caunt. whiche was an. 1413. The hiſtory of which Iohn Claydon, in the Regiſters is thus declared.

The ſtory of Iohn Claydon Currier, and of R. Turming Baker.

The hiſtorie of I. Claidō ſkinner of London, & of Robert Turming Baker. Ex regiſt. Cant.

I. Claidon examined.

THe 17. of August 1415. did perſonally appeare I. Claydon Currier of London (arreſted by the Mayor of the ſayd City for the ſuſpition of hereſy) before Henry Archbiſhop of Caunterbury, in Saynt Paules Church: whiche Iohn (being obiected to him by the Archbiſhop, that in ẏ City of London & other places of the prouince of Canterbury, he was ſuſpected by diuers godly and learned mē for hereſy, and to be contrary to the catholick fayth, and determinatiō of the church) did openly confeſſe and denyed not, but that he had bene for the ſpace of xx. yeres, ſuſpected both about the City of London, & alſo in the prouince of Caunt. and ſpecially of the common ſort for Lollardy and hereſy, & to be contrary to the catholick fayth and determination of the church of Rome, and defamed of the ſame all the tyme aforeſayd.

I. Claydon firſt impriſoned by R. Braybroke Biſhop of London.

I. Claidon before abiured.

In ſo much that in the time of M. Robert Braybrooke B. of London deceaſed, he was for the ſpace of two yeares commaunded to the priſon of Conwey, for the foreſayd defamation and ſuſpition, and for the ſame cauſe alſo he was in priſon in the fleete for 3. yeares. Out of which priſon he (in the raigne of King Henry the 4.) was brought before Lord Iohn Scarle then Chauncellor to the king, & there did abiure all hereſy and errour. And the ſayd Iohn Claydon being aſked of the ſayd Archbiſhop whither he did abiure the hereſye of which he was ſuſpect before any other: did confeſſe that in a Conuocation at London in Paules Church before Thomas Arundell late Archbiſhop deceaſed, he did abiure all ſuch doctrine which they called hereſy and error contrary to the Catholick fayth and determination of the Church, and that he had not onely left ſuch articles and opiniōs, wherin he was defamed, but alſo did abſtaine from all company that were ſuſpected of ſuch opinions ſo that he ſhould neither geue ayd, helpe, councell, nor fauor vnto them.

Engliſhe bookes.

The iudgement of the Maior of London.

Claidon beſtowed much money vpon Engliſhe bookes.

And moreouer, the ſayd Iohn was aſked by the ſayde Archbiſhop, whether he euer had in his houſe ſince his abiuration, in his keeping, any bookes written in Engliſhe. Whereunto he confeſſed that he would not deny, but that he had in his houſe, and in his keeping many engliſh bookes: for he was areſted by the Mayor of the city of London, for ſuch bookes as he had, which bookes (as he thought) were in the Mayors keping. Upon the which, the Mayor did openly confeſſe that he had ſuch bookes in his keping, which in his iudgement were the worſt and the moſte peruerſe that euer he did read or ſee, and one booke that was well bound in red leather of partchment, written in a good engliſh hand: and among the other bookes found with the ſaid Iohn Claydon, the Mayor gaue vp the ſayd booke afore the Archbiſhop. Whereupon the ſayde Iohn Claydon being aſked of the Archbiſhop if he knewe that booke, dyd openly confeſſe that he knew it very well, becauſe he cauſed it to be written of his owne coſtes and charges, for he ſpēt muche money thereupon ſince his abiuration. Then was he aſked who wrote it. He did aunſwere, one called Iohn Grime.

Iohn Claydon could not read.

Richard Turming Baker.

This Turming belike, was then in priſon.

And further being required what the ſaid Iohn Grime was, he aunſwered, he coulde not tell. Agayne, being demaunded whether he did euer read the ſame booke, he dyd confeſſe that he could not read, but he had heard the fourth part therof red of one Iohn Fullar. And being aſked whether he thought the contentes of that booke to be Catholicke, profitable, good and true, he aunſwered that many thinges which he had hearde in the ſame booke, were both profitable, good and healthful to his ſoule: and as he ſayde, he had great affection to the ſayd book, for a Sermon preached at Horſaldowne, that was written in the ſayd booke. And being futher aſked, whether, ſince the tyme of hys ſayd abiuration, he did commune with one Richard Baker of the City aforeſayd, he did anſwere yea: for the ſayde Richard Baker did come often vnto his houſe to haue cōmunication with him. And being aſked, whether he knew the ſaid Richard to be ſuſpected, and defamed of hereſy: he did aunſwere agayne that he knew well that the ſayd Richard was ſuſpectēd & defamed of many men and women in the City of Londō, as one whom they thought to be an hereticke.

William Lindewood doctor of both lawes.

An Engliſhe booke intituled: The Lanterne of light.

Which confeſſion being made, did cauſe the ſayd bookes to be deliuered to maiſter Robert Gilbert, Doctour of diuinity: to William Lindewood Doctor of both lawes, and other Clerkes, to be examined, and in the meane time Dauid Beard, Alexander Philip, and Balthaſar Mero, were taken for witneſſes agaynſt him, and were committed to be examined, to Maiſter Iohn Eſcourt generall examiner of Canterbury. This done, the Archbiſhop continued hys Seſſion till Monday next in the ſame place. Which Monday being come, which was the xx. of the ſayd moneth, the ſayd Maiſter Eſcourt openly and publickely exhibited the witneſſes, being openly read before the Archbiſhop and other Biſhops: which being read, then after that were read diuers tractations, founde in the houſe of the ſayde Iohn Claydon: out of the which, being examined, diuers points were gathered and noted for hereſies and errors, and ſpecially out of the booke aforeſaid: which booke the ſaid Iohn Claydon confeſſed by his owne coſtes to be written and bound, which booke was intituled, the Lanterne of light. In the which and in the other examined, were theſe Articles vnder written conteyned.

1. Firſt, vpon the text of the Goſpell, how the enemy dyd ſowe the tares, there is ſayd thus: that wicked Antichriſt ẏ Pope hath ſowed among the lawes of Chriſt, his popiſh and corrupt decrees, which are of no authoritye, ſtrength, nor valure.

2. That the Archbiſhops and Biſhops, ſpeaking indifferently, are the ſeates of the beaſt Antichriſt, when he ſitteth in thē and raigneth aboue other people in the darck caues of errors and hereſyes.

3. That the Biſhops licence for a man to preach the word of God, is the true caracter of the beaſt. i. Antichriſt, & therfore ſimple and faythfull Prieſtes may preache when they will agaynſt the prohibition of that Antichriſt, and without licence.

The head & taile of Antichriſt.

4. That the court of Rome is the chiefe head of Antichriſt and the Biſhops be the body: & the new ſectes, that is, the monks, canons, and friers, brought in not by Chriſt, but damnably by the pope, be the venimous & peſtiferous tail of Antichriſt.

This is true ſpeaking of the inuiſible Church.

5. That no reprobate is a member of the Church but onely ſuch as be elected and predeſtinate to ſaluation: ſeing the church is no other thing but the congregation of faythfull ſoules, which doe and will keepe their faith conſtantly, as well in deed as in word.

6. That Chryſt did neuer plante priuate religions in the church, but whileſt he liued in this world he did root them out. By which it appeareth that priuate religiōs be vnprofitable branches in the church and to be rooted out.

7. That the materiall churches ſhould not be decked with golde ſiluer & precious ſtone ſumptuouſly, but the folowers of the humility of Ieſus Chriſt, ought to worſhip their Lord God humbly in mean & ſimple houſes, & not in great buildings, as the churches be now a dayes.

Two cauſes of perſecution noted.

8. That there be ij. chiefe cauſes of the perſecution of the chriſtians: one is the prieſtes vnlawfull keeping of tēporal and ſuperfluous goods, the other is ẏ vnſatiable begging of the friers with their hye buildings.

Foure conditiōs in geuing almes

9. That almes is not geuen vertuouſly nor lawfully except it be geuen with theſe 4. conditions: firſt vnleſſe it be geuen to the honor of God. 2. vnleſſe it be geuen of goodes iuſtly gotten. 3. vnleſſe it be geuē to ſuch a perſon as the geuer therof knoweth to be in charity. And 4. vnles it be geuē to ſuch as haue need and do not diſſemble.

10. That the often ſinging in the church is not founded in the ſcripture, and therefore it is not lawfull for prieſtes to occupy thēſelues with ſinging in the Church, but with the ſtudy of the law of Chriſt, and preaching his word.

That bread remaineth in the Sacrament.

11. That Iudas did receiue the body of Chriſt in breade, & his bloud in wine In the which it doth playnly appeare that after conſecration of breade and wine made, the ſame bread and wine that was before, doth truely remayne on the aultar.

12. That all eccleſiaſticall ſuffrages do profit all vertuous and godly perſons indifferently.

13. That the Popes and the Biſhops indulgences be vnprofitable, neither can they profite them, to whom they be geuen by any meanes.

14. That the laity is not bound to obey the prelates what ſo euer they commaūd, vnles the prelats do watch to geue God a iuſt account of the ſoules of them.

15. That Images are not to be ſought to by pilgrimages, neither is it lawfull for Chriſtians, to bow theyr knees to them, neither to kiſſe them, nor to geue them any maner of reuerence. For the which Articles the Archbiſhoppe with other Biſhops, and diuers learned commoning together, firſt condemned the bookes as hereticall and burned them in fire: and then becauſe they thought the ſaid Iohn Claydon to be forſworne and fallen into hereſy, the Archbiſhop did proceed to his definitiue ſentence againſt the ſaid Iohn perſonally appearing before him in iudgement (his cōfeſſions being read and depoſed againſt him) after this maner.

The bookes of I. Claidon burned.

The ſentence & condemnation of Iohn Claidō.

IN the name of God. Amen. We Henry by the grace of GOD Archbiſhop of Caunterbury, primate of all England, and Legate of the Apoſtolicke ſea, in a certayne cauſe of hereticall prauity & of relapſe into the ſame, wherupon I. Claidon lay man of the prouince of Caunterbury, was detected, accuſed and denounced, & in the ſayd our prouince of Caunterbury publickely defamed (as by publick fame and common report notoriouſly to vs hath bene known) firſt, ſitting in iudgement ſeat & obſeruing all things lawfully required in this behalfe, do proceed to the pronouncing of the ſentence definitiue in forme as followeth. The name of Chriſt being inuocated & onely ſet before our eies, foraſmuch as by the actes and thinges enacted, producted, exhibited and confeſſed before vs, alſo by diuers ſignes & euidences we haue found the ſaid Iohn Claydon to haue bene and to be publickly and notoriouſly relapſed agayne into his former hereſye, heretofore by him abiured: according to the merites and deſertes of the ſayd cauſe, being of vs diligently ſearched, weyed and pondered before, to the intēt that the ſayd I. Claidon ſhall not infect other with his ſcab, by the conſent and aſſent of our reuerend brethrē Richard Biſhop of Lōdon, Iohn Biſhop of Couentry and Liechfield, & Steuen Biſhop of S. Dauids, and of other Doctors as well of diuinity as of both lawes, and alſo of other diſcreet and learned men aſsiſting vs in this behalfe, do iudge, pronounce, and declare the ſayd I. Claydon, to be relapſed agayne into his hereſy, which he before did abiure, finally and definitiuely appoynting him to be left vnto the ſecular iudgement, and ſo do leaue him by theſe preſentes.

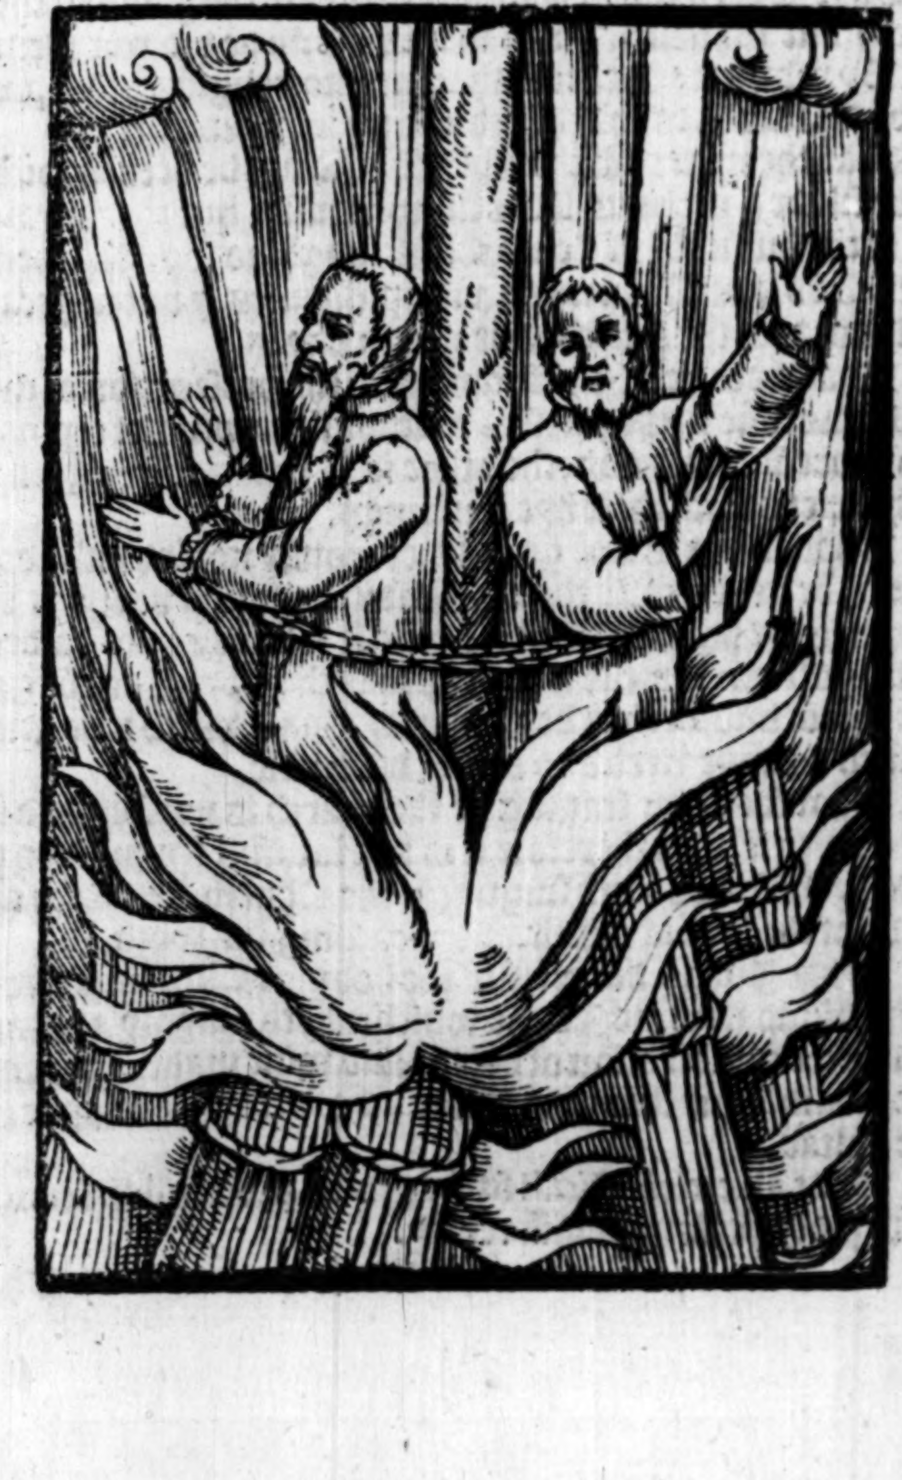
Iohn Claidon cōmitted to the ſecular power.

Thus Iohn Claidon receiuing his iudgement & condemnation of the Archbiſhop, was committed to the ſecular power, and by them vniuſtly & vnlawfully was cōmitted to the fire, for that the tēporall magiſtrate had no ſuch law ſufficient for them to burne any ſuche man for religion condēned of the prelats, as is aboue ſufficiently proued & declared pag. 523. But to be ſhort, Quo iurè quaque iniuria, Iohn Cleydon notwithſtanding by the temporall magyſtrats, not lōg after, was had to ſmithfield, where meekely he was made a burnt offering vnto the Lord. an. 1415.

The law de comburendo, inſufficient.

The death and martirdome of Iohn Claidon.

The burning of Iohn Claydon, and Richard Turming.



Robert Fabian, and other Chronologers which folow him, adde alſo that Richard Turming Baker, of whome mention is made before in the examination of Iohn Claydon, was likewiſe ẏ ſame time burned with him in ſmithfield. Albeit in the Regiſter I finde no ſentence of condemnation geuen againſt the ſayd Turming, neither yet in the ſtory of S. Albons is there any ſuch mētiō of his burning made, but only of the burning of Iohn Claydon aforeſaid: wherfore the iudgement hereof I leaue free to the reader. Notwithſtanding, concerning the ſayd Turming thys is certaine that he was accuſed vnto the biſhops, & no doubt was in their handes, & bands. what afterward was done with him, I refer it vnto the authors.

I. Claidon, Richard Turming, martirs.

The next yeare after the burning of theſe two aforeſaid and alſo of Iohn Hus being burnt at Conſtaunce, whiche was an. 1416. the Prelates of England ſeing the dayly increaſe of the Goſpell, and fearing the ruine of theyr papall kingdome, were buſily occupied with all theyr counſel and diligence, to mayntayne the ſame. wherefore to make their ſtate and kingdome ſure, by ſtatutes, lawes, conſtitutions, and terrour of puniſhment, as Thomas Arundell and other Prelates had done before, ſo the forenamed Henrye Chicheſley Archbiſhop of Canterbury, in his conuocation holden at London, maketh another conſtitutiō (as though there had not enough bene made before) agaynſt the poore Lollardes: the coppy and tenor wherof he ſendeth abroad, to the biſhop of London, and to other his Suffraganes by them to be put in ſtraight execution, conteyning in wordes as foloweth.

Anno 1416.

HEnry by the grace of God Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Primate of all England, and Legate of the chiefeſt ſeat: to our reuerēd brother in the Lord Richard, by the grace of God biſhop of London, health, & brotherly loue, with continuall increaſe. Lately in our laſt conuocation in Sayncte Paules Church in London, being kept by you and other our brethren and clergy of our prouince, we do remember to haue made this order vnderwritten by your conſentes, when as among many other our cares this ought to be chiefe, ẏ by ſome meanes we take thoſe herretickes, whiche like foxes lurke & hide thēſelues in the Lordes vineyard: & that the duſt of negligēce may be vtterly ſhakē from our feete and from the feete of our fellow brethren: In thys the ſayd conuocation of the Prelats and clergy, we haue ordeined, and that our fellowe brethren, our Suffraganes and Archdeacons of our prouince of Canterbury by thēſelues, their Officials or Commiſſaryes in all their iuriſdictiōs, & euery of their charges in theyr country, twiſe euery yere at the leaſt, do diligētly enquire of ſuch perſons as are ſuſpect of hereſy: And that in euery ſuche their Archdeaconries in euery pariſh, wherin is reported any hereticks to inhabit, they cauſe three or more of the honeſteſt mē and beſt reported of, to take their othe vpon the holy Euangeliſt, that if they ſhall knowe or vnderſtand any frequenting either in priuy conuēticles, or els deferring in life or maners frō the common conuerſation of other Catholick men, or els that holde any, either hereſyes or errors, or els that haue any ſuſpected bookes in the Engliſh tong, or that do receiue any ſuch perſons ſuſpect of hereſyes and errours into theyr houſes, or that be fauorers of them that are inhabitants in any ſuch place, or conuerſant with them, or els haue any recourſe vnto them: they make certificats of thoſe perſons in writing: with all the circumſtances wherewith they are ſuſpect, vnto the ſaid our Suffraganes or Archdeacons, or to theyr Commiſſaryes, ſo ſoone, & with as much ſpede as poſſibly they can: And that the ſayd Archdeacon and euery of their Commiſſaryes aforeſayd: do declare the names of all ſuch perſons denounced together with all the circūſtāces of thē, the dioces, & places, & ſecretly vnder theyr ſeales do ſend ouer vnto vs the ſame: And ẏ the ſame dioceſſans effectually direct forth lawfull proces agaynſt them, as the quality of the cauſe requireth, & that with all diligence they diſcerne, define and execute the ſame.

Ex Regiſt. Chicheſley. 217.

You ſhould be better occupied to ſhake of the duſte from your dutty pulpets. Twiſe euery yeare to enquire for Lollardes.

Againſt priuie conuenticles. To differ frō the common ſort in life and maners, againſt the popes lawe. Againſt Engliſhe bookes.

And if perhaps they leaue not ſuch perſons cōuict vnto the ſecular court, yet notwithſtanding let them commit thē vnto the perpetuall or temporall priſons, as the quality of the cauſe ſhall require, vntil the next conuocation of ẏ prelates and Clergy of our prouince of Canterbury, there perſonally to remaine: and that in the ſame priſons they cauſe thē to be kept according as the lawe requireth: And that of all and ſingular the things aforeſayd, that is, what inquiſition they haue made, and what they haue found, and how in the proceſſe they haue behaued themſelues, and what perſons ſo conuict they haue cauſed to be put in ſafe keeping, with what diligence or negligence of the Commiſſaryes aforeſayd, with all and all maner of other circumſtances premiſed, and therunto in any wiſe apperteining, and ſpecially of the abiurations, if in the meane time they ſhall chaunce to abiure any hereſyes: that then in the next conuocation of the Prelates and Clergy vnder the forme aforeſayd, they cauſe the ſame diſtinctly and apertly to be certified to vs and our ſucceſſours: And that they deliuer effectually to the Officiall of our Court, the ſame proceſſe to remain with them, or els in the regiſter of one court of Canterbury, ſo that euery one, to whom ſuch things appertaineth for the further execution of the ſame proces, may haue recourſe vnto the ſame officiall, with all effect.

We therefore commaund, that as touching the conſtitution brought vnto your City & Dioceſan, you cauſe the ſame in conueniēt place and time to be publiſhed, and that in all pointes you both obſerue the ſame your ſelues and cauſe it alſo of others to be diligently obſerued: Commaunding furthermore, all and ſingular our felow brethren and Suffraganes, that they in likewiſe cauſe the ſame to be publiſhed throughout all their Cities and Dioces, & both diligently obſerue the ſame themſelues, and alſo cauſe al others to do the ſame: and what thing ſoeuer you ſhall do in the premiſſes, that you certify vs betwixt this and the feaſt of S. Peter ad vincula, next comming, that you duely certify vs of theſe thinges, by your letters patentes, contayning the ſame effect, ſealed with your ſeales. Dated at our houſe in London, the firſt day of Iuly. an. 1416.

The trouble of I. Barton, and Robert Chapell in cauſe of religion.

This Philip ſeemeth to be Philippe Repington afore mentioned in the ſtory of Wickleffe.

During the time of this conuocatiō, in the yere aboue ſayd, two prieſtes were preſented & brought before the biſhops, noted and defamed for hereticks: one named Iohn Barton, vnto whom it was obiected by Philip Biſhop of Lincolne, that he had bene excommunicated about 6. or 7. yeares before, vpon Articles concerning religion, and yet neither would appeare being cited, nor woulde ſeeke to be reconciled agayne vnto the Church. Which thinges being ſo prooued agaynſt him, he was committed to the cuſtody of the foreſayd Philip Biſhoppe of Lincolne, and ſo to be holden in priſon, till he ſhould heare further what ſhould be done.

The other was Robert Chapel, otherwiſe named Holbech, Chaplain ſometime to the Lord Cobham: vnto whō likewiſe it was obiected, that he being vnder the ſentence of excommunication about three or foure yeares, yet notwithſtanding to the contempt of the keyes, did continue ſaying Maſſe, and preaching, & ſought not to be recōciled, Chapel denying that he did know any ſuch excommunication geuen out agaynſt him. Then was the copy of his excommunicatiō firſt made by the biſhop of Roff. afterward denoūced by ẏ Biſhop of Lōdon at Paules croſſe brought and read before him: & ſo that done, that Seſſion brake vp for that time, which was about the latter ende of May, an. 1416.

The xij. day of the moneth of Iuly next following, the ſayd Chappell appeared agayn before the Archbiſhop and the Prelates. To whom when it was obiected as before, how he had preached without the Biſhops licence, in dyuers places, as at Cobham, at Cowling, and at Shorne, at length he confeſſing and ſubmitting himſelf, deſired pardō. Which although it was not at the firſt graunted vnto him, yet at the laſt the Biſhop of Roff. putting in his hands the decree of the canon law. 1. q. 7. cap. Quoties. &c. and cauſing him to read the ſame, made him to abiure all his former articles & opinions as hereticall and ſchiſmaticall, neuer to holde the ſame agayne, according to the contentes of the foreſayd Canon. Wherupon the ſayd Robert being abſolued by the authority of the Archb. (ſaue only that he ſhould not intermeddle with ſaying Maſſe, before he had bene diſpenſed from the Pope himſelfe for his irregularity) was enioyned by the Archb. himſelfe for his penance, ſtanding at Paules to publiſh theſe articles folowing vnto the people, in ſtead of his confeſſion geuen him to be read.

R. Chapell abiureth.

Articles obtruded to R. Chapel to confeſſe.

In primis, I confeſſe that Biſhops, Prieſtes, and other Eccleſiaſticall perſons, hauing no other profeſſion to the contrary, may lawfully haue, receiue, and reteyne landes and poſſeſſions temporall, to diſpenſe and diſpoſe the ſame and the rentes thereof, to the behoofe of themſelues or of theyr Church where they dwell, according as ſemeth good to them.

2. Item, I confeſſe that it were very vnlawfull, yea rather vniuſt, that temporal men vpon any occaſion, whatſoeuer it be, ſhould take away temporall landes and poſſeſſions from the church either vniuerſal or particular, to whō they are geuen, the conſideration of the abuſe of mortall prelates, prieſt, or other miniſters in the Church conuerſant (which are mixt together good with bad) abuſing the ſame to the contrary notwithſtanding.

3. Item, I confeſſe that peregrinations to the reliques of ſaintes and to holy places, are not prohibited, nor to be cōtemned of any Catholicke, but are auaylcable to remiſſion of ſinnes, and approued of holy fathers, and worthy to be commended.

Marke well this catholicke doctrine of the Popes Church, concerning remiſſion of ſinnes. Marke how this doctrine ioyneth with Gods cōmaundement. & with his word.

4. Item, I confeſſe that to worſhip the images of Chriſt or of any other ſaynts being ſet vp in the church, or in any other place is not forbiddē: neither is any cauſe inductiue of Idolatry, being ſo vſed as the holy fathers do will them to be worſhipped: But rather ſuch images do profit much to the health of Chriſtians, becauſe they do put vs in remēbraūce of the merits of thoſe ſayntes, whom they repreſent and the ſight of them doth moue and ſtirre vp the people to prayers and deuotion.

5. Item, I confeſſe that auriculer confeſſion vſed in the Churche is neceſſarye for a ſinner to the ſaluation of hys ſoule, and neceſſary to be done of ſuch a prieſt, as is ordeyned by the Church, to heare the confeſſion of the ſinner, & to enioyne him penance for the ſame: without which confeſſion (if it may be had) there is no remiſſion of ſinnes to him that is in ſinne mortall.

Ergo, by this doctrine the iuſt man liueth not by his faith, but by his confeſſion auricular.

6. Item, I confeſſe and firmely do hold, that although the Prieſt be in mortall ſinne, yet may he make the bodye of Chriſt, and miniſter other Sacramentes and Sacramentals: which neuertheleſſe are profitable to all the faythfull, whoſoeuer receiueth them in fayth and in deuotion of the Church.

How can theſe prieſtes be ſeruantes of Chriſt, which be makers of Chriſt.

7. Item, I confeſſe that biſhops in their own dioces, may forbid, decree, & ordayn vpō reaſonable cauſes, that prieſts ſhould not preach without theyr ſpeciall licēce, the word of God, and that thoſe that do agaynſt the ſame, ſhould ſuffer the eccleſiaſticall cenſures.

8. Item, I confeſſe that priuate religiōs as wel of monks canons and other, as alſo of the begging Friers, being allowed by the church of Rome, are profitable to the vniuerſall church, and in no meanes contrary to Gods law, but rather founded and authoriſed thereon.

Priuate religiōs profitable, if ye could tell wherfore.

9. Item, I promiſe and ſweare vpon theſe holy Euangelies, which I hold here in my hands, that I will hēceforth neuer hold, affirme, nor by any meanes teach any thing cōtrary vnto the premiſſes either openly or priuately.

After the ſetting out of the conſtitution aforeſaid in the dayes of the aboue named Henry Chicheſley Arbiſhop of Caunterbury great inquiſition hereupon followed in England, and many good men whoſe harts began to be won to the Goſpell, were brought to much vexation and cauſed outwardly to abiure.

Straight inquiſition in Englād.

Chriſt had the hartes of ment they had their bodies

Thus, while Chriſt had the inward hartes of men: yet the Catholicke Antichriſt would needes poſſeſſe their outward bodyes, and make them ſing after his ſong. In the number of whom, being compelled to abiure, beſides the other aforeſayd was alſo I. Taylor of the pariſhe of Saynt Michaels at Querne. William Iames maiſter of Art and Phiſition, who had long remained in priſon, and at length after abiuration, was licēced with his keper, to practiſe his Phiſicke.

A briefe ſumme of ſuch as abiured, vnder Hen. Chicheſley.
I. Tailour
W. Iames.
I. Dwerffe.

Alſo Ioh. D'werf, ſo named for his low ſtature, which was ſent by the Duke of Bedford to the foreſayd Chicheſly and other biſhops to be examined before them in the cōuocation: there he at length reuolting from his doctrine recanted and did penaunce.

Iohn Iourdelay.

In like maner Iohn Iourdelay of Lincolnſhire, well commended in the regiſters for his learning, accuſed by ẏ prieſtes of Lincoln for a certayn book, which he contrary to the former decree of the biſhops did conceale & dyd not exhibite vnto thē, was therfore enforced to abiure. After whō was brought likewiſe before the Byſhops, one Katharin Dertford a Spinſter, who being accuſed and examined vpon theſe 3. articles concerning the Sacrament of the popes altar, adoration of Images, and of pilgrimage, anſwered that ſhe was not able, being vnlearned, to anſwere to ſuch high matters, neither had ſhe any further ſkil, but only her Creed and x. commaundements: and ſo was ſhe committed to the vicar general of the B. of Wint. (for that ſhe was of the ſame dioces) to be kept and further to be examined of the ſame. Ex Regiſt. Hen. Chicheſley.

I. Iourdelay abiureth.

Rob. perſon of Heggeley examined.

At the ſame ſitting was alſo brought before the ſayde Archb. and his fellow biſhops, by the liuetenant of ẏ Tower, the perſon of Heggely in Lincolneſhyre, named M. Robert, who being long kept in the tower, at lēgth by the kinges writte was brought and examined the ſame tyme vpon the like articles, to witte: touching the ſacrament of their aultar, peregrinatiō, adoration of images, & whether it was lawfull for ſpirituall men to enioy temporall Lordſhips. &c. To the which articles he anſwered (ſaith the Regiſter) doubtely and mockingly, ſaue onely in the ſacramēt he ſemed ſomething more conformable, albeit not yet fully to their contētation, wherfore being committed to the cuſtody and examination of Richard Biſhopp of Lincolne, where in the end he was alſo induced to ſubmit himſelfe.

W. Henry of Tenterdon examined.

The ſame likewiſe did W. Henry of Tenterden being ſuſpected and areſted for company keping with thē, whom the Biſhops called Lollardes, and for hauing ſuſpected bookes.

A booke of the new laW. I. Galle. R. Monke. Bart. Cornmōger N. Hoper. Tho. Granter troubled for their doctrine.

Beſides theſe, diuers other there were alſo which in the ſame conuocation were conuented, and reuoked theyr opinions, as Iohn Galle a Prieſt of London, for hauing a booke in Engliſh intituled: A booke of the new law. Item, Richard Monke, vicar of Cheſham in Lincolnſhyre, who ſubmitted himſelfe likewiſe. In this race and number folowed moreouer, Bartholomew Cornmonger, Nic. Hoper ſeruaunt to the Lord Cobham. Tho. Granter, with other mo, mentioned in the foreſayd regiſter.

Among the reſt which were at this time troubled for theyr fayth, was one Radulph Mungin prieſt, who for the ſame doctrine was areſted and ſent vp by the L. Chancellor of England, to the foreſayd Arch. and by him committed to Dauid Price, Vicar generall to the B. of London: where after he had endured 4. moneths in priſon, he was by the ſayd Dauid preſented to the conuocation, agaynſt whom diuers articles were obiected.

A ſubſidie gathered by the pope to fight againſt the faithfull of Bohemia.

But for the better explaining of the matter, firſt here is to be noted, that during the time of this conuocation prouinciall, Pope Martine had ſent downe to the Clergye of Englande, for a ſubſidye to be gathered of the Church, to mayntayne the Popes warre agaynſt the Lolards (ſo the Papiſtes did terme them) of Bohemia. Alſo an other ſubſidy was demaunded to perſecute one Peter Clerke mayſter of art of Oxford, who flying out of England, was at ẏ councell of Baſill, diſputing on the Bohemians ſide. And thirdly, an other ſubſidy was alſo required to perſecute W. Ruſſell, warden of the Gray Friers in London, who the ſame time was fled from England to Rome, to mayntayne his opinion before the Pope, and there eſcaped out of priſon. &c. of whom more largely hereafter (Chriſt willing) we ſhall entreat. In the meane time marke here the prety ſhiftes of the Pope to hooke in the Engliſh mony by all maner of pretences poſſible.

Romiſhe ſleightes to get the Engliſhe money.

Articles obiected againſt Rafe Mungin.

Thus Rafe Mungyn, the foreſayd examinate appearing before the biſhops in the conuocation, it was articulated agaynſt him, firſt that he ſhould affirme and hold, not to be lawfull for any Chriſtian to fight and make warre agaynſt the heretickes of Bohemia.

Item, it was to him obiected, that he did holde & ſay, not to be lawfull for any man to haue propriety of goodes, but the ſame to be cōmon, which he expreſſely denyed that euer he ſo ſayd or affirmed. Whereby we haue to obſerue, how the crafty malice of theſe aduerſaries vſeth falſely to collect and ſurmiſe of men, what they neuer ſpake, wherby to oppreſſe them wrongfully, whom by playne truth they cannot expugne.

Trialogus. The Goſpells tranſlated by Iohn Wickliffe.

Moreouer, they obiected agaynſt him, that he ſhoulde keepe company with Mayſter Clarke aforeſayde, and alſo that he diſperſed in the City of London, certayn bookes of Iohn Wickliffe and of Peter Clarke, namely, the booke Trialogus and the Goſpels of Iohn Wickleffe, &c. He was charged moreouer to haue ſpoken agaynſt the Popes indulgences, for that the Pope had no more power to geue indulgences, then he had.

Radulph Mungin condēned to perpetual priſō.

Vpon theſe and other ſuch Articles obiected, the ſayde Mungyn being aſked if he would reuoke, aunſwered that it ſeemed to him not iuſt or meet ſo to doe, whiche dyd not know himſelf guilty of any hereſy. Thus he being reſpited for that time, was cōmitted to priſon till the next ſitting, who then being called diuers and ſundry times afterward before the Biſhops, after long inquiſition and ſtraight examination made, alſo depoſitions brought in agaynſt him ſo much as they could ſearch out, he notwithſtanding ſtyll denyed as before, to recant. Wherefore the foreſayd Henry the Archbiſhop, proceeding to his ſentence definitiue, condemned him to perpetuall priſon.

Tho. Granter. Richard Monke.

After whoſe condemnation, the ſonday next folowing, the recantation of Tho. Granter, and of Richard Monke Prieſtes aboue mentioned, were openly read at Paules croſſe, the Byſhop of Rocheſter the ſame time preached at the ſayd croſſe. The tenour of whoſe recantation, with his Articles in the ſame expreſſed, here vnder foloweth.

The recantation of Tho. Granter. Note the doctrine & opinions in thoſe daies, where the Goſpell tooke place.

IN the name of God. Before you my Lord of Canterbury, and all you my Lords here being preſent, & afore you all here gathered at this time, I Thomas Granter prieſt vnworthy, dwelling in this City of Londō, feeling & vnderſtanding, that afore this time I affirmed open errours and hereſies, ſaying, beleuing, and affirming within thys City, that he that Chriſtian men callen Pope, is not verye Pope, ner Gods vicary in earth, but I ſayd he was Antichriſt. Alſo I ſayd, beleued, and affirmed, that after the ſacramentall wordes ſayd by a Prieſt in the Maſſe, there remayneth materiall bread and wine, and is not turned into Chriſtes body and his bloud. Alſo I ſaid and affirmed that it was not for to doe in no wiſe, to goe on pilgrimage, but it was better I ſayd to abide at home and beate the ſtooles with theyr heeles, for it was, I ſayde, but tree & ſtone that they ſoughten. Alſo I ſayde and affirmed that I held no Scripture catholicke ner holy, but onely that is conteyned in the Bible. For the Legendes and liues of Sayntes, I held hem nought, and the miracles written of hem I helde vntrue. Becauſe of which errours and hereſies I was tofore M. Dauy Price, Vicar generall of my Lord of London, and ſince tofore you my Lord of Caunterbury & your brethren in your councell prouinciall, & by you fully informed, which ſo ſayd, mine affirming, beleuing & teaching, bene open errors and hereſies, and contrarious to the determination of the chirch of Rome. Wherfore I willing to follow and ſewe the doctrine of holy chirch, and depart fro all maner errors and hereſye, and turne with good will & hart to ẏ onehead of the chirch, cōſidering that holye chirch ſhitteth ner cloſeth not her boſome to him that will turne agayne, ne God will not the death of a ſinner, but rather he ben turned & liue: with a pure hart I confeſſe, deteſt, & deſpiſe my ſayd errours and hereſies, and the ſayd opinions I confeſſe as hereſies and errours, to the fayth of the Chirch of Rome, & to all vniuerſally holy Chirch repugnaunt. And therfore theſe ſayd opinions in ſpeciall, and all other errours and hereſies, doctrines and opiniōs, ayen ẏ fayth of the Church and the determination of the Churche of Rome, I abiure and forſweare, here tofore you all, and ſweare by theſe holy Goſpels by me bodily touched, that from henceforth I ſhall neuer hold teach, ne preach errour errours, hereſie, ne hereſies, nor falſe doctrine agaynſt the faith of holy chirch, & determination of the chirch of Rome ner none ſuch thing I ſhall obſtinately defend, ne any man holding or teaching ſuch maner thinges by me or an other perſon, openly or priuily I ſhal defend. I ſhall neuer after thys tyme be receitor, fautor, councellor, or defendor of heretičks, or of any perſon ſuſpect of hereſie, ner I ſhal trow to him: ner wittingly fellaſhip with him, ner yeue him counſeil, fauour, yiftes, ne cōfort. And if I know any heretickes, or of hereſie, or of ſuch falſe opinions, anye perſon ſuſpect, or anye man or woman making or holding priuy conuenticles, or aſſemblies, or any diuers or ſingular opinions from the common doctrine of the Church of Rome, or if I may know any of their fautors, comforters, councelours, or defenſers, or any that haue ſuſpect bookes or quiers of ſuch errours and hereſies: I ſhall let you my Lord of Canterbury, or your officers in your abſence, or the Dioceſans and Ordinaries of ſuch men, haue ſoone and ready knowing, ſo help me God and holydeme, and theſe holy Euangelies by me bodely touched.

One head, that is, the vnitie of the Church.

Men tied to the Church of Rome.

¶ After this recantation at the Croſſe thus publiſhed, and his ſubmiſſion made, the ſayd Granter then was by the aduiſe of the Prelates, put to 7. yeares priſonment, vnder the cuſtody and charge of the biſhop of London.

After this, followed in like maner the recantation of Richard Monke. Alſo of Edmund Frith, which was before Butler ſo ſir Iohn Oldcaſtle.

The affliction and trouble in Kent, vnder Chicheſley.

Beſide theſe aboue remembred, many and diuers there be in the ſayd regiſter recorded, who likewiſe for their faith and religion were greatly vexed and troubled, eſpecially in the Dioces of Kent, in the townes of Romney, Tenterden, Wodcherche, Cranbroke, Staphelherſt, Beninden, Halden, Roluenyden and others, where as whole houſholdes, both man and wife, were driuen to forſake theyr houſes and townes for daunger of perſecution: as ſufficiently appeareth in the proceſſe of the Archb. Chicheſley agaynſt the ſayd perſons, and in the certificat of Burbath his officiall, wherein are named theſe perſons following.

Perſons perſecuted in Kent.

1. W. White Prieſt.
2. Tho. Grenested. Prieſt.
3. Bartho. Cronmonger.
4. Iohn Wadnon.
5. Ioan his wife.
6. Tho. Euerden.
7. William Euerden.
8. Steuen Robin.
9. W. Chiueling.
10. Iohn Tame.
11. Iohn Fowlin.
12. Will. Somer.
13. Marion his wife.
14. Iohn Abraham.
15. Rob. Munden
16. Laurence Coke.

Theſe being cited vp together by the biſhop would not appere. Wherupon great inquiſition being made for them by his officers, they were conſtrained to flie their houſes & townes, & ſhift for themſelues as couertly as they might. When Burbach and other officers had ſent worde to the

Arch

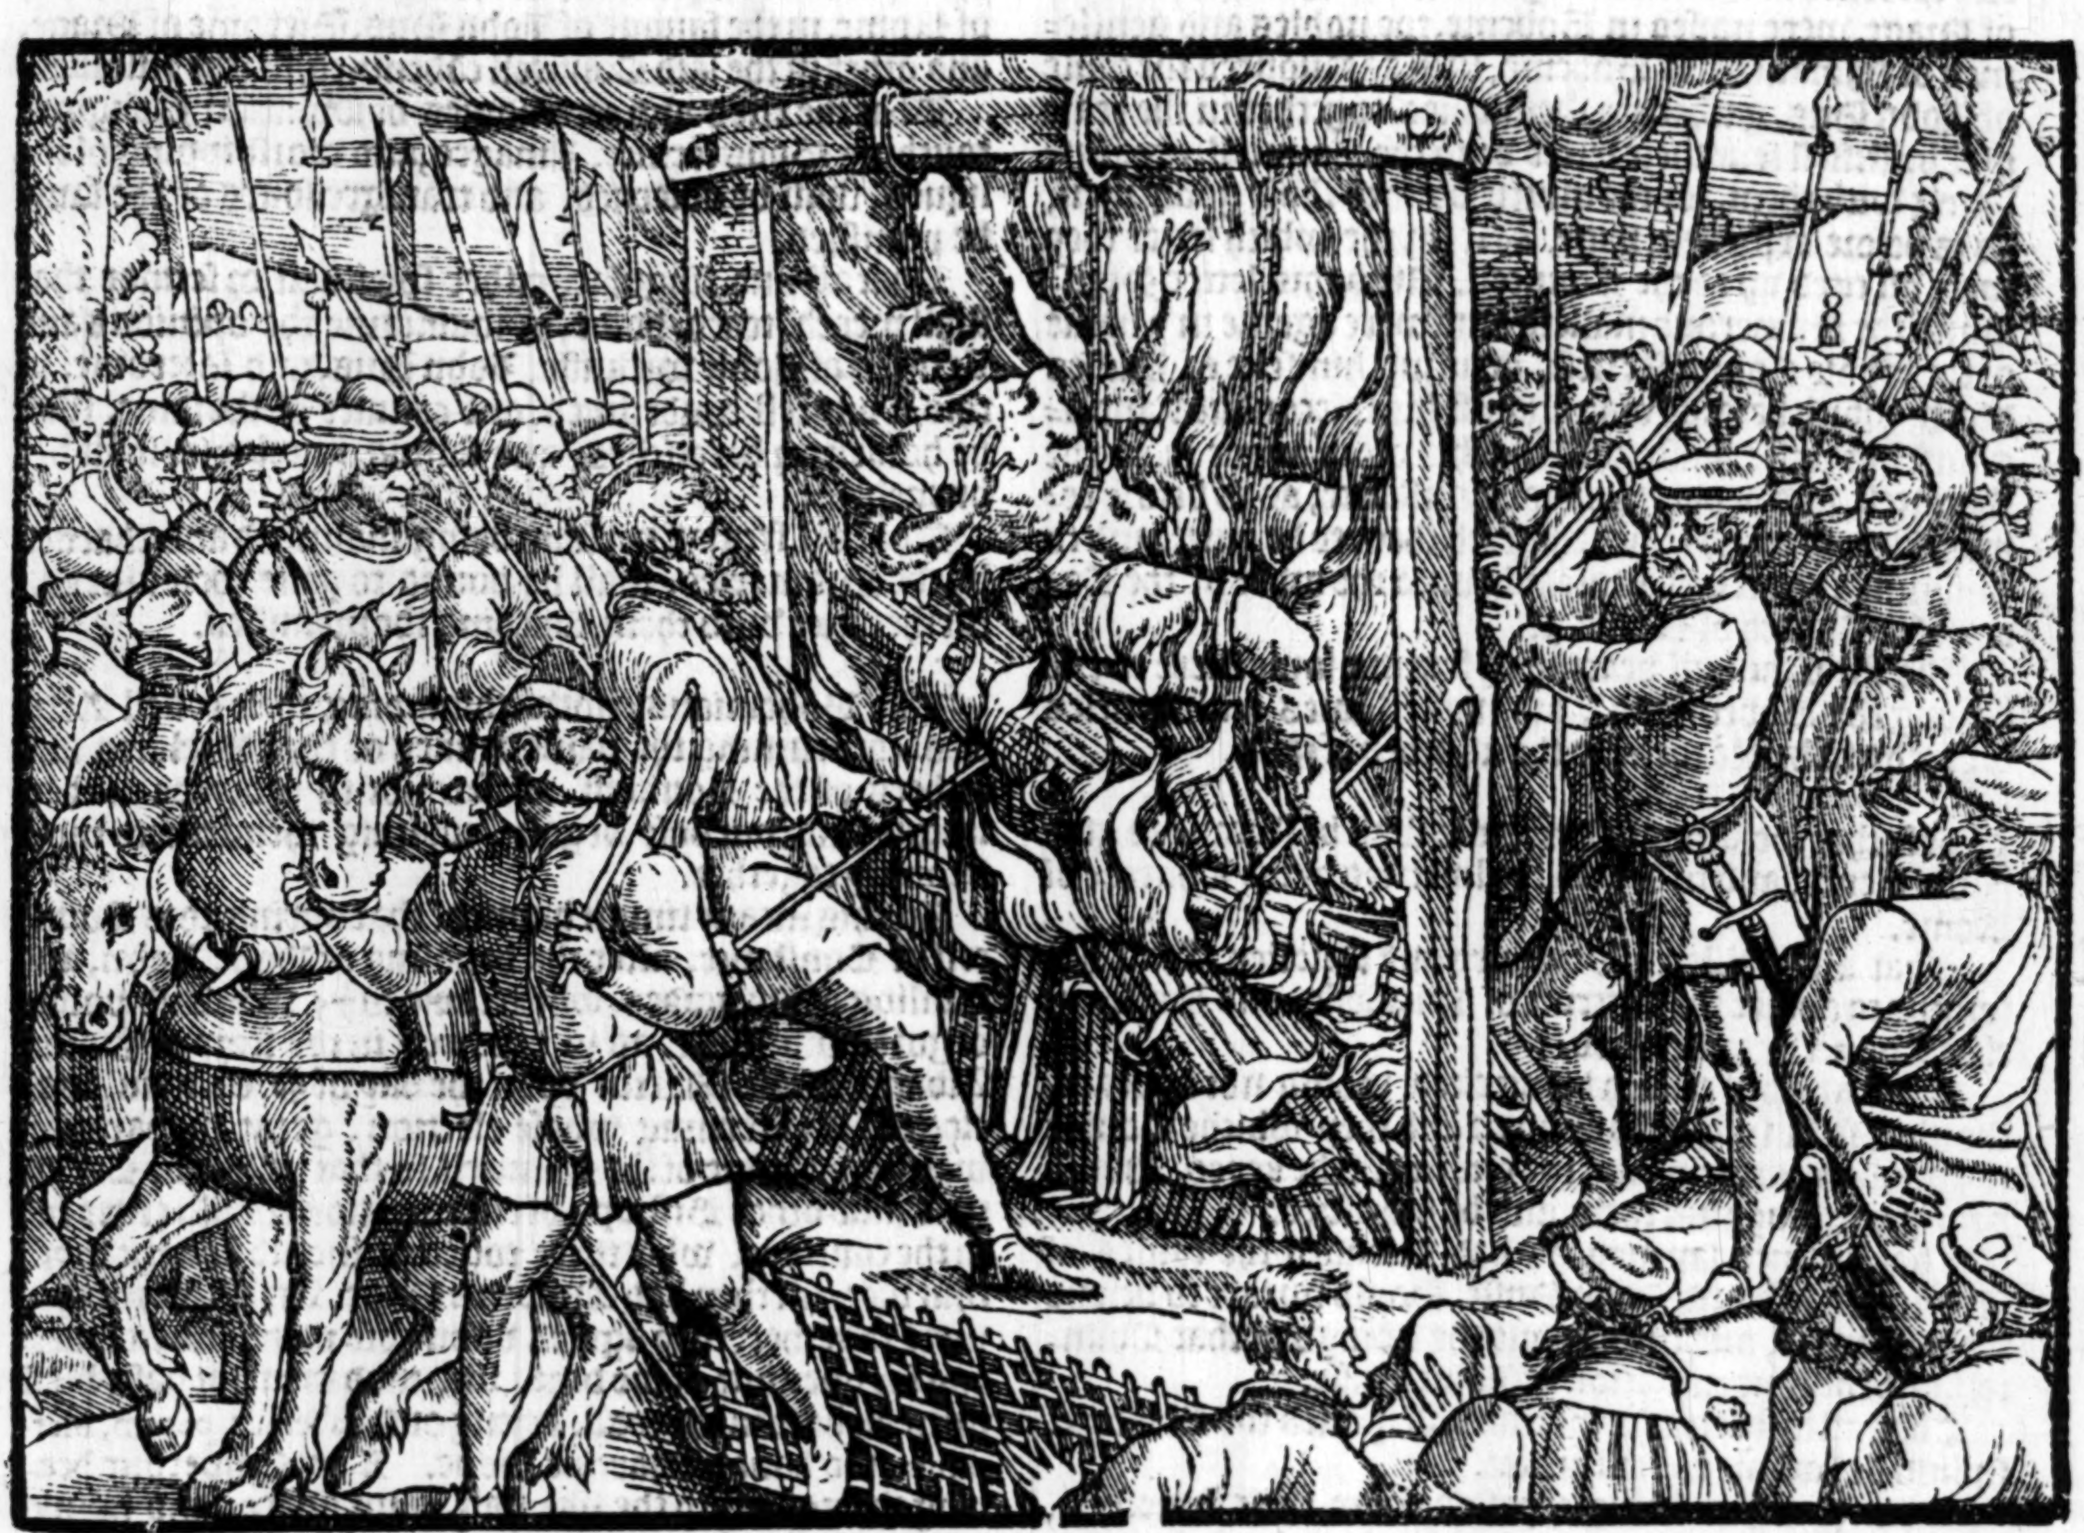
Archbiſhop that they coulde not be founde, then he directed downe order that Citations ſhould be ſet vp for them on euery Church dore through all townes where they did inhabite: appointing them a day & terme whē to appeare. But notwithſtanding, when as they yet could not be taken, neither would appeare, the Archbiſhop ſitting in hys tribunall ſeate, proceedeth to the ſentence of excommunication againſt them. What afterward happened to them, in the regiſter doth not appeare: but like it is, at length they were forced to ſubmit themſelues.

The ſeconde apprehenſiō of the Lord Cobham.

The Lord Powes plaieth Iudas.

Concerning ſir Iohn Oldcaſtle the Lord Cobham, and of his firſt apprehenſion, with his whole ſtory & life, ſufficiently hath bene expreſſed before, pag. 575. how he being committed to the Tower, and condēned falſely of hereſie, eſcaped afterward out of the Tower, and was in Wales about the ſpace of foure yeares. In the which meane time, a great ſumme of money was proclaimed by the King, to hym that could take the ſayde ſir Iohn Oldcaſtle, eyther quicke or dead. About the ende of which foure yeares beeing expired, the Lord Powes, whether for loue and greedines of the money, or whether for hatred of true and ſincere doctrine of Chriſt, ſeking all maner of wayes how to play the parte of Iudas, at length obteined his bloudie purpoſe, and brought the Lorde Cobham bound vp, to London: which was about the yeare of our Lord. 1417. and about the moneth of December. At which time, there was a Parliament aſſembled at London, for the reliefe of money the ſame time to be ſente to the King, whome the Byſhops had ſente out (as yee heard before) to fight in Fraunce. The recordes of which Parliament do thus ſay: that on Tweſday the xiiij. day of December, and the xxix. day of the ſayd Parliament, Sir Iohn Oldcaſtle of Cowling, in the Countie of Kent, Knight, being outlawed (as is afore minded) in the Kings bench, and excommunicated before by the Archbiſhop of Canterbury for hereſie, was brought before the Lordes, and hauing heard his ſaid conuictions, aunſwered not thereto in his excuſe. Vpon which record and proceſſe, it was adiudged, that he ſhould be taken as a traytour to the King and the Realme: that he ſhould be carried to the Tower of London, and from thence drawne thorough London vnto the new gallowes in S. Gyles without Temple barre, and there to bee hanged, and burned hanging.

¶ The deſcription of the cruell Martyrdome of Sir Iohn Oldcaſtle, Lorde Cobham.



Treaſon falſly ſurmiſed.

Vide ſupra. pag. 575.

As touching the pretenced treaſon of this Lord Cobham falſely aſcribed vnto him in his inditement, riſing vpon wrong ſuggeſtion and falſe ſurmiſe, and aggrauated by rigour of wordes, rather then vpon any ground of due probation, ſufficiently hath bene diſcourſed before in my defence of the ſaide Lorde Cobham, againſt Alanus Copus, page. 575. where againe is to be noted, as I ſaide before, how by this appeareth, that the Lorde Cobham was neuer executed by force of the inditement or outlawry, becauſe, if he had, he ſhould then haue bene brought to the barre in the Kings bench, and there the Iudges ſhoulde haue demaunded of him, what he could haue ſaid, why hee ſhoulde not haue died: and then not ſhewing ſufficiente cauſe for the diſcharge or delay of execution, the Iudges ſhould haue awarded and geuen the iudgemente of treaſon: which being not ſo, it is cleare he was not executed vpon the Inditement. Beſides, to proue that he was not executed vpon the Inditement, and the outlawry, the maner of the execution proueth it, becauſe it was neither the execution of a Traitour, nor was the whole puniſhment thereof pronounced by the Iudge, as by due order of lawe was requiſite.

Finally, as I ſaid before, heere I repeate againe, that albeit the ſayd Lord Cobham was attainted of treaſon by the Act, and that the King, the Lords, and the commons aſſented to the Act: yet all that bindeth not in ſuch ſorte (as if in deede he were no traytour) that any man may not by ſearch of the truth, vtter and ſet forth ſincerely and iuſtly, the very true and certaine cauſe, whereupon his execution did follow. Which ſeemeth by all circumſtances and firme arguments, to riſe principally of his Religion, which firſt brought him in hatred of the Biſhops: the Biſhops brought him in hatred of the King: the hatred of the King brought him to his death and Martirdome. And thus much for the death and execution of this worthy ſeruaunt of Chriſt Lord Cobham.

Iudas ſeeketh for his reward.

Moreouer, in the recordes aboue mentioned it followeth, how in the ſayd Parliament, after the Martirdome of this valiant Knight, motion then was made, that the Lord Powes might be thanked and rewarded, according to the Proclamation made, for his great trauaile taken in the apprehenſion of Sir Iohn Oldcaſtle Knight, hereticke. Thus ſtand the wordes of the recorde. Where two things are to be noted: Firſt, how Sir Iohn heere in the record is called not traitour, but hereticke only. Secondly, marke how this brother of Iudas heere craueth hys reward for betraieng the innocent bloud. wherein it is not to be doubted, but that his light fee, and quid vultis mihi dare in this world, will haue an heauie reward hereafter in the world to come, vnleſſe he repented. &c.

An.5. Henr.5 act. 17.

Furthermore, in the ſayde Parliament, Act.17. it was enacted, that the Church and all eſtates ſhould enioy all their liberties, which were not repealed, or repealeable by the common lawe: meaning belike, the excluding of the iuriſdiction of the Popes forreine power, which hath alwaies by the common lawe bene excluded out of thys Realme.

An.5. Henr.5. act. 17.

In the ſame Parliament alſo a greeuous complainte was made (by the Biſhops no doubt) againſt inſurrections. In the ende, they ſuſpected that they were the Lollards, hereticks, and traitours, with a requeſt that commiſſions might at all times be graunted to inquire of them. whereunto aunſwere was made, that the ſtatutes therefore made, ſhould be executed, &c. Thus the Cleargy Tanquam leones rugientes, ceaſed not to roare after Chriſtian bloud: And whoſoeuer was elſe in fault, ſtill the Clergy cried: crucifie Chriſt, and deliuer vs Barrabas: For then all horrible facts and miſchieues, if anye were done, were imputed to the poore Lollards.

All the blame laide to the Lollardes.

And now from our Engliſh matters, to returne againe to the ſtory of the Bohemians, from whence wee haue a little digreſſed, when as the newes of the barbarous crueltie exerciſed at Conſtance againſt John Hus, & Hierome of Prage, were noiſed in Boheme, the nobles and gentlemen of Morauia and Boheme, ſuch as fauoured the cauſe of John Hus, gathering themſelues together in the zeale of Chriſt: firſt ſent their letter vnto the Councell, expoſtulating with them, for the iniurie done to thoſe godly men, as is before expreſſed, page. 602. for the which letter they were all cited vp to the Councell. Unto this letter Sigiſmund the Emperour maketh aunſwere againe in yͤ name of the whole Councell: firſt, excuſing himſelfe of Huſſes death, which he ſaide was againſt his ſafeconduict, and againſt his will: Inſomuch that he roſe in anger from the Councell, and departed out of Conſtance, as is before remembred. Secondly, he requireth them to be quiet, and to conforme themſelues peaceably vnto the order of the Catholicke Church of Rome, &c.

Alſo the Councell hearing or fearing ſome ſtirre to riſe among the Bohemians, did make lawes and Articles whereby to bridle them, to the number of xxiiij.

Articles decreed in the Councell of Conſtance againſt the Bohemians.

First, that the King of Bohemia ſhall be ſworne to giue obedience, and to defend the liberties of the Churche of Rome.

That all Maiſters, Doctours and Prieſtes, ſhall bee ſworne to abiure the doctrine of wickleffe, and Huſſe, in that Councell condemned.

That all they which being cited, would not appeare, ſhould alſo be ſworne to abiure: and they whiche woulde not appeare, contemning the cenſure of the keyes, ſhould haue proceſſe againſt them, and be puniſhed.

That all the tractations of Jacobellus De vtraque ſpecie, de Antichriſto (wherein he calleth the Pope Antichriſt) Et de remanentia panis poſt conſecrationem, ſhould likewiſe be brought and burned.

That all ſongs and balates made to the preiudice of the Councell, and of the Catholike perſons of both ſtates, ſhould be forbid to be ſong in Cities, townes and villages, vnder great and extreame puniſhment.

That none ſhould preach the word without the licence of the Ordinarie, or of the parſon of that place.

That Ordinaries and Prelates, hauing iuriſdiction, ſhould not be ſtopped in their iuriſdiction, by the ſecular power, vnder paine of excommunication.

That all and ſingular parſons ſhall be commaunded to obedience, vnder paine of excommunication: and that whoſoeuer knoweth any perſon to fauour any wickliuiſtes or their doctrine, or that keepeth company with ſuſpect perſons, he ſhall preſent the ſame to his Dioceſans or his officials.

That the confederacie of the ſeculars made betweene themſelues, or any of the ſpiritualtie, to the preiudice of the foreſaid Councell, and of the Apoſtolicke ſea & Church of Rome, in the fauour of John Hus, Hierome of Prage, and other in the ſaid Councell cõdemned, ſhalbe diſſolued.

That the rites and ceremonies of Chriſtian Religion, touching Gods ſeruice, Images, and worſhipping of reliques, ſhall be obſerued, and tranſgreſſours of the ſame be puniſhed.

Concilium malignantium.

That all and ſingular, either ſpirituall or ſecular that ſhall preach, teach, holde, or maintaine the opinions and Articles of John wickliffe, John Hus, and Hierome, in this Councell condemned, and conuict of the ſame, ſhall be holden for heretickes, and falling in relapſe, ſhall bee burned.

That all ſecular perſons being moniſhed and charged by the Ordinaries, ſhall be bound to geue their aide and furtherance vnto them, touching the premiſſes.

The Bohemians, notwithſtanding theſe cruell Articles, contemning the vaine deuiſes of theſe Prelates and fathers of the Councell, ceaſed not to procede in their league and purpoſe begon, ioyning themſelues more ſtrongly together.

In this meane time it happed, that during this Councell of Conſtance, after the depoſing of Pope John, and ſpoiling of his goodes, which came to 75. thouſand poũds of golde and ſiluer, as is reported in the ſtory of Saint Albans, Pope Martin vpon the day of S. Martin, was elected. Concerning whoſe election, great preparation was made before of the Councell, ſo that beſide the Cardinals, fiue other Biſhops of euery nation ſhould enter into the conclaue. who there together ſhould be kept wyth thin diet, till they had founded a Pope. At laſt, when they were together, they agreed vpon this man, and not tarieng for opening of the dore, like mad men, for haſt, braſt open an hole in the wall, crieng out, habemus papam, Martinum, we haue a Martine Pope. The Emperour hearing thereof, with the like haſt, came apace, and falling downe, kiſſed the new Popes feete. Then went they all to the Church together, and ſang, Te Deum.

The election of Pope Martine. The Emperour kiſſeth the popes feete.

The next day following, this Martine was made prieſt (which before was but a Cardinall Deacon) and the next day after was conſecrate Biſhop, and ſang his firſt maſſe, whereat was preſent 140. mitred Biſhops. After thys, the next morow, the new holy Pope ordeined a generall proceſſion, where a certaine Clarke was appointed to ſtand with flaxe and fire, who ſetting the flaxe on fire, thus ſaid: Ecce pater ſancte, ſic tranſit gloria mundi. i. behold holye father, thus vadeth the tranſitorie glory of this worlde. which done, the ſame day the holy father was brought vp vnto an high ſcaffold (ſaith the ſtory) I will not ſay to an high mountaine, where was offered to him all the glory of the world, &c. there to be crowned for a triple Kyng. This done, the ſame day, after dinner, the new crowned Pope was with great triumph brought through yͤ middeſt of the Citie of Conſtance, where all the Biſhops and Abbots followed with their miters. The Popes horſe was all trapt with red ſkarlet downe to the ground. The Cardinals horſes were all in white ſilke, the Emperour on the right ſide, and prince Electour on the left, playeng both the Popes footemen, went on foote, leading the Popes horſe by the bridle.

Meretrix equitans ſuper beſtiam Apocalip.

The pope on horſebacke, the Emperour on foote. Why then doth the pope keepe ſtill the olde Iewes ceremonies, if all thinges be made new.

As this Pagcant thus with the great gyant proceeded, and came to the market place, there the Iewes (according to the maner) offered to him their lawe and ceremonies. Which the Pope receiuing, caſt behind him, saieng: Recedant vetera, noua ſunt omnia. i. Let olde thinges paſſe, all things be made new, &c. Ex hiſt. S. Alb. ex paralip. Vrſperg. This was an. 1417.

Anno. 1417.

Thus the Pope being now cōfirmed in his kingdome, firſt beginneth to write his letters to the Bohemians, wherin partly he moueth them to Catholicke obedience, partly he diſſembleth with them, faining, that if it were not for the Emperours requeſt, he woulde enter proceſſe againſt them. Thirdly and finally he threatneth to attempt the vttermoſt againſt them, and with all force to inuade them, as well with the Apoſtolicall, as alſo with the ſecular arme, if they did ſtill perſiſt, as they begon.

Albeit theſe new threates of the new Biſhop, did nothing moue the conſtant harts of the Bohemians, whome the inward zeale of Chriſtes word had before inflamed.

Although it had bene to be wiſhed, ſuch bloudſhead and warres not to haue followed: yet to ſay the truth, how could theſe Rabines greatly blame them heerein, whome their bloudy tirannie had before prouoked ſo iniuſtly, if nowe with their gloſing letters they could not ſo eaſely appeaſe them againe.

A yearely memoriall of Iohn Hus & Hierome kept among the Bohemians.

Wherfore theſe foreſaid Bohemians, partly for the loue of Iohn Hus and Hierome their countreymen, partly for the hatred of their malignant Papiſtry, aſſembling together, firſt agreed to celebrate a ſolemne memoriall of the death of Iohn Huſſe and Hierome, decreeing the ſame to be holden & celebrate yearely. And afterward, by meanes of their frends, they obteined certaine Churches of the King, wherin they might freely preach and miniſter the Sacraments vnto the congregation. This done, they ſuppreſſed diuers monaſteries, phariſaicall temples, and idolatrous phanes, beginning firſt with the great monaſterie of the blacke Friers, eight miles from Prage, and driuing away the wicked and vicious Prieſts & Monkes out of them, or compelling them vnto a better order. And thus their number more and more encreaſing vnder the conduict of a certaine noble man named Nicholas, they went againe vnto the King, requiring to haue more and ampler Churches graunted vnto them. The King ſeemed at the firſt willingly and gently to giue eare vnto the ſaid Nicholas intreating for the people, and commaunded them to come againe the next day.

K. Wenceſlaus, threatneth Nicholas.

When the people were departed, the kyng turning himſelfe to yͤ noble man Nicholas, which taried ſtill behynde, ſaid: Thou haſt begun a webbe to put me out of my kingdome, but I will make a rope of it, wherewithall I will hang thee. Whereupon he immediatly departed out of the Kings preſence, and the King himſelfe went into the Caſtle of Wiſſegrad: within a while after, into a new Caſtle, which he himſelfe had builded fiue ſtones caſt frō thence, ſending Ambaſſadours to his brother to require aide.

These Proteſtants beeing aſſembled in the Towne of Prage, holding their conuentions: the king ſent forth his Chamberlaine with CCC. horſemē, to runne vpō them: but he hauing reſpect vnto his life, fled. Whē newes thereof was brought vnto yͤ king, all that were about him being amaſed, vtterly deteſted the fact: but the Kings cupbearer ſtādyng by, ſaid: I knew before that theſe thynges would thus come to paſſe. Whom yͤ king in a rage taking hold of, threw him downe before his feete, and with hys dagger would haue ſlaine him: but being letted by ſuch as were about him, with much ado, he pardoned him his life. Immediatly the king being taken with a palſey, fell ſicke, and within 18. daies after, whē he had marked the names of ſuch, whom he had appointed to put to death, inceſſantly calling for aide of his brother, and other his frends, he departed this life before the Princes which he had ſente vnto, were come with aide, whē he had raigned 55. yeares, and was about the age of 57. yeares.

The death of King Wenceſlaus.

The marueilous worke of Gods iudgemēt to be noted, in defending his people.

✠ The ſtory of Ziſca.

Out of Eneas Siluius.

Immediatly after the death of Wenceſlaus, there was a certaine noble man named Ziſca, borne at Troſnouia, which from his youth vpwarde, was brought vp in the kyngs court, and had loſt one of his eies in a battel, where as he had valiantly borne himſelfe. This man beeing ſore greeued for the death of I. Hus, and Hierome of Prage, minding to reuenge the iniuries which the Councell had done, greatly to the diſhonour of yͤ kingdom of Boheme, vpon their complices and adherēts: he gathered together a number of mē of warre, and ſubuerted the Monaſteries and idolatrous temples, pulling downe, and breaking in peeces the images and idols, driuing away the Prieſtes and Monkes, which he ſaide were kept vp in their Cloyſters, like ſwine in their ſtyes to be fatted. After this, hys army beeing increaſed, hauing gathered together aboute fortie thouſande men, hee attempted to take the Caſtle of Wiſſegrade, which was but ſlenderly warded. Frō thence the ſaid Ziſca vnder the conduict of Coranda, wente ſpeedely vnto Pelzina, whereas he knew he had many frends of his faction, and tooke the towne into his power, fortifieng the ſame very ſtrongly, and thoſe which tarried behinde, tooke the Caſtle of Wiſſegrade.

The queene ſendeth for Sigiſmund the Empeerour.

Then the Queene Sophia beeing very carefull, ſente letters and meſſengers vnto the Emperour Sigiſmund, and other nobles adioining vnto her, requiring aide and helpe: but the Emperour made preparation againſt the Turke, which had then lately wonne certaine Caſtels of him. Whereupon the Queene ſeeing all ayde ſo farre off, together with Zenko Wartenberge, gathered an hoſt with the kings treaſure, and fortified the Caſtle of Prage, and the leſſer Citie which ioineth vnto the Caſtle, making gates and Towers of wood vpon the bridge, ouer the Riuer Multane, to ſtoppe that the Proteſtants ſhoulde haue no paſſage that way. Then it hapned that at the Ile of S. Benedict, one Peter Steremberge fought an equall or indifferent battaile with them.

In the meane time the number of the Proteſtantes beeing increaſed in Prage, they fought for yͤ bridge. In which battaile many were ſlaine on both parts, but at the length the Huſſites wanne the bridge, and the neather part of leſſer Prage, the Queenes part fleeing into the vpper parte thereof: whereas they turning againe fierſly, renued the battaile, and fought continually day and night by yͤ ſpace of fiue daies. Many were ſlaine on both parts, goodly buildings were raſed, and the councell houſe, which was in a low place, was vtterly defaced and burned.

The Emperours Ambaſſadours agree with the citizēs of Prage

During the time of this troublous eſtate, the Ambaſſadours of the Emperour Sigiſmund were come: whyche taking vpon them the rule and gouernāce of the Realme, made a truce or league with the Citie of Prage vnder this condition, that the Caſtle of Wiſſegrad beeing rendred, it ſhould be lawful for thē to ſend Ambaſſadours to yͤ Emperour Sigiſmund to intreat as touching their eſtate, and that Ziſca ſhould render Pelzina & Pieſta, with the other forts which he had taken. Theſe conditions thus agreed vpon and receiued, all the forreine Proteſtants departed out of the Citie, and the Senate of the Citie began to gouerne againe according to their accuſtomed manner, and all things were quieted. Howbeit, yͤ Papiſts which were gone out of yͤ Towne, durſt not returne againe: but ſtill looked for the Emperour, by whoſe preſence they thought they ſhould haue bene ſafe. But this their hope was fruſtrate by meanes of certaine letters which were ſent from the Emperour, wherein it was written that he woulde ſhortly come and rule yͤ kingdome, euen after the ſame order and maner as his father Charles had done before him. Whereby the Proteſtants vnderſtoode that their ſect and Religion ſhould be vtterly baniſhed, which was not begon during the raigne of the ſayd Charles.

About Chriſtmaſſe, the Emperour Sigiſmund came to Brunna a Citie of Morauia, and there he pardoned the Citizens of Prage, vnder condition that they woulde let downe the chaines and barres of the City, and receiue his rulers and magiſtrates. Wherunto the whole city obeied, and the Magiſtrates thereof lifting vp their handes vnto heauen, reioiced at the comming of the new king. But the Emperour turned another way, and wēt vnto Wratiſlauia, the head city of Sileſia, where as a little before, the cōmunalty of the City had ſlaine in an inſurrection, the magiſtrates, which his brother Wēceſlaus had ſet in authority: the principals wherof he beheaded. The newes wherof when they were reported at Prage, the Citizēs being feared by the example of the Wratiſlauians, diſtruſting their pardō, rebelled out of hand, and hauing obteined Cencho on their part, which had the gouernaunce of the Caſtle of Prage, they ſent letters into all the Realme, that no man ſhould ſuffer yͤ Emperour to enter, which was an enemie vnto Boheme, and ſought nothing elſe, but to deſtroy the kingdome: which alſo bound the aunciēt citie of the Prutenitants, vnto order by pledges, and put the Marques of Brandenburge from the Bohemian crowne: and had not onely ſuffered Iohn Hus & Hierome of Prage to be burned at yͤ Councel of Conſtance, but alſo procured the ſame, & with all his endeuour did impugne the doctrine & faith which they taught and folowed. Whileſt theſe things wer thus done. Ziſca hauing giuen ouer Pelzina by cōpoſitiō, was twiſe aſſaulted by his enemies, but through policy he was alwaies victor. rough and vnknowne, his enimies were on horſebacke, and all his ſouldiours on foote, neither could there be any battaile fought, but on foote. Whereupon, when his enemies were alighted from their horſes. Ziſca commaunded the women which cuſtomably followed the hoſt, to caſt their kerchieffes vpon the ground, wherein the horſemen being entangled by their ſpurres, were ſlaine before they could vnloſe their feete.

After this, he went vnto Auſca, a towne ſituate vpon the Riuer Luſinitius, out of which towne Procopius and Vlricius, two brethren Papiſts, had caſt out many Proteſtants. This Towne Ziſca tooke by force of armes the firſt night of Lent, raſed it, and ſet it on fire. He alſo tooke the Caſtle of Litius, which was a mile off, whether as Vlricius was fled, and put Vlricius and all his familie to the ſword, ſauing one only.

The citie of Thabor builded.

Then, forſomuch as he had no walled or fenſed towne to inhabite, he choſe out a certaine place vpon the ſame riuer, which was fenſed by nature, about eight miles from the Citie of Auſca. This place he cōpaſſed in with walles, and commaunded euery man to build them houſes, where they had pitched their tents, and named this City Thabor, and the inhabitants his companions Thaborites, bicauſe their Citie, by all like, was builded vpon the top of ſome hill or mount. This Citie, albeit that it was fenſed with high rockes and cleaues, yet was it compaſſed with a wall and vaumure, and the riuer Luſinitius fenſeth a great part of the towne, the reſt is compaſſed in wyth a great brooke, the which running ſtraight into the riuer Luſinitius, is ſtopped by a great rocke, and driuen backe towards the right hand, all the length of the Citie, and at the further end it ioineth with the great riuer. The way vnto it by land is ſcarſe thirtie foote broade, for it is almoſt an Iland. In this place there was a deepe ditch caſt, and a triple wall made, of ſuch thicknes, yͭ it could not be broken with any engine. The wall was full of towers & forts ſet in their cōuenient & meete places. Ziſca was the firſte that builded the Caſtle, and thoſe that came after him, fortified it, euery man according to his owne deuiſe. At that time the Thaborites had no horſemen amongſt them, vntill ſuch time as Nicholas, maiſter of yͤ mint (whom the Emperour had ſent into Bohemia with a M. horſemen to ſet things in order, & to withſtand the Thaborites lodging all night in a village named Vogize) was ſurpriſed by Ziſca comming vpon him ſodenly in yͤ night, taking away all his horſe and armour, & ſetting fire vpon the village. Then Ziſca taught his ſouldiours to mount on horſeback, to leape, to runne, to turne, to caſt in a ring, ſo that after this he neuer led army without his wings of horſemen.

Prage beſieged of Sigiſmund.

In this meane time Sigiſmundus the Emperour gathering together, yͤ nobles of Sleſia, entred into Boheme, and went vnto Grecium, and frō thence with a great army vnto Cuthna, alluring Cencho with many great and large promiſes, to render vp yͤ Caſtle of Prage vnto him, and there placed himſelfe to annoy the towne. Thus Cencho infamed with double treaſon, returned home. The Citizens of Prage ſent for Ziſca, who ſpeding himſelfe thether with the Thaborites, receiued the citie vnder his gouernance. In the Bohemiās hoſt there was but only two Barons, Hilco Cruſſina of Lituburge, and Hilco of Waldeſtene, with a few other nobles. All the reſidue were of yͤ common people. They went about firſt to ſubdue the Caſtell, which was by nature very ſtrongly fenſed, and could not be won by no other meanes then with famine: wherupon all yͤ paſſages were ſtopped, that no vittailes ſhould be carried in. But the Emperour opened the paſſages by dint of ſword, & when he had geuen vnto them which were beſieged, all things neceſſary, hauing ſente for ayde out of the Empire, he determined ſhortly after to beſiege the Citie. There was in the Emperours campe the Dukes of Saxon, the Marqueſes of Brandenburge, and hys ſonne in law Albert of Auſtrich. The Citie was aſſaulted by the ſpace of vj. weekes. The Emperor Sigiſmūd was crowned in the Metropolitane houſe in the Caſtle, Conradus the Archbiſhop ſolemniſing the ceremonies of the coronation. The city was ſtraightly beſieged. In the meane time the Captaines Roſenſes & Chragery, which had takē the tentes of the Thaborites, being ouercome in battaile by Nicholas Huſſe, whome Ziſca had ſent with parte of hys power for that purpoſe, were driuen out of their tentes, and Gretium the Queenes Citie was alſo taken.

The Marques of Miſnia ouercome in the ſkirmiſh.

Sigiſmund the Emperour rayſeth his ſiege.

There is alſo aboue the Towne of Prage a high hill, which is called Videchon. On this hill had Ziſca ſtrongly planted a garriſon, that his enemies ſhould not poſſeſſe it, with whome the Marques of Miſnia ſkirmiſhing, loſt a great part of his ſouldiours. For when as the Miſnians had gotten the top of the hill, being driuen back into a corner, which was broken & ſteepe, and fierſly ſet vpon, whē as they could no longer withſtād the violent force of their enimies, ſome of them were ſlaine, and ſome falling headlong from the hill, were deſtroied. Whereupon the Emperour Sigiſmund raiſing his ſeege, departed vnto Cuthna and Ziſca with his company departed vnto Thabor, and ſubdued many places: amōgſt which he ſubuerted a town pertaining to the captaine of Viſgrade. During this tyme the Caſtell of Viſgrade was ſtrongly beſieged, whereas, when other vittailes wāted, they were compelled to eate horſe fleſh. Laſt of all, except the Emperour did aide them by a certaine daye, they promiſed to yeld it vp, but vnder this condition, that if the Emperour did come, they within the Caſtle ſhould be no more moleſted.

The Emperour fighting againſt Ziſca, had the ouerthow.

The Abbeis of Pelſina ſubuerted.

The Emperour was preſent before the day, but beeyng ignorant of the truce taken, entring into a ſtraight vnderneath the Caſtle, was ſodenly ſet vpon by the ſouldiours of Prage, where he had a great ouerthrow, and ſo leauing his purpoſe vnperformed, returned backe againe. There were ſlaine in that conflict xiiij. noble men of the Morauians, and of the Hungarians, & other a great number. The Caſtle was deliuered vp vnto them. Whileſt theſe things were in doing, Ziſca toke Boſlaus a captaine, which was ſurnamed Cigneus, by force, in a very ſtrōg towne of his, and brought him vnto his religion. Who a few yeares after, leading the proteſtants hoſt in Auſtria, was wounded before Rhetium, and died. Ther were in the territorie of Pelſina many monaſteries, of yͤ which Ziſca ſubuerted and burned fiue. And forſomuch as yͤ monaſtery of Saint Clare was the ſtrongeſt, there he pitched himſelfe.

Ziſca putteth the Emperour to flight.

Thether alſo came the Emperour with his army: but when Ziſca brought forth his power againſt him, he moſt cowardly fled, and not lōg after, he departed and left Boheme. Then Ziſca went with his army vnto Pelzina: but forſomuch as hee ſawe the Citie ſo fenced, that hee was in doubt of winning the ſame, he went from thence to Commitauia a famous Citie, the which he tooke by force, burning all the Prieſts therein.

Ziſca loſeth hys other eye in battel

Ziſca, albeit he loſt his eyes, yet would not forſake his army.

Afterward, when as he lay before the towne of Raby, and ſtrongly beſieged the ſame, he was ſtricken wyth a ſhaft in the eye, hauing but that one before to ſee withall. From thence, hee was carried to Prage to Phiſicians, whereas he being cured of his wound, and his life ſaued, yet he loſt his ſight, and for all that, he woulde not forſake his army, but ſtill tooke the charge of them.

After this, the garriſons of Prage went vnto Varona, where as there was a great garriſon of the Emperours, & tooke it by force, many being ſlaine of eyther parte. They alſo tooke the towne of Broda in Germany, and ſlue the garriſon, and afterward tooke Cuthna and many other cities by compoſition. Further, when as they ledde their army vnto a town called Pons, which is inhabited by the Miſnians, the Saxons meeting thē by the way, becauſe they durſt not ioine battaile, they returned backe. After all this, yͤ Emperour appointed the Princes electours a day, that at Bartilmewtide, they ſhould with their armie inuade the Weaſt part of Boheme, and he with an hoſt of Hungarians would enter on the Eaſt part. There came vnto his ayde the Archbiſhop of Mentz, the countie Palatine of Rheine, the Dukes of Saxon, the Marques of Brandenburge, & many other Biſhops out of Almaine: all the reſt ſente their aydes. They encamped before the towne of Sozius, a ſtrong & well fenced place, which they could by no meanes ſubdue. The countrey was ſpoiled & waſted round about, and the ſiege continued vntill yͤ feaſt of S. Galle. Then it was broken vp becauſe the Emperour was not come at his day appointed, but he hauyng gathered together a great army of the Hungarians, and Weſt Morauians, about Chriſtmas entred into Boheme, and tooke certaine townes by force, and Cuthna was yelded vnto him. But when Ziſca (although he was blinde) came towardes him, and ſet vpon him, he being afeard, & many of his nobles ſlaine, fled. But firſt he burned Cuthna, which the Thaborites, by meanes of the ſiluer mines, called the powch of Antichriſt. Ziſca purſuing the Emperour a dayes iourney, got great & rich ſpoyle, and taking the towne of Broda by force, ſet it on fire: the which afterward almoſt by the ſpace of xiiij. yeares, remained diſinhabited. The Emperour paſſed by a bridge ouer the riuer of Iglaria. And Piſo a Florentine, which had brought xv. M. horſemen out of Hungary to theſe warres, paſſed ouer the Iſe, the which by the multitude & number of his horſemen being broke, deuoured & deſtroied a great number. Ziſca hauing obteined this victory, would not ſuffer any image or idoll to be in the Churches, neither thought it to be borne withall, that Prieſts ſhoulde miniſter wyth copes or veſtiments: for the which cauſe he was much the

And the Cõſuls of Prage beeing agreeued at the inſolencie of Iohn Premonſtratenſis, called him and nine other of his adherents, whome they ſuppoſed to be the principals of thys faction, into the Councell houſe, as though they woulde conferre with them as touching the common wealth: and when they were come in, they ſlew them, and afterwarde departed home euery man to his owne houſe, thinking the Citie had bene quiet, as though nothing had bin done: But their ſeruaunts beeing not circumſpect inough, waſhing downe the court or yarde, waſhed out alſo the bloud of thoſe that were ſlaine, through the ſinkes or canels: the which being once ſeene, the people vnderſtood what was done. By and by there was a great tumult: the Councell houſe was ſtraightway ouerthrowne, and eleuen of the principall Citizens, whiche were thought to be the authours thereof, were ſlaine, and diuers houſes ſpoiled.

The martirdome of certaine godly Bohemians falſely circũuented and killed with ſword.

Priuie murther at length commeth out.

About the ſame time, the Caſtell of Purgell, wherein the Emperour had left a ſmall garriſon (whether as alſo many Papiſtes with their wiues and children were fled) was thorough negligẽce burned, and thoſe which eſcaped out of the fire, went vnto Pelſina. After this, diuers of the Bohemian Captaines, and yͤ Senate of Prage, ſent Ambaſſadours to Witolde Duke of Lituania, and made hym their king. This did Ziſca and his adherentes gaineſay. This Witold ſent Sigiſmũd Coributus, with two thouſand horſemen into Boheme, who was honourably receiued of the inhabitants of Prage. At his comming they determined to lay ſiege vnto a Caſtle ſituate vppon a hill, which was called Charles ſtone.

Heere Sigiſmundus had left for a garriſon foure Centurions of ſouldiours. The tentes were pitched in iij. places. The ſiege continued vj. moneths, and yͤ aſſault neuer ceaſed day and night. Fiue great ſlyngs threw continually great ſtones ouer yͤ walles, and about two thouſand veſſels, tubbs, or baſkets, filled with dead carcaſes and other excrements, were caſt in amongeſt thoſe which were beſieged: whiche thing did ſo infect them with ſtench, that their teeth did either fall out or were all loſe. Notwithſtãding they bare it out with ſtout courage, & continued their fight vntill the winter, hauing priuily receiued medicine out of Prage, to faſten their teeth againe.

Stench very hurtfull for the teeth.

In the meane time Fridericke the elder, prince of Brãdenburge entring into Boheme with a great power, cauſed them of Prage to raiſe the ſiege. And Witoldus at the requeſt of Wladiſlaus king of Pole, which had talked with the Emperour in the borders of Hungary, called Coributus his vncle with his whole army out of Boheme. Wherupon yͤ Emperour ſuppoſed yͭ the Proteſtãts being deſtitute of foreine aid, would yͤ ſooner do his commandement: but he was farre deceiued therein, for they leading their armies out of Boheme, ſubdued yͤ borderers thereupon adioining. It is alſo reported yͭ Ziſca went into Auſtrich, and whẽ as the huſbandmẽ of the countrey had caried away a great number of their cattell by water into an Iſly of the riuer called Danubius, and by chaunce had left certaine calues and ſwine in their Villages behind them: Ziſca draue them vnto the riuer ſide, and kept thẽ there ſo long, beating them, and cauſing thẽ to roare out and cry, vntill that the cattell feeding in the Iland, hearing yͤ lowing and grunting of the cattell on the other ſide the water, for the deſire of their like, did ſwimme ouer the riuer: by the meanes whereof, he got and draue away a great booty.

An other warlike pollicy of Ziſcha. Stratagema.

About the ſame time the Emperour Sigiſmũdus gaue vnto his ſonne in law Albert Duke of Auſtrich, the countrey of Morauia, becauſe it ſhould not want a ruler. At the ſame time alſo Ericius king of Denmarke, & Peter Infant, brother to yͤ king of Portingal and father of Iames, Cardinall of S. Euſtachius, came vnto yͤ Emperour, being both very expert men in the affaires of warre: which did augment yͤ Emperours hoſt with their aid and power. Wherupon, they ſtraightway pitched their camp before Lutemperge, a towne of Morauia, and continued the ſiege by the ſpace of iij. moneths. There was at that time a certaine Knight at Prage ſurnamed Aqua, which was very rich and of great authority. This mã, forſomuch as he had no child of his owne, adopted vnto him his ſiſters ſonne, named Procopius: whom when he was of meane ſtature and age, he caried with him into France, Spayne, and Italy, and vnto Ieruſalem, and at his returne cauſed hym to be made Prieſt. This man when the Goſpell began to flouriſh in Boheme, tooke part with Ziſca, and forſomuch as he was ſtrong and valiant, and alſo painefull, he was greatly eſteemed.

This Procopius for his valiaunt actes, was afterward called Procopius Magnus, and had committed vnto him the whole charge of the prouince of Morauia, and the defence of the Lutemperges: who receiuing a great power by force (maugre all the whole power which lay in the ſiege) carried vittailes into the towne which was beſieged, and ſo did fruſtrate the Emperours ſiege. The Emperour before this had deliuered vnto the Marqueſſes of Miſnia the bridge and towne of Auſca, vpon the riuer of Albis, that they ſhould fortifie them with their garriſons. Wherupon Ziſca beſieged Auſca, and Fridericke the Marqueſſe of Miſnia, with his brother the Lantzgraue of Turyng, gathering together a greate army out of Saxonia, Turing, Miſnia, and both the Luſaces, determined to reſcue and ayde thoſe which were beſieged.

Procopius Magnus.

The valiant courage of Procopius.

There was a great battaile fought before the Citie, and the victory depẽded long vncertaine, but at laſt it fel on the Proteſtantes part. There were ſlaine in that battaile, the Burgraues of Miſnia or Chyrpogenſes, the Barons of Glychen, and many other nobles, beſide ix. thouſand cõmon ſouldiours, and the Towne of Auſca was taken and vtterly raſed.

The victorie of the proteſtantes.

At the laſt, diſſention riſing betweene Ziſca and them of Prage, they of Prage prepared an army againſt him, wherwith he perceiuing himſelfe ouermatched, fled vnto yͤ Riuer of Albis and was almoſt takẽ, but that he had paſſage through the town of Poggiebras, but they of Prage purſuing the taile of yͤ battaile, ſlue many of his Thaborites. At the length they came vnto certaine hils, whereas Ziſca going into the valley, knowing the ſtraights of the place, that his enimies could not ſpread their army, he commanded his ſtanderd to ſtand ſtill, and exhorting and encouraging his ſouldiours, he gaue them battaile.

The battaile betweene the citie of Prage & Ziſca.

This battaile was very fierce and cruell: but Ziſca hauing the vpper hande, ſlue 3000. of them of Prage, and put the reſt to flight, and ſtraightwaies tooke the Citie of Cuthna by force (which they of Prage had repaired) and ſet it on fire: then withall ſpeed he went with his army to beſiege Prage, and incamped within a bowe ſhoote of the towne. There wer many both in the City, and alſo in his hoſt which grudged ſore at yͤ ſiege: ſome accuſing Ziſca, otherſome them of Prage. There was great tumultes in the campe, yͤ ſouldiours ſaieng that it was not reaſonable, that the City ſhould be ſuppreſſed, which was both the head of the kingdome, and did not diſſent frõ them in opinion: ſaieng that yͤ Bohemians power would ſoone decay, if their enimies ſhould know yͭ they were deuided within themſelues: alſo that they had ſufficient warres agaynſt the Emperour, and that it was but a fooliſh deuiſe to moue warres amongſt themſelues. This talke came vnto the eare of Ziſca, who calling together his armie, ſtandyng vpon a place to be heard, ſpake theſe words.

The noble victory of Ziſca.

Ziſca beſiegeth Prage.

Brethren be yee not agreeued againſt me, neither accuſe hym which hath ſought your health and ſauegard. The victories which ye haue obteined vnder my conduict, are yet freſh in memorie, neither haue I broughte you at anye time vnto any place, from whence you haue not come victours. You are become famous and rich, and I for your ſake haue loſt my ſight, and dwell in darkeneſſe Nothing haue I gotten by all theſe fortunate battailes, but only a vaine name. For you haue I fought, and for you haue I vanquiſhed, neither do I repente me of my trauailes, neyther is my blindneſſe greeuous vnto me, but onely that I can not prouide for you, according to my accuſtomed manner: Neither do I perſecute them of Prage for mine owne cauſe, for it is your bloud that they thirſt and ſeeke for, and not mine. It were but ſmall pleaſure for them to deſtroy me being now an old man and blind: it is your valiantneſſe and ſtoute ſtomackes which they feare. Either muſt you or they periſh: who whileſt they ſeeme to lye in wait for me, do ſeeke after your liues. You muſt rather feare ciuill warres then foreine, and ciuill ſedition ought firſt to be auoided. We will ſubdue Prage, and baniſh the ſeditious Citizens, before the Emperour ſhall haue any newes of this ſedition. And then hauing but a few of his faction left, we may wyth the leſſe feare looke for it: better then if theſe doubtfull Citizens of Prage were ſtill in our campe. But becauſe ye ſhall accuſe me no more, I geue you free libertie to do what you will. If it pleaſe you to ſuffer them of prage to liue in quietneſſe, I will not be againſt it, ſo that there be no treaſon wrought. If you determine to haue warre, I am alſo readie. Looke which part you will decline vnto, Ziſca will be your ayde and helper.

A notable oration of Ziſca to his ſouldiours.

When he had ſpoken theſe words, the ſouldiours minds were changed, and wholly determined to make wars, ſo that they ran by and by to take vp their armour and weapon, to run vnto the walles to prouoke their enemies to fight for the gates of the citie. Ziſca in the meane time prepared all things ready for the aſſault. There is a litle from Pelſina a certain vilage named Rochezana. In this place, there was a child borne of pore and baſe parẽtage, whoſe name was John: he came vnto Prage, and got his liuing there by begging, and learned Grammer & Logick. When he came to mā ſtate, he became yͤ Scholemaſter of a noble mans child, and for ſo much as he was of an excellent wit and ready toung, he was receiued into the Colledge of the poore, and laſt of all being made Prieſt, he began to preach the word of God to the Citizēs of Prage, and was named Iohannes de Rochezana, by the name of the Towne where he was borne. This mā grew to be of great name and authoritie in the towne of Prage. Wherupon when as Ziſca beſieged Prage, he by the conſent of the Citizēs went out into the camp, and reconciled Ziſca againe vnto the Citie.

Peace betweene Ziſca and Prage by the meanes of Iohn de Rochezana.

When as the Emperour perceiued that all things came to paſſe according vnto Ziſca his will and minde, and that vpon him alone the whole ſtate of Boheme did depend, he ſought priuie meanes to recōcile and get Ziſca into his fauour, promiſing him yͤ gouernance of the whole kingdom, the guiding of all his hoſtes & armies, and great yearely reuenues, if he would proclaime him King, and cauſe the Cities to be ſworne vnto him. Vpō which cōditions, whē as Ziſca for the performance of the couenants went vnto the Emperour being on his iourney at the Caſtle of Priſcouia, he was ſtricken with ſickneſſe and died.

The Emperour glad to be recōciled with Ziſca.

It is reported, that when he was demaunded beyng ſicke, in what place he would be buried, he commaunded the ſkinne to be pulled off from his dead carkaſe, and the fleſh to bee caſt vnto the foules and beaſtes, and that a drumme ſhould be made of his ſkinne, which they ſhould vſe in their battailes, affirming, that as ſoone as their enimies ſhould heare the ſound of that drumme, they would not abide, but take their flight. The Thaborites deſpiſing all other Images, yet ſet vp the Picture of Ziſca ouer the gates of the Citie.

¶ The Epitaphe of Iohn Ziſca, the valiant Captaine of the Bohemians.

The Epitaphe of Ziſca.

I John Ziſca, not inferiour to any Emperour or Captain in warlike policie, a ſeueare puniſher of the pride and auarice of the Clergy, and a defender of my countrey, do lie heere. That which Appius Claudius by geuing good counſell, and M. Furius Camillus by valiantneſſe did for the Romaines: the ſame I being blinde, haue done for my Bohemians. I neuer ſlacked oportunitie of battaile, neither did fortune at any time faile me. I being blinde, did foreſee all oportunitie of well ordering or doing my buſineſſe. Eleuen times in ioining battaile, I went victour out of the field. I ſeemed to haue worthely defended the cauſe of the miſerable and hungry, againſt the delicate, fatte, and glotonous Prieſts, and for that cauſe to haue receiued help at the hande of God. If their enuy had not let it, without doubt I had deſerued to be numbred amongſt the moſt famous men. Notwithſtanding my bones lye heere in this halowed place, euen in deſpite of the Pope.

Ziſca eleuen times, victor in the fielde.

¶ Iohn Ziſca a Bohemian, enemy to all wicked and couetous Prieſtes, but with a godly zeale.

And thus haue you the actes and doings of this worthy Ziſca, and other Bohemians, which for the more credite we haue drawne out of Æneas Syluius, onely his rayling tearmes excepted, which we haue heere ſuppreſſed.

All this while the Emperour with the whole power of the Germaines, were not ſo buſie on yͤ one ſide, but Martin the Pope was as much occupied on the other ſide: who about the ſame time directed downe a terrible Bull, full of all poiſon to all Byſhops and Archbyſhops, agaynſt all ſuch as tooke any part or ſide with Wickleffe, John Hus, Hierome, or with their doctrine and opinions. The copie of which Bull, which I found in an olde written monument, I wiſh the reader thoroughly to peruſe, wherein he ſhall ſee the Pope to poure out at once all his poiſon.

✻ The Bull of Pope Martine directed foorth againſt the followers of Iohn Wickliffe of England, of Iohn Huſſe of Boheme, and Hierome of Prage.

Pope Martins bloudy bull, to all Byſhops and Archbiſhops.

Martine Biſhop, the ſeruant of Gods ſeruants, to our reuerend brethren the Archbiſhops of Salzeburgen, Gueznen, and Pragē, & to the Biſhops of Olumcen, Luthomuſlen, Bambergen, Miſnen, Patauiē, Vratiſlauien, Ratiſponen. Cra. ouien, Poznamen, and Nitricn, & alſo to our beloued children the Inquiſitours appointed of the Prelates aboue recited, or where elſe ſoeuer, vnto whome theſe preſent letters ſhall come, greeting, and Apoſtolicall benediction. Amongſt all other paſtorall cares wherewith we are oppreſſed, this chefly and ſpecially doth inforce vs, that heretikes with their falſe doctrine and errours, being vtterly expulſed from amōgſt the cōpany of Chriſten mē, and rooted out (ſo farre forth as God will make vs able to do) the right and Catholike faith may remaine ſound and vndefiled: and that all Chriſtian people, immoueable and iuiolate, may ſtande and abide in the ſinceritie of the ſame fayth, the whole vayle of obſcuritie being remoued. But lately in diuers places of yͤ world, but eſpecially in Bohemia, and the Dukedome of Morauia, and in the ſtraights adioining thereunto, certaine Archheretickes haue riſen and ſprong vp, not againſt one only, but againſt diuers & ſundry documēts of the Catholike faith, being landlopers ſchiſmatikes, and ſeditious perſons, fraught with diueliſh pride & woluiſh madnes, deceiued by the ſubtlety of Sathan, and frō one euill vanity brought to a worſe. Who although they roſe vp & ſprang in diuers parts of yͤ world, yet agreed they all in one, hauing their tailes as it were knit together: to wit, John Wickliffe of England, J. Hus of Bohemia, & Hierome of Prage of damnable memorie, who drew with thē no ſmall nūber to miſerable ruine and infidelitie. For when as thoſe & ſuch like peſtiferous perſons did in yͤ beginning of their poiſoned doctrine, obſtinately ſow and ſpread abroad peruerſe & falſe opinions, yͤ prelates who had the regiment & execution of the iudiciall power, like dumme dogs, not able to barke, neither yet reuenging ſpeedely with the Apoſtle, all ſuch diſobediēce, nor regarding corporally to caſt out of the lords houſe (as they were enioined by yͤ canons) thoſe ſubtill and peſtilēt Archheretickes, and their woluiſh fury and cruelty, with all expedition, but ſuffering their falſe and pernicious doctrine negligētly, by their ouerlong delaies, to growe and waxe ſtrōg: a great multitude of people in ſtead of true doctrine receiued thoſe things, which they did lōg falſly, perniciouſly and damnably ſow among them, and geuing credite vnto them, fell from the right faith, and are intangled (the more pitie) in the foule errors of Paganiſme.

All theſe errours and hereſies be, for that they ſpeke againſt the pride of prelates and their exceſſiue dignities.

In ſo much, that thoſe Archheretickes, and ſuche as ſpring of them, haue infected the Catholicke flock of Chriſt in diuers climates of the world and parts bordering vpon the ſame, and haue cauſed them to putrifie in the filthie dunghill of their lies. Wherefore the generell Synode of Conſtance, was compelled with Saint Auguſtine to exclaime againſt ſo great and ruinous a plague of faythfull men, and of the ſound and true faith it ſelfe, ſaieng: What ſhall the Soueraigne medicine of the Church do, wyth motherly loue ſeeking the health of hir ſheepe, chafing as it were, amongſt a companie of men franticke, and hauing the diſeaſe of the Lethargie? What? ſhall ſhe deſiſt and leaue off hir good purpoſe? No not ſo. But rather let hir, if there be no remedie, be ſharpe to both theſe ſorts, which are the greeuous enemies of her wombe. For the Phiſition is ſharpe vnto the man beſtraught and raging in his frenſie, and yet is he a father to his owne rude and vnmanerly ſonne, in binding the one, in beating the other, by ſhewing therein his great loue vnto them both. But if they be negligent, and ſuffer them to periſh (ſayth Auguſtine) this manſuetude is rather to be ſuppoſed falſe crueltie.

All be Pagans with the Pope, that like not his ſuperſtitious and idolatrous traditions.

A great difference betweene a louing mother and the frantike whore of Babilon.

And therefore the foreſaide Synode, to the glory of almighty God, and preſeruation of his catholicke faith, and augmenting of Chriſtian religion, and for the ſaluation of mens ſoules: hath corporally reiected and caſt forth of the houſhold of God, the foreſaid J. Wicklieffe, J. Hus, and Jerome: who amongſt other things, did beleeue, preach, teach, and maintaine of the Sacrament of the aultar, and other ſacramēts of the church & articles of the faith, cōtrary to that yͤ holy Church of Rome beleueth, holdeth, preacheth and teacheth, & haue preſumed obſtinately to preach, teach, hold, and beleue many other moe, to the damnation of themſelues and of others: and the ſayde Synode hath ſeparated the ſame, as obſtinate and malipert heretickes from the Communion of the faithfull people, and haue declared them to be ſpiritually throwne forth: and many other things both wholeſome & profitable hath the ſame Councell as touching the premiſſes, ſtabliſhed and decreed, whereby they, which by the meanes of thoſe Archheretikes, and by their falſe doctrine, haue ſpiritually departed from the Lords houſe, may by the canonicall rules be reduced to the ſtraight path of truth and veritie.

And moreouer (as we to our great griefe do heare) not only in yͤ kingdome of Bohemia, and Dukedome of Morauia and other places aboue recited, but alſo in certaine parts and prouinces neere adioining and bordering vpon the ſame, there be many other of yͤ ſecretaries and followers of the foreſayd Archheritickes and hereticall opinions caſting behind their backes as well the feare of God, as yͤ ſhame of the world, neither receiuing fruit of conuerſion & repentaunce by the miſerable deſtruction of the foreſayde Iohn Hus and Hierome, but as men drowned in the dungeon of their ſinnes, ceaſe not to blaſpheme the Lord God taking his name in vayne (whoſe minds the father of lies hath damnably blinded) and do read and ſtudy the foreſaid bookes or workes, contayning hereſies & errours, being lately by the foreſayd Synode condẽned to be burned: alſo to the perill of themſelues and many other ſimple men, & againſt the ſtatutes, decrees, and ordinaunces in the Synode aforeſayd, and the Canonicall ſanctions, do preſume to preach & teach the ſame, to the great perill of ſoules, the derogation of the Catholicke fayth, and ſclaunder of many other beſides. We therfore conſidering that errour, when it is not reliſted, ſeemeth to be allowed and liked, and hauing a deſire to reſiſt ſuch euill and pernicious errours, and vtterly roote them out from amongſt the companie of faythfull chriſtians, eſpecially frõ the afore recited places of Bohemia, Morauia, and other ſtraights and Iſlands ioyning and bordering vpon the ſame, leaſt they ſhold ſtretch out & enlarge their limites: we will and commaund your diſcretions by our letters Apoſtolicall, the holy Councell of Cõſtance approuing and allowing the ſame, that you that are Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and other of the clergy, and euery one of you by himſelf or by an other or others, being graue and fit perſons to haue ſpirituall iuriſdiction: do ſee that al and ſinguler perſons, of what dignitie, office, preeminence ſtate, or conditiõ ſo euer they be, and by what name ſoeuer they are knowne, which ſhall preſume otherwiſe to teache preach, or obſerue, touching the moſt high and excelent, the moſt wholeſome and ſuperadmirable Sacrament of the bloud of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſte, or els of the Sacrament of Baptiſme, confeſſion of ſinnes, penaunce for ſins and extreme vnction, or els of any other Sacramentes of the Church, & articles of the faith, then that, which yͤ right holy & vniuerſal church of Rome doth hold, teach, preach, & obſerue: or els yͭ ſhall preſume obſtinately by any wayes or meanes, priuily, or apertly, to hold, beleue, and teach the Articles, bookes, or doctrine of the foreſayd Archhereticks Iohn wickleffe, Iohn Hus, & Hieronimus of Prage, being by the foreſayd Synode of Conſtaunce with theyr authours (as is ſayd) damned and condemned, or dare preſume publikly or priuily to allow or commend in any wiſe yͤ death and end of yͤ ſaid archheretiks, or of any other their receiuers, ayders and fauourers, in the fauour or ſupportation of the foreſayd errors, as alſo their beleuers and adherentes: that then as before, you ſee and cauſe them and euery of them to be moſt ſeuerly puniſhed, & that you iudge and geue ſentence vpon them as hereticks, and that as arrant hereticks you leaue them to the ſecular court or power. Let the receiuers alſo, and fauourers and defenders of ſuch moſt peſtiferous perſons, notwithſtanding they neyther beleue, fauour, nor haue deuotion, towardes their errors but happely ſhal receaue or entertain ſuch peſtiferous perſons, becauſe of carnall affection, or friendly loue, beſides yͤ puniſhmene due vnto thẽ by both lawes, ouer and aboue the ſame puniſhment, by competent iudges be ſo afflicted, & for ſo haynous actes of theirs, with ſo ſeuere payn & puniſhment excruciated, that the ſame may be to other in like caſe offending, an example of terrour: that at the leaſt, thoſe whome the feare of God by no meanes may reuoke from ſuch euill doing, yet the ſeueritie of this our diſcipline may force and conſtrayne.

As touching the third ſort, which ſhalbe any maner of wayes infected with this damnable ſect, and ſhall after cõpetent admonition repẽt and amend themſelues of ſuch errours and ſectes aforeſayd, and will returne agayn into the lap and vnitie of our holy mother the Churche, & fully acknowledge and confeſſe the Catholike fayth: towardes them let the ſeueritie of iuſtice, as the quallitie of the facte ſhall require, be ſomewhat tempered with a taſt of mercy.

* And furthermore, we will and commaund, that by thys our authoritie Apoſtolicall, ye exhort and admoniſh al the profeſſours of the catholicke fayth, as Emperours, kings, Dukes, Princes, Marqueſſes, Earles, Barons, Knights and other Magiſtrates, Rectors, Conſuls, Proconſuls, Shires, Countries and Vniuerſities of the kingdomes, Prouinces, Cities, otwnes, Caſtles, villages, their lands & other places, & al other executing tẽporal iuriſdiction according to the form & exigence of the law, yͭ they expell out of their kingdoms, prouincies, Cities, towns, caſtles, villages & lands, & other places, al & all maner of ſuche heretickes, according to the effect and tenour of the Councell of Laterane, beginning, Sicut ait eccleſia. &c. yͭ thoſe whom publikely and manifeſtly by the euidence of their deedes, ſhall be knowne to be ſuch as like ſicke and ſcabed ſheepe infect the Lords flock, they expell and baniſh till ſuch tyme as from vs or you or els other eccleſiaſticall iudges or Inquiſitours holding the fayth and communion of the holye church of Rome, they ſhall receiue other order and countermaund: and that they ſuffer no ſuch within theyr ſhyres and circuites, to preach or to keepe either houſe or familye either yet to vſe any handicrafte or occupations or other trades of merchaundiſe, or els to ſolace themſelues anye wayes, or frequent the company of Chriſten men.

And furthermore if ſuche publike and knowne heretiques ſhall chaunce to dye (although not ſo denounced by the Church) yet in this ſo great a crime, let hym and them want Chriſtian buriall, and let no offeringes or oblations be made for them nor receiued. Hys goodes and ſubſtance alſo frõ yͤ time of his death, according to yͤ Canonical ſanctions being confiſcate, let no ſuch enioy them to whõ they appertayne, till that by the eccleſiaſticall iudges hauing power and authoritie in this behalfe, ſentence vpon that his or their crime of hereſie, be declared, and promulgate, & let ſuch owners as be found ſuſpect or noted with anye ſuche ſuſpition of hereſie, before a competent and eccleſiaſticall iudge, according to the conſideration and exigence of that ſuſpicion, and according to the quallitie of the perſon, by yͤ arbitrement of ſuch a iudge: ſhew and declare hys proper & own innocẽcy with deuotion as beſeemeth in that behalf, And if in hys purgation, being Canonically interdicted, he do fayle, or be not able Canonically to make his purgation, or that he refuſe to take hys othe by damnable obſtinacie, to make ſuche purgation: then let him be condemned as an hereticke. But ſuch as thorough negligence or thorough ſlothfulnes, ſhall omit to ſhew their ſayd innocencie and to make ſuch purgation, let them be excommunicate, and ſo long put out from the company of Chriſten men, til yͭ they ſhall make condigne ſatiſfactiõ: ſo that if by the ſpace of one whole yeare they ſhall remayne in ſuch excommunication, then let them as heretickes be condẽned.

And further, if any ſhalbe found culpable in any point of the foreſayd peſtiferous doctrine of the Archheretickes aforeſayd, or in any Article thereof, whether it be by the reporte of the ſeditious, or els well diſpoſed: let them yet be puniſhed, according to the Canons. If onely through infamy and ſuſpition of the foreſaid Articles or any of them, any man ſhalbe found ſuſpect, & in his purgation Canonicall for this thing being interdicted, ſhall fayle: let hym be accompted as a man conuict, & as a conuict perſon by the Canons let him be puniſhed.

And furthermore we innouating and putting in execution the Canon of our predeceſſour of happy memory pope Boniface the 8. which beginneth thus: Vt inquiſitionis negocium. &c. In exhorting wiſe require and alſo commaund all temporall potentates, Lordes & Iudges afore recited, by whatſoeuer dignities, offices, and names they are knowen: that as they deſire to be had, eſtemed, & counted for the faythfull members and children of the Church, and do reioyce in the name of Chriſt: ſo in likewiſe for the defẽce of the ſame faith, they wil obey, intẽd, giue their ayd, and fauorable help, to you that are Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and Eccleſiaſtical men, inquiſitours of al hereticall prauitie, and other Iudges and Eccleſiaſticall perſons by you hereunto, as aforeſayd, appoynted (holdyng the fayth and communiõ of our holy mother the church) for the ſearching out, taking, & ſafe cuſtody, of all the foreſayde heretickes, their beleuers, their fauorers, their receiuers, and their defenders, when ſo euer they ſhalbe therunto of them required.

Et facies omnes puſillos, et magnos, & diuites, et pauperes, et ſeruos, accipere characterem in manu ſua dextra. 1. And he ſhall make both little and great, riche and poore, free & bond to take his character in their right hand &c. Apoc. 13.

And that they bring and cauſe to be brought (al delay ſet aparte) the foreſayde peſtiferous perſons ſo ſeeking to deſtroy others with them, into ſuche ſafe keeping and pryſons, as by you the Archbyſhops, Byſhops, Clergie, and Inquiſitors aforeſaid, are to be appointed, or els vnto ſuch other place or places, as eyther you or they ſhal commaũd within any of their dominions, gouernements, and rectories, where they by catholicke men, that is, by you the Archbiſhops, byſhops, the Clergy, and inquiſitours, or any other that ſhalbe by you appointed, or are already appointed by any of you, may be holden and kept in ſafe keping, putting them in fetters, ſhackles, boltes, and manacles of yrõ vnder moſt ſtraight cuſtody for eſcaping away, tyll ſuche tyme as all that buſines which belongeth vnto them, be by the iudgement of the church finiſhed and determined, and that of ſuche hereſie, by a competent eccleſiaſticall iudge (which firmely holdeth the faith and communiõ of the ſaid holy church of Rome) they be cõdemned.

Satan ratteleth his chaines.

The reſidue, let the foreſayde temporall Lordes, Rectours, Iudges, or other their officers and Purſiuauntes, take amongeſt them, with condigne deathes without anye delay to puniſh. But fearing leaſt to the preiudice & ſclander of the foreſayd catholicke fayth and religion, thorough the pretext of ignoraunce, any man herein ſhoulde be circumuented, or that any ſubtile and craftie men ſhould vnder the vayle of friuolous excuſe, cloke and diſſēble in thys matter, and that as touching the cōuincing or apprehending of the foreſaid hereticks, their receiuours & defēdors, fauourers, beleeuers and adherentes, and alſo of ſuche as are ſuſpect of hereſie, and with ſuche like peruerſe doctrine in any wiſe ſpotted, we might geue more perfect inſtruction: Therfore as well to the kingdom of Bohemia & parts neare adioining to the ſame as all other where this ſuperſtitious doctrine firſt began to ſpread, we haue thought it good to ſend the articles here vnder written concerning yͤ ſecte of thoſe Archheretickes, for the better direction of the foreſayd Catholicke fayth.

Touching which articles, by vertue of holy obedience we charge and commaund you and all other Archbiſhops and Biſhops, all maner of commiſſaries and inquiſitours that euery of them within the Dioces and limites of theyr iuriſdiction, & alſo in yͤ foreſaid kingdom & dukedome and places neare adioyning, although the ſame places be beyond the ſame their iuriſdiction: in the fauour of the catholicke faith, do geue moſt dilligent and vigilant care about the extirpation and correction of thoſe erroures, archhereſies, and moſt peſtiferous ſect aforeſayd: and alſo that they compell all diffamed perſons and ſuſpecte of ſo peſtiferous a contagion, whether it be vnder the penaltie of the crime confeſſed, or of excommunication, ſuſpenſion or interdicte, or any other formidable payne canonicall or legall, when and whereſoeuer it ſhall ſeeme good to them, and as the quallitie of the facte requireth, by an othe corporally taken either vpon yͤ holy Euangeliſtes, or vpon the reliques of Saintes, or vpon the image of the crucifixe, according to the obſeruauntes of certayne places, and accordyng to the interrogatories, to make conuenient anſwere to euery article within written. For we intend agaynſt all and ſingular archbiſhops, Byſhops, Eccleſiaſticall perſons, or inquiſitours, which ſhall ſhew themſelues negligent and remiſſe in the extirpation of the leauen of this hereticall prauitie, and purging their territories, dioces, and places to them appoynted, of ſuch euill and wicked men: to proceed and to cauſe to be proceeded, vnto the deprauation and depoſition of their pontificall dignities, and ſhall ſubſtitute ſuch other in their places, which can and may be able to cōfound the ſayd hereticall prauitie, and procede to further paynes agaynſt ſuch by the lawe limitted, and vnto other yet more grieuous (if neede require) we our ſelues will procede and cauſe to be proceeded, according as the party his fact, and filthines of his crime committed, ſhall deſerue The tenour of thoſe articles wherof we haue made mention in this our owne writing are in wordes as follow.

The olde maner of the popiſhe othe.

✻ The articles of Iohn Hus to be inquired vpon.

1, There is one onely vniuerſall Church, whiche is the vniuerſitie of the predeſtinate, as ſhall after be declared.

3. The vniuerſall Church is onely one: as there is one vniuerſitie of thoſe that are predeſtinate.

3. Paule was neuer a member of the Deuill, although he did certayne actes like vnto the actes of the Church malignant.

4. The reprobate are not partes of the Churche, for that no part of the ſame finally falleth from her, becauſe that the charitie of predeſtination, which bindeth the ſame Church together, neuer fayleth.

Speaking of the inuiſible church the article is true.

5. The two natures (that is) the Diuinitie, and the humanitie, bee one Chriſt.

6. The reprobate, although he be ſometime in grace, according to preſent iuſtice, yet is he neuer a part of the holy Churche: and the predeſtination is euer a member of the Churche, although ſometime he fall from grace aduentitia, but not from grace of predeſtinatiō: euer taking the church for the conuocation of the predeſtinate whether they be in grace or not according to preſent iuſtice. And after this ſort the church is an article of our beliefe.

This article ſeemeth to be wraſted out of the wordes of Hierome of Prage.

7. Peter is not, nor neuer was the head of the holy catholicke Church.

8. Prieſtes, liuing viciouſly, doe defile the authoritie of prieſthood, and ſo, as vnfaythfull Children do vnfaythfully beleue of the ſeuen ſacraments, of the keyes of yͤ Church of offices, of Cenſures, of ceremonies, of the worſhippyng of reliques: indulgences, orders, and other holy things of the Church.

9. The papill dignitie came and grew from the Emperor and hys gouernement and inſtitution, ſprang from the emperours gouernment.

The papall dignitie touched.

10. No man can reaſonably affirme eyther of himſelfe or other that he is the head of any particular Churche, or that the biſhop of Rome, is the head of the Church of Rome.

11. A man ought not to beleue, that he which is byſhop of Rome is the head of euery particuler Churche, vnles god haue predeſtinate hym.

12. None is the vicare of Chriſt, or els of Peter, vnleſſe he follow him in maners and conditions, ſeing that there is no other following more pertinent, nor otherwiſe apte to receiue of God this power procuratory. For vnto yͤ office of a vicegerent of Chriſt is required, the conformitie of maners and the authoritie of the inſtitutor.

13. The pope is not the manifeſt and true ſucceſſor of Peter the Prince of the Apoſtles, if he liue in maners contrary to Peter: and if he hunt after auarice, then is he the vicar of Iudas Iſcarioth. And likewiſe the Cardinalles be not the true and manifeſt ſucceſſors of the Colledge of the other Apoſtles of Chriſt, vnles they lyue according to the maner of the Apoſtles, keeping the commaundementes & counſels of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt.

14. The Doctors alledging, that if a man, which will not be amended by the Eccleſiaſticall cenſures, is to be deliuered to the ſecular powers: do follow in this poynt, the byſhops, Scribes and Phariſeis, that deliuered Chriſt to the ſecular power (ſaying it is not lawfull for vs to kill anye man) becauſe he would not obey them in all thinges, and that ſuch be greater homicides then Pilate.

15. The eccleſiaſticall obedience is ſuch an obedience as yͤ Prieſtes of the church haue found out, beſides the expreſſe authoritie of the ſcripture. The immediate deuiſion of humaine works, is yͭ they be either vertuous or vicious, & if a man be vicious, and doth any thyng, then doth he it viciouſly, & if he be vertuous, and doth any thinge, thē doth he it vertuouſly. For like as vice which is called a great offēce or mortall ſin, doth ſtayne all yͤ doyngs of a vicious man: ſo vertue doth quicken all the doinges of a vertuous man.

16. A prieſt of God liuing after hys lawe, and hauing the knowledge of the ſcripture, and a deſire to ediſy the people ought to preach, notwithſtanding any excommunication, pretended of the pope, And further, if the pope, or anye other magiſtrate doeth forbid a prieſt ſo diſpoſed to preache, he ought not to be obedient vnto him. For euery one that taketh vpō him the order of prieſthood, receiueth in charge the office of a preacher: and of that burden ought he well to diſcharge himſelfe, any excommunication againſt him pretended in any wiſe notwithſtanding.

17. By the Cenſures eccleſiaſticall, as of excommunication, ſuſpending, and interdicte, the clergy to their owne aduauncement cauſe the lay people to ayd them: they multiply their auarice, they defend their malice, and prepare the way to Antichriſt. And it is an euident ſigne that ſuch cenſures procede from Antichriſt, which in their proces they call Fulminationes, that is, their thunderboltes wherewith the clergy principally proceedeth agaynſt thoſe that declare the wickednes of Antichriſt, who ſo greatly for hys owne commoditie hath abuſed them.

18. If the pope be euill, eſpecially if he be a reprobate, thē is he with Iudas a very deuill, a theefe and the ſonne of perdition, and is not the head of the holy Church militant nor any member of the ſame.

19. The grace of predeſtination is the band, wherwith the body of the church and euery member of the ſame is indiſſolubly ioyned to their head Chriſt.

20. The pope or Prelate that is euill and a reprobate, is a Paſtor in name, and not in deede, yea he is a theefe and a robber in very deede.

21. The P. ought not to be called the moſt holy one for his office ſake, for then ought a king to be called by hys office yͤ moſt holy one: and hangmen with other ſuch officers alſo were to be called holye, yea the deuill hymſelfe ought to be called holy, for aſmuch as he is Gods officer.

Iohn Hus expoundeth this article with this diſtinct. non ratione meriti, ſed ratione officii.

22. If the pope liue contrary vnto Chriſt, although he clime vp by the right and lawfull election according to the common cuſtome of men: yet notwithſtanding ſhoulde he otherwiſe clime then by Chriſt, yea though wee admitte that he ſhoulde enter by the election principally made by God. For Iudas Iſcarioth was lawfully elect of GOD Chriſt Ieſus to hys byſhopricke, and yet came not he the ſame way he ought to do vnto the ſhepefold.

Iohn Hus declareth his mind touching this article ſufficiently before.

23 The condemnation of 45. articles of Iohn wickleffe by the doctors made, is vnreaſonable, wicked and naught, & the cauſe by them alledged is fayned that is, that none of them are Catholicke, but euery on of them hereticall, erroneous, or ſlaunderous.

14. Not for that the electours, or the moſt part of thē haue conſented together with liuely voyce according to the cuſtome of men vpon the perſon of any, therfore, that perſon is lawfully elect, or therfore is the true and manifeſt ſucceſſors & vicar of Peter the Apoſtle, or of any other yͤ Apoſtles in yͤ eccleſiaſtical office. wherfore, whether yͤ electors haue either wel or euil made their election, it behoueth vs to beleue the ſame, by the workes of him that is elected. For in that that euery one that worketh more meritoriouſly to the profite of the Church, he hath ſo much the more greater authoritie from God.

Election maketh not the ſucceſſor of Pet. but immitation.

25. There is not ſo muche as one ſparke of appearaunce that there ought to be one head, ruling and gouerning the church in ſpirituall cauſes, which ſhould alwayes be conuerſaunt in the church militant. For Chriſt without anye ſuch monſtrous heds, by his true diſciples ſparſed through the whole world could better a great deale rule his church.

One head of the vniuerſall church beſide Chriſt hath no foundation in all ſcripture.

26. The Apoſtles and faythfull prieſts of God, haue right worthily in al thinges neceſſary to ſaluation gouerned the church before the popes office tooke place, and ſo might they doe agayne, by like poſſibilitie vntill Chriſt came to iudgement, if the popes office ſhould fayle.

Let euery one that is ſuſpected in the foreſayd articles, or els otherwiſe found with aſſertion of them, Be examined in maner and forme as followeth.

The forme and maner of the popes inquiſition.

IN primis, whether he knew John wicleffe of Englande, John Hus of Bohemia, and Hierome of Prage, or anye of them, and how he came by the knowledge of them, whither that during the liues of them or any of them, they had eyther bene conuerſant with them, or found any frendſhip at their handes.

2. Item, whether he knowing them or any of them to be excommunicate, did willingly participate with them: eſteming & affirming the ſame their participaciõ to be no ſin.

3. Item, whither that after their deathes, he euer prayed for them or any of them, openly or priuily, doing any work of mercy for them, affirming them to be either ſaintes, or els to be ſaued.

Hereſie to pray for I. Wickliffe or I. Hus, &c.

4. Item, whether he thought them or anye of them to be Saintes, or whether that euer he ſpake ſuch wordes, and whether euer he did exhibite any worſhippe vnto them as vnto ſaintes.

5. Item, whether he beleue, hold, and affirme, that euery generall councell, as alſo the Councell of Conſtance, doth repreſent the vniuerſall Church.

6. Item, whether he doth beleue that that which the holy Councell of Conſtance: repreſenting the vniuerſall church hath and doth alow in the fauour of the fayth, and ſaluatiõ of ſoules, is to be approued and allowed of all the faythfull Chriſtians: and that whatſoeuer the ſame Councell hath condemned, and doth condemne to be contrary both to the fayth and to all good men, is to beleued, holden, and affirmed for condemned or not.

Hereſie not to beleeue the councell of Conſtãce

7. Item, whether he beleueth that the condemnations of John Hus, John wickleffe, and Hierome of Prage, made as well vpon their perſons, as their bookes and doctrine by the holy generall Councell of Conſtance, be rightly & iuſtly made, and of euery good Catholicke man, are ſo to be holden and affirmed, or not.

8. Item, whether he beleue, hold, and affirme, that John wickleffe of England, John Hus of Bohemia, and Hierome of Prage, were heretickes or not, and for heretickes to be nominated & preached, yea or not, and whether theyr bookes and doctrines were and be peruerſe or not, for the which together with their pertinacie, they were condemned by the holye ſacred Councell of Conſtaunce for heretiques.

9. Itẽ, whether he haue in his cuſtody any treatiſes, ſmal workes, Epiſtles, or other writinges in what language or tongue ſoeuer, ſet forth and tranſlated by any of theſe heretickes John wickleffe, John Hus, and Hierome or any other of their falſe Diſciples and followers, that he may deliuer them to the ordinaries of that place, or his commiſſary, or to the inquiſitours, vpon hys othe. And if he ſay that he hath no ſuche writing about him, but yͭ they are in ſome other place: that then you ſweare him to bring the ſame before his Ordinary or other aforenamed, within a certayne time to him prefixed.

10. Item, whether he knoweth any that hath yͤ treatiſes, works, Epiſtles, or anye other writinges of the aforeſayd John wickleffe, John Hus, and Hierome, in whatſouer tong they are made or tranſlated, and that he detect & manifeſt the ſame, for the purgation of their fayth and execution of iuſtice.

11. Item, eſpecially let the learned be examined, whether he beleueth that the ſentence of the holy Councell of Conſtance vpon the 45. articles of John wickleffe, and the 30. Articles of John Hus be not Catholicke: which ſayth that ſome of them are notorious hereticall, ſome erroneous, other ſome blaſphemous, ſome ſlaunderous, ſome raſh and ſeditious, ſome offenſiue to godly eares.

12. Item, whether he beleeueth and affirmeth, that in no caſe it is lawfull for a man to ſweare.

13. Item, whether he beleueth, that at the commaundement of a iudge or any other, it is lawfull to take an oth to tell the truth in anye conuenient cauſe, although it be but purging of an infamy or not.

14. Item, whether he beleueth that periury wittingly cõmitted, vppon what cauſe ſoeuer, whether it be for yͤ ſafegard of hys owne life, or of any other mans lyfe, (yea, although it be in the cauſe and defence of the fayth) be a ſinne or not.

14. Item, whether a man contemning purpoſedly the rites of the Churche, and the ceremonies of exorciſme of Cathechiſme, and the conſecration of the water of Baptiſme, be deadly ſinne or not.

16. Item, whether he beleue, that after the conſecration of the prieſt in the ſacrament of the aultar vnder the figure of bread and wyne, be no materiall bread and wyne: but in al poyntes, the ſame very Chriſt which was crucified vppon the Croſſe, and ſitteth vpon the right hand of the father.

17. Item, whether he beleeue, that after the conſecration made by the prieſt vnder the onely forme of bread and beſides the forme of wyne, be the very fleſh of Chriſt and hys bloud, hys ſoule and hys deitie, and ſo whole Chriſt as he is, and in likewiſe, vnder the forme of wine without the forme of bread, bee the very fleſhe of Chriſt and hys very bloud, his ſoule, and deitie, and ſo whole Chriſt, & the ſame body abſolutely vnder euery one of thoſe kinds ſingularly.

18. Item, whether he doth beleue, that the cuſtome of houſeling of the lay people vnder the forme of bread onely, obſerued of the vniuerſall Church, and allowed by the onely Councell of Conſtance, be to be vſed, and not without the authoritie of the Churche, at mens pleaſures to be altered, and that they that obſtinately affirme the contrary to this, are to be puniſhed as heretickes, or not.

Hereſie to miniſter in both kindes.

19. Item, whether he beleue that thoſe whiche contemne the receiuing of the ſacramentes of confirmation, or extreme vnction, or els the ſolemniſation of matrimony, cõmit deadly ſinne or not.

20. Item, whether he beleeue, that a Chriſtian man, ouer and beſides the contrition of hart, being licenſed of a conuenient prieſt, is bound to confeſſe himſelfe only to a prieſt and not to any lay man, be he neuer ſo deuout or good, vpon the neceſſitie of ſaluation.

21. Item, whether he beleue, that in the caſes before put, a prieſt may abſolue a ſinner confeſſing himſelf, and being contrite, from all ſinnes and enioyne him penaunce for the ſame.

22. Item, whether he beleueth, that an euill Prieſt, with due maner and forme, and with the intentiõ of doing, doth verily conſecrate, doth verily abſolue, doth verily baptiſe and doth verily diſpoſe all other ſacramentes euen as the Church doth.

23. Item, whether he beleeue that Saint Peter was the Vicar of Chriſt, hauing power to bynde and to loſe vppon the earth.

24. Item, whether he beleue that the Pope being canonically elect, whiche for the tyme ſhall be, by that name expreſly be the ſucceſſor of Peter or not, hauing ſupreme authoritie in the Church of God.

25. Item, whether he beleue that the authoritie of iuriſdiction of the Pope, an archbiſhop or a Biſhop in binding & looſing, be more then the authorititie of a ſimple prieſt or not although he haue charge of ſoules.

26. Item, whether he beleue, that the pope may vpon a iuſt and good cauſe, geue indulgẽces and remiſſion of ſins to all Chriſtian men, being verily contrite and confeſſed, eſpecially to thoſe that go on pilgrimage to holy places and good deedes.

27. Item, whether he beleue, that by ſuch graunt the pilgrimes that viſite thoſe Churches, and geue thẽ any thing may obtayne remiſſion of ſinnes or not.

Hereſie to deny the Popes indulgences.

28. Item, whether he beleue that all Biſhops may graũt vnto their ſubiectes according as the holy Canons doe limit, ſuch indulgences or not.

29. Item, whether he beleue and affirme, that it is lawfull for faythfull Chriſtians to worſhip Images and the reliques of ſayntes or not.

Hereſie not to worſhip images

30. Item, whether, he beleue that thoſe religions, whiche the Churche hath allowed, were lawfully and reaſonably brought in of the holy fathers or not.

31. Item, whether he beleueth that the pope or any other Prelate for the time being, or their vicars may excommunicate their ſubiect Eccleſiaſticall or ſecular for diſobediēce or contumacie, ſo that ſuch a one is to be holden and taken for excommunicate or not.

32. Item, whether ye beleue that for the diſobediēce and contumacie of perſons excommunicate, increaſing: the prelates or their vicares in ſpirituall thinges haue power to agrauate and to reagrauate, to put vpon men the interdict and to call for the ſecular arme: and that the ſame ſecular arme or power ought to be obedient to the cenſures, by their inferiors called for.

33. Item, whether he beleue that the pope and other prelates or els their vicares, haue power in ſpirituall things to excommunicate prieſtes and lay men that are ſtubberne and diſobedient, from theyr office, benefice or entrance into the church, and from the adminiſtration of the ſacraments of the Church, alſo to ſuſpend them.

34. Item, whether he beleue, that it is lawfull for eccleſiaſticall perſons without committing ſinne, to haue anye poſſeſſions & temporall goodes: and whether he beleeue, yͭ it is not lawfull for lay men to take away the ſame from thē by their authoritie: but rather that ſuch takers away & incrochers vpō eccleſiaſticall goods, are to be puniſhed as committers of ſacriledge, yea although ſuch Eccleſiaſticall perſons liue naughtely that haue ſuch goodes.

These Popes wil be ſure to loſe nothing.

Wealthy wickednes maintained.

35. Item, whether any ſuch taking away or incrochyng vpō any prieſt raſhly or violently made, although yͤ prieſt be an euill liuer, be ſacriledge or not.

36. Item, whether he beleue that it is lawfull for lay mē of whether ſexe ſoeuer: that is men and women, to preache the word of God or not.

37. Item, whether he beleue that it is lawfull to al prieſtes freely to preach the word of God wherſoeuer, whenſoeuer, and to whom ſoeuer it ſhal pleaſe them, althogh they be not ſent at all.

The pope neyther preacheth himſelfe, nor yet will ſuffer other good prieſts to preach

38. Item, whether he beleue that all mortall ſinnes, and eſpeciall ſuch as be manifeſt and publike, are to be corrected and to be extirpate or not.

Furthermore, wee will commaunde, and decree, that if any by ſecrete information by you or any other to be receiued, ſhall be founde either enfamed or ſuſpected of anye kind of yͤ peſtiferous ſect, hereſie & doctrine of the moſt peſtilence men I. wickleffe, I. Hus and Hierome of Prage the archhereticks aforeſaid, or of fauoring, receiuing or defending the foreſayd damned men whileſt they liued on the earth, their falſe followers and diſciples, or any that beleeueth their errours, or any that after their death pray for thē or any of them, or that nominateth them to be amongſt the number of catholick men, or yͭ defendeth them to be placed amongſt the number of yͤ saintes, either by their preaching worſhipping, or otherwaies wherin they deſerue to be ſuſpected: yͭ then they by you or ſome of you, may be cited perſonally to appeare before you or ſome of you, wᵗout either Proctor or Doctor to anſwere for them, an oth being opēly taken by them as is aforeſayd, to ſpeak the plain & mere veritie of the articles aboue written and euery of them, or other oportune, as caſe and circumſtance ſhall require, according to your diſcretion, as you or anye of you ſhall ſee expediēt to proceed againſt them, or any of them according to theſe preſentes or otherwiſe canonically, as you ſhall thinke good.

Alſo that you do publiſh ſolemnly & cauſe to be publiſhed, theſe preſent letters, omitting the articles & interrogatories herein contayned, in the citties & other places of your dioces, where conueniently you may, vnder our authoritie, & there to denounce and cauſe to be denounced all & ſingular ſuch hereticks, with their abbetters & fauorers of their hereſies & errours, of what ſexe or kinde ſoeuer, that do hold, & defend the ſayd errours, or doe participate any maner of way with heretickes, priuely or apertly, of what ſtate, dignitie, or condition ſoeuer he or they be, Patriarche, Archbiſhop, king, Queene, Duke or of what other dignitie either Eccleſiaſticall or ſeculare he be: alſo with their aduocates and procurators whoſoeuer, whiche are beleuers, followers, fauourers defenders, or receiuers of ſuch heretickes, or ſuſpected to be beleuers, followers, fautors, defenders or receiuers of them, to be excommunicate, euery ſonday and feſtiuall day, in the preſence of the people.

Papa ſpirat minas & cædes.

Furthermore, that you dilligently do to be inquired by the ſayd our authoritie, vpon all and ſingular ſuch perſons both men and women, that mayntayne, approue, defend, & teach ſuch errours, or that be fauourers, receauers and defenders of them, whether exempt or not exempt, of what dignitie, ſtate, preeminence, degree, order, or condition ſoeuer. And ſuch as you ſhal finde in the ſayd your inquiſition, either by their own confeſſion, or by any other meane to be diffamed, or otherwiſe infected with the ſpot of ſuche hereſie or errour, you, through the ſentence of excommunication, ſuſpenſion, interdict, and priuation of their dignities, perſonages, offices, or other benefices of the Church, and fees, which they hold of any church, monaſtery and other Eccleſiaſtical places, alſo of honours and ſecular dignities and degrees of ſciences or other faculties, as alſo by other paynes and cenſures of the Church, or by wayes and meanes whatſoeuer els ſhall ſeeme to you expedient, by taking and impriſoning of their bodies, and other corporall puniſhmentes wherwith heretickes are puniſhed, or are wont, and are commaunded by canonical ſanctions to be vſed: and if they be clerkes, by degradation, doe correcte and puniſhe, and cauſe them to be corrected and punyſhed with all dilligence.

Furthermore, that you do riſe vp ſtoutly and couragiouſly agaynſt ſuche heretickes, and the goodes as well of them, as of the lay men, according to the canonicall ſanctiō made agaynſt heretickes, and their followers, vnder the which we will and commaunde them and their partakers to be ſubiect. And alſo ſuch perſons, as ſhall be infamed of the hereſies or errors aforeſayd, or any of yͤ premiſſes, ſhall be bounde to purge themſelues, at your arbitrement: but the other which either be witneſſes, or by their owne confeſſions, or other allegations or probations, ſhalbe conuicted of the foreſaid hereſies, or articles, or of any the premiſſes, they ſhalbe compelled to reuoke and abiure publikely and ſolemnly the ſayd articles and errours, and to ſuffer condigne penaunce and puniſhment, yea euen to perpetuall impriſonment, (if need be) for the ſame.

See here the Dragon caſting out whole floudes to ſwalow vp the Saintes.

And to the intent yͭ they ſhall not nouriſh any kinde of hereſies hereafter, either in word, deede, or geſture, or ſhall induce other, either in worde or deede, priuely or apertly, directly or indirectly to beleeue yͤ ſame, they ſhalbe forced to put in ſufficient ſuretie. Pope Martin 5. contrary to Pope Boniface 8.

Pope Martyn vndoeth the acts and edictes of al other popes.

This bloudy and abhominable commiſſion of pope Martine, which I haue copied out of a certaine olde monument remaining in the handes of Maiſter Hackluyt, ſtudent in the Temple, ſeemeth to be directed and geuen out to the publike deſtruction of all faithful Chriſten men, about the latter end & breaking vp of the councel of Conſtance, an. 1418. By the which the prudent reader hath this to

Note howe Antichriſt rageth and ryſeth againſt chriſt

to note and conſider, what labour, what pollicie, what coũſaile, & what lawes haue bene ſet, what wayes haue bene takẽ, what ſeueritie hath bene ſhewed, how mens power, wit, and authoritie of the whole world haue conſpired together from time to time, cõtinually by all maner meanes to ſubuert and ſupplant the worde, and way of the Lorde: And yet notwithſtanding man hath not preuayled, but all his force & deuiſed pollicies haue bene ouerthrowen, diſpatched and wt the councell of Achitophell and Ammon, haue bene brought to nought, and contrary to the furye of the world, the goſpell of Chriſt hathe ſtill increaſed.

Mans power and counſaile too weake againſt chriſt

Neither yet for all this, will the Pope ceaſe to ſpurne and rebell ſtill againſt the kingdome of Chriſte, and of hys Goſpell agaynſt which, neyther he, nor yet ye gates of hell ſhall euer preuayle. The Lord of hoſtes be mercifull to hys poore perſecuted flocke. Amen.

Agaynſt this peſtilent Bull and Inquiſition of Pope Martine the great antechriſt, I thought good here to adioyne and annexe an other contrarye writing of the Bohemians, bearing the name and ſubſcription of Procopius, Conradus, and other Captaynes of ye Bohemians, which ſeemeth not long after the death of Ziſca, to be written agaynſt the peſtiferous ſea of Rome, the tenour whereof here followeth.

✻ A fruitfull and Chriſtian exhortation of the Bohemianes to kinges and princes, to ſtir them vp to the zeale of the Goſpell.

An exhortation of the Bohemians.

THe almighty God the father, by hys welbeloued ſonne Ieſus Chriſt, may in hys holy ſpirite open the vnderſtanding both of you and of all Chriſtians, & lighten your hartes with the light of hys doctrin of righteouſnes, and may make you to continue therin, ſurely eſtabliſhed to the end. This we deſire of you for your ſaluation, all ye honourable, wiſe, & honeſt noble men, & al the Comminaltie, ye rich and poore, heare and conſider with dilligent heede, the wordes of this preſent letter, which is ſent vnto you from the Country of the Bohemianes.

The Pope and prelates by their letters ſtirred them to fight.

It is manifeſt and well knowne to you and many other citties, Kynges, princes, and Lordes, that now a certayne number of yeares, there hath ben great diſcord betwixt vs and you, and there haue bene ſome which haue moued you by letters, and prouoked you to make warre againſt vs, and to deſtroy vs. And as well on your part as on ours: many men, as wel noble as vnnoble, haue fooliſhly loſt their lyues. Yet neuer hetherto haue ye in any parte vnderſtoode our fayth by our owne confeſſion, neither whether we be able to proue the ſame out of the ſcriptures, yea or no: and yet in the meane time, kinges, Princes, Lordes, and Citties, haue ſuſtayned great dammage. And hereof we greatly merueile, that ye do ſo much truſt and beleue the pope and hys prieſtes, which geue you drinke full of poyſon, and ſuch comfort as no man can vnderſtand,

Faire words doe make fooles faine.

in that they ſay that they wil geue you forgeuenes of all your ſinnes, and great grace & pardon, to this end, that you ſhould warre vpon vs & deſtroy vs: wheras their graces and pardons are none other then great lies, and a great ſeducing of the body and ſoule of all them that beleue them: and put their truſt in them.

The Pope ſeduceth the world with vaine promiſes of thinges, which he cannot geue

Thys we would proue vnto them, & ouercome them by the holy ſcripture, and we wold ſuffer: that whoſoeuer is deſirous to heare the ſame, ſhoulde heare it. For the Pope and all hys prieſtes, herein deale with you as the deuill woulde haue done wyth our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt. Of whome Luke writeth in hys 4. chap. that he brought him vpon an high hill, & ſhewed vnto hym in the twinckling of an eye, al the kyngdomes that are in the compaſſe of the earth, & ſaid vnto him: I wil geue thee &c. So the deuill deceiueth the pope, and all the prieſtes with the riches of the worlde, and worldly power: And they thinke they can geue grace and pardon when they wyll, and they themſelues ſhall neuer finde fauour before almighty God, except they repent and make amendes, becauſe of theyr great deceauing of Chriſtedom. And how can they geue that to others, which they themſelues haue not? So dyd the Deuill, who was rich in promiſing, and poore in geuing.

The deuil & the Pope riche in promiſing and poore in geuing.

And like as the Deuill is not aſhamed to tell a lye, ſo all they are not aſhamed to ſpeake that which ſhall neuer be found true, nor be proued by the holy ſcriptures, becauſe for no cauſe, they ſtirre vp kinges, Princes, Lordes, and Citties, to make warre agaynſt vs, not to the end that the Chriſtian fayth ſhoulde therby be defended, but becauſe they feare ye theyr ſecret vices and hereſies ſhalbe diſcloſed and made manifeſt. For if they had a true cauſe, & a godly loue to the Chriſtiã faith they would then take the books of the holy ſcripture, and would come vnto vs, and ouercome vs with the weapõs of Gods word, and that is our chiefe deſire, For ſo dyd the apoſtles of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, who came to ye Paganes and Iewes, and brought them from their infidelitie to the true fayth of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt, and this they dyd in the ſpirite of meekenes, as the Apoſtle Paule writeth in the 6. chap. to the Galat. Brethren if anye man be agreeued. &c.

Galat. 6.

So ought they alſo to doe, if they perceiued that they were iuſt, and we vniuſt. And if we woulde not abide inſtruction: then they might take to them kinges, Princes, Lordes, and imperiall citties, and reſiſt vs according to the commaundementes of the holy ſcripture.

False pretenſes of the papiſtes.

But this is the ſubtile defence of all the Byſhops and Prieſtes that they ſay that mayſter Hus and Hierome which were burnt at Conſtance, were ouercome of the holy father the Pope, and of the whole Councell: For ye muſt vnderſtand that they were not ouercome by the holy Ghoſt, but vniuſtly, with wrongfull violence, which God may yet hereafter greeuouſly puniſhe in all them that gaue their counſel and ayd thereto:

M. Hus & Hierom by wrongful violence put to death.

and they ſaye it ought not to be ſuffered, tha we ſhould be heard in confeſſing our fayth. How may that be proued by the holy ſcripture, ſince chriſt heard the deuill as it is written in the fourth chap. of Mathewe? And they are not better then Chriſt, nor we worſe then the Deuill.

Chriſt heard the deuill: bu the pope wil not heare men confeſſe their fayth.

2. Eſdras 3.

Iohn 14.

Iohn 8.

If they be iuſt and haue the truth with them (as they ſaye they haue) and we be vnrighteous, why do they feare, ſince the truth ought not to be afeard of falſhod, as Eſdras writeth in hys ſecond booke, the third chapiter. Zorobabell declared that truth is of all thinges the moſt mightye, and ouercommeth all thinges. For Chriſt is the trueth. Iohn 14. I am the way, the trueth. &c. And the deuill is the father of lies. Iohn. 8. He is a lyer from the beginning, and neuer abode in the truth, & there is no truth in him. Therfore if the pope and hys prieſtes haue the truth, let them ouercome vs with the word of God. But if they haue lyes, then they cannot long abide in al their preſumptiõ. Wherfore, we exhort and beſeech al the imperiall Cities, al kings Princes, noble men, rich and poore, for Gods ſake, and for hys righteouſnes, that one of them write hereof to an other, and that there may be ſome meanes made howe we may cõmune wt you ſafely and friendly, at ſome ſuch place as ſhal be fit both for you and vs, and bring with you your Byſhops and teachers, and let them & our teachers fight together with the word of God, and let vs heare them, and and let not one ouercome the other by violence or falſe ſubtiltie, but onely by the word of God.

A iuſt and ly requeſt Bohemians.

And if your Biſhops and teachers haue better proofes of theyr fayth out of the holy ſcripture, then we, and our fayth be found vntrue, we will receiue penaunce and ſatiſfaction: according to Goſpell. But if your Byſhops and teachers be ouercome of ours by the holy Scripture, then doe ye repent and harken to vs, and hold with vs. And if your Byſhops & teachers will ceaſe from their ſpirituall pride, and repent and make ſatiſfaction: then wil we helpe you according to our power, and will compell them, eyther to ioyne with vs, or els we will expell them out of Chriſtendome. And if your Byſhops and teachers will ſay, that it is not lawfull for lay men to heare ſuch reaſoning, or to be preſẽt at it: that may you vnderſtand to tend to no other end, but that they feare they ſhould be ouercome and put to ſhame in the ſight of you:

Wherefore the popes clergie wil abide no cõferẽce with the laytie.

For if they knew that they ſhould ouercome therein, out of doubt, they would deſire that euery mã ſhould heare it, & thereby, their glory ſhould become the greater, & their fame and prayſes ſhould be encreaſed vpon the earth. And if your Biſhops and teachers coũſell you to come to no hearing with vs, thẽ do it whether they will or no, & ſuffer not your ſelues at any time to be ſo fooliſhly ſeduced with their foliſh pardons, but tary at home in your houſes wt your wiues and children. And let ye pope of Rome come to vs with all his Cardinals and byſhops, and with all hys prieſtes, with his owne perſon & power to warre with vs, & let themſelues deſerue the abſolution of ſinnes, grace, and pardon, which they preach to you (for they haue great nede of forgeuenes of ſinnes, grace, & pardõ) & by the grace of god we will geue them pardõ enough as they ſhall neede.

The Popes pretenſed excuſe detected.

But theyr ſubtile excuſe is this: they ſay that it belõgeth not to prieſtes to fight wt bodily weapons & true it is that belongeth not to them: but it belongeth as little to them to ſtirre vp, to counſaile, & to fortifie others thereto: For Paule ſaith in the ye 1. to the Rom. & in ye fift to ye Galath. that all that do ſuch thinges are worthy of euerlaſting death.

Rom. 1.

And if ye will not determine to do any other thing then to fight againſt vs, then will we take the Lord to our helpe and his trueth, & we will defend it to the death, & we will not be afraid for the excommunicatiõ or curſe of the Pope, or his cardinals, or of ye biſhops, becauſe we know that ye Pope is not god as he maketh himſelfe, that he can curſe and excommunicate when he will, or bleſſe when he will:

Experience of Gods bleſſing where the pope hath curſed.

Obiection.

who hath now theſe many yeares curſed and excõmunicated vs, & yet notwithſtanding, God and his gratious bleſſing hath bene our helpe. But peraduẽture ye wil ſay, that though we ſee that biſhops and prieſts be euill & wicked, yet we cãnot lacke them: for who ſhould baptiſe our children, who ſhould heare confeſſions, & miniſter the holy ſacraments? and then alſo we ſhould be win the excommunication of the pope & of his biſhops. welbeloued, ye nede to take no care for theſe matters. The excõmunicating of the Pope hurteth you nothing. Feare ye the excommunicating of God, and the Lorde wil prouide for thoſe things wel enough. If ye would baniſh euil biſhops and prieſts, ye ſhuld haue good prieſtes which ſhuld baptiſe your children, heare cõfeſſions, and miniſter the holy myſteries, bicauſe when yͤ deuill is baniſhed, then place is made for the holy ghoſt: So when yll biſhops and prieſtes ſhall be baniſhed, then place ſhal be made for good prieſtes & biſhops Alſo, your biſhops and prieſts ſay, that we are miſcreants and hereticks, & that we beleue not on purgatory, vpõ the virgine Mary, nor vpon the ſayntes: wherein they ſay ill for we will proue by the holy ſcripture, that we know better by Gods grace how we ought to beleue vpon Purgatory, & vpon Mary the mother of our Lord, & vppon hys welbeloued ſaints, thẽ they can tell vs. Alſo they ſay, yͭ we wil not be obediẽt vnto the P. Truly when he ſhalbe come holy and iuſt, then we know well that we ought to be obedient to him in al things and not before. They ſay alſo that we deſtroy Gods holy ſeruice, in that we deſtroy monaſteries, baniſhing thence the wicked Monkes and Nunnes. Truely we dyd it, thinking once that they were holy, that they did the reuerend ſeruice of god, but after that we well perceiued and conſidered their lyfe & works, then we perceiued that they were falſe lowly hipocrites, and wicked builders on high, and ſellers of pardõs and maſſes for the dead, and ſuch as deuoured in themſelues the ſinnes of the people. And where as they ſayd that they riſe at midnight when other men ſleepe, and pray for the ſins of the people: foraſmuch as their ſelling of their praiers and maſſes for yͤ dead for gifts, is no better then hipocriſie and hereſie: therfore if we do ſpeake agaynſt them and deſtroy their monaſteries, we do not therin deſtroy the ſeruice of God, but rather the ſeruice of the deuill, and the ſchooles of heretickes. And if ye knew them as we know them, ye would as diligently deſtroy them as we do. For Chriſt our Lord did not ordayn anyſuch order, & therfore it muſt needs come to pas that ſhortly it ſhal be deſtroyd as our lord ſaith in the Goſpel of S. Mathew the 15. chapter. Euery plant whiche my father hath not planted, ſhalbe rooted vp. We deſire you alſo that ye woulde dilligently conſider the articles here written, wherein your biſhops and prieſtes are guilty.

The popes falſe accuſation anſwered.

Math. 15.

The abuſe of popiſhe religion in making prieſts Cardinals&c.

The 1. article is, that when your biſhops will ordaine prieſts, they do it not, except he yͭ is to be made prieſt haue ſufficient liuing, eyther inheritance left him of hys parents or of benefices: wheras notwithſtanding, Chriſt wold that prieſtes ſhould be poore, foraſmuch as it is enough for the ſcholar to be as his maiſter is, and for the ſeruaunt to be as his Lord is: and the biſhops wil that they ſhould be rich v vpon earth, which is vniuſt before the Lord.

Actes. 8.

The 2. article is, that biſhops take mony of ſuch as are to be ordained, but S. Peter did therfore ſharply rebuke Simon Magus, when he would haue geuen him mony, as it is written in the 8. of the actes.

The abuſe of popiſhe religion, in taking orders.

The 3. article is, that they that come to be prieſtes enter into prieſthoode, not for gods ſeruice ſake, becauſe they mean to preach and encreaſe it among the Chriſtiã people, ſo as the people may be edified and made better: but rather for an idle life, and that they may eate well and drinke wel and that they may be honoured and reuerẽced vpon earth For euery one wayteth vpon hys prieſt as a theefe and a robber, as Iohn writeth in his x. chap.

Popiſhe excommunication abuſed.

1. Cor. 16.

The 4. article is of excommunication, which the Pope and all his prieſtes take to themſelues, and therwith fetter & bind all Chriſtian people as they will, and they thinke yͭ whoſoeuer they excommunicate or curſe, hee is accurſed and excommunicate before God: And we wil proue by the holy Scripture, that they themſelues are excommunicate & accurſed before God, becauſe they kepe not the commaundement of the loue of God, wherof the Apoſtle writeth in yͤ 1. to the Cor. the 16. chap. If any man loueth not our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt, he is excommunicate in the day of the comming of the Lord. For they cannot excommunicate you, who are already bound and excommunicate before God & hys ſaintes: and therefore why feare ye their excommunication?

The popes church poyſoned with buying and ſelling their praying and ſinging, and all their doing for money.

The 5. Article is, that they take gifts for to pray for the dead, and to ſay maſſe for theyr ſoules. This is a wickednes and hereſie before the Lord, & all they that contribute to them to this end, do wickedly, for that hereby prieſts become merchantes of prayers and of maſſes: and herewyth is all the church of Rome poyſoned and defiled. For if they would pray for the dead and ſay maſſe for their ſoules, yet no man ought to hire thẽ thereto, foraſmuch as they ought to take no giftes, neither little nor great. And euery one that taketh rewardes to this end, to redeeme ſoules out of purgatory, do therwithal caſt their own ſoules down into hel. And they yͭ geue any thing to that end, doe altogether loſe yͭ which they geue. And with ſuch deuiliſhe ſubtlety, yͤ Pope with all his prieſtes hath deceiued, ſpoyled and diſherited kinges, princes, Lordes and knights, & good houſholders and many other, of their lawful inheritaunces, becauſe their anceſtors & progenitours gaue it to Colledges, monaſteries & churches, yͭ they might make memorials of thẽ & to ſing or ſay prayers or maſſes for their ſoules, that they might be redeemed out of Purgatorye. And wyth ſuch goodes, Byſhops, Canons, and Monaſteries haue made themſelues ſo riche, that now they fall at variaunce with cities, & princes: & wheras they ſhould procure peace betwixt cities and rulers, there they are the firſt that begin warre: and as long as they haue ſuch goodes, they wil neuer ceaſe to be at ſtrife with Lordes and cities, neither wil they begin to teach you the true foundation of yͤ truth: For they do as a dogge, which as long as he holdeth a bone in his mouth and knaweth it: ſo long he holdeth his peace & cannot barcke. Euen ſo, as long as they haue this bone of pleaſaunt riches, it wyl neuer be well in the world. wherfore all kinges, princes and imperiall Citties ſhould doe a great worke of godlines and mercy, if by them they were compelled to do this, as the dog is when the boane is takẽ from hym.

Feare of purgatory hath robbed almoſt all the whole world.

So long as prieſtes be rich, they will neuer be true teachers.

The ſubtiltie of the deuill in making the church rich.

Eccle. 19.

And therfore ye noble men, Kinges, princes, Lordes, imperiall Citties, and all the communaltie, both riche and poore, if ye haue bene a ſleep yet now awake and opẽ your eyes and behold the ſubtiltie of the deuill, how he hath blinded the Church of Rome, and take agayne that is youres, and not theirs. And if you wil make a good memoriall for your ſoules, then do as the wyſe man ſaith, Eccle. 19: Lay vp almes. &c.

Popiſhe prieſts with their long & ſumtuous gownes more like to the Phariſes then Chriſt.

1. Tim. 3.

The 6. article is, that they are full of pride and of high mynde, which is manifeſtly knowne by their long, coſtlye and ſuperfluous garmentes, wherein they walke very vnlike to Chriſt our Lord, who had a garmẽt without a ſeam and to the welbeloued Iohn Baptiſt, who had a garment of Camels heare, and they wyl be honoured and worſhypped, and they preach and ſay that Prieſthood ought to be honoured, and ſo it ought in deede to be, but there is none yͭ do ſo much ſclander and abaſe it, as they themſelues, with their euill works, gay apparell, and with their euil words wherein they paſſe all other men. Paul ſayth the 1. to Tim. the 3. chapter. Let the Elders that gouerne wel, be honoured with double honour, chiefly they that labour in yͤ word and doctrine of the Lord. Conſider, that he ſayth they that gouerne well.

Honor in well gouerning.

The popes church poyſoned with couetouſnes. Tim. 1.

The 7. article is, that they are couetous from yͤ higheſt to the loweſt, and for couetouſnes they preach many foliſh deedes & manifeſt lies, & ſell the holy ſacramentes, whiche is a great hereſie: for God commaunded that they ſhoulde geue freely. Paule writeth in the firſt to Timothy: Couetouſneſſe is the roote of all miſchief, wherunto many haue ben geuen, and therefore they are ſeparated from the fayth and haue denyed the truth.

The popes church poyſoned much with whoredome.

The viij. article is, that they commonly are called notorious whoremongers. This is manifeſtly ſeene in theyr concubines and children, which walke openly in all mens ſight, and make many mens wiues whoores, or corrupte their daughters being virgins, and make thẽ prieſts harlots and rybauldes.

The Popes church and monaſteries commonly poyſoned with deueliſhe enuie.

The ix. Article is, that they are ful of deuiliſh enuy, and eſpecially in al Monaſteries they haue great enuy and hatred amongeſt themſelues, becauſe when any thing is geuen or diſpoſed to one Monaſtery or Colledge, then there are others, that hate it, and enuy at it, and woulde more gladly haue it themſelues: Like as among dogs when any thing is geuen to the one and not to the other, which the other ſeing, enuyeth hys fellow, & the other likewiſe wil rather deuour all himſelfe then geue any part to his fellowe. Wherefore it were well that they were brought from that great ſin of enuy in geuing nothing vnto thẽ: And it were better that their poſſeſſions were takẽ from them, and that they ſhould do that which the Lord ſpake to hys diſciples ſaying: Go ye and preach the Goſpell to all men.

The x. article is, that they are idle, and chiefly the Byſhops, Chanons, and other Prelates, which wil not labor dilligently in the holy Scripture, wherewith they might cure the miſeries of Chriſtendome, wherto they haue boũd themſelues

The popes church poyſoned with idlenes and belly cheare.

thēſelues, and they eate the bread therof in idlenes, becauſe when other men watch and labour to mayntaine themſelues and their little ones, thē are they with their lemmons or els they walke in ſome Cittie, carying hawkes on their fiſtes, or els they ſit at the good wyne wͭ their Concubines. and there they ſing and play the Lucians, & eat of the beſt and therfore al that willingly bring and geue to them, ſhal be made partners of that curſe whiche is geuen them of God, becauſe they eate their bread vniuſtly, whereof Paul writeth in the 2. to the Theſſ. the 3. chapter: He that laboureth not, let him not eate.

The Popes church infamous with notorious lies.

The 11. article is, that they are notorious liers, becauſe to the end that they may pleaſe men, they tel many tales & lies, which in the holy Scripture haue no foundation nor proofe. Of ſuch wryteth Iohn in the Apoca. 21.

The Popes church erreth in diminiſhing one part of the Sacrament.

The 12. article is, that they doe not rightly giue or miniſter to the people the body of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, and they geue it not as God hath inſtituted it and commanded. This is a great & a deuiliſh ſinne and to great malapertneſſe. Heerein we woulde ouercome them, wyth the teſtimonies of the Euangeliſtes: I ſay we woulde ouercome the Pope, and all his Prieſtes, with the authorityes of Marke, Luke and Paule. Rom. 13. and we woulde ſuffer, that Kinges, Princes, Lordes and all that are willing to heare, ſhould heare it.

The Popes church charged with partialitie.

The 13. Article is, that they ſit in ſpiritual iudgement, and then many times they iudge according to fauour, and not according to the righteouſneſſe of God, and they take bribes giuing ſentence for hym, which in Gods ſight hath the wrongfull cauſe. wo be to ſuch ſentēces, as it is wrytten in Iſay 5. wo be to ye that. &c.

The 14. Article is, that they ſit hearing cōfeſſions, and when there come to them vſurers, rauenerṡ, and theeues, they take bribes of them of their ill gotten goodes, to ſpare them: and they willingly ſuffer them in cities and towns. And likewiſe of adulterers, and other notorious whoremongers and whores, and they neuer let or ſtay them in their great ſinnes, to the end that the ſcripture may be fulfilled in them, which ſayeth: Giftes and the loue of money do draw to hell, and do blinde the eyes of iudges.

He meaneth of claiming tithes by mere neceſſitie of the olde lawe: and not by the poſitiue law of princes.

The 15. Article is, that they receiue tithes of men, and will of right haue them, and preache and ſay that men are bound to giue them tithes, and therin they ſay falſly: For they can not proue by the new Teſtament, that our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt commanded it, and his diſciples warned no man to do ſo, neither did themſelues receiue them. But although in the old Teſtament, it were commanded to geue tithes, yet it can not thereby be proued, that chriſtian men are bound thereto: For this precept of the olde Teſtament had an end in the firſt yeare of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, like as the precept of Circūciſion. wherfore welbeloued, conſider and ſee, how your biſhops ſeduce you and ſhut youre eyes with things that haue no proofe. Chriſt ſayeth in the 11. of Luke. Geue almes of thoſe thinges that remaine, but he ſaid not, geue the tenth of the goodes, which yee poſſeſſe, but geue almes. But when they heare the word, they may ſay as the lawyer ſaid to Chriſt: Maiſter when thou ſayeſt ſo, thou geueſt offence. Luke 11.

The Popes church charged with vſury.

The 16. Article is, that they in many places lende money or goodes to haue treaſure or vſurie, and they haue in cities and townes, yearely paiments and perpetual reuenues, as great Princes and Lordes. wherein they doe againſt the Goſpel, which ſayth, do not ye poſſeſſe gold nor ſiluer. And wheras they lend for gaine and vſury, againſte that ſpeaketh the Lord, Deu. 24. Lend not to vſury to thy brother. &c. Ye honeſt diſcrete and well beloued Lords, all the foreſaide Articles we wil proue againſt the Pope, and all his prieſts, with many teſtimonies of the holy Scripture, which for breuities ſake, we haue not here mētioned. But note ye chiefly theſe 4. Articles, for which wee ſtriue, and deſire to defend them to the death.

The firſt Article is, that all publicke, and cuſtomably mortall ſinnes ought to be forbidden and prohibited to all Prieſts and lay men, according to the commaundement of the holy Scripture.

He meaneth the immoderate riches & tēpo all poſſeſſions.

The ſeconde Article is, that richeſſe ought to be taken from the Pope and all hys Prieſtes, from the hygheſt to the loweſt, and they ought to bee made poore, as the Diſciples of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt were: who had nothyng of their own, neither poſſeſſiōs in this world, neither worldly power.

Mē appointed to preach may preach though the Pope forbid them.

The third Article is, that the word of God ought to be free for euery mā appointed and ordained therto, to preach and read in al places, whether they ſhal come, without reſiſtance of any man or without any inhibitiō of either ſpirituall or earthly power openly or manifeſtly.

The fourth article is, that the body of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt ought to be deliuered to euery chriſtian as our lord hath ordained it, and as the holy Euangeliſts haue wrytten. we haue alſo vnderſtood that there ſhalbe a Councell in Baſile: wherfore let no mā be exalted, but let them diligētly kepe their wiues, their daughters and their virgins from Byſhops, Prieſts, and Monkes. And do not thinke ẏ there is made any holy aſſembly of Biſhops and Prieſts for the common commodity and profit of Chriſtendom, but onely to thys end that they may hide their ſecret vices and hereſies, with the cloke of hypocriſye, and let and hinder ẏ righteouſneſſe of God, which is muche contrary to them: and for this cauſe conſider ye diligently, that they will not make an holy aſſembly, but the congregation of Sathan. And take ye heede that it be not done as ſome did at Conſtance, who tooke money of Biſhops and Prelates, & ſuffered them to ſleepe with their wiues. Ye welbeloued and honeſt Lordes, if ye finde any thing in theſe aforeſaide Articles or wordes wrytten ſomewhat ſharply, we did it not to offend or contemne you, but to the ende that ye ſhoulde diligently conſider and deuiſe howe Chriſtendome is ſo ill kept and led by the Prieſts of this preſent age. Our Lorde Ieſu Chriſt keepe you both in body and ſoule. Amen. In the yeare of our Lord. 1430.

When the Pope holdeth his councell, let mē looke to their wiues & daughters where the councell is kept.

Preropus, Smahors, Conradus, Samſſmolich, Capitaines of Bohemia.

Great lamētatiō for Ziſca.

Nowe to proſecute the warres of the Bohemians againe, after Ziſca was dead, wherof we did intreat before, there was great feare, ſorrow, and lamentation in the army, the ſoldiers accuſing fortune which gaue ouer ſuch an inuincible captaine to be ouercome with death. Immediatly there was a diuiſion in the hoſt, the one parte chuſing Procopius Magnus to be their captaine, the other parte ſaying, that there was none could be found worthy to ſuccede Ziſca: whereuppon they chuſing out certaine to ſerue the warres, named themſelues Orphanes.

The army of Ziſca deuided.

Thus the Thaborites being deuided into two armies, the one part retained their olde and accuſtomed name, and the other by meanes of the death of their captayne, named themſelues Orphanes. And all be it, that oftentimes there was diſſenſion betwene them, yet when ſoeuer any forein power came towards them, they ioyned their powers together in one campe, and defended themſelues. They ſeldome went vnto any fenſed townes except it were to buy neceſſaries, but liued with their wiues and childrē in theyr campe & tents. They had amongſt them many cartes, the which they vſed as a Bulwarke: For when ſo euer they went vnto battell, they made two wings of them, whyche cloſed in the footemen. The winges of the horſe men were on the out ſide, and when as they ſawe their time for to ioyne battell, the wagon men which led the wings, going forth vnto the Emperors ſtanderd, and compaſſing in ſuch part of their enemies as they woulde, did cloſe themſelues in together, whereby the ennemies being incloſed, ſo that they could not be reſcued, they were partly by the footemē, & partly by the men that were in the carres wͭ their dartes ſlaine. The horſemen fought without the fortification: and if it happened that they were oppreſſed or put to flight, by and by the carres opening themſelues, receiued them as it were into a fenſed Citie: and by this meanes they got many victories, for ſo much as their enemies were ignorant of their pollicies.

The order and policie that the armie of Ziſca vſed in warre after his deceaſe.

Theſe 2. armies went forth, the one into Sleſia, and the other into Morauia, and returned againe wyth great pray, before their enemies knewe of their comming. After this they beſieged ẏ towne of Swetley in Auſtrich, where as the Thaborites and the Orphanes, two nightes continually aſſaulted the walles wythout ceaſing, but Albert Duke of Auſtrich comming with his hoſte to aide the Citizens, they fought by the ſpace almoſt of foure houres, the valiaunteſt warriers being ſlaine on both partes. At the length the battaile was broken of, and the Thaborits loſt their carres, and Albert was put out of his camp & tents. within a while after, Procopius Magnus came agayne and incloſed the citie of Rhetium in Auſtria wͭ a notable ſiege. They of Prage were in his army, and Boſlaus Cygneus, of whome we ſpake before, was ſlaine there with a dart, & the city of Rhetium was taken by force, ſacked and burnt. The Burgraue of Malderburge Lord of the towne, was alſo taken and caried vnto Prage, where alſo hee dyed in priſon.

Procopius Magnus.

Theſe thinges thus done, the Emperour ſent for the nobles of Boheme, which went vnto him vnto a town of Hungary, called Poſonium in the borders of Auſtria, vpō the bāks of the riuer of Danubius: but they wold not enter into the towne, but remained wͭout the towne in their tents, whether as the Emperoure going out vnto them, Sigiſmund the Emperor which burned Hus and Hierom before, now is fayne to entreat for hys kingdome.

The death of I. Hus & Hierome reuenged.

communing muche wͭ them as touching his right & title, and the recouering of his fathers kingdome, promiſing if there were any cauſe, which did alienate the Bohemians minds from him, that he would take away al the occaſion therof. They made anſwer, that he had made warre vpon them without cauſe, and that he had ſuffred their countrey men cõtrary to his promiſe, to be burnt at Conſtance not being heard, and the kingdom to be contumeliouſly interdited, and the Nobles of Boheme to be condemned by the church of Rome as heretickes: and that he ſhould thincke the force and power of the Bohemians not to be ſo ſmall, but that they would prouide for their owne honor. Wherunto the Emperor anſwered very gently, & offered them a general councel, wherein they might declare their innocency, if they woulde ſubmit themſelues to the iudgement of the vniuerſal Church: but the Bohemians which were now become valiant victors in armes, would not now be ouercome with wordes, and ſo nothing being finally concluded, the Emperor returned home.

The Cardinall of Wincheſter ſent into Germany to rayſe warre agaynſt the Bohemians.

Then pope Martin perceiuing the Goſpell to increaſe daily more and more, ſent the Cardinall of Wincheſter an Engliſhman, borne of a noble houſe, into Germanie to moue them vnto warre againſt the Bohemians. Whereunto the Emperor alſo did aſſiſte him.

There were three armies prouided. In the firſt armie were the Dukes of Saxonie, and the lower cities.

The 2. armye, which was gathered of yͤ Franconians, was vnder yͤ conduct of the Marques of Brandenburge.

Three armies ſet againſt the Bohemians.

God reſcueth his people newly conuerted.

The popes army flyeth.

Lyke captayne, lyke ſouldiour.

The 3. army was led by Otho the archbiſhop of Treuers, whom the Rhenenſes, the Bauarians, and the Imperiall cities of Sweuia followed. Theſe armies entring into Boheme, in 3. ſeuerall partes, after they were paſſed the woode, they ioyned together & pitched before Miſna. This towne a certaine learned and eloquent proteſtãt, named Prichicho, the night before, had won frõ the Papiſts: wherfore the army was determined firſt to recouer yͤ citie, before they woulde goe any further. But when as newes came vnto the hoſt, how the Proteſtants had gathered an army, and came wall ſpede towards them: they fled before they ſaw their enemies, and went vnto Thaconia, leauing behind them their warlike engins with a great pray. The Cardinall was not yet come into the campe, but meeting them in their flight at Thacouia, he maruailed at the cowardly flight of ſo many Noble and valiaunt men, deſiring them that they woulde turne againe vnto their ennemies, which he ſayde, were farre weaker then they. Which thing when he had long trauailed about in vaine, hee was faine to be a companion with them in their flight. They were ſcarſly entred the woode, when as the Bohemians comming vpon thẽ, ſet vpon their rereward. Then was their flight muche more diſordered and fearfull then before, neither did they leaue flying before the Bohemiãs left folowing. Then all impediment or let being taken away, they vanquiſhed Thacouia: and hauing obtained great ſtore of warlike engines, they deſtroyed Miſna. And when they would haue returned home by Franconia, they had great ſummes of mony ſent vnto them yͭ they ſhuld not waſt or deſtroy the Countreis of Bramberge and Noremberge: wherby the hoſt of the Bohemians was greatly enriched.

{ Anno. 1421. }

The Pope rayſeth warre the ſecond time againſt the Bohemians.

Sigiſmundus the Emperour hauing newes of theſe things, went ſtraighte vnto Noremburge, and gathered there new aide and helpe. Alſo Pope Martin ſent Iulian the cardinall of S. Angel into Germany with his ambaſſade, to make warre againſt the Bohemians, and that hee ſhould in the Counſell of Baſill, which doth nowe ſhortly draw on, be preſident in the popes name. He entring into Germany, went ſtraight to Norenberge to the Emperor, wheras many of the nobles of Germany were aſſembled.

A newe warre rayſed by the pope againſt the Bohemians.

There was a new expedition decreed againſt the Bohemians, againſt the 8. Kalendes of Iuly, and Fredericke Marques of Brandenburge appoynted generall of that warre, which ſhould follow the Cardinal. He entred into Boheme by the way that leadeth vnto Thopa, and Albertus prince of Auſtrich was appoynted to bring hys armie thorough Morauia.

The number of the popes army againſt the Bohemians.

In this expedition was Albert & Chriſtopher of Bauaria, and Friderike Dukes of Saxony, Iohn and Albert princes of Brandenburge, wyth their father, which was generall of thoſe warres. Alſo the biſhops of Hyperbolis, Bamberge, and Eiſten. Alſo the company of the Sweuians, which they called the company of S. George, and the Magiſtrates of the imperial cities, the biſhops of Mentz, Treuers and Colen ſent their aides, and wyth them the chieftaines of their prouinces. It is ſayd that the number of their horſemen were aboue 40000. But their footemen were not full ſo many, for the Germains for the moſt part do vſe to fight their battels on horſebacke, Alſo Rhenatus prince of Loraine promiſed to come to theſe warres, but being letted by his ciuill warres, for ſomuch as hee went about to vanquiſh the Earle of Vandome, wherby he could not keepe his promiſe, neyther the County Pallatine of Rheine, which did aide and ſuccour the Earle of Vandome, coulde not goe againſt the Bohemians. The Cardinal ſtaying for them, deferred his iourney vntill the Kalends of Auguſt. In the meane time, Albert leading his armie out of Auſtria, vnderſtanding that the Cardinall was not preſent at the day appoynted, and ſeeing himſelfe vnable to encounter wyth the Bohemian power, he returned backe againe. After this the Cardinall entred into Boheme with an huge army, & deſtroyed many of the proteſtantes townes, killing men, women, and children, ſparing neither olde nor yong: notwithſtanding, this his tiranny was exerciſed in the vttermoſt borders of Boheme, for his captaines feared to enter farre into the land. The Bohemians aſſone as they that heard tel yͭ their enemy was come, made ready, & gathered their hoſt with all ſpeede, and laid ſiege to a towre called Stiltiuerge, and brought it vnder ſubiection.

Cardinall Iulian with a maine hoſt entreth Boheme.

The cruell ſlaughter done by the Cardinall.

God ſtriketh a feare in the popes army.

In the meane ſeaſon there fel ſuch a maruelous ſodein feare amongs al yͤ papiſts throughout the whole campe, yͭ they begã moſt ſhamefully to run away before any enemy appearing in ſight. The cardinal Iulianus maruelling at this moſt ſodein feare, and what ſhould moue ſo great an army to flie, went about vnto yͤ captains, exhorting them to put on armor, to order their battels, & coragiouſly to abide their enemies, ſaying: they did not fight for the glory of their kingdom, or for the poſſeſſiõ of lands, but for their liues, and the honor & * religion of Chriſt, and for the ſaluation of ſoules. How ignominious a thing is it (ſaith he) for the Germains to flie in battell, whoſe courage and valiantnes all the world doth extoll? It were much better for to die, then to geue place to any enemies, before they were ſeene: for they can by no meanes liue in ſafetie wythin the walles, which geue place vnto their enemy in the field, for it is the weapon that defendeth a man and not the walles, and except they would euen preſently defend their libertie with the ſworde, they ſhould ſhortly be in greater bõdage, more miſerable then any death. But this exhortation was all in vaine, for feare had put away all boldnes: for the enſignes were ſnatched vp, and as though there had bene no captaine in the hoſte, euery man ran headlong away. No man regarded any commandement, neither once tooke his leaue of his captaine, but caſting away their armour with ſpeedy flight they ranne away, as though their enemy had bene at their backes. The Cardinall alſo, although it were againſt his will, was forced to doe the like.

*Rather for the religion of Antichriſt This Cardinall belike loued to preach rather in the campe then in the church.

The Cardinals army ranne away for feare.

Thus the proteſtants by yͤ feare of their enemies made the more bolde and couragious, purſued them thorow the woodes, and had a great pray & ſpoile of them. Notwithſtanding, Albertus, when he heard tell that the Cardinall was entered into Boheme, with all ſpeede came agayne out of Auſtrich with his army, & beſieged the ſtrong town of Prezorabia: but when he vnderſtode howe the Cardinall was fled, he left of his purpoſe, and returned through Morauia, which was not yet ſubiecte vnto him, and deſtroyed aboue 50. townes wyth fire and ſword, toke many of their cities by force, and ſpoiled them, committing great murther and ſlaughter, and ſo afflicted them, that they toke vpon them his yoke, and promiſed to be ſubiecte and obedient to him vnder this condition, that as touching religion he would be bounde to doe that whych the Councel of Baſil ſhould determine.

Great ſlaughter in Boheme by Duke Albert.

The councel of Baſill.

A letter of the Emperour to the Bohemians.

Then was there an ambaſſade ſent out of Boheme vnto Baſil, where as Sigiſmund held the Councel, who during the time of warres, had kept himſelf at Noremberge. When as hee ſhoulde take his iourney vnto Rome to bee crowned Emperour, hee wrote letters vnto the nobles of Boheme, wherin was contained, how that he was a Bohemian borne, and how he was not more affectioned to any nation, then to his own, and that he went to Rome for none other cauſe, but to be crowned, the which his honor ſhoulde alſo be a renowne to the Bohemians, whome to aduaunce it hath bene alwaies his ſpeciall care.

Alſo, how that through his endeuor the Councel was begon at Baſill, exhorting all ſuche as were deſirous to be heard as touching religion, that they ſhuld come thether, and that they woulde not maintaine any quarell contrary to the holy mother church, that the Councel wold louingly and gentlely heare their reaſons: that they ſhould onely endeuour themſelues to agree wyth the Synode as touching religion, and reſerue and kepe a quiet and peaceable kingdome for hym, againſt his returne: Neyther ſhoulde the Bohemians thinke to refuſe his regiment, whoſe brother, father, and vncle, had raigned ouer them, and that hee would reigne ouer them after no other meane or ſort, then other Chriſtian kings vſed to doe.

The Bohemians ſent for by the Councell.
Safeconduct geuen to the Bohemians to come to the councell
A doubt among the Bohemians, whether to goe to the councell of Baſill or no.
This Maynardus was after a great backfriend to the faithful Bohemians.

Procopius famous among the Germaynes.

The councel of Baſil alſo wrote their letter to the Bohemians, that they ſhould ſend their Ambaſſadors which ſhould ſhew a reaſon of their faith, promiſing ſafeconducte to go & come, and free liberty to ſpeake what they woulde. The Bohemians in this point were of 2. opinions, for the Proteſtants & almoſt all the common people, ſayd, it was not good to go, alledging the examples of Iohn Hus and Hierome of Prage, which going vnto Conſtance vnder the ſafeconduct of the Emperour, were there openly burned. But the nobility folowing the minde of Maynardus, prince of the new houſe, ſayde, that they ought to goe vnto the Councell, and that they are not to be ſuffred which had inuented thoſe new and ſtrange opinions of faith, & newe kinde of religion, except they would render accõpt of theyr doings and ſayings before the vniuerſall church, & defend thoſe things, which they had openly taught, before learned men. This opinion tooke place, and an ambaſſade of 300. horſe was ſent vnto Baſil. The chiefe wherof were william Coſca a valiant knight, & Procopius ſurnamed Magnus, a mã of worthy fame for his manifold victories. Ioh. Rochezana preacher of Prage. Nicolas Galecus, miniſter of the Thaborites, and one Peter an Engliſhman, of excellent prõpt and pregnant wit. The people came in great number out of the towne, and many out of the ſynode and councell, attending before the gates to ſee the comming of this valiãt and famous people: other ſome gathered together in great nõber into the ſtreetes where as they ſhould paſſe through. The matrones, maids and children, filled ẏ windowes and houſes to behold and ſee, and to maruel at their ſtrange kinde of apparel, and ſtoute couragious cõtenãces, ſaying that it was not vntrue which was reported of them: notwithſtanding all men behelde Procopius, ſaying, this is he which hath ouerthrowne the papiſtes in ſo many battels, which hathe ſubuerted ſo many townes, and ſlaine ſo many men, whom both his enemies and alſo his owne ſouldiours, do feare and reuerence: alſo, that hee was a bold, valiant and inuincible captaine, which coulde not be ouercome with no terrour, labour or trauaile.

The oration of Cardinall Iulian.

These Bohemian Ambaſſadors were gently receyued. The next day after, Cardinall Iulianus ſending for them vnto the councell houſe, made a gentle, long, and eloquent Oration vnto them, exhorting them to vnitie and peace, ſaying, that the church was the ſpouſe of our ſauior Chriſt, and the mother of all faithful, that it hath the keyes of binding and loſing, and alſo that it is white and fair, without ſpot or wrinkle, and cã not erre in thoſe poynts which are neceſſary to ſaluation, and that he which doeth contemne the ſame church, is to be coũted as a prophane, Ethnike, & publicane, neither can this church be repreſented better by any meanes then in this councel. Hee exhorteth them alſo to receiue the decrees of the councell, and to geue no leſſe credite vnto the councell then vnto the Goſpell, by whoſe authority, the ſcriptures themſelues are receiued & allowed. Alſo ẏ the Bohemians which call them ſelues, the children of the church, ought to heare ẏ voice of their mother, which is neuer vnmindful of her children, how that nowe of late they haue liued apart from their mother, albeit (ſaid hee) that is no newe or ſtraunge thing, for there haue bene many in times paſt, which haue forſakẽ their mother, and yet ſeeking after ſaluation haue returned to her againe: That in the time of Noes floud, as many as were wythout the arke periſhed: That the Lordes paſſeouer was to be eaten in one houſe: that there is no ſaluation to be ſought for out of the church, and that this is the garden & famous fountaine of water, wherof whoſoeuer ſhal drinke, ſhall not thirſt euerlaſtingly: That the Bohemians haue done as they ought, in that they haue ſought the fõtains of this water at the councel, and haue determined nowe at length to geue eare vnto their mother. Nowe all hatred ought to ceaſe, all armor and weapon is to be laid apart, & all occaſion of warre vtterly to be reiected: For the fathers would louingly and gently heare whatſoeuer there they would ſay in their owne cauſe or quarell, requiring onely that they woulde willingly receiue and embrace the good counſels and determinations of the ſacred ſynode: whereunto not onely the Bohemians, but alſo all other faithfull Chriſtians, ought to conſent and agree, if they wil be partakers of eternall life.

The Bohemians aunſwere to the Cardinals oration.

This Oration of the Cardinal, was heard & very wel allowed of the fathers. wherunto the Bohemians anſwered in fewe wordes, that they neither had contemned the Church nor the councels: that the ſentence geuen at Conſtance againſt thoſe which were vnheard, doeth diminiſhe nothing of the Chriſtian religion: that the authoritie of the fathers hath alwaies remained amongſt them inuiolate, and whatſoeuer thing the Bohemians had taught, to bee confirmed by the ſcriptures and Goſpell, and that they are nowe come to manifeſt their innocencie before the whole Church, and to require open audience, where as the laitie may alſo be preſent. The requeſt was graunted them: and being further demanded in what poynts they did diſagree from the church of Rome, they propounded 4. Articles.

The articles wherin the Bohemians diſſented from the church of Rome

First, they affirmed, that all ſuche as woulde be ſaued, ought of neceſſitie to receiue the Communion of the laſte ſupper vnder both kindes of bread and wine.

The ſecond Article, they affirmed all ciuil rule and dominion to be forbidden vnto ẏ Clergy by the law of God.

The thirde Article, that the preaching of the worde of God is free for all men, and in all places.

The fourth Article, as touching open crimes and offences which are in no wiſe to be ſuffered for the auoiding of greater euill.

These were the onely propoſitions whyche they propounded before the Councell in the name of the whole realme. Then another ambaſſador affirmed that he had hard of the Bohemians diuers and ſundry thinges offenſiue to Chriſtian eares, amongſt the which this was one poynte, that they ſhould preach that the inuention of the order of begging Friers was diabolicall.

Then Procopius riſing vppe, ſayde, neither is it vntrue, for if neyther Moiſes, neyther before hym the Patriarkes, neither after him the Prophets, neyther in the new lawe Chriſte and hys Apoſtles did inſtitute the order of begging friers, who doth dout but that it was an inuention of the deuil, and a worke of darkeneſſe?

Certaine appointed by the Bohemians and the councell to diſpute.

This anſwere of Procopius was derided of them all: And Cardinall Iulianus went about to prooue that not onely the decrees of the Patriarkes and Prophetes, and thoſe things which Chriſt and his Apoſtles had inſtituted to be onely of God, but alſo all ſuch decrees as the church ſhuld ordaine, being guided through the holy ghoſt, be the workes of God. All be it as he ſayde, the order of begging Friers, might ſeeme to be taken out of ſome parte of the goſpel. The Bohemians choſe out 4. diuines which ſhuld declare their Articles to be taken out of the Scriptures. Likewiſe on the contrary part there was 4. appoynted by the councell. This diſputation continued 50. dayes, where many thinges were alledged on either parte, whereof, as place ſhal ſerue, more hereafter (by the grace of Chriſt) ſhal be ſayd, when we come to the time of that Councel.

The death of K. Henry 5. called prince of prieſts for fauouring the pope.

In the meane ſeaſon, while ẏ Bohemians were thus in long conflicts wyth Sigiſmund the Emperour and the Pope, fighting for their religion, vnto whome, notwithſtanding all the fulneſſe of the Popes power was bent againſt them, God of his goodneſſe had geuẽ ſuch noble victories, as is aboue expreſſed, and euer did proſper them ſo lõg as they could agree among thẽſelues: as theſe things (I ſay) were doing in Boheme: King Henry the 5. fighting likewiſe in Fraunce, albeit for no like matters of religion, fell ſicke at Boys, and died after he had raigned 9. yeres 5. monethes 3. wekes and odde daies from his coronation. This king in his life and in all hys doings was ſo deuout & ſeruiceable to the Pope and his chapleins, that he was called of many the Prince of prieſts: who left behind him a ſonne being yet an infant 9. monthes and 15. dayes of age, whom he had by Quene Katherine daughter to the French king, married to him about 2. or 3. yeares before. The name of which Prince ſucceeding after his father, was Henry 6. lefte vnder the gouernement and protection of his vncle named Humfrey Duke of Glouceſter.

THE SIXT PART OR SECTION, pertaining to the laſt 300. yeares.

A preface to the reader.

According to the fiue ſondry diuerſities and alterations of the Churche, ſo haue I deuided hetherto the order of thys preſente Church ſtory into fiue principall partes, euery part containing 300. yeares. So that nowe comming to the laſte 300. yeares, that is, to the laſt times of the Church, counting from the time of Wickleffe: For as muche as in the compaſſe of the ſayd laſt 300 yeres, are contained great troubles and perturbations of the Church, with the meruailous reformation of the ſame through the wonderous operation of the almighty, all which things cannot be comprehended in one booke, I haue therefore diſpoſed the ſayd latter 30. yeares, into diuers bookes, beginning nowe with the ſixt booke, at the raigne of king Henry the vj. In which booke, beſide the greeuous and ſundry perſecutions raiſed vp by Antichriſt, to be noted, here in is alſo to be obſerued, that where as it hath of long time bene receyued and thought of the common people, that this religion now generally vſed, hath ſprong vp and riſen but of late, euen by the ſpace (as many do thinke) of 20. or 30. yeares, it may now manifeſtly appeare, not onely by the Acts and Monuments heretofore paſſed, but alſo by the hyſtories here after following, howe this profeſſion of Chriſtes religion hath bene ſpread abroade in Englande of olde and auncient time, not onely from the ſpace of theſe 200, late yeares, from the time of Wyckleffe, but hathe continually from time to time ſparkled abroade, although the flames thereof haue neuer ſo perfectly burſt out, as they haue done within theſe hundred yeares and more: As by theſe hyſtories here collected & gathered out of Regiſters, eſpecially of the Dioceſſe of Norwich, ſhall manifeſtly appeare: wherein may be ſeene what men, and how many both men and women within the ſayde Dioceſſe of Norwich, haue bene, which haue defended the ſame cauſe of doctrine, which now is receiued by vs in the Church. Which perſones althoughe then they were not ſo ſtrongly armed in their cauſe and quarel, as of late yeres they haue bene, yet were they warriours in Chriſtes churche, and fought for their power, in the ſame cauſe. And although they gaue backe through tyrannie, yet iudge thou the beſt good Reader, and referre the cauſe therof to God, who reuealeth all things according to his determined will and appoynted time.

King Henry 6.

Anno. 1422.

Ex Scala mundi.

Ex Regiſt. Cant.

This yong prince being vnder the age of one yeare, after the death of his father, ſucceeded in his reigne and kingdom of England, Anno 1422. and in the 8. yeare was crowned at Weſtminſter: and the 2. yeare after was crowned alſo at Paris, Henry biſhop of Wincheſter, Cardinall being preſent at them both, & raigned 38. yeres, and then was depoſed by Edwarde the 4. as heere after (Chriſt willing) ſhall be declared in his time. In the firſte yeare of his raigne was burned the conſtant witneſſe bearer and teſtis of Chriſtes doctrine, William Tailour, a Prieſt vnder Henry Chicheſley Archbiſhop of Canterbury. Of this William Tailour I read, that in the dayes of Thomas Arundell, hee was firſt apprehended, and abiured. Afterwarde in the daies of Henry Chicheſley, aboute the yeare of our Lorde 1421. which was a yeare before hys burning, the ſaid William Tailour appeared again in the conuocation before the Archbiſhop being brought by the Biſhop of Worceſter, being complained of to haue taught at Briſtow theſe Articles folowing.

William Taylour the firſt tyme apprehended.

W. Taylour againe appeareth before the Archbiſhop.

Three articles firſt obiected to W. Taylour.

Firſt, that whoſoeuer hangeth any ſcripture about his necke, taketh away the honor due onely to God, & geueth it to the Deuill.

Secondly, that no humaine perſone is to be worſhipped, but onely God is to be adored.

Thirdly, that the Saints are not to be worſhipped nor inuocated.

Upon theſe Articles the ſayde William Tailour being examined, denied that he did preache or hold them in way of defending them, but only did commune and talke vpon the ſame, eſpecially vpon the ſecond and third article, only in way of reaſoning, and for argument ſake. And to iuſtify his opiniõ to be true in that which he did hold, he brought out of his boſome a paper or libell wrytten, wherein were contained certaine Articles, wyth the teſtimonies of the Doctours alleaged, and exhibited the ſame vnto the archbiſhop. Who then being bidde to ſtande aſide, the Archbyſhop conſulting together with the byſhops and other prelates, what was to be done in the matter, deliuered the wrytinges vnto M. John Caſtle, and John Kikinghale, the two vicechauncelors of Oxforde and Cambridge, and to John Langdon monke of Canterbury. Who aduiſing with themſelues, and with other deuines, about the Articles and allegations, on the monday following, preſented the ſayde Articles of William Tailour, to the Archbiſhop and Prelates, as erroneous and hereticall. Whereuppon William Tailour being called before them, in concluſion was contented to reuoke the ſame, and for hys penaunce was by them condemned to perpetuall priſon.

Notwithſtanding, through fauour they were contented, that he ſhould be releaſed from his carceral indurance, in caſe hee woulde putte in ſufficient ſurety in the kinges Chancerye, and ſweare that he ſhall neuer holde or fauour any ſuch opinions hereafter. And thus the ſayde William Tailor apoynted to appeare the next Wedneſday at Lambeth before the Archbiſhoppe, to take his abſolution from his long excommunication during yͤ time from Thomas Arundell, appeared againe before him, where he laying a ſide his Armilouſa, that is: his cloke, his cap, and ſtripped vnto hys doublet, kneeled at the feete of the Archbyſhop. Who then ſtanding vp, and hauing a rodde in hys hande, began the Pſalme Miſere. &c. hys chaplaines aunſwering the ſecond verſe. After that was ſayde, the Collect, Deus cui proprium. &c. with certaine other prayers. And ſo taking an oth of him, the Archbiſhop committed him to the cuſtodie of the Byſhop of Worceſter, to whome power and authority was permitted to releaſe him, vpon the conditions aforeſaide. And thus was William Tailour, for that time abſolued, being enioyned notwythſtanding to appeare at the next conuocation whẽſoeuer it ſhuld be, before the ſaid Archbiſhop or his ſucceſſour that ſhould follow him.

The forme of canonical abſolution in the church vſed againſt thẽ that were excommunicate.

In the meane time, while William Tailour was thus in the cuſtody of the Biſhop of Worceſter, there paſſed certaine wrytings betweene hym, and one Thomas Smith prieſt at Briſtowe, in the which wrytings William Tailour replied againſt yͤ ſayd Thomas, concerning the queſtion of worſhipping Saints. Upon the occaſion of which reply, being brought to the hands of the byſhop of Worceſter, William Tailour began a newe to be troubled, & was broughte againe before the publicke conuocation of the cleargy, by the ſaid biſhop of Worceſter, to aunſwere vnto his wrytings. This was an. 1422. the 11. day of Februarie. Unto the which conuocation the ſayd William being preſented, his wrytings were read to him, which he woulde not, nor could not deny to be of his owne hand wryting.

The tenour and effect of whoſe wryting onely tended to prooue, that euery petition and prayer for any ſupernaturall gift, ought to be directed to God alone, & to no creature. All be it in this his wryting he did not vtterly deny, that it was not lawfull in no reſpecte to pray to Saintes, (and bringeth for the ſame Thomas Aquine) but onely in reſpect of that worſhip, whych is called Cultus latriæ: And further ſo proſecuteth his minde herein, that he ſemeth litle or nothing to differ from the ſuperſtition of the papiſts: as moſt plainely appeareth by his owne wordes, ſaying: Nunquam tamen negaui, aut negare intendo, merita aut ſanctorum ſuffragia tam beatorum, quam viantium, tam viuis, quam mortuis ad hoc diſpoſitis, quantum poſſunt, ſuffragari, vel proficere, quia hoc eſt elicibile ex Scriptura, quæ non fallit, & ex conſona ratione. &c. And moreouer hee inferreth the example of Moſes, who prayed vnto God, alleadging the merites of Abra-

Abraham, Iſaac, and Iacob, which were deade. &c. And furthermore paſſing from the teſtimony of Hierome, and alledging the example of Steuen, ſayeth: Quod nunc magis exauditur pro veneratoribus ſuis, quam tunc exauditus eſt pro lapidatoribus. And at length he commeth to this cōcluſion, prouing by S. Auſten, in this maner: Ne igitur cum impijs & idolatris in veteri teſtamento, in circuitu ambulemus, nunquam deueniendo ad centrum, ſanū eſt quod faciamus ſecundum conſilium Apoſtoli ſic dicentis: Accedamus cum fiducia ad thronum gratiæ eius, vt miſericordiam conſequamur & gratiam inueniamus in auxilio oportuno. &c. That is. And therfore leaſt we runne about in circles with the wicked, and wyth the idolaters of the old Teſtament, and neuer come to the center, therfore it is wholeſome & good counſaile, that we followe the minde of the Apoſtle, ſaying: Let vs reſorte wyth boldnes vnto the throne of his grace, that we may obtaine mercy, and finde grace in time of oportune helpe. &c.

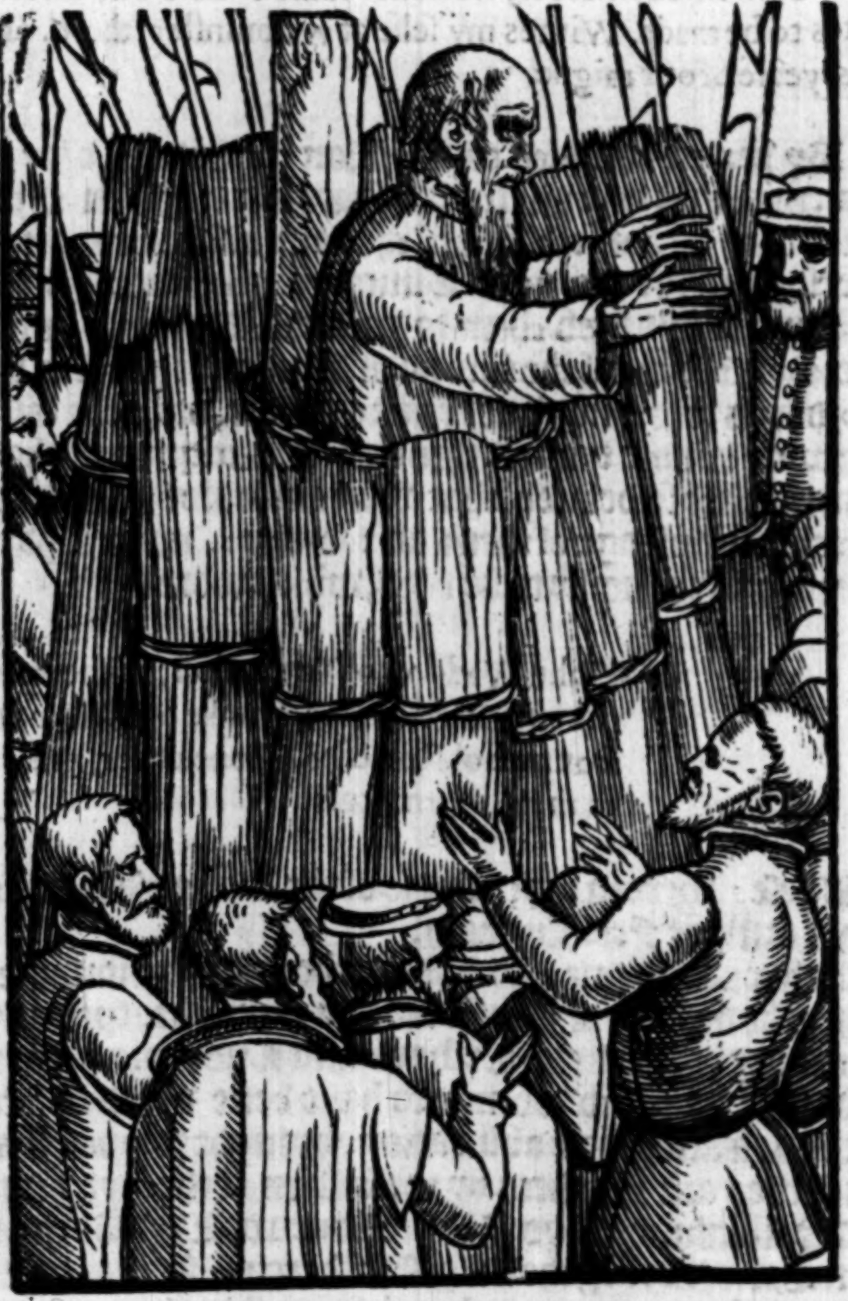
Aug. ſuper. Pſal. 21.

Thus much out of the foreſayde wryting of W. Tailor I haue excerped, to the intent that the indifferent reader, vſing his iudgement herein, may ſee how litle matter was in this, wherefore he ſhould be condemned by the Papiſts. And yet notwythſtanding the ſame wryting being deliuered by the archbiſhop, to the four orders of Friers of London to be examined, was founde erroneous and hereticall in theſe poyntes.

4. articles by the 4. orders of Friers laid againſt W. Taylout.

1. Firſt, that euery prayer, which is a petition of ſome ſupernaturall gift or free gift, is to be directed onely to God.
2. Item, that prayer is to be directed to God alone.
3. Item, to pray to any creature is to commit idolatry.
4. Alſo, an other opiniō there was much like to the other, to make vp the fourth, ſo that although all theſe opinions agreed in one, yet to make vp a number euery order of the foure ſortes of Friers, thought to finde out ſome matter to offer vp to the Archb. againſt him, leaſt one order ſhoulde ſeeme more cunning or pregnant in finding out more, then could an other: or els perchaunce leaſt any of them ſhould ſeeme to fauor the party, in bringing nothing againſt him, as the reſt had done.

⁂ The burning of William Tailour, Prieſt.



When the Saterday was come, which was the 20. day of February, vppon the which day the 4. orders were appoynted to declare theyr cenſure vppon the Articles in the chapiter houſes of Paules, firſt appeareth Frier Tylle, for the Blacke Friers, then Frier Winchelſey: then Frier Low: After Frier Aſhwel, eche Frier for his order ſeuerally bringing his hereſy, as is aboue ſpecified.

Thus the verdict of theſe 4. orders being geuen vp to the Archb. and ſeuerally, eche order comming in with hys hereſye, which was the 20. day of February. Hereuppon commeth downe a wryt from the king, directed to the lord Maior and Sheriffes of London. De heretico comburendo, dated the 1. day of March. Anno 1. of his raigne. The copie whereof remaineth in the recordes of the Tower, beginning thus, Rex Maiori & vicecomitibus. Wherupon the ſayd William Tailour condemned as a relapſe, firſt was diſgraded, and after to be burned, and ſo was committed to the ſeculare power. Who then being had to Smithfield, the 1. day of Marche, with Chriſtian conſtancie, after long impriſonment, there did conſummate his Martyrdom. 1422.

The maner of his diſgrading was all one with the diſgrading of Iohn Hus before: for the Papiſtes vſe but one forme for all men. From an Exorciſte, by taking away the booke of Exorciſmes or Graduall. From the Sextonſhip, by taking away the churchdoore key and ſurplis. THE SIXT PART OR SECTION, pertaining to the laſt 300. yeares.

A preface to the reader.

ACcording to the fiue ſondry diuerſities and alterations of the Churche, ſo haue I deuided hetherto the order of thys preſente Church ſtory into fiue principall partes, euery part containing 300. yeares. So that nowe comming to the laſte 300. yeares, that is, to the laſt times of the Church, counting from the time of Wickleffe: For as muche as in the compaſſe of the ſayd laſt 300 yeres, are contained great troubles and perturbations of the Church, with the meruailous reformation of the ſame through the wonderous operation of the almighty, all which things cannot be comprehended in one booke, I haue therefore diſpoſed the ſayd latter 30. yeares, into diuers bookes, beginning nowe with the ſixt booke, at the raigne of king Henry the vj. In which booke, beſide the greeuous and ſundry perſecutions raiſed vp by Antichriſt, to be noted, here in is alſo to be obſerued, that where as it hath of long time bene receyued and thought of the common people, that this religion now generally vſed, hath ſprong vp and riſen but of late, euen by the ſpace (as many do thinke) of 20. or 30. yeares, it may now manifeſtly appeare, not onely by the Acts and Monuments heretofore paſſed, but alſo by the hyſtories here after following, howe this profeſſion of Chriſtes religion hath bene ſpread abroade in Englande of olde and auncient time, not onely from the ſpace of theſe 200. late yeares, from the time of Wyckleffe, but hathe continually from time to time ſparkled abroade, although the flames thereof haue neuer ſo perfectly burſt out, as they haue done within theſe hundred yeares and more: As by theſe hyſtories here collected & gathered out of Regiſters, eſpecially of the Dioceſſe of Norwich, ſhall manifeſtly appeare: wherein may be ſeene what men, and how many both men and women within the ſayde Dioceſſe of Norwich, haue bene, which haue defended the ſame cauſe of doctrine, which now is receiued by vs in the Church. Which perſones althoughe then they were not ſo ſtrongly armed in their cauſe and quarel, as of late yeres they haue bene, yet were they warriours in Chriſtes churche, and fought for their power, in the ſame cauſe. And although they gaue backe through tyrannie, yet iudge thou the beſt good Reader, and referre the cauſe therof to God, who reuealeth all things according to his determined will and appoynted time.

King Henry 6.

Anno. 1422.

Ex Scala mundi.

Ex Regiſt. Cant.

THis yong prince being vnder the age of one yeare, after the death of his father, ſucceeded in his reigne and kingdom of England, Anno 1422. and in the 8. yeare was crowned at weſtminſter: and the 2. yeare after was crowned alſo at Paris, Henry biſhop of wincheſter, Cardinall being preſent at them both, & raigned 38. yeres, and then was depoſed by Edwarde the 4. as heere after (Chriſt willing) ſhall be declared in his time. In the firſte yeare of his raigne was burned the conſtant witneſſe bearer and teſtis of Chriſtes doctrine, william Tailour, a Prieſt vnder Henry Chicheſley Archbiſhop of Canterbury. Three Sondaies in a ſolemne proceſſion in the cathedral Church of Norwich, he ſhould be diſpled before al the people. The like alſo ſhuld be don about his pariſh church of Shelton, three other ſeuerall Sondaies, hee being bare headed, bare footed & bare necked, after the maner of a publicke penitentiarie, his body being couered wyth a canues ſhirt, and canues breches, carying in his hande a taper of a pounde waight, and that done he was diſmiſſed.

The maner of this diſpling was with a white rodde, thriſe laid vpon the head of the penitenciary.

Richard Belward of Eriſam in the Dioces of Norwich.

RIchard Belward of Eriſam, in the Dioceſſe of Norwiche, was accuſed for holding and teaching theſe errours and opinions heere vnder wrytten, contrary to the determination of the church of Rome.

In primis, that Eccleſiaſticall miniſters and Ordinaries haue no power to excommunicate, neither can excommunicate: And all be it that a Biſhop doe excommunicate any man, God doth abſolue him.

He meaneth the wicked byſhops of that time, whoſe curſes God did bleſſe.

Item, that he held the erronious opinions and concluſions, that Syr John Oldcaſtle helde when he was in priſon, & affirmed that Syr John Oldcaſtle was a true Catholicke man, and falſly condemned and put to death without any reaſonable cauſe.

This proueth Sir I. Oldecaſtle to be no traytour.

Item, that ſuch as go on pilgrimage, offering to images made of woode and ſtone, are excommunicate becauſe they ought to offer to the quicke, and not to the dead: and that the Eccleſiaſticall Miniſters, that is to ſay the curates do ſell God vppon Eaſter day, when as they receiue offerings of ſuch as ſhould communicate before they do miniſter the Sacrament vnto them.

Item, that he counſelled diuers women, yͭ they ſhould not offer in the Churche for the dead, neither wyth women that were purified.

Item, that he blamed diuers of his neighbors that refuſed his doctrine, ſaying vnto thē: truly ye are fooles that deny to learne the doctrine of my ſect, for your neighbours which are of my ſect, are able to confound and vanquiſh al other that are of your ſect.

The wordes of the Regiſter.

Item, that the Saintes whych are in heauen, ought in no caſe to be prayed vnto, but onely God.

Item, that the ſayd Richard keepeth ſchooles of lolardy in the Engliſh tong, in the towne of Dychingham, and a certaine Parchment maker bryngeth hym all the bookes containing that doctrine from London.

The 5. day of July 1424. the ſayde Richarde Belward was brought before John, Byſhop of Norwich ſitting in place of iudgement, wheras the foreſaid Articles were obiected againſt the ſayde Richarde, whych he there denyed: wherupō the biſhop appoynted him an other day to purge himſelfe, the monday next after the feaſt of S. Marget: vpon which day being the 24. of July, in the yeare aforeſayd, he appeared againe before the Biſhop, and brought wyth him 9. of his neighbors to purge hym vpon thoſe articles, and there did ſolemnely purge himſelfe. And afterwarde, for ſomuch as the ſaid Biſhop ſuſpected the ſayd Richarde Belward greatly of lolardie, hee commaunded him there preſently to ſweare vpon the Euangeliſtes, that from that day forwarde he ſhould not wittingly preach, teach, or defend any error or hereſy, contrary to the churche of Rome, neither aide, aſſiſt, fauour or maintaine, priuely or apertly, any maner of perſon or perſons, that ſhould hold or maintaine the ſayde errours or hereſies. In the preſence of M. William Bernam, John Wadden, Robert Serle & John Berne Eſquire, and other of his neighbours which came vnto his purgation.

In like maner John Goddeſel of Dichingham parchmentmaker, was detected and accuſed vpon the ſame articles, and thereupon brought before the biſhop: whereas he denying them, purged himſelfe by his neighbours, as Richard Belward before had done, being ſworne alſo in lyke maner, as he was, and ſo was diſmiſſed and ſet at libertie, vntill the yeare of our Lord 1428. when as he was againe apprehended, accuſed and abiured, as ſhalbe more at large declared in the hyſtorie when we come to that yeare. Syr Hugh Pie alſo, chaplaine of Ludney in the dioces of Norwich, was likewiſe accuſed and brought before the byſhop of Norwich yͤ 5. day of July. An. 1424. for holding of theſe opinions following.

Iohn Goddeſell of Dichingham.

Sir Hugh Pye Prieſt.

That the people ought not to go on pilgrimage.

Item, that yͤ people ought not to geue almes, but only vnto ſuche as begge at theyr dores.

Item, that the image of the croſſe and other images are not to be worſhipped. And that the ſaid Hugh, had caſt the croſſe of Bromeholde into the fire to be burned, which hee tooke from one John Welgate of Ludney. Which articles as is aforeſayde, being obiected againſt him, he vtterly denied: whereupon he had a day appoynted to purge himſelfe by the witnes of 3. lay men and 3. prieſts. That ſo done, he was ſworne as the other before, and ſo diſmiſſed.

Image of the croſſe not to be worſhipped.

After this, in the yeare of our Lorde 1428. king Henry the 6. ſent downe moſt cruel letters of commiſſion vnto J. Exetor and Jacolet Germaine, keeper of the caſtle of Colcheſter, for the apprehending of ſir William White Prieſt, and others ſuſpected of hereſies, the tenor wherof, hereafter enſueth.

HEnry by the grace of God king of Englande and of Fraunce, Lord of Ireland, to his well beloued Iohn Exetor, and Iacolet Germaine, keeper of the caſtle of Colcheſter health.

A letter of the king.

Ye ſhall vnderſtand that we fully truſting vnto your fidelitye and circumſpections, haue appoynted you ioyntly and ſeuerally to take and arreſt William White prieſt, and Thomas, late chaplaine of Setling, in the countie of Norfolke, and William Northampton prieſt, and al other whatſoeuer they be that are ſuſpect of hereſy or lollardy, whereſoeuer they may be founde within the liberties or without, and ſtraight way being ſo taken, to ſend thē vnto our next gaile or priſon, vnto ſuch time, as we ſhall haue taken other order for their deliuery: And therefore wee ſtraightly commaunde you, that ye diligently attende about the premiſſes, and fulfill the ſame in forme aforeſayde. Alſo we charge and command all and ſinguler Iuſtices of peace, Maiors, Shriues, Bailiffes, Cunſtables, and all other our faithfull officers, by the tenoure of theſe preſents, that they do aſsiſt, aide, and counſaile you & euery of you, in the execution of the premiſſes, as it ſhall be comely for them In witnes whereof, we haue cauſed theſe our letters patentes to be made. Witnes my ſelfe at weſtminſter, the 6. of Iuly, the 6. yeare of our raigne.

By vertue of which commiſſion we finde in olde Monuments, that wythin ſhorte ſpace after. John Exeter, which was appointed one of the commiſſioners, attached 6. perſons in the towne of Bungay in the dioceſſe of Norwich, and committed them to William Day, and William Roe, Conſtables of the towne of Bungay, to be ſent within 10. dayes folowing vnder ſafe cuſtodie, vnto the caſtle of Norwich. Whoſe names, through the antiquity of the monument were ſo defaced that we coulde not attaine to the perfecte knowledge of them all: onely 3. names partlye remained in the booke to be read, which were theſe.

Theſe 3. were in the cuſtodie of the Duke of Northfolk, at hys caſtle of Fremingham.

Beſides theſe, we alſo finde in the ſaid old monuments within the dioceſſe of Norffolke and Suffolke, ſpecially in the townes of Beckels, Erſham, and Ludney, a great nūber both of men and women to haue bene vexed and caſte in priſon, & after their abiuration, brought to open ſhame in churches and markets by the biſhop of the ſayd dioceſſe called William, and hys Chancellour William Bernham, John Exceter being the Regiſter therein, ſo that wythin the ſpace of 3. or 4. yeares, that is from the yeare 1428. vnto the yeare 1431. about the number of 120. menne and women are examined and ſuſtained great vexatiō for the profeſſion of the Chriſtian faithe: of whome ſome were onely taken vppon ſuſpition onely for eating of meates prohibited vpon vigil dayes, who of their purgation made, eſcaped more eaſily away and wyth leſſe puniſhment, whoſe names here follow ſubſcribed.

Theſe forenamed perſons and ſouldiors of Chriſt, being much beatē with the cares and troubles of thoſe dayes although they were conſtrayned to relent and abiure, that is to proteſt otherwiſe with their tonges, then theyr harts did thinke, partly through correction and partly through infirmity (being as yet but new trayned Souldiours in Gods field) yet for theyr good will they bare vnto ẏ trueth, although with theyr tongues they durſt not expreſſe it, we haue thought good that theyr names ſhould not be ſuppreſſed, as well for other ſondry cauſes, as eſpecially for this: either to ſtop the mouthes of malignant aduerſaryes, or to aunſwere to theyr ignorance: who folowing rather blinde affection thē the true knowledge of times and antiquities, for lacke of knowledge, blame that they know not, accuſing the true doctrine of the worde of God, for newelty and carping, the teachers therof for new broched brethrē. who, if they did as well foreſee times paſſed, as they be vnwilling to follow times now preſent, they ſhould vnderſtand as well by theſe ſtoryes as other before, how this doctrine of the grace of God lacking no antiquity, hath from time to time continually ſought to burſt out, and in ſome places hath preuayled, although in moſt places through tyrāny and the malice of men, Chriſtes proceedinges haue bene ſuppreſſed and kept vnder from riſing, ſo muche as mans power and ſtrength ioyned with craft and ſubtlety, coulde labor to keepe downe the ſame: as here by theſe good men of Northfolke and Southfolke, may well appeare. For if the knowledge and the good towardneſſe of thoſe good mē, had had the like liberty of time, with the helpe of like authority as we haue nowe, and had not ben reſtrayned thorough the iniquity of time and tyranny of Prelates: it had well appeared how olde this doctrine woulde haue bene, which now they contemne and reiect for the newnes therof: neither needed Boner to haue aſked of Tho. Hawkes; and ſuch other, where their Church was for xl. yeares ago, in as much as for xl. yeares ago, and more, within the coūtry of Norfolke and Suffolke, was then foūd ſuch plenty of ẏ ſame profeſſiō & like doctrine which we now profeſſe.

Boner might ſee the church here in this age, more then xl. yeres before he was borne.

And thus much for the nūber of the names of theſe perſōs.

Now touching theyr Articles whiche they did mayneteine and defend: firſt this is to be conſidered, as I finde it in the regiſters, ſuch ſociety and agrement of doctrine to be amongſt them, that almoſt in theyr aſſertions and articles there was no difference. The doctrine of the one was the doctrine of all the other, what theyr articles were, partly it is ſhewed in the leafe before: and partly here followeth to be declared more at large.

Although it is to be thought concerning theſe Articles that many of them either were falſly obiected agaynſt thē, or not truely reported of the notaryes, according as the cōmon maner is of theſe aduerſaryes, where the matter is good, there to make hereſy, and of a litle occaſion, to ſtyrre vp great matter of ſlaunder, as they did before by the articles of Iohn wickliffe and Iohn Hus, and others mo: So in like maner it ſemeth they did in the Articles of theſe mē, either miſtaking that which they ſaid, or miſunderſtanding that which they ment, eſpecially in theſe two articles concerning baptiſme and paying of tithes. For where as they ſpeaking agaynſt the ceremonicall and ſuperfluous traditions then vſed in baptiſme, as ſalt, oile, ſpittle, taper, light criſomes, exorciſing of the water, with ſuch other, accoūted them as no materiall thing in the holy inſtitution of Baptiſme, the notaryes ſlaunderouſly deprauing this theyr aſſertion, to make it more odious to the eares of the people, ſo gaue out the article as though they ſhould holde that the ſacrament of Baptiſme vſed in the church by water, is but a light matter and of ſmall effect, Theſe men are falſely ſlaundered about Baptiſme.

Agayne, in ſpeaking agaynſt the Chriſtening the midwiues vſe in priuate houſes, agaynſt the opinion of ſuche as thinke ſuche children to be damned, which depart before they come to theyr Baptiſme, they are falſely reported as though they ſhoulde ſay, that Chriſten people be ſufficiently baptiſed in the bloud of Chriſt, and nedeth no water, and that infants be ſufficiently baptiſed, if their parents be baptiſed before them. Whiche thing is ſo contrary to the manifeſt worde, that it is not to bee thoughte anye to bee ſo ignorant of the goſpell,that euer would or did affirme the ſame.

Moreouer, they thought or ſayd peraduenture that in certayne caſes, tithes might be withholden from wicked prieſtes ſometime, and be conferred to better vſes, to the behoofe of the poore: Therfore they are falſly ſlaundered, as ſaying and affirming that no tithes were to be geuē to the miniſters and curates of the churches.

The papiſtes are but quarel pickers.

And likewiſe for matrimony, wherin they are reported to hold and affirme as though it conſiſted onely in the mutuall conſent betwixt the man & woman, neding no other ſolemnizing in the publicke church and all becauſe(as it is like)they denyed it to be a Sacramēt. Other articles were obiected agaynſt them as theſe which hereafter folow.

Articles.

That auricular confeſſiō is not to be made vnto a prieſt but vnto God onely, becauſe no prieſt hath any power to abſolue a ſinner from his ſinne.

Item, that no Prieſt hath power to make the body of Chriſt in the ſacrament of the aultar, but that after the ſacramentall words, there remayneth pure materiall bread as before.

Item that euery true chriſtian man is a prieſt to God.

Item, that no man is bound vnder paine of damnatiō vnto Lent or any other dayes prohibited by the Church of Rome.

Item, that the Pope is Antichriſt, and his Prelats the Diſciples of Antichriſt, and the Pope hath no power to binde and looſe vpon earth.

* In caſe of neceſſitie,vrgent they meane.

*Item, that it is lawfull for euery Chriſtian to doe any bodely worke(ſinne onely except) vpon holy dayes.

Item that it is lawfull for prieſtes to haue wiues.

Item, that the excommunications and eccleſiaſtical cēſures geuen out by the Prelates are not to be regarded.

Item, it is not lawfull to ſweare in priuate caſes.

Item, that men ought not to go on pilgrimage.

Item that there is no honor to be geuē to the Images of the crucifixe, of our Lady, or any other ſaynt.

Item, that the holy water halowed in the church by the prieſt, is not holyer or of more vertue then other running or well water, becauſe the Lord bleſſed all waters in theyr firſt creation.

The death of Thomas Becket.

Item, that the death of Thomas Becket, was neyther holy neither meritorious.

Item, that reliques as dead mens bones, ought not to be worſhipped or digged out of theyr graues, or ſet vp in Shrynes.

Item, that prayers made in all places are acceptable vnto God.

Item, that men ought not to pray to any ſaynt but only to God.

Item that the bels and ringing in the church was ordeyned for no other purpoſe then to fill the priſtes purſes.

Item, that it is no ſinne to withſtand the eccleſiaſticall preceptes.

Item that the catholick church is onely the congregation of the elect.

In this article is ment that the wicked be in the church but not of the Church.

These were the Articles, which were generally obiected agaynſt them all, wherin they did ſo agree in one vniforme fayth, that whatſoeuer one did hold, all the other did mayntayne & hold the ſame. By the which theyr conſent & doctrine it appeareth that they all receiued it of ſome one inſtructor, who was William White: which being a ſcholer and folower of I. Wickliffe, reſorted afterward into thys country of Norfolke and there inſtructed theſe men in the light of the goſpell. And now as we haue declared the names and Articles of theſe good men, ſo it remayneth ſomewhat to ſpeake of theyr troubles how they were handled, beginning firſt with William White.

¶William White Prieſt.

W.White, Martyre.
Anno. 1428.
Ex Waldeno.
* Eccle.50.

This William White being a folower of Iohn Wickliff and a prieſt not after the common ſort of prieſts, but rather to be reputed amongſt the number of them, of whom the wiſe man ſpeaketh: * He was as the morning ſtarre in the midſt of a cloud, &c. This man was well learned, vpright & a well ſpoken prieſt. He gaue ouer his prieſthood & benefice, & took vnto him a godly yong woman to his wife named Ioane: notwithſtanding he did not therefore ceaſe or leaue frō his former office & duty, but continually labored to the glory and prayſe of his ſpouſe Chriſt, by reading, writing & preaching. The principal points of his doctrine were theſe, which he was forced to recant at Canterbury.

That men ſhould ſeeke for the forgeuenes of their ſins onely at the handes of God.

That the wicked liuing of the Pope and his holyneſſe, is nothing els but a deuiliſh eſtate and heauy yoke of Antichriſt, and therfore he is an enemy vnto Chriſtes trueth.

That men ought not to worſhip Images or other Idolatrous payntings.

That mē ought not to worſhip the holy men which are dead.

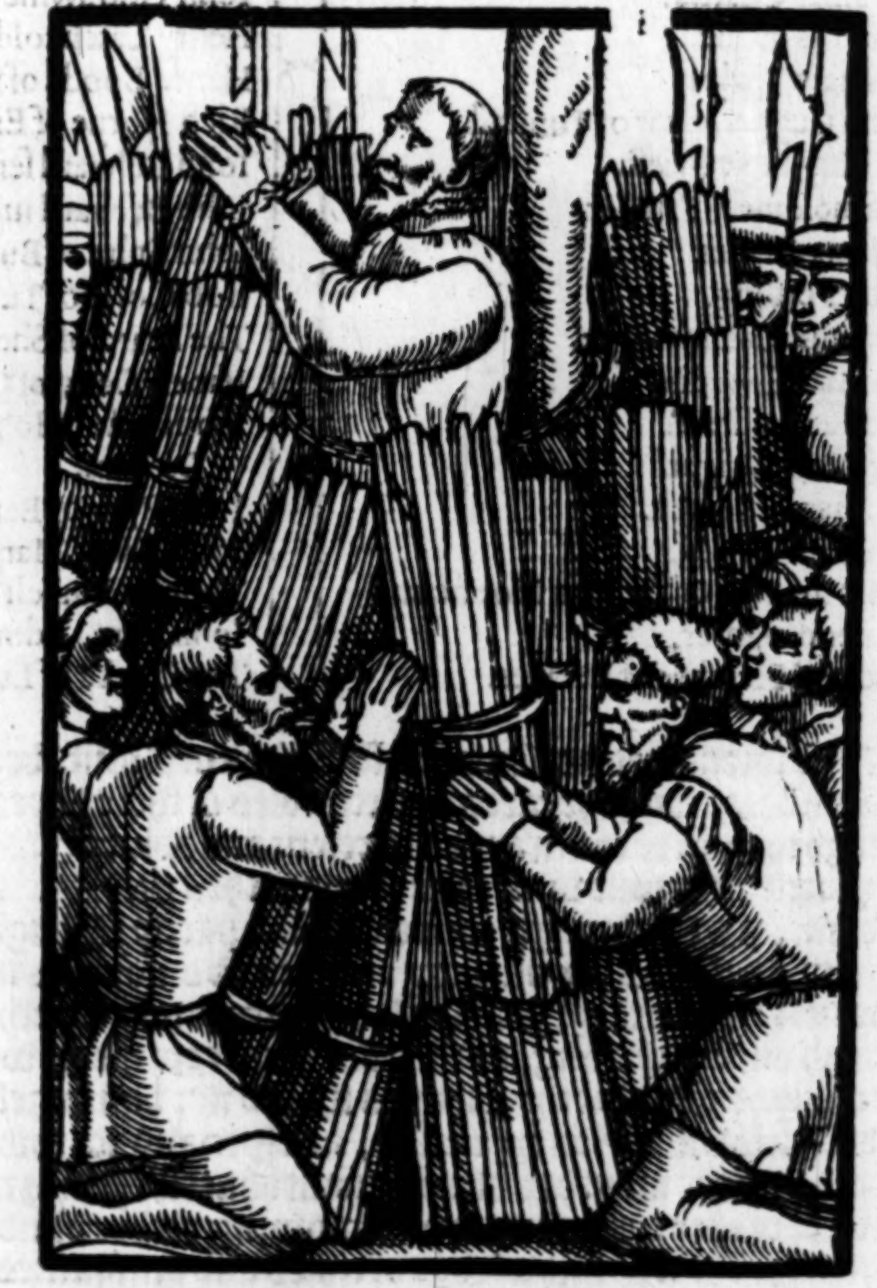
The Romiſh church aptly reſembled to the curſed fig tree.

That the Romiſh church is the fig tree which the Lord Chriſt hath accurſed, becauſe it hath brought forth no fruit of the true beliefe.

That ſuch as weare coules, or be annointed or ſhorne are the lanceknightes and ſouldiors of Lucifer: & that they all, becauſe theyr lamps are not burning, ſhall be ſhut out, when as the Lord Chriſt ſhall come.

Upon which articles he being attached at Cant. vnder the Archb. Henry Chicheſley in the yeare of our Lord 1424. there for a certayne ſpace ſtoutly and manly witneſſed the truth whiche he had preached: but like as there he loſt hys courage and ſtrength, ſo afterward he became again much more ſtouter and ſtronger in Ieſu Chriſt and confeſſed his own error & offence. For after this he going into Norfolk with his ſaid wife Ioane, & there occupying himſelf buſily in teaching & conuerting the people vnto the true doctrine of Chriſt, at the laſt by meanes of yͤ kings letters ſet down for that intent and purpoſe, he was apprehended & taken & brought before Wil. biſhop of Norwich, by whom he was conuict & condemned of 30. articles & there was burned in Norwich, in the moneth of September. an. 1424.

¶The burning of William White.



This William White and his wife had his moſt abode with one Tho. Moone of Ludney. This mā was of ſo deuout and holy life, that all yͤ people had him in great reuerence, and deſired him to pray for them: in ſo much that one Margaret Wright confeſſed, that if any ſayntes were to be prayd to, ſhe would rather pray to him then to any other. When he was come vnto the ſtake thinking to open hys mouth to ſpeak vnto the people, to exhort & confirme them in the verity, one of the biſhops ſeruants ſtroke hym on yͤ mouth, therby to force him to keepe ſilence. And thus thys good man receiuing the crowne of martyrdome, ended this mortall life to the great dolor & griefe of all the good men of Norfolke. Whoſe ſayd wife Ioane, folowing her huſbāds footſteps according to her power, teaching and ſowing abroad the ſame doctrine, confirmed many men in Gods truth: wherefore ſhe ſuffered much trouble and puniſhmēt the ſame yeare at the handes of the ſayd biſhop.

The biſhops man ſmiteth him on the mouth, exhorting the people.

Father Abraham, Iohn Waddon prieſt, martyrs and burned.

About the ſame time alſo was burned father Abraham of Colcheſter, and Ioh. Waddō prieſt, for the like articles.

Concerning them, which abiured, how & by whom they were examined, what depoſitions came in agaynſt them, and what was the order & maner of the penance inioyned them, here it might be ſet out at large: but for auoyding of prolixity, it ſhall be ſufficient briefly to touch certaine of the principals, wherby the better vnderſtanding may be geuē to the Reader, after what maner & order al the other were intreated.

Firſt amongſt them which were areſted and cauſed to abiure in this yeare afore ſpecified. 1428. was Thom. Pye, and Iohn Mendham of Aldborough, who being conuict vpon diuers of the Articles before mentioned, were enioined penance to be done in theyr own pariſh Church, as by the biſhops letter directed to the Deane of Rhodenhall, & ẏ pariſh prieſt of Aldborough, doth more at large appeare, the tenour wherof here enſueth.

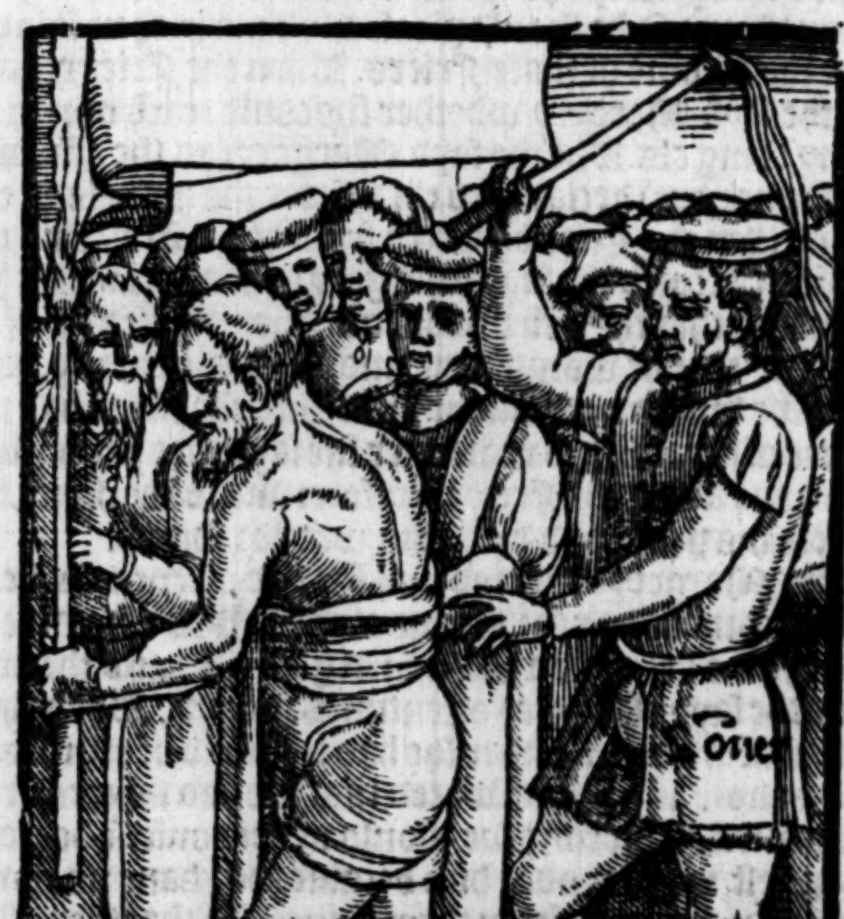
The copy of the Biſhop of Norwich his letter.

A letter of the biſhop of Norwich.

WIlliam by the ſufferance of God Biſhop of Norwich to our welbeloued ſonnes in Chriſt the Deane of Rodéhal of our Dioces, and to the pariſhe prieſt of the pariſh Churche of Aldborough of the ſame our dioces, health, grace and benediction. For ſo much as we, according to our office lawefully proceeding to the correction and amendment of the ſoules of Thomas Pye and Iohn Mendham of Aldborough of the dioces aforeſayd, becauſe they haue holden, beleued and affirmed, diuers and many errours and hereſyes, contrary to the determination of the holy Churche of Rome, and the vniuerſall church and catholicke fayth, haue enioyned the ſayd Thomas and Iohn appearing before vs perſonally and confeſsing before vs iudicially that they haue holden, beleued and affirmed, diuers and many errors and hereſyes, this penaunce hereunder written for theyr offences to be done and fulfilled in maner, forme and time hereunder written, according as iuſtice doth require, that is to ſay, ſixe fuſtigations or diſplinges about the pariſh church of Alborough aforeſayd, before a ſolemn proceſsion, ſixe ſeuerall ſondayes and three diſplinges about the market place of Herelſton of our ſayde Dioces, three principall market dayes, bare necked, head legs and feet, theyr bodyes being couered onely with theyr ſhyrtes and breeches either of them caryіng a taper in his hand of a pound waight, as well rounde about the Church, as about the market place, in euery of the foreſayd appoynted dayes, which tapers the laſt ſonday after theyr penance finiſhed, we will that the ſayde Iohn & Thomas do humbly and deuoutly offer vnto the high aultar of the pariſh church of Alborough at the tyme of the offertory of the high Maſſe the ſame day, and that either of them going about the market place aforeſayd: ſhall make foure ſeueral pauſes or ſtayes, and at euery of thoſe ſame pauſes, humbly and deuoutly receiue at your handes three diſplinges: Therefore we ſtraightly charge and commaunde you and either of you, ioyntly and ſeuerally by vertue of your obedience, that euery ſonday and market day, after the recept of our preſent commaundement, you do effectually admoniſhe and bring foorth the ſayde Thomas Pye and Iohn Mendam to begin and accompliſhe theyr ſayde penance, and ſo ſucceſsiuely to finiſh the ſame in maner and forme afore appoynted But if they wil not obey your monitions or rather our commaundementes in this behalfe, and begin and finiſh their ſayd penance effectuallye, you or one of you ſhall cite them peremptoryly that they or eyther of them appeare before vs or our Commiſſary, in the chappell of our palace at Norwich, the 12. day after the citatiõ ſo made if it be a court day, or els the next court day folowing, to declare if they or any of them haue any cauſe why they ſhould not be excommunicate for theyr manifeſt offence in this behalfe committed, according to the forme and order of lawe, and further to receiue ſuch puniſhmẽt, as iuſtice ſhall prouide in that behalfe. And what you haue done in the premiſſes, whether the ſayde Thomas and Iohn haue obeyed your admonitions, and performed the ſaid penance or no: we will that you or one of you which haue receiued our ſayd commaundement, for the execution thereof, do diſtinctly certify vs betwene this & the laſt day of Nouember next comming. Dated at our palace of Norwich vnder our Commiſſaryes ſeale, the 8. day of October. an. 1428.

The maner of the popes penaunce.

The deſcription of the penance of Tho. Pye, and Iohn Mendham.



This (gentle Reader) was for the moſt part, the order of theyr whole penaunce: howbeit, ſome were oftentimes more cruelly handled, & after theyr penance they were baniſhed out of the dioces, and other ſome more ſtraightly vſed by longer impriſõmẽt, wherof we will briefly rehearſe one or two for example.

Iohn Beuerley alias Battild,

Iohn Beuerley.

IOhn Beuerley alias Battild a labourer was attached by the Vicar of Sowthcreke, the pariſh prieſt of waterden and a lawyer, and ſo deliuered vnto Mayſter wil. Bernã the Byſhops Commiſſary, who ſent him to the Caſtle of Norwich there to be kept in irons: wheras afterward he being brought before the commiſſary, and hauing nothing proued agaynſt him, he took an othe, that euery yeare afterward he ſhould confeſſe his ſinnes once a yere to his curat and receiue the Sacrament at Eaſter, as other Chriſtians did: and for his offence was enioyned that the Friday and Saterday next after he ſhould faſt bread and water, and vpon the Saterday to be* whipped from the pallace of Norwich, going round about by Tomelands, & by S. Michaels Church by Cottle rew, and about the market, hauyng in his hand a waxe candle of two pẽce, to offer to ẏ image of the Trinity after he had done his penaunce. And for ſo much as he confeſſed that he had eatẽ fleſh vpõ Eaſter day and was not ſhriuen in all lent, nor receiued vpon Eaſter day, the iudge enioyned him that he ſhoulde faſt Tueſday, wedneſday and Friday in whitſonweke, hauing but one meale a day of fiſh and other whitte meates, and after hys penãce ſo done, he ſhould depart out of the dioces, & neuer come there any more.

* alias fuſtigated.

Iohn Skilley of Flixton Miller.

Iohn Skilley. The penance of Iohn Skilley.

IOhn Skilley of Flixton Miller being apprehended and brought before the biſhop of Norwich ẏ 14 day of March 1428. for holding & mayntayning the Articles aboue written, was therupon conuict and forced to abiure: and after his abiuration ſolemnly made (which here to auoyd tediouſnes we omit) he had a moſt ſharpe ſentence of penance pronoũced agaynſt him, the effect wherof being briefly collected, was this: That forſomuch as the ſaid Skilley was conuict by his owne confeſſion, for holding and mayntayning the Articles before written, and for receiuing certain good and godly mẽ into his houſe, as ſir wil. white prieſt, and Iohn wadden, whom they called famous, notorious, and damnable heretickes, and had now abiured the ſame, being firſt abſolued from the ſentence of excommunication which he had incurred by meanes of his opinions, he was enioyned for penaunce 7. yeares impriſonment in the monaſtery of Langley, in the dioces of Norwiche. And forſomuch as in times paſt, he vſed vpon the Fridayes to eate fleſh, he was enioyned to faſt bread & water euery Friday, by the ſpace of that 7. yeares to come, and that by the ſpace of 2. yeares next immediately after the 7. yeares expired, euery wedneſday in the beginning of Lẽt, & euery Maundy thurſday, he ſhould appeare before the biſhop or his ſucceſſor, or cõmiſſary for the time being, in the cathedrall church of Norwich together with the other penitentiaryes, to do open penance for his offences.

Beſides theſe there were diuers other of ẏ ſame cõpany which ẏ ſame yeare were forced to like abiuratiõ & penãce, And ſo to proceed to the next yeare following, which was 1429. there enſueth a great nũber in ẏ ſame regiſter, which were examined and did penaunce in like ſorte to the number of 16, or 17. In the number of whom was Iohn Baker otherwiſe called Vſher Tunſtall, who for hauing a booke with the Pater noſter, the Aue and Creed in Engliſh, and for certayn other articles of faſting, confeſſion and inuocation contrary to the determination of the Romiſh Church after much vexation for the ſame, was cauſed to abiure and ſuſtayne ſuch penaunce, as the other before him had done.

The ſtory of Margery Backſter.

Margery Backſter.

ANother was Margery Backſter, wife of Wil. Backſter wright in Marthã, the ſame yere accuſed: againſt whom one Ioane wife of Cliffelande was brought in by the biſhop, and cõpelled to depoſe, and was made to bring in, in forme following.

A woman brought in for witnes in the popes court. The Bee will ſtinge.

Firſt, that the ſayde Margerye Backſter did informe this deponent, that ſhe ſhould in no caſe ſweare, ſaying to her in engliſh, dame beware of the Bee, for euery Bee will ſting, and therefore take heede you ſweare not, neyther by God, neither by our Lady, neither by none other ſaynt: & if ye do contrary, the Bee will ſting your tongue and venome your ſoule.

Againſt Images

Itẽ, this deponẽt being demaũded by yͤ ſaid Margery, what ſhe did euery day at church, ſhe anſwered yͭ ſhe kneled down & ſaid 5. Pater noſters, in worſhip of the crucifixe, & as many Aue Maries in worſhip of our Lady. Whõ Margery rebuked ſaying: you do euill to kneele or pray to ſuch Images in yͤ churches, for God dwelleth not in ſuch churches, neither ſhall come downe out of heauen, & will geue you no more reward for ſuch prayer, then a candle lighted & ſet vnder the couer of the font, wil geue light by night to thoſe which are in the church: ſaying moreouer in engliſh, lewd wrightes, of ſtockes hew and forme ſuch croſſes and Images, and after that, lewd paynters glere thẽ with colours. And if you deſire ſo muche to ſee the true croſſe of Chriſt, I will ſhew it you at home in your owne houſe. Which this deponent being deſirous to ſee, the ſayd Margery ſtretching out her armes abroad, ſayd to this deponẽt this is the true croſſe of Chriſt, & this croſſe thou oughteſt and mayſt euery day beholde and worſhip in thine owne houſe, and therfore it is but vayne to run to the Church to worſhip dead croſſes and Images.

The ſacrament is not God.

Itẽ this deponent being demaunded by the ſaid Margery how ſhe beleued touching the ſacramẽt of the aulter, ſayd that ſhe beleued the Sacrament of the aulter after the conſecratiõ, to be the very body of Chriſt in forme of bread. To whom Margery ſayd: your beliefe is nought. For if euery ſuch Sacrament were God, & the very body of chriſt there ſhould be an infinite number of Gods, becauſe that a thouſand prieſts and more doe euery day make a thouſand ſuch Gods, and afterward eat them, and voyd them out again by theyr hinder partes filthily ſtincking vnder yͤ hedges, wheras you may find a great many ſuch Gods, if you will ſeek for them. And therfore know for a certaynty, that by the grace of God it ſhall neuer be my God, becauſe it is falſly and deceitfully ordeyned by the prieſts in the church, to induce the ſimple people to idolatry, for it is onely materiall bread.

Tho. Becket a traytour.

Thomas Becket ſlain, not before the aulter, but in his flying.

Moreouer the ſayd Margery ſaid to this deponẽt, that Thomas of Canterbury, whom the people called S. Thomas, was a falſe traytor and damned in hell, becauſe he iniuriouſly endowed the churches with poſſeſſions, and raiſed vp many hereſyes in the church, which ſeduce the ſimple people, and therefore if God be bleſſed, the ſayd Thomas is accurſed, and thoſe falſe prieſts that ſay that he ſuffered his death patiently before the aulter, do lye: For as a falſe cowardly traytor he was ſlayne in the church dore as he was flying away.

Father Abraham, W. White, I. Wadden.

Moreouer, this deponent ſayth, that the ſayd Margery told her that the curſed Pope, Cardinals, Archbiſhops, and biſhops, & ſpecially the biſhop of Norwich & others that ſupport and mayntayne hereſies and Idolatry, raigning & ruling ouer the people, ſhall ſhortly haue the very ſame or worſe miſchiefe fall vpon them, thẽ that curſed mã Thomas of Canterbury had. For they falſly and curſedly deceiue the people with theyr falſe mammetries & lawes, to extort mony of the ſimple folke to ſuſtayn theyr pride, riot and idlenes: And know aſſuredly that the vengeance of God will ſpeedely come vpõ them, which haue moſt cruelly ſlayne the children of God, Father Abraham, & William White, a true preacher of the law of God, and Iohn Wadden, with many other godly men: which vengeaunce had come vpon the ſayd Cayphas, the Biſhop of Norwich & his miniſters, which are members of the deuill, before this time, if the Pope had not ſent ouer thoſe falſe pardons vnto theſe parties, which the ſayd Cayphas had falſly obteyned to induce the people to make proceſſion for the ſtate of them and of the church. Which pardõs brought the ſimple people to curſed idolatry.

Againſt the popes faſting dayes.

Item the ſayd Margery ſayd to this deponent, that euery faythful man or woman is not bound to faſt in Lent, or other dayes appoynted for faſting by the church, & that euery man may lawfully eat fleſh and all other meates vpon the ſayd dayes and times: and that it were better to eat the fragments left vpõ Thurſday at night on yͤ faſting dayes, thẽ to go to the market to bring themſelues in debt to buy fiſh: and that Pope Silueſter made the Lent.

W. Whyte willing to ſpeake at the ſtake, was ſtroken on the mouth.

Item, the ſayd Margery ſayd to this deponẽt, that W. White was falſly condẽned for an hereticke, & that he was a good and holy mã, and that he willed her to folow him to the place of execution, wheras ſhe ſaw that whẽ he would haue opened his mouth to ſpeak vnto yͤ people to inſtruct them, a deuill one of biſhop Cayphas ſeruants ſtrake him on the lips, and ſtopped his mouth, that he could in no caſe declare the will of God.

Item, this deponent ſayth yͭ the ſayd Margery taught her that ſhe ſhould not goe on pilgrimage, neither to our Lady of Walſingame, nor to any other ſaynt or place.

Alſo this deponent ſayth, that the ſayd Margery deſired her that ſhe & Ioane her mayde would come ſecretly in the night to her chamber, & there ſhe ſhould heare her huſband read the law of Chriſt vnto them, which law is written in a booke that her huſbande was wont to reade to her by night, and that her huſband is well learned in the Chriſtian verity.

Alſo that the ſame Margery had talked with a woman named Ione Weſt, and that the ſayde woman is in a good way of ſaluation.

Alſo that the ſaid Margery ſaid to this deponẽt: Ione, it appeareth by your countenaunce, that you intend to diſcloſe this that I haue ſayde vnto you: and this deponent ſware that ſhe woulde neuer diſcloſe it, without the ſayde Margery gaue her occaſion. Then ſayde Margery vnto this deponent if thou do accuſe me vnto the Biſhop, I wil do vnto thee, as I did once vnto a certayne Frier a Carmelite of Yarmouth which was the beſt learned Frier in all the country. Then this deponẽt deſired to know what ſhe had done to the frier. Unto whom Margery anſwered that ſhe had talked with the ſayd Frier, rebuking him becauſe he did beg, ſaying that it was no almes to geue hym any good thing, except he would leaue his habite, and go to the plough, and ſo he ſhould pleaſe God more, then folowing the life of ſome of thoſe Friers. Then the Frier requyred of the ſayd Margery whether ſhe could teach him or tel him any thing els. Thẽ the ſayd Margery (as ſhe affirmed to this deponent) declared to this Frier the goſpels in engliſh, and then the Frier departed from her. After this the ſame Frier accuſed the ſayd Margery of hereſy, and ſhe vnderſtanding that the Frier had accuſed her: accuſed the Frier agayne, that he would haue knowne her carnally, and becauſe ſhe would not conſent vnto him, the Frier had accuſed her of hereſy. And moreouer ſhe ſayd that her huſbãd would haue killed the Frier therefore: and ſo the Frier for feare held his peace, and went his way for ſhame.

Agaynſt auricular confeſſion.

This Margery alſo ſayd that ſhe had oftentimes bene faynedly confeſſed to the Deane of the fieldes, becauſe he ſhould thinke her to be a woman of good life, and therfore he gaue the ſayd Margery oftentimes money. Then thys deponent aſked her whether ſhe had confeſſed her ſinnes to a prieſt or not. And ſhe anſwered that ſhe had neuer offended any prieſt, & therfore ſhe would neuer confeſſe her ſelfe to any prieſt, neyther obey him becauſe they haue no power to abſolue any man from theyr ſinnes, for that they offẽd dayly more greeuouſly then other men, and therefore that men ought to confeſſe themſelues onely vnto God and to no prieſt.

Againſt Image worſhip.

Item, the ſaid Margery ſaid to this deponent, that the people did worſhip deuils which fell frõ heauen with Lucifer, which deuils in theyr fall to the earth, entred into the Images which ſtand in the Churches, and haue long lurked & dwelled in thẽ, ſo that the people worſhipping thoſe Images, commit Idolatry.

Item, ſhe ſayd more to this deponent that holy bread & holy water were but trifles of no effect or force, & that the belles are to be caſt out of the Church, and that they are excommunicate which firſt ordeined them.

Moreouer that ſhe ſhould not be burned, although ſhe were conuict of Lollardy, for that ſhe had a charter of ſaluation in her body.

Alſo the ſayd deponent ſayth, yͭ Agnes Bethem her ſeruant being ſent to the houſe of the ſayd Margery the Saterday after Aſhweſday, the ſaid Margery not being wͭin, found a braſſe pot ſtanding ouer the fire with a piece of baken and Otemeale ſething in it, as it is ſaid Agnes reported to this deponent.

There were alſo beſides this deponent, diuers other ſworne and examined vpon the ſayde Margery, as Iohn Grimley and Agnes Berthẽ, ſeruauntes to William Cliſland, which altogether confirmed the former depoſitions.

Thus much we haue thought good to note as concerning Margery Backſter, which we haue gathered out of the old monumentes and regiſters. But what became of her after this her accuſation, becauſe we finde no mention made in the ſayd regiſters, we are not able to declare.

The ſame yeare alſo, were the like depoſitions made by one William Wright agaynſt diuers good men, as here foloweth.

Iohn Piry.
Iohn Bũgay
Iohn Vſher.

Firſt, this deponent ſayth that William Taylor, tolde Iohn Piry of Ludney, in the houſe of Iohn Bungay of Beghton, in the preſence of I. Bungay, Robert Grigges wright of Martham, and Iohn Vſher, that all the good men of Martham which were fauorers & helpers to that good man William White are euill troubled now a dayes, and that the ſayd William White, was a good & holy doctor: and that the beſt doctor after him was William Euerden, whiche wrought with the ſayde William Taylour, of Ludney by the ſpace of one moneth, and that the firſt Sonday of the ſame moneth, the ſayd William Euerden did ſit all day vpon the table at worke, ſaying to the ſayd William Taylor, that he would not go to Church to ſhew hymſelfe a Scribe or Phariſy: and the ſecond ſonday he put on Gentle mans apparell, and went to Norwiche to harken how the Byſhop and his miniſters vſed the poore Chriſtians there in priſon.

William Euerden.

Alſo the ſayd William Wright, depoſed that Willyam Taylour of Ludney was one of the ſecte, & went to London with Syr Hue Pye, and had conuerſation oftẽtimes with Syr William White, hauing often conference vpon the Lollardes doctrine.

W. Tailour of Ludney.

Item, that Aniſe, wife of Thomas Moone, is of the ſame ſect and fauored them, and receiueth them often, and alſo the daughter of Thomas Moone is partly of the ſame ſect, and can read Engliſh.

The wife & daughter of Tho. Moone

Item, that Richard Fletcher of Beckils, is a moſt perfect doctor in that ſect, and can very well and perfectly expound the holy Scriptures, & hath a booke of the new law in Engliſh, which was Syr Hughe Pyes firſt.

Rich. Fletcher.

Itẽ, that Nicolas Belward, ſonne of Iohn Belward dwelling in the pariſhe of Southelham, is one of the ſame ſect, and hath a new Teſtament which he bought at London for 4. markes and 40. pence, and taught the ſayd William Wright and Margery his wife, and wrought wyth them continually by the ſpace of one yere, and ſtudied diligently vpon the ſayd new Teſtament.

Nicho. Belware.

A new teſtament then coſt 4. markes and 40. pence

Itẽ, that Thomas Gremner Turner of Dychingame is perfect in that ſect and law.

Tho. Gremner.

Iohn Clarke the younger of Bergh, had the beddinge and apparell of William Euerden in his cuſtody, after the returne of William White from Bergh, and is of the ſame ſecte.

I. Clarke.

Item, William Bate, Taylour of Sething, and hys wife and his ſonne, whiche can reade Engliſhe very well, are of the ſame ſect.

W. Bate.

Item, William Skiruing of Sething, receiued Ioane the wife of W. White into his houſe, being brought thither by William Euerden, after theyr departure from Martham.

W. Skiruing

Item, William Oſborne of Sething, I. Reue glouer, and Bawdwin Cooper of Beckels are of the ſame ſect.

W Oſberne
Iohn Reue.
Bawdwin Cooper.
Iohn Pert.

Item, Iohn Pert late ſeruaunt of Thomas Moone, is of the ſame ſecte, and can read well, & did read in the preſence of William White, and was the firſt that brought Sir Hugh Pye into the company of the Lollardes, which aſſembled oftentimes together, at the houſe of the ſayd Tho. Moone, and there conferred vpon theyr doctrine.

Item, Syr Hugh Pye bequeathed to Alice, ſeruaunt to William White, a new Teſtament, which they then called the booke of the new law, & was in the cuſtody of Oſwald Godfrey of Colcheſter.

Sir Hugh Pie Prieſt.

Iohn Perker Mercer of a village by Ipſwitch, is a famous Doctour of that ſecte. Alſo he ſayd that father Abraham of Colcheſter is a good man.

I. Perker.

Item, the ſayd William Wright depoſeth that it is read in the Propheſies amonges the Lollardes, that the ſect of Lollardes ſhalbe in a maner deſtroyed: Notwithſtanding at the length the Lollards ſhall preuayle and haue the victory agaynſt all theyr enemyes.

A propheſi.

Alſo, he ſayd that Tucke knoweth all of that Sect in Suffolke, Norfolke and Eſſex.

Beſides theſe, there were many other the ſame yeare troubled, whoſe names being before expreſſed in the table of Norfolke men, here for breuityes ſake we omit further to intreat of, paſſing ouer to the next yere folowing, which was 1430. Ex Regiſt. Norw.

Ex Regiſt. Norw

IOhn Burrell ſeruaunt to Thomas Moone of Ludney, in the Dioces of Norwiche, was apprehended and arreſted for hereſy, the 9. day of December, in this yeare of our Lord 1430. and examined by Mayſter William Bernam the Biſhops commiſſary, vpon the articles before mentioned, and diuers others hereafter following, obiected agaynſt him.

Iohn Burrell.

In primis, that the Catholicke Churche is the ſoule of euery good Chriſten man.

Item, that no man is bounde to faſt the Lent or other faſting dayes appoynted by the Church, for they were not appoynted by God, but ordeyned by the prieſtes: and that euery man may eat fleſh or fiſh vpon the ſame dayes indifferently, according to his own will, & euery friday is a free day to eat both fleſh and fiſh indifferently.

Lent faſt, fiſhe dayes.

Item, that pilgrimage ought not to be made but onely vnto the poore.

Pilgrimage to the poore.

Item, that it is not lawefull to ſweare, but in caſe of life and death.

Item, that Maſſes and prayers for the deade, are but vayne, for the ſoules of the dead are eyther in heauẽ or hell: and there is none other place of purgatory but this world. Vpõ the which Articles he being cõuict, was forced to obiure and ſuffred like penance as the other before had done.

Maſſes for the dead vnprofitable.

THomas Moone of Ludney, was apprehended and attached for ſuſpition of hereſy, agaynſt whom were obiected by the Biſhop, the articles before written, but ſpecially this article, that he had familiarity & communication with diuers herretickes, and had receiued, comforted, ſupported, and mayntayned diuers of them, as ſir William White, ſyr Hugh Pye, Thomas Pert, and William Callis Prieſtes, with many other more: vpon the which articles, he being cõuict before the biſhop, was forced to abiure, and receiued the like penance, in like maner as before.

Tho. Moone of Ludney.

William White.
Hugh Pye.
Thomas Pert.
W. Callis, prieſts perſecuted.

In like maner Robert Grigges of Martham was brought before the Biſhop the 17. day of February, in the yeare aforeſayd, for holding and affirming the foreſayd articles, but eſpecially theſe hereafter folowing.

Robert Grigges of Martham.

That the ſacrament of confirmation miniſtred by the Byſhop, did auayle nothing to ſaluation.

Articles.

That it was no ſinne to withſtand the ordinaunces of the Church of Rome.

That holy bread and holy water were but trifles, and that the bread and the water were the worſe for the coniuracions & characters which the prieſtes made ouer them.

Vpon which Articles he being conuict, was forced to abiure, and receiued penance in maner and forme as the other had done before him.

The like alſo (albeit ſomewhat more ſharp) happened vnto Iohn Finch of Colcheſter, the 20. day of September, who albeit he was of the dioces of London, being ſuſpecte of hereſye, was attached in Ipſwich in the dioces of Norwich, & brought before the biſhop there, before whom he being conuict of the like articles: as all the other before him, was enioyned penance, three diſplings in ſolemne proceſſion about the Cathedrall Church of Norwich, three ſeuerall Sondayes, & three diſplinges about the market place of Norwich three principall market dayes, his head, necke and feet being bare, & his body couered onely with a ſhort ſhirt or veſture, hauing in his handes a taper of waxe of a pound waight, which the next Sonday after his penance, he ſhoulde offer to the Trinity: and that for the ſpace of 3. yeres after, euery Aſhwedneſday & Maundy Thurſday he ſhould appeare in the Cathedrall Church of Norwich, before the Biſhop or his Vicegerent, to do open penaunce amongeſt the other penitentiaries, for his offences.

Iohn Finch of Colcheſter.

Popiſhe penãce.

There were beſides theſe men which we haue here rehearſed, diuers and many other, who, both for the concordaunce of the matter, and alſo for that theyr Articles & puniſhmẽts were all one, we haue thought good at this time to paſſe ouer, eſpecially forſomuch as their names be before recited in the Catalogue.

ABout the ſame time, euen the ſame yeare. 1430. ſhortlye after the ſolemne Coronation of Kyng Henrye the ſixt a certayne manne named Richard Houeden a woll winder, and Citizen of Londõ, receiued alſo the crowne of Mar-

Nicholas Canon of Eye.

Nicholas Canō of Eye. Anno. 1431.

NOw to proceed in our ſtory of Norfolke and Suffolk in folowing the order of yeres, we finde that in yͤ yere of our Lord. 1431. one Nich. Canon of Eye was brought before the Biſhop of Norwich for ſuſpicion of hereſy, with certayne witneſſes ſworne to depoſe againſt him touching his maners and conuerſatiō, which witneſſes appointing one William Chriſtopher to ſpeak in the name of them all, he depoſed in maner and forme folowing.

First that on Eaſter day when all the pariſhners wēt about the church of Eye ſolemnely in proceſſiō as yͤ maner was, the ſayd Nicholas Canon as it were mocking & deriding the other pariſhioners, went about the Church the contrary way, and met the proceſſion.

Depoſitions.

This article he confeſſed and affirmed that he thought he did well in ſo doing.

Item, the ſayd Nicholas aſked of maiſter Iohn Colman of Eye, this queſtion. Maiſter Colman, what think you of the Sacrament of the aulter? To whome the ſayde Colman aunſwered: Nicholas, I thinke that the Sacramēt of the aultar is very God and very man, the very fleſh and very bloud of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt vnder forme of bread and wine. Unto whom Nicholas in deriſion ſayde: Truly if the Sacrament of the aultar be very God & very man, and the very body & bloud of our Lord Ieſu Chriſt: then may very God and very man be put in a ſmall roome: as when it is in the prieſts mouth, that receiueth it at mas. And why may not we ſimple men, as well eate fleſh vpon Fridayes and al other prohibited dayes, as the prieſt to eat the fleſh and the bloud of our Lord euery day indifferētly? The which article, the ſayd Nicholas denied that he ſpake vnto Maiſter Colman, but vnto a Monke of Hockeſney, And furthermore, he thought he had ſpoken well in that behalfe.

If the Sacramēt be very fleſhe, then the prieſts eat fleſhe on Friday.

Item that on Corpus Chriſti day at the eleuation of high maſſe, when all the pariſhioners & other ſtraungers kneeled downe holding vp their handes, and doing reuerence vnto the ſacrament, the ſayd Nicholas went behinde a piller of the church, and turning his face from the high aulter, mocked them that did reuerence vnto the ſacrament.

This article he alſo acknowledging, affirmed that he beleued himſelfe to do well in ſo doing.

Item, when his mother would haue the ſaid Nicholas to lift vp his right hand, and to croſſe himſelfe frō yͤ craftes and aſſaults of the deuill, forſomuch as he deferred the doing therof, his mother tooke vp his right hād & croſſed him ſaying: In nomine patris filij, & ſpiritus ſācti. Amen. Which ſo ended, the ſayde Nicholas immediately deriding hys mothers bleſſing, tooke vp his right hand of his owne accord, and bleſſed him otherwiſe, as his aduerſaryes reporte of him. This Article the ſayde Nicholas acknowledged to be true.

Item, that vpon Alhallowen day in the time of eleuation of high maſſe, when as many of the pariſhioners of Eie lighted many torches and caried thē vp to the high aultar kneling down there in reuerence and honor of the Sacrament, the ſayd Nicholas carying a torche, went vp hard to the high aultar, and ſtanding behind the prieſtes backe ſaying maſſe, at the time of the eleuation he ſtood vpright vpō his feet, turning his back to the prieſt, and his face toward the people, and would do no reuerence vnto yͤ ſacrament. This article he acknowledged, affirming that he thought he had done well in yͤ behalfe. All which Articles the Byſhops cōmiſſary cauſed to be copied out word for worde, & to be ſēt vnto M. William Worſted, Prior of the cathedrall church of Norwich, and to other doctors of diuinity of the order of begging Friers, that they might deliberate vpon them, and ſhew their mindes betwene that and Thurſday next folowing. Upon whiche Thurſdaye being the laſt of Nouember, the yeare aforeſayd, the ſayd Nicholas was agayne examined before M. Barnam and diuers other vpō two other articles which he had confeſſed vnto I. Exetor notary, & Tho. Geruſten bacheler of diuinity and others. Whereof the firſt Article was this: that the ſayd Nicholas Canon being of perfect minde and remembrance, confeſſed that he doubted whether in the Sacrament of the aulter, were the very body of Chriſt or no. This article he confeſſed before the Commiſſary to be true.

Nicholas Canon turned his backe to the ſacrament.

An other examination of Nicholas Canon.

Item, that he beyng of perfecte minde and remembraunce, beleued that a man ought not to cōfeſſe his ſinnes to a Prieſt. This Article he alſo confeſſed that he doubted vpon.

Articles obiected.

Now remayneth to declare what theſe doctors aforeſayd concluded vpon the articles: whoſe aunſwere vnto the ſame was this.

First of all as touching the firſt article, they ſayde that the article in the ſame termes as it was propoūded, is not ſimply an hereſy but an error.

The iudgement of the Prior and doctors vpon his articles.

Item, as touching the ſecond article, the doctors agree as in the firſt.

Item, as touching the third Article, they affirme that it is an hereſy.

Unto the fourth Article they aunſwered as vnto the firſt and ſecond.

Item, the doctors affirme the 5. article to be an hereſy.

Item, as touching the 6. Article, the doctors conclude that if the ſayd Nicholas being of perfect mind and remēbrance, did doubt whether the ſacrament of the aulter were the very perfect body of Chriſt or no, then that Article is ſimply an hereſy.

An hereſie to doubt whether the ſacrament be the perfect body of Chriſt or no.

Whereupon the ſayd Commiſſary declared & pronounced the ſayd Nicholas Canon vpō the determinatiō of the foreſaid doctors, to be an heretick: and therupon forced the ſayd Nicholas to abiure all the ſayd Articles. That done, he enioined the ſayd Nicholas penance for his offēces, thre diſplinges about the cloyſter of the Cathedrall Churche of Norwich, before a ſolemne proceſſion, bare headed & barefoote, carying a Taper of halfe a pound in his hand, going after the maner aforeſayd, like a mere penitētiary: yͤ which his penance, the iudge commaunded ſhould be reſpited vntill the comming of the Biſhop into his dioces, and that in the meane time he ſhould be kept in priſon, to the end that he ſhould not infect the flock with his venime and poyſon of errors and hereſyes.

Nicholas Canon declared an hereticke.

Penance enioyned to Nicholas Canon.

Thus haue we briefly diſcourſed vnto you, the greate troubles and afflictions, which happened in Norfolke and Suffolke by the ſpace of thoſe 4. yeares before mentioned, hauing drawen out briefly for euery yere, certayne notable examples, sufficient for the declaration of all the reſt, for ſo much as their opinions being nothing different, their penaunce and puniſhment did alſo nothing differ, otherwiſe then by thoſe particuler examples may be playnely ſeene.

✠ The ſtory of Thomas Rhedon, a French man, and a Carmelite Frier, burnt in Italy for the profeſsion of Chriſt.

Tho. Rhedonenſis, Martir.
Ex Antonin. 3 parte hiſt. fol. 165.
Tho. Rhedonenſis cōmeth into Italy.
The golden citie of Rome.
All thinges corrupt at Rome.

WE haue declared before, how this cruell ſtorme of perſecution which firſt began with vs in England, after it had long raged heere againſt many good and godly men, it brake out & paſſed into Boheme, and after within a ſhort time, the fire of this perſecution increaſing by little and little, inuaded Scotland, and from thence now wyth greater force and violence, this furious deuouring flame hath entred Italy, and ſuffereth not any part of the world to be free from the murther and ſlaughter of moſt good & godly men. It hapned about this time, that one Thomas Rhedon, a Frier of that ſect, which taketh his name of the mount Carmelus, by chance came with the Venetiā Ambaſſadours into Italy. This mā, although he was of that ſort and ſecte, which in ſtead of Chriſtians, are called Carmelites, yet was he of a farre other religion, & vnderſtood the word of God, iudging that God ought not to be worſhipped, neither in that mount, nor at Ieruſalem onely, but in ſpirit & truth. This man being a true Carmelite, & ſauoring with his whole hart that new ſweet muſt of Ieſu Chriſt, with earneſt ſtudy & deſire ſeeking after a Chriſtiā integritie of life, prepared himſelfe firſt to go into Italy, truſting yͭ he ſhould find there, or elſe in no place, ſome by whoſe good life and liuing he might be edified and inſtructed. For where ought more aboundance of vertue & good liuing to be, then in that place, which is counted to be the forte and fountaine of all religion? And how could it otherwiſe be, but that wheras ſo great holines is profeſſed, whereupon all mens eies are bent, as vpon a ſtage, whereas S. Peters ſeate is, and is thought to be the ruler & gouernour of all the Church, all things ſhould floriſh and abound worthy of ſo great expectatiō in that place? This holy man hauing theſe things before his eies, and conſidering the ſame with himſelfe, forſooke his owne countrey & Citie, & went vnto Rome, conceiuing a firme & ſure hope, that by the example of ſo many notable and worthy mē, he ſhould greatly profite in godlines & learning: but the ſucceſſe of the matter did vtterly fruſtrate his hope, for all things were cleane cōtrary. Whatſoeuer he ſaw, was nothing elſe but meere diſſimulatiō and hypocriſie. In ſtead of gold, he found nothing but coales: and for to ſay yͤ truth, he found nothing elſe there but gold and ſiluer. In ſtead of heauenly gifts, there raigned amongſt them the pompe and pride of the world. In place of godlines, riot. In ſtead of learning and ſtudy, ſlouthfulnes and ſuperſtition. Tyrannie and hautineſſe of mind had poſſeſſed the place of Apoſtolicke ſimplicitie: that now there remained no more any place or libertie for a man to learne that whiche hee knew not, or to teach that which he perfectly vnderſtoode.

The wickednes & pride that raigneth at Rome
The corruptiō of Rome will admitte no reformation.
Pietie rewarded with perſecutiō.
Hereſie made, where none is.
Popery armed with policie and defended with tirannie.

Finally, all things were turned arſie verſie, all things hapned vnto him contrary to his expectation whereſoeuer he went. But nothing ſomuch offended this good mās mind, as the intolerable ambition, and pompous pride in them, whome example of humilitie ſhould eſpecially commend and praiſe to the whole worlde. And albeit that hee ſaw here nothing, which did accord & agree with the rule of the Apoſtles: yet theſe things did ſo much paſſe all meaſure and pacience, that he could by no meanes refraine his tong in ſo great abuſe and corruption of the Church, ſeing ſuch ambitious pride in their buildings, apparell, in their places, in their daintie fare, in their great traynes of ſeruants, in their horſſe and armour, & finally in all things pertaining vnto them. Which things, how much they did vary from the preſcript rule of the Goſpel, ſo much yͤ more was this good mā forced to ſpeake. Albeit he did well vnderſtand how litle he ſhoulde preuaile by ſpeaking: for if admonition would profite any thing at all, the bookes of Wickleffe and diuers other were not wanting. The famous teſtimonies of Iohn Hus, & of Hierome of Prage, and their bloud ſhed for the ſame, was yet preſent before their eies: at whoſe moſt effectual exhortations, they were ſo little correct and amended, that they ſeemed twiſe more cruell than they were before. Yet all this could not feare this good man, but that in ſo neceſſary and wholeſome an office, he would ſpend his life if need ſhould be. So by this meanes, he which came to be a ſcholer vnto others, was now forced to be their teacher. And he which determined to follow other mens liues and maners, had now contrarywiſe ſet before them his life to be marked and followed. For he liued ſo amongſt them, that his life might be a rule vnto them all, and ſo taught, as he might alſo be theyr ſchoolemaiſter. For euen as Paule had foreſhewed vnto ſuch as deſired to liue godly in Chriſt, that they ſhoulde ſuffer perſecution: ſuch like reward hapned vnto this mā. He gaue vnto them the fruite of godlineſſe, whiche they ſhould follow: they againe ſet vpon his head the diademe of Martirdome. He ſheweth them the way to ſaluation, and they for the benefite of life rewarded him death: and whereas no rewards had bene worthy for his greate labours and trauailes, they with moſt extreame ignominie perſecuted him euen vnto the fire. For when as by continuall preaching he had gotten great enuie and hatred, the rulers began to conſult together, by what meanes they might circumuent this mans life. Heere they had recourſe to their accuſtomed remedies: for it is a peculiar and continuall cuſtome amongſt the prelates of the Church, that if any man did diſpleaſe them, or that his talke be not according to their minde, or by any meanes hurtfull, or a hinderance to their lucre and gaine, by and by they frame out Articles of ſome hereſie, which they charge him withall. And like as euery liuing thing hath his peculiar and proper weapon to defend himſelfe from harme, as nature hath armed the Bore with his tuſkes, the Hedgehogge with his prickles, the Lyon is feared for his clawes, the Dogge for his biting, the Bull fighteth with his hornes, neither doth the Aſſe lacke his houes to ſtrike withall: euen ſo this is the only armour of the Biſhops, to ſtrangle a man with hereſie, if he once go about to mutter againſt their will and ambition: which thing may be eaſily perceiued and ſeene in this moſt holy man, beſide a greate number of other. Who, when as now he began to waxe greeuous vnto them, and could no longer be ſuffred: what did they? ſtraightwayes flee vnto their old policies, and as they had done with Hus, and Hierome of Prage, euen ſo went they about to practiſe againſt this man. They ouerwhelme him with ſuſpition, they ſeeke to intangle him with queſtions, they examine him in iudgement, they compile Articles againſt him, and lay hereſie vnto hys charge, they condemne him as an hereticke, and beeing ſo condemned, they deſtroy and kill him. This was theyr godlines: this was the peaceable order of thoſe Carmelites, whoſe religion was to weare no ſword nor ſhield, notwithſtanding they did beare in their hearts, malice, rancour, vengeāce, poiſon, craft and deceipt, ſharper then any ſword. With how great care and policie is it prouided by law, that none of theſe Cleargy men ſhould fight wyth ſword in the ſtreates? when as in iudgement and accuſations (where as it is not lawfull for a man to oppreſſe his brother) there is no murtherer which hath more readie vengeaunce, or that doth more vily eſteeme his brothers ſoule then they. They ſhead no bloud themſelues, they ſtrike not, nor kill, but they deliuer them ouer vnto others to be ſlaine. What difference is there I pray you, but that they are the authours, and the other are but the miniſters of the cruell fact? they kill no man as murtherers do. How then? Although not after the ſame ſort, yet they do it by another meane.

His articles.

The Articles which they falſly gathered againſt thys man, are affirmed by ſome to be theſe.

That the Church lacketh reformation, and that it ſhall be puniſhed and reformed.

That Infidels, Iewes, Turkes, and Moores ſhall bee conuerted vnto Chriſt in the later dayes.

That abhominations are vſed at Rome.

That the vniuſt excommunication of the Pope, is not to be feared: and thoſe which do not obſerue the ſame, do not ſinne or offend.

But yet there lacked a miniſter for theſe articles: albeit he could not long be wanting at Rome, where all things are to be ſold, euen mens ſoules. For this office and miniſtery, there was no man thought more meete, then William of Rowne, Cardinall of Sainct Martines in the Mount, Vicechancelour of the Court of Rome. Eugenius at that time was Pope, who had a litle before ſucceded Pope Martin aboue mentioned. Before the whyche Eugenius, this godly Rhedonenſis the Frenchman, was brought, and from thence ſent vnto priſon. And againe after his impriſonment, and diuers and ſondry greeuous torments, he was brought before the Iudges. The wolfe ſate in iudgement: the Lambe was accuſed. Why? becauſe he had troubled the ſpring. But heere neede not manie words. This good Thomas, not beeing able to reſiſt the malice of theſe mighty potentates, had offended inough, and was caſely conuict and condemned to be burned: but in ſuch ſort, as firſt of all he ſhould be depriued of all ſuch degrees as he had taken to Prieſthode: For it is counted an vnlawfull thing, that a Prieſt ſhould be puniſhed with prophane puniſhment, when as notwithſtanding it is lawfull inough for Prieſts to put any lay man to death, be he neuer ſo giltles.

Thomas degraded.

How religiouſly and earneſtly do they forſee, that the maieſty of Prieſtly dignitie ſhould not in any caſe be hurt? But how little care haue they, that their conſciences bee not hurt with falſe iudgements, and oppreſſing the giltles? wherefore, before that he ſhould come vnto puniſhment, this good man muſt be diſgraded. The order and maner of this Popiſh degrading is partly before touched in the ſtory of william Taylor, fol. 517.

And thus through the crueltie of theſe moſt tyrannous Prelates, this bleſſed Martyr dyed. Pope Eugenius. 4.

After the death of Pope Martine, who reigned foureteene yeares, ſucceeded Eugenius, the fourth of that name, about the yeare of our Lord 1431. Of whome Antoninus thus writeth, that he was much geuen to wars, as may well declare his conflictes and fighting with the Romaines: alſo the battailes betweene the Venetians and the Florentians.

This Pope began firſt to celebrate the Councell of Baſill, which Councell Martin his predeceſſour had before intended, according to the inſtitution of the Councell of Conſtance. Notwithſtanding the ſaid Eugenius perceauing afterward this Councell of Baſill not to fauour him and his doings, and fearing ſome detriment to come to him by the ſame, afterward laboured by all ſubtill practiſe to diſſolue and interrupt the ſaide Councell, and from Baſill to tranſlate it firſt to Ferraria, then to Florentia, more neere to his owne ſea of Rome. Concerning the which Councell of Baſill, forſomuch as we haue begon heere to make mention, it ſhall be no great digreſſion out of the way, to diſcourſe ſomething thereof (the Lorde ſo permitting) more at large, ſo much as for the moſt principall matters thereof ſhall ſeeme ſufficient or neceſſary to be knowne.

¶ Heere foloweth the order and maner of the Councell of Baſill, touching the principall matters concluded therein, briefly collected and abridged heere in this preſent booke: The reſt wherof we haue referred vnto our former edition, wherein the full diſcourſe of the whole diſputation is to be ſeene more at large, for ſuche as haue liſt and leiſure to ſee more thereof.

The Councell of Baſil.

Ex Aenea Sylvio. Ex Cocleo in Hiſt. Huſsit. Et ex paralipom. Abbat. Vrſperg.

IN the 39. ſeſſion of the Councell of Conſtance (as is before mentioned, page. 594.) it was decreed and prouided concerning the order and times of ſuch generall Councels as ſhould heereafter followe: The firſt that ſhoulde next enſue, to be kept the fift yeare after the ſaid Councell of Conſtance: the ſecond to be holden the ſeauenth yeare after that, and ſo orderly all other to follow ſucceſſiuely from ten yeare to ten yeare. wherefore, according to this decree, followed a generall Councell, fiue yeares after the Councell of Conſtance, celebrate and holden at Sene, vnder Pope Martine, an. 1424. but it ſoone broke vp. After the which Councell, the tearme of ſeauen yeares being expired, another Councell was holden at Baſill, in the yere of our Lord 1431. The which Councell is noted to haue bene the moſt troubleſome, and to haue endured longer then any other Councell beforetime celebrate and holden in the Church. This Councell continued almoſt the ſpace of ſeauenteene yeares: wherein it was concluded, as before in the Councel of Conſtance, that the generall Councels were aboue the Pope, and both of theſe two Councels did attribute the chiefe authoritie in decreeing and determining vnto the generall Councell: which is the cauſe that the contrary part doth derogate ſo much from the authoritie of this preſent Councell.

The death of P. Martin

Pope Eugenius. 4.

when as Pope Martine the fift had appointed Iulian, Cardinall and Deacon of S. Angell, his Legate, to celebrate and holde a generall Councell at Baſill for the reformation of the Churche, and rooting out of hereſies, within ſhort ſpace after Pope Martin died, in whoſe ſeate Eugenius the fourth ſucceeded, who confirmed vnto the ſaid Cardinall Iulian, the ſame authoritie which his predeceſſor before had giuen him. Vnto this Councell of Baſill beeing begon, came the Emperour Sigiſmund, who during his life time, with his preſence and authoritie, did protect and defend the ſaid Synode. After the Emperours death, Pope Eugenius altering his former minde & purpoſe, would tranſport the Councell vnto Bononie, and thereby hindred the ſucceſſe of the Councell of Baſill. And firſt he helde a contrary Councell at Ferraria, and afterward at Florence: For after the death of the Emperour Sigiſmund, there was no Princes or noble men, that had any care or regard of the Councell. Eugenius the Pope pretended cauſes, as touching the Greekes, which ſhould come vnto the Councell, and the vniting of their Church vnto the weſt Church, the which Greekes woulde in no wiſe paſſe the Alpes: Alſo as touching his owne incommoditie, that he could not come vnto Baſill being ſo long a iourney, and that all his men might haue eaſie acceſſe vnto Bononia, and that amongſt the Germaines (which in their owne countrey are ſo intractable) nothing can be attempted for their reformation: wherupon he cited Cardinall Iulian and the fathers of the Councel vnto Bononia, vnder great penaltie. They againe cited the Pope, that either he ſhould come himſelfe vnto the Councell, or ſend Ambaſſadors vnder the like penaltie. For this cauſe the Ambaſſadours of Albert King of the Romaines, and of the other Princes of Germany, aſſembled together firſt at Norenberge, and when as they coulde determine nothing there, they aſſembled againe at Frankford, to appeaſe the diſſention betweene the Councell and the Pope: for it was thought, that the Electors of the Empire might beſt aſſemble and meete in that place. In the meane time, the Emperours Ambaſſadours, and the Ambaſſadours of the Electors, went vnto Baſill, and hauing conference with the Ambaſſadours of the other Princes which were there, they did earneſtly exhort the fathers of the Councell, that they would embrace and receiue the vnitie, which they they would offer. The requeſt of the Princes was, that the fathers would tranſport the Councell, and go vnto another place: the which onely thing Pope Eugenius ſeemed alwaies to ſeeke and deſire, that therby he might either diuide the fathers of yͤ Councell, or take away their libertie.

Notwithſtanding this ſacred Synode thought good neither to deny the princes requeſt, nor to graunt that, which Pope Eugenius required. During this doubt, the Emperours Ambaſſadours, the Biſhops of Patauia and Auguſta (being much required and ſtirred thereunto) appointed a noble and valiant Baron called Conrad weinſperge, by the Kings commandement, to be Protector and defender of the Councell, and the fathers. whereby as the enemies perceiued the Emperours minde to be alienate from the Pope, ſo the Fathers of the Councell vnderſtood his good will towards them: forſomuch as he would not haue ſent them a protector, if he had not iudged it a lawfull Councell: neither againe would he haue iudged it a Coūcell in Baſill, if he had geuen credit to Pope Eugenius. But by meanes of a great peſtilēce which began to grow, the aſſembly that ſhould haue bene holden at Frankford, was tranſported vnto Mentz. The Ambaſſadours of the princes alſo thought good to go thether, if they might find any meanes of vnity, whereby they might vnite and knit the Pope againe vnto the Councell.

The princes aſſembled at Mentz, to make vnitie betweene the councell & the pope.

The aſſembly was very famous, for there were preſent the Archbiſhops of Mentz, Colen & Treuers, Electours of the ſacred Empire, and all the Ambaſſadours of the other Electours. Notwithſtanding, the Archbiſhop of Colen was the chiefe fauourer of yͤ Coūcell in this aſſembly, who with all his labour and diligēce went about to bring the matter vnto a good ende. Rabanus the Archbiſhop of Treuers ſhewed himſelf ſomewhat more rough. The ſacred Synode alſo thought good to ſend thether their Ambaſſadours, and appointed out the Patriarke of Aquileia, the Biſhop of Vicene, and the Biſhop of Argen diuines, John Segouius, and Thomas de Corcellis, with diuers others. Ther was no mā ther preſent which would name himſelfe the Ambaſſadour of Eugenius: Albeit there were many of his fauourers and frends come thether, both frō the Coūcell, and alſo out of Florēce, the which, albeit they had ſworne to the contrary, yet fauoured they more Eugenius then the Councell. But the chiefe Hercules of all the Eugenians, was Nicholas Cuſanus, a man ſingularly well learned, and of great experience. After diuers cōſultations had, the Electours of the Empire, and the Ambaſſadours of the other Princes of Germany, thought good to geue out commandement throughout their whole nation and countrey, that the Decrees of the Councell of Baſill ſhould be receiued and obſerued.

whileſt theſe things were thus debated at Mentz, there ſprang a certaine very doubtfull queſtion amongſt the Diuines, which remained at Baſill, whether Eugenius might be called an heretike, which had ſo rebelliouſly contemned the commaundements of the Church. Hereupon they gathered thēſelues together, diſputing long amongſt themſelues, ſome affirming, and otherſome holding the negatiue part. Vpon this their diſputation, there aroſe three ſeuerall opinions, ſome affirming that he was an hereticke, otherſome, not onely an Hereticke, but alſo a relapſe. The third ſort would neither grant him to be an hereticke nor a relapſe. Amongſt theſe diuines, the chiefe and principal both in learning and authority, was the Biſhop of Ebrun, Ambaſſadour of the king of Caſtell, and a certaine Scottiſh Abbot: which, as two moſt valiant Champions, ſubdued all their enemies, ſo that all the reſt did either conſent vnto their argumēts, or gaue place vnto thē, and ſo their determinatiō tooke place, and Eugenius was pronounced both an heretike and relapſe. Eight concluſions were there determined and allowed amongſt the Diuines, which they called verities: the copie whereof they did diuulgate throughout all Chriſtendome.

Three opinions touching the Pope.

The Ambaſſadours returne frō Mentz.

when the Ambaſſadours of the Councell were returned from Mentz, and that certain report was made of the allowing of their decrees, the fathers of yͤ Coūcel thought good to diſcuſſe the cōcluſiōs of the diuines more at large. whereupon, by the commandement of the deputies, al the Maiſters and Doctours & Cleargy, were called together, with all the reſidue of the Prelates, into the Chapterhouſe of the greate Churche, there openly to diſpute and diſcuſſe Eugenius hereſie. The which thing ſore greeued the Byſhop of Millaine, fearing leaſt this diſputation would worke the depriuation of Eugenius, the which, as he ſaid, he had alwaies letted for feare of ſchiſme: wherfore he ceaſed not by all manner of waies to labour, to ſtop & trouble the matter, exhorting thē that were abſent by his letters, and encouraging thoſe that were preſent by his words, to the defēce of Eugenius. But at the laſt, there was a great aſſembly in the Chapter houſe, ſome commyng thether to diſpute, and other ſome to heare. This diſputation continued ſixe dayes, both forenoone and afternoone, amongeſt whō Cardinall Lodouicus Archbiſhop Arelatenſis, was appointed as Iudge and Arbiter of the whole diſputatiō: who beſide many other notable vertues, was both valiaunt & conſtaunt. Nicolas Amici, which was alſo a Proctor of the faith, a famous mā amongſt the Diuines of Paris demaunded of euery man what their opinion was. John Deinlefiſt, publicke Notary, wrote euery mās ſentence and iudgement. The concluſions of the Diuines, whiche were the ground and foundation of their diſputation, were theſe here following.

The Popes hereſie diſcuſſed.

The biſhop of Millaine taketh Eugenius part for feare of a ſchiſme.

Concluſions of the diſputation.

1. It is a veritie of the Catholicke fayth, that the ſacred generall Councell, hath power ouer the Pope, or any other Prelate.

2. The Pope cannot by his owne authoritie, either diſſolue tranſport or proroge, the generall Coūcell being lawfully congregate, without the whole conſent of the Councell: and this is of like veritie.

3. He which doth obſtinately reſiſt theſe verities, is to be counted an hereticke.

4. Pope Eugenius the fourth hath reſiſted theſe verities, when as at the firſt, by the fulneſſe of his Apoſtolicke power, he attempted to diſſolue or to tranſport the Councell of Baſill.

5. Eugenius being admoniſhed by the ſacred Councell, did recant the errours repugnaunt to theſe verities.

6. The diſſolution or tranſlation of the Councell attempted the ſecond tyme by Eugenius, is agaynſt the foreſayd verities, and containeth an inexcuſable errour touchyng the fayth.

7. Eugenius in going about to diſſolue and tranſport the Coūcell agayne, is fallen into his before reuoked errours.

8. Eugenius beyng warned by the Synode, that hee ſhould reuoke the diſſolution or trāſlation the ſecond time attempted: after that his contumacie was declared, perſeuering in his rebellion and erecting a Councell at Ferraria, ſhewed himſelfe thereby obſtinate.

Theſe were the cōcluſiōs which were read in yͤ Chapter houſe before the fathers of yͤ Coūcell. Vpon the which, when they were deſired to ſpeake their mindes, they all, in a maner, cōfirmed & allowed them. Notwithſtāding Panormitane Archbiſhop, diſputed much againſt them. Likewiſe did the Biſhop of Burgen the king of Arrogons Almoner. Yet did they not gaynſay the 3. firſt cōcluſions, but onely thoſe wherein pope Eugenius was touched. This Panormitane as he was ſubtill, ſo did he ſubtelly diſpute agaynſt the laſt cōcluſiōs, endeuouring himſelfe to declare that Eugenius was not relapſed, & had great contention with the Biſhop of Argens, John Segouius, & Frāūces de Fure, Deuines. He diuided the Articles of the faith into three ſortes: ſtraightly: as in the Creede: largely, as in the declarations made by yͤ Church, moſt largely of all, as in thoſe things which riſe of the premiſſes, affirming that Eugenius did by no meanes violate his fayth in his firſt diſſolution that he made, becauſe it is not contayned in the Creede, neither yet in the determinations of the Church, that the Pope cannot diſſolue the Councels: & that it ſeemeth not vnto him to riſe of yͤ determination before made, but rather of the decrees of the Councell of Conſtāce: And further, that this, as a caſe omitted, is reſerued for yͤ Pope to be diſcuſſed, forſomuch as in the chapter beginning Frequēs, it appeareth that the place where the Coūcell ſhould be kept, ought to be choſen by the Pope, the Councell allowing the ſame, and nothing is therof at all ſpoken. And if peraduēture Eugenius had offended in the firſt diſſolution, notwithſtāding he ought to be holdē excuſed, becauſe he did it by the Coūcell of the Cardinals, repreſenting the Church of Rome: whoſe authoritie he ſayd to be ſuch, that the iudgemēt therof ſhould be preferred before all yͤ world. Neither had there bene any ſacred Coūcell found to haue proceeded agaynſt Eugenius as an hereticke, & that is an euident ſigne, that the Councell hath not thought him to haue ſwarued from the faith, neither to haue any occaſion, that he ſhould be called hereticke for his errours reuoked, & that he himſelfe hath read the whole text, that the Pope did not reuoke the diſſolutiō as cōtrary vnto the faith, but as breding offence: Alſo that yͤ laſt diſſolutiō hath no ſuch cauſe in it: forſomuch as likewiſe he had done it by yͤ coūſell of the Cardinals, and for the vniting of the Greekes, that he might not be compelled in a criminall cauſe, to aūſwere by his procuratour, whē as he being letted by ſickenes, could not come perſonally. So, for as much as in the firſt diſſolutiō Eugenius hath fallē into no errour of faith, he cannot be perſwaded that he cā be called a relapſe, for ſo much much as he neither in the firſt, neither yet in the ſeconde diſſolution did violate his faith.

Panormitane ſpeaketh againe for the Pope.

Articles of faith deuided into 3. ſortes.

The pope no relaps, but prolaps.

Iohn Segouius anſwereth to Panormitane.

The pope neglecting to doe good, is a member, not of chriſt, but of the deuil.

This Oration of Panormitane was more praiſed then allowed of all men. Notwithſtanding this effect it wrought, that afterward this word relapſe was taken out of the cōcluſions, & in ſtead therof this word prolapſe put in. Neither durſt Panormitane himſelfe, altogether excuſe Eugenius of hereſie, but defended more the firſt diſſolution, then the ſecond: yet departed he not without anſwere: for Iohn Segouius an expert Diuine, riſing vp, anſwered him reuerently as was comely for ſuch a Prelate. He ſaid he granted that which Panormitane had ſpoken touching the diuiſion of the Articles of the faith into three points, for becauſe it made for his purpoſe. For if thoſe things are to be holden for Articles of faith, ſayd he, which may be gathered of the determinations of the Church, it were manifeſt that the concluſions whereupon we now cōtend, redound and come of the determinations of the Church: that is to ſay, of the Councell of Conſtance: for, if therein the Pope be made ſubiect vnto the generall Councell, who is it that will ſay that the Pope hath power ouer yͤ Councell which is aboue him? or that Eugenius ought to remaine Pope, becauſe he could not diſſolue the Councell which is aboue him, without the conſent thereof? The which Article vndoubtedly, he hath violate and broken. And if any mā will ſay that in the firſt diſſolution this Article was not violate, becauſe there was no declaration made therof, let him which ſo thinketh, thus vnderſtand: that the Byſhop of Rome ought not only to knowe the plaine and manifeſt, but alſo the ſecret and hidden things of the fayth, for he being the vicare of Chriſt, and the head of all other, ought to inſtruct and teach all men. But if ſo be he wil not, then hee ſhall be conuicted for being head, becauſe he cōtinued long in yͤ diſſolutiō after the declaratiō of yͤ councell, neither did cōſent vnto yͤ determination of yͤ church, & therfore, if peraduēture he did not erre in yͤ faith, in diſſoluing of yͤ coūcel, yet did he er in perſeuering in yͤ ſame, as it manifeſtly appeareth by yͤ ſaieng of Clemēt oftētimes alledged by Panormitan, wherin it is ſaid, yͭ he which liueth rebelliouſly & neglecteth to do good, is rather a mēber of the deuill thē of Chriſt, and rather an infidell then a true beleuer: ſo that Eugenius by diſobeieng yͤ Church, may worthely be called an infidell. Neither is it true that yͤ Pope hath not offended in the fayth: For ſomuch, as well in that aunſwere which beginneth Cogitanti, as alſo in the aunſwere which beginneth Sperant, made vnto the Popes Ambaſſadours, theſe words are manifeſt: this Article cōcerneth faith, and we had rather die then through cowardlines to giue place. By the which ſaieng it is euident, the Synode to haue ſufficiently admoniſhed yͤ Pope that he did againſt the faith, and therfore it ſeemed that afterward when as Eugenius reuoked the diſſolution, he alſo reuoked the errour of faith cōteined in the ſame. There are alſo diuers offences ſprōg and riſen through the errour of faith: for ſome ſay that the Pope is vnder the Councell, otherſome denie it, and this diuerſitie of doctrine bringeth offence. Alſo it is expreſſely againſt the authority of the Councell, that the Pope did reuoke the aſſertions made in their name.

Councels boūd to no poſitiue lawe.

And albeit in ſuch reuocations, yͤ ſtile & order of iudgements is not obſerued, notwithſtanding it doth ſuffice in ſuch caſe, when as the Councell doth proceed againſt the Pope: in which caſe onely the truth is to be obſerued, neither is the Councell ſubiect vnto any poſitiue law, that it ought to obſerue any tearmes or iudiciall orders. Alſo he ſaid that he vtterly cōtemned that ſingular gloſe which did prefer yͤ Pope before all the world, ſo that it might well be called ſingular, which decreed ſo fooliſh and fonde things and vnworthy to be followed of any man: and that he did much maruaile of Panormitane, and other Doctours of thoſe daies, which whileſt they went about to extoll yͤ authoritie of the gloſes, do abaſe yͤ ſame by adding a ſingularitie therto: for that gloſe is ſingular whiche is alone. But who would not more eſteme a gloſe conſtantly writtē and agreeable in all places, then that which in any one place teacheth any thing which may ſeeme to be an errour: and that as touching the veritie & truth. S. Hierome a graue and auncient Doctour is cōtrary to this gloſe, who doubteth nothing at all, but that the world, as touching authoritie, is aboue the Citie it ſelfe, that is to ſay, Rome.

Segouius, could ſcarſely finiſh this his Oration without interruption: for Panormitane oftentimes enterrupting him, went about to confute now this, and now that reaſon. Wherupon the Biſhop of Argen riſing vp, a man not onely eloquent, but alſo of a ſtoute courage, troubled Panormitane in his reaſons and argumēts, and put him from his purpoſe: yet they proceeded ſo farre, that they paſſed the maner of diſputation, and did not abſteine from opprobrious tauntes.

Panormitā appointeth the Pope Lord of the Church.

The Pope & the clergy deſire dominion contrary to the ſcriptures.

When the Biſhop of Argen chaunced to ſay that the Biſhop of Rome ought to be the miniſter of the Church, Panormitane could not ſuffer that: in ſo much that he ſo forgot himſelfe that day, and his knowledge (which otherwiſe was great) did ſo faile him, that he was not aſhamed to ſay and affirme, that the Pope was Lorde ouer the Church. Whom Segouius anſwered: Marke (ſayth he) O Panormitane, what thou ſayeſt: for this is the moſt honourable title of the Biſhop of Rome, wherin he calleth himſelfe the ſeruaunt of the ſeruaunts of God. Which is gathered vpon this point, when as Chriſt ſayd vnto hys diſciples, when they demanded of him which of them was the greateſt, you know he aunſwered them: The Princes of the people haue rule and dominion ouer them, but amongſt you it is not ſo, &c. Wherein he doth vtterly prohibit Lordſhip and dominion. And Peter which was the firſt vicar of Chriſt, ſaith, feede the flocke of Chriſt which is committed vnto you, prouiding for them not by compulſion, but willingly. And immediatly after he ſayd, not as Lords ouer the Cleargie. For if Chriſt yͤ ſonne of God, came not to be miniſtred vnto, but to miniſter & to ſerue, how then can his vicar haue any dominion, or be called Lord, as you Panormitane will affirme: forſomuch as the diſciple is not aboue his maiſter, nor the ſeruaunt aboue his Lord. And the Lord himſelfe ſaith: be yee not called maiſters, for ſo much as your only maiſter is Chriſt, and he which is the greateſt among you, ſhal be your ſeruant. Panormitane being ſomewhat diſquieted with this aunſwere, the councell brake vp and departed.

The French kinges Ambaſſadour.

The next day, there was a generall congregation, and they returned all againe vnto the chapter houſe after dinner, whereas the Archbiſhop of Lyons, the Kings Orator being required to ſpeake his minde, after he had by diuers and ſundry reaſons proued Eugenius to be an hereticke, he bitterly complained, deteſting the negligence and ignauie, of thoſe that had proferred ſuch a man vnto the papacie, and ſo moued all their harts which were preſent, that they altogether with him did bewaile the calamities of the vniuerſall Church.

The Byſhop of Burgen.

The councel aboue the Pope.

Then the Byſhop of Burgen, the Ambaſſadour of Spaine, diuided the concluſions into two parts, ſome he called generall, & otherſome perſonall, diſputing very excellently as touching the three firſt cōcluſions, affirming yͭ he did in no point doubt of them, but only that the additiō which made mention of yͤ faith, ſeemed to be doubtfull vnto him. But vpon this point, he ſtaied much, to proue that the Councell was aboue yͤ Pope. The which, after he had ſufficiently proued both by Gods law and mans lawe, he taught it alſo by Phiſicall reaſon, alledging Ariſtotle for witneſſe. He ſaid that in euery well ordered kingdome, it ought ſpecially to be deſired, that the whole realme ſhould be of more authoritie then the King, which if it happened contrary, it were not to be called a kingdome, but a tirannie: ſo likewiſe doth he thinke of the Church, that it ought to be of more authoritie, then the Prince thereof, that is to ſay, the Pope. The which his Oration he vttered ſo eloquently, learnedly, and truly, that all men depended vpon him, and deſired rather to haue him continue his Oration, then to haue an end thereof.

The force of truth which appeared alſo in Eneas himſelfe: the writer hereof, although afterwarde when he was pope, he denied the ſame. Note what it is, a man to labour againſt hys knowledge.

But whē as he entred into yͤ other cōcluſions, he ſemed to haue forgottē himſelf, & to be no more the ſame mā that he was: for neither was there yͤ ſame eloquēce in his wordes, neither grauitie in Oration, or cherefulnes of countenance, ſo that if he could haue ſene himſelfe, he would peraduēture greatly haue marueiled at himſelfe. Euery man might wel ſee & perceiue thē the power & force of the truth, which miniſtred copy of matter vnto him, ſo long as hee ſpake in yͤ defēce therof. But whē as he begā once to ſpeak againſt hir, ſhe tooke away euē his naturall eloquence frō him. Notwithſtanding Panormitane, and the Biſhop of Burgen, ſhewed this example of modeſty, that albeit they would not confeſſe or grant the laſt cōcluſions to be verities of faith: yet they would not that any mā ſhould folow or leane vnto their opiniō, which wer but meane diuines, but rather vnto yͤ opinions of the Diuines. But the king of Aragons Amner, being a ſubtill & crafty man, did not directly diſpute vpō the concluſions: but picking out here and there certaine argumēts, ſought to let and hinder the Councell. Againſt whome an Abbot of Scotland, a man of an excellent wit diſputed very much: and Thomas de Corcellis a famous Diuine, alledged much againſt him out of yͤ Decrees of yͤ ſacred Councell, and with a certaine modeſt ſhamefaſtnes, alwaies beholding the ground, did very largely diſpute in the defence of the concluſions.

But now to auoide tediouſnes, I will only proceed to declare arguments, wherby the concluſions were ratified and confirmed: not minding to intreate of th v. laſt cõcluſions, which cõcerne yͤ perſon of Eugenius, but only vpõ yͤ three firſt, wherunto I wil adioine certaine probable argumẽts gathered out of yͤ diſputation of the fathers. In yͤ firſt cõcluſion is the greateſt force, and firſt to be diſcuſſed: touching the which, two things are to be required, & examined. The one whether the generall Councel haue authoritie ouer the Pope. The other, whether the Catholike faith commaundeth it to be beleued. As touching that the Pope is ſubiect to the generall Councell, it is excellently well proued by yͤ reaſon before alledged, by the Biſhop of Burgen. For the Pope is in the Church, as a king in his kingdome: and for a king to be of more authority then his kingdome, it were to abſurd: Ergo, neither ought the pope to be aboue the Church. For like as oftentimes, Kings which do wickedly gouerne the cõmon wealth, & exerciſe cruelty, are depriued of their kingdome, euẽ ſo it is not to be doubted, but that the Biſhops of Rome may be depoſed by the Church, that is to ſay, by the generall Councels.

Theſe kinde of flatterers came now in our daies.

What a king is.

Neither do I heerein allow them, which attribute ſo ample and large authoritie vnto kings, that they will not haue them bound vnder any lawes: For ſuch as ſo do ſay, be but flatterers, which do talke otherwiſe thẽ they think. For albeit that they do ſay that the moderation of the law is alway in the Princes power: that do I thus vnderſtãd, that when as reaſon ſhall perſwade, he ought to digreſſe from the rigour of the law: for hee is called a King, which careth and prouideth for the common wealth: taketh pleaſure in the commoditie and profite of the ſubiectes, and in all his doings hath reſpect to the cõmoditie of thoſe, ouer whom he ruleth: which, if he do not, he is not to be counted a King, but a tyraunt, whoſe propertie it is onely to ſeeke his owne profit: for in this point a King differeth from a tyraunt, that the one ſeeketh the commoditie and profit of thoſe whom he ruleth, and the other only his owne. The which to make more manifeſt, the cauſe is alſo to be alledged, wherefore Kings were ordeined.

The inſtitutiõ of kings.

At the beginning (as Cicero in his Offices ſayth) it is certaine, that there was a certaine time when as the people liued without kings. But afterward when lands and poſſeſſiõs began to be deuided according to the cuſtome of euery natiõ, then were kings ordeined for no other cauſe, but only to exerciſe iuſtice. For when as at the beginning, the common people were oppreſſed by rich & mighty men, they ran by and by to ſome good and vertuous man, which ſhould defend yͤ poore frõ iniurie, & ordeine lawes, whereby the rich and poore might dwell together. But when as yet vnder the rule of Kings, the poore were oftentimes oppreſſed, lawes were ordeined and inſtituted, the which ſhould iudge neither for hatred nor fauour, and geue lyke eare vnto the poore as vnto the riche: whereby we do vnderſtand and know, not only the people, but alſo the King to be ſubiect to the lawes. For if we do ſee a King to contemne and deſpiſe the lawes, violently rob and ſpoile his ſubiects, defloure virgins, diſhoneſt matrones, and do all things licentiouſly and temerariouſly: do not the nobles of the kingdome aſſemble together, depoſing him from his kingdome, ſet vp another in his place, which ſhall ſweare to rule and gouerne vprightly, and be obedient vnto the lawes? Verely as reaſon doth perſwade, euen ſo doth the vſe thereof alſo teach vs. It ſeemeth alſo agreeable vnto reaſon, that the ſame ſhould be done in the Church, that is to ſay, in the Councell, which is done in any kingdome. And ſo is this ſufficiently apparant which we haue before ſayd, that the Pope is ſubiect vnto the Councell.

The pope ought to be ſubiect vnto the councell

This place Tu es Petrus &c. expounded.

Sinnes are the gates of hell.

But now to paſſe vnto the argumentes of Diuinitie, the foundation of the matter which we do intreate vpon, are the wordes of our Sauiour Ieſu Chriſt in diuers places, but ſpecially where as he ſpeaketh vnto Peter: Tu es Petrus, & ſuper hanc petram ædificabo Eccleſiam meam, & portæ inferi non præualebunt aduerſus eam. i. Thou art Peter, and vpon this rocke will I build my Church, and the gates of hell ſhall not preuaile againſt it. Vpon whyche wordes it ſeemeth good to begin this diſputatiõ, forſomuch as ſome were wont to alledge theſe wordes, to extoll yͤ authority of the Biſhop of Rome. But (as it ſhall by and by appeare) the wordes of Chriſt had another ſenſe and meaning then diuers of them do thinke, for he ſaith: & the gates of hell ſhall not preuaile againſt it. Verely this is a great promiſe, and theſe wordes of the Lord are of great importance. For what greater word could there haue bene ſpoken, then that the gates of hell ſhould not preuaile againſt the church? Theſe gates of hel, as S. Hierome ſaith, do ſignifie ſins. wherfore if ſinnes can not preuaile againſt the Church, neither can any maligne ſpirites preuaile againſt the ſame, which haue no power at all ouer mankinde, but only through ſinne. And for that cauſe, where as it is ſayd in Iob, that there is no power vpon the earth that may be cõpared vnto the power of the maligne ſpirite, whereby it followeth that the power of the Church is aboue all other power.

Againſt the papiſtes opinion that the pope can not erre.

The interpretatiõ of this place, Oraui pro te Petre, is ment of the Church.

We may alſo vpon the ſame ſaying, reaſon after an other ſort: for ſomuch as yͤ gates of hel: that is to ſay, ſinnes can not preuaile agaynſt the Church, the Church thereby is declared to be without ſinne: the which cã not be ſpokẽ of yͤ pope which is a mortall mã, for ſomuch as it is written, ſeuen tymes in the day the iuſt mã doth offend: If the Church be without ſpot becauſe it can not be defiled with ſinne, who is it that will preferre a ſinnefull mã: before an vndefiled Churche? Neither let vs geue eare vnto thoſe whiche will not referre theſe wordes of Chriſt vnto the Church, where as he ſayth: Oraui pro te Petre, vt non deficiat fides tua. That is to ſay, Peter I haue prayed for thee, that thy fayth ſhould not fayle thee. For as S. Auguſtine ſayth in the expoſition of the Pſalmes, certaine thyngs are ſpoken as though they ſeemed properly to pertaine vnto the Apoſtle Peter, notwithſtãding, they haue no euident ſenſe but when they are referred vnto the Churche, the perſon wherof he is vnderſtãded figuratiuely to repreſent. Wherupõ in an other place in the queſtiõs of yͤ new & old Teſtament, vpon the wordes: Rogaui pro te Petre, I haue prayed for thee Peter: what is doubted? Did he pray for Peter, & did he not pray for Iames and Iohn, beſide the reſt? It is manifeſt that vnder the name of Peter, all other are conteyned. For in an other place of S. Iohn he ſayth: I pray for them, whom thou haſt geuen me, & I will that whereſoeuer I am, they ſhall be alſo with me. Wherupon we do oftentymes by the name of Peter vnderſtand the Church, which we do nothing at all doubt to be done in this place: otherwiſe the truth could not conſiſt, for ſomuch as within a while after, the fayth of Peter, fayled for a tyme by the deniall of Chriſt, but the fayth of the Church, whoſe perſon Peter did repreſent, did alwayes perſeuere inuiolate.

Biſhops of Rome are heretiques.

He meaneth Silueſter the ſecõd.

The church is without ſinne & the pope is a ſinner.

As touching the Biſhops of Rome, if time would ſuffer vs, we could rehearſe many exãples, how that they either haue ben heretickes, or repleniſhed with other vices. Neither are we ignoraunt how that Marcellinus at the Emperours commaundement, did ſacrifice vnto Idols, & that an other (whiche is more horrible) did attaine vnto the Papacy by a deuiliſh fraude & deceite. Notwithſtanding the teſtimony of Paule vnto the Hebrues ſhall ſuffice vs at this tyme, who ſayth euery Biſhop to be compaſſed in with infirmitie: that is to ſay, with wickedneſſe and ſinne. Alſo the teſtimonies of Chriſt him ſelfe do approue, that yͤ Church remaineth alwayes without ſinne: for in Mathew he ſaith, I am with you euen vnto the end of the world. The which wordes were not onely ſpoken vnto the Apoſtles (for they continued not vnto the end of the world) but alſo vnto their ſucceſſours: neither would Chriſt then ſignifie that he was God, diſperſed throughout all the world, as he is alſo perceiued to be amongeſt ſinners, but would declare a certain gift of grace, through his aſſiſtaũce, whereby he would preſerue yͤ holy Churche conſiſting amongeſt his Apoſtles and their ſucceſſours, alwayes immaculate and vndefiled.

The church one fleſh with chriſt

The Church is without ſpot or ſinne, is to be vnderſtand not by nature, but onely by imputation.

And agayne in an other place I (ſayth he) will pray, & he ſhal geue you an other cõforter, that he may remaine wͭ you for euer, euẽ the ſpirite of truth whõ the world cã not receaue, becauſe the world ſeeth him not, neither knoweth him, but you ſhall know him, becauſe he ſhall remayne wͭ you. The which wordes being ſpoken vnto the Diſciples of Ieſus, are alſo vnderſtãded to be ſpokẽ vnto their ſucceſſours, & ſo cõſequently vnto the Church. And if the ſpirite of truth be cõtinually in the Church, no man cã deny, but that the Church ought to continue vndefiled. By the ſame authoritie alſo that Chriſt is called the ſpouſe of the Church, who ſeeth not, but that the Church is vndefiled? For the huſband & the wife (as the Apoſtle ſayth) are two in one fleſh, & (as he doth alſo adde) no mã hateth his own fleſh: thereby it commeth to paſſe, that Chriſt can not hate the Church, for ſomuch as ſhe is his ſpouſe, and one fleſh with him, & no mã cã hate himſelfe: Ergo, the Church doth not ſinne: for if it did ſinne, it ſhould be hated, for ſinners the Lord doth hate. The which authorities being gathered together we ought with the Apoſtle to confeſſe that the Church of God hath neither ſpot nor wrincle. Alſo he writyng vnto Timothe affirmeth the Churche to be the piller & foundation of the truth: whereupõ in this ſong of the ſpouſe it is ſayd: My frend thou art altogether fayre & beawtifull neither is there any ſpot in thee.

Theſe wordes peraduenture may abaſh ſome, that I do go about to proue the Church to be without ſinne. For when as the Church doth containe all men which are called Chriſtiãs, which alſo do agree & come together in one beliefe of faith, and participation of the Sacraments, I do feare leaſt ſome men will thinke, that I do affirme all mē to be without ſinne: which is ſo far frō my meaning, that I do verely thinke the cōtrary to be moſt true. For I ſuppoſe, that there is no man in the Church being clothed in this mortall fleſh, without ſinne. Neither do theſe things vary or diſſent among themſelues: For the Church hath this gift, that albeit euery part and mēber therof may ſin, yet the whole body can not ſinne. For there bee alwayes good men in the Church, the which, albeit that they be ſubiect vnto humaine fragilitie, notwithſtāding they haue ſo perfect a gift of ſincere and pure vertue, that ſubduing all carnall deſires and affectiōs, they keep themſelues a pleaſant and acceptable ſacrifice vnto God. Neither do I conſent or agree vnto the opiniō of diuers, which affirme that the Virgin Mary onely perſeuered in faith at the Lordes paſſion. Whereupon diuers haue not bene aſhamed to ſay that the faith might be ſo debilitate and weakened, that it ſhould returne to one only old woman. Whoſe opinion or rather madnes, Saint Paule ſeemeth opēly to reiect, writing thus vnto the Romaines: do ye not know (ſaith he) what the Scripture writeth of Helias, how inceſſantly he called vpon God againſt the childrē of Iſraell (ſaieng) O Lord, they haue ſlayne thy Prophets, and digged downe thine aultars, and I alone am left, and they ſeeke after my ſoule? But what anſwere receiued he of God? I haue left vnto my ſelf yet vij. M. men, which haue not bowed their knees vnto Baal. What other thing doth this anſwere of God declare, then that it is a fooliſh opiniō of them which thinke the Church of God to be brought vnto ſo ſmall a number? we ought to beleeue the words of Chriſt, which are altogether repugnāt vnto thoſe mē who affirme yͭ the Virgine onely did perſeuere in faith. For Ieſus ſayd vnto his Father, O holy father ſaue thē in thy name, whome thou haſt geuen me, that they may be one as we are one. Whē I was with them, I kept them in thy name: I haue kept them that thou gaueſt vnto me, and none of them periſhed, but onely the ſonne of perdition. And I do not deſire that thou ſhouldeſt take them out of the world, but that thou ſhouldeſt preſerue them from euill.

The church with out ſinne how to be vnderſtand.

The errour of thoſe which ſay that onely the virgin Mary did perſeuer conſtāt at the time of hriſtes paſſion.

Beholde, Chriſt praieth that his diſciples ſhoulde not fall, but ſhould be preſerued from euill, and he ſo praieng, without doubt is heard: for he ſaith in another place, I know yͭ thou heareſt me. But how is he heard, if all thoſe for whome he praieth, ſwarued at the time of his paſſion? As for example: By what meanes did Chriſt hanging vpō the Croſſe, commende his dearely beloued mother vnto Iohn, if ſo be he were either then ſwarued, or ſhould by and by after haue ſwarued from the faith: Moreouer, did not the Centurion by and by cry out and ſay: truly this is the ſonne of God? The Iewes alſo which at that time were farre diſtant from Ieruſalem, might both be called faithfull, and alſo ſaued by their faith: ſeeing that (as the Apoſtle ſayth) men are bound vnto the Goſpell, after it is once knowne and reuealed vnto them. But let vs leaue theſe men, and ſpeake of that which is more likely, and let vs iudge that there hath bin and is a great number of good mē in the Church, and by thē as by the more worthy part, let vs name the Church holy and immaculate, the whyche doth comprehend as well the euill as the good. For the Church is compared vnto a net, which is caſt into the ſea, and gathereth together all kinde of fiſhes.

The Church comprehendeth both the euill and good.

Math. 20.

And agayne it is compared vnto a King, which made a marriage for his ſonne, and ſent forth his ſeruants to call thoſe which were bidden, vnto the wedding, and they gathered together good & euill, as many as they could finde. Wherfore, their opinion is erroneus, which affirme, that only good men be comprehēded in the Church: the which, if it were true, it would confound all things, neither could we vnderſtand or know where the Church were. But forſomuch as the Scripture ſaith: no man knoweth whether he be worthy of loue or hatred, their opiniō is more to be alowed & truer, which include all yͤ faithfull in yͤ Church: of whom, although a great part be geuen to voluptuouſnes and auarice, yet ſome notwithſtāding are cleane frō deadly ſinne. The which part, as it is the moſt worthy, it geueth the name vnto yͤ church, to be called moſt holy: which is ſo often done, that we are commaunded to ſing in our Crede, vnam ſanctam Catholicam & Apoſtolicam Eccleſiam, that is to ſay, one holy Catholicke & Apoſtolicke Church: the which Article the Synode of Conſtantinople, added vnto the reſt: wherefore if the Church be holy, it is alſo without ſinne. But to returne to our former purpoſe, this word Sanctum, which ſignifieth holy (as Macrobius alledging Trebatius, affirmeth) is ſometimes taken for religious, and ſometimes for cleane and vncorrupt. And after the ſame maner, we call the Church holy, as the Apoſtle Peter calleth it immaculate, as we read in the famous Epiſtle of Clement.

This ſaying of Eccleſiaſtes is not tranſlated & alſo ſerueth to other ſenſe then is here ment.

To this end alſo tendeth that whiche is ſpoken by S. Paule, that Chriſt is the head of the Churche: For if the Churche ſhould wholy ſinne, ſhe ſhould not agree with her head Chriſt, who is in no pointe defiled. This alſo Chriſt himſelfe would ſignifie vnto vs in Mathew, when he cōmendeth the houſe which was builded vpō the ſtrōg rocke, againſt the whiche, neither the windes, neither the ſtormes could preuaile. In the houſe of God (ſayth the Apoſtle) which is the Church builded vpō the ſtrong rocke, which rocke (as the ſayd Apoſtle declareth) is Chriſt. Who then is ſo vnſhamefaſt that hee will affirme the Churche, which is founded vpō Chriſt, to be ſubiect to ſinne? & will not rather cry out with the Prophet and ſay: Domine, dilexi decorem domus tuæ. That is to ſay. O Lord, I haue loued the beawtie of thy houſe. Hereupon wrote Iohn Chriſoſtome this golden ſentence: The Church neuer ceaſeth to be aſſaulted, neuer ceaſeth to be layne in wayte for: but in the name of Chriſt it hath alwayes the vpper hād & ouercame. And albeit that other do lye in wait for it, or that the floudes do beate agaynſt it: yet the foūdatiō which is layd vpon the rocke, is not ſhaken. S. Hillary alſo ſayth, that it is the propertie of the Churche to vanquiſh, when it is hurt, to vnderſtād when it is reproued, to be in ſafetie whē it is forſaken, & to obtaine victory, when as it ſeemeth almoſt ouercome. Thus by many reaſons & teſtimonies, it is proued that the Church doth not erre: which is not ſpoken or affirmed of the Biſhops of Rome, ſo that this reaſon doth make the Pope ſubiect vnto the Church, for it is conuenient, that the leſſe perfect be ſubiect vnto the more perfect. There be alſo many other teſtimonies & reaſons, wherof we will now ſomewhat more entreate.

Chriſt is the rocke wherupon the Church is builded.

If authoritie be ſought for, ſayth S. Hierome (for I willingly occupie my ſelfe in his ſentēces, as in a moſt fertile field) the world is greater then a Citie. What then I pray you Hierome? Is yͤ Pope mighty becauſe he is head of the Church of Rome? His authoritie is great, notwithſtanding the vniuerſall Church is greater, which doth not onely cōprehēd one Citie, but alſo the whole world. Hereupon it followeth, that if the Churche be the mother of all faithfull, then ſhe hath the Biſhop of Rome for her ſonne. Otherwiſe as S. Auguſtine ſaith, he can neuer haue God for his father, which will not acknowledge the Church for his mother. The which thing Anacletus vnderſtandyng, called the vniuerſal Church his mother, as the writers of the Canons do know. And Calixtus ſayth: as a ſonne he came to doe the will of his father, ſo we do the will of our mother, which is the Church. Whereby it appeareth, that how much the ſonne is inferiour to the mother: ſomuch yͤ Church is ſuperiour or aboue the Biſhop of Rome.

He proueth by authoritie the pope to be vnder the coūcell.

If the Church be the mother, the Pope muſt be her ſonne.

Alſo we haue ſayd before, that the Churche was the ſpouſe of Chriſt, & the Pope we know to be a Vicare: but no mā doth ſo ordaine a Vicar, that he maketh his ſpouſe ſubiect vnto him, but that the ſpouſe is alwayes thought to be of more authoritie, then the Vicar, for ſomuch as ſhe is one body with her huſbād, but the Vicar is not ſo. Neither will I here paſſe ouer the wordes of S. Paule vnto the Romaines: Let euery ſoule (ſayth he) be ſubiect vnto the higher powers: Neither doth he herein except yͤ pope: For albeit that he be aboue all other mē, yet it ſeemeth neceſſary yͭ he ſhould be ſubiect to yͤ Church. Neither let him thinke himſelfe hereby exēpt, becauſe it was ſaid vnto Peter by Chriſt, whatſoeuer thou bindeſt. &c. In this place, as we wil hereafter declare, he repreſēted the perſon of the Church, for we finde it ſpoken afterward vnto thē: Quæcunque ligaueritis ſuper terrā, ligata erūt in cœlis. i. Whatſoeuer ye ſhal binde vpō earth, ſhall be alſo bounde in heauē. And furthermore, if all power be geuē of Chriſt, as the Apoſtle writeth vnto the Corinthiās, it is geuen for the edifying of the Church, & not for the deſtruction therof: why then may not the Church correct the Pope, if he abuſe the keyes, and bring all thinges vnto ruine?

The church being the ſpouſe, the pope cā not be the head therof, but he muſt alſo be the head of Chriſt, forſomuch as Chriſt & his ſpouſe be both one

The expoſition of this place, quodcunque ligaueris. The church may depoſe the pope, if he abuſe the keyes.

Adde hereunto alſo an other argument. A man in this life is leſſer then the aungels, for we read in Mathew of Iohn Baptiſt, that he whiche is leaſt in the kingdome of heauen, is greater then he. Notwithſtanding Chriſt ſayth in an other place, that amongeſt the children of women there was not a greater then Iohn Baptiſt. But to proceede: mē are forced by the exāple of Zacharias to geue credite vnto aūgels, leaſt through their miſbelief they be ſtriken blind as he was. What more? The Biſhop of Rome is a mā: Ergo, he is leſſe then the aungels, and is bound to geue credite to the aungels. But the aungels learne of the Church, and do reuerētly accorde vnto her doctrine, as the Apoſtle writeth vnto the Epheſiās: Ergo, the pope is boūd to do the ſame, who is leſſe then the aungels, and leſſe then the Churche, whoſe authoritye is ſuche, that worthely it is compared by S. Auguſtine vnto the Sunne: that lyke as the Sunne by his light doth ſurmount all other lightes, ſo the church is aboue all other authority and power. Whervpon S. Auguſtine writeth thus: I would not beleue the Goſpel ſaith he, if the authority of the church did not moue me thereunto: the which is not in any place foũd to be ſpoken of the biſhop of Rome, who repreſenting the Church, and being miniſter thereof, is not to be thought greater or equall to hys Lorde and maiſter. Notwythſtanding, the wordes of our Sauiour Chriſt do ſpecially proue the Byſhop of Rome to be ſubiect to the church, as we will hereafter declare: For he ſending Peter to preach vnto yͤ church ſayd, go, and ſay vnto the Church. To the confirmation of whoſe authoritye, theſe wordes do alſo pertaine: hee that heareth you heareth me. The which wordes are not onely ſpoken vnto the Apoſtles, but alſo vnto their ſucceſſours and vnto the whole Church.

The church and not the pope compared to the Sunne.

The pope if he do not harken to the church is an Ethnicke and Publicane. It is to be feared leaſt the church hath had many ſuch Popes.

Wherevpon it foloweth, that if the Pope do not harken & geue eare vnto the Church, he doeth not geue eare vnto Chriſt, & conſequently he is to be counted as an Ethnicke & Publicane. For as S. Auguſtine affirmeth, when as the Church doth excommunicate, he which is ſo excommunicate is bounde in heauen, and when the Church looſeth, he is looſed. Likewiſe if he be an heretike, which taketh away the ſupremacie of the Churche of Rome, as the Decrees of the councel of Conſtance doth determine, how much more is he to be counted an hereticke, which taketh away yͤ authoritye from the vniuerſall Church, wherein the Church of Rome and all other are conteined? Wherefore it is now euident, that it is the opinion of al men before our daies (if it may be called an opinion, which is confirmed by graue authors) yͭ the Pope is ſubiecte vnto the vniuerſall church. But this is called into queſtion, whether he ought alſo to be iudged of yͤ general Councel. For there are ſome, which (whether it be for deſire of vaine glory, or that thorough their flattery they looke for ſome great reward) haue begon to teach new and ſtrange doctrines, and to exempt the byſhop of Rome from the iuriſdiction of the generall Councel. Ambitiõ hath blinded them, wherof not only this preſent Schiſme, but alſo all other Schiſmes euen vnto thys day haue had their originall. For as in times paſt the gredy deſire & ambition of the papacy, brought in that peſtiferous beaſt, which through Arrius then firſt crept into the church: euen ſo they do ſpecially noriſh and mainteine this preſent hereſie, whych are not aſhamed to begge. Of the which number, ſome cry out & ſay, the workes of the ſubiects ought to be iudged by the Pope, but the Pope to be reſerued only vnto the iudgemẽt of God. Others ſaid that no man ought to iudge the high and principall Seate, and that it can not be iudged either by the Emperour, either by the Clergy, either by any king or people. Other affirme, that the Lord hath reſerued vnto himſelfe the depoſitions of the chiefe Biſhop. Others are not aſhamed to affirme, that the Byſhop of Rome although hee cary ſoules in neuer ſo great number vnto hell, yet hee is not ſubiect vnto any correction or rebuke.

Whether the pope is to be iudged by the generall councell, &c.

These are the Canons and the ſchoole diuines, and begging friers.

Diuerſitie of iudgementes touching the B. of Rome.

And becauſe theſe their words are eaſily reſolued, they runne ſtraight waies vnto the Goſpell, and interprete the wordes of Chriſt, not according to the ſenſe and meaning of the holy Ghoſt, but according to their owne wil and diſpoſition. They doe greatly eſteeme and regard this which was ſpoken vnto Peter: Tu vocaberis Cephas i. Thou ſhalt be called Cephas: by the which worde, they make hym the head of the Church. Alſo I will geue thee the keyes of the kingdome of heauen, and whatſoeuer thou ſhalt bind vpon earth. &c. I haue prayed for thee Peter, that thy Faith would not faile. And againe, fede my ſheepe: Caſt thy net into the depe: Be not afrayd, for from thẽceforth thou ſhalt be a fiſher of men: Alſo that Chriſt commaunded Peter as the Prince of the Apoſtles, to pay tolle for them bothe: and that Peter drew the net vnto the land, full of great fiſhes: & that onely Peter drew his ſword for the defence of Chriſt. Al which places theſe mẽ do greatly extol, altogether neglecting the expoſitions of the fathers: the which if (as reaſon were) they would conſider, they ſhuld manifeſtly perceiue by the authorities aforeſayde, that the Pope is not aboue them when they are gathered together in Councell, but when they are ſeparate and deuided.

How foliſhly the church of Rome doth wraſt the the ſcriptures neglecting the expoſitions of the fathers.

But theſe things being paſſed ouer, for ſomuch as anſwere ſhall appeare by that which heereafter ſhall followe we will now declare what was reaſoned of by the learned men vppon thys queſtion. But firſt wee woulde haue it knowen, yͭ all men which are of any name or eſtimation, do agree, that the Pope is ſubiect to the Councell, and for the proofe therof they repeat (in a maner) al thoſe things which were before ſpoken of the church: for they ſuppoſe all that, which is ſpoken of the Churche, to ſerue for the generall Councell: And firſt of all, they alledge this ſaying of the Goſpel, Dic Eccleſiæ, tell it vnto the Church. In the whych place it is conuenient to vnderſtand, that Chriſt ſpake vnto Peter, inſtructing him what he ſhould doe as touching the correction of his brother. He ſaith, if thy brother offend or ſinne againſt thee, rebuke him betwene thee and him alone. If hee geue eare vnto thee, thou haſt wonne thy brother: but if he doe not geue eare vnto thee, take wͭ thee one or two, that in the mouth of two or thee witneſſes all truth may ſtand: if thẽ he wil not geue eare vnto thee, Dic Eccleſiæ, tell it vnto the Church.

Thoſe thinges, which were ſpokẽ of the church ſerue alſo for the generall councell.

What ſhal we vnderſtand by the church in that place? ſhall we ſay that it is the multitude of the faithfull diſperſed throughout the whole worlde? My yoke is pleaſaunt ſayth the Lord, & my burden is light. But howe is it light, if Chriſt commaunde vs to doe that which is impoſſible to be done? For howe coulde Peter ſpeake vnto the Churche which was diſperſed, or to ſeeke out euery Chriſtian ſcattered in euery Towne or Citie? But the meaning of theſe words, is farre otherwiſe, and they muſt be otherwiſe interpreted: for which cauſe it is neceſſary that we remember the double perſon, which Peter repreſented, as the perſon of the high byſhop, and a priuate man. The ſenſe and meaning of his words are euident and plaine inough of themſelues, yͭ they neede no ſupplement or alteration. We muſt firſt marke and ſee, what thys worde Eccleſia ſignifieth, the which we do find but only to be twiſe ſpoken of by Chriſt: once in this place, and againe when as he ſaid vnto Peter: Tu es Petrus, & ſuper hanc Petram ædificabo Eccleſiam meam, That is: Thou art Peter, and vpon this rock wil I build my Church. Wherfore the Church ſignifieth the conuocation or congregation of the multitude. Dic Eccleſiæ, tell it vnto the church. That is to ſay, tel it vnto the Congregation of the faithful: the which forſomuch as they are not accuſtomed to come together, but in a generall Councel, this interpretation ſhall ſeeme very good, Dic Eccleſiæ, tel it vnto the Church, that is to ſay, Dic generali Concilio, tel it vnto the generall Councell.

Peter repreſenteth the double perſon.

Chriſt nameth the Church but twiſe in the Goſpell.

What the Church is.

The interpretatiõ of this place, dic eccleſiæ.

In this caſe I would gladly heare if there be any man, which doth thinke theſe words to be more properly expreſſed in any Prelate, then in the councell, when as they muſt put one man for the multitude: whych if it be admitted in the ſcriptures, we ſhall from henceforth finde no firme or ſtable thing therein. But if any man doe maruaile at thys interpretation, let him ſearch the old wryters, and he ſhall finde that thys is no newe or ſtraunge interpretation, but the interpretation of the holy fathers and olde Doctours, whyche haue firſt geuen lyght vnto the Churche, as Pope Gregorie witneſſeth (a man worthy of remembrance, both for the holines of his life, and his ſingular learning) whoſe wordes are theſe, wrytten in his Regiſter vnto the biſhop of Conſtantinople: And wee (ſayde hee) againſt whome ſo great an offence is committed through temerarious boldneſſe, do obſerue and keepe that which the truth doth commaunde vs, ſaying, Si peccauerit in te frater, that is: If thy brother do offend againſt thee, &c. And afterward he addeth more, if my rebukes and corrections be deſpyſed, it remaineth that I do ſeeke helpe of the church. The which words doe manifeſtly declare the Church heere to be taken for the generall Councell. Neither did Gregory ſay, that he wold ſeeke helpe of the Church that is diſpearſed abroad in euery place, but of that which is gathered together, that is to ſay, the generall Councell, for that whych is diſpearſed abroad, cannot be had, except it be gathered together. Alſo Pope Nicholas reprouing Lotharius the king for adultery, ſayd: if thou doeſt not amend the ſame, take heede that we tell it not vnto the holy Church.

The church taken for the generall councell.

In the which ſaying, Pope Nicholas did not ſay, that he wold go throughout yͤ world to certifie euery one, man by man: but that hee would call the Church together, that is to ſay the general councell, and there would publiſh and declare the offence of Lotharius, yͭ he which had contemned the Popes commaundements, ſhoulde feare the reuerence of the general councell. I could recite an infinite nũber of witneſſes for that purpoſe, the which all tende vnto one ende: but this one teſtimony of the Councell of Conſtance ſhall ſuffice for them all, wherein it is ſayde that not onely the Pope in the correction of his brother is remitted vnto the Councell, when as he can not correct him of hym ſelfe: but alſo when as any thing is done as touchyng the correction of the Pope himſelfe, the matter ought to be referred to the councel. Wherby it appeareth our interpretation to be moſt true, which doth expound the Church to be in the generall Councell. Hereupon the Actes of the Apoſtles, the Congregations whych were then holden, were called the Church. Alſo in the councell of Nice and in other

The councell of Conſtance decreeth the Pope to be vnder the Councell.

The actes of the Apoſtles, The councell of Nice.

The title of the Councels.

The conſtitutions of the B. of Rome are not the lawes of the church.

Councels, whē as any man ſhuld be excommunicated, alwayes, in a maner, thys ſentence was adioyned: Hunc excommunicat Catholica & Apoſtolica Eccleſia. The Catholicke and Apoſtolicke Church doth excommunicate thys man. And heereuppon that title is geuen vnto the Councelles, whereby we do ſay, that the generall Councell doth repreſent the vniuerſall Church. Wherefore the lawes and decrees of the Councell are called the lawes of the Churche, for that the Church doth not ſet forth any lawes in any other place, then in the general councell: except we will call the Popes cōſtitutions the lawes of the church, which can not be properly ſaid but of the Councel: whereas, albeit all thoſe which are of the church do not aſſemble and come together, yet the moſt part of them are accuſtomed to be there preſent, and in thoſe whiche come, the whole power of the Church doth conſiſt: whereupon we read in the Acts of the Apoſtles: It pleaſed the Apoſtles and Elders with all the Church. For albeit that al the faithfull were not there preſent (becauſe a great nūber of them remained at Antioche) yet notwithſtanding it was called the whole Church, becauſe the whole power of the Church conſiſted in the cōſcell. Thus for this preſent it is ſufficient that we vnderſtand by the Church the generall Councell.

By the church the councell is vnderſtand.

And nowe to returne vnto our purpoſe, lette vs heare what our Sauiour ſayeth vnto Peter: If thy brother doe offend againſt thee, vnto this text folowing, tell it vnto the church: and let vs vnderſtand the Councel by the Church. Who is greater in thys place, hee whych is ſent vnto the Councel, or the Councel whereunto Peter was ſent? The verity doth remit the Byſhop of Rome vnto the generall Cōſcell. And why ſo? verely becauſe the biſhops of Rome ſhould not diſdaine to acknowledge ſome power in earth, to be aboue them, the which they ſhould conſult withall in matters of importaunce, and agree vnto the determinations thereof. Whereupon Peter is alſo called by an other name Symon, the which, as Rabanus in hys Homilies wryteth, is interpreted in the Hebrew tounge, obedience, that all men might vnderſtande obedience to be neceſſary, euen in the Biſhop of Rome.

Simons obedience neceſſary in the Byſhops of Rome.

The fauourers and mainteiners of the pope goe about to mainteine & preferre the pleaſure & profit of one before a common commoditie.

The authority of the Councel of Conſtance might ſuffice vs in this poynte, but we thinke it good to ſtay a little vpon thys matter, & to leaue no place open for our aduerſaries: which, whileſt they goe about to maintaine the vnſatiable wilfulnes of one man, preferring a priuate wealth before a commō commodity, is it incredible how great errors they doe ſtirre vp. Againſt the which, beſides many other, Zacharias biſhop of Chalcedon, a man both famous and eloquent, did earneſtly ſtriue: who in the great and ſacred Synode of Chalcedon, when as the ſentence of the B. of Rome was obiected vnto him, that the Canon of Pope Nicholas and other Patriarkes was aboue the Councell, he replied againſt it. And Zoſimus the Pope ſayth thus as touching the decrees of the general Councel: the authority of this ſeat cannot make or alter any thing contrary to the decrees of the fathers. Neither doth he heare ſpeake of the decrees of the fathers, which are diſperſed abroad in cities or wilderneſſe, for they do not binde the Pope: but of them which are made and publiſhed by the fathers in the generall Councel. For the more manifeſt declaration whereof, the words of pope Leo the moſt eloquent of all the biſhops of Rome, are here to be annexed, who wrote vnto Anatholius, that the decrees of the Councel of Nice are in no part to be violate and broken: thereby (as it were) excluding himſelfe and the high Patriarke.

The authoritie alſo of Damaſus vppon thys ſentence, is more manifeſt, wryting vnto Aurelius the Archbiſh. as Iſidorus declareth in the booke of Councels, whoſe worthy ſaying as touching the authority of the ſynode is thys: That they which are not cōpelled of neceſſity, but of theyr owne wil either frowardly do any thing, either preſume to do any thing, or willingly conſent vnto thoſe which wold do any thing contrary and againſt the ſacred Canons, they are worthely thought and iudged to blaſpheme the holy ghoſt. Of the which blaſphemy, whether Gabriel whyche calleth himſelfe Eugenius, be preſently partaker, let them iudge which haue heard him ſay, that it is ſo farre from his office and duety to obey the general Councels, that he ſaith he doeth then beſt merite and deſerue, when as he contemneth the decrees of the Cōſcel. Damaſus addeth yet moreouer. For this purpoſe, ſayeth he, the rules of the ſacred canons, which are conſecrated by the ſpirite of God and the reuerence of the whole world, are faithfully to be knowne and vnderſtand of vs, and diligently looked vpon, that by no meanes, wythout a neceſſitye which cannot be eſchued (which God forbid) we do tranſgreſſe of the decrees of the holy fathers. Notwithſtanding, we daily ſee in al the Popes Bulles and letters, theſe wordes Non obſtante, that is to ſay: notwithſtanding: which no other neceſſitie hath brought in, then onely vnſatiable deſire of gathering of mony. But let them take heede to theſe things whych be the authours thereof.

The pope can abide no generall Councels.

Non obſtante in the Popes Bulles.

The councel to be aboue the pope.

But nowe to returne againe vnto Damaſus, mention is made in the Epiſtles of Ambroſe biſhop of Millaine of a certaine Epiſtle which is ſaid to be writtē by Damaſus, vnto the iudges deputed by the Councel of Capua, where he declareth that it is not his office, to meddle wt any matter which hath ben before the Councell. By the which ſaying he doth manifeſtly reproue all thoſe which affirme and ſay the Byſhop of Rome to be aboue the Councell. The which if it were true, Damaſus might haue taken into his handes the cauſe of Bonoſius the Byſhop to determine, which was before begon by the Councell: but for ſomuche as the Councell is aboue the Pope, Damaſus knewe hym ſelf to be prohibited. Whereupon Hilarius alſo acknowledging the Sinode to be aboue him, would haue his decrees confirmed by the Councell. Alſo the famous Doctour S. Auguſtine in his Epiſtle whych hee did wryte vnto Glorius & Eleuſius, and Felix the Gramarian, declareth the caſe. Cecilianus the Byſhoppe, was accuſed by Donatus, wyth others. Melchiades the pope with certaine other biſhops abſolued Cecilian and confirmed him in hys biſhopricke. They being moued wyth thoſe doinges, made a ſchiſme in the partes of Africa. S. Auguſtine reproueth them, which hauing an other remedy againſt the ſentence of ẏ Pope, did raiſe a ſchiſme, and doth inuey againſt them in this maner. Behold, let vs thinke thoſe Biſhops which gaue iudgemēt at Rome, not to haue ben good iudges: ther remained yet the iudgemēt of the vniuerſall church, where as the cauſe might haue ben pleaded euen with the iudges themſelues, ſo that if they were conuict not to haue geuen iuſt iudgement, their ſentence might be broken.

The full iudgemēt of the church is not to be found, but in the generall Councel.

Wherby it appeareth, that not only the ſentence of the Pope alone, but alſo the Pope wyth hys Byſhops ioyned with him, might be made fruſtrate by the Councell: for the full iudgement of the vniuerſall Church is not founde els where, then in the generall Councell. Let not any manne doubt, in that S. Auguſtine ſeemeth here onely to ſpeake of Byſhops: for if the text of hys Epiſtle be read ouer, hee ſhall finde the Byſhoppe of Rome to be comprehended amongſt the other Biſhops. It was alſo prohibited by the councels of Africa, that the Biſhops of Rome ſhoulde not receiue or heare the appeales of any which did appeale frō the Councell: whych altogether declare the ſuperioritie of the Cōſcell. And this appeareth more plainly in the Actes of the Apoſtles, where as Peter is rebuked by the congregation of the Apoſtles, becauſe he went in to Cornelius a Heathen man, as if it had not bene lawfull for him to attempt any great matter wout the knowledge of the congregation: and yet it was ſaid vnto him as wel as others. Ite & Baptizate &c. Go & baptiſe. But this ſeemeth to make more vnto the purpoſe, which S. Paule wryteth vnto the Galathians, whereas he ſayth, he reſiſted Peter euen vnto his face, becauſe he did not walke according to the verity of the Goſpell. Which words if they be wel vnderſtand, ſignifie none other thing by the veritie of the Goſpel, then the Canon of the Councel decreed amongeſt the Apoſtles: for the Diſciples being gathered together, had ſo determined it. Whereupon S. Paule doth ſhew, that Peter ought to haue obeyed the generall Councell.

No appeale to be made frō the cōſcel to the P.

Acts 13.

Gal. 2.

Peter conſtrayned to obey the generall councell.

The decree of the councel of Conſtance.

The pope bound vnder the obedience of the generall Councel.

But nowe to finiſh thys diſputation, we will here adioyne the determination of the Councell of Conſtance, the which Councell aforeſayd, willing to cut off al ambiguitie and doubts, and to prouide a certain order of liuing, declared by a ſolemne decree that all men, of what eſtate or condition ſo euer they were, yea although ẏ they were Popes themſelues, be bound vnder the obedience and ordinances of the ſacred generall Councels. And although there be a certaine reſtraint, where as it is ſayde, in ſuche thinges as pertaine vnto the faith, the extirpation of ſchiſme, and the reformation of the Churche, as well in the heade as in the members: notwithſtanding thys amplificatiue clauſe whych is adioyned, is to be noted, Et in pertinentibus ad ea, that is to ſay, withall the appertenauntes. The which addition is ſo large, that it containeth all thinges in it, whych may be imagined or thought. For the Lord ſaid thus vnto hys Apoſtles, goe ye forth and teach all people. He did not ſay in three poynts onely, but teach them to obſerue and keepe al thinges what ſoeuer I haue commaunded you. And in an other place he ſayeth, not thys or that, but whatſoeuer yee ſhal binde. &c. which altogether are alledged for the authority of the Church and generall Councels. For the preferment whereof, theſe things alſo come in place. He that heareth you, heareth me. And againe: It is geuen vnto you to knowe the myſteries of God. Alſo where 2, or 3. bee gathered in my name. &c. Againe, whatſoeuer yee ſhall aſke. &c. O holy father, ſaue them whom thou haſt geuen me. &c. And I wil be with them euen vnto the ende of the worlde. Alſo out of S. Paul theſe places are gathered. we are helpers of God. &c. which hath made vs apt miniſters of the new Teſtament. &c. And he appoynted ſome Apoſtles and ſome Prophetes. &c. In all which places both Chriſt and the Apoſtles ſpake of the authority of many, which altogether are alledged for the authority of ẏ vniuerſall Church.

Weightie matters intreated but onely in generall councels.

But for ſomuche as that Churche being diſperſed and ſcattered abroad, can not decree or ordaine any thing: therfore of neceſſity it is to be ſaid, that the chiefe and principall authority of the church, doth conſiſt in the generall Councels, where as they aſſemble together. And therfore it was obſerued in the primatiue Church, that hard and waightie matters were not intreated vpon, but onely in the general councels & congregations. The ſame is alſo founde to be obſerued afterward. For when as the churches were deuided, general councels were holden. And in the Councel of Nice, we do finde the hereſie of Arrius condemned. In the Councel of Conſtantinople the hereſy of Macedonius. In the Councell of Epheſus, the hereſye of Neſtorius. In the Councell of Chalcedon, the hereſies of Eutichius were alſo condemned: for ſomuch as they thought the iudgement of the biſhop of Rome, not to ſuffice to ſo great, & waighty matter, and alſo they thought, the ſentence of the Councell to be of greater force, then the ſentence of the Pope, for ſomuch as he might erre as a man, but the Councell, wherein ſo many mē were gathered together, being guided with the holy ghoſt, could not erre. Alſo it is a very excellēt ſaying of Martianus the Emperour, which ſerueth for that purpoſe, whoſe wordes are theſe: Truely he is to be coūted a wicked and ſacrilegious perſon, which after the ſentence of ſo many good and holy men, wil ſticke to withdraw any part of his opinion. For it is a poynt of meere madneſſe, at the noone time & faire day light, to ſeeke for a fained lighte: for he which hauing found the truth, ſeketh to diſcuſſe any thing further, ſeeketh but after vanities and lies.

The Pope not ſufficient of him ſelfe to conuince or iudge heretickes.
The pope may erre.

Whether the pope may be depoſed by the councell or not.

Now I thinke it is euident inough vnto all men, that the biſhop of Rome is vnder the Councell. Notwithſtanding ſome do yet ſtill doubt, whether he may alſo be depoſed by the Councel or not: For albeit it be proued that he is vnder the Councell, yet for all that, will they not graunt, that hee may be alſo depoſed by the Councell. wherefore, it ſhall be no digreſſing at all from our purpoſe, ſomewhat to ſay vpō that matter: and firſt of all, to ſpeake of theſe railers, which are yet ſo earneſt for the defence of the Byſhop of Rome: which being vanquiſhed in one battaile, ſtill renew an other, and cōtend rather of obſtinacie then of ignoraunce. They would haue here recited againe, that whych we haue before ſpoken, as touching the preeminence of the Biſhop of Rome, or the Patriarcke. And as there are many of thē more ful of wordes then eloquent, they ſtay much of this poynt, where as Chriſt ſayd vnto Peter: Tibi dabo claues regni cœlorum. I wil geue thee the keies of the kingdom of heauen, & what ſoeuer thou ſhalt binde vpon earth ſhalbe bounde in heauen: as though by thoſe wordes, hee ſhould be made head ouer ẏ other. And againe they do amplify it by this: Paſce oues meas: Feede my ſheepe, whyche they do not finde to be ſpoken to any other of the apoſtles. And becauſe it is ſayde that Peter was the chiefe and the mouth of the Apoſtles, therefore they iudge it well ſpoken, that no man ſhall iudge the chiefe and principall ſea: being all of thys opinion with Boniface, which ſayde ẏ the Pope ought to be iudged for no cauſe except he bee perceyued or knowen to ſwarue from the faith, although he do cary innumerable people with him, headlong into hel, there to be perpetually tormented: as though hee coulde not open the kingdome of heauen to others, if any other could ſhut it againſt him, neither that he could feede other, if hee himſelfe lacked paſture.

The places, Tibi dabo claues regni cœlorum. Paſce oues meas, make nothing for the popes ſupremacye.

The Popes ſupremacie confuted,

But we count theſe as things of no force or difficulty. For S. Auguſtine in the Sermon of the natiuity of Peter and Paule, ſayeth in this wiſe: Our Lorde Ieſus Chriſte before hys Paſſion, choſe hys diſciples (as yee doe knowe) whom he called brethren. Amongeſt thoſe, Peter alone almoſt in euery place repreſented the perſon of the Church, & therefore it was ſayde vnto him, Tibi dabo claues regni cœlorum That is to ſay. Vnto thee will I geue the keyes of the kingdome of heauen. Theſe keies did he not receiue as one man, but as one he receiued them for the Church. And in an other place, where hee wryteth of the Chriſtian agony, he ſayth: the keyes of the kingdome of heauen were geuen vnto the churche: when as they were geuen vnto Peter: And when as it was ſpoken vnto him: Amas me? Paſce oues meas. That is to ſay. Loueſt thou me? feede my ſheepe: it was ſpoken vnto them all. And S. Ambroſe in ẏ beginning of his paſtorall, ſayth which ſheepe and which flocke, the bleſſed Apoſtle S. Peter tooke not charge of alone, but together with vs, and we altogether with him. By which wordes the foundation and principall arguments of thoſe flatterers, are vtterly ſubuerted and ouerthrowen. For if Peter repreſented the perſon of the Church, we ought not to aſcribe the force of theſe words vnto Peter, but vnto the Church. Neither do I ſee how that can ſtand, whych Boniface doth affirme, for it is farre diſtant from the truth, except it be vnderſtand otherwiſe then it is ſpoken.

Peter repreſenteth the perſon of the church, and not of the Pope.
The keyes geuē to the church and not to one man.

Pope Boniface erreth.

But it may peraduenture ſeeme a great thynge vnto ſome, that it is ſayd, the Byſhop of Rome to be the head of the Militant Churche. For, as in the body of man, Phiſitions do neuer geue councell to cut of the head for any maner of ſicknes & diſeaſe, although it be neuer ſo full of vlcers or infected: ſo in this myſticall body of the church, the head ought alwayes to be kept: and albeit it be neuer ſo wicked, yet is it to be ſuffered and borne withall. But now conuert this argument. If it were poſſible in ẏ body of man, when one hed is taken away, to find an other to put in his place, as we ſee it may be done in the Church, ſhould not heades then be oftentimes chaunged for diuers diſeaſes? Moreouer, if we will thus reaſon, that the head of the church ſhuld be in reſpecte of his body, as the head of man in reſpecte of the body of man: then doeth it neceſſarily followe that the head being dead the body muſt alſo die, as is manifeſt in ẏ body of man: So ſhould it grow into an abſurditie to confeſſe that the Pope being dead, the Church alſo ſhoulde bee dead: the which how farre it diſſenteth from the truth, it is moſt manifeſt. Therfore what ſoeuer other men ſay, I am not of opinion wyth them, whych affirme the Biſhoppe of Rome to be head of the Church, except peraduenture they doe make hym the miniſteriall head: for we doe reade that Chriſt is the heade of the Churche and not the Pope: and that he is the true head immutable, perpetuall, and euerlaſting, and the Church is his body, whereof the Pope hymſelfe is alſo a member and the vicare of Chriſte, not to the deſtruction but to the maintenaunce & edifying of the ſame body of Chriſt. wherefore, if he be founde a damnable deſtroyer of the Churche, he may be depoſed and caſt out, becauſe he doth not ẏ he was ordeined to doe: and we ought, as Pope Leo ſayeth, to be mindeful of the commaundement geuen vs in the Goſpell: that if our eye, our foote, or oure right hand, do offend vs, it ſhould be cut of from the body. For the Lorde ſayeth in an other place: Euery tree whych bringeth not forth fruite, ſhall be cut downe and caſte into the fire. And in an other place alſo it is ſayde vnto vs: take away all euill and wickedneſſe from among you. It is very iuſt and true, whiche is wrytten in the Epiſtle of Clement vnto Iames the brother of our Lorde, that he whych will be ſaued, ought to be ſeparate from them whych will not be ſaued.

The B. of Rome vnproperly called the head of the Church.

They dote which ſay that the pope cannot be depoſed for any other cauſe then for hereſie.

But for the more manifeſt declaration hereof, we muſt haue recourſe to that which is ſpoken by the Lorde, in the Goſpell of Iohn: I am the true vine ſayth the Lorde, and my father is the huſbandman, and ye are the braunches: euery braunch therfore that bryngeth not forth fruite in me, my father wil cut off. Theſe wordes were ſpoken vnto the Apoſtles, amongſt whom alſo Peter was preſent, whome ẏ Lord wold haue cut off, if he brought not forth his fruit. Alſo S. Hierome vpon theſe wordes of Mathewe: Vnſauery ſalte is profitable for nothing, but to be caſt forth and troden of ſwine. whereuppon in the perſone of Peter and Paule, he ſayth thus: It is no eaſie matter to ſtande in the place of Peter and Paule, and to keepe the chaire of them which raigne with Chriſt. This vnſauery ſalte, that is to ſay a fooliſh Prelate, vnſauery in preaching, and fooliſh in offending, is good for nothing, but to be caſt foorthe, that is to ſay depoſed, and to be troden of ſwine, that is of wicked ſpirits, which haue dominion ouer the wicked and naughty Prelates, as their owne flocke and herde. Beholde, thys teſtimonie of Hierome is plaine and euident. Let hym be caſt out ſayth he.

Fruiteles braunches are to be cutt of.

If the pope be vnſauery ſalt, he is to be caſt away.

Hee expoundeth and ſpeaketh it of the Prelate, whych vſurpeth the place of Peter, and ſo conſequently of the byſhop of Rome, who being vnſauery in preaching, and fooliſh in offending, oughte to be depoſed (as Hierome affirmeth) from hys degree and dignitie. Neyther as ſome doe dreame, is he to be depoſed for hereſie only. Iſidorus in the booke of Councels, rehearſeth a certain epiſtle of Clement the ſucceſſour of Peter wrytten vnto Iames the Apoſtle, wheras the ſaid Clement referring ẏ words of Peter vnto himſelfe, ſayeth thus: If thou be occupied wyth worldly cares, thou ſhalt both deceiue thy ſelfe, & thoſe which ſhall geue eare vnto thee: for thou canſt not fully diſtribute vnto euery man, thoſe thinges which pertaine vnto ſaluation:

A note for all naughty prelats.

The wordes of Peter to Clement.

whereby it ſhall come to paſſe, that thou as a man for not teaching thoſe things which pertaine vnto ſaluation, ſhalt be depoſed, & thy diſciples ſhall periſh through ignorance. Notwithſtanding in an other place, in ſtead of this word depoſed, it is found thou ſhalt be puniſhed: which 2. wordes, if they be wel vnderſtode, do not much differ, for depoſition is oftẽtimes vſed in the place of puniſhment. But peraduenture ſome wil here obiect, that this Epiſtle is not to be iudged Clements, becauſe it is ſayd to be wrytten vnto Iames, who as the Eccleſiaſticall hyſtory affirmeth, was deade before that Peter was put to death. But Clement might thinke that Iames was aliue when as hee wrote: whych were farre diſtant a ſunder, and meſſengers of the chriſtians, came not often vnto Rome. Moreouer, there is mẽtion made of thys Epiſtle in diuers places of the decretals, as moſt true, and therfore it ſhalbe nothing from the purpoſe, to rehearſe other ſayings out of the ſame Epiſtle, where he ſayth, that he which liueth rebelliouſly, and refuſeth both to learne and to doe good, is rather a member of the deuill, then of Chriſt, and doth ſhew himſelfe rather to be an infidel, then a faithful Chriſtian. Upõ which words, the gloſe which Panormitane calleth ſingular, & is muche allowed, ſayeth, that if the crime or offence of the biſhop of Rome be notorious, wherby the Church is offended, if he be incorrigible, he may be accuſed therof. If then he may be accuſed, Ergo alſo he may be puniſhed, and according to the exigent of the fault depoſed: Otherwiſe he ſhould be accuſed in vaine.

The epiſtle of Clement to Iames doubted.

The pope may and ought to be both accuſed & puniſhed for ill doing.

Now is there no more any place of defence left for our aduerſaries, but that the Pope may be depoſed: Notwithſtanding it is not yet euident whether hee may be depoſed by ẏ councel or no, which we now take in hãd to diſcours. And firſt of all, the aduerſaries will graunt thys vnto vs, that the Biſhop of Rome may be depoſed by the Church, forſomuch as the Pope being the vicare of the Church, no man doubteth, but that a Lorde may put out his vicare at his wil & pleaſure, neither is to be douted but that ẏ Pope is more truly called the vicare of the church, then of chriſt. But if the church may depoſe the pope: Ergo the coũcel alſo may do the ſame. Alſo the gloſe which Panormitane in his wryting doth ſo greatly commend, hath this ſentence: that the general coũcel is iudge ouer the pope in al caſes. Likewiſe the moſt ſacred Synode of Conſtantinople, whych is allowed of all men, doth appoynt the biſhops of Rome to be vnder the iudgement of the councel: and the councell to iudge and determine of euery doutfull matter or queſtion that doeth ariſe, concerning the biſhop of Rome. Neither let any mã doubt hereof, becauſe this worde depoſition is not mentioned: for it is ſayde, of euery doutfull matter or queſtion: For if the Synode do iudge of euery doubt: Ergo it ſhall alſo iudge, whether the pope ſhalbe depoſed or no: for that may alſo come in doute. And becauſe we will not ſeeke examples farre of, Iohn 23. whom all the world dyd reuerence, was depoſed of his Papacie by the Councell of Conſtance. Neither yet was he cõdemned for any hereſy: but becauſe he did offend the Church by his manifolde crimes, the ſacred Synode thought good to depoſe him: and euer ſince continually, the church hath proceded by like example, that their opinion might ceaſe, which affirme that the Pope cannot be depoſed but onely for hereſy.

Whether the pope may be depoſed by the counſell or no.

The pope is rather to be called the vicar of the Church, then of Chriſt.

Pope Iohn 23. depoſed and yet for no hereſie.

But heere is yet one thing not to be omitted, that certaine men do affirme the general Councels to be of no effect, except the Pope do cal and appoynt them, and his authoritie remaine with them. Wherupon they ſaid that Dioſcorus did rebuke Paſchaſius the biſhop of Cicill, and legate of Pope Leo, becauſe that hee did enterpriſe wythout the authoritie of the Apoſtolicke Sea, to call a Councell at Epheſus. They alſo alledge an other teſtimony of the Sinode of Chalcedone: wheras, when mention was made of the Councel of Epheſus, al the Biſhops cried out, ſaying: we ought not to call it a Councell, becauſe it was neyther gathered by the apoſtolike authority, neither rightly kept. By the which authorities, they which ſay that the Councels cannot be holden without the conſent of the Pope, do thinke themſelues marueilouſly armed. Whoſe ſentence & opinion, if it take place and preuaile as they deſire, it ſhall bring with it the great ruine and decay of the Church. For what remedy ſhall we finde, if that a wicked Pope doe diſturbe the whole Church, deſtroy ſoules, ſeduce the people by his euil examples, if finally he preach contrary vnto the faith and fill the people full of hereſies, ſhal we prouide no ſtay or ſtoppe for him? Shall we ſuffer all things to runne to ruine and decay with him? Who woulde thinke that the biſhop of Rome would cõgregate a councell for hys owne correction or depoſition? for as men are prone vnto ſinne, ſo would they alſo ſinne wythout puniſhment. But when as I do peruſe ancient hyſtories, and the Acts of the Apoſtles, I do not finde this order, that councels ſhould be gathered only at the will of the Pope: for the firſt Councel of all, after that Mathias was ſubſtitute in the place of Iudas, was not congregate at the commandement of Peter, but at the commandement of Chriſt, who commanded the Apoſtles that they ſhould not depart from Ieruſalem, but looke for the promiſe of the father.

Whether councells may be cõgregated without the authority of the Pope.

They erre that ſay the Pope ought onely to appoint the councells. Marke wherefore the popes will haue no generall coũcell.

The firſt councell of the apoſtles.

The ſeconde Councell as touching the election of the deacons, Peter alone did not congregate, but the 12. Apoſtles: for it is wrytten. The 12. Apoſtles calling together the multitude. &c.

The 2. coũcell of the Apoſtles.

The thirde Councell, whych was holden as touching the taking away of circumciſion & other ceremonies of the lawe, was gathered together by a generall inſpiration: for it is written: The Apoſtles and Elders came together. &c.

The 3. coũcell of the Apoſtles.

The fourth Councell, whereas certaine thyngs contained in the law are permitted, ſeemeth to be gathered by Iames, & ſo diſcourſing throughout all, there can nothing be founde in the primatiue Church, whereby it ſhould appeare ẏ the authority of congregating of Councels ſhould pertaine onely vnto Biſhoppes of Rome. Neither afterwards in the time of Conſtantinus Magnus, and other Emperours, was the conſent of the biſhops of Rome greatly required to the congregating of Councels, and therefore it is wrytten thus of the Synode of Chalcedon: The ſacred and vniuerſall Synode gathered together at Chalcedone the chiefe Citie of the prouince of Bethunia, according vnto the grace of God, & the ſanctions of the moſt godly and Chriſtian Emperours Ualentinian and Martian, doeth not make any mention of the Byſhop of Rome, although hys conſent were there.

The 4. coũcell of the Apoſtles.

Generall councells in tymes paſt cõgregated by Emperours & not by popes.

Wherfore, if the pope would reſiſt, and would haue no Councell congregate, yet if the greater part of the Church do iudge it neceſſary to haue a Councel, the Councell may be congregate whether the Pope wil or no. The Councel holden at Piſa, was not congregate by the authoritie and conſent of any Pope, when as Gregorie did condemne it, and Benedict curſed it. The ſame alſo may be ſayde of the Coũcel of Conſtance, whych was aſſembled by the authority of Pope Iohn, who in reſpect of the Spaniardes was no true Pope. And if the Councell of Piſa were no true Councell, Pope Iohn was no true Pope: wherupon his conſent to the congregating of the Councel of Conſtance, was of no effect. Moreouer it is more then folly to affirme, that when the pope hath once geuen his conſent, if it ſhuld be called backe, that the Councel ſhould then ceaſe, for then it is no more in his power to reuoke his cõſent: And of neceſſity he muſt be obedient vnto the Councel, wherof he is a member, and geue place vnto the greater part: and if hee ſeparate himſelfe from the conſent of the greater part, and depart from the vnity of the Church, he maketh himſelfe a Schiſmaticke.

If the greater part of the Church do conſent, a councell may be holdẽ whether the Pope will or no.

How the Pope is a Schiſmaticke.

Now, to come vnto the ſecond concluſion, if it be true, as it is in deede, that the Pope is vnder the Councell, how can the Pope then diſſolue, alter and tranſporte the Councell, againſt the will of the ſame? For wyth what countenance can we ſay, that the inferior hath power ouer the ſuperior? How can the Synode correct the Pope, if the Pope may diſſolue the Synode contrary to the will thereof? Admit that the Pope be libidinous, couetous, a ſower of war and diſcorde, and a moſt mortall enemie vnto the Church, and the name of Chriſt, how can the Councel reprone him, if he haue authority to diſſolue the Councel? For aſſoone as euer that the biſhop of Rome ſhall vnderſtande that in the Councell they doe intreat or talke of his correction or puniſhment, ſtraightwaies he wil ſeke remedy by diſſoluing the Councel. For as Macrobius ſayth: he that hath liberty to do more then is fit or neceſſary, wil oftentimes do more then is lawfull. If ſo be that the Biſhop of Rome may exempt himſelf from correction by diſſoluing or tranſporting the Councell, it followeth that the Councell is not aboue him. Therfore we muſt either deny that which is aforſaid, that the Pope is vnder the Councell, or els deny that the Pope hath power to diſſolue the Councell, contrary to the will and determination of the Councell.

The Pope can not diſſolue a generall councell againſt the will of the ſame.

The ſaying of Macrobius.

And as this firſt concluſion is moſt true, ſo are al other concluſiõs falſe, which ſeeme to impugne the ſame. Wherfore ths ſeconde concluſion of the diuines is alſo manifeſt: albeit that ſome doe admit it in certaine caſes, and in other ſome exclude it agaime. For if we do admit, that for certain cauſes the Pope may diſſolue the Councel contrary to the will and determination thereof, that is to ſay, to make the Pope iudge of the Councell, it were cleane contrary vnto the firſt concluſion.

Whether the pope in certaine caſes may diſſolue the councell.

Now it is proued that ẏ Councell is aboue the Pope, & can not be diſſolued by the Pope wythout conſent thereof. Nowe we muſt further ſee, whether it be an Article of our faith to beleeue it: which matter hath reſpect vnto the third concluſion. For there haue bene many, which all beit they did confeſſe theſe two concluſions to be true, yet they doubted whether it were a veritie of the Catholicke fayth or no. Therefore this ſecond part muſt be confirmed. And we muſt ſee whether it be an article of faith that the Pope be vnder the councel. which being proued, it ſhall alſo appeare to be an article of faith, that the pope can not diſſolue the councell without the conſent therof. which conſequent none of the contrary part hath refuted. Firſt of al therefore we muſt inquire what faith is, that wee may thereby the better vnderſtand, what pertaineth thereunto.

The definition of faith

Faith, as the Diuines do define it, is a firme and ſtedfaſt cleauing vnto things, beleued by the authority of hym that ſpeaketh. If then we beleeue as is aforeſayde, that the Pope of Rome is vnder the councell, ſome authority doth moue vs therunto: ſo is it the faith of him which beleeueth it: but the queſtion is not whether it be an Article of faith onely, but whether it be an Article of the Catholike faith. wherefore we muſt againe enquire what the Catholicke faith is. This word catholike is a Greke word, and ſignifieth vniuerſal. The catholike faith, that is to ſay ẏ vniuerſal faith, is not ſo called becauſe that euery man holdeth it, but becauſe euery man ought to beleeue it. For all men doe not beleue that God is incarnate, but euery man ought ſo to beleue. And albeit ẏ many be againſt this faith, yet doth it not ceaſe to be vniuerſall. For what wryteth the Apoſtle vnto the Romains? If ſome of them hath not beleued, doth their miſbeliefe make the faith of God vaine? God forbid. Verely God is true, but euery man is a lyer. Therefore to beleue that the pope is vnder the councell, is a poynt of the Catholike faith, although ſome thincke the contrary: for we are bound to beleeue it, for ſomuch as it is taken out of the Goſpell. For we are not bounde onely to beleeue thoſe things which are noted to vs in ẏ Crede, but alſo all thoſe things which are cõtained in the holy Scriptures, wherof we may not deny one iote. And thoſe things whych we alledge for the ſuperiority of the general Councel, are gathered out of the ſayings of our Sauiour Ieſu Chriſt, and the Epiſtles of S. Paule: Ergo, we are all bound to beleeue it. And to proue that theſe things are taken out of the goſpel, the councell of Conſtance doth witneſſe, the which groundeth his authority vpon theſe wordes: Dic Eccleſiæ, that is to ſay, tel it vnto the Church. And, where 2. or 3. are gathered together in my name. &c. And, whatſoeuer ye ſhal bind &c. with other ſuch like texts.

The definition of the catholicke faith.

Rom.3.

Catholicke what it is.

The councel of Cõſtance Vid.ſupra. pag.650.

Whereuppon Pope Martine the 4. being yet at Conſtance, vnder the licence of ẏ Councell, ſent out his bulles, which do recken vp the Articles, wherupon they ought to be examined, which had fallẽ into any hereſy, amongſt the which articles he putteth this article: whether hee doe beleue the ſacred generall Councel to haue power immediatly from God, and that the ordinances therof are to be receiued of all faithfull Chriſtians, which if any man would deny, he ſhould be counted an hereticke. wherefore, when as the ſacred Synode of Conſtance, doth ſet forth this verity, as touching the ſuperiority of the general Councell, what ſhould let but that we alſo ſhoulde confeſſe the ſame to be a verity of the Catholike faith? For the catholike church being congregate at Conſtance, receiued that faith, that is to ſay, beleued it by the authority of hym whych ſpake it, that is Chriſt and his Saintes.

The wordes of the councel of Chalcedõ, where by he is declared an hereticke that holdeth any opinion contrary to the councell.

To this purpoſe alſo ſerueth very well the wordes of the ſynode of Chalcedon written in this maner: It is not lawfull for hym that is condemned by the whole Synode to nominate any Byſhop. The determination pleaſeth all men. Thys is the faith of the fathers. He that holdeth any opinion contrary vnto this, is an hereticke. And againe it is a rule, that it is not lawfull to appeale from the elect and choſen Synode.

Marke the manifeſt witneſſe of this moſte ſacred Synode, which ſaid that he is an hereticke, which holdeth any opinion contrary vnto the Councell: But hee is no hereticke, except hee refuſe the Catholike faith: Ergo, it was the Catholicke faith to beleeue that it was not lawfull to appeale from the ſacred Councel. But howe was the ſame any poynt of the Catholike faith? Verely for ſomuch as the ſacred Synode peruſing ouer the holy Scriptures, hathe receiued thys concluſion out of the wordes of Chriſt and other holy fathers. And like as the Synode of Chalcedon tooke their concluſion out of the holy ſcriptures, ſo did the Councell of Conſtance, this which we now reaſon vpon. And like as the one is an Article of the Catholicke faithe, ſo is the other alſo. And he which holdeth any opinion cõtrary to either of both, is an hereticke.

Furthermore, they ſeeme vnto me to dreame and dote, which confeſſing them to be verities, wil not confeſſe them to be verities of faith. For if they be verities, I pray you wherof are they verities? Truely not of Grammer, much leſſe of Logike, and from Aſtronomy and Phiſicke they are farre diſtant. Neither is there any other man but a diuine, that will graunt this veritie, whome Scripture doth force vnto it of neceſſity, if he do beleeue Chriſt or his Apoſtles. Therefore this is a verity of the Catholicke faith which all men ought to embrace, and he which obſtinatly reſiſteth againſt the ſame, is to be iudged an hereticke, as the thirde concluſion doth affirm. Neither let any man thinke it hard or cruell, that he ſhould be called an hereticke which goeth about to derogate any thing frõ the power of the generall Councel, which is confirmed by ſo many teſtimonies and authorities. Alſo Panormitan alledgeth S. Hierome, ſaying: He which vnderſtandeth the ſcripture otherwiſe then the conſent of the holy Ghoſt doth require, albeit he do not depart from the Church, may be called an hereticke.

Panormitan is noted and verie well nipped by his owne ſuppoſition.

Tell the church that is to ſay, the generall councell.

Wherupon it foloweth that he which vpon the wordes of Chriſt ſaying vnto Peter, Dic Eccleſiæ. i. Tel it vnto the Church, doeth not vnderſtand by the Church the generall Councell, vnderſtandeth it otherwiſe then the ſenſe of the holy Ghoſt doth require, and there by may be noted as an hereticke. And to proue that the ſenſe of the holy Ghoſt is otherwiſe then he doth iudge it, the councell of Conſtance, doth declare: The which interpreting thoſe words, Dic Eccleſiæ. i. Tel it vnto the churche, ſpoken by the holy Ghoſte, vnderſtandeth them to be ſpoken of the generall councell. By theſe and many other waightier reaſons, the 3. aforeſaid concluſions, ſemed true vnto the Diuines, & thorough them they alſo allowed the reſidue.

Now haue we ſufficiẽtly ſayd, as touching that which was before promiſed: neither do I think any man now to be in doubt of theſe 3. firſt concluſions. Now to returne againe vnto our ſtorie, it is our purpoſe to declare thoſe thinges which happened after the concluſions of the Diuines: for there are many things worthy of remẽbraunce, which alſo may happely be profitable vnto the poſteritie.

When the diſputation was ended and a final concluſion of theſe matters euen at hand, the Archbiſh. of Millaine and Panormitane with the reſidue of their fellow ambaſſadors of the king of Arragon, and duke of Millain, armed themſelues with all their power to lette the matter, exhorting all men of their faction to withſtand it with ſtout and valiant ſtomackes.

The Byſhop of Burgen.

And firſt of all, aſſoone as the congregation was aſſembled together, the byſhop of Burgen exhorted them to deferre the concluſion, & to tary for the Ambaſſadors of other Princes, which would returne from Mentz.

Panormitanes oration.

After him Panormitane with a graue and Rhetoricall Oration, ſpake (in a maner) as followeth.

I haue (ſaide he) had a cõmaundement by the prophet, to cry without ceaſing: which prophet ſayd: Cry out, ceaſe not, lift vp thy voice as a trumpet. If that in any matter at any time before, hee ought to haue cried, this matter ſpecially which is now in hand lacketh crying and roaring out, when as the ſtate of the vniuerſal churche is intreated vpon, either to be preſerued, or vtterly ouerthrown: and that he hath cried ſo much in thys matter, that he doubted not, but the ſaying of Dauid was fulfilled in hym, where hee ſayeth: Laboraui clamans, raucæ ſunt factæ fauces meæ. I haue laboured, crying out, that my iawes are become horce.

Foure thinges to be conſidered in euery requeſt.

Notwythſtanding that he would both now, and as often as neede ſhould require, wythout ceaſing ſtill crie out, and ſpecially now in this moſt difficult and waighty matter: wherein hee required the ſacred Councell gentlely to heare both hym, and the Ambaſſadours of other Princes: adding moreouer foure thinges to be conſidered in all requeſtes made of any man. The which he alſo required the fathers now preſently, to marke & conſider. who it is that maketh the requeſt. what is required. why it ſhuld be required, and what effect woulde come by the requeſt eyther graunted, or denyed. As touching the firſt poynt he ſayde: The moſt noble kynges and excellent Princes wyth their prelates to be of great power: and then reconed vp ẏ kyng of Caſtill, the king of Arrogon, the Duke of Millaine, and the Byſhops of the ſame Princes, rehearſing alſo the merites & good deedes of the ſayde kings, & alſo of the duke of Millaine. But when as hee came to make mention of the prelates, he coulde not refraine himſelf, but began to wax ſomewhat hoate, ſaying that the greateſt number of Prelates were on his parte. For if the Byſhops and Abbotes were counted, it were not to be doubted, but the greateſt part of them would haue this preſent matter deferred: and forſomuch as the whole power of the councell doth conſiſt in the Biſhops, it is not to be ſuffered, that they being neglected and contẽned, that ſhould be concluded whych pleaſed the greater part of the inferiours: For the keyes (ſayde he) were geuen to the Apoſtles, & to their ſucceſſors which are the Byſhops: alſo, that there are three kindes of Synodes, Epiſcopall, Prouinciall, and Generall, and none of all theſe without Biſhops.

Panormitane would haue dignitie to be cõſidered in coũcell & not voices.

Wherfore the maner and order of the preſent Councell ſeemed vndecent, wheras thinges were not weyed according as men excell in dignitie, but by moſte voyces: Notwithſtanding according to yͤ moſt famous Epiſtle of Clement, the Byſhops were the pillers and keyes of heauen, and the inferiours had no determining voyce, but onely a conſultatiue voyce with them: wherefore there would be a great offence in thys behalfe, if a matter of faith ſhoulde be determined without the biſhops: in which matter not only the biſhoppes, but alſo the ſecular Princes ought to bee admitted. And for ſo much as they, in yͤ name of their princes, deſired to be admitted to the examination of thys preſent matter, and would examine the matter more fully, hee cõplained greatly how vnworthy a thing it was that they ſhould be contemned or deſpiſed.

Panormitane ſeemeth to delay the proces againſt the pope.

After many things ſpoken to this ende & effect, he paſſed ouer to the ſecond part of his Oration, declaring what it was yͭ he required: not gold, nor ſiluer, neither precious ſtones, neither prouinces nor kingdomes, neither a thing hard to be done: but that only the delay of the ſacred councell was required, & that the fathers would ſtay in the proceſſe againſt the Pope, and in the concluſion and determination of matters which are now in hand. Neither ſhuld the delay be long, but only vntil the returne of the Ambaſſadors from Mentz, whome he knew well would returne very ſhortly. That this was but a ſmall matter, and to be ſmall intreatie, becauſe there was no danger in it. And alſo it ſhuld ſeme iniurious, not to tary for the Ambaſſadors of the Princes which were then at Mentz, when as they were not abſent for their owne priuate commoditie, but about the affaires of the common wealth, and the commodity of peace: neither had he forgotten, yͭ at their departure they had deſired, that during their abſence, there ſhould be nothing renued concerning the matters of Eugenius.

The 3. part of Panormitans oration.

Then immediatly adioyning the third part of his Oration, wherfore this delay was required, he concluded, that it was not required for the priuate commoditie of any one man, but for a common wealth: not to cauſe any trouble or vnquietneſſe, but for the better examination of the matter, yͭ all things might paſſe with peace and quietnes, that the matter might be ſomuch the more firme and ſtable, by how much it is ratified & allowed by the conſent of many. And ſo he proceded to yͤ laſt part of his argument, requiring the fathers that they would conſider and wey in their mindes the effect that would follow, if they ſhould graunt or deny thys requeſt. For (ſayth he) if ye ſhall deny this ſmall petition of the Princes, they al wil be agreeued therewith, and take this repulſe in ill parte. They will ſay, they are contemned of you, neither will they be obedient vnto you, or receiue your decrees. In vaine ſhall ye make lawes except the Princes do execute them, and all your decrees ſhall be but vaine: yet woulde I thinke this to be borne wall, if I did not feare greater matters to enſue. What if they ſhuld ioyne themſelues with Eugenius, who not onely deſireth to ſpoyle you of your liuings, but alſo of your liues. Alas, what ſlaughter and murther doe the eyes of my minde behold and ſee? would God my opinion were but vain. But if you do graunt and conſent vnto their petitions, they wil thincke themſelues bounde vnto you: they wil receiue and embrace your decrees, and whatſoeuer you ſhal require of them ſhall be obtained. They will forſake your aduerſary, they will ſpeake euil of him and abhorre him: but you they wil commend and praiſe, you they will reuerẽce: vnto you they wil wholy ſubmit themſelues, and then ſhall followe that moſt excellent fruit of reformation and tranquillity of the church. And thus he required the matter to be reſpited on all partes. At the laſt he ſayde, that except the Ambaſſadors of yͤ Princes were heard, he had a proteſtation, wrytten, which he would commaund to be read before them all.

Perſuations of Panormitane.

The praiſe of Lodouicus the prothonotarie.

When Panormitan had made an ende of his Oration, Lodouicus the Prothonotary of Rome roſe vp, a man of ſuch ſingular wit and memory, that he was thought not to be inferior vnto any of the famous men afore time. In ſo much that he had alwaies in memory whatſoeuer hee had heard or red, and neuer forgate any thyng that he had ſene. This man firſt commending Panormitane, ſayde that he came but the day before from the baths, & that it ſemed vnto him a ſtrange thing which was now brought in queſtion: wherin he deſired to heare other mens minds, and alſo to be heard of others, and that thoſe prelates which were at Mentz ſhuld be taried for, to be preſent at the diſcuſſing of this matter, in the name and behalfe of their Princes, which prelates were men of great eſtimation, and the Orators of moſt mighty Princes.

Biſhops onely to haue determining voyce in councells.

He allowed alſo the ſaying of Panormitane touching the voices of the inferiors, that it ſeemeth not to be againſt the truth, that only Biſhops ſhould haue a deciding or determing voice in Councels. And all be it that ſome in thys diſputation doe thinke that, which is writtẽ in the 15. chapter of the Actes, to be their force or defence: notwythſtanding he was nothing moued therewith, nor tooke it to be of any effect, albeit it was ſayd: It ſeemed good vnto the holy Ghoſt and to vs, where as both the Apoſtles and the elders were gathered together: whereby it appeared: that yͤ others had a deciding voice wͭ the Apoſtles. For he ſayde, that there was no argument to be gathered of the Acts of the Apoſtles, whoſe examples were more to be meruailed at, then to be folowed: and that it doth not appeare there, yͭ the Apoſtles called the Elders of duety, but that it is onely declared that they were there preſent: whereupon nothing could be inferred. And that it ſemed vnto him, that the inferiours in the Councell of Baſill, were admitted to determine with the Biſhops but of grace and fauour onely, becauſe the Biſhops may communicate their authority vnto others. He alledged for teſtimony, the biſhop of Cancen, a man of great authority, who woulde not ſuffer any incorporation or felowſhip of the meaner ſort, and therfore, neither any inferiour, neither himſelfe, which as yet was not made Byſhop, to haue any deciding voyce in the councel. Wherefore, for ſomuch as the matter was waighty, which was nowe in hand, and that the Byſhops ſpake againſt it, he required the Councell that they would of neceſſitie ſtay and tary for the Ambaſſadours of the Princes comming from Mentz.

It is no maruell why he alleadged no more or better matter: for of noughty Lether no man can make a good ſhoe. And note here how God with draweth his giftes when men diſſemble & cloke the truthe.

His Oration was ſo much the more greeuous, in that many were touched with his wordes, and ſpecially in that poynt, that he ſaid, the apoſtles were not to be folowed: for that al men did impugne as a blaſphemy. But here a man may meruel, that a mã of ſuch excellency, alledged no more or better matter. But in this poynt the memory of the man is to be pardoned, which did not willingly ſpeake in thys matter, and deſired nothing ſomuch, as not to obtaine that which he intreated for. After him many other ſpake theyr minds, but al to this end that they might protract the time and deferre the concluſion of theſe matters.

Then Lodouicus the Cardinall Arelatenſis, a man of marueilous conſtancy, & borne for the gouernaunce of general councels, gathering together the wordes of all the orators, ſpake in this wiſe: Moſt reuerend fathers, this is no new or ſtrange buſines, nor begon to day or yeſterday. For it is now many wekes ago, ſince the concluſiõs were diſputed vppon amongſt the diuines, & ſent vnto Mentz, and to all other partes of the world. After thys, they were diſputed vpon 6. daies continually, and fully diſcuſſed, and after that not without great delay approued by the deputies, and as the truth ſeketh no corners, ſo all things were done publikely and openly. Neyther can any man pretend ignoraunce, neither are the Prelates or Princes contemned: For wee called all that were preſent at Baſill, and exhorted al yͤ reſt for to be preſent. And for ſomuch as mention is made of the moſt noble King of Caſtell: who is it that is ignoraunt, that the kings Orators were there preſent? The biſhop of Burgen and Ebrun, men of ſingulare learning and eloquence, and you alſo Panormitane youre ſelfe, which heere repreſent the perſon of the moſte famous King of Arragon, were twiſe preſent your ſelf in the chapter houſe, and diſputed twiſe moſt ſubtilly, and twiſe declared your minde, what you thought in that matter. What do you deſire any more? Alſo out of the territory of yͤ Duke of Millaine, there was preſent the Archbiſh. of Millaine, who albeit, he be no Ambaſſador, yet howe famous a Prelate he is, you are not ignorant. When he had ſpoken theſe words, the Archbiſhop being ſomewhat moued, ſayd vnto him. My Lord Cardinal, you ſupply the roume of a preſident no better, then I doe the place of a Dukes Oratour, and began to taunt him wyth many words. But the Cardinall, (as he was a man moſte pacient: and woulde not be prouoked to anger by no meanes) ſayd: this is it yͭ I euen now deſired. For if the Archb. be an Ambaſſador, then hath the Duke no cauſe to complaine, which had his Oratour preſent at the diſcuſſing of thoſe matters.

Truth ſeeketh no corners.

The patiẽce and anſwere of Arelatenſis.

I paſſe ouer other Princes, becauſe they doe not complaine. Notwythſtanding the moſt Chriſtian Kynge of Fraunce, had there the Byſhop of Lyons, a graue and ſober man, his Ambaſſadour at the diſputation. As for other princes, I ſee no cauſe why they ſhuld be taried for, which knowing the councel to be congregate for ſuch matters as pertaine vnto faith, do not thinke it abſurd, that the doutfull full matters of fayth ſhoulde be declared in the Councell: whereunto, if they had bene willing to come, they would haue bene preſent or this.

Why this matter ſhould neede ſo much diſcuſſing, as ſome will haue, I doe not vnderſtand. For if I be wel remembred, Panormitane and alſo Ludouicus, haue oftentimes affirmed in this place, euē yͤ very ſame thing which the concluſions ſignifie. And if any of them now will go about to gaynſay it, it will happen vnto them, as it did vnto Didimus. To whom, when as on a tyme, hee repugned agaynſt a certayne hiſtorye, as vayne and friuolous, hys own book was deliuered vnto him, wherin the ſame was written: So likewiſe theſe two men (meaning Panormitane & Ludouicus the Prothonotary) Although they be excellently learned, & eloquent: yet may they be confuted by their owne writinges. Beſides this: there are Synodall Epiſtles and decrees of this Councell, whiche are full of ſuch cōcluſions. What is it then whereupon any difficultie can be rayſed? What is it that may be impugned? Shal we now bring that againe in doubt, whiche hath ſo often bene declared, affirmed, and decreed? But (ſay they) the princes & Ambaſſadours are abſent whiche are byſhops by whoſe preſence the decrees ſhould be of more authority. Wel, they are not onely abſent which are gone to Mentz: but almoſt an infinite number of others, diſperſed throughout yͤ whol world: whō if we ſhould tary to looke for, nothing at any tyme ſhould be decreed. They are al called vnto the councel: they might haue come if they would. To thoſe that are preſent power is geuen, and they ought to debate theſe matters. If any man will ſay, yͤ they which are abſent, are about the affayres of the common wealth: truely we ſent them not thither, but they went rather agaynſt the will of the Councell, then with the conſent therof.

Didimus reprehended that which was in his owne booke founde.

He meaneth Panormitane, and Lodouicus the Prothonotary.

And admit that they had bene ſent by the Councel: yet were not our power ſo much reſtrayned, but yͤ we might reforme the Church, for otherwiſe there ſhould neuer any thing be done in yͤ Councell: for ſomuch as alwayes ſome are ſent out by the Councell, and ſome are alwayes to be looked and taryed for, and therfore we muſt eyther do nothing at all, or ſende out no Prelates from the Councell. Where as he ſayd that Prelates and ſpecially Biſhops are cōtemned, that is moſt far from the truth, for they haue the chiefe and firſt places. They ſpeake firſt, and geue their voices firſt of all vnto all thinges: and if ſo be they do ſpeake learnedly and truely, all the inferiors without any gaynesaying, did ſoone follow their mynde.

Neither peraduenture ſhall it be founde vntrue, that there was neuer any Synode: which dyd more amplifie yͤ power & authoritie of Byſhops then this. For what haue the Byſhoppes bene in our dayes, but onely ſhadowes? Might they not well haue bene called ſhepheardes wͭout yͤ ſheep? What had they more thē their miter and their ſtaffe, when as they could determine nothing ouer their ſubiects Verely in the primitiue Church, the Byſhops had yͤ greateſt power & authoritie: but now was it come to yͤ poynt that they exceeded the cōmon ſort of prieſtes onely in theyr habite and reuenewes? But we haue reſtored them agayn to their old ſtate, we haue reduced the colation of benefices agayn vnto thē: we haue reſtored vnto thē yͤ confirmation of elections: we haue brought agayn the cauſes of the ſubiectes to be heard, into their handes: & haue made them biſhops which were none before. What cauſe is there then, yͤ the Byſhops ſhould ſay, they are contemned of the Councel? Or what iniurious thing haue we at anye time done vnto them? But Parnormitan ſayth, yͤ forſomuch as moſt biſhops are on hys parte, and few agaynſt hym, the concluſion is not to be determined by the multitude of the inferiours, but let Panormitan remember himſelf, that this is no new kinde of proceeding.

Marke, O ye Biſhops, the coūcell of Baſill contendeth for you and ye will not vnderſtād it.

This order of proceeding, the Councell ordeined from the beginning, neither hath it bene chaunged at any tyme ſince. And this order Panormitan, in times paſt hath pleaſed you well enough, when as the multitude did followe your minde. But now, becauſe they do not followe your mynd, they do diſpleaſe you. But the decrees of the Councels are not ſo mutable, as the wils of mē. Know ye moreouer, yͤ the very ſame biſhops which doe conſent with you in word and do not conſent wͭ you in minde, neither ſpake the ſame ſecretly, which they now do openly. They do fear that which you told them at home in their country, that except they would follow your minde, they ſhoulde diſpleaſe the king. They feare the power of the Prince, & to be ſpoyled of theyr temporalties: neither haue they free libertye to ſpeak as is requiſite in Councels. Albeit if they were true Biſhops, & true paſtors of ſoules, they woulde not doubt to put their liues in venture for their ſheepe, neither be afeard to ſhed their bloud for their mother the Church.

This was a true Cardinall: out of whoſe mouth the veritie did ſpeake, which feared not the threatnings of princes, neither ſought any worldly glory or dignitie.

But at this preſent (the more is the pittie) it is to rare to finde a Prelate in this world, whiche doth not preferre hys temporalties before hys ſpiritualties: wͭ the loue wherof, they are ſo withdrawne, that they ſtudy rather to pleaſe Princes then God, and confeſſe God in corners, but Princes they will opēly confeſſe. Of whome the Lord ſpeaketh in hys Goſpell. Euery one ſayth he, that confeſſeth me before men. I will confeſſe him before my father which is in heauen. And contrariwiſe the Lord will not confeſſe him before his father which is afeard to confeſſe the Lord before men. Neither is it true which Panormitan ſayth, moſt biſhops to be on hys part, for here are many byſhops proctors whō he doth not recken, becauſe they are not of his opinion. Neither is the dignities of the fathers, to be reſpected in the Councell, as he ſayth, but onely reaſon, nor anye thyng more to be looked for then the truth: neyther will I for my part, preferre a lye of any byſhop, be he neuer ſo rich before a veritie or truth of a poore prieſt. Neither ought a byſhop to diſdayne, if he be rude or vnlearned, yͤ the multitude doth not follow hym, or that yͤ voyce of a poore learned and eloquent prieſt ſhould be preferred before his. For wiſedome dwelleth oftner vnder a bare and ragged cloke, then in rich ornamentes and apparell.

Marke what worldly pompe, dignitie and wealth had brought the prelates to in thoſe dayes.

Note here the great godlynes & moſt chriſtian ſaying of this good Biſhop.

Truth many times dwelleth vnder the ragged cloke.

Steuen the firſt martir.

Wherfore I pray you my Lord byſhops, do not ſo much contēne your inferiours, for the firſt which dyed for Chriſt the which alſo opened vnto all other the way of Martyrdome, was no byſhop but onely a Leuite. As for yͤ whiche Ludouicus and Panormitane do allege touchyng yͤ voyces of Biſhops, I know not where they haue it. Wherfore I deſire them yͤ they would tell me, where they haue foūd it. But if we repeat the examples of old councels, we ſhall finde that the inferiours were alwayes preſent with yͤ Biſhops. And albeit that Ludouicus do forbid vs the examples of the apoſtles, I ſtay my ſelf moſt vpon their doings For what is more comely for vs to followe, then the doctrine & cuſtomes of the primitiue Church? It is ſayd therfore in the 15. chapter of the Acts of the Apoſtles, it ſeemed good vnto the holy ghoſt and to vs. The whiche word (to vs) is referred vnto them which are before named, the Apoſtles and the Elders. Neither this word, (it ſemed good) ſignifieth in this place conſultation, but deciſion and determination, whereby it appeareth, yͤ other beſide yͤ byſhops had determining voyces. In an other place alſo of the ſayd Actes, when as the apoſtles ſhoulde intreate vppon anye wayghty matter, they durſt not determine by themſelues, but the xii. called together the multitude.

Note the ſinceritie of this good Biſhop, which ſtayed himſelfe vpon the examples of the primitiue church, & not vpon cuſtomes & popes.

Here Ludouicus ſayth, yͤ it doeth not appeare yͤ the Apoſtles called other of neceſſitie: but I ſay vnto hym, how knoweſt thou yͤ they did not call thē of neceſſitie? But forſomuch as both partes are vncertayne: nothing doth prohibite vs to follow the Apoſtles. For ſeeing that all thinges were written for our learning, it appeareth that the Apoſtles wold geue vs exāple, yͤ in wayghty matters we ſhold admit our inferiours. And therfore in all Councels which were celebrate & holden afterwards, we find that Prieſtes were alſo preſent: as in the Councell of Nice, whiche of all other was moſt famous, Athanaſius being then but onely a prieſt, withſtood the Arrians, and infringed their argumentes: Albeit there were alſo other prieſtes. And albeit mention be made of 322. byſhops, yet is not denyed, but yͤ the inferiours were there, whome I thinke to be omitted for this cauſe, for that they were almoſt innumerable: for as you know well enough, the denomination for the moſt part, is taken of the moſt worthy.

Athanaſius beeing but a prieſt, and no Biſhop, vanquiſhed an Archb.

In the Synode of Calcedon (which was counted one of the foure principall Synodes) it is ſayd that there were preſent 600. prieſtes: the which name is common both vnto byſhops and Prieſtes. In other Councels the name both of Biſhops and Prieſtes is omitted, & mention made onely of Fathers, which hath the ſame ſignification yͤ thys worde Elders had in the actes of the Apoſtles. Wee haue alſo a teſtimony of the eccleſiaſticall hiſtory, how that ther was a Councell gathered of Rome of lx. Byſhops, and as many Prieſtes & Deacons agaynſt the Nouations which called themſelues Cathari. Alſo, when Paule the Byſhop of Antioche, in the tyme of Galiene the Emperoure, preached yͤ Chriſt was a man of common nature, the Councell aſſembled agaynſt hym in Antioche: wherunto there came Byſhops out of Ceſaria, Capadotia, out of Pontus, Aſia, and from Ieruſalem, and many other Byſhops, Prieſtes and Deacons: and it is ſaid that for that cauſe the Councel was often holden.

The name of prieſts or elders commō both to Biſhops and prieſts.

Paule Biſhop of Antioch.

And at the laſt, in the ſame place, vnder Aurelius the Emperour Paule was condemned of al Chriſtian Churches which were vnder heauē: neyther was there any mā, which did more confound the ſayd Paul, then Malchiona Prieſt of Antioche, which taught Rhetorike in Antioche.

Paule the hereticke with his godly eloquēce. S. Auguſtines minde vpon this ſentence, Tibi dabo claues regni cælorum.

Byſhops are of greater power then prieſts, rather by cuſtome, then diſpenſation of truth.

Byſhops and prieſtes ought to rule the church together

But to make no long digreſſion from the matter, we haue moſt euident teſtimonies, for the defence of the inferiours. For the chiefe and principall amongſt all the Diuines S. Auſten vpō the wordes of Mathew, where as Chriſt ſaith vnto Peter: I wil geue thee the keyes of the kingdome of heauē, ſayth that by thoſe words, the iudiciall power was geuen, not only vnto Peter, but alſo to the other Apoſtles and to the whole Churche the byſhops and Prieſtes. If then Prieſtes haue a iudiciall power in the churche, what ſhold let yͭ they haue not alſo a determining voyce in yͤ coūcels? The famous Doctour S. Hierome doth alſo agree with S. Auſten, whoſe wordes are theſe vpon the Epiſtle of Paule vnto Titus. Before that difference was made in Religion by the inſtigation of the deuill, or that it was ſpoken amongeſt the people, I holde of Paule, I of Apollo, & I of Cephas, the Churches were gouerned by yͤ common conſent and Councell of the Prieſtes: for a prieſt is the very ſame that a byſhop is. Wherefore all Byſhops ought to vnderſtand, that they are of greater power then Prieſtes, rather by cuſtome then by yͤ diſpenſation of yͤ truth of God and yͭ they ought to rule the church together. And this we do alſo gather out of Paule vnto Titus, which maketh ſo much concordaunce betweene biſhops and prieſts, that oftentimes he calleth prieſtes Byſhops, whereby it doth euidently appeare, that prieſtes are not to be excluded from the conuentions of byſhops, and determinations of matters. And albeit as S. Hierom writeth, that byſhops onely by cuſtome are preferred before Prieſtes, it may be, that a contrary cuſtome may take away that cuſtome. For if prieſtes ought to rule the church together with the byſhops, it is euident that it alſo pertayneth vnto them to decide and determine the doubtfull matters of the Church.

Wherfore the teſtimony of S. Paule is euident: for (as he writing vnto the Epheſians ſayth:) If Chriſte inſtituted hys Apoſtles, Prophetes, Paſtours, and Teachers to the worke of the miniſtery, for the edifying of hys Church vntill ſuch tyme as we ſhould meete hym, for this purpoſe that there ſhould be no doubt in the diuerſitie of doctrine, who doubteth then, but that yͤ gouernaunce of the Church is committed vnto others together with the Apoſtles? Let theſe our champions now hold their peace, and ſeeme to be no wiſer then they ought to be. The memoriall of the coūcell of Conſtance, is yet freſh in memory, wheras diuers of vs were preſent, and I my ſelfe alſo whiche was neither Cardinall nor byſhop, but onely a Doctour, where I dyd ſee, without any maner of doubt of difficultie, the inferiors to be admitted with the biſhops, to the deciding of hard & doubtfull matters. Neither ought we to be aſhamed to follow the example of that moſt ſacred and great Councell which alſo followeth the examples of the Councell of Piſa and the great Councell at Lateran, wherein it is not to be doubted, but that the Prieſtes did ioyntly iudge together with the byſhops.

Aeneas Siluius.

Note that Abbots were not inſtituted by Chriſt.

Italy ſurmounteth all other nations in number of Byſhops.

Moreouer, if Abbotes, as we do ſee it obſerued in all Councels, haue a determining voice, which notwithſtanding were not inſtituted by Chriſt: why ſhould not prieſts haue the ſame, whoſe order Chriſt ordayned by hys Apoſtles? Hereupon alſo, if one byſhops ſhoulde haue a determining voice, nothing ſhould be done, but what pleaſed yͤ Italian nation, the whith alone doth exceed all other nations, or at the leaſt is equall wͭ them, in number of byſhops And howſoeuer it be, I iudge it in this behalf to be a work of God, that the inferiours ſhold be admitted to the determinations: for God hath nowe reuealed that vnto little ones which he hath hidden from the wiſe.

Note the terrible perſecution of thoſe dayes and the great conſtancie of the godly, for the truthes ſake.

O zeale of fayth, worthie the crowne of martyrdom.

Behold you do ſee the zeale, conſtancy, vprightnes, and magnanimitie of theſe inferiours. Where ſhould the councell now be, if onely biſhops and Cardinals ſhoulde haue their voice? Where ſhould the authoritie of the Councels be? Where ſhould the Catholicke fayth be? Where ſhoulde the decrees and reformation be? For all things haue now a long time bene vnder the will of Eugenius, and he had now obtained hys wicked & naughty purpoſe, except theſe inferiours, whome you now contemne, had withſtād him. Theſe are they which haue contemned the priuation made by Eugenius. Theſe I ſay, are they which haue not regarded hys threatninges, ſpoyle and perſecution. Theſe are they which being takē, impriſoned, & tormented: haue not fered to defend the trueth of the Councell, yea euen theſe are they, who albeit they were by Eugenius deliuered ouer for a pray, yet would they ſtill continue in yͤ ſacred coūcell, and feared not to to ſuffer warre, famine, & moſt cruel peſtilence: and finally what thing is it, that theſe men haue not willingly ſuffered for the right and equity of the councel? you might haue heard this inferior ſort euen in yͤ midſt of their tribulations, with a loud voyce cry out and ſay, albeit that all men become obedient vnto that ſubuerter of yͤ Church Eugenius, and that euery man do depart from yͤ veritie of the fayth and conſtitutions of the fathers, conſenting vnto the commaundementes of Eugeneus, yet we & our brethren will be conſtant, and doubt not to dye for the truth and traditions of the holy fathers, the which in deed they haue done. Neither could they be feared with threatnings or diſcouraged with any ſpoyles, neither could any feare or hope, turne them from their moſt bleſſed purpoſe: and (to ſpeake ſomewhat of mine own order) whether any Cardinals haue done the like or no, that iudge you.

Eccle. 7.

The biſhops feare the earthly power, but not God.

As for Byſhops, whō Panormitane alone wold haue to determine, you ſee how few of them are on our part, & euen they which are here preſent, are not able, by vertue to ouercome iniquitie, they feare the terrene power, and commit offence with their haſt. Haue ye not heard how they al ſayd: they would conſent vnto the kinges will and pleaſure? But yͤ inferiors are they which haue had truth, righteouſnes, & god himſelfe, before their eyes, & they are greatly to be commended for ſhewing themſelues ſuch men vnto yͤ Church of God. But why do I defend yͤ cauſe of theſe inferiours? When as ſome will alſo exclude thoſe byſhops which are but byſhops by name and title, and haue no poſſeſſion of the Church, from our company, not vnderſtanding that whileſt they go about to put backe thoſe mē, they do condemne Peter, and the other Apoſtles, who (as it is euident) were long without any great flocke, neither was Rome vnto Peter, nor Ieruſalem vnto Iames, at anye tyme wholy obedient: for at that tyme no great number of people, but a ſmall flocke beleued in Chriſt.

The biſhops of the primitiue church what they were.

Poore men more meete to geue iudgement then riche, for riches, wealth, and dignitie bringeth feare: but pouertie cauſeth libertie.

* The Byſhoppes in this age of the church, what they are.

For I pray yon, what is that we ſhold require of theſe byſhops? They haue no flocke, but that is not their fault. They haue no reuenues, but money maketh not a byſhop, and as the Lord ſayth Beati pauperes ſpiritu. i. Bleſſed are yͤ poore in ſpirite. Neither was there anye rich Byſhops in the primitiue Church, neither did the auncient Church reiect Dionyſius Byſhop of Millayne, Euſebius Biſhop of Vercelles, or Hillary Byſhop of Pictauia, although they were neuer ſo poore, and baniſhed without a flocke. But if we will graunt the truth, the poore are more apte to geue iudgement then the rich, becauſe that riches bringeth feare and their pouertie cauſeth libertie. For the poore men doe not feare tyranny as our rich men do, whiche being geuen ouer vnto all kinde of vanities, idlenes and ſloth, will rather deny Chriſt, then lacke theyr accuſtomed pleaſures: * whom not theyr flock, but theyr reuenues make biſhops deliting ſo muche in riches, that they iudge all poore men vnhappy. But, as Cicero ſayth: nothing can happen better vnto a wiſe man, then mediocritie of ſubſtaunce. Whervpon it is written in the Goſpel: It is eaſiar for a Cammel to paſſe through a needle eye, then for a riche man to enter into the kingdome of heauen.

In matters of faith and religion, there ought to be no delayes.

But now to returne to a more full declaration of Panormitans words, I determine to paſſe ouer two poynts which he pronounced in the beginning of hys Oratiō, that is: Qui petant, & cur petant, i. who maketh the petition, and for what cauſe they make their petition. We graunt yͭ they are great men, & men of power, and (as he doth affirme) yͭ they haue deſerued good of yͤ church, neither do I doubt but that they are moued thereunto, with a ſincere affectiō. But whether it be a ſmall matter that is required, or that the ſame effectes would ryſe thereupon, which he ſpake of: it is now to be enquired. A delay (ſayth he) is required: a delay for a few dayes. A ſmall matter: a matter of no importaunce: a matter eaſy to be graunted. Notwithſtanding let Panormitane here marke well, that he requireth a delay in a matter of faith. The verities are already declared: they be already diſcuſſed and determined. If now there ſhoulde be but a little delay, it would grow to a long delay: for oftē times yͤ delay of one momēt, is yͤ loſſe of a whole yere, hereof we haue many examples. Hanniball whē he had obteined his victory at Cannas, if he had gone ſtraight vnto Rome, by all mens iudgementes, he had takē the city. But for ſo much as he did deferre it vntill the next day, the Romaines hauing recouered theyr force agayne: he was ſhutt out, and deſerued to heare this opprobry.

Vincere ſcis Hannibal, vti victoria neſcis.

Hannibal thou knoweſt victory to get,
But how to vſe it thou knoweſt not yet.

Likewiſe the French men, after they had taken Rome and beſieged the Capitoll, whiles that they gredely ſought to haue great ſummes of mony, & delayed the time in making of their truce, Camillus cōming vpon them, did moſt ſhamefully driue them out againe. But what need I to rehearſe old hiſtories, when as our own examples are ſufficient for vs? Ye know your ſelues how often theſe delayes haue bene hurtfull vnto you, & how oftẽ the delay of a few dayes hath growne to a long tracte of tyme. For now this is the 8. yeare that you haue ſpent in delayes: & you haue ſeene, that alwayes of one delay an other hath ſprong and riſen. Wherfore I do require that Panormitan ſhuld conſider, that yͤ concluſion being this day diſturbed, we know not whether it will be brought to paſſe hereafter againe or no. Many impedimentes or lets may riſe. Neither doth Panormitan ſay, that this delay being obtayned, he wold afterward conſent with his fellowes vnto the concluſiõs: for he denyeth that he hath any commaundement therunto & (which is more to be conſidered) he ſayth that the Ambaſſadours at their returne from Mentz, may bring ſuch newes, wherby theſe concluſions may be omitted: as though any thyng were more excellent then the truth.

The eight yeare of the councell of Baſill. How ſubtelly they ſought delayes.

The which thing doth manifeſtly declare, that they do not ſeeke delayes for the better examination of the matter but for to impugne the concluſions the more ſtrongly. Neither do I agree with Panormitan, as touching the effects which he ſayd ſhould ryſe eyther of the denyall, or graunting of yͤ requeſts: For I ſee no cauſe why yͤ Princes ſhould ſo greatly require any delay. There are no letters of anye Prince come vnto vs as touching ſuch requeſt, neyther is there any man lately come from them, neyther is it greatly materiall vnto them, but that the matters of faith ſhoulde be determined. But this is a moſt pernicious concluſion which Panormitane hath made, and not to be looked for at the handes of thoſe moſt godly princes, wheras he ſaith if we do pleaſe them, they will take our part. If contrariwiſe, they will decline vnto Eugenius, and wholy reſiſt & rebell agaynſt vs. This is a meruailous word, & a wonderfull concluſion, altogether vnworthye to be ſpoken of ſuch a man. The decrees of the Councell of Conſtance are, yͭ all maner of men, of what ſtate or condition ſoeuer they be, are bound to the ordinaunces and decrees of the generall Councels. But Panormitanes wordes do not tend to that effect, for he would not haue the Princes obedient vnto yͤ Councel, but yͤ councell to be obedient vnto yͤ princes.

The decrees of the councell of Conſtance.

Alas moſt reuerend Fathers alas, what times & dates what maners and conditiõs are theſe? Into what miſery are we now brought? How ſhall we at anye time bring to paſſe, that the Pope being Chriſtes Vicare (and as they ſay) an other Chriſt in earth, ſhould be ſubiect vnto yͤ coũcell of Chriſtians, if the Councell it ſelfe ought to obey worldly Princes? But I pray you look for no ſuch things at the Princes handes. Do not beleeue that they will forſake theyr mother the Church. Do not thinke them ſo farre alienate frõ the truth, yͭ they would haue iuſtice ſuppreſſed.

If theſe thinges ſeeme ſo vntollerable what ſhall we ſay, whẽ as they make the Pope a God?

The concluſions whereupon the controuerſie is, are moſt true, moſt holy, moſt allowable. If the princes do refuſe them, they do not reſiſt agaynſt vs, but againſt the holy Scriptures, yea and agaynſt Chriſt himſelfe: which you ought neither to beleue, neither was it comely for Panormitane ſo to ſay. Panormitan (by your licẽce be it ſpoken) you haue vttered moſt cruell words, neyther do you ſeeme to go about any other matter, then to inculcate terrour and feare into the mindes of the Fathers: for you haue rehearſed great perils and daungers, except we ſubmitt our ſelues vnto the princes.

But you moſt reuerend fathers, ſhall not be afearde of them which kill the body, the ſoule they cannot kill: neyſhal ye forſake the truth, although you ſhould ſhedde your bloud for the ſame. Neither ought we to be any whit more ſlacke in the quarrell of our mother the church and the Catholicke fayth, then thoſe moſt holy Martyrs, whiche haue eſtabliſhed the Church with theyr bloud. For why ſhould it be anye greeuous matter vnto vs to ſuffer for Chriſt, which for our ſakes hath ſuffered ſo cruel & greuous death? Who when he was an immortall God, voyd of all paſſiõs toke vpõ him yͤ ſhape of a mortal man, & feared not for our redemption to ſuffer tormentes vpon the croſſe. Set before your eyes the Prince of the Apoſtles, Peter, Paule, Andrew, Iames, and Barthelmew, and not to ſpeake onely of Biſhops) Marke what Stephen, Laurence, Sebaſtian & Fabian did. Some were hanged, ſome headed, ſome ſtoned to death, other ſome burned, and others tormented wͭ moſt cruell and grieuous tormentes ſuffered for Chriſtes ſake. I pray you for Gods ſake let vs follow the example of theſe men. If we will be byſhops and ſucceed in honour let vs not feare Martyrdome. Alas what effeminate harts haue we? Alas what faynt harted people are we? They in tymes paſt by the contempt of death, conuerted the whole world, which was full of gentilitie and idolatrye: and we through our ſluggiſhnes & deſire of life, do bring the Chriſtian Religion out of the whole world into one corner, & I feare greatly, leaſt yͤ little alſo which is left, we ſhall loſe through our cowardlines: if that by following Panormitanes minde, we do commit the whole gouernaunce & defence of the Church vnto the princes. But nowe play the ſtout and valiaunt men in this time of tribulation, & feare not to ſuffer death for the Churche, whiche Curtius feared not to doe for the cittie of Rome: which Menchotheus for Thebes, & Codrus for Athens, willingly tooke vpon them.

They which teach this doctrine, are heretickes & ſchiſmaticks but bleſſed are theſe heretickes, for theirs is the kingdome of heauen.

A chriſtian exhortation to conſtancy and martirdome.

This came ſo to paſſe 23. yeares after, when Chriſtendome loſt Conſtantinople and all the eaſt partes vnto the Turkes.

Not onely the martyrs, but alſo the Gentiles might moue and ſtirre vs to caſt of all the feare of death. What is to be ſayd of Theremens the Athenien? with how ioyfull hart and minde, and pleaſaunt countenaunce, did he drink the poyſon? What ſay you vnto the Socrates that moſt excellent Philoſopher? did he eyther weepe or ſigh, when he ſupped vp the poyſon? They hoped for that whiche we are moſt certayne of. Not by dying to dye, but to chaunge this preſent life for a better.

Examples of good men dying for their coũtrey

Truly we ought to be aſhamed, being admoniſhed by ſo many examples, inſtructed with ſo great learning, yea and redeemed with the precious bloud of Chriſt, ſo greatly to feare death.

Cato writeth not of one or two men, but of whole legions, which haue chearfully & couragiouſly gone vnto thoſe places, frõ whence they knew they ſhuld not return. Wyth like courage did yͤ Lacedemoniãs geue thẽſelues to death at Thermopilis, of whom Simonides writeth thus.

Dic hoſpes Spartanos te hic vidiſſe iacentes,
Dum ſanctis patriæ legibus obſequimur.

Report thou ſtraunger, the Spartaines here to lye,
Whiles that their coũtry lawes they obeyed willingly.

Neither iudge the contrary, but that the Lacedemonians went euen of purpoſe vnto death: vnto whome theyr Captayne Leonidas ſayd: O ye Lacedemonians, goe forward couragiouſly, for this day we ſhal ſup together with yͤ infernall Gods, but I moſt reuerend fathers, do not inuite you vnto the infernals as he did his Lacedemonians, but vnto the celeſtiall and euerlaſting ioyes of Paradiſe, if that you can ſuffer death for the truthes ſake, and paciently abide the threatnings of theſe princes, if there be any threatninges at all. I call you vnto that eternal glory: where as there is no alteration of ſtate, nothing decayeth or fadeth: where all good and perpetuall things do abound: wheras no man wanteth, no man enuyeth an other, no man ſtealeth frõ an other, no man violently taketh frõ an other, no man baniſheth, no man murdereth, and finally no man dyeth. Where as all men are bleſſed and happy, all are of one minde & one accord, all are immortall, all are of lyke eſtate, & that all men haue, euery man hath, & that euery mã hath all men haue. Which thinges if we will conſider, we ſhall truely anſwere Panormitan, as Theodorus Cyrenſis is ſaid to haue anſwered Liſmachus the king, whẽ he threatned to hang hym: who ſayd, I pray you threaten theſe horrible thinges vnto your Courtiers, as for Theodorus, it maketh no matter whether he rotte aboue the grounde or vnder the ground. So likewiſe let vs aunſwere vnto the princes, if there be anye that do threaten vs, and let vs not feare their tormentes.

The noble Lacedemonians.

The bleſſed ſtate of the life to come.

The worthy aunſwere of Theodorus Cyrenenſis.

What doth a longer life preuayle to help vs? No man hath liued to ſhort a tyme, which hath obtained the perfect gift of vertue. And if the death which a man ſuffereth in the quarrell of his country, ſeemeth not onely to be glorious amongſt the Rhetoricians, but alſo happy & bleſſed, what ſhall we ſay for theſe deathes whiche are ſuſtayned for the country of all countryes, the Church? Truely moſt reuerend fathers, it is to muche that our aduerſaries doe perſwade themſelues of you, for they iudge you fearful, ſluggiſh and faynt harted: and therefore they do obiect Princes vnto you, becauſe they thinke that you wil not ſuffer hunger, thyrſt, exile in the quarrell & defence of the church. But I thinke you will eſteeme it no hard matter, for the obteyning of euerlaſting lyfe, to do the ſame which ſhipmen do for the obteyning of tranſitory riches, to put themſelues in danger of the ſea & wind, and ſuffer moſt cruell ſtormes.

No death to be feared for chriſts Church.

The hunters lye abroad in the nightes in the ſnowe in the hilles and woodes, & are tormented with cold: yet haue they none other reward, but ſome wilde beaſt of no value or priſe. I pray you what ought you then to doe, whoſe reward ſhalbe Paradiſe? I am aſhamed of our ignauie, whẽ as I read that women, yea euen yong maydens haue violently obtayned heauen through their Martyrdome, and we are made afrayd onely with the name of death. Thys riuer of Rhein which runneth along by the cittie in tymes paſt hath caryed 11. thouſand virgines vnto Martyrdome. In India (as Cicero writeth) whẽ any mã was dead, hys wiues (for there they had many wiues) came not into contention who ſhuld be burned with him: and ſhe whom he loued beſt, hauing vanquiſhed the other, all yͤ reſt ioyfully following her, was caſt into the fire with the dead Carcaſe of her huſband and burnt. The other whiche were ouercome, departed full of heauines and ſorow, wiſhing rather to haue dyed then liue.

The which courage we now taking vpon vs for Chriſtes ſake, will aunſwere Panormitan euen as the Lacedemonians aunſwered Philip, who when as by his letters he threatned them, that he would ſtop all that whiche they went about, they aſked him whether he would alſo let thē to dye. Therfore as you are excellent men, ſo vſe your vertue, which is alway free, and remayneth alwayes inuincible. For you do know that power is geuē you of yͤ Lord and ſtrength from yͤ moſt higheſt: who will take accompt of your workes and examine your thoughtes: vnto whom ye ſhould be carefull to render a good accompt, iudgyng rightly and keeping the lawe of righteouſneſſe, and in all thinges walking according to the will of God. And not according to the will of men.

And whereas the Embaſſadours of Eugenius, doe openly preach and declare a new doctrine, extolling the byſhop of Rome aboue the vniuerſall church: to the end that ignorant ſoules be not ſnared, ye ſhall not ceaſe or leaue to publiſh the three firſt concluſions, following the example of yͤ Apoſtle Paul, which would in no point geue place vnto Peter when he walked not according to the Goſpel. As for the other matters, which doe reſpect the only perſon of Eugenius (becauſe Panormitan and the other Ambaſſadours of the princes, ſhall not ſay that we doe paſſe oure bonds) ye ſhall deferre them for this preſent.

Lewes Patriarke of Aquileia Duke of Decke in Sweuia.

When as Cardinall Arelatenſis had made an ende of his Oration, there was a great noyſe crying, out & brawling euery where. The Preſidents cōmaundements were not regarded, neither was the accuſtmed order obſerued: for ſometimes they ſpake vnto Panormitan, ſometime vnto Lodouicus: no man was ſuffered to ſpeake but in haſte the biſhops brawled with byſhops, and the inferiours wͭ their fellowes. All was full of contention & debate: which when as Lodouicus the Patriarck of Aquileia perceiued a man of no leſſe courage and ſtomacke, then of nobilitie and byrth, being alſo a Duke, for the zeale whiche he bare vnto the vniuerſall church, turning himſelfe vnto Panormitan & Lodouicus the Prothonotary, ſayd: Do not think the matter ſhall ſo paſſe, you know not yet the maners of yͤ Germaynes, for if you go forward on this faſhion, it wil not be lawfull for you to depart out of this country wyth whole heades: with which wordes Panormitan, Lodouicus, and the Archbiſhop of Millaine, being ſtriken (as it were with lightning from heauen, roſe vp, & ſayd: Is our libertie thus taken from vs? what meaneth it that the patriarcke doth threaten vs, that our heades ſhoulde be broken? And turning themſelues vnto Iohn Earle of Dierſtene, which then ſupplied the protectors place, they demāded of him whether he would defend the Councel and preſerue al men in their libertie, or no.

The Earle of Dierſten.

The prayſe of the citizens of Baſill.

The Citizens alſo and Senators were preſent to prouide and foreſee that no offence ſhoulde riſe, for the Cittizens obſerued alwayes this order, that they would be preſent in all affayres, which they ſuppoſed would breede diſſenſion, foreſeeing ſpecially that no tumultes ſhold ryſe, otherwiſe then with wordes. They vſed alwayes ſuche a marueilous foreſight & prouidence, that no man vnto this day, could haue any cauſe agaynſt them, to complayne for violating their promiſe. Wherefore if at any time, any citizens haue deſerued wel at the hands of the churche, ſurely this prayſe is to be geuen vnto yͤ Baſilians. Theſe men together with Iohn Earle of Dierſtene, being preſent in the aſſembly of yͤ fathers, gaue a ſigne of preſeruatiō of their libertie. The Earle (albeit he was moued at the ſtrangenes of yͤ matter, for he would not haue thought ſo great contētions could haue riſen amongſt wiſe mē) anſwered by his interpreter, yͭ they all ſhould be of good cheare. For yͤ Emperours ſafe conduict ſhould be obſerued and kept euē to the vttermoſt, neither ſhould the Patriarck, nor any other once violate the libertie, or take away the aſſurance granted by the Emperour. Notwithſtanding he deſired the patriarche yͭ he would call backe hys wordes agayne, & not to ſpeake any more in ſuch ſort. But that famous father, being nothing at all moued, or troubled, cōmitted his whole minde vnto Iohn de Bacheiſtein, auditor of the chamber, a man both graue and eloquent, to be declared. Who affirmed that the patriarches minde was not to threaten anye man, or diſturbe the libertie of the councell, but to moue yͤ fathers vnto Conſtancie, that they ſhould be mindefull of the reformation, which they had promiſed vnto the whole world, and not ſo ſay one thing to day, & an other to morrow: for if they would ſo do, it were to be feared, leaſt yͤ laytie ſeeing themſelues deluded, and diſpayring of reformation ſhould riſe agaynſt the Clergy.

Therfore he moniſheth the fathers to foreſee and prouide for the perill, that they ſhoulde not depart from the Councell, nothing being determined or done: and finally he deſired pardon, if in his wordes he had offended eyther agaynſt the Councel, Panormitā, or any other mā. Whereby he declared it to be true which is commonly ſayd, that Humilitie is the ſiſter of nobilitie: both which did very excellently appeare in this man. Yet for al this, could not the humilitie of the patriark ſtop or ſtaye their noyſe or cryes: For as often as mention was made of reading the Concordatum, great noyſe and rumours were ſtil made, for to ſtop the ſame. Then Amodeus archbiſhop of Lyons, and primate of al Fraunce, a man of great reuerence and authoritie, being touched with the zeale of fayth, whiche he ſawe there to be ſtopped and ſuppreſſed, ſayd: Moſt reuerend fathers, I haue nowe a great occaſion for to ſpeake: for it is now 7. yeares or more, that I haue bene amongſt you, yet haue I neuer ſeene the matter at that poynt whiche it is now at, moſt like vnto a miracle, for euen preſently I doe behold moſt wōderfull ſignes of miracles, for it is no ſmal matter that the lame do walke, the dumme do ſpeake, and that poore men preach the Goſpel. Wherupon I pray you commeth this ſodayne chaunge? Howe happeneth it that thoſe which lie lurking at home, are now ſodenly ſtart vp, who hath geuen hearing to the deafe, and ſpeache to the dumme? who hath taught the poore men to preach yͤ goſpell? I do ſee here a new ſorte of prelates come in, whiche vnto this preſēt haue kept ſilence, and now begin to ſpeak. Is not this like to a miracle? I would to God they came to defend the truth, and not to impugne iuſtice.

Humilitie ſiſter to nobilitie.

Amodeus Archbiſhop of Lions.

Anno. 1438.

Biſhops that lie at home, haue tōgue here to ſpeake for the Pope.

But this is more to be marueiled at then any miracle, that I doe ſee the beſt learned men of all, impugne our cōcluſions which are moſt certayn and true: And they which now reproue them, in times paſt allowed them. You are not ignoraunt howe that Lodouicus the Prothonotarye preached theſe verities at Louain and at Collē, & brought them from thence, confirmed with the authoritie of the Uniuerſities. Wherfore, albeit that he be now changed, yet is the truth in no poynt altered. And therefore I deſire you & beſeech you all, that ye will not geue eare vnto theſe men, which albeit they are moſt excellētly learned, yet haue they no conſtancy in them: which doth adorn all other vertues.

Marke how they are turned back which ſomtime fauoured the truth & are now become liers & flatterers. Conſtancie lacked in diuers of this councell.

When he had ended his Oration, Lodouicus the Prothonotary riſing vp, ſayde: It is moſt true that I brought thoſe verities, but you do cal them verities of fayth, which addition ſemeth very doubtful vnto me. When he had ſpoken theſe wordes, Cardinall Arelatenſis requred that the Concordatum of the twelue men ſhould be read, and many whiſpered him in the eare, that he ſhould go forward, and not aulter his purpoſe.

Panormitane ſpeaketh like himſelfe.

Then Panormitan, as ſoone as the Concordatum began to be read, riſing vp with his companions and other Arragons, cryed out wͭ a loud voyce, ſaying: You fathers do contemne our requeſtes, you contemne kinges & Princes, and deſpiſe Prelates, but take heede leaſt whileſt that ye deſpiſe all men, you be not deſpiſed of all men. You would conclude, but it is not your part for to conclude. We are the greater part of Prelates, we make the Councell, & it is our part to conclude, and I in yͤ name of all other prelates do conclude, that it is to be deferred & delayed. With this worde, there ſprang ſuche a noyſe and rumour in the Councell as is accuſtomed to be in battaile with the ſound of Trumpets and noyſe of horſemē, when as two armies ioyne. Some curſing that which Panormitan went about other ſome alowing the ſame: So that diuerſitie of minds made diuers contentions.

Nicholas Amici, a diuine of Paris.

Then Nicholas Amici, a Diuine of Paris, according vnto his office, ſayd. Panormitan I appeale frō this your concluſion, to the iudgement of the councell here preſent, neither do I affirme any thinge to be ratified whiche you haue done, as I am ready to proue, if it ſhall ſeeme good. The contrary part ſeemed nowe to bee in the better place, for they had already concluded. The other part had neither cōcluded, neither was it ſeene how they could conclude amongeſt ſo great cryes and vprores. Notwithſtanding amongeſt al this troublous noyſe, Iohn Segouius, a ſingular Diuine of yͤ vniuerſitie of Salamantine lacked not audiēce: for yͤ whol coūcel was deſirous for to hear him: wherfore al mē as ſoon as he roſe vp kept ſilence, & he perceiuing yͭ they were deſirous to heare him ſpeak, begā in this ſort.

The oration of Segouius

Moſt reuerend fathers, the zeale and loue of the houſe of God forceth me nowe to ſpeake: and I woulde to God that I had ben either blind this day, not to haue ſene thoſe thinges whiche haue happened, or that I had bene deafe, yͭ I ſhould not haue heard thoſe words, which haue bene ſpoken. Who is it that is ſo ſtony or hard harted, which cā abſtayne

Ambroſ. ad Valentinianum.

How farre & wherein Biſhops ought to iudge vpon Emperours.

abſtayne from teares, when as the authoritie of the church is ſo ſpoyled, libertie taken away both from vs and ẏ councell, & that there is no place geuẽ vnto the veritie. O ſweet Ieſu, why haſt thou forſaken thy ſpouſe? Behold and looke vpon thy people, and helpe vs if our requeſtes are iuſt. We come hether to prouide for the neceſſitie of the Church we require nothing for our ſelues, our deſire is only that truth might appeare. We truſted now to haue concluded vpon ẏ verities which were ſometimes alowed in ẏ ſacred deputations. The Oratours of the Princes are preſent, & require the concluſions to be deferred. But we be not vnmindfull of thoſe thinges which Ambroſe wrote vnto Valentinian the Emperour in this maner: if we ſhall intreate vpon the order of the holy Scripture and auncient times paſt; who is it that will deny but that in caſe of faith (I ſay in caſe of faith) the biſhops ought to iudge vpon Chriſtian Emperours, and not Emperours vpon Biſhops. Neyther doe we admit their petition but vpõ moſt vrgent cauſes: Notwithſtanding we heard them paciently and willingly, whiles that they did ſpeake euen ſo long as they would.

He excuſeth the Patriarke.

But now if any of our part would ſpeake, by and by he is interrupted, troubled and letted. What honeſty is this? what modeſty or grauitie? is it lawfull ſo to do in the councell? where is the decree of ẏ Councel of Tholoſe now become (where are our decrees, which do not only prohibite tumultes, but alſo all ſmall bablinges & talk) They ſay, it is becauſe we contemne them: but they are they, which not onely conteme the Councell: but alſo reſiſt the ſame. The patriarke ſpake but one ſmall worde agaynſt them, & that of no euill intent or purpoſe, and by and by they complayned ẏ their liberty was broken, but they, when as they do inforce the councell, when as they forbid the Preſident to ſpeake, and will not ſuffer the ordinaunces to be read, doe not iudge that they doe any thing contrary to the liberty of the Councell. They ſay, they are the Councell themſelues and yet they intreat the Councell. Theſe thinges doe not I vnderſtande: for if they be the Councell, why doe they intreat thẽſelues? If they be not the Councell, why do they not ſuffer the Councel for to ſpeake? why do they not looke for an anſwere of him to whom they make their petitiõs?

He meaneth Panormitan which did conclude without the examination of the 12. mẽ.

Truely this is to much violence, and certes our pacence is alſo to much, to ſuffer ſuch exceſſe euen in the face of the Church. But this doth moſt of all greeue me, and thys do I moſt maruell at, that Panormitan a man of ſingular wit and doctrine did cõclude without any diſcuſſing or deciding of the deputies, and without the examination of the 12. men, or any rite or order. The which, except mine eies had beheld & ſeene, I would ſcarſly beleue, if any other mã ſhould report it vnto me, of him: Neither do I yet know, whether I may ſufficiently credite my ſelfe, the matter ſeemeth ſo horrible: for I do not ſee by what authoritie his cõcluſion doth ſtande, except it be by the authoritie of hys king whom he ſayth will haue it ſo. But you moſt reuerẽd fathers take heed that ye bring in no ſuch cuſtome: for ſo it ſhall come to paſſe, that in all matters, a few froward prelates ſhall haue me to conclude for them.

Paul would geue to Peter no reſpite when he ſwarued awry.

Marke the great Conſtancie and Chriſtian zeale of this man.

An exortation to conſtãcie.

And albeit Paruormitan hath proued (as he thinketh) by ſtrong reaſons that the veritie ought to be deferred, yet notwithſtanding I do require you moſt reuerend fathers to follow the example of the Apoſtle, who (as Arelatenſis hath very wel declared) would not geue one houres reſpite vnto Peter, when he ſwarued frõ the truth of the Goſpel. The fayth is ſpeedely to be relieued & holpen, neither doth any thing ſuſtaine more danger by delayes, thẽ faith doth. For hereſies, except they be rooted out at the firſt, whẽ they are once growne, are hardly taken away. Wherfore I deſire you ſpeedily to helpe and ayd. Hoyſe vp your ſayles, & launch out your ores. What ſhould we tary looking for either the Prelats or the princes? You are now in conflict: I onely deſire that you would haſten vnto the victory. Regard not the threatnings of thoſe Princes, neyther the opprobries of thoſe contumelious perſons, for you are bleſſed ſayth the Lord, whẽ as men curſe you & perſecute you, ſpeaking all euill agaynſt you, making lyes and ſlaunders vpon you for my ſake: reioice and be glad, for great is your reward in heauen. What is it I pray you that the princes do ſo much obiect agaynſt vs? Is not our Lord God able to take vs out of the furnace of hote burning fire, and deliuer vs out of ẏ hands of thoſe princes? I beſeech you moſt reuerend fathers and louing brethren, haue no leſſe hope in Ieſus Chriſt, thẽ Sidrach, Miſach, and Abednago had, which feared not that old king Nabuchodonoſor: and let ẏ princes know, ẏ the moſt high ruleth ouer ẏ kingdomes of men, and geueth them vnto whom he pleaſeth. God beholdeth all thinges from aboue (he is I ſay) in the midſt amongſt vs, wherefore are ye then afrayd? Be of good courage, and ſhew your ſelues as a ſtrong wall for the church of God: ſuffer not the fayth to periſh vnder your handes. The almighty God is preſent with you. He is preſent that will defend you. Feare not them which ſeeke onely to kill the body. Do iuſtice and equitie, and be aſſured that he wil not deliuer you ouer into the handes of the bacbiter and ſlaunderer. Againe I ſay vnto you, ſhow your ſelues valiant and ſtout: Defend your mother the Church. And vnto thee, O thou preſident I ſay, that thou oughteſt rather to pleaſe God then man, for if thou depart thence without a ſmall concluſion, know aſſuredly that thou ſhalt render accompt in the ſtraight iudgment of God, and thus without any more wordes, he ſate downe in his place.

The Biſhop of Burgen ſeeketh concorde.

In the meane tyme, many graue and auncient men had exhorted Panormitan that he ſhuld geue ouer his concluſion. The biſhop of Burgen was very inſtant and earneſt with him, that he ſhould make vnitie and concord amõgſt the fathers, and went about to make an vnitie with al mẽ. But neither the fathers of the Councell were determined to depart without a concluſion, neither Panormitan was minded to aulter his intent and purpoſe. All thinges were diſturbed, neither did the prelates ſit in their ſeats, as they were accuſtomed, but as euerye mans affection led hym. Some went to the Cardinall Arelatenſis, ſome vnto Panormitan and exhorted them, as if they had bene princes or rulers of armies. Then Arelatenſis knowing ẏ matter to be in danger, and that there was no ready way to make a cõcluſiõ, thought to vſe ſome policie, to appeaſe ẏ tumult.

How men be readie to heare newes.

Note the godly policye of the Cardinall.

The concluſion of the councell.

Moſt reuerend fathers ſaid he, we haue receiued nowe letters out of Fraũce, which declare vnto me maruellous thinges; that there are incredible newes ſprong vp there which if you will geue me willing audience, I will declare vnto you. By this meanes there was a ſodayne ſilence throughout the whole Councel, & by this maruellous policie he made al men attentiue to heare. When as he ſaw he had free liberty to ſpeake, without either fable or hiſtory of any letters ſent, he opened the whole order of the matter, & as it is requiſite in an Orator, came by little and little to ẏ principal poynt, ſaying, ẏ Eugenius his meſſengers filled all France, preaching a new doctrine, and extolling ẏ authoritie of the biſhop of Rome, aboue the generall Councels: agaynſt whom, except ſpeedy remedy were founde, it would come to paſſe, ẏ man woulde geue credite vnto thẽ, and therfore the ſacred Councell ought of neceſſitie, to prouide remedy, and of neceſſitie to conclude vpõ the verities which were examined, that therby the temeritie of the Eugeniãs might be repreſſed, which verities, albeit they were 8. in number, yet was it not the Fathers intẽt to conclude vpon them al, but onely the three firſt: euen as I alſo (ſaith he) here do conclude, in the name of the Father, the ſonne, and the holy Ghoſt.

The holy Ghoſt working againſt the Pope.

The ſorow of Panormitane for impugning the trueth.

When he had finiſhed his Oration, with a cheerful and mery countenaunce riſing vp, he departed. Some of them kiſſed him, and ſome of them kiſſed the ſkirtes of his garmentes. A great number followed him, and greatly commended his wiſedome, that being a Frenche man borne, had that day vanquiſhed the Italians, which were men of great pollicy. Howbeit this was all mens opinion, that it was done rather by the operation of the holy Ghoſt, then by ẏ Cardinals owne power. The other of ẏ contrary faction, as men bereft of their mindes, hanging downe theyr heades, departed euery man to his lodging. They wẽt not together, neither ſaluted one an other: ſo that their countenaunces declared vnto euery man ẏ they were ouercome. Something more alſo is reported of Panormitane, that when he came to his lodging, & was gone vnto his chamber, he complained with himſelf vpon his king, which had compelled him to ſtriue agaynſt the truth, and put both his ſoule and good name in daunger of looſing, and that in the middeſt of his teares and complayntes he fell a ſleepe, and did eate not meate, vntill late in ẏ euening for very ſorow for that he had neither ignorauntly, neither vnwillingly impugned the truth.

The Biſhop of Lyons & Burgẽ.

The iuſt aunſwer of the Councell.

After this, there was great conſultation amongeſt the Eugenians, what were beſt to be done in this matter. Some thought good to depart and leaue ẏ Councel, other ſome thought it meeter to tary, and wᵗ al endeuour to reſiſt ẏ nothing ſhould further be done agaynſt the Eugenians: & this opinion remained amongeſt them. The next day after, being ẏ 15. day of Aprill, the Archbiſhop of Lyons and the biſhop of Burgen, calling together the prelates into ẏ Chapter houſe of the great church began many thinges as touching peace. The Biſhop of Burgen perſwaded that there ſhuld be deputations appoynted that day, vnto whõ the Archbiſhop of Lyons ſhoulde geue power to make an agreement. Unto whome aunſwere was made, as they thought, very roughly, but as other iudged, gẽtly, but not withſtanding iuſtly and truely: For, they ſayd there could be no vnitie or concorde made, before the aduerſaries confeſſed their fault and aſked pardon therefore.

The aunſwere of them both.

The day following, the ſayd Byſhop of Burgen, with the other Lombards and Cathelans, went vnto the Germaines, and from thence vnto the Senate of the citie, ſpeaking much as touching the prohibiting of Schiſmes. The Germaynes referred themſelues to thoſe thinges which ẏ deputation ſhould determine. The Senate of the Citie (as they were great mē of wiſedom, which would do nothing without dilligent aduiſe and deliberation) anſwered, that the matter pertayned not vnto them, but vnto ẏ Councel, The fathers whereof were moſt wiſe men, and were not ignoraunt what pertayned vnto the Chriſtien fayth, and if there were any daunger toward, it ſhuld be declared vnto the Councell and not to the Senate: For they beleue that the Elders of the Councell, if they were premoniſhed, would foreſee ẏ there ſhould no hurt happen: as for ẏ Senate of the Cittie, it was there ducty onely to defend the fathers and to preſerue the promiſe of the citie. With this anſwere the byſhop of Burgen departed.

The forme of the decree is written and approued.

In the meane time the fathers of the councell had drawen out a forme of a decree vpon the former concluſions, and had approued the ſame in the ſacred deputations. By this time the Princes Orators were returned from the aſſembly at Mentz, & holding a Councel among themſelues they had determined to let the decree: The 9. day of May there was a generall conuocation holdē, wherunto all mē reſorted, either part putting forth himſelfe vnto the cōflict.

The Princes Ambaſſadours were called by the biſhop of Lubecke and Conrade de Winſperg the protectour into the quier, and there kept: whereas they intreated of a vnity and by what meanes it might be had, and there they taryed longer then ſome thought to doe: the whiche matter gaue occaſion to bring thinges well to paſſe, beyond al expectation. The onely forme of the decree was appoynted to be concluded that day, wherupon, as ſoon as Cardinall Arelatenſis perceiued the congregation to be full, and that the twelue men had agreed, and that there was a great expectation, with ſilence, he thought good not to delay it for feare of tumult, but commanded, by and by the publick cōcordaunces to be read, wherein this was alſo contayned, that the Cardinall Arelatenſis might appoynt a Seſſion when ſoeuer he would. Which being read, he being deſired by the promotors, concluded according as the maner of cuſtome is. The Ambaſſadours of princes being yet it in the Quier, as ſoone as they vnderſtoode how the matter paſſed, being very much troubled & vexed, they brake of theyr talke, imputing all thinges to ẏ biſhop of Lubecke, which of purpoſe had kept them in the Quier and protracted the time. Wherupon they entring into the congregation, filled the church full of complayntes.

The policie of the Cardinall Arelatenſis.

First of all, the Oratour of Lubecke complayned both in his owne name and the name of the protectour, as touching the concluſion, & required ẏ the councell woulde reuoke the ſame. If that might be graunted, he promiſed to intreate a peace, and to be a protector betweene the Councell and the Ambaſſadours of the Princes. But the Archbyſhop of Turnon ſaid, that it ſeemed vnto him euery mā to haue free libertie to ſpeake againſt that law whith ſhold be promulgate, vntill the Seſſion, whē the Canons ſhuld be conſecrated and receiue their force: whē as the biſhops in their pōtificalibus, after the reading of the decree in the Seſſion, ſhould aunſwere that it pleaſed them: otherwiſe the demaund which was made by the promoters in the Seſſion, to be but vayne, and for that the cōcluſions were not yet allowed in the Seſſion, and therefore he ſayd that he might without rebuke, ſpeake ſomewhat as touching the ſame, and that it was a great and hard matter, and not to be knit vp in ſuch a ſhort time, and that he had the knowledge thereof but euen now: notwithſtāding that he being an Archbiſhop ought to haue knowne the matter, that at hys return home, he might informe the king & alſo inſtruct thoſe which were vnder him. And that he and his fellowes before any Seſſion ſhould be: would both heare & be heard of others. Neither doth it ſeeme good vnto him that the Seſſion ſhould be holdē, before report were made of thoſe things, which the Ambaſſadours of the Princes had done at Mentz which would, peraduenture be ſuch as might alter and chaunge the mindes of the fathers. Then the Byſhop of Concen Ambaſſadour of the king of Caſtell, which was alſo lately returned from Mentz, a man of great vnderſtanding, but lacking vtteraunce, greeuouſly complayned that the prelates were contemned. Neither had it bene (ſayd he) any great matter if they had ben taried for, which not without great daunger and expences, went to Mentz, not for theyr pleaſure, but of neceſſitie. And afterward as it were ſmiling, he ſayd, how mad am I ẏ would haue the Prelates, to be taryed for, vntil they returne from Mentz when as they are not taryed for, whileſt they came out of the Quier of the Churche? doo therfore as ye liſt. If there riſe any offence or miſchiefe hereupon, neyther are we the Ambaſſadours of Caſtell to be blamed, neither can anye man of right impute any thing to our moſt noble king.

The Biſhop of Tournon.

The Biſhop of Cōcen ſpeaketh.

Marke what the truth muſt ſuffer.

Here were it long to repeate, with what rebukes and taunts they inueyed agaynſt the Cardinall Arelatenſis: but eſpecially the byſhop of Millaine rayled moſt cruellye vpon him, ſaying ẏ he foſtred & mayntained a table of Sophiſtes and Scholemaiſters, & that he had concluded in matters of faith with them: calling him alſo an other Cataline vnto whom al deſperate and noughty perſons had refuge that he was their Prince, & ruled the Church with them: and that he woulde not geue eare vnto the Ambaſſadours of the moſt noble princes, or to the moſt famous Prelates in this moſt wayghty matter. Albagenſis & a man of great nobilitie, deſcended of the Emperours bloud, albeit he had neuer alienate hys minde before from the Councell: yet leaſt he ſhould ſeeme to diſſent from other Ambaſſadours of ẏ princes, made the like complaynt as touching the atempt of the prelates. After this it came vnto Panormitā to ſpeake, who as he had a greater vehemency in ſpeaking: ſo alſo he did declare a more angry ſtomacke and mind: for in the beginning of hys Oration, he ſeemeth not to go about according to the preceptes of Oratours, to get the good will of the hearers, but rather theyr hatred: for he ſayd that our ſauiour ſheweth foure ſignes in the Goſpell, whereby we ſhould know the good from the reprobate: for he whiche is of God (ſayth he) heareth ẏ wordes of God, but you heare not the wordes of God, becauſe yee are not of God. And agayne, he that doth euill hateth the light. And in an other place alſo, by their fruites you ſhal know them. And a good tree cannot bring forth euill fruit.

O maruelous deſpight and contumely in a Biſhop: for if Arelatenſis had kept whoores or concubines, he would haue prayſed him: but to maintaine learned mē was a great offence.

The fathers of the councells ſlaundered by Panormitane.

4. ſignes to know the good from the badde.

All which ſayinges he wreſted agaynſt the fathers of ẏ Councel, becauſe they would not heare the wordes of God that is to ſay, the wordes of peace which the Ambaſſadors had ſpoken, becauſe they fled from the light in the abſence of the Ambaſſadours, priuilye concluding, and becauſe in their deputation they had not holden and kept the holye day but had cōcluded thereupon, alſo becauſe they had the vpper hand in the foreſayd cōcluſion, not by reaſon, but by deceit. As touching the fruits, he ſayd that the fathers themſelues ſhuld meditate and conſider how that, if their fruits were not good, they alſo themſelues were not good: & that he did ſee an other Councell at hand, where as he feared leaſt theſe concluſions ſhould be reuoked, as the fruit of an euill tree: and therefore, they ought not ſo ſodaynly to proceede in ſo wayghty matters: and ẏ he woulde be yet more fully heard before the Seſſion, as well in hys owne name becauſe he was an archbiſhop, as in the name of his prince which raygned not ouer one kingdome alone but ouer many: Alſo he ſaid that he heretofore by his wordes, deeds and writinges, hath extolled the authoritie of the Councel: and that he feared, leaſt by theſe meanes, the authoritie thereof ſhuld be ſubuerted. At the laſt he required pardon if he had offended the fathers of the Councell, for ſo muche as very ſorrow and griefe forced hym to ſpeake ſo.

Looke if it be not ſpokē of them in the Goſpel, where mention is made of the beaſt which is fallen into the ditche.

What is it that ambition will not doe.

The Abbot Vergiliacenſis would haue made anſwere to thoſe thinges whiche Panormitan had touched concerning hyis deputation: but Arelatenſis thought good that all the contrary part ſhould ſpeake firſt, amongſt whome, laſt of all, Ludouicus the Prothonotary, the Homere of Lawyers, roſe vp. And albeit that he ſpake vnwillingly, yet when he had begon, he could not refrayne his wordes. And whiles he went about to ſeeme learned and eloquent he vtterly forgat to be good. He ſayd ẏ the Councell ought to take heed, that they intreated no matter of fayth, againſt thr Prelates, leaſt any offence ſhould follow, for that ſome would ſay it were a matter of no force or effect. For albeit that Chriſt choſe 12. Apoſtles and 70. Diſciples, notwithſtanding in the ſetting forth of the Creede, onely the Apoſtles were preſent, thereby (as it were) geuing example, ẏ the matters of fayth did pertayne onely vnto the Apoſtles & ſo conſequently vnto biſhops. Neither that they ought haſtely to proceede in matters of fayth, whiche ought to be cleareely diſtinct, for ſomuche as Peter affirmeth the triall of fayth to be much more precious then golde, which is tryed by the fire. And if the Biſhops be contemned, which are called the pillers and keyes of heauen, the fayth cannot ſeeme to be well proued or examined. But at length he confeſſed, ẏ the inferiours might determine with the Biſhops but denied that the leaſt part of the Biſhops with the moſt part of the inferiours might determine any thing. From thence he paſſing to the matter of fayth, ſayd, that thoſe verities whereupon queſtion was nowe had, are Articles of fayth

Abbot Virgiliacenſis.

Lodouicus the prothonotarie in labouring to ſeeme learned, forgot to be good.

The Apoſtles principally gathered the Crede.

ſayth, if they were verities of fayth. And forſomuch as euery man ſhould be bounde for to beleue thoſe, therefore he would be better inſtructed & taught in that matter whiche he ſhoulde beleue as an Article of fayth. Neither ſhould it be comely for the Councell to deny him his requeſt, which according to the rule of the Apoſtle, ought to be ready, to geue account vnto euery man whiche ſhall require it, touching the fayth, which it holdeth.

The oration of Cardinal Arelatenſis. To the imperiall Ambaſſadours.

To the Ambaſſadours of Fraunce.

To the Biſhop of Concen.

To Lodouicus the prothonotary.

After euery man had made an end of ſpeaking, the Cardinall Arelatēſis calling his ſpirites together, made an Oration wherin he aunſwered now the one, & now the other. And firſt of all he commended the deſires of the Imperiall Ambaſſadours, which offered to intreat a peace and vnity, but neither neceſſity, nor honeſty (he ſayde) woulde ſuffer thoſe thinges whiche are concluded to be reuoked. He aunſwered alſo that the petition of the Ambaſſadors of Frauce is moſt iuſt, in that they required to be inſtructed touching the fayth: and that the coũcell would graunt their requeſt, and ſend vnto them certayn diuines, which ſhould inſtruct them at home at theyr lodgings: but the matter was already concluded & could no more be brought in queſtion: that the Seſſion was onely holden, rather to beautify the matter, then to confirme the ſame. And as touching that which the biſhop of Concen ſo greatly cõplayneth of, he doth not much maruell: for he could not know the proceſſe of yͤ matter, when he was abſent, who being better inſtructed, he ſuppoſed would ſpeak nomore any ſuch words, forſomuch as a iuſt man would require no vniuſt thing. Alſo that his proteſtatiõ had no euill ſenſe or meaning, in that he would not haue it imputed, neither vnto him, neither vnto hys king, if any offence ſhould riſe vpon the concluſions. Notwithſtanding it is not to be feared, that any euill ſhoulde ſpring of good workes. But vnto the Biſhop of Millayne he would aunſwere nothing, becauſe he ſaw him ſo moued and troubled, for feare of multiplying of more greuous and hainous words. As for Panormitane he reſerued vnto the laſt. But vnto Ludouicus the Prothonotary, whiche deſired to be inſtructed, he ſayd: he willed him to be ſatiſfied wͭ yͤ wordes which were ſpokē vnto the Biſhop of Turnon.

Nicolas Picenius an Italian.

Articles of the Creede not all put in by the Apoſtles, but ſome by the coũcels. The Article of the holy Ghoſt put in by the councell of Lyons.

Panormitan wounded with his owne darts.

Notwithſtanding, he left not this vntouched which Ludouicus had ſpoken concerning the Apoſtles Creede. For albeit that in the ſetting forth of the Creede, the Apoſtles be onely named, yet it doth not follow (ſayth he) that they onely were preſent at the ſetting forth therof. For it happeneth oftentimes that Princes are commended and prayſed as chiefe authors and doers of thinges, when as notwithſtanding they haue other helpers, as it appeareth in battayles, which although they are foughte with the force of all the ſouldiors, yet the victory thereof is imputed but vnto a fewe. As in theſe our dayes, they do aſcribe all thinges which the army doth either fortunately or wiſely, vnto Nicolas Picenius, that moſt valiaunt Captayne which hath obteined ſo many famous victories: albeit that oftentimes other haue bene the inuentors of the pollicy, and workers of the feate. And therefore Ludouicus ought to knowe and vnderſtand, that they are not onely articles of fayth which are conteyned in the Creede, but all other determinations made by the Councels, as touching the fayth. Neyther is he ignorant, that there be ſome articles of the Creed which we now vſe in the Church, that were not put too by the Apoſtles, but afterward by generall Councels: as that part wherein mention is made of the holy Ghoſte, whiche the Councell of Lyons did adde, in whiche Councell alſo it is not bee doubted, but that the inferiours dyd iudge together with the Byſhoppes. But for ſo much as he had ſufficiently declared that matter in the congregation before paſſed, he would ſtay no longer thereupon. But comming vnto Panormitan, he rehearſed his wordes: Qui ex Deo eſt, verba Dei audit, He that is of God, heareth Gods word, which is very well takē out of the Goſpell, but not well applyed vnto the councell (ſayd he:) for he firmely beleued, that his predeceſſors haue iudged holy Ghoſt to be in the middeſt of the Councels, and therfore the wordes of the Councels to be the wordes of the holy Ghoſt: which if any man do reiect, he denieth himſelfe to be of God. Neither doth the councell hate the light, which doth all things publickly and openly, whoſe congregatiõs are euidēt vnto all men, neither doth it as the conuenticles of the aduerſaries, admit ſome, and exclude other ſome. Moreouer, the thing which is now in hand, was begon to be intreated of for two monethes agoe, & firſt the concluſions were largely diſputed vpon in the diuinity ſcholes, and afterward ſēt vnto Mentz and other places of the world.

After all this, the fathers were called into the Chapter houſe of the great Church, to the number of 120. amongeſt whom Panormitan which now cõplaineth, was alſo preſent, and according to his maner, did learnedly and ſubtilly diſpute, and had liberty to ſpeak what he would. Likewiſe in the deputations, euery man ſpake his mind freely, & in that deputation where Panormitan was, the matter was 3. dayes diſcuſſed. After this the 12. men did agree vpon it, and the general congregation did conclude it. Neither hath there bene at any time any thing more ripelye or exactlye handled both openly, & alſo without any fraud or deceite. And whereas the deputatiõ did ſit vpõ a holy day, there is no hurt in yͭ, neither is it any new or ſtraunge thing, foraſmuch as they haue oftē holden their Seſſion vpon feſtiuall dayes, whenas the matter hath had haſte, and ſpecially for that the matter of fayth hath no holy dayes. And further he ſaid that he did not conclude craftely and deceitfully in the congregatiõ, as Panormitane hath reported, but publickly & opēly at the requeſt of the Promotors. Neither hath any mā any iuſt cauſe to cõplayne vpõ him, forſomuch as, whē he was made Preſident, he was ſworne that al times whē 4. or 3. of the deputations did agree, he ſhould conclude therupõ. And forſomuch as he had already concluded, in diuers cauſes touchinge the Pope, he ſawe no cauſe why hee ſhould not conclude in the matter of fayth, for that he was a Cardinall, & did weare his red hat for this purpoſe, that he ſhould ſhed his bloud in the defēce of the fayth. Neither hath he done any thing now agaynſt the Pope, for that omitting the fiue concluſions touching Eugenius, he had concluded but onely the generall concluſions: which except he had done, the fathers ſhould haue had iuſt cauſe to complayne agaynſt him (in that they truſting in his fidelitye & faythfulnes, had choſe him Preſidēt) if by him they ſhould now be forſaken in this moſt neceſſary cauſe of fayth. And turning himſelfe vnto the people, he deſired the fathers to be of good comfort, forſomuche as he woulde neuer forſake them, yea although he ſhould ſuffer death: for he had geuen his fayth and fidelity vnto the Councell, which he would obſerue and keepe: neither ſhould any mannes flattery or threatninges put him from his purpoſe: that he would be alwayes ready to do whatſoeuer the Councel ſhould commaund him, and neuer leaue the commaundements of the deputies by any meanes vnperfourmed.

Arelatenſis concluded not, but at the requeſt of the proctours.

Theſe 4. deputations were 4. ſortes of choſen men, which did diſcuſſe and determine thoſe thinges which the fathers did conclude vpon. Verely this is no Babilonical Cardinal, but of the immaculate ſpouſe Ieſus Chriſt.

He ſpeaketh to the whole coũcell.

As touching that Panormitan had extolled the authority of the Councell, he ſayd that he was greatly to be thāked. But yet he ought to vnderſtand and know the authority of the Councell to be ſuch, as cannot be augmented or increaſed by any mans prayſe or cõmendation, or be diminiſhed by any opprobry or ſlaūder. Theſe things thus premiſed he cõmaunded the forme of yͤ decree to be read. Thē Panormitane & thoſe which tooke his part, would needes haue a certayn proteſtatiõ to be firſt read. There was great contention on euery ſide. Notwithſtanding at the laſt, Arelatenſis preuayled, and the forme of the decree was read vnto this word, Decernimus, that is to ſay, we decree. Thē Panormitan riſing vp, would not ſuffer it to be heard any further: And the Biſhop of Catania cryed out ſaying, that it was vncomely that Arelatenſis, with a few other Byſhops by name, ſhould conclude the matter. The like did alſo all thoſe which fauoured Panormitane. The Cardinall of Terraconia alſo (which vntill that time had holden hys peace) did greuouſly rebuke his partakers, that as men being a ſleep or in a dreame, they did not read the proteſtatiõ, and commaũded by and by one of his familiars to read it. But like as the aduerſaries before did perturbe the reading of the concordaunces, ſo would not the Fathers of the Councell now geue place to the reading of the proteſtatiõ. Which when Albiganenſis did conſider he cõmaunded the writing to be brought vnto him, and as he began to ſpeak, ſodenly Arelatenſis roſe vp, with a great number of the fathers to depart: which thing pleaſed yͤ cardinall of Terraconia and Panormitan very well, for that they hoped that they alone with theyr adherentes, ſhoulde remayne in the Church. They exhorted Arelatēſis to reuoke the concluſiõ, and to make another.

Euery man may determine in matters of faith, hauing the ſcripture on his part.

Contention in the councell about reading of the proteſtation.

There was in that congregation in his place George the Prothonotarye of Bardaxina, ſitting ſomewhat beneath his vncle, the Cardinall of Terraconia, a man but yong of age, but graue in wiſedome, and noble in humanity: who as ſoone as he ſawe the Cardinall Arelatenſis riſe, he determined alſo to depart, and when as his Vncle called him, commaunding him to tary, he ſayd: God forbid father that I ſhould tary in your congregatiõ, or do any thing cõtrary to the othe which I haue takē. By which words he declared his excellent vertue and nobility, & admoniſhed our men which remained, of thoſe things which they had to do. His voyce was the voyce of the holy ghoſt, and words more neceſſary, then could be thought. For if he had not ſpoken that word, the fathers of the Councell had peraduenture departed, and gone theyr way, and the other remaining in the church, had made another cõcluſiõ which they would haue affirmed to haue ben of force, becauſe they would ſay the laſt concluſion was to be receiued. But many being warned by the wordes of the Prothonatary, and calling to remembraunce the like chaunce of other Councels before, called backe agayne the multitude which were departing, and cried vpon the Cardinall and the Patriarke to ſit downe agayne, & that they ſhould not leaue ẏ church voyd and quiet for theyr aduerſaryes. Whereupon, ſodenly all the whole multitude ſate downe, and the gates were ſhut agayne. In the meane time Matheus Albiganenſis a biſhop, read the proteſtation to none els but to himſelfe alone, for it could not be heard for noyſe: which being ended the Lombardes and the Cathelanes confirmed the proteſtation. When the Cardinal of Terraconia ſayd that he did agree to that diſſenſion, they marueiled at that ſaying. And whẽ ſome ſmiled & laughed at him: what ſayd he, ye fooles, do ye mocke me? do not the Ambaſſadors of my king diſſent from you? what do you marueil then if I do ſay I cõſent vnto theyr diſſention? And with theſe wordes, he and almoſt all the Arragones, Lombardes and Cathelanes departed, all the other taryed ſtill. And albeit it was ſomewhat late (for it was paſt ij. at after noone) Arelatenſis ſeeing the congregation quiet, commaunded the affayres of priuate perſons to be read, as the maner is: which beynge ended, he commaũded alſo the publicke affayres to be read, & willed the concluſions & the forme of the decree to be red agayne. There remayned in the congregation, the Ambaſſadors of the Empyre and of Fraunce, talking together of theyr affayres. Notwithſtanding the biſhop of Turnõ heard mention made of the cõcluſions, & turning himſelfe to the Biſhop of Lubecke, ſayd: lo, the matters of fayth are now in hand again, let vs go hẽce I pray you that we be not an offence vnto others, or that we be not ſayd to diſſent from the other Ambaſſadors. To whom the Biſhop of Lubecke aunſwered: tary father, tary here, are not the concluſions moſt true? why are you afrayd to be here for ẏ truth? theſe wordes were not heard of many, for they ſpake them ſoftely betwene themſelues. Notwithſtanding I heard it, for I ſitting at theyr feet, did diligẽtly obſerue what they ſaid. Arelatenſis, after all thinges were read, which he thought neceſſary, at the requeſt of the deputyes concluded, and ſo making an end diſmiſſed the congregation. Twiſe it is declared, with how great difficulty Arelatẽſis concluded forſo much as neither the matter nor the forme could be cõcluded without diſſenſion:* and the concluſions were miraculous, and paſt all mens hope, but were obteined by the induſtry of Arelatenſis, or rather by the ſpeciall gift of the holy Ghoſt.

How God worketh by occaſiõ.

Albiganenſis readeth the proteſtation, but none could heare him.

The affaires of the councell are read.

Eneas Syluius being preſent collected this. Arelatenſis cõcludeth here, as he did alſo before, not without the conſent of the deputies according to the order of the Councel.

*Eneas, you dyd not ſo praiſe this councell after you were byſhop your ſelfe.

After this, it was determined betwene the Lõbardes and Aragons to abſteine frõ the deputations for a certaine time, whiche they did not long obſerue, notwithſtanding ẏ deputations were holdẽ very quietly for a certein ſpace, neither was there any thing done worthy of remẽbraũce vntill the 15. day of May, during whiche time, all meanes poſſible were ſought to ſet a concorde betwene the fathers, but it would not be. Then Nicolas Amici promoter of the faith, was called into the congregation, & briefly rehearſed thoſe things which were done the dayes before, and declared how that Arelatenſis might poynt a Seſſion. Wherefore, forſomuch as delay in matters of fayth was daungerous, he required that a ſeſſiõ ſhould be appoynted againſt the morow after, requiring the Cardinall for his dignities ſake, in that he was called the principall of the church, and the other biſhops, that (as they had promiſed in theyr conſecration) they would not now ſhrinke from the church in theſe wayghty affayres, and ſuffer the faith to be oppreſſed: but the other inferiors he required vpon theyr othe which they had taken, to ſhew themſelues faythfull and conſtant herein. Then againe there fell a great contention vpõ theſe wordes: for Arelatenſis, as he was required, did appoynt a Seſſion, and exhorted all men to be there preſent in theyr Robes. The Biſhop of Lubecke riſing vp, made a proteſtation in his owne name, and alſo in the name of his protector, that he would not conſent, that there ſhoulde be any Seſſion, if it ſhoulde in any part derogate from the agreement had at Mentz. Georgius Miles alſo, his felow Ambaſſadour conſented to this proteſtation. When as the protector of the Councel appoynted by the Emperour, vnderſtood himſelfe for to be named by the biſhop of Lubecke, he marueiled a while what the matter ſhoulde be. But being certified by an enterpreter, he aunſwered that he would in no caſe conſent vnto the proteſtation of the Biſhop of Lubecke, and that he did not know any thing of their doings at Mentz: alſo that he was ſent by the Emperour to the ſacred Councell, and hath his charge whiche he doth well remember, and would be obedient therunto. After whom the Biſhop of Concenſe, according to his accuſtomed maner, made his proteſtatiõ & after him alſo folowed Panormitane. Whoſe wordes before I will repeat, I deſire that no man woulde marueil that I make mention ſo often of Panormitane: for it is neceſſary to declare the matter in order as it was done.

The Byſhop of Lubecke.

Conrade Winſperge a Baron.

It happened in theſe matters euen as it doth in warlike affayres: For as there, ſuche as are moſt valiaunt and ſtrong, and doe moſt worthy feates, obteine moſt fame, as in the battell of Troy, Achiles and Hector: ſo in theſe ſpirituall warres and contentions, thoſe which moſt excell in learning and eloquence, and do more then other, ſhould be moſt renowmed & named: for on ẏ one part Panormitane was prince and Captayne, on the other, Arelatenſis: but his owne will made not the one Captain, but onely neceſſity, for it behoued him to obey his prince. Notwithſtanding he was not ignoraunt of the truth and verity, neither did he reſiſt willingly againſt it: for I haue ſene him oftentimes in his library complayne of his prince, that he followed other mens Cõſell. When as his time came to ſpeak he ſayd that he did not a little marueil why the protector of the fayth, ſhoulde require the Prelates to haue a Seſſion, whiche was nothing perteining to his office, and that he ought not to vſurpe the Preſidentes place. And agayne he complayned touching the contempt of the Prelates, for the matter did preſently touch the ſtate of the Apoſtolicke ſea, & for that cauſe the ſea ought to be heard before any Seſſion be holdẽ. Neither it is to be regarded (ſaid he) that the cõſell of Conſtance ſeemeth to haue decreed, that it ſhould now be ſpoken of, for ſo much as Pope Iohn was not heard at Conſtaunce, neither any man els, to ſpeake for the ſea, by which words he ſeemed both to contẽne and bring in dout all the decrees of that moſt great and ſacred ſynode of Cõſtance: therefore there was a great tumult, and all men cried out with one voyce, ſaying: that the Synod of Cõſtance is holy and the authority thereof ought to be inuiolate. But he being ſtill inſtant, with a ſtoute and hauty courage, affirmed that the matter coulde not be finiſhed without the Ambaſſadours of the Princes, and that the Princes ought to be heard in a matter of fayth. And agayne that the Ambaſſadors themſelues cannot conſent, for ſo much as in the Colloqui holden at Mentz they had promiſed during the treaty of peace by them begunne, they woulde receiue & allow nothing that the Pope ſhoulde either doe agaynſt the councell, or the councell agaynſt the Pope: & that he doubted not, but that the three firſt concluſions declared Eugenius an hereticke, in ſo much that it was euident, that Eugenius did vehemently reſiſt the two firſt. And therefore for ſo much as the Seſſion was not yet holden, and that it was lawful for euery man before ẏ Seſſion to ſpeak what he will, he deſired and required them moſt inſtauntly, that there might be no Seſſion as yet holden. Unto whom Arelatenſis anſwered, that it was not to be doubted but that the promoter of the fayth, by his office might call the prelates to determine a matter of fayth, & ſpecially for ſo much as the deputation of the fayth and the whole councell, had ſo geuen him in commaundement.

Panormitan the Achilles of the Eugenians, and Arelatenſis the Hector of the councell.

The Papiſts extoll that which maketh for their purpoſe, but the contrary they contemne, whether it be ſcripture or prophane.

Arelatenſis anſwere to Panormitan This deputation of faith, was that cõpany of choſe mẽ which dyd determine matters of faith.

As touching the prelates, he ſayth, that albeit without all doubt biſhops haue chiefe authority: yet notwithſtanding it is accuſtomed in Councels, not to make any concluſion in the name of the biſhops, but in the name of ẏ whole councell: and the vniuerſall Church hath decreed certayne lawes in this Councell, which ſhoulde remayne inuiolate. Neither let the biſhops thinke the preſence of the inferiors greuous vnto them, when as oftẽtimes vnder a bare and torne coate, wiſedome lyeth hid, and vnder rich veſtures & ornaments, folly lurketh. Biſhops ought alſo to be mindfull of the ſaying of Domitius (whiche as S. Hierome reporteth) ſayd: why ſhould I eſteme thee as a prince, if thou doeſt not regard me as a Senator? For the byſhops ought to eſteme Prieſtes as Prieſtes, if they will haue reuerence done vnto them as Biſhops. Neither ought the Princes to be looked for, to the deciding of this matter, for ſo much as the Church is not congregated in the name of the princes: but in the name of Chriſt, which hath not receiued hys power from princes: but immediatly from God: to the defence wherof, he ſhould perceiue the inferiors to be no leſſe leſſe encouraged thẽ the biſhops, for that he did wel vnderſtand and know, that they would not onely ſpend theyr tẽporall good, but alſo theyr liues for the defence thereof. As for ſome biſhops, rather thẽ they will loſe any part of their tẽporalties, they wil ſel the liberty of ẏ church vnto ẏ princes & make them iudges and Lords ouer the Councel. As touching the actes at Mentz, he doth not regard them, for ſo muche as (as it is ſayde) they accompted without theyr hoſte: for he ſayth, he doth not vnderſtand how this can be that they had decreed neither to obey the pope, nor the councell. The one or the other they muſt needs be obedient vnto:

Saint Hierome vnto Nepotianus de vita clericali.

Marke how politickly and ſincerely he doth confute hys aduerſaries.

to: for there is no third tribunall, whereunto any obediẽce is due in theſe matters which concern the fayth and the ſaluation of ſoules: And finally that the Church woulde not ſuffer that theyr affayres & matters of fayth ſhoulde be determined by the iudgement of princes: for the holy ghoſt is not ſubiect vnto princes, but princes vnto him: and vpon this concluſion he would not feare, neither the loſſe of hys goods, neither any death or martirdome. And wheras Panormitane doth nowe ſhew himſelfe ſo great a defender of Eugenius, he ſayth that he doth not a litle maruell at it, for that in times paſt no man hath more publiſhed Eugenius his errors then he: by whoſe ſpecial labor & councel, both a decree monitory, & alſo yͤ ſuſpẽſion was admitted & ſet out againſt Eugenius: And now, wherupō this ſodein chaũge ſhould come, he ſaith yͭ he was vtterly ignorant, forſomuch as neither Eugenius had altered his life, neither could the church continue in ſuch a ſchiſme. wherfore he deſired Panormitane diligently to conſider, whether he ſpake according to his conſcience or not: for (ſayth he) the concluſions which nowe ſhall be decreed, are moſt generall: neither is there any mention in them of the Pope, and moreouer the verity of fayth is contayned in them: agaynſt the whiche if Eugenius did contend, it were more meete that the Pope ſhould be corrected, then the veritye omitted. And thus he making an end all were warned to come the next day vnto the Seſſion. The protector alſo deſired the ſacred Councel, that none ſhould be ſuffred to bring any weapon to the ſeſſion. For ſo much as he was ready to obſerue the ſafe conduct of the Emperour, and together with the Senate of yͤ city, to prohibite all quarrellers for doing of iniury.

No man hath heretofore more then Panormitane publiſhed the errours of Eugenius: whom he now ſo greatly defẽdeth.

The Seſſion proclaymed.

When the 16. day of May was come, all they whom the Seſſion contẽted and pleaſed, aſſembled at the houre. The Ambaſſadours alſo of the princes were come together into the quier of the church, to attempt further what they could do, and ſending the biſhops of Lubeck and Concenſe, and the Deane of Turnon, an excellent learned man, they offered themſelues to be preſent at the Seſſion, if that the depoſition of Eugenius might yet be deferred foure monethes. Who, when they had receiued a gentle anſwere of Arelatẽſis, and the other principals, returning agayn vnto yͤ Embaſſadors, they would only haue the firſt concluſion decreed, and therupon ſent agayne vnto Arelatenſis: vnto whō anſwere was made, that the chief force did conſiſt in yͤ two other concluſions, and that the Cōucel would ſpecially determine vpon them. If the Ambaſſadors would not be preſent, they ſhould vnderſtand that the concord was broken by them, which would not obſerue yͭ which they had offered. With which anſwere they departed, & the Seſſiō begā to be celebrate. There was no Prelate of the Aragons preſent at it, neither out of Spayn: and out of Italy, onely the biſhop of Groſſetane, and the Abbot of Dona, whiche for theyr conſtancy & ſteadfaſt good will toward the vniuerſall church, could not be chaũged from their purpoſe, but of doctors and other inferiors, there were a great number of Aragons, and almoſt all the inferiors of Spayne and Italy (for the inferiors feared not the princes, as the Biſhoppes did) and then the worthy ſtoutnes of the Aragones & Cathelanes appeared in the inferiour ſort, which woulde not ſhrinke away in the neceſſity of the church. Of the two other nations there were only preſent 20. biſhops. The reſidue lurked in theyr lodginges, profeſſing the fayth in theyr hartes but not in theyr mouthes. Arelatenſis conſidering afore what would come to paſſe, cauſed praiers to be made, & after their praiers made vnto almighty god, with teares and lamẽtation, that he would ſend them his holy ſpirit to ayde and aſſiſt them, they were greatlye comforted and encouraged. This congregatiō was famous, and albeit that there were not many biſhops preſent, yet al the ſeats were filled with the Biſhoppes, Proctors, Archdeacons, Preſidents, Priors, Prieſtes and Doctors of both lawes, which I iudged to be about the number of 400. or more: amongſt whō there was no noyſe, no chiding, no opprobrious wordes or contẽtion, but one exhorted another to the profeſſion of the fayth, and there appeared a full and whole conſent of them all to defend the church. The biſhop of Maſſilia a noble man read the decree, which was attentiuely harkened vnto, and not one word interrupted. When it was ended: Te Deum laudamus was ſong with great ioy and gladnes, & ſo the Seſſion diſſolued, whiche was in number the xxxiij. Seſſion, and amongeſt all the reſt the moſt quiet and peaceable.

In all Italy there were ſcarſly two prelates found which ſought the commoditie of the vniuerſall church, in Spaine there was none.

Prayers made with teares.

Amongeſt 400. doctors that were preſent, ther was not one yll worde.

The 33. Seſſion.

The day following, being the xxij. of May, the Princes Embaſſadors without all mens expectation, came vnto the general congregatiō, by that theyr doing at the leaſt, geuing theyr aſſent vnto the Seſſion before paſſed. In celebrating wherof, if yͤ fathers had erred, it had not bene lawfull for the Princes and Embaſſadours, to haue holden the councell with thoſe fathers. But it was thought that they were touched with remorſe of conſcience, and euen now to deteſt and abhorre that which they had done: as it was not hidden to the Embaſſadours of the Empyre and Fraũce. For the biſhop of Lubecke ſayde, that the cauſe of his abſence was, for that he was appointed by the Emperors cōmaũdement, to intreat a peace: wherfore it was not comely for him to be preſent at any buſineſſe, whereby he ſhould be vexed or troubled, with whome the peace ſhould be intreated. Notwithſtanding he did much commend the ſeſſion before holdẽ, and beleued the decree therein promulgate to be moſt good and holy, and the verities therin conteined to be vndoubted, & ſayd that he would ſticke therunto both now, and euen vnto the death. But the biſhop of Turnō a man both learned and eloquent, ſpeaking for him and hys felowes, ſayd that he heard how that they were euill ſpokẽ of amongſt ſome, in that they had not honored theyr king in that moſt ſacred Seſſiō, whom it becommed ſpecially to exalt and defend the fayth: which alſo for that cauſe aboue all other kings was named moſt chriſten: notwithſtãding he ſayd that they had a lawfull excuſe, in that it was cōuenient that they, which were ſẽt to intreat peace, ſhould doe nothing whereby theyr Ambaſſade ſhold be ſtopped or letted. Alſo there are two kindes of iniuſtice (ſayd he) wherby either thinges are done that ſhould not be done, or thinges yͭ ſhould be done are not done. The firſt doth not alwayes bind, becauſe it is conuenient to haue reſpect of time, place, and perſō. But the laſt doth alwayes bind, wherin he ſayd they were not culpable. But as touching the firſt poynt, they might ſeme vnto ſome to haue erred, becauſe they wer not preſent at the Seſſion: but yet in this poynt they had ſufficient to anſwere, forſomuch as if they had bene preſent at that Seſſion, they ſhould haue bene vnmeete to haue intreated any peace with Eugenius: And therfore albeit they were wanting at ſo holy a buſineſſe, in that point they followed the example of Paule, which albeit he deſired to be diſſolued & to be which Chriſt, yet for the further profit and aduauncement of the church, it was deferred. So likewiſe he ſayd, that they had now done, for that they were not abſent becauſe they doubted of the concluſions (whiche they iudged to be moſt true and holy, & whereunto they would ſticke euen vnto the death) but becauſe they woulde not be vnmeet for the treaty of peace for which they came: and yet that which they had not done in theyr owne perſō, they had fulfilled (ſayd he) by theyr ſeruaunts and houſehold, whom altogether they commaunded to reuerence that Seſſion. I would that I had bene then in the place of ſome great prelate: ſurely they ſhould not haue gone vnpuniſhed, whiche thought to haue playd bo peepe. For what doth the declaration of the trueth hinder the treatye of peace? Or if it doe hurt, why is he not counted as great an offender, which cōſenteth to him that declareth the truth, as he which doth declare it? what ſhal we need any further teſtimony? for now the Embaſſadors of the Princes haue declared Eugenius to be an enemy vnto the truth. But to paſſe ouer theſe thinges, it is ſufficient that Eugenins wrote afterward vnto the king of Fraunce, that he did vnderſtand the Biſhop of Tournon to be become his enemy.

The Embaſſadours conſent to the former Seſſion.

Two kindes of iniuſtice.

O Aeneas, you ſhould haue vſed ſuch ſinceritie when you were Pope. Beholde, the princes Ambaſſadours declare Eugenius an enemy vnto the truth.

After that the Biſhop of Tournon had made an ende, Cardinall Arelatenſis gaue thanks vnto God, which had ſo defended his Church, & after great ſtormes and cloudes, had ſent fayre & cleare weather: & cōmending yͤ good wyll of the Emperour and the King of Fraunce towarde the Church, he alſo prayſed the biſhop of Lubecke and Tournon, for that oftentimes in the Councell, and alſo of late at Mentz, they had defended the authority of the cōucell. But ſpecially he cōmẽded this theyr preſent doings, that they had opẽly confeſſed the trueth, and had not ſequeſtred themſelues from the fayth of the Church.

Arelatenſis commendeth the Ambaſſadours.

Afterward, he entring into the declaration of the matter, ſayd that he was at Pyſis and at Conſtance, and neuer ſaw a more quiet or deuout Seſſion then this, affirming yͭ this decree was moſt neceſſary, to repreſſe the ambition of the Biſhops of Rome, whiche exalting themſelues aboue the vniuerſall church, thought it lawfull for them to doe all things after their owne pleaſure, and that no one man frō henceforth ſhould tranſport the councell from one place to another, as Eugenius attẽpted to doe, now to Bononia, now to Florentia, thẽ agayne to Bononia, after to Ferraria, and after that agayne to Florentia, and that hereafter the Biſhops ſhould withdraw theyr minds from the carefulnes of temporall goodes, whiche (as he himſelfe did ſee) had no mind at all on ſpiritual matters: & therfore by how much this Seſſiō was moſt holy and neceſſary, by ſo much more the aſſent of the Ambaſſadours was moſt laudable & acceptable to all the fathers. Theſe wordes thus ſpoken, he roſe vp, and the congregation was diſſolued.

This Councel was gathered to take a way the ambition of the Biſhoppes of Rome, that they ſhuld not think they might do all things according to theyr own pleaſure: and further to reuoke them frō the care of temporal things vnto ſpirituall things, which now they regarded not.

The councell doth deliberate vpon the popes election.

Lx. dayes muſt be delayd after the ſea is voyde.

Note the Chriſtian zeale of theſe mē, which would refuſe no daunger for Gods cauſe.

Now after that Gabriel Condulmarius was depoſed from the biſhopricke of Rome, the principall fathers of the Councell being called together in the Chapter houſe of the great Church conſulted together, whether it were expedēt that a new biſhop ſhould be created out of hād, or deferred for a time. Such as thought good that the election ſhoulde be done with ſpeed, ſhewed how daungerous a thing it was for ſuch a cōgregatiō to be without a head: alſo what a peſtiferous ſicknes was in al the City, which not onely conſumed young men and children: but alſo men of middle age, and old men in like maner, and that this plague came firſt by ſtraungers vnto the poore of the Citty, and ſo infected the rich, & now was come vnto the fathers of the councell: amplifiyng moreouer, and encreaſing the terror therof, and making the thing worſe then it was, as the maner is. Neither doth the decree (ſayd they) any thing let or hinder, wherein it is prouided that there ſhould be delay of lx. dayes after the ſea is voyde: for that is to be vnderſtand, when as the ſea is voyd at ſuch time as there is no Councell holden, neyther ought we to tary or make any delay, leaſt the Princes being perſwaded by Gabriel, ſhould reſiſt: Vnto whom the depoſition of Gabriell, and the election of ſome other, is to be certified all vnder one meſſage. The other which thought good that there ſhould be a delay ſayde: that the Councell did lacke no head, for ſo muche as Chriſt was the head therof: neither did lacke a ruler, for ſo much as it was gouerned by the Preſidents & other officers: and that no mention ſhoulde be made of any peſtilence in ſuch caſe, ſeing that, vnto ſtout & ſtrong men, death is not to be feared, neither can any thing daunt or feare thē which contend for the Chriſtian fayth. As for that peſtilēce which doth now encreaſe and grow in the City, foraſmuch as iudgement is now geuen, it is to be hoped that it wyll aſſwage, which was thought to haue come for the neglecting of iuſtice. Alſo that in ſo doubtful a matter, they ought rather to vſe the princes agaynſt theyr will, then to neglect them: and that it is not be feared, but that in this caſe, God will helpe thoſe that are ſtoute & valiaunt. The matter being thus diſcuſſed amongeſt them, (albeit that there was as many mindes, as there was men) yet it ſeemed vnto them all, that it was moſt profitable to chooſe the Byſhop by and by, but moſt honeſt to deferre it.

John Segouius.

Hereupon John Segouius, a man of excellent learning ſayd: Moſt reuerend fathers, I am diuerſly drawne by ſundry reaſons, to this ſide and that. But as I way the matter more deeply in my minde, this is my opinion, that to come to a ſpeedy election, it ſeemeth good, to ſpeake after mans iudgement: but to delay it for two moneths, to ſpeak after Gods iudgement, it ſeemeth much better. I do iudge that not onely the wordes, but alſo the meaning of our decree, ought to be obſerued. Wherefore, if ye will geue any credite vnto me, folow rather daungerous honeſty, thē ſecure vtility: albeit that in deede, vtility cannot be diſcerned from honeſty. This opinion of delay took place among the Fathers, and they determined to ſtaye for the ſpace of two monethes.

Dangerous honeſtie preferred before ſecure vtilitie.

In the meane time, meſſēgers were ſent vnto the princes to declare the depoſition of Eugenius by the Synode, and publiſh it abroad.

During this time, the corrupt ayre was nothing at all purged, but the mortality dayly encreaſing, many died and were ſicke. Whereupon a ſodayne feare came vpon the fathers. Neyther were they ſufficiently aduiſed what they might do: for they thought it not to be without daunger, either to depart or to tary. Notwithſtanding they thought it good to tary, & alſo they cauſed other to tary: that ſince they had ouercome famine, and the aſſaults of theyr enemies on earth, they would not ſeeme to ſhrinke for the perſecutiō of any plague or ſicknes. But forſomuch as the could not all be kept there, it was politickly prouided, that the councell ſhould not ſeme to be diſſolued for any mās departure. And for the more eſtabliſhmēt of the matter, there were certaine thinges read before the fathers, which they called De ſtabilimento, whoſe authority continued long time after. When as the Dogge dayes were come, and that all herbes withered with heat, the peſtilence dayly encreaſed more & more, that it is incredible how many dyed. It was to horrible to ſee the corſes hourely caryed through the ſtreetes, when on euery ſide there was weeping, wayling, & ſighing. There was no houſe voyd of mourning: no myrth or laughter in no place, but matrones bewayling their huſbandes, & the huſbandes theyr wiues. Men & women went through the ſtreetes, and durſt not ſpeake one vnto another. Some taryed at home, and other ſome that went abroad, had perfumes to ſmell vnto to preſerue them agaynſt the plague.

A great peſtilence in Baſil.

The common people dyed without nūber: and like as in the cold Autumne, the leaues of the trees do fall, euen ſo did the youth of the City conſume and fall away. The violence of the diſeaſe was ſuch, that yͤ ſhould haue met a mā mery in the ſtreet now, and within x. houres heard that he had bene buryed. The number of the dead corſes was ſuch alſo that they lacked place to bury them in: in ſo much that all the Churchyards were digged vp, and filled with dead corſes, & great holes made in the Pariſh Churches, whereas a great number of corſes being thruſt in together, they couered them ouer with earth. For which cauſe the fathers were ſo afraid, that there appeared no bloud in their faces: and ſpecially the ſodayne death of Lodouicus the Prothonotary did make all men afrayd, who was a ſtrong man & floriſhing in age, & ſingularly learned in both lawes: whō theſame enuious and raging ſicknes tooke away in a few houres. By and by after dyed Lodouicus the Patriarke of Aquileia, a man of great age, and brought vp alwayes in troubles and aduerſity, neither coulde he ſee the day of the Popes election which he had long wiſhed for: Notwithſtanding he tooke partly a conſolation in that he had ſeene Gabriel depoſed before his death. This mans death was greuous vnto all the fathers, for now they ſayde that two pillers of the Councel were decayed & ouerthrown, meaning the Prothonotary and the Patriarke, whereof the one by the law: and the other with his deedes defended the verity of the Councell.

Lodouicus the prothonotary dyed of the plague

About the ſame time alſo dyed the king of Arragones Amner in Switzerland, a man of excellent learning, being biſhop of Ebron. The Abbot of Vergilia dyed at Spyre & John the biſhop of Lubecke, betwene Vienna and Buda.

Theſe two laſt rehearſed, euen at the point of death, did this thing worthy of remembraunce. Whē as they perceiued the houre of theyr death approche, calling vnto them certayne graue and wiſe mē, ſayd: All you that be here preſent, pray to God, that he will conuert ſuch as knowledge Gabriell for high Biſhoppe, for in that ſtate they cannot be ſaued: and profeſſing themſelues that they would die in the fayth of the Councell of Baſill, they departed in the Lord. In Boheme alſo departed the biſhop of Conſtance, which was Ambaſſador for the Councell. There was great feare and trembling throughout all the Coūcel. There had bene alſo in the Councell, by a long time, the Abbot of Dona, of the Dioces of Cumana, a man poore vnto the worlde, but rich vnto God, whom neither flatterings nor threatnings could turne away from his good purpoſe & intent, chuſing rather to begge in the truth of the fathers, then to abounde in riches with the falſe flattering aduerſaryes.

The exhortation of thoſe which dyed.

The Byſhop of Cōſtance dyeth.

The Abbot Dona, a true Abbot.

Wherupō, after the Lords were departed, which gaue him his liuing, he remayning ſtill, was ſtricken with the plague and died. Likewiſe a great number of the regiſters and Doctors dyed: and ſuch as fell into that diſeaſe, few or none eſcaped. One amongeſt all the reſt, Æneas Syluius, bying ſtrickē with this diſeaſe, by Gods helpe eſcaped. This man lay 3, dayes euen at the poynt of death, all men being in deſpayre of him: notwithſtādıng it pleaſed God to graūt him longer life. When as the peſtilence was moſt feruent & hote, & that daily there dyed about one hundred, there was great intreatye made vnto Cardinall Arelatenſis, that he would goe to ſome other towne or village neare hand: for theſe were the words of all his frendes & houſehold: what do you moſt reuerend father? At the leaſt void this wane of the Moone, and ſaue your ſelfe: who being ſafe, all we ſhall alſo be ſafe: if you dye, we all periſh. If the plague oppreſſe you, vnto whom ſhall we flye? Who ſhall rule vs? or who ſhall be the guide of this moſt faythfull flocke? The infectiō hath already inuaded your chamber. Your Secretarye and chamberlayne are already dead, Conſider the great daūger and ſaue both your ſelfe and vs. But neither the intreatye of his houſehold, neither yͤ corſes of thoſe which were dead coulde moue him, willing rather to preſerue the Councell with perill of his life, then to ſaue his life with perill of the coūcel: for he did know that if he ſhould depart, few would haue taryed behinde, and that deceite ſhoulde haue beene wrought in his abſence.

Eneas the author hereof eſcaped death hardlye.

The inuincible conſtancie and fortitude of the Cardinall Arelatenſis.

Wherfore, like as in wars the ſouldiors feare no daunger, when as they ſee theyr Captayne in the midſt of theyr enemyes: ſo the fathers of the Councell were aſhamed to flye from this peſtilence, ſeing theyr Preſident to remayne with them in the middeſt of all daungers. Which theyr doinges did vtterly ſubuert the opinion of thē, which babled abroad, that the fathers taryed in Baſill to ſeeke their own profite and commodity, and not the verity of the fayth: for there is no commodity vpon the earth, which men would chaunge for theyr liues: for that all ſuche as doe ſerue the world, do prefer before all other thinges. But theſe our fathers ſhewing themſelues an inuincible ſtrōg wall for the houſe of God, vanquiſhing all the craftye deceites whiche Gabriell vſed, and ouercōming all difficultyes, which this moſt cruell and peſtiferous yeare brought vpon thẽ, at the length all deſire of liue alſo being ſet a part, they haue ouercome all daungers, and haue not doubted with moſt conſtant mindes to defend the verety of the councell, euen vnto this preſent.

The time of the decree being paſſed, after yͤ depoſition of Gabriel, it ſemed good vnto the fathers, to proceed to the election of another Biſhop. And firſt of all they nominated thoſe that together wͭ the Cardinals, ſhould elect yͤ Pope.

The commendation of Arelatẽſis.

The firſt & principall of the Electours was the Cardinall Arelatẽſis a man of inuincible conſtancy, and incomparable wiſedome: vnto whoſe vertue I may iuſtly aſcribe whatſoeuer was done in the coũcell: for without him, the prelats had not perſeuered in theyr purpoſe, neither could the ſhadow of any Prince haue ſo defended thẽ. This man came not to the election by any fauor or denomination, but by his owne proper right. The reſt of the Electours were choſen out of yͤ Italian, French, Germayne and Spaniſh nations, & their Sels & chambers appoynted to them by lots, without reſpect of dignity or perſon, & as the lots fel, ſo they were placed: wherby it chaunced a Doctor to haue the higheſt place, and a Biſhop the laſt. Wherein the diſtribution of lots was very ſtraunge, or rather a Diuine diſpenſation, reprouing the deuiſes of man, wheras the prelates had determined to haue the beſt Chambers appoynted for themſelues, & had earneſtly contẽded before to haue theyr chambers appoynted according to theyr dignity.

The councel of Marcus.

The next day after, there was a Seſſion holdẽ, wherein Marcus a famous Diuine, made an Oration vnto the Electors, wherein he reckoned vp the manifolde crimes of Gabriel, whiche was depoſed. He endeuored to perſwade the Electours to chooſe ſuch a man, which ſhoulde in all pointes, be contrary vnto Gabriel, & eſchew all his vices: that as he, through his manifolde reproches, was hurtfull vnto al men: ſo he which ſhould be choſẽ, ſhould ſhew himſelf acceptable vnto all men, through iuſtice: and as Gabriel was couetous and full of rapine, ſo this man ſhould ſhew himſelfe continent.

There was ſo great a nũber of people gathered together to behold this matter, that neither in the church, neyther in the ſtretes, any man could paſſe. There was preſẽt Iohn Earle of Dieſtein, who ſupplyed the place of the Emperours Protector: alſo the Senatours of the Citty, with many other noble men, to beholde the ſame, whereof you ſhall heare (Chriſt willing) more largely hereafter. The Citizens were without in armour to prohibite that there ſhould be no vproare made. The Electours receiued the Communion together, and afterwardes, they receiued theyr oth: & the Cardinall Arelatenſis opening the booke of Decrees, read the forme of the othe in yͤ audiẽce of all mẽ, & firſt of all, he taking the othe himſelf, began in this maner.

The godly othe of Arelatenſis.

Moſt reuerend Fathers, I promiſe, ſweare and vowe before my Lord Ieſus Chriſt (whoſe moſt bleſſed body I vnworthy ſinner haue receiued: vnto whom in the laſt iudgement I ſhall geue accompt of all my deedes) that in this buſines of election, wherunto now by the will of the Coũcell we are ſent: I wil ſeeke nothing els, then the onely ſaluation of the Chriſten people, and the profit of the vniuerſall Church. This ſhall be my whole care and ſtudye, that the authority of the generall Councels be not contemned: that the Catholick fayth be not impugned, and that the fathers which remayne in the coũcell, be not oppreſſed. This will I ſeek for: this ſhall be my care: vnto this, withall my whole force and power, will I bend my ſelfe: neyther will I reſpect any thing in this poynt, eyther for mine owne cauſe, or for any frend, but onely God and the profite of the Church. With this minde and intent, and with this hart will I take mine othe before the Councell.

The other Electours take their othe.

His wordes were liuely and fearefull. After him al the other Electours in theyr order, did ſweare and take theyr othe. Then they went with great ſolemnity vnto the Cõclaue: where they remayned 7. dayes. The maner of their election was in this ſort. Before the Cardinals ſeate was ſet a Deſke, wherupon there ſtood a baſen of ſiluer: into the which baſen all the Electors did caſt their ſchedüls: which the Cardinall receiuing, read one by one, and foure other of the Electors wrote as he read them.

The tenour of the Schedules was in this maner. I George Biſhop of Vicene doe chuſe ſuch a man, or ſuche a man, for biſhop of Rome, and peraduenture named one or two: euery one of the electors ſubſcribed his name vnto the Schedule, that he might thereby know his owne, and ſay nay, if it were cõtrary to that which was ſpokẽ: wherby all deceit was vtterly excluded. The firſt ſcrutiny thus ended, it was found that there were many named to yͤ papacy. Yet none had ſufficiẽt voices, for that day there were xvij. of diuers natiõs nominate. Notwithſtanding Amedeus duke of Sauoy, a man of ſinguler vertue, ſurmounted them all: for in the firſt ſcrutiny he had the voyce of xvj. Electors which iudged him worthy to gouerne the church.

A ſcrutinie is a priuie election by voyces. Amedeus Duke of Sauoy.

After this, there was diligent inquiſition had in the Councell, touching thoſe whiche were named of the Electors, and as euery mans opinion ſerued him, he did either prayſe or diſcommẽd thoſe which were nominate. Notwithſtanding there was ſuche reporte made of Amedeus, that in the next Scrutiny, which was holden in the Nonas of Nouember, the ſayd Amedeus had 21. voices, and likewiſe in the 3. and 4. Scrutinye 21. voyces. And for ſo muche as there was none found in all the ſcrutiny to haue 2. partes all yͤ other ſchedules were burnt. And forſomuch as there lacked but onely one voyce to the election of yͤ high biſhop, they fell vnto prayer, deſiring God that he would vouchſafe to direct theyr mindes to an vnity and concorde, worthely to elect and chuſe him which ſhoulde take the charge ouer the flocke of God. Forſomuch as Amedeus ſeemed to be nearer vnto the papacy then all other, there was greate cõmunication had amongſt them touching his life and diſpoſition. Some ſaid that a lay man ought not ſo ſodenly to be choſen: for it would ſeeme a ſtraunge thing for a ſecular prince to be called vnto the Byſhopricke of Rome: which would alſo to much derogate frõ the eccleſiaſticall ſtate, as though there were none therein meete or worthy for that dignity. Other ſome ſayde that a man which was maryed and had children, was vnmeete for ſuch a charge. Other ſome agayn affirmed that the biſhop of Rome ought to be a Doctor of law, and an excellent learned man.

Prayer for vnitie and concord.

When theſe wordes were ſpoken, other ſome riſing vp, ſpake farre otherwiſe, that albeit Amedeus was no Doctour, yet was he learned and wiſe, for ſo muche as all his whole youth, he had beſtowed in learning & ſtudye, & had ſought not the name, but euen the groũd of learning. Thẽ ſayd another, if ye be deſirous to be inſtructed further of this princes life, I pray you geue eare vnto me, which doe know him throwly. Truely this man from his youth vpward, and euen from his yong and tender yeares, hath lyued more religiouſly then ſecularly, being alwaies obediẽt to his parentes and mayſters, and being alwayes indued with the feare of God, neuer geuen to any vanity or wantõnes: neither hath there at any time bene any childe of the houſe of Sauoy, in whom hath appeared greater wytte to towardnes, whereby al thoſe which did behold and know this man, iudged and foreſaw ſome great matter in him: neyther were they deceiued. For if ye deſire to know his rule & gouernance, what and how noble it hath bene: Firſt know ye this, that this man hath raigned ſince his fathers deceaſe, about xl. yeares.

Let lying Pogius be aſhamed of his falſe inuectiue againſt Amedeus.

During whoſe time, iuſtice, the Lady and Queene of all other vertues, hath alwayes floriſhed: For he hearing his ſubiectes himſelfe, woulde neuer ſuffer the poore to be oppreſſed, or the weake to be deceiued. He was the defender of the fatherles, the aduocate of the widowes, and protector of the poore. There was no rapine or robbery in all his territory. The poore and rich liued all vnder one lawe, neither was he burthenous vnto his ſubiectes, or importune againſt ſtraungers throughout all his country: there was no greuous exactions of mony, throughout all his dominion. He thought himſelfe rich enough, if the inhabitãts of his dominions did aboũd and were rich, knowing that it was the poynt of a good ſhepheard to ſheare his ſheepe, and not to deuour them. In this alſo was his chiefe ſtudy and care, that his ſubiectes might liue in peace, and ſuche as bordered vpon him, might haue no occaſion of grudge.

By which pollicies he did not onely quietly gouern his Fathers dominion, but alſo augmẽted the ſame by others, which willingly ſubmitted themſelues vnto him. He neuer made warre vpon any, but reſiſting agaynſt ſuch as made war vpon him, he ſtudied rather to make peace then to ſeeke any reuenge, deſiring rather to ouercome his enemies with benefites, then with the ſword. He maried onely one wife, which was a noble virgin, & of ſinguler beauty and chaſtity. He would haue all his family to keep their handes and eyes chaſte, and continent, and throughout all his houſe, honeſty and integrity of maners was obſerued. When as his wife had chaũged her life, and that he perceiued his Duchy to be eſtabliſhed, & that it ſhould come without any controuerſye vnto his poſteritye, he declared hys mind which was alwayes religious, & dedicate vnto god, & ſhewed what will and affectiõ he had long borne in hys hart. For he contẽning the pompe and ſtate of this world, calling vnto him his deare frends, departed and went into a wildernes: where as building a goodly Abbey he addicted himſelfe wholy to the ſeruice of God, and taking his croſſe vpon him, folowed Chriſt. In which place he being cõuerſant by the ſpace of many yeares, ſhewed forth great examples of holyneſſe, wearing no other garmentes then ſuch as could withſtand the cold, neither vſing any kind of daynty fare, but onely to reſiſt hunger, watching and praiing the moſt part of the night. Wherfore this Prince is not newly come vnto the Church (as ſome do ſuppoſe) but being a Chriſtian borne of progenitours, a thouſand yeares and more being Chriſtians, doth now ſerue God in a monaſtery.

Commendation of Amedeus Pope elect.

To haue a wife is no let for a good man to be elected Pope.

Popes haue ben maried.

Read the 5 Epiſtle of Ignatius and you ſhal ſee that the Apoſtles had wyues, & Baptiſta Mantuanus maketh mention how that Hilarius Byſhop of Pictauia had a wife.

Eccle. 4.

But as touching that, alſo which is ſpokē concerning a wife, I do not regarde it: when as not onely he whiche hath had a wife, but he alſo which hath a wife may be elect & choſen pope. For why do the doctors diſpute, whether a maried man choſen pope, ought to performe his ducty toward his wife, but onely becauſe a maryed man might bee receiued and choſen? For as you know well enough, there were many Popes that had wiues: and Peter alſo was not without a wife. But what doe we ſtande about this? for peraduenture it had bene better that more prieſtes had bene maried, for many ſhoulde be ſaued through maryage, which are now dāned through theyr ſingle life. But hereof we will (ſayth he) ſpeak in another place. But this ſemeth vnto me, rather to be laughed at, then worthy any anſwer which is obiected touching his children, for what can children (ſpecially being of great age) be impediment or let vnto the father, being a Biſhop? Doth not the Scripture ſay wo be vnto him that is a lone, for if he fall, he hath none to helpe him vp agayne? This can not be imputed vnto the prince, for he hath 2. ſonnes, both comely and wiſe. Whereof the one is prince of Piemont, the other Earle of the Gebennians: theſe men will rule the country of Sauoy in the abſence of theyr father, & will helpe him, if he haue need, for they haue already learned to rule ouer that people. I pray you what hurt is it for a Byſhop of Rome, to haue valiant childrē, which may helpe theyr father agaynſt tyrants? O moſt reuerent fathers, the more I do beholde the ſtorme of this moſt peruerſe and froward time, the more I do cōſider the vexations and troubles which the church is now tormented withall: I do ſo much the more thinke it profitable, yea & neceſſary, that this man ſhould be choſen prince and head: I will thinke that God hath ſhewed his mercye vpon vs, if I may ſee him haue the gouernance ouer thys boate, I pray you cōſider into what ſtraights we are now driuen, with what perils we are now vexed & toſſed. What prince is it that is obedient vnto this coūcel? For ſome will not confeſſe that the Coūcel is here, neither receiue our decrees: other ſome confeſſe it in theyr wordes, but by theyr deedes they declare it to be at Florence. For albeit that by theyr wordes & letters, they do not denye that the churche is here, yet do they procure promotiōs at the hands of Gabriell, which is depoſed. This is the ſtate of the Churche: with theſe ſtormes and tempeſtes the ſhippe is ſhaken and bruſed: wicked children haue riſen vppe agaynſt theyr mother, which being vnmindefull of theyr mothers labours & kindneſſe towards them, deſpiſe her, contēn her & beat her. What is to be done herein? Shall we chuſe a bare manne, which ſhall rather be derided of our princes, thē had in reuerēce? The dayes are not now, that mē haue reſpect onely vnto vertue: for (as the Satyricall Poet writeth) vertue is prayſed, but is coldly folowed. A poore man ſpeaketh & they aſke what he is? Truely vertue is good: but for our purpoſe, it muſt be marked and looked vpon, whether it be in a riche man or a poore man, you muſt chuſe a gouernour which may rule the ſhip not onely by Councell, but by power alſo. The winde is great: wherfore except the Councell be good, and the power ſtrong, the ſhip ſhall be broken, & all put in daunger. The memorial is yet freſh before our eyes: that the princes doe neglect the authority which is of no force or power. Is there not great valiantneſſe ſhewed in this poynt, in that you fearing no perill or daunger, eyther of life or goods, haue ſo long contended for the truth of Chriſt? But the moſte mighty & high God looketh downe from on high, and will reſiſt this theyr pride. I haue often conſented vnto theyr opinion, which ſayde it was expedient, that yͤ tēporall dominions ſhould be deuided from yͤ Eccleſiaſticall ſtate: for I did think that the prieſts ſhould therby be made more apt to the diuine miniſtery, & the ſecular princes more obedient to the clergy: but for ſo much as at this preſēt, yͤ churches of the world are poſſeſſed, partlye by Eugenius & partly by other tyrannts, we muſt prouide that we chuſe ſuch a one, which may recouer agayn the patrimony of the Church, and in whom the office of Chriſtes vicar may not be contemned: through the ſhielde of whoſe power, theyr contumacy may be ſuppreſſed, which contēne both verity & reaſon. Whereunto no man ſeemeth vnto me more apt or meet, thē Amadeus duke of Sauoy, which holdeth the one part of his poſſeſſions in Italy, and the other in Fraunce: Unto whom all chriſten princes are allied either by conſanguinity, or ioyned by amity and frēdſhip, & whoſe vertue, how famous it is, I haue already declared. Why doe we then ſtay or doubte to chuſe him? then whome Gabriell feareth no mā more. Let him therfore periſh with the ſword wherewithall he hath ſtricken. There is no man which can more pacify the church then he. Do you require deuotion in a biſhop? there is no man more deuout thē he. Do you require prudēce? Now ye vnderſtād by his former life, what maner of man he is. If ye ſeek for iuſtice, his people are a witnes therof: ſo yͭ whether you ſeeke for vertue or power, all are here preſent before you. Wherupon do ye ſtay? Go to I pray you: chuſe this man. He will augment the fayth: he will reforme maners, and preſerue the authority of the Church. Haue ye not heard theſe troubles of the church to haue bene afore ſpoken of, and that the time now preſent ſhould be an end of al troubles? Haue ye not heard that about this time, there ſhould a Pope be choſen, which ſhould comfort Syō, and ſet all things in peace? And who I pray you ſhould he be that could fulfill theſe thinges, except we chuſe this man? Beleue me, theſe ſayinges muſt be fulfilled, & I truſt that God will moue your minds thereunto. Notwithſtāding, do whatſoeuer ye ſhall think moſt good and holy.

Schiſme in the Church.

Good it were that temporall dominions were deuided from the Church.

Amedeus Duke of Sauoy choſen Pope.

When he had ſpoken theſe wordes, the greateſt nūber of the electors ſemed to conſent vnto him, and his wordes tooke ſuch effect, that in the next Scrutiny, the matter was finiſhed and ended, and when the Scrutiny was opened, it was found that Amedius, the moſt deuout duke of Sauoy according to the decree of the Councell, was choſen Pope. Wherfore ſodenly there was great ioy & gladnes amongſt them, and all men highly commended theyr doings. Then the Cardinall Arelatenſis, publiſhed vnto thē the name of the elect biſhop. After this, al the prelats in their robes, pōtificalibus, and miters, and all the clergye of the city cōming vnto the conclaue, the electours being likewiſe adourned, they brought thē vnto yͤ great church, where as after great thankes geuen vnto God, and the electiō agayne declared vnto the people, a Hymne being ſong for ioy, the cōgregation was diſſolued.

The valuation of the popes crown

This Amedeus aforeſayd, was a man of reuerent age, of comely ſtature, of graue and diſcreet behauiour: alſo before maried. Who thus being elect for Pope about Nouember, was called Felix the v. and was crowned in the city of Baſill, in the month of Iuly. There were preſent at his coronation Lewes Duke of Sauoy: Philip Earle Gebenēſ. Lewes Marques of Salutze: The Marques of Rotelen: Cōrade of Winſperghey, Chāberlain of the Empire: The Earle of Dierſtein: The Ambaſſadours of the Cittyes of Straſbrough, Berne, Friburge, Solatorne, with a great multitude of other beſide, to the vew of 50000. perſons. At this coronation, the Popes two ſonnes did ſerue and miniſter to theyr father. Lewes Cardinal of Hoſtia did ſet on his head, the pontificall Diademe, which was eſteemed at 30. thouſand crownes. It were long here to recite yͤ whole order and ſolemnity of the proceſſion, or the Popes ryding about the City. Firſt proceeded the Pope vnder his Canaby of cloth of gold, hauing on his head a triple crown, and bleſſing the people as he went. By him wēt the Marques of Rotelen, and Conrade of Winſperge, leading his horſe by the bridle. The proceſſion finiſhed, they went to dinner, which laſted foure full houres, being exceſſiuely ſumptuous: where the Popes two ſonnes were butlers to his cup. The Marques of Salutze was the ſtuard. &c.

Volat. lib. 3.

A note for our gentlemē, & lords, to learne how to hūt, and what dogges to keepe.

Of this Fœlix, thus writeth Volaterane in his 3. booke, that he being deſired of certayne of the Ambaſſadours, if he had any dogges or houndes to ſhew them: he willed them the next day to repayre to him, and he woulde ſhew vnto them ſuch as he had. When the Ambaſſadours, according to the appoyntment, were come, he ſheweth vnto them, a great number of poore people and beggers ſitting at his tables at meat, declaring, that thoſe were hys houndes, which he euery day vſed to feede: hunting with them (he truſted) for the glory of heauen to come.

And thus you haue heard the ſtate of this Councell hetherto, which Councell endured a long ſeaſon, the ſpace of 17. yeares.

The death of Sigiſmūd the Emperour.

Albertus 2. Emperour.

Anno 1438.

The death of Albertus 2.

About the 6. yeare of the Coūcell, Sigiſmund the Emperour dyed, leauing but one daughter to ſucceede hym in his kingdomes: whom he had maryed to Albert 2. Duke of Auſtricke, which firſt ſucceeded in the kingdome of Hūgary and Boheme, being a ſore aduerſary to the Bohemians: and afterward was made Emperour. an. 1438. and raigned Emperour but 2. yeares, leauing his wyfe, which was Sigiſmūd his daughter, great wͭ childe. After which Albert, ſucceeded his brother Frederick the third Duke of Auſtrich, in the Empire. &c. whereof more (Chriſt willing) hereafter.

In the meane time, Eugenius hearing of the death of Sigiſmund aboue recited, began to worke the diſſolutiō of the Councel of Baſill, and to transferre it to Ferraria, pretending the comming of the Grecians. Notwithſtanding the Councel of Baſill, through the diſpoſition of God, and the worthines of Cardinall Arelatenſis, conſtantly endured. Albeit in the ſaid Councell were many ſtops and practiſes to empeach the ſame, beſide the ſore plague of peſtilence, which fell in the Citie, during the ſayd Councell. In the which plague time, beſides the death of many worthy men, Æneas Syluius alſo himſelfe, the writer & compiler of the whole hiſtory of that Councell ſitting at the ſeete of the Biſhops of Tournon, and of Lubecke, lay ſicke iij. dayes of the ſame ſore, as is aboue touched, and neuer thought to eſcape. They that died, departed with this exhortation, deſiring mē to pray to God, that he would conuert the harts of them that ſtooke to Eugenius as Pope, againſt that Councell, as partly is afore noted, and now repeated againe for the better marking. Arelatenſis being moſt inſtantly exhorted by his frends to flie that danger, could by no meanes be intreated to auoide, fearing more the daunger of the Church, then of his owne life.

The plague at Baſill, in time of the councell.

Aeneas Siluius, ſick of the plague at Baſil.

The cōſtant zeale of Arelatenſis to the truth.

Beſide theſe ſo great difficulties & obſtacles to ſtay and hinder this Councell, ſtrange it was to behold the mutation of mens minds. Of whom, ſuch as firſt ſeemed to fauour yͤ Councell, after did impugne it: and ſuch as before were againſt it, in the end ſhewed themſelues moſt frends vnto the ſame. The chiefe Cardinals & prelates, the more they had to looſe, the ſooner they ſlipt away, or els lurked in houſes or townes neare, and abſented thēſelues for feare: ſo that the ſtay of the Councell moſt reſted vpō their Proctours, Doctours, Archdeacōs, Deanes, Prouoſtes, Priours, and ſuch other of yͤ inferiour ſort. Whereof Æneas Syluius in his 183. Epiſtle, maketh this relation, where one Caſpar Schlicke the Emperours Chauncelour writeth to the Cardinal Iulian in theſe words: Thoſe Cardinals (ſaith he) which ſo long time magnified ſo highly the authoritie of the Church, and of generall Councels, ſeeming, as though they were ready to ſpend their liues for yͤ ſame, now at the ſight of one letter from their king (wherin yet no death was threatned, but onely loſſe of their promotions) ſlipt away frō Baſil. And in yͤ ſame Epiſtle deridingly commendeth thē, as wiſe men, that had rather loſe their faith, then their flocke. Albeit (ſaith he) they departed not farre away, but remained about Solotorne, waiting for other commandements from their Prince. Whereby it may appeare, how they did ſhrinke away not willingly, but the Burſe (quoth he) bindeth faſter, then true honour.

Moreouer in one of the Seſſions of the ſaid Councell, the worthy Cardinall Arelatenſis is ſayde thus to haue reported, that Chriſt was ſold for xxx. pence: but I (ſaide he) was ſolde much more deare. For Gabriell, otherwiſe called Eugenius, Pope, offered 60. thouſand crownes, who ſo would take me, & preſent me vnto him. And they that tooke the ſaid Cardinall, afterward excuſed their fact by another coulour, pretending the cauſe, for that the Cardinals brother, what time the Armiakes waſted Alſatia, had wrought great dammage to the inhabitants there, and therfore they thought (ſaid they) that they might lawfully lay handes vpon a Frenchman, whereſoeuer they might take him. At length by the Biſhop of Straſbrough, Rupert, and the ſaid City, the matter was taken vp, and he reſcued. Wherein, no doubt, appeared the hand of God, in defending his life from the peſtilent danger of the Pope his aduerſary. Ex Paralip. Abbat. Vrſper.

And thus farre hauing proceeded in the matters of this foreſayd Councell, vntill the election of Amadeus, called Pope Fœlix v. before we proſecute the reſt, that remaineth thereof to be ſpoken, the order and courſe of times requireth to intermixt withall the reſidue pertaining to the matters concluded betweene this Councell, and the Bohemians, declaring the whole circumſtances of the Ambaſſade, their Articles, diſputations, and anſweres, which they had firſt in the ſaid Councel, then in their own countrey with the Councels Ambaſſadours: alſo with theyr petitions and anſweres vnto the ſame.

Touching the ſtory of the Bohemians, how they being ſent for, came vp to the Councell of Baſill, & how they appeared, and what was there concluded and agreed, partly before hath bin expreſſed, pag. 675. Now, as leiſure ſerueth frō other matters, to returne againe vnto the ſame, it remaineth to proſecute the reſt that lacketh, ſo farre as both breuitie may be obſerued, and yet the reader not defrauded of ſuch things, principally worthy in the ſame to be noted and knowne.

The ſtory of the Bohemians proſecuted.

The Bohemians then (as is before declared) hauing alwaies the vpper hād, albeit they were accuſed by yͤ new Biſhop Eugenius, yet it was thought good that they ſhould be called vnto Baſill, where as the Councell was appointed. Wherupon Cardinall Iulian ſent thether before, Iohn Pullumair Doctour of yͤ law, & Iohn de Raguſio, a Diuine. Who cōming vnto Baſill in the moneth of Auguſt, anno. 1431. called by their letters vnto yͤ Councell, Iohn, Abbot of Mulbrun, and Iohn Gelhuſius, Monke of the ſame cloiſter: which men for the dexteritie of their wit, and experience and knowledge of countreis, were very meete and neceſſary for Ambaſſades.

Within a few daies after, Iulianus alſo came thether, as he had promiſed, and immediatly ſent out Iohn Gelhuſius, and Hammon Offenbourg, a Senatour of Baſill, firſt vnto the Emperour Sigiſmund being at Feldkirch, and afterward vnto Friderike Duke of Auſtrich, for the appeaſing of the wars betweene him & Phillip, Duke of Burgony. This done, to the intent that peace being had, not onely the Eccleſiaſticall Prelates, but alſo the Marchants might haue ſafe acceſſe vnto Baſill, and ſo bring in all things neceſſary for ſuſtentation.

They going on this Ambaſſade, receiued letters from the Sinode to be deliuered vnto yͤ Emperour Sigiſmūd, whereby the Bohemians and Morauians, were called vnto the Councell. Theſe letters he by and by, cauſed to be carried vnto Boheme. But for ſo much as he hymſelfe went into Italy, to receiue the Imperiall Crowne of the Biſhop, he left William Duke of Bauaria, as his Deputy, to be protectour vnto yͤ Councell. Furthermore, when as yͤ Synode vnderſtood that our men would take a peace with the Bohemians, after their moſt ſhamefull fighte, they ſent Iohn Niderius a Diuine, & Iohn Gelhuſius, to comfort the people which ioined vpon Boheme, and earneſtly to moue the Morauians & Bohemians, which were before called, to come vnto the Councell.

The Bohemians inuited to come to the councell.

They departing from Baſill about the end of October, tooke their iourney toward Monacum, a towne of Bauaria: where, after they had ſaluted Williā Duke of Bauaria and his brother Erneſtus, and Albert the ſonne of Erneſtus, and had declared yͤ Cōmiſſion of their Ambaſſade, and had ſhewed vnto Duke Williā, how that as ſoone as he ſhould come vnto Baſill, the protection of the Councel ſhould be committed vnto him by the Emperour: they exhorted Fridericke, Marques of Brandenberg, and Iohn Duke of Bauaria, the Senate of Noremberg, and other Princes and Lords, partly by letters from yͤ Councell, and partly by wordes of mouth, that they ſhould by no meanes, take any truce with the Bohemians, for that it might be hurtfull vnto the Church, and ſaid they ſhould haue ayd out of hand. They deſired them alſo in the name of the Councell, that if the Bohemians would ſende their Ambaſſadours vnto Baſill, they would guide them, euery man through his countrey in ſafety: which they promiſed to do. It is incredible how all men reioiced, that the Bohemians was ſent for.

After this, when as they counſelled with the Senate of Noremberg, touching the ſending of the Councels letters vnto Boheme, it ſeemed beſt, firſt of al to inquire of yͤ rulers of Egra, whether yͤ Bohemiās had made any anſwer to the former letters of yͤ coūcell which they had ſent. The rulers of Egra being aduertiſed by theſe letters, ſent him, which caried yͤ Councels letters into Boheme, vnto Noremberg. He reported how reuerētly the Councel of yͤ greater city of Prage receiued yͤ letters, and how he was rewarded.

Wherupon they conceiued great hope of the good ſucceſſe of the Ambaſſade. Therefore the Ambaſſadours vſing the Councel of yͤ Senate of Noremberge, and diuers others, ſent the meſſenger backe agayne vnto Egra, wyth theyr owne priuate letters, and with letters of the Councell: for there was no better meane to ſend the letters vnto Boheme. Much trauaile was taken by them of Egra, Friderike Marques of Brandenberg, and Iohn Duke of Bauaria, in this matter, for that they were very deſirous that peace might be had amongſt all Chriſtians. The copy of thoſe letters, whereby the Synode did call the Bohemians vnto the Councell, and other letters exhortatorie of the Ambaſſadours, and the Bohemians anſwere vnto the ſame: for breuities cauſe we haue heere pretermitted. The Bohemians not in all points truſting vnto the Ambaſſadours, required by their letters, that the Councels Ambaſſadours with the other Princes, would come vnto Egra, whereas their Ambaſſadours ſhoulde alſo be preſent, to intreate vpon the ſafeconduict and other matters.

The Bohemians laboured to come to the Councell.

The day was appointed for the meeting, the Sonday after Eaſter, which was ẏ xxvij. day of Aprill. Then came the Ambaſſadours of the Councell vnto Egra, with ẏ noble Princes, Friderike Marques of Brandenberg, and Iohn Duke of Bauaria, with other nobles, almoſt to the number of 252. horſe. But none of the Bohemians were preſent, becauſe the inhabitants of Pilſana, and the Lord Swambergius had not ſent their ſafeconduict. When they vnderſtood this by their letters, they brought to paſſe that the Ambaſſadours of the Bohemiãs, Nicolaus Humpeltzius, ſecretary of the greater Citie of Prage, and Mathew Clumpezane, Preſident of Pieſta, ſhould be brought forth by them of Egra, and the Elenbogenſes, and ſo they came vnto Egra with xix. horſe, the viij. day of May. The next day after, Henry Tocgye, receaued ẏ Bohemian Ambaſſadours before ẏ Marques, with an eloquent Oration, taking this part of the Goſpell for his Theame, Pax vobis. i. Peace be with you. Then they propounded what great iniuries they had hetherto receiued at their hands, which was the cauſe of ſo many great ſlaughters on either partie, and that they were glad that yet now at the length there was ſome hope that they ſhould be heard.

The Bohemians require pledges.

After this, they conferred as touching the ſafeconduict. The Bohemiãs required pledges, and that not of ẏ common ſort, but Princes & nobles. Which thing, for ſo much as it did not content the Ambaſſadours, and that the matter ſhould ſo be put of, the common people of Egra began to cry out that it was long of the Eccleſiaſticall Princes, that a concord was not made with ẏ Bohemians. Then Friderike Marques of Brandẽberge, and Iohn Duke of Bauaria, bound themſelues of their owne good will. The like alſo did William Duke of Bauaria, at the requeſt of the Councell. Likewiſe alſo did the Councel and the Emperour Sigiſmũd. Furthermore promiſe was made, that all the Princes and Cities, ſhoulde do the like, thorough whoſe dominion they ſhould come, and the Citie of Baſill alſo. The copie of which ſafeconduict was afterward ſent vnto Prage. This alſo was required by the Bohemians, that if it were poſſible, the Emperour ſhould be preſent at the Councell.

Princes bound to the Bohemians.

The Bohemians require the Emperour to be preſent at the Councell.

This conuention at Egra continued xxj. daies. But the Bohemiãs, albeit they heard the Coũcels Ambaſſadours make great promiſes, yet did they not fully giue credit vnto them. Whereupon they choſe out two Ambaſſadours, Nicholas Humgolizius, & Iohn Zaczenſes, which ſhould go to Baſill, & diligently enquire out all thinges. These men, Conrade Biſhop of Ratiſbone, and Conrade Seglauer Deane of Eſteine, brought vnto Cattelſpurg, where as the Marques dwelt, being ſente out by the Synode a little before, to enquire whether the Bohemian Ambaſſadours woulde come or not. When they were come vnto Biberacke, one being ouercurious, enquired of one of the Bohemian Ambaſſadours, of what Countrey he was. He aunſwered that he was a Zaczen. There (ſaid he) are moſt execrable hereticks and noughty men, &c. Who for that ſlaunderous word, as a breaker of ẏ truce, was ſtraightway carried to priſon, and there ſhoulde haue ſuffered more puniſhment, if the Bohemian Ambaſſadours, and the Abbot of Ebera, had not intreated for him. When they came vnto Baſill, they were honourably receiued wyth wine and fiſh. They tarried there fiue daies and a halfe. The tenth day of October, they came vnto the Synode, which was aſſembled at the Friers Auguſtines.

These Ambaſſadours, when as they were returned home with the Chartour of ẏ Synode, and declared thoſe things which they had ſeene, and that the matter was earneſtly handled without fraud or diſceipt: there were Ambaſſadours choſen to be ſent vnto the Councell, both for the kingdome of Boheme, and the Marqueſdome of Morauia, which comming vnto Tuſca, were brought from thence, with xxxij. horſe, & diuers noble men, vnto Chambia. From thẽce they came to Swenkendorph, and ſo vnto Noremberg, where as beſide their entertainement of wine & fiſh, xxij. horſemen accompanied thẽ vnto Vlmes: from thence, they of Vlmes brought thẽ vnto Biberacke, and Sulgotia: there Iames Tunches a Knight receiuing them, brought them to Stockacum, and from thence the bands of the Duke of Bauaria brought thẽ vnto Schafhuſe. There they taking ſhip the fourth day of Ianuary, came vnto Baſill the ix. day of the ſame moneth. What were the names of theſe Ambaſſadours of the Bohemians, which were brought vp with 300. horſe, and how they were receiued at Baſill, mention is made before, pag. 675. When as they came vnto the Synode, Cardinall Iulian made an Oration, that whatſoeuer was in any place in doubt, the ſame ought to be determined by the authority of the Councell, for ſomuch as all men are bounde to ſubmit themſelues to the iudgement of ẏ holy Church, which the Generall Councell doth repreſent. Which Oration was not allowed of all the Bohemians.

Then Rochezanus made an Oration, requiring to haue a day appointed whẽ they ſhould be heard, which was appointed the xvj. day of the ſame moneth. Vpõ which day, Iohn Rochezanus hauing made his preface, begã to propound ẏ firſt Article touching the Communion to be miniſtred vnder both kindes, and diſputed vpon the ſame by the ſpace of three daies alwaies before noone. Then Venceſlaus the Thaborite diſputed vpõ the ſecond article, touching the correctiõ and puniſhing of ſin, by the ſpace of ij. daies. After whome Vldaricus prieſt of ẏ Orphanes propounded & diſputed vpon the third Article by ẏ ſpace of ij. dayes, touching the free preaching of the worde of God.

The firſt article of the Bohemians, by the firſt Ambaſſ.

The ſecond article of the Bohe. by the ſecõd Ambaſſ.

The third article of the Bohe. by the third Ambaſſadour.

Laſt of all, Peter Paine, an Engliſh man, diſputed iij daies vpõ ẏ fourth article touching ẏ ciuill dominion of ẏ Clergy, and afterward gaue copies of their diſputations in writing vnto ẏ Councell, with hartie thanks that they were heard. The three laſt did ſomewhat inuey againſt the Councell, Commending Iohn Hus & Iohn Wickliffe for their doctrine. Whereupon Iohn de Raguſio a Diuine, riſing vp, deſired that he might haue leaue to aunſwere in his owne name, to the firſt article of the Bohemians. The Councell conſented thereunto: ſo that by the ſpace of viij. daies in the forenoone, he diſputed therupõ. But before he began to anſwer, Iohn the abbot of Siſtertia made an oration vnto ẏ Bohemians, that they ſhould ſubmit themſelues to the determination of the holy church, which this councell doth repreſent. This matter did not a little offend the Bohemians. Iohn Raguſinus a diuine, after Scholers faſhion: in his anſwere ſpake often of hereſies and of heretickes. Procopius could not ſuffer it, but riſing vp with an angry ſtomacke complained openly to the councel of this iniury. This our countreymã (ſaith he) doth vs great iniury, calling vs oftẽtimes heretickes. Whereunto Raguſinus anſwered: forſomuch as I am your coũtreymã both by toung and nation, I do the more deſire to reduce you againe vnto ẏ Church. He was a Dalmatian borne, and it appeareth that ẏ Dalmatians going into Boheme, tooke their name by their coũtrey which they poſſeſſed. It came almoſt to this point, that through this offence, ẏ Bohemians woulde depart from Baſill, and could ſcarſly be appeaſed. Certaine of the Bohemians would not heare Raguſinus finiſh his diſputation.

The Bohemians diſpleaſed with Raguſinus.

After him, a famous Diuine, one Egidius Carlerius, Deane of ẏ Church of Cambrey, anſwered vnto the ſecond article, by the ſpace of iiij. dayes. To the third article anſwered one Henricus, ſurnamed Frigidum ferrũ iij. daies together. Laſt of all, one Iohannes Polomarius, maiſter of the requeſts of the pallace, aunſwered vnto the fourth article likewiſe by the ſpace of three daies, ſo that the long time which they vſed in diſputations, ſeemed tedious vnto ẏ Bohemians. Notwithſtanding this anſwere, the Bohemians ſtill defended their articles, & ſpecially the firſt, inſomuch as I. Rochezanus did ſtrõgly impugne Raguſinus anſwer by the ſpace of vi. daies. But forſomuch as one diſputation bred another, and it was not perceiued how that by this meanes any concord could be made: the prince William Duke of Bauaria, Protector of the Councell, attempted another remedie, that all diſputations being ſet apart, the matter ſhould be friendly debated.

Egidius Carlerius anſwereth againſt the ſecond Article.

Henr. Coldyron anſwereth to the 3. article

Iohn Pollomarius anſwereth to the 4. article.

There were certain appointed on either part to intreate vpõ the concord: who comming together the eleuenth day of March, thoſe which were appointed for the Councell, were demanded to ſay their mindes. It ſeemeth good, ſaid they, if theſe men would be vnited vnto vs, & be made one body with vs, that this body might then accord, declare and determine all maner of diuerſities of opinions and ſects, what is to be beleeued or done in them.

Certayne choſen on both ſides to determine the matter.

The Bohemians, when they had a while pauſed, ſayd: this way ſeemed not apt inough, except firſt of all, the foure articles were exactly diſcuſſed, ſo that either we ſhould agree with them, or they with vs, for otherwiſe it woulde be but a friuolous matter, if they now being vnited againe, diſagree in the deciding of the articles. Here aunſwere was made to the Bohemians, that if they were rightly vnited, and the ayde of the holy Ghoſt called for, they ſhould not erre in the deciding of the matter, forſomuch as euery Chriſtian ought to beleeue that determination: which if they woulde do, it would breede a moſt firme & ſtrong concord and amity on either part. But this anſwer ſatiſfied them not, in ſo much the other three roſe vp, and diſputed againſt the anſwers which were geuen. At that time Cardinall Iulian Preſident of the Councell, made this oration vnto the Bohemian Ambaſſadours.

This ſacred Synode, ſayth he, hath now by the ſpace of ten daies, patiently heard ẏ propoſitions of your foure articles, The oration of Cardinal Iulian.

articles, and afterward he annexed: you haue propounded ſaith he, four articles, but we vnderſtand that beſide theſe foure, you haue many other ſtrange doctrines, wherein ye diſſent from vs. Wherefore it is neceſſary, if that a perfect vnity and fraternity ſhall follow betweene vs, that al theſe things be declared in the councell, to the end that by the grace of the holy Ghoſt, which is the author of peace and truth, due prouiſion may be made therein. For wee haue not gathered theſe things of light coniectures, but haue heard them of credible perſons, and partly heere are ſome preſent, which haue ſeene them with their owne eies in Boheme, and partly we do gather it by our owne report: for maiſter Nicholas, which was the ſecond that did propound, amongſt other things alledged, that Iohn Wickliffe was an Euangelicall Doctor. If ye beleeue him to be a true Doctor, it followeth that you muſt repute his works as authentike: If ye do not ſo thinke, it is reaſon that it ſhould be opened vnto vs.

Nicolas the 2. propounder, charged by the Cardinall, for the commẽding of Ioh. Wickliffe.

Wherefore we deſire you, that you will certifie vs vpon theſe and certaine other pointes, what you do beleue, or what credite you do giue vnto them. But we do not require that you ſhould now declare your reaſons, but it ſhall ſatiſfie vs, if you will anſwere vnto euery article by this word. Credimus aut non credimus: that is, we beleeue or beleeue not. Which if you will do (as we truſt you will) then we ſhall manifeſtly perceiue that you deſire that wee ſhould conceiue a good eſtimation of you. If there be any thing, whereof you would be certified by vs, aſke it boldly, and we will giue you an anſwere out of hand: For we are ready according to the doctrine of S. Peter, to render accompt vnto euery man which ſhall require it, touching the faith which we hold. Heereunto the Bohemian Ambaſſadours aunſwered in few words, that they came only to propound thoſe four articles, not in their owne name, but in the name of the whole kingdome of Boheme, and ſpeake no more. Wherupon, William the noble protectour of the councell, calling vnto him four men on either part, intreated touching the pacifieng of the matter, by whoſe aduice, the Coũcell decreed to ſend a famous Ambaſſade, with ỹ Bohemian Ambaſſadors vnto Prage, wheras the people ſhould aſſemble vpõ Sonday. But they would not receiue theſe conditions of peace, which were offred, but made haſt to depart. Whereupon, the foureteene day of Aprill, there was ten choſen out of the councell, to go with the Bohemian Ambaſſadours vnto Prage.

A prudent anſwere of the Bohemians to the Cardinall Iulian.

The Ambaſſadours of the Bohemians return without agreement.

It were to long here to declare what honour was done vnto theſe Ambaſſadours, all the way in theyr iourney, and ſpecially when they came vnto Boheme by the Citizens of Prage, when as a great number of Bohemians were aſſembled at Prage at the day appointed, both of the Cleargy, Nobility and common people.

The cõming of the Legates to Prage.

Ioh. Rochezanus ſpeaketh.

After the comming of thoſe Ambaſſadours, much contention begã to riſe betwene the parties. Firſt begã Ioh. Rochezanus: who ſpeaking in the publike perſon of the communaltie, laboured to commend and prefer the iiij. verities of the Bohemians before propounded: charging alſo the Prelates and Prieſts for their ſlandrous obtrectations, and vndeſerued contumelies, wherwith they did infame ỹ noble kingdome of Boheme, complaining alſo that they would not receiue thoſe chriſtian verities, left & allowed by their king Wenceſlaus, now departed. Wherefore he required thẽ in the behalfe of ỹ whole nation, that they would leaue off hereafter to oppreſſe thẽ in ſuch ſort, that they would reſtore to thẽ againe their Ioſephes veſture, that is, the ornament of their good fame and name, whereof their brethren, their enimies had ſpoyled them, &c.

Ex Cochleo, hiſt. lib. 7.

Polomas anſwereth to the Bohemians.

To this Polomar maketh aunſwere againe, wyth a long and curious oration, exhorting them to peace and vnitie of the Church, which if they woulde embrace, all other obſtacles and impediments (ſaid he) ſhoulde be ſoone remoued, promiſing alſo that this their veſture of honor and fame, ſhould be amply reſtored again: and afterward, if there were any doubtfull matters, they might & ſhoulde be the better diſcuſſed.

The Bohemians reply againe to Polomar.

But all this pleaſed not the Bohemians, vnleſſe they might firſt haue a declaration of their four articles, which if they might obteine, they promiſed then to embrace peace and concord, which peace (ſaid they) began firſt to be broken by themſelues, in that the Councell of Conſtance by their vniuſt condemnation, burned Iohn Hus, and Hierome of Prage, and alſo by their cruel Buls and cenſures, raiſed vp firſt excommunication, then warre againſt the whole kingdome of Boheme.

Heereunto Polomar reclaiming againe, began to aduance and magnifie the honor and dignity of general coũcels. To conclude, as much as the ſayde Polomar did extoll ỹ authoritie of the Councels, ſo much did the anſwere of the Bohemians extenuate the ſame: ſaying that the later Councels whiche are not expreſſed in the law of God, haue erred, & might erre, not onely in faith, but alſo in maners. For that which hath chaunced to the greene wood, may alſo chaũce vnto the dry. But of other, the moſt ſtrõg pillers of the militant Churche, the Apoſtles I meane: ſeeme all to haue erred, and the Catholicke faith to haue remained three dayes ſound & incorrupt onely in the virgin Mary. No Chriſtian man therefore ought to be compelled to ſtãd to the determination of the Pope or the Coũcell, except it be in that, whiche is plainely expreſſed in the law of God. For it is euident, that all the generall Councels whiche haue bene of long tyme, haue reformed very few thinges as touching the faith, peace, and maners of the Churche: but haue alwayes both in their life and decrees, notoriouſly ſwarued, and haue not eſtabliſhed them ſelues vpon the foundatiõ, which is Chriſt. Wherfore the ſayd Bohemians proteſted that they would not ſimply & plainly (God being their good Lord) yeld themſelues to their doctrine, nor to ſuch raſh and haſty decrees: leaſt thorough that their haſty and vncircumſpect ſubmiſſion, they ſhould binde their faith and life, cõtrary to the wholeſome and ſound doctrine of our Lord Chriſt Ieſus. In ſumme, in no caſe they would enter into any agreement of peace, except their foure Articles, which they counted for Euangelicall verities, were firſt accepted and approued. Which being obtained (ſayd they) if they would condeſcend with them in the veritie of the Goſpell, ſo would they ioyne together, & be made one with them in the Lord. &c. Ex Cochleo Hiſt. Lib. 7.

Polomar extolleth the Councelles.

Generall councelles may erre and haue erred.

Ex Cochleo hiſt. lib. 7.

The Ambaſſadours of the councel and the Bohemians, could not agree.

Whẽ the Ambaſſadours ſaw the matter would not otherwiſe be brought to paſſe, they required to haue thoſe Articles deliuered vnto them in a certaine forme, whiche they ſent vnto the Councell by three Bohemian Ambaſſadours.

A declaration of 3. articles promiſed to the Bohemians by the Councell.

Afterward the Councell ſent a declaration into Boheme, to be publiſhed vnto the people, in the commõ aſſemblies of the kingdome, by the Ambaſſadours, which were commaunded to report vnto the Bohemians, in the name of the Councell, that if they would receiue the declaration of thoſe three Articles, and the vnitie of the Church, there ſhould be a meane founde whereby the matter touching the fourth Article, of the Communiõ vnder both kindes, ſhould be paſſed with peace and quietneſſe.

They propounded in Prage, in an open aſſembly of the Nobles and commons, the declarations of the three Articles in forme folowing.

A declaration of the Councell to the Bohemians, concernyng the firſt 3. articles.

The 2. propoſition propounded by the Bohemians, with the declaration from the Councell.

For ſomuch as touching the doctrine of the veritie, we ought ſo to proceede ſoberly & warely, that the truth may be declared, with wordes being ſo orderly conceiued & vttered, that there be no offence geuẽ to any mã, whereby he ſhould fall or take occaſion of errour, & (to vſe the wordes of Iſidore) that nothing by obſcuritie bee left doubtfull: whereas you haue propounded touching the inhibition & correction of ſinnes, in theſe wordes: all mortall ſinnes, & ſpecially open offences, ought to be rooted out, puniſhed, & inhibited, by them whoſe dutie it is ſo to do, reaſonably & according to the law of God: here is to be marked and vnderſtand, that this word (whoſe duty it is) is too generall, and may be an offence: & according to the meaning of the Scripture, we ought not to lay any ſtombling ſtocke before the blinde, and the diches are to be cloſed vp, that our neighbours Oxe do not fall therein: all occaſion of offence is to be takẽ away. Therfore we ſay that according to the meaning of the holy Scripture, and the doctrine of the holy Doctours, it is thus vniuerſally to be holden: that all mortall ſinnes, ſpecially publicke offences, are to be rooted out, corrected and inhibited, as reaſonably as may be, according to the law of God, & the inſtitutiõs of the fathers. The power to puniſh theſe offenders, doth not pertaine vnto any priuate perſon, but onely vnto them which haue iuriſdiction of the law ouer them, the diſtinction of law & iuſtice, being orderly obſerued.

Puniſhing of publicke offences how and by whom.

Note here the popes addition.

The 3. article of the Bohemians with the declaration from the councell.

Liberty of preaching, how farre and to whom it extendeth.

As touching the preaching of the word of God, which Article you haue alledged in this forme, that the word of God ſhould be freely and faithfully preached by the fit and apt miniſters of the Lord: leaſt by this word (freely) occaſion may be taken of diſordred libertie, which (as you haue often ſaid ye do not meane) the circumſtaunce therof is to be vnderſtand: and we ſay, that (according to the meaning of the holy Scripture, and doctrine of the holy Fathers) it is thus vniuerſally to be beleued: that the word of God ought freely, but not euery where, but faithfully & orderly, to be preached by the Prieſts and Leuites of the Lord, beyng allowed and ſent by their ſuperiours, vnto whom that office apperteineth, the authoritie of the Byſhop alwayes reſerued, who is the prouider of all thynges according to the inſtitution of the holy fathers.

dyng

The 4. article of the Bohemians with the declaration from the Councell.

As concerning the laſt Article expreſſed vnder theſe wordes: it is not lawfull for the Chriſtian Cleargy, in the time of yͤ law of grace, to haue dominion ouer temporall goodes: we remẽber that in the ſolemne diſputation holden in yͤ ſacred Councell, he which was appointed by yͤ Coũcell to diſpute, propounded two concluſions in this ſorte.

Temporal poſſeſſions in the clergie mens handes.

Firſt, that ſuch of the Cleargy as were not religious, and had not bound thẽſelues thereunto by a vow, might lawfully haue and poſſeſſe any temporall goodes, as the inheritance of his father or any other, if it be left vnto him, or any other goodes iuſtly gotten by meanes of any gift or other lawfull contract, or elſe ſome lawfull arte.

The papiſts ſtãd hard for their temporal Lordſhips.

The ſecond concluſion: The church may lawfully haue and poſſeſſe temporall goodes, moueable and vnmoueable, houſes, landes, townes, and villages, caſtles and Cities, and in thẽ haue a priuate and ciuill dominion. Your Ambaſſadour which diſputed againſt him, graunted thoſe cõcluſions, ſaieng that they did not impugne the ſence of his Article, being well vnderſtand, forſomuch as he vnderſtandeth his Article, of ciuill dominion formally meant: whereby, and alſo by other things, it may be vnderſtand, that thoſe wordes, to haue ſecular dominion expreſſed in the foreſaid Article, ſeemeth to be referred to ſome ſpeciall maner or kind of dominiõ. But forſomuch as the doctrine of the Church is not to be intreated vpon by any ambiguous or doubtfull wordes, but fully and plainely: therefore we haue thought good more plainly to expreſſe that, which according to the law of God, and the doctrine of the holy Doctours, is vniuerſally to be beleeued: that is to ſay, the two aforeſayde concluſions to be true. And alſo, that the Cleargy ought faithfully to diſtribute the goodes of the Church, whoſe adminiſtratours they are, according to the decrees of the holy fathers: and that the vſurpation of the adminiſtration of the Church goodes, done by any other then by them, vnto whome the adminiſtration is Canonically committed, can not be without gilt of ſacrilege.

Thus the ſacred Councell (ſayd they) hath diligently gone about according to the verity of the Goſpell, all ambiguitie ſet apart, to expounde the true ſence of the three foreſayd Articles. Wherefore, if there do yet remaine any doubt: according to the information which we haue receiued in the ſacred Councell, we are ready by Gods helpe (who is the principall veritie) to declare the truth vnto you: If ye do receiue and embrace the declaration of the ſayd three Articles, which is grounded vpon the veritie of the holy Scripture, as you are bound, and will effectually haue a pure, ſimple, and perfect vnitie, touching the libertie of the communion vnder both kindes, which you deſire and require, which alſo you can not lawfully haue, without the licence of holy Church: we haue authoritie from the generall Councell, by certaine meanes, to intreate and conclude with you, truſting that you will ſhew your ſelues as you will continue.

The Bohemians take a deliberatiõ of the fourth article.

Theſe things thus declared, after the Bohemians had taken deliberation, they ſaid that they would giue no anſwere vnto the premiſſes, before they vnderſtode what ſhould be offered them as touching the Communion. Wherefore, it ſhall be neceſſary to declare the matter, as it was written in forme following.

A declaration of the councel touching the fourth article of the communion.

In the name of God and our ſauiour Ieſus Chriſt, vpon the Sacrament of whoſe moſt bleſſed laſt ſupper we ſhall intreate, that he which hath inſtituted this moſt bleſſed Sacrament of vnitie & peace, will vouchſafe to worke this effect in vs, to make vs that we may be one in the ſaide Lord Ieſu our head, and that he will ſubuert all the ſubtilties of the deuill, which through his enuious craftines, hath made the Sacrament of peace and vnitie, an occaſion of warre and diſcorde, that whileſt Chriſtians do contend touching the maner of communicating, they bee not depriued of the fruite of the communion. Whereupon S. Auguſtin in his Sermon vpon infants, in the decrees De conſ. diſtinct. 2. Quia paſſus, ſaith thus: So the Lord Ieſu Chriſt certified vs and willed, that we ſhoulde appertaine vnto him, and conſecrated the miſtery of our peace and vnitie vpon the table. He that receiueth the miſtery of vnity, and doth not keepe the bond of peace, doth not receiue a miſtery for himſelfe, but a teſtimonie againſt himſelfe. This we thought good aboue all things to be premiſed, that the generall cuſtome of the Church, which your fathers and you alſo in times paſt haue obſerued, hath a long time had and ſtill vſeth, that they which do not conſecrate, communicate only vnder the kind of bread. Which cuſtome beeing lawfully brought in by the Churche and holy fathers, and now a long time obſerued, it is not lawfull to reiect, or to change at your will and pleaſure, without the authority of the Church. Therefore to change the cuſtome of the Churche, and to take in hand to communicate vnto the people vnder both kindes, without the authority of holy Church, is altogether vnlawfull. For holy Church vpon reaſonable occaſions, may graunt libertie to communicate vnto the people vnder both kindes. And euery communion which, beeing attempted without the authority and licence of the Church, ſhould be vnlawfull when it is done with the authority of holy Church, ſhall be lawfull, if other things let it not: becauſe (as the Apoſtle ſaith) he that eateth and drinketh vnworthely, eateth and drinketh his owne damnation.

Conſecrat. diſt. 2 quia paſſus.

This is to ſet vp the church aboue the ſcripture.

The holie communion requireth amendment of lyfe.

Whereupon Saint Iſidore in the ſecond diſtinct. vpon the conſecration, writeth thus: They which liue wickedly and ceaſe not dayly to communicate in the Church, thinking thereby to be cleanſed, let them learne that it doth nothing at all profite them to the cleanſing of their ſins. And S. Auguſtine in the ſame diſtinctiõ ſaith, holy things may hurt the euil, for vnto the good they are ſaluation, but vnto the euill damnation. There are beſides this, many other authorities. The Apoſtle Iudas was amongſt thẽ which did firſt communicate, but forſomuch as he receiued vnworthely, hauing that ſinne of treaſon in his hart, it did profit him nothing, but the deuill by and by exerciſed more the power and authority ouer him. This is declared by a great reaſon: which of you is it, that if you ſhoulde receiue your Lorde into your houſe, woulde not with all diligence and care, ſtudy to make cleane and adorne his houſe, that he may receiue the Lord honeſtly? much more he that ſhall receiue his Lorde and Sauiour into the houſe of his ſoule, ought diligently to make cleane and decke his ſoule, to cleanſe it by the Sacrament of penance, with ſorrow and contrition of hart, humbly, purely, and truely confeſſing his ſinnes, and receiuing due ſatiſfaction and penance, to adorne and decke the ſame with the purple or rich aray of deuotion, that the hart being ſo purged and adorned with feruent deſire, he may come to that moſt holy Sacrament, whereby God reconcileth all the world vnto him.

Holy things nothing profit the wicked.

The reuerẽt receiuing of the ſacraments.

Wherfore, the moſt ſacred Synode admoniſheth, exhorteth, and commandeth, that all Prieſts ſhoulde diligently exhort & admoniſh the people, and that they ſhould vſe all their care & indeuor, that no man come to that moſt bleſſed ſacramẽt, except he be duely prepared with great reuerence & deuotion, leaſt that which is receiued for the ſaluation of the ſoule, redounde to the condemnation, through the vnworthy receiuing thereof.

Moreouer, Doctours do ſay, that the cuſtome of communicating vnto the people, only vnder yͤ kinde of bread, was reaſonably introduced by yͤ Church & holy fathers, for reaſonable cauſes, ſpecially for yͤ auoiding of ij. perils: of errour and vnreuerẽce. Of errour, as to think yͭ the one part of Chriſtes body were in yͤ bread, & the other parte in the cup, which were a great errour. Of vnreuerence, for ſo much as many things may happen, as wel on the part of yͤ miniſter, as on the part of the receiuer: As it is ſaid that it happened whẽ as a certaine Prieſt, carieng the Sacrament of the cup vnto a ſicke man, whẽ he ſhould haue miniſtred, he found nothing in the cup, beeing all ſpilt by the way, with many other ſuch like chaunces. We haue heard moreouer that it hath often hapned, that the Sacrament conſecrate in the cup, hath not bin ſufficiẽt for the number of communicants, whereby a new conſecration muſt bee made, which is not agreeable to the doctrine of the holy fathers, and alſo yͭ oftentimes they do miniſter wine vncõſecrate for conſecrate wine, which is a great perill. By this meanes then it ſhall be brought to paſſe, that if you will effectually receiue the vnity & peace of the Church, in all other things beſides the vſe of the Communion vnder both kindes, cõforming your ſelues to the faith & order of the vniuerſall Church, you yͭ haue that vſe and cuſtome, ſhall cõmunicate ſtil by the authority of the Church vnder both kindes, and this Article ſhall be diſcuſſed fully in the ſacred Councell, where you ſhall ſee what, as touchyng this Article, is to be holden as an vniuerſall veritie, and is to be done for the profite and ſaluation of the Chriſtian people, & all things being thus throughly handled, then if you perſeuere in your deſire, & that your Ambaſſadors do require it, the ſacred Councell will grant licence in the Lorde, vnto your miniſters, to cõmunicate vnto yͤ people vnder both kindes: that is to ſay, to ſuch as be of lawfull yeares & diſcretiõ, and ſhall reuerently & deuoutly require the ſame, this alwaies obſerued, that the miniſters ſhall ſay vnto thoſe which ſhall communicate, that they ought firmely to beleeue not the fleſh only to be conteined vnder the forme of bread, and the bloud only vnder the wine, but vnder each kinde to be whole and perfect Chriſt.

Receiuing vnder one kinde, for auoiding two perils.

Error grounded vpon errour.

Cauſes why to miniſter vnder one kinde.

Receiuing in both kindes permitted to the Bohemians.

The condition annexed.

Thus hetherto we haue declared the decree of yͤ Councell, Doubtes or queſtions of the Bohemians.

Aunſwere.

cell. As touching the other doubts & queſtiõs which were afterward moued by the maiſters & Prelates of Boheme, the Ambaſſadours of the Councell anſwered thus.

Permiſsion of both kindes graunted to the Bohemians, not of ſufferance, but by full authoritie.

Puniſhing of offences conſidered.

How and by whom offēders ought to be puniſhed.

Firſt they ſayd, that it was not the meaning of the ſacred Councell, to ſuffer yͤ Communion vnder both kindes by toleration, or as the libell of diuorſemēt was permitted to the Iewes: for ſo much as the Councell intending euen to open the bowels of motherly charity and pity, vnto the Bohemians and Morauians, doth not meane to ſuffer it with ſuch kinde of ſufferance, which ſhoulde not exclude ſinne, but ſo to grant it, that by the authoritie of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, and of his true ſpouſe the Church, it may be lawfull, profitable & healthfull vnto thoſe which worthely receiue the ſame. Alſo, as touching that which was ſpoken by the ſaid Bohemians of the puniſhing of offences, that it is in Scriptures, how that God oftētimes ſtirreth vp the harts of priuate perſons, to the correction & puniſhing of ſinnes, and ſo it ſhould ſeeme lawfull vnto the inferiours to correct and puniſh their ſuperiours: they anſwered, alledging the text of S. Auguſtin in the xxiij. decree: He that ſtriketh wicked men in that they are wicked, & hath cauſe of death againſt them, is the miniſter of God: but he which without any publike adminiſtratiõ or office murdereth or maimeth any wicked theefe, ſacrilegious, adulterous or periured perſon, or any other offender, ſhall be iudged as an homicide, and ſo much yͤ more ſharply, in that he feared not to abuſe & vſurpe the power not graunted him of God: and truly, this City woulde take it much more greuouſly, if any priuate man ſhould attempt to puniſh an offēder, & ſet vp a gallowes in yͤ ſtreate, and there hang him, then if one man ſhould kill another in brawle or quarell. They alledged alſo other textes of S. Ambroſe & S. Hierome agreeable to yͤ ſame. They ſaid that no mā doubteth yͭ the law of God is duly & holily appointed, and therein is ſimply writtē, thou ſhalt not ſteale. And notwithſtanding by the commandement of God the childrē of Iſraell caried away the goods of the Egyptians, which they had borowed of thē. Alſo in yͤ ſame law it is plainely writtē, thou ſhalt do no murther. Wherupon S. Auſten in his firſt booke De Ciuitate Dei, prooueth that it is not lawful for any mā to kill himſelfe: and whē as he maketh example of Sampſon, he anſwereth with theſe words: when as God commandeth & doth affirme himſelfe to command without any doubt, who is he that will call obedience ſinne? or who will accuſe the obedience to God?

To doe that God commaundeth is obedience, and no ſin, though it be extraordinary.

The Iſraelites dyd ſteale from the Egyptians without ſinne.

Sampſon killed himſelfe without ſinne.

Here in this propoſition, you haue the words of S. Auſten for an anſwer. But let euery man well foreſee, if God do commaund, or that he do intimate the commandemēt without any circumſtances, and let him proue the ſpirites whether they be of God. But in ſuche caſes there are no lawes to be geuen, neither are they much to be talked of, for therby there ſhould eaſely occaſiõ riſe to make ſeditiõ, & for yͤ inferiours to riſe againſt the ſuperiours. For whē any man had ſtollen any thing, or killed any mā: he would ſay that he was moued thereunto by the ſpirite of God: but without manifeſt proofe therof, he ſhould be puniſhed.

Of extraordinary commaundementes, no generall lawes to be made.

Obiection.

Aunſwere.

How the laitie hath power ouer the clergie, and wherin.

The Pope wil be iudged by his own law.

Againe they ſayd that there were certaine caſes wherein the Laity had power ouer the Clergy. It was anſwered, that there were certaine caſes in the law, wherein the Laity hath power ouer the Cleargy, and oftentimes ouer Cardinals. For if the Pope being dead, the Cardinals would not enter yͤ Cõclaue to elect a new Pope, the king, prince, or other Lord or ſecular power may compel them: but in theſe caſes he is now no priuate perſon, but vſeth his iuriſdiction by the authority of the law. The like is to be vnderſtand of all other caſes expreſſed in the law.

Obiection.

They ſaid further, that no common law hath any right or iuſtice, except Gods law do allow the ſame.

Aunſwere.

It was anſwered that no common law hath right or iuſtice, if it be againſt the law of God, for becauſe yͤ law of God is the rule of all other lawes. But there is great cūning and knowledge in applieng the rule to that which is made by the rule, for oftentimes, it ſeemeth that there is diuerſitie in the thing made by the rule, when there is none in deede: but the default is in the applieng, becauſe the rule is not duely applied to the thing made by it.

Obiection.

As touching the Article of preaching the word of God, it was moued that oftentimes ſome Prelates, thorough their owne enuie and malice, without any reaſonable cauſe, do inhibite a good and meete Preacher that preacheth Catholickely and well.

Aunſwere.

Abuſe of prelates in inhibiting true preachers.

Remedie of appeale.

Aunſwer was made, how that they vnderſtood well inough that the abuſe of certaine Prelates, which did inordinately behaue themſelues, gaue a great occaſion of thoſe troubles. Alſo that they neuer heard of any ſuch cõplaints in thoſe parties, but that yͤ Prelates do fauour good preachers, and ſtirre them vp to preach, by intreaty, fauour, & promotiõ. In al ſuch caſes, there are remedies already prouided by the law: for when any mā is ſo prohibited to vſe his right, he hath remedy to appeale: and if he do truſt his appeale to be iuſt, he may vſe his right, all violēce both of the ſpirituall and ſecular power ſet apart, for the end of the matter ſhall declare if he had iuſt cauſe to appeale. Then ſhalbe declared that the ſuperiour hath done euill in prohibiting, & the pleantiue iuſtly in doyng, and the ſuperiour for his vniuſt prohibition ſhalbe puniſhed. But if he be iuſtly prohibited, and that through his temeritie, he do cõtemne the iuſt cõmaundement of his ſuperiour, he is worthy to be puniſhed with condigne puniſhment.

Actes of ſecular dominion to be exerciſed of the clergie, after a double reſpecte, Vel per ſe, Vel per alium.

Where it was moued cõcerning the third Article, whether it were lawfull for the Eccleſiaſticall Prelates to exerciſe in their proper perſon, the actes of ſecular dominiõ, hereunto it was aunſwered, that if by this word actes of ſecular dominion are vnderſtand actes whiche a ſecular Lord may do or exerciſe, then is it to be ſayd, that a Prelate may lawfully exerciſe ſome ſuch actes in his proper perſon, as to ſell, to paune or pledge, to infeofe by maner and forme ordeined by law: but there are ſome actes, which it is not lawfull for them to exerciſe in their proper perſon, but ought to haue afterward, a Vicegerent or Proctor, to doe the ſame: whereupon there is prohition made in the law in the Rubrike, Ne clerus vel Monachus ſecularibus negotijs ſe immiſceat, & in alijs rebus.

Obiection.

It was alſo moued, whether that coactiue power, whiche ought to be exerciſed by a Steward. &c. be in the handes of an Eccleſiaſticall Prelate.

Aunſwere.

Coactiue power whether it belongeth to the clergie, and how.

Whereunto Iohn Polomair aūſwered, that this queſtion preſuppoſeth an other: wherof there are diuers opinions amõgeſt the Doctours, in whoſe power the dominion of the Church ſhould be: and furthermore, whether the actiõs be in the perſon of the tutor or proctor, or if they be not in their perſon, notwithſtandyng by the conſtitutiõ of any actor or proctor (whoſe exerciſing of thoſe actions do geue authoritie vnto the actor or proctor) they be: with other difficulties, whereof it is not needefull to ſpeake at this preſent. But for ſomuch as he was vrged to ſay his opinion: he ſayd, that to ſuch as had either leyſure or pleaſure in diſputation, & would argue agaynſt him, he would be cõtēted to geue the choiſe to take which part he would, but his opinion was rather that the dominion of Church matters ſhould bee in the power of Chriſt: and the Prelates, with the other Clergy, are but Canonicall adminiſtratours in maner of tutors: but they haue more power & adminiſtration then tutors, and by conſtitutyng a Steward or Vicegerent. &c. Their conſtitution beyng duely made, the Steward or Vicegerent hath the ſame coactiue power and exerciſe of iuriſdiction.

Alſo as touching the fourth Article, for the declaration of the firſt concluſion, it is agreed that theſe wordes, Iuſte requiſita. i. iuſtly gotten, alledged, therein, determine all thynges conteined in the ſame.

The goods of the church in whoſe poſſeſsion they be properly.

12. q. 1 cap. expedit.

Alſo as touchyng the ſecond concluſion, where as the ſacred Canons and holy Doctours ſpeake thus: the goods of the Church, the ſubſtaunce of the Church, and the poſſeſſions of the Church, and diuers other opinions there be amongeſt the Doctours, in whoſe power the rule thereof ſhould be, as it is noted in the Gloſe. Cap. expedit. xij. quæſt. i. they do not intend to conſtraine any man to any of thoſe opinions, neither to exclude any of them, but that euery man ſhould haue libertie, probably to mainteine which of them he thinketh beſt.

The clergie be adminiſtratours, not Lordes of the temporalties of the Church.

The agreement betweene the Bohemians and the Councell.

Anno. 1438.

Moreouer, the Bohemians ſayd, that they did beleue that the Clergy are but adminiſtratours of the tēporalties of the Church, and not Lordes thereof, accordyng to the maner of ſpeaking of the Scriptures, holy Doctours, and Canons. Alſo the Bohemians ſayd, that in all occaſions which ſhall hereafter riſe, they would wholy ſtand to the determination of the iudge, agreed vpon in Egra, with one conſent. In this maner did the Ambaſſadours make aunſwere vnto the Bohemians. At the laſt, after much communication had to and fro, a concorde and vnitie was concluded and confirmed by ſetting to their handes. The Bohemians promiſed to receiue the peace and vnitie of the Church, and the declaratiõ of the three Articles. This was done in the yeare of our Lord. 1438. About the feaſt of S. Martin, it was afterward agreed both by the Ambaſſadours of that Councel, and of Boheme, that whatſoeuer remayned, ſhould be determined & agreed vpõ: firſt at Ratiſbona: afterward at Bruna in the Dioces of Olymutes: then at Alba in Hungary, before the Emperour Sigiſmūd, but the matter could not be ended in no place.

At the laſt the concorde was confirmed by writyng with their ſeales at Inglauia, a Citie of Morauia, the fift day of Iuly in the preſence of the Emperour.

¶ Certaine petitions, which the Bohemians put vp laſt of all in the ſacred Councell of Baſill.

An. 1438. in the moneth of Nouemb.

Certaine petitions of the Bohemians put vp to the Coũcell. Anno. 1438.

VNto the moſt reuerẽd fathers in Chriſt, and our moſt gracious Lords. we the Ambaſſadors of the kingdom of Boheme, do moſt humbly and hartely require you that for the perpetuall preſeruation of the peace & concord, and for the firme preſeruation of all things conteined in the compoſition, you will vouchſafe of your clemencie, to giue and graunt vnto vs all and ſingular our requeſts, heere vnder written, with effectuall execution of the ſame.

Firſt and aboue all things, we deſire and require you, for the extirpation of diuers diſſentions and cõtrouerſies, which will vndoubtedly folow amongſt our people vpon yͤ diuerſitie of the communion, & for the aboliſhing of infinite euils, which we are not able to expreſſe as we haue conceiued them, that you will gently vouchſafe of your goodnes & liberality, to giue, grant & command, vnto our kingdome of Boheme, & Marqueſdome of Morauia, one vniforme order of the cõmunion vnto all mẽ, vnder both kindes: that is to ſay, vnto yͤ Archb. of Prage, the Byſhop of Luthonus, Olimutz, & other prelates of the kingdome and Marqueſdome, hauing charge of ſoules, & to their vicares, & alſo to their flocks & ſubiects, & that according to thoſe things which are cõteined in yͤ Bull of the Ambaſſadours, & in the cõpoſitions made in the name of the whole Councel, written in the chap. Pro firmitate, where it is thus ſaid, and all other things ſhall be done, which ſhall be meete and neceſſary for the preſeruation of the peace and vnitie. For thys done by your benefite, the whole kingdome ſhall be comforted aboue meaſure, and eſtabliſhed in brotherly loue: whereby an vniforme ſubiection and obedience ſhall be perpetually attributed vnto the holy Church.

The communiõ in both kindes to be generally graunted.

Item, we require and deſire (as before) that for the auoiding of all falſe ſuſpition and doubtfulnes of manie, which ſuppoſe that the ſacred Councell hath graunted the ſaide Communion vnder both kindes vnto vs but for a time, as neither profitable nor wholeſome, but as the libell of diuorcement: that you will vouchſafe, according to this chapter alledged in the compoſitions: Firſt they ſayde, that it was not the entent of the ſacred Councell, &c. wholeſomely and ſpeedely to prouide for our ſafety and your graunt in this behalfe, and with the Bulls of your letters, to confirme that chapter together with the other, perteining to the office of your Ambaſſadours.

Item, we beſeech you (as afore) that for the confirmation of obedience, and for the diſcipline of all the Cleargy, and for the finall defence and obſeruation of all things determined and agreed vpon, and for yͤ good order in ſpiritualties, ye will vouchſafe effectually to prouide for vs a good & lawfull paſtor, Archbiſhops and Biſhops, which ſhall ſeeme vnto vs moſt meete and acceptable for our kingdome, to execute thoſe offices and dueties.

To haue a good and lawfull paſtor, and Biſhop,

Item, we require you (as aforeſaid) that your fatherly reuerẽces will vouchſafe, for yͤ defence of the worthy fame of the kingdome and Marqueſdome, to declare and ſhew our innocencie, in that they haue cõmunicated, do, & hereafter ſhall communicate vnder both kindes: to giue out, ordaine, and direct the letters of the ſacred Councell, in maner and forme moſt apt and meete for ſuch declaration, vnto all Princes, as well ſecular as ſpirituall, Cities and communalties, according to the compoſitions, and as the Lords the Ambaſſadours are bound vnto vs for to do.

Free communiõ vnder both kindes to be permitted to all princes.

Item, we deſire you, that in the diſcuſſing of the matter for the Communion vnder both kindes, and of the commandement thereof giuen vnto all faithfull, yee will not proceed otherwiſe then according to the concordatum agreed vpon in Egra: that is to ſay, according to the law of God, the order of Chriſt, and his Apoſtles, the generall Councels, and the mindes of the holy Doctours, truly grounded vpon the law of God.

Item, we deſire that your fatherly reuerences, conſidering the great affectiõ of our people, will giue vs the deſired libertie to communicate vnto the yonger ſort, the Sacrament of the Supper. For if this vſe of communicating ſhould be taken away, which our kingdome being godly moued by the writings of moſt great and holy Doctours, and brought in by examples, hath receiued as Catholicke, and exerciſed now a long time: verely it ſhoulde raiſe vp an intollerable offence amongſt yͤ people, and their minds would be greeuouſly vexed and troubled.

Item we require you (as before) that for like cauſes your fatherly reuerẽces, would vouchſafe to permit, at the leaſt the Goſpels, Epiſtles, and Creede to be ſong & read in the Church in our vulgare tong, before yͤ people, to moue thẽ vnto deuotion: for in our Slauon language it hath bene vſed of old in the Church, and likewiſe in our kingdome.

The Goſpells & Epiſtles to be read in the vulgare tongue. The ſcriptures read in the Slauons tongue of olde time.

Item, we require you in yͤ name of the ſaide kingdome, and of yͤ famous Vniuerſitie of Prage, that your fatherly reuerences would vouchſafe to ſhew ſuch diligence and care towards the deſired reformation of that Vniuerſitie, that according to the maner and forme of other Vniuerſities reformed by the Church, Prebends and collations of certaine benefices of Cathedrall and Pariſh Churches, may be annexed and incorporate vnto the ſaid Vniuerſitie, that thereby it may be increaſed and preferred.

Incorporations to be graunted to vniuerſities, an vnlawfull requeſt,

Item, we deſire you (as before) as hartily as we may, & alſo (ſauing alwaies your fatherly reuerẽce) require you, and by the former cõpoſitions we moſt inſtãtly admoniſh you, that with your whole minds and endeuours, & with all care & ſtudy, your reuerẽces will watch & ſeeke for that long deſired & moſt neceſſary reformation of the Church & Chriſtian Religion, and effectually labour for the rooting out of all publike euils, as well in the head, as in the members, as you haue often promiſed to do in our kingdome, in the cõpoſitions, & as our fourth Article touching the auoiding of all publicke euils, doth exact and require.

A requeſt for neceſſary reformation & diſcipline.

There were certaine anſweres prouided by the Councel, to theſe petitions of yͤ Bohemiãs, which were not deliuered vnto thẽ, but kept backe, for what purpoſe or intent we knowe not. Wherefore, becauſe we thought them not greatly neceſſary for this place, & alſo to auoid prolixitie, we haue iudged it meet at this preſent to omit them. Thus haue ye heard compendiouſly the chief & principal matters intreated & done in this famous Councell of Baſill. And here (to cõclude withall) we haue thought good to declare vnto you, for yͤ aid & helpe of the ignorant people (whych iudge many things to be of lõger time & continuãce, then in deed they be, & thereupon haue eſtabliſhed a great parte of their opinions) how that, toward the latter end of thys Coũcell, that is to ſay, in the xxxvi. Seſſion of yͤ ſame, holdẽ the xvij. day of September, in yͤ yeare of our Lord 1439. the feaſt of yͤ Conception of our Lady, was ordeined to be holden and celebrate yearely. In like caſe alſo in the xliij. Seſſion of the ſame Councell, holden the firſt day of Iuly, an. 1441. was ordeined the feaſt of the Viſitation of our Lady, to be celebrate and holden yearely in the moneth of Iuly. We haue alſo thought it good, before we do end this ſtory, to annexe hereunto certaine decrees, profitably and wholeſomely ordeined in yͤ ſaid Coũcell, againſt yͤ inordinate geuing of the Eccleſiaſticall benefices and liuings by the Pope, with certaine other conſtitutions alſo, fruitfull for the behalfe and edification of the Church.

The cõception of our Lady brought into the Church. The viſitation of our Lady brought in.

During the time that the generall Councell at Baſill, was ſo diligent and carefull about the reformation of the Church, this one thing ſeemed good vnto them to be proſecuted & folowed with an earneſt care and diligence, that through euery Church, apt and meete miniſters might be appointed, which might ſhine in vertue & knowledge, to the glory of Chriſt, and the healthfull edifieng of yͤ Chriſtian people: whereunto the multitude of expectatiue graces hath bene a great impedimẽt and let, in that they haue bin foũd to haue brought greuous troubles, diuers diſorders, and many dangers vpon the eccleſiaſticall ſtate. For hereby oftentimes, ſcarſely apt or meete miniſters haue bene appointed for the churches, which are neither knowen nor examined: and this expectation of void benefices (as yͤ old lawes do witneſſe) doth geue occaſion to deſire another mans death, which is greatly preiudiciall vnto ſaluation: beſides that, innumerable quarels & contentions are moued amongſt the ſeruants of God: rancour and malice nouriſhed: the ambition and gredy deſire of pluralities, of benefices mainteined: and yͤ riches and ſubſtance of kingdomes and prouinces marueilouſly conſumed. Poore men ſuffer innumerable vexations, by running vnto the court of Rome. They are oftentimes ſpoiled and robbed by the way: troubled & afflicted with diuers plages, and hauing ſpent their patrimony and ſubſtance left them by their parents, they are cõſtrained to liue in extreme pouerty. Many do chalenge benefices, which without any iuſt title (yea ſuch in deed as ought not to haue thẽ) obtaine and get the ſame: ſuch I ſay as haue moſt craft and ſubtiltie to deceiue their neighbour, or haue greateſt ſubſtance to contend in yͤ law. It happeneth oftentimes that vnder the intrication of theſe prerogatiues, antelations, and ſuch other as do aſſociate theſe expectatiue graces, much craft and diſceit is found. Alſo, oftentimes the miniſtery is taken away from yong men, by their ordinary geuers, whiles that by the trouble of thoſe contentions, & diuers diſcourſes, running to & fro by meanes of thoſe graces, they are vexed & troubled, the Eccleſiaſticall order is cõfounded, whiles that euery mans authority and iuriſdiction is not preſerued: & the Biſhops of Rome alſo, by chalenging and taking vpõ them

Vowſons & giftes of benefices before they were voide, debarred by the coũcell: which vowſons here ar called expectatiue graces. Incõueniẽces that riſe by vowſons of benefices.

them too much the office of the inferiours, are wythdrawen from more waighty and fruteful matters, neither doe they diligently attend to the guiding and correction of the inferiors, as the publike vtility doth require. Al which things do bring a great confuſion vnto the clergy, and Eccleſiaſticall ſtate, to the great preiudice and hinderaunce of Gods true worſhip, and publicke ſaluation.

No controuerſies to be brought to Rome beyond 4. daies iourney from thence.

No friuolous appeales to be made to the Pope.

Againſt the ſuperfluous number of errours.

Againſt the popes firſt fruites.

In the ſame Councell alſo diuers other conſtitutions were made, not vnprofitable for reformation, & for remouing of certaine abuſes & diſorders brought in, eſpecially by the B. of Rome, as touching cauſes not to be brought vp and trāſlated to the court of Rome: wherin it was decreed, that no actions nor controuerſies ſhuld be brought from other countries, to be pleaded at Rome, which were beyonde 4. dayes iourney diſtant from the ſayde Courte of Rome, a few principall matters onely excepted. Alſo, that no friuolous appeales ſhould be made to the pope hereafter. It was moreouer in the ſame councell decreed, for the number, age, and condition of the Cardinals, yͤ they ſhuld not excede the number of 24. beſides them that were alredy, and that they ſhould be frely taken out of al countries: and that they ſhould not be of kin to the biſhop of Rome, or to the Cardinals, nor yet be blemiſhed wyth any ſpot or crime. Alſo for Annates or firſt fruites, or halfe fruites, it was there prouided, that no ſuch Annates or confirmation of elections, or collation of benefices, ſhould be paide or reſerued any more to the pope, for the firſt yeres voidance. All which thinges there agreed and concluded by them, were afterward cōfirmed and ratified by the French king, Charles 7. with the full conſent of all his Prelates, in his high court of Parliament in Bitures, & there called Pragmatica Sanctio. An. 1438. whereupon great vtility enſued afterward to the kingdome of Fraunce. All beit in proceſſe of time, diuers Friers there were, whych wrote agaynſte the ſame. Ex lib. Pragin. Sanctionis.

Pragmatica Sanctio per Carolum. 7.

Amongſt many decrees of the ſaide Councell of Baſil, in the 19. Seſſion there was alſo a decree made touchyng the conuerting of Iewes and yong noueſſes in Religion, vnto the Chriſtian faith.

An Acte made for the conuerſion of the Iewes.

Alſo that all Ordinaries ſhould yearely at appoynted times, prouide certaine men wel learned in the holy ſcriptures, in ſuch places where Iewes and other infidels did dwell, to declare to them the truth of the Catholicke faith, that they acknowledging their erreur, might forſake the ſame: vnto the which preaching, the ſaid miniſters ſhould compell them to reſort, and to heare, vnder paine of excluding them from occupying any more in yͤ place: prouided that the ſaid Dioceſanes and preachers ſhould behaue thēſelues towardes thē, mercifully & with all charitie, whereby they might winne them to Chriſt, not onely by the declaring of the veritie, but alſo in exhibiting their offices of humanitie.

An Acte for ſtudying the Hebrue, Latine, and Chaldey.

And to the intēt their preaching might be yͤ more fruitfull, & that the preachers might be the better inſtructed in the tongues, it was alſo in the ſame Councell prouided & cōmaūded, that the conſtitutiō made before in the councell of Vienna for learning the Hebrew, Chaldey, Araby, & Greeke tongue, ſhould by all meanes be obſerued & kept, and ordinary ſtipendes prouided for thē that ſhould teache the ſame tongues.

Againſt prieſtes that kept Concubines.

An other decree morouer in the 20. Seſſion was enacted, yͤ whoſoeuer was knowē or publiquely noted to be a keper of Concubines, ſhould be ſequeſtred from all fruites of his benefices, for the ſpace of 3. monethes, which fruites ſhould be conuerted by the ordinary, to the reparations, or ſome other vtilitie of the Church, & if he did not ſo amend, it was by the Sinode decreed that he ſhould be clearely depoſed from all his benefices.

Furthermore, yͤ ſaid Sinode did greatly inuey againſt them, which hauing the iuriſdiction of the Church, did not ſhame to ſuffer ſuch whoremaiſters for bribes and money, ſtill to continue in their filthines, &c.

By theſe decrees of the Councell aboue ſpecified, it is to be ſeene, what corruptiō had bene thē frequented in the Church of God, through the Byſhop and courte of Rome. For the more expreſſe declaration whereof, we thought it not much impertinent here to inferre the wordes of one Martin Meyre, writing to Aeneas Syluius, touching and noting the ſaide corruptions: the tenour of whoſe epiſtle here enſueth.

An Epiſtle of Martin Meyr to Aeneas Siluius, tranſlated into Engliſhe the latine wherof is extant in the former edition of this booke. Ex Orth. Grat.

Vnto the reuerend father, the Lord Aeneas Cardinal of Sene, Martin Meyr, Chancellor to the biſhop of Mentz, wiſheth health.

I Haue vnderſtand by certaine of my frends letters, that you are created Cardinall. I am glad for your part, that you haue receiued ſo worthy rewardes for your vertues. I reioyce alſo for my owne part, that my frend hath attained vnto ſuch a dignity, wherin he may in time to come, both helpe me and my frends: But this is a griefe vnto me, that you haue hapned vpon thoſe dayes, which ſeme to be troubleſom vnto the Apoſtolike ſea. For there are many complaintes made vnto my Lorde the Archb vpon the Pope, that he wil neither kepe the decrees of the councel of Conſtance, neither of Baſil, neither yet thinketh himſelfe bounde to the couenants of his predeceſſours, and ſeemeth vtterly to contemne our nation, and to ſeeke the vtter ruine thereof. For it is euident that the election of Prelates, is euery where reiected: benefices & dignities, of what ſorte ſoeuer they be, are reſerued for the Cardinals and chiefe notaries: and you your ſelf haue obtained the reſeruation of 3. Prouinces of Germany, vnder ſuche a forme as hath not ben accuſtomed, or heard of. Vowſons or giftes of benefices are graunted without number: yerely ſtipends and half the reuenues are exacted without delay, and it is euident that there is more extorted then is due. The regiment of churches are not committed vnto ſuch as beſt deſerue them, but vnto ſuch as offer moſt mony for them, and new pardons are graunted out daily to ſcrape and gather together monye. Tithes are commaunded to be exacted without the conſent of our Prelates, for the Turkiſh warre, and thoſe matters which were accuſtomed to be debated and determined at home, are now caried vnto the Apoſtolike ſea of Rome. A thouſand waies are inuented and deuiſed, how the ſea of Rome may by ſubtlety and by craft, extort and gette golde and treaſure from vs, euen as it were of the Turkes or Barbarians; whereby our nation, which was ſometime famous and valiant, which by their power and bloud, conquered the Romaine Empire, and was once the Lady and Queene of all the world, nowe being brought vnto pouerty, is made a handmaid, & become tributary, & being nowe in extreme miſery, hath of long time bewailed her cruell fortune and pouerty. But now our nobles being (as it were) wakened out of their ſlepe, haue begon to conſider and deuiſe with themſelues, by what meanes they might withſtand this calamity, and vtterly ſhake of this yoke and bondage, and haue determined with them ſelues to chalenge againe their former liberty. This wil be no ſmal loſſe vnto the court of Rome, if the Princes of Germany bring to paſſe that which they haue deuiſed. Wherfore as much as I do reioyce of your late obtained dignity, ſo much alſo am I moued & greued that theſe things happen in your daies. But peraduenture Gods determination is otherwiſe, & his wil ſhal ſurely take place. You in the meane time be of good chere, and deuiſe according to your wiſedome, by what meanes the vehemencie of theſe floudes may be ſtaied. Thus fare ye well.

The corruption of the Church of Rome detected.

From Haſthaſſenberge, the laſt day of Auguſt.

The authoritie of the councell of Baſill expended.

The epiſtle of the Cardinall Iulian to the Pope, in the commendation of the councell of Baſill.

Concerning the authoritie of this generall councell of Baſill, what is to be eſteemed by the Actes & fruites therof may be vnderſtand of all good men. Neither was it of any man doubted in the firſt beginning, ſo long as the Pope agreed and conſented vnto it, But after the Pope began to draw backe, many other followed, eſpecially of the richer ſort of Prelates, which had any thing to loſe: whereof ſufficiently hath bene ſayde by Arelatenſis the Cardinall before. In the number of thoſe vnconſtant Prelates, beſides many other, was firſte Cardinall Iulian, the firſte collector of this councell, and Vicegerent of the Pope, as by hys feruent and vehement letter written to pope Eugenius in defence of this councel, may well appeare: wherin he moſt earneſtly doth expoſtulate with the foreſaide Pope Eugenius, for ſeeking to diſſolue the Councell, and declareth in the ſame many cauſes, why he ſhoulde rather reioyce, and geue God thankes, for the godly proceedings, and ioyfull agreement betwene the councell and the Bohemians, and ſo exhorteth him wͭ manifolde perſuaſions, to reſort to the councel him ſelfe, & not to ſeeke the diſſolution of the ſame. The copie & tenor of whoſe Epiſtle to the Pope, if any be diſpoſed to peruſe the ſame, we thought heere good to ſette downe to be ſeene.

The copie of an Epiſtle, which Iulian Cardinall of S. Angen, and the Popes ambaſſadour into Germanie, wrote marueilous boldly and frely vnto Eugenius B. of Rome, for that he went about to diſſolue rhe coūcel of Baſil.

Moſt bleſſed father, after the deuout kiſſes of your bleſſed fete.

NOw ſhall the whole worlde vnderſtande and know, whether that your holines haue in you the bowels of fatherly loue & charity, and the zeale of the houſe of God, whether you be ſent to make peace or diſcord, to congregate or diſperſe, or whether you be that good ſhepheard, which geueth hys life for his ſheepe. Beholde the doore beginneth now to be opened, whereby the loſt ſheepe may returne againe vnto their owne folde, nowe is there good hope euen at hand, of the reconciliation of the Bohemians. If that your holineſſe as it is your duety do helpe and further the ſame, you ſhall obtaine greate glory, bothe in heauen and earthe. But if peraduenture, you goe about to lette the ſame (whiche is not to be hoped for at your handes) all menne will reprooue you of impietie. Heauen and earth will conſpire againſte you, all men will forſake you. For how is he to be folowed, wich wyth one worde may reſtore peace and quietnes to the church, and refuſeth to do it? But I cõceiue a better hope in you, how that your holines without any excuſe, wil with your whole hart & mind, fauor this moſt ſacred coũcel, & giue thankes vnto almighty God, this great goodneſſe that this congregatiou hath not departed. Behold the ambaſſadors of this ſacred councell are returned with great ioy and gladnes from Egra, reporting how that thorow the grace of the holy Ghoſt, they haue firmly concluded with the ambaſſadors of the Bohemians, that is to ſay of the Prages, Orphants and Thaborites, amongs whome was alſo preſent the captaines of their ennemies, and ſpecially Procopius. That a ſolempne ambaſſade of all the ſtates of the realme ſhould come vnto the councell of Baſill. After that a ſafeconduite is ſent vnto them by the ſayde councel in fourme conditioned, which ſhall be done with ſpeede, This ſacred congregation is maruellouſly exhilerate and ioyfull. For thoſe our ambaſſadours affirme, that all things were handled with ſuch charitie at Egra, & that they did ſee ſuch things amõgs the Bohemians, that not without cauſe, they doe conceiue great hope of their reconciliation.

Thambaſſadors of the Councell are returned from Egra.

And at the laſt gentlely imbraſing one another, euẽ with teares of gladneſſe, they departed from Egra. The Bohemians requiring our ambaſſadors, that the matter might be ended wyth all expedition. They reporte alſo that manie thinges happened in that Treatie, whyche if any manne hearde, and didde not weepe for ioy, he might well thinke him ſelf to be but ſmally affectioned vnto Chriſt. As for 3 of the 4. articles, they ſeeme not to make any great difficulty vpon. As touching the 4. that is of the communion vnder both kindes, there is good hope that they wil followe the iudgement of the councel. Who is it then that dare councell your holines to perſeuere any lõger in the purpoſe of diſſolution, for if the councell had not ben appoynted at all, for ſo great hope and neceſsity: it ought to haue ben appoynted in this place How worthy praſe and commendation ſhould your holines doe, if that you woulde leaue Italy and all other affaires, and come hether in your owne perſon. Although you ſhoulde neede to be caried in a wagon or litter. The keping & defence of the temporal patrimony of the church, may well be diſpoſed and done by legates and vicares. This is the true patrimonie of the church to winne ſoules. For the church is not a heap of ſtones and walles. Chriſt hath not made you a keper of caſtles & fortes, but a paſtor of ſoules. Therfore you ſhuld do that in your owne perſon, which is moſt neceſſary and acceptable vnto Chriſt, and al other things be your ſubſtitutes. For ſo did the Apoſtles, which to the intẽt they might the more frely intend to the preaching of the word of God, did inſtitute 7. to ſerue the tables, and for the miniſtration of other inferior things. I heare that by the grace of God, your holineſſe doth daily recouer and amend, & if ſo be, as it is ſaid, you do viſit ſome churches on fote, ye may alſo come hether on horſebacke, for you can not go vnto any thing more profitable or cõcordant to your office, then to go vnto that place, whereas innumerable benefits and goodnes may ſpring. Let your holines vnderſtand and conſider wherin Chriſt whoſe vicar you are, and S. Peter whoſe ſucceſſor you are, and the apoſtles and holy biſhops, did exerciſe & occupy themſelues, and as you do ſuccede them in office, ſo ſuccede them in maners. But if peraduenture your holines can not come hither, I doe councell you that for ſo great a benefite, you would ſend the more part of the reuerend Lords Cardinals of the court of Rome, and command al other prelates to come hether, doe not let or hinder them that are willing to come, as it is reported you do, but rather allure them to come hither.

What the church is.

Your holines may beleue me, that only charity mooueth me to councell you in this ſort, be ye not ſeperate from your members, nouriſh your children as the henne doeth her chickens vnder her wings. And if ſo be, that you will doe nothing els, yet ſpeake this only word, Placet. That is to ſay, that it pleaſeth you, that the coũcel of Baſil ſhuld go forward. For a few daies paſt, there came newes hither, for the which your holines ought alltogether to ceaſe from your diſſolution. The reuerend father the Archb. of Lyons, hath wrytten vnto the councell, and vnto me alſo, howe that the Prelates of France, haue aſſembled togither in the city of Beturia, and there after long and exacte examination haue concluded that the councel is lawfully cõgregate in this place. And that it is neceſſary, that it ſhuld be holden and celebrate here at this preſent, and how the Prelates of France ſhuld come vnto it, he alſo directed hither the cauſe which moued them ſo to conclude, the copye whereof I ſuppoſe is ſent vnto your holineſſe by ſome other. Wherupon then doth your holines ſtay? You haue gone about as much as in you lay, by your meſſengers, letters & diuers meanes to draw backe the Prelates, and haue laboured with al your endeuor to diſſolue the councell, yet notwithſtanding as you do ſee, it is increaſed day by day. And the more it is forbidden, the more is all mens minds inflamed to the contrary, is not this then to reſiſt the wil of God? Why do ye prouoke the church to anger? Why do ye ſtirre vp the Chriſtian people? vouchſafe I pray you ſo to doe, that ye may get the loue and fauor of the people & not the hatred for all nations are greatly offended when they heare: theſe your doings. Suffer not your holines to be ſeduced by any man, whych peraduenture ſhall inculcate feare vnto you, whereas there is nothing at all to be doubted, or that doe perſwade you this to be no lawſul councel I know I ſhuld offend your holines if I ſhuld go about to proue the contrary, but it is better that I do offend you a litle in words, and profit you in my deedes, for a Phiſition layeth a burning corriſiue vnto the diſeaſe, and healeth the ſore. For the medicine can not profit, except it be ſharpe and bitter in taſt. Vnder this hope and confidence I will not feare to declare the truth. That it being knowen, your holines may the better prouide both for your ſelfe and the church It dependeth vppon the councell of Conſtance whether this councell be lawfull or not. If that were a true councel, ſo is this alſo. No man ſemeth to dout whether that councel were lawfull, and likewiſe whatſoeuer was there decreed to be lawful, for if any man will ſay, that the decrees of that councel are not of force, he muſt nedes graunt, that the depriuation of Pope Iohn which was done by the force of thoſe decrees to be of no effect. If that depriuation were not of effecte. Neither was the election of Pope Martine of any force, which was done he being yet aliue. If Martin were no true Pope, neither is your holineſſe, which was choſen by the Cardinalles that hee made, wherefore, it ſtandeth no man more vpon to defend the decrees of that coũcel, then your holines, for if any decree of that councel be called into doubt: By like meanes may all the reſt of the decrees be reuoked. And by like meanes, ſhall the decrees of any other councell be of no force and effect, for by like reaſon, as the faith of one councell is weakened, all the reſt ſhal alſo be weakned, according to S. Auguſtins ſaying in the 9. diſtinction capitulo. Si ad ſcripturas, Then ſayeth he, both the faithe and all other ſacraments ſhall be put in doubt, if that there be once any doubt made, of the force and power of any councell lawfully cõgregate. There was a decree made in the councel of Conſtance, intituled frequens. Whereby it was ordained, that the firſt councel after that, ſhould be holden within 5. yeres, and another within 7. yeres after that again. The councel of Conſtance being ended, and the 5. yeres paſſed, the councel of Papia or Sene was holden, after which 7. yeares being alſo run ouer, this councell is begon to be celebrate. To what ende then is it expreſſed in the Bull of the diſſolution, amongeſt other cauſes, that the 7. yeare is already paſt. When as of neceſsitye it ought to be paſſed before the councell can be celebrate. For theſe wordes, from 7. yere or 5. yere, ſignify according to the law, that all partes of time ſhould be paſſed, and the laſt day looked for. Wherefore it behoued that 7. yeres to be fully complete, before this councel of Baſil ſhould begin.

Eugenius prouoketh the Church.

A ſtrong argument againſt Eugenius.

Like as 5. yeares was fully expired, before that the councell of Papia did begin, but peraduẽture ſome man will ſay, that it ought to haue begun the firſt day after the 7. yere was expired. For otherwiſe the terme of the councell is paſſed. But heereunto we may anſwer that it is not contained in the chapter Frequens, that except it were holden the firſt day, it ſhould not be holden at al, neither can it be gathered either by the wordes or meaning. For it is only required that it ſhould be holden after 7. yeares expired, but whether it be the 2. or 3. day, or the 3. or 4. moneth after the 7. yere it doth ſatiſfy the chapter Frequens. For whẽ the firſt day is come then beginneth the power and liberty to celebrate the councell, but not afore, but it is not prohibited to celebrate it after, neither doth this word, In quinquennium. That is to ſay againſt 5. yeare, next following, which is alleaged in the chapter Frequens, and ſemeth to be repeated. Alſo for the 7. yeres, for it is not vnderſtãd that it is neceſſary to be holden the firſt day preciſely after the 7. yere, but becauſe it ſhould not be vnderſtand of other 7 yeares to come. For in ſpeaking ſimply of 7. yere, it is vnderſtand of 7. yeare next enſuing. Admit alſo that in the chapter Frequẽs, any of theſe wordes had bene ioyned with immediatly following, as by & by, out of hãd, immediatly, or ſtraightwaies after, or ſuch other words yet ought they to be vnderſtand with a certaine moderation, and diſtance of time, that aſſone as might be cõuenient, as theſe wordes are expounded by the lawes and the doctors, for they are enlarged and reſtrained according, to the ſubiect and diuers circũſtaunces of the matters and affaires. For it is not by any meanes likely that it was the mindes of thoſe which made the decree, that conſidering the long iourneis and harde preparation of ſuche affaires, and alſo the manifolde impedimentes which may happen, that they woulde reſtraine ſo preciſe a time, euen at the firſt daye, that if it were not then celebrated, it ſhould not be holden at all, for by ſuch ſubtill meanes, it ſhuld alſo be holden euen in the firſt moment and very inſtant after the ſame yere.

But forſomuch as wordes are ciuilly to be vnderſtand, this ſence or vnderſtanding is to farre diſagreable. For if any man will ſay, then it is commaunded to be proroged, that is alſo forbidden in the chapter frequẽs. He that doth ſo argue, doth not vnderſtãd himſelfe, nor the force of the woordes. It is not proroged if it be begon, the 2. or 3. month, but rather a continuation or execution of that which is in their power. For if it were a prorogation, then for ſo muche as a progation doth ſauour of the nature of the firſte delay, it could not be begon in the firſt month, but in the 2. and 3. it is not therby concluded that it could not be begon in the firſt, but if there had ben any prorogation made til the ſecõd month, then it coulde not haue bene begon in the firſt, as for example. I promiſe to geue a hundred after Eaſter, afore Eaſter it can not be required, but by and by after Eaſter it may be required, and all be it that I be not vrged for it notwythſtanding I doe not ceaſe to be bounde, and if ſo be I be demanded it in the 2. or 3. month after, it is not therby vnderſtand that ther is any prorogation made: Neither doth it followe, but that it might haue bene demaunded in the beginning which could not haue ben done, that there had ben any prorogation made. Alſo it is nature of prorogation to bee made before the firſt terme or day be paſſed. For otherwiſe it is no prorogation, but anew appoyntment. And albeit it may be ſaide, that then it may be long delaide, it is aunſwered that in thys poynt, we muſt ſtande vnto the iudgement of the Churche, which conſidering diuers circumſtances wold think the time mete. For the liberty of celebrating of councels was inſtitute for the profit and fauor of the church. What if it ſhuld happen that whẽ the time commeth, in the place where a councell ſhould be kept, there be a great plague, or ſome ſiege, which ſhuld continue by the ſpace of 3. or 4. moneths, and the Pope in the mean time doth not chaunge the place according to the forme of the Chapter frequens, & that thorow ſuch impediments, the prelates did not come the firſt day vnto the place, or if any were comming & were taken by the way which if they had not ben taken, had ben preſent at the firſt day in the place appoynted. Is it to be ſaid that the power of the coũcel is paſt? or that the impediment ceaſing, & the prelates cõming thither, the councell can not be holden? that truely were greatly abſurd & to much preiudiciall to the church of God, but in this our caſe, the cauſe is probable why that the prelats did defer to come at the beginning of the time appoynted For ſomuch as when the time drew neare, Pope Martin died the 20. of February. For which cauſe, the prelates might wel dout vpon ſome impediment of the councell. Alſo they taried loking that ſome ſhuld come thether in the name of the Pope, becauſe they wold not tary in that place in vaine without a preſident. As for the legate which was appoynted for the councel, whoſe preſence al men taried for, before he wold prepare him ſelfe to that iourney, he came not at the time apoynted vnto the councell, but went vnto Norrenberge, to perſecute the Bohemians according to the cõmandement of Pope Martin, which had enioyned him to go firſt thither before he wẽt to Baſil.

The cauſe of the long delay of the Prelates.

The councel of Sene.

And the ſame Legate, being oftẽtimes required at Norenberg, that he ſhuld go to Baſil to hold the councell, he anſwered, that he wold not go before he had the cõſent of the new biſhop. This was the cauſe of the prelates delay, neither is it greatly to be imputed vnto the prelates, which ſuſpected that Pope Martin woulde not haue holden the councell, & feared to bring thẽſelues in trouble, and good cauſe had they ſo to feare, thorowe thoſe things which hapned in the councel of Sene. For there were many things ſpoken which cauſed great ſuſpition. It was reported vnto me that many had ſaid, I came vnto Germany to diſturbe the councell.

Alſo this was Pope Martins minde and intent, that all beit the councel was not begon at the beginning of March, notwithſtanding the autority of holding the councel ſhould not be void. For he, when as the time of the councell approched, willed me that I ſhuld firſt go vnto Boheme, before I went vnto the coũcel, wherof alſo mention is made in the Bull of the conſiſtorie diſſolution.

But what nede we any other profe, then by your holineſſe letters, which by your letters dated the 2 Kalendes of Iune, and were deliuered vnto me lõg after the time, by the ſpace of 3. moneths, you do commaund me that my buſineſſe being done in Boheme, I ſhuld take my way vnto Baſil to hold the councel, & there to forſee vnto all things as it was enioyned me, & ordained in the coũcel of Conſtance. The ſame alſo ye repeat in the Bul of the diſſolution brought vnto me by the Lord Parentine, the wordes wherof are theſe. Vnto you circũſpection. Since your going into Germany no Prelates haue aſſembled in Baſill for the celebrating of the councel, we gaue you in cõmandement that in the meantime you ſhuld be diligent, about the expedition againſt the Bohemian heretickes which is committed to your charge, & afterward you ſhould come vnto Baſil the place appoynted for the councell, and there to rule in our place in the name of the church. What is more euident then this? If any thing were doutful by the tenure of theſe letters it were euidently takẽ away, if any man wold ſay that neither Pope Martine nor Eugenius could confirme the councel by wryting of ſuche letters, becauſe there was a prorogation which is prohibited by the chapter frequens it is anſwered, that there is no prorogation, but execution of that which is in power, or a declaration that it is not neceſſary to hold the councel preciſely euẽ at the beginning. Alſo it is no prorogation. For a prorogation is made before the terme is expired and not after, for after, it is rather called an new indiction or appoyntment. And if any mã will ſay that there cã be no new indiction made, then may this be obiected. Howe could the councel of Bononia be newly appoynted? If they wil anſwer, that the appoyntment of the coũcell of Bononia was of force, becauſe the councell of Baſill was diſſolued by your holines, then I haue my intent. For if it were diſſolued. Ergo, it was a coũcel before, bicauſe it preſuppoſeth the habit. If it were a councell before, then, as hereafter ſhalbe proued, it could not be diſſolued without the conſent of the councell, what can be more anſwered heereunto? for the greater declaration and euidence of this matter, the Abbot of Virgilia euen vpon the ſame day of the time appoynted or afore, gathering together the Prelates of the great churche and many other prelates and notable men, made a ſolemne proteſtation, howe the time was come to celebrate and hold the councel, & that he was come vnto Baſil for the ſame purpoſe, requiring them that they wold confer and intreat together, vpon matters touching the councel, and hereupon there is a publike inſtrument or teſtimoniall.

Within a month after the ambaſſadors of the vniuerſity of Paris came thither, & began to intreat of maters touching the coũcel, wryting alſo vnto the Emperour, and to the other Princes of Germany, that they ſhould ſend vnto the councel, which letters I my ſelf did ſee, neither doth the ſmal nomber of men let, for wher as aucthority is, a great nomber is not required, according to the ſaying of Chriſt, wheras 2. or 3. are gathered together in my name, I am in the midſt of them. Vpon the which auctority, the coũcels are grounded. Now therfore your holines doth manifeſtly ſee, the ſaid obiection to be but friuolous. For to what end ſhuld any diſſolution be made if it had not ben a councel: wherfore it is not to be doubted, but that it was a lawful councel, & canonically congregate. And peraduenture it is ſcarſly found where any councel hath ben confirmed by ſo many authorities as this, that is to ſay, by the two councels before paſſed, of Conſtance and of Sene, and confirmed by two Biſhops of Rome.

Beſides this, I haue heard that ſome doe report at Rome that I could not call the Prelates vnto the councell, becauſe that clauſe was not added in the Bul of Pope Martine. I greatly meruaile why this ſhuld be obiected, ſpecially ſeeing that, not I alone, haue called them, but I to gether with the reſt, which are here aſſembled in the coucel. It is a maruelous matter, Pope Martin gaue me autority by the aduice of the councel to rote out hereſies, to pacifie kingdoms, to reforme the maners of euery ſtate of chriſtendome, & yet they wil ſay that I can not cite them. Power is geuen me to iudge & to condemne, and haue I not alſo power to cite? The law doth ſay, vnto whom any power or iuriſdiction is committed, all things ſeme to be committed vnto him, without the which he cã not exerciſe his iuriſdiction, for howe coulde all the premiſſes be done, if the Prelates or others ſhuld not come hither? Alſo why is it ſaid in the chapter, Ego enim de iure iurando? I will come vnto the Sinode if I be called, if he can not be called: By whome then is it preſuppoſed that he ſhuld be called but only by the councel, or by him which ruleth the councell? Alſo the whole 18. diſtinction intreateth of no other matter, but that the biſhops being called vnto the councel, if they come not, that they may be excommunicate and ſuſpended. Let theſe men read the boke of councels of S. Iſidore, and they ſhall finde howe that in many councelles the Prelates haue bene called by the Sinode. Nowe it remaineth, that we ſhuld declare, whether the diſſolutiõ be of force or no. Wherin I do againe feare to moue your holines vnto anger. But charity forceth me therunto, for peraduenture, your holines doth thinke the diſſolution to be effectual, & therfore do perſeuer in it, wherby, for ſomuche as many offences may riſe, my conſcience doeth moue me, not to hold my peace. Firſt of all the chapter Frequens, declareth that it is not of force, for if prorogation be forbidden & prohibited, which is a ſmal mater, much more is diſſolutiõ, which is a greater matter, for it is a greater matter to take away then to defer, for by proroging, a thing is but deferred, & by diſſoluing it is vtterly taken away. Alſo theſe men ſay, that the ſaid cõſtitution in the chapter Frequens, may be made void, for ſomuch, aſſone as the councel is begon, it may be diſſolued without any thing don, as it is ſaid that it was done at Senes, and nowe they ſay alſo that your holines hath ben peruerſly informed touching the diſſolution. They ſay alſo that the ſayd diſſolution doth manifeſtly tend to the ſubuerſion of faith, the ruine of the church, and the trouble of the chriſtian people. Therfore it can not be done, neither obeid.

They ſay moreouer that the ſaid diſſolutiõ could not be made, by meanes of a certen decree of the councel of Conſtance in that behalfe prouided. That in ſuch matters as pertaine vnto faith, the extirpation of ſinne, and reformation of the church in the head & in the members, that all men of what eſtate or condition ſo euer they be, yea the Pope himſelf ſhuld be bound to obey the ſtatutes, precepts, and ordinãces of euery general councell, & except they did obey to puniſh them. Marke how that theſe things to haue power to determine vpon any man, to commaund him and puniſh him, if he be not obedient, are ſignes of ſuperioritye, in thoſe matters which he doth decree, command or puniſh, and to be bound to obedience, to be ſubiect and obey the ſame, are ſignes of inferiority in the ſaid caſes. Ergo, in the foreſaid caſes, ſeeing that the Pope as they ſay, is vnder the coũcel, which alſo hath ben. In that for one of the ſaid 3. caſes the councel did depriue Iohn, & for the other Benedict, neither coulde the Pope diſſolue the councell, in that he is inferior vnto the councel, cannot bind or cõpel the ſuperior. As in the chapiter Cum inferior, otherwiſe it ſhoulde containe in it a contradiction, that hee is bounde to obey, and is not bound to obey, becauſe he may diſſolue, for howe ſhould he be obedient vnto the ordinance and decree of the councell, if he may anihilate and take away the ſame ordinaunce and decree. Thys councell is cõgregate for the rooting out of hereſies, for the making of peace and reformation of maners, and in the firſt Seſsion it did ordeine, that their whole intent and reſpect ſhould be thereunto, and that he which ſhould procure to let the coũcell, to proroge or alter it, ſhould be puniſhed and haue proceſſe againſt him as againſt a common diſturber of the peace. &c. If it may be diſſolued it is euident that they doe not obey the ſaide ordinaunce, whereby this alſo muſt of neceſsity be graunted, that if it may be diſſolued, the decree of the councell of Conſtance is of no force.

This is alſo proued by an other reaſon. No man doubteth but if any controuerſie of hereſie ſhoulde be mooued againſt any Biſhop of Rome, that he coulde not diſſolue the Councell: For if he might diſſolue the councell he could not be iudged, whych were cõtrary to the cha. Si Pa. diſt. 40. Ergo, like as it is in hereſy, ſo is it in the two other caſes. For theſe three were pacified by the coũcel of Cõſtance, for thus ſpeaketh the councel. As it is in the Chapter, Si Papa in illo vno. And as I haue before ſaide, the Councell of Conſtance, allowed this decree, thorow the which they depriued Peter de Luna, for making of a Schiſme, and Pope Iohn for the deformitie of his life.

And all be it there be certaine lawes that ſay, the principall ſeat can not be iudged of any man, and againe, no man iudgeth the chiefe ſeate. And no man ſayth vnto him ſelfe why doeſt thou ſo. There are to be vnderſtande in theſe three caſes, firſt that there was prouiſo made for the faith in the chapter Si Papa, and in the other two poynts by the decree of Conſtance. Otherwiſe it ſhuld be vnderſtande, without any exception, that the firſt ſeate. &c. and then the chapter Si Papa. 40. Diſtinct. and the ſayd decree of Conſtance ſhoulde be falſe. If the chapter Si Papa had added cauſes of hereſies, no man would haue doubted vpon theſe two caſes, touching the ſayd ſentence, ſo likewiſe no man ought to doubt of the decree of the councell, that it was made by the authoritie of the Pope, and repreſenteth the vniuerſal church, and if any man wold ſay, that in all councels the authoritye of the Pope is excepted, I aunſwere that it is true, when as the perſone of the Pope is not ſpecially included. But if hee be ſpecially included, he can not be excepted, becauſe it ſhould ſauour of contradiction. Moſt bleſſed father, God is my witneſſe, that I haue ſpoken theſe thinges wyth great anguiſh and ſorowe of minde, but I am forced ſo to ſpeake, that your holineſſe may ceaſe from the ſaide diſſolution, leſt there might happen infinite euels in the church of God. If your holines did ſee my pure mind, my vpright conſcience, and entier affection towardes you, whereby I am mooued to wryte thoſe thinges, euen for very loue you would embrace and kiſſe me, and wythout doubt loue me as your owne ſonne, I haue often ſayde and nowe doe ſay and proteſt before God and mã, that you wil be the cauſe of Schiſme and infinite miſchieues, if you doe not alter & change your minde and purpoſe. Almighty God preſerue your holineſſe in the proſperity of a vertuous man. Vnto whoſe feete, I do moſte humbly recommend me. From Baſil the 5. day of Iune.

Thus endeth the Epiſtle of Cardinal Iulian wrytten vnto Pope Eugenius. Wherein for ſo much as mention is made, howe that the Bohemians had promiſed to ſende their Ambaſſadours vnto the Councell, and as before is partly touched in the Bohemian ſtorie, their commyng into Baſill, and propounding of certaine articles, wherein they diſſented frõ the Pope, we doe not thinke it any thing differing from our purpoſe, to annexe a briefe Epitome, declaring the whole circumſtance of their Ambaſſade, their articles, diſputations and anſweres, which they had at the ſayd councell of Baſil, with their petitions and anſweres vnto the ſame. Faithfully tranſlated out of Latin by F.W.

In like maner Æneas Syluius alſo with his owne hand and wryting, not onely gaue teſtimony to the authoritie of thys councell, but alſo beſtowed his labour and trauaile in ſetting forth the whole ſtorie thereof. Notwythſtanding, the ſame Sylnius afterward being made Pope, wyth hys new honour, did alter and change his olde ſentence, the Epiſtle of which Aeneas, touching the commendation of the ſayde Councel, becauſe it is but ſhort, and will occupy but litle roume, I thought heere vnder, for the more ſatiſfying of the readers minde, to inſerte.

✻ An Epiſtle of Aeneas Syluius, to the Rector of the Vniuerſitie of Colen.

An epiſtle of Eneas Siluius in defence of the councell of Baſill.

TO a Chriſtian man, whiche will be a true Chriſtian in deede, nothing ought to be more deſired, then that the ſinceritie and purenes of faith, geuen to vs of Chriſt by our forefathers, be kept of all men immaculate: and if at any time, any thing be wrought or attempted againſt the true doctrine of the Goſpell, the people ought with one conſent, to prouide lawfull remedy, & euery man to bring with him ſome water to quench the general fire: Neither muſt we feare how we be hated or enuied, ſo we bring the truth. Wee muſt reſiſt euery mã to his face, whether he be Paul or Peter, if he walke not directly to the truth of the Goſpell, which thing I am gladde, and ſo are we all, to heare that your Vniuerſitie hathe done in this Councell of Baſill. For a certaine treatiſe of yours is brought hether vnto vs, wherein you reprehend the rudeneſſe, or rather the raſhneſſe of ſuch, which do deny the Biſhop of Rome, and the Conſiſtorie of his iudgement, to be ſubiecte vnto the generall Councell, and that the ſupreame tribunall ſeate of iudgement, ſtandeth in the Church, and in no one Biſhop. Such men as deny this, you ſo confound with liuely reaſons and trueth of the Scriptures, that neither they are able to ſlide away like the ſlippery Eeles, neither to cauill or bring any obiection againſte you. Theſe be the wordes of Siluius.

The tribunal ſeate ſtandeth not in one Biſhop.

Furthermore, as touching the autority and approbation of the foreſayd Councel, this is to be noted, that during the life of Sigiſmund the Emperour, no man reſiſted this Councell. Alſo continuing the time of Charles the 7. the French king, the ſaid Councel of Baſil was fully & wholly receiued through all France. But after the death of Sigiſmund, when Eugenius was depoſed, and Felix Duke of Sauoy, was elected Pope, greate diſcordes aroſe, and much practiſe was wrought. But eſpecially on Eugenius part, who being nowe excommunicate by the Councell of Baſill, to make his part more ſtrong, made 18. new Cardinals. Thẽ he ſent his Orators vnto ẏ Germains, labouring by all perſwaſions to diſſolue the councell of Baſill, the Germaines at that time were ſo deuided, that ſome of them did hold with Felix, and the Councell of Baſil: other ſome, with Eugenius and the Councell of Ferraria: and ſome were neuters. After this the French king being dead, which was Charles the 7. about the yeare of oure Lorde 1444. the Pope beginneth a newe practiſe, after the olde guiſe of Rome, to excite (as is ſuppoſed) the Dolphine of Fraunce, by force of armes, to diſſipate that Councell collected againſt him. Who leading an army of xv. M. men in to Alſatia, did cruelly waſte and ſpoyle the countrey: after that, laide ſiege vnto Baſil to expel & driue out the prelates of the Councell. But the Heluetians moſt ſtoutly meeting their enemies wͭ a ſmall power, did vanquiſh the Frenchmen, and put them to ſword and flight: like as the Lacedemonians onely with CCC. did ſuppreſſe, and ſcattered all the mighty army of Xerxes, at Thermopylæ.

Although Baſil thus by the valiantnes of the Heluetians was defended, yet notwithſtanding the Councell thorough theſe tumultes, could not continue by reaſon of the princes Ambaſſadours, which ſhronke away, and woulde not tary: So that at length Eugenius brought to paſſe, partly through the help of Fredericke (being not yet Emperor, but laboring for the Empire, partly by his Orators) in the number of whome was Eneas Sylums, aboue mentioned (amongſt the Germans) ẏ they were content to geue ouer both the councel of Baſil and their neutrality.

The diſſolution of the Councell of Baſill.

This Fridericke of Auſtrich being not yet Emperour, but towards the Empire, brought alſo to paſſe, that Felix, which was choſen of the Councell of Baſill, to be Pope, was contented to renoũce and reſigne his Papacie to Nicolaus the fift, ſucceſſour to Eugenius, of the which Nicolaus, the ſayde Fredericke was confirmed at Rome to be Emperour, and there crowned. An. 1451.

Fredericke of Auſtrich crowned Emperour, great grand father to this Ferdinando.

As theſe things were doing at Baſil, in the meane ſeaſon, pope Eugenius brought to paſſe in his conuocation at Florence, that the Emperour, and the Patriarke of Conſtantinople, wyth the reſt of the Grecians there preſent, were perſwaded to receiue the ſentence of the Churche of Rome, concerning the proceeding of the holy Ghoſt: alſo to receiue the communion in vnleauened bread, to admitte Purgatorie, and to yeelde them ſelues to the authoritye of the Romiſh Biſhop. Whereunto notwythſtanding, the other Churches of Grecia would in no wiſe aſſent, at theyr comming home: In ſo much, that with a publike execreation they did condemn afterward al thoſe Legates, which had conſented to theſe Articles, that none of them ſhoulde be buryed in Chriſten buriall: whych was Anno. 1439. mies ſtrong and enfeebled themſelues. Albeit afterward, in proceſſe of time, they ſo defended the cauſe of their religion, not by ſworde, but by argument and diſputation, that the Biſhop of Rome could neuer yet to this day, remoue the Thaborites, and Citie of Prage, from the communion of both the kindes, nor coulde euer cauſe them to keepe the conditions, which in the beginning of the Councell, was enioyned their prieſtes to obſerue, as teſtifieth Cochleus. lib. 8. hiſt. Huſs. with whom alſo recordeth Antoninus, who in 3 part. hiſt. ſaith, that the doctrine of the Bohemians, which he termeth by the name of Zizania, did take ſo deepe roote wyth them, and grewe ſo faſt, that afterwarde, neyther by fire nor ſword, it could be extinct. Concerning the which Bohemians, briefly & in a generall ſumme, to recapitulate their whole actes & doings, here is to be noted, that they in their owne defence, & in the quarel of Iohn Hus, and Hierome of Prage, prouoked by their catholike aduerſaries to warre, fighting vnder Ziſca their Captaine, had eleuen battailes with the Popes ſide, and euer went away victours. Ex paral. Abb. Vrſp. in Epitaphio, Ioan. Ziſc. Moreouer, in the hiſtory of Peucer it is teſtified that pope Martin 5. ſending for the B. of wint. then Cardinal, had leuied 3. maine armies, intending to ouerrunne al the Bohemians: one army of the Saxons, vnder the prince Elector, the ſeconde of the Francones, vnder the Marques of Brandeburge, the thirde of Renates, Bauarians and Suechers, vnder Octo archb. of Treuers. with theſe, Sigiſmund alſo the Emperor, and Cardinal Iulian the popes Legate (who at laſt was ſlain in war, and being ſpoiled of all his attire, was left naked in the fielde) ioyned al their force. who ioyning together 5. times (ſayth the ſtory) which 5. ſondry battailes, aſſailed and inuaded the Bohemians: at euery which battail, 5. times the ſayd aduerſaries ſtroken and daunted with a ſodain feare, ranne away out of the field, leauing their tents wt all their implements and furniture behind them, before any ſtroke was geuen. Ex Caſp. Peuc. lib. 5. whereby it may appeare, the holy aungels of God to fight for them which embraced the ſyncere doctrine of Chriſtes goſpell.

Ex hiſt. Caſpari Peucer lib. 5.

Maruelous feare fallen vpon the popes army.

Gods holy angels pitch their tentes about them which feare him. Pſal.

Thus the Bohemians through the mighty protection of almighty God, cōtinued a long time inuincible, during all ẏ life of Ziſca, & alſo of Procopius, til at length through diſcord growing betwene them & theyr captains Procopius & Mainardus, they were ſubdued vnto their enemies.

And heere by the way is not to be omitted the wicked and cruel facte of Mainardus, who after the death of Procopius, thinking to purge the realme of Boheme of thoſe chiefe and principal ſoldiours, which had bene long expert and trained vp in warres, found meanes by a proclamation made, as though he woulde warre againſt other countreis of their enemies bordering about them, craftily to traine all them which were diſpoſed to take wages, into certaine barnes or houels, prepared for the ſame purpoſe, and ſo ſhutting the dores vppon them, the wicked diſſembler ſet fire vpon them, & brent of them diuers thouſands, and ſo brought the reſt by that meanes, vnder ſubiection to the Emperor during his lyfe time, which after that continued not long. Ex Æne. Syl. The which ſoldiours, if they had fought ſo much for the catholike liberties of the Pope and his churche, as they had fought againſt him, it is maruaile if the Pope had not dignified them all for holy martyrs. But they that kill with the ſword (ſayeth Chriſt) ſhall periſh with the ſword. Notwithſtanding, the cruell deceit of Mainardus, is worthy of all men to be deteſted.

The cruell deceite and wicked facte of Mainardus againſt the ſouldiours of Boheme. Certaine thouſandes of the Bohemiā ſouldiors brent.

Ex Aenea Silu. lib. de hiſt. Boem. cap. 51.

During this buſineſſe among the biſhops beyonde the ſea in the meane time our biſhops here alſo in Englande, were not vnoccupied. Whether it be ẏ nature of the countrey that ſo geueth: or whether ẏ great liuings and welthy promotions of the clergy, do draw wt them a more inſenſible vntowardneſſe in Gods religion, hard it is to ſay: this is manifeſt to all them which will read and marke our ſtories from time to time, that in Englande is more burning and ſlaying for Religion and for all other matters: more bloudſhed among vs then in any other lande or nation in Chriſtendome beſides. After the burning of Rich. Houeden, of Nicho. Canon, and of Thom. Bagley prieſt, aboue recorded, pag. 666. whom the biſhops condemned to death An. 1431. not long after, about the yere of our Lorde 1439. which was the 18. of the raign of king Hen. 6. they had another poore man by the backe, named Rich. Wiche Prieſt, mentioned both in Rob. Fabian, and alſo in another olde engliſh chronicle borowed of one Herminger. What his opinions were, they do not expreſſe. This they recorde, that this Rich. wich, firſt was degraded, then burned at the tower hil for hereſy. Some do affirm that he before his death reuoked, but that ſeemeth by his burning, not to be true.

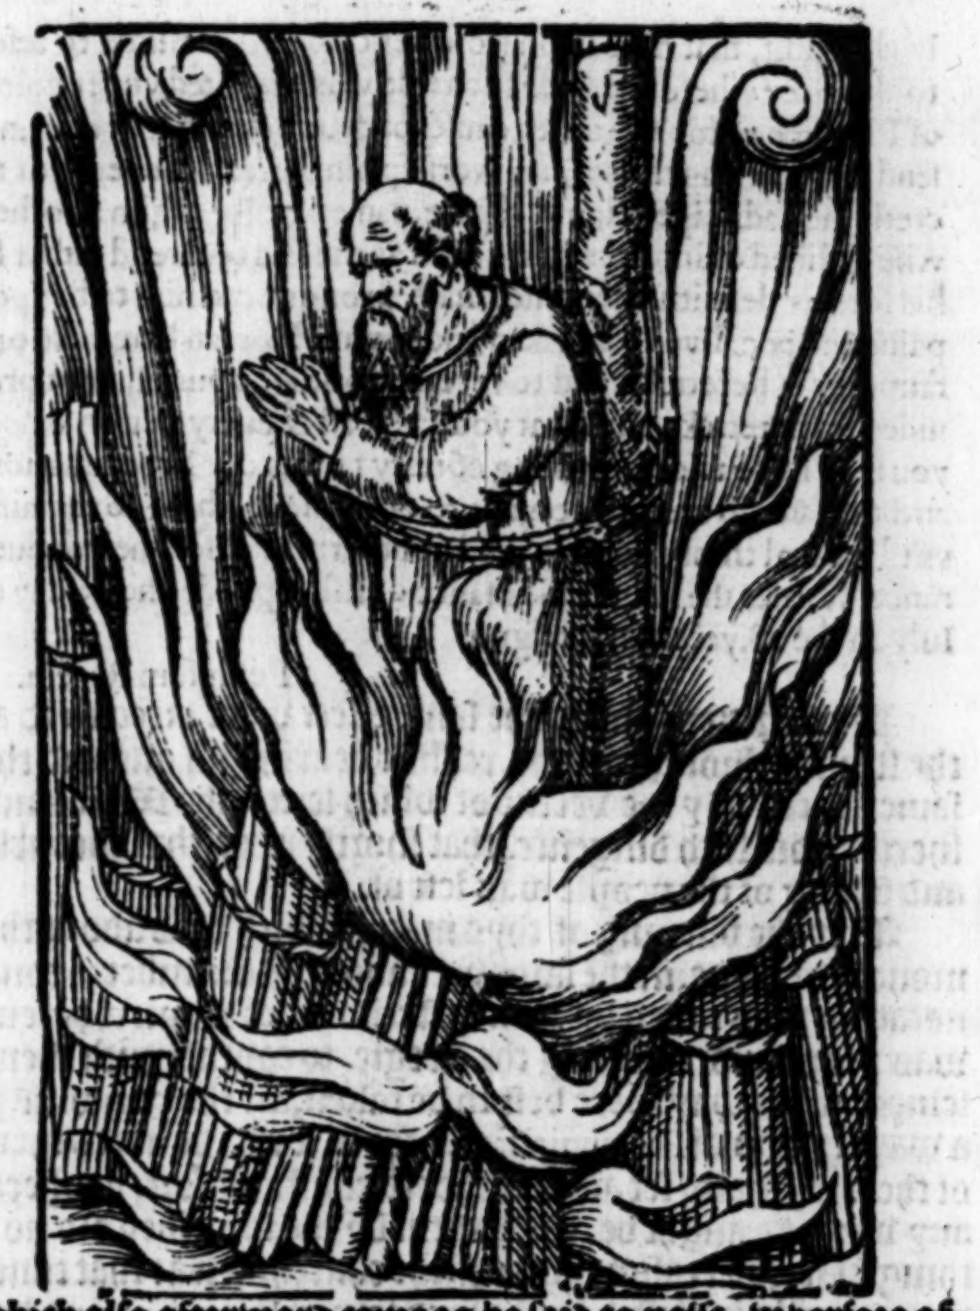
England noted of crueltie.

Burning & ſlaying in England.

Anno 1439.

R. Wiche Prieſt, Martir.

Ex Fabian part. 7. Ex antiquo alio Chronico.



It is alſo teſtified of him, that before his death, he ſpake (as propheſying) that the poſterne of the tower ſhuld ſink, which alſo afterward came as he ſaid to paſſe, wherfore of many of the people he was counted for an holy man: In ſo much that (as it is affirmed) they came to ẏ place where he was burnt, and there made their oblations and prayers, and areired a great heap of ſtones, and ſet vp a croſſe there by night: ſo that by this meanes a great clamor ran vppon the Churchmen, and eſpecially vppon ſuche as put hym to death. Then to ceaſe the rumor, the king gaue commandement to puniſh ſuch, as went thether on pilgrimage. The copy wherof is here to be ſene as foloweth.

Rich. Wiche after his death taken for a ſaint.

Rex vicecomitibus London. & Midd. ſalutem. Albeit Richard Wyche late clearke, who heretofore long ſithence heretically did hold, teach, & publikely preache certaine hereſies and erroneous opinions in many places within our realme of England. And for the ſame many yeares nowe paſt being iudicially conuicted, did before a iudge in that behalfe ſufficient abiure all hereſy generally, and afterward as a dogge returning to his vomit, did preſume to maintain, teach, & publikely preach his former errors and hereſies, ſo that hee was worthely adiudged a Relapſe. And againe being impeached for the ſame before the reuerend father in God Robert B of London his lawfull Ordinarie was called foorth to iudgement, and being before him, did iudicially confeſſe hys errors and hereſies. For the which cauſe the ſaide reuerende father, vppon mature deliberation by hym the ſayde Reuerende father firſt had with the aduiſe of the learned in the lawe, his aſſiſtantes lawfully proceeding againſt the ſaide Richard did by his ſentēce defintiue pronounce and adiudge him to bee a Relapſe, and did diſgrade him from the order and dignitie of Prieſthoode, & tooke from him all prieſtly ornaments, and depriued him of all prieſtly function and Priuiledge (according to iuſtice) and laſt of all turned him ouer to the ſecular power as the manner is: And afterwards you, by our Princely commandement and warrant did according to the lawe of oure realme for his laſt puniſhment conſume the body of the ſayd Richard to aſhes, being a Relapſe conuict, and diſgraded as a notorious traitour, not only againſt God, but alſo againſt vs and our crowne and dignity. All which notwithſtanding certaine our ſubiects (as we haue ben ſundry times enformed) being pricked foreward with a Diabolical ſpirite, practiſing of all likelihode not only ſedition, but alſo Idolatry within our Realme are not afraide publikely to affirme that the ſayde Richard was altogether innocent of heretical prauity Nay rather they do moſte ſhamefully with their vaine deuiſes, and wickedly conceiued imaginatiōs blaſe abroad that he was, & died a good, iuſt and an holy man, and that he doeth many myracles (whereas in deede no ſuche myracles be done by him.) Which diſordinate perſones we may well and vpon probable cauſes repute & deme culpable, not only of heretical prauitie, but alſo of high treaſon, and as rebels to our perſone, Maieſtie, and violatours of the peace and dignity of our Realme, as with all breakers and treſpaſſours againſt the ſacred Canons of the Churche, who dare ſo preſumptuouſly aduenture to worſhip the ſaid Richard as a Sainct, whereas it is not lawfull to worſhip any manner of perſon be he neuer ſo holy before he be canoniſed by the authority of the B. of Rome. We therefore being very carefull for the good preſeruatiō of our peace, and deſirous to aboliſh from out al the coaſtes of the ſame al maner Idolatry, do charge & command you that in certain places within your liberties where you ſhal think moſt cōuenient, you cauſe forthwith proclamatiōs to be made on our behalf, ſtraightly charging, that no perſon from hencefoorth preſume to reſort to the place where the ſaide Richarde was executed vnder colour of Pilgrime,or for any other cauſe of deuotion what ſo euer,nor ſend any offering thither,nor worſhip him hereafter openly or ſecretly,nor adiudge,eſteme, repute,name or talke of him as otherwiſe iuſtified or innocent,then ſuch as the ſaid reuerend father by his former definitiue ſentence hath pronounced him to be vpon paine and penaltye to be taken and reputed for an hereticke or a fauourer of hereticks, and to receiue condigne puniſhment prouided for hereticks.And that you arreſt all & euery perſon whom you ſhall finde to do any thing cōtrary to this our Proclamation, and the ſame ſo areſted, commit to our priſone, there to remaine vntil we ſhal thinke good to ſend countermaund for their deliuerance.Witnes the king at his Manor of Eſtampſtede,the 15.day of Iuly in the 18.yere of his reigne.

Per ipſum Regem.

Like writtes, and to the ſame effect were directed to al the ſhriues through all the realme bearing all one and the ſame Date. By the vertue of which letter,the Maior and ſheriffes did ſuch diligence, that ſhortly after,that cōcourſe and ſeking of the people was left of.

Ex Regiſt. Hen. Chicheſlei.

After the burning of thys man, which was about the moneth of Iune,in the ſame yere about Nouember,a conuocation was called by Henry Archbiſh. of Cant. wherein was propounded among the clergie, to conſult with them ſelues, what way were beſt to be taken,for the remouing a way the law of Premuniri facias, for ſo were the harts then of the temporalty ſet againſt the eccleſiaſticall ſort, ẏ where any vantage might be geuen them by the law,they did nothing ſpare, by reaſon whereof, the churchmen at that time were greatly moleſted by the ſayd law of Premuniri,and by the kings writtes,and other inditements,to their no ſmal anoyance, By long conſultation and good aduiſement, at laſt this way was taken,ẏ a petition or ſupplicatiō ſhould be drawen and preſented to the king, for the aboliſhing of the foreſaid lawe of Premuniri facias,and alſo for the reſtraining of other briefes, wryts, and inditements, which ſeemed then to lie heauy vppon the Clergy. This bill or ſupplication being contriued and exhibited by the Archbiſh. of Canter. and of Yorke, vnto the king ſtanding in neede the ſame time,of a ſubſidie to be collected of the cleargie : thys aunſwer was geuen to their ſupplication on the kings behalfe : that for ſomuche as the time of Chriſtenmaſſe then drewe neare, whereby he had as yet no ſufficient leiſure to aduiſe vppon the matter, he woulde take therein a farther pauſe. In the meane time,as one tendering theyr quiet,he would ſend to al his officers and miniſters ẇin his realm, that no ſuch briefe of Premuniri, ſhoulde paſſe againſt them or any of them, from the ſaide time of Chriſtenmas, till the next Parliament. An. 1439. Ex Regiſt. Cant.

The biſhops cōſult to aboliſh the lawe of Premuniri facias.

The kings aunſwere to the bill of the Clergy touching the law of Premuniri.

In my former edition of Acts & monuments,ſo haſtely raſhed vp at that preſent, in ſuch ſhortneſſe of time,as in the ſayde booke thou mayſt ſee (gentle reader) declared and ſignified : among many other matters therein contained, there is a ſhorte note made of one Eleanor Cobham Ducheſſe of Glouceſter, & of Syr Roger Onley knight (prieſt it ſhould haue ben printed,) which two perſons,about the yeare of our Lord. 1440. or the next yeare following, were condemned,the one to death,the other to perpetual priſon. Of this litle ſhort matter, maiſter Cope the Popes Scout, lying in priuie wait to ſpie faults in al mēs works, wherſo euer any may appeare, taketh pepper in the noſe, & falleth againe vnto his olde barking againſt mee, for placing theſe foreſayd perſons in my booke of Martyrs, but eſpecially he thinketh to haue great vantage againſt me, for that in the ſame ſtory,I do ioyne withal, one Margaret Iourdeman, the witch of Eye, condemned alſo wyth them the ſame time,and burned for practiſing the kings death by an image of waxe, &c. To anſwere hereunto, firſt I ſay (as I before ſayde) that I profeſſe no ſuch title to wryte of Martyrs : but in generall to wryte of rites and Monuments paſſed in the church and realme of England. wherin, why ſhould I be reſtrained from the free walke of a ſtory wryter, more then other that haue gone before me?

A briefe aunſwere to Cope, concerning Lady Eleanor Cobham.

Secondly, touching my commendation of Sir Roger Onley, and the Lady Eleanor, if maiſter Alane be therewith offended, I aunſwer that I commended them for ſauoring and fauoring of the truth of Chriſtes doctrine: For the fact, if any ſuch were in them, I do not commend them. And although I did commend them, yet neither did I it ẇ any long tarying vppon it, nor yet all together vpon mine owne head, without ſome ſufficient warrant of authoritie. For why may not I as well beleeue Iohn Bale, as M. Alane beleue M. Fabian? eſpecially ſeeing I do knowe, and was priuie, that the ſaide Iohn in recogniſing his Centuries, followed altogether the hiſtory of Leland. De Catalogo virorum illuſtrium, which booke being borowed of maſter Cheke, I my ſelfe did ſee in the hands of the foreſayd Iohn Bale, what time we were both together, dwelling in the houſe of the noble Lady Duches of Richmond. wherefore if he thinke me ſo leud to ſpeake without mine authors, he is deceiued. And if he thinke mine authors not to be beleeued, then let thys Nomothetes, or iolly Dictator, come forth and preſcribe vs a law, what authors he would haue vs to take, and what to refuſe. For els why is it not as free for me to credite Iohn Bale, and Leland, as for him to credite Robert Fabian, and Edw. Hall, eſpecially ſeeing they had ſeene hys bookes and workes left behinde him, wherupon they might better iudge, and ſo did neuer theſe?

Thirdly, for the name of Roger Onley, if Cope denie that there was any ſuch name in ſtories mētioned, but that there was one called Roger Bolingbroke. &c. heereby it may appeare that either his prompter out of England deceiued him, or els that hee going no further but to Fabian and Hall, lacketh no good wil in him, but only a little matter to make a perfect ſycophant. And admit the ſayde name of Onley could not be founde in thoſe wryters, yet it were not vnpoſſible for a man to haue two names, eſpecially if he were a religious man, to beare the name of the towne where he was born, beſide his own proper ſurname. But nowe what if I (M. Cope) can auouch and bring forth to you the name of Roger Onley out of ſufficient recorde, which you ſeeme not to haue yet read? Haue yee not then done well and properly (thinke you) ſo bitterly to flee in my face, and to barke ſo egerly all this while at moneſhine in the water, hauing no more cauſe almoſte againſt me, thē againſt the man in the Moone? And now leaſt you ſhoulde thinke me ſo much vnprouided of iuſt authority for my defence, as I ſee you vnprouided of modeſtie and patience, wryte you to your prompter or ſuborner (where ſo euer he lurketh here in England) to ſende you ouer vnto Louane the booke of Iohn Harding a Chronicler, more auncient then either Fabian or Hall, printed in the houſe of Richard Grafton, Anno 1543. where turne to the fol. 223. fac. b. lin. 19. and there ſhall you finde and reade theſe wordes.

To the third obiection.

Againe the Church and the king curſedly:
By helpe of one maiſter Roger Onley. &c.

By the whyche wordes yee muſt neceſſarily confeſſe Roger Onley to be the name of the man, either els muſt ye needes deny the author. For otherwiſe that maſter Roger Bolingbroke was the onely helper to the Ducheſſe in that fact, by no wiſe it can ſtande with the ſtory of theſe authors which ſay, that 4. other beſides hym were cōdemned for the ſame crime. &c. And moreouer thought the ſayd Sir R. Onley was no knight (as I haue ſaide in my former edition) yet this yee cannot deny, by the teſtimonie of them that haue ſene his workes, but that he was a Prieſt, which you wil graunt to be a knights fellow. And thus much for the name and condition of M. Roger Onley.

Vid. Centu. 8. Ral. ca. 4.

Fourthly, as concerning Margaret Iourdeman, whō ye call the witch of Eye, ye offer me herein great wrong, to ſay that I make her a martyr, which was a wytche : when as I here profeſſe, confeſſe, and aſcertaine both you, and all Engliſh men, both preſent & al poſterity hereafter to come, that this Margaret Iourdeman I neuer ſpake of, neuer thought of, neuer dreamed of, nor did euer heare of, before you named her in your booke your ſelfe. So farre is it of, that I eyther with my will, or againſt my will, made any martyr of her.

To the 4. obiection.

Furthermore, I profeſſe and denounce in like manner, ẏ neither haue you any iuſt or congrue occaſion in my boke ſo to iudge, much leſſe to raile of me. For where, in expreſſe words I do ſpeake of the mother of the Lady Yong, what occaſion haue you thereby to ſlander me and my boke with Margarete Iourdeman? which Margarete whether ſhee was a witche or not, I leaue her to the Lorde. As for me, neither did I knowe of her then, nor did I meane of her nowe. But becauſe I couple her in the ſame ſtory, you ſay. To this I ſay, becauſe ſhee was the mother of a Ladie, I thought to ioyne her ẇ an other Lady in the ſame ſtory, as in one pue together, although in one cauſe I will not ſay. And yet notwithſtanding I doe ſo couple the ſaide mother ẇ the Ducheſſe, in ſuch diſtinct difference of yeares, that you M. Cope might eaſily haue vnderſtande, or beſide you, no man els would haue thought the contrary, but that Margaret Iourdeman was neither heere in my booke, nor yet in my memento. For the wordes of my ſtorie are playne, where as the condemnation of the Lady Eleanor, & of the mother of Lady Young being referred to the yeare of our Lord 1441. I doe alſo in the ſame ſtory (through the occaſion of that Ladie) inferre mention of the mother of the Ladie Yong, declaring in expreſſe wordes, that ſhee folowed

M. Cope rayleth without a cauſe.

See the former edition, pag. 371.

certayne yeares after, & in the end of that chapter, do name alſo the yeare of her burning to be. 1490. whiche was 50. yeares after the death of Onely, and Margaret Iourdeman: by the computatiõ of which yeares it is playne, that no other woman could be noted in that place, but only the Lady Younges mother.

But M. Cope continuing ſtill in his wrangling mood obiecteth agayne, for that in my Callendar, the ſayd Ladye Younges mother hath the next day in the Catalogue next after the death of Roger Onley, whiche day pertayneth properly to Margaret Iourdeman which was burned the ſame day in Smithfield, & not to the Ladyes mother. &c.

What order was taken in placing the names & dayes, what is that to me? If he whiche had the diſpoſing of the Catologue, did place them ſo in monthes, as he ſawe them ioyned in chapiters, not peruſing peraduenture nor aduiſing the chapters, that doth nothing preiudice the truth of my ſtory, which ſufficiently doth clare it ſelfe in diſtincting thẽ rightly in names & alſo in yeares, as is afore declared.

The 5. obiection.

The ſtory of the Ladie Eleanor and Rog. Onley here pretermitted.

Fiftly and laſtly, hauing thus ſufficiently aunſwered to your circumſtaunces of perſons, names, and times (M. Cope) I will nowe enter to encounter with you concerning the fact: and crime obiected to the Lady Duches, and to the reſt: with this proteſtation before premiſed vnto the reader, that if the fact be true and ſo done is reported in yͤ hiſtories of Fabian, Halle and harding, I deſire the reader then ſo to take me, as though I do not here deale withall, nor ſpeake of the matter, but vtterly to haue pretermitted, and diſpuncted the ſame. But for ſomuch as the deed and offence layd and geuen forth agaynſt theſe parties, may be a matter made, & of euil wil compacted, rather then true in deede: therefore I doe but onely moue a queſtion by way of hiſtory, not as defending, nor commending nor commemorating the thing, if it be true, but onely mouing the queſtion, whether it is to be iudged true, or ſuſpected rather to be falſe and forged, and ſo hauing briefly, propounded certayne coniectural ſuſpicions or ſuppoſals concerning that matter, to paſſe it ouer, neither medling on the one ſide nor on the other.

A queſtion whether Eleanor the Duches was culpable in treaſon agaynſt the king.

Certaine coniectures of the crime not to bee true.

1. Coniecture.

The firſt cõiecture, why it may be poſſible that this act of treaſon layd to the charge of the Duches, & Roger Onely, agaynſt the king, may be vntrue is this: that the ſayde Oneley (otherwiſe named Bolingbroke) tooke it vppon hys death, that they neuer intended any ſuch thing as they were condemned for.

2. Coniecture.

The ſecond coniecture: for that the Lady Eleanor, and Onely ſeemed then to fauour and ſauour of that religion ſet forth by wickleffe, and therefore like enough, that they were hated of the clergy. Furthermore what hatred & practiſe of Papiſtes can do, it is not vnknowne.

3. Coniecture.

The third coniecture: for that the ſayd mayſter Roger Onely falſly noted and accuſed of Nicromancie, wrote a booke in purgation of himſelfe, intituled: de Innocentia ſua. Alſo an other booke intituled. Contra vulgi ſuperſtitiones, recorded in Centu 8. Bale. cap. 4. Whereupon it is not credible, that he which wrote profeſſedly agaynſt the ſuperſtitions of the people, was ouertaken with that filth of Nicromancie himſelfe.

4. Coniecture.

The fourth coniecture: becauſe this accuſation againſt the Duches of Gloceſter, Duke Humfries wife began not before, but after the grudge kindled betweene the Cardinall of Wint. and Duke Humfrey, her Huſband.

5. Coniecture.

An other coniecture may be hereof, for that, if the Duches had entended any ſuche haynous treaſon againſt the kings life, as by burning of a waxe candle to conſume him it is not like (neyther was there anye ſuch neede) that ſhe would haue made ſo many priuy to ſuch a pernicious coũcell, as the witch of Eye, M. Rog. Bolingbroke, M. Tho. Southwell and Iohn Hume.

6. Coniecture.

Sixtly, it is not to be ſuppoſed, if anye ſuch hie treaſon had bene wrought or pretended agaynſt the kinges perſon by theſe that eyther the Duches ſhould ſo eſcape with bearing a taper and baniſhment, or that Iohn Hune ſhoulde be pardoned hys life, the fact being ſo haynous, that neyther any durſt aſke hys pardon, nor if it had bene aſked, it had not bene like to be graunted.

7. Coniecture.

To theſe we may alſo adde an other ſuppoſall, riſing vpon the wordes and forme of theyr accuſation, as it ſtandeth in Harding: Polychronicon, and other moe, wherein they were accuſed for working ſorcery, and inchantmentes agaynſt the church and the king. Now what ſorcery can be wrought agaynſt the church, that is, the whole multitude of Chriſtians, let the reader iudge, and by the truth of this conſider alſo the truth of the other, which was agaynſt the king. Furthermore, if by this Church is ment the Cardinall of Wint. as like it is: then it may be coniecturall, that all this matter roſe of that Cardinall, who was then a mortall enemy to the houſe of Glouceſter. &c.

8. Coniecture.

Eightly: And that all this was done and wrought by the ſayd Cardinall of Wint. the witch concerning Eye maketh the matter the more ſuſpitious, ſeeing that towne of Eye as Fabian witneſſeth, was neare beſide Wincheſter, and ſea of that Byſhop.

9. Coniecture.

Moreouer, for ſomuch as Polydore Virgill, among other ſtory authors, being a mã as may be ſuppoſed, rather fauouring the Cardinalls parte then the Dukes, made no mention at all touching this treaſon, hys ſilence therof may miniſter matter not alſo to muſe, but onely to coniecture, that he had found ſomething whiche made hym to miſtruſt the matter. Otherwiſe it is vnlike that he wold haue ſo mewed vp the matter, and paſſed it ouer without ſome mention.

10. Coniecture.

Finally and briefly: The frequent practiſes and examples of other times, may make this alſo more doubtfull, cõſidering howe many ſubtile pretences, after like ſorte haue bene ſought, and wrongfull accuſations brought agaynſt many innocent perſons For (not to repeate the like forgeries agaynſt the Lord Cobham and ſyr Roger Acton. &c.) why may not this accuſation of the Duches and Onley, be as falſe as that in the time of king Edward the 5. whiche was layd to the charge of the Queene, and Shores wife by the Protectours, for inchaunting & bewitching of his withered arme? which to be falſe, all the world doth know, and but a quarell made, only to oppreſſe the life of the L. Haſtings & yͤ L. Standley. &c. And thus mayeſt thou ſee, gentle reader, according to yͤ wiſe mans ſaying: Nihil nouũ eſſe ſub ſole: Nihilque dictum, quod non ſit dictum prius. &c.

Althoughe theſe wͭ many mo coniectures, may be alledged in ſome part of Defence of this Duches, and of her Chaplaines and Prieſtes: yet becauſe it may be not vnpoſſible againe, the matter laide againſt them, to be true, I leaue it therfore at large as I finde it: ſaying as I ſaide before, that if it be true which the ſtories ſay in this matter, thinke I beſeech thee gentle Reader, that I haue ſaide nothing hereof. Onely, becauſe the matter may be diſputable, and not vnpoſſible to be falſe, I haue but moued thereof a queſtiõ, and brought my coniectures, leauing the determinatiõ and iudgement hereof, to thy indifferent and free arbitrement. And if M. Cope, be ſo highly offended with me, becauſe in my firſt edition of Actes and Monumentes I durſt name yͤ Lady Eleanor Cobham, and Roger Onely: let him take this for a ſhort aũſwer, becauſe my leiſure ſerueth not to make long braules wͭ him: yͭ if I had thought no imperfectiõs to haue paſſed in my former editiõ before, I would neuer haue taken in hand the recognition thereof now yͤ ſecõd time, wherby to ſponge away ſuch motes, as I thought would ſeeme great ſtombling blockes in ſuche mens walkes, which walke with no charitie to edefie: but with malice to carpe and reprehend, neither admoniſhing what they ſee amiſſe in others, neither tarying while other men reforme themſelues, & finally finding quarels where no great cauſe is iuſtly geuen. And here an end with M. Cope for this time.

A briefe aunſwer to Maiſter Copes cauillations, concerning Duke Humfreyes wyfe.

The contention betwene the Cardinall of Wint. & Duke Humfrey, Lorde protectour.

Anno. 1440.

Forſomuch as in the proceſſe before, mentiõ was touched concerning the grudge betweene yͤ Cardinall, called the rich Cardinal of Wincheſter, and the good duke Humfrey duke of Gloceſter, the kings vncle, and protector of yͤ realme: order of ſtory now requireth to open ſome parte of yͤ matter more at large. Wherein this firſt is to be vnderſtand, that long before, great flames of grudge and diſcorde did burſt out betweene theſe two. For as the noble hart of the Duke could not abide the proud doinges of the Cardinall: ſo much againe the Cardinall in like maner ſore enuied & diſdayned at the rule of the Duke of Gloceſter. Notwithſtanding by the meanes of the Duke of Bedford, the braſting out betweene them was before appeaſed & cured; yet not ſo, but that vnder imperfect amitie, priuy hatred, as ſparcles vnder the imbers, did ſtill remaine: So that the Cardinal, ioyning with the Archbiſhop of Yorke, attempted many thinges of their owne preſumption, contrary to the conſent, not onely of the king (being then vnder age) but alſo of the protectour & gouernor of the realme. Wherwith the Duke (like a true harted prince) being not without iuſt cauſe offended, declared in writing to the king certaine complaintes contained in 21. Articles, wherein the Cardinall and Archbiſhop had tranſgreſſed, both againſt the king & his lawes. The tenour whereof, more at large is in other ſtories expreſſed, yͤ briefe abſtract therof followeth in a ſhort ſummarie here to be ſeene.

Ex Polychro.

¶ Certaine pointes or articles obiected by the Duke Humfrey, againſt the Cardinall of Wincheſter.

Wint. preſumeth to be Cardinall againſt the minde of his king.

FIrſt complayned to his ſoueraigne Prince his right redoubted Lord duke Humfrey, his vncle and protector of the realm, that the biſhop of wincheſter, in the dayes of his father king Henry the 5. took vppon him the ſtate of a cardinall, being denyed by the king, ſaying that he had as liefe ſet his owne crowne beſide hym, as to ſee him weare a cardinals hatte, and that in Parliamentes, he not beyng contented with the place of a biſhop among the ſpirituall perſons preſumed aboue hys order, whiche the ſayd Duke deſired to be redreſſed.

Wint. incurreth the law of premuniri.

2. Item, whereas he being made Cardinal, was voyded of his biſhopricke of wincheſter, he procured from Rome the Popes Bull, vnknowing to the king, whereby he took agayne his biſhopricke, contrary to the common lawe of this realme, incurring therby the caſe of prouiſion, and forfeiting all his goodes to the king, by the law of premuniri facias.

Wint. intrudeth himſelfe to be the kinges gouernour.

3. Item, he complayned that the ſaid Cardinall, with the Archbiſhop of Yorke, intruded themſelues to haue the gouernaunce of the king, and the doing vnder the king, of tẽporall matters, excluding the kings vncle, and other temporall Lordes of the kinges kinde, from hauing knowledge of any great matter.

The Cardinall defraudeth the king of his iewels.

4. Item, wheras the king had borowed of the Cardinall 4000. pounds, vpon certayne Iewels, and afterward had his mony ready at the day to quite his iewels: the Cardinall cauſed the treaſurer to conuert that mony, to the payment of an other armye, to keepe the Iewels ſtill to hys owne vſe and gayne.

The Cardinall deliuereth the K. of Scottes. vpon his owne authoritie.

5. Item, he being then biſhop of wincheſter, and Chancellour of England, deliuered the king of Scottes, vpon his own authoritie, contrary to the act of parliament, wedding his nece afterward to the ſayd king. Alſo where the ſaid king of Scottes ſhoulde haue payd to the king forty thouſand pounds, yͤ cardinall procured x. thouſand marks therof to be remitted, and yet the reſt very ſlenderly payd.

The Cardinall playeth the marchant.

6. Item, the ſayd cardinall, for lending notable ſommes to the king, had the profite of the port of Hampton: where he, ſetting his ſeruauntes to be the Cuſtomers, wolle and other marchandiſe was, vnder that clok, exported not ſo much to his ſingular vauntage, being the chiefe marchant, as to the greate preiudice of the king, and detriment to his ſubiectes.

7. Item, the cardinall, in lending out great ſummes to yͤ king, yet ſo differred and delayed the loane thereof, yͤ comming out of ſeaſon, the ſame did the king litle pleaſure, but rather hinderaunce.

The Cardinall a defrauder of the king.

8. Item, where iewels & plate were priſed at a 11. thouſand poundes in weight, of the ſayd Cardinall forfeited to the king: the cardinall for loane of a little peece, gat him a reſtorement thereof, to the Kings great dammage, who better might haue ſpared the commons if the ſomme had remayned to him cleare.

9. Item, where the kinges father had geuen Elizabeth Bewchampe. CCC. markes of liuelode, with this condition if ſhe wedded with in a yeare, the Cardinall, notwithſtanding ſhe was maryed two or three yeares after, yet gaue her the ſame, to the kinges great hurt, and diminiſhing of hys inheritaunce.

The Cardinall taketh vpon him like a king.

10. Item, the Cardinall hauing no authoritie nor intereſt to the crown, preſumed notwithſtanding to cal before him, like a King, to the kinges high derogation.

11 Item, that the Cardinall ſued a pardon from Rome, to be freed from all diſmes, due to the Kyng by the church of wincheſter, geuing thereby example to the Clergye, to withdraw their diſmes likewiſe, and lay all the charge only vpon the temporaltie, and poore commons.

12.13. Item, by the procuring of the ſayd Cardinall and Archbiſhop of Yorke, great goodes of the kings were loſt and diſpended vpon needles Ambaſſades, firſt to Arras, then to Calice.

14. Item it was layd to the charge of the ſayd Cardinall and archbiſhop, that by their meanes, goyng to Calice, the ij. enemies of the king, the Duke of Orleance, and Duke of Burgoyne, were reduced together in accorde & alliaunce, who being at warre before betwene themſelues, and now cõfederate together, ioyned both together agaynſt yͤ kings townes and countryes ouer the ſea, to the great daunger of Normandy, and deſtruction of the kinges people.

The Cardinall traytour to the crowne.

15. Item, by the archbiſhop of Yorke, and the Cardinall perſwaſiõs were moued opẽly in the kings preſence, with allurementes and inducementes, that the king ſhoulde leaue hys right, his title and honour of his crowne, in nominating him king of Fraunce, during certayne yeeres, & that he ſhoulde vtterly abſteyne, and be content onely in writing, with Rex Angliæ, to the great note and infamye of the king and of all his progenitours.

16.17. Item, through the ſleight and ſubtlety of the ſayde Cardinall and his mate, a new conuention was intended betweene the king and certayne aduerſaryes of Fraunce. Alſo yͤ deliueraunce of the Duke of Orleance was appointed in ſuch ſort, as therby great diſworſhip & inconueniẽce was like to fall, rather of the kinges ſide then of the other.

The Card. a purchaſer of of the kings landes.

18. Item, that the Cardinall had purchaſed great landes and liuelodes of the king, the Duke being on the other ſide the ſea occupyed in warres, whiche redounded little to the worſhip and profite of yͤ king: and moreouer had the kinge bound, to make him as ſure eſtate of all thoſe landes by Eaſter next, as could be deuiſed by any learned councel, or els yͤ ſaid cardinal to haue and enioy to him and his heyres for euer, the landes of the Duchie of Lancaſter in Northfolke to the value of 7. or 8. hundred markes by the yeare.

Peruerſe counſaile of the Cardinall.

19. Item, where the Duke the kinges vncle, had often offered his ſeruice for the defence of the Realme of France, and the duchie of Normandy, the Cardinall euer laboured to the contrary, in preferring other, after this ſingular affection: whereby a great part of Normandy hath bene loſt.

The Card. a deceauer of the king & a briber.

20. Itẽ, ſeeing yͤ Cardinall was riſen to ſuch riches & treaſure, which could grow to him, neyther by his Church, nor by enheritãce (which he then had) it was of neceſſitie to be thought, that it came by his great deceites, in deceiuinge both the king, and hys ſubiects, in ſelling offices, preferments, liuelodes, captaynſhips both here and in yͤ realm of Fraunce and in Normandy, ſo that what hath ben there loſt, he hath bene the greateſt cauſer thereof.

The Card. purchaſeth a pardon againſt his premuniri.

21. Furthermore, when the ſayd Cardinal had forfeited al hys goods by the ſtatute of prouiſion, he hauing the rule of the king, and of other matters of the realme: purchaſed frõ the pope a charter of pardon, not onely to the defeating of the lawes of the Realme, but alſo to the defrauding of the king, who otherwiſe might and ſhould haue had where wͭ to ſuſteine his warres, without any tallage of his poore people. &c.

Prelates holde one with an other.

Malice burſt out.

When the king heard theſe accuſations, he committed yͤ hearing therof to his counſaile: wherof yͤ moſt part were ſpirituall perſons. So, what for feare, and what for fauour the matter was wincked at, & dalied out, and nothing ſaid thereunto, and a fayre countenaunce was made to yͤ Duke as though no diſpleaſure had bene taken, nor malice borne in theſe ſpirituall ſtomaches. But ſhortly after, the ſmoke hereof, not able to keepe in any longer within the ſpiritual breſtes of theſe charitable churchmen, braſt out in flames of miſchiefe. For vpon the necke of this matter, as witneſſeth Fabian Polychronicon, and Hall whiche followeth Polych, firſt enſued the condemnation of L. Elianour the Duches and her Chapleynes, as ye haue heard before. Whereby it may appeare the ſayd Duches more of malice, then any iuſt cauſe, this to haue bene troubled. Alſo within vi. yeares after, followed the lamentable deſtruction of the Duke himſelfe, as hereafter more is to be declared.

The death of Henry Chichelley Archb. of Cant.

The building of Alſolne Colledge and Barnard Colledge in Oxforde.

And after the condemnation of lady Elianour the Duches, aforeſayd, within few yeares. an. 1445. followed the death of Henry Chichelley Archbiſhop of Cant. by whom ſhe was condemned in S. Stephens chappell at weſtin. for penaunce to beare a taper through cheapſide three ſondry times, and afterward outlawed to the Ile of Manne, vnder the cuſtody of ſyr Iohn Standly knight. This Henry Chichelley builded in hys time, 2. Colledges in the vniuerſitie of Oxford, the one called Alſolne Colledge, the other named Barnard Colledge.

Anno. 1447

The ſtorie & death of Humfrey, Duke of Glouceſter.

Duke Humfrey cõmended for his learning.

Proceeding now to the yeare, wherein ſuffered Humfrey yͤ good Duke of Glouceſter, which was the yeare of yͤ Lord. 1447. firſt we will begin in few wordes to intreat of his life & conuerſation: then of the maner and cauſe of hys death. As touching the offſpring and diſſent of this Duke, firſt he was the ſonne of Henry the fourth, brother to kyng Henry the fift, and vncle to kyng Henry the ſixt, aſſigned to be the gouernour and protector of his perſon. Of manners he ſeemed meeke and gentle, louing the common wealth, a ſupporter of the poore commons, of wit & wiſdome diſcreet and ſtudious, well affected to religion, and a frend to veritie, & no les enemy to pride & ambitiõ, eſpecially in hauty prelates, which was his vndoing in this preſẽt euil world: And, which is ſeldome & rare in ſuch princes of yͤ calling, he was both learned himſelfe: & no leſſe geuen to ſtudy, as alſo a ſingular fauourer & patron to them which were ſtudious & learned. And that my commendation of him may haue the more credite, I wil produce the teſtimony of learned writers, who liuing in hys time, not only do cõmend his famous knowledge, and ripenes of learning in him: but alſo commit & ſubmit their works to his iudgement to be examined. Of whiche writers one is Petrus de

Monte

Petrus de Monte, De virtutum et vitiorum differentia, ad D. Humfredum.

Lapiſcaſtellius De comparatione ſtudiorum et rei militaris ad D. D. Humfredum.

Monte, writing De virtutũ & vitiorum differentia: who in his Epiſtle dedicatory beginning with the ſinguler commendation of this Duke, and afterward ſpeaking De optimarum artium, liberaliumque ſcientiarum peritia, ſayeth thus: Cui tu quidem omni conatu, omni ingenio, atque ſtudio incumbis: adeo vt nihil tibi ſine librorum lectione, iucundum gratum, aut certe delectabile videatur. &c. And in further proceſſe of his worke, thus he further declareth, ſaying: Delectaris autem non vna tantum arte, aut ſcientia, quanquam & id quidem eſſet ſatis: verum fere omnibus, earumq; codices magna quadam auiditate legiſti. &c. Beſides this Petrus de Mõte, let vs heare alſo the iudgement of an other writer of the ſame age, named Lapiſcaſtellius, who likewiſe dedicating to the ſayd Duke Humfry, his booke intituled Comparatio ſtudiorum & rei militaris, amongſt diuers other words cõmẽdatory, hath theſe as follow: Ad te potiſſimum mitto, quod horum te optimum, & ſapientiſsimum iudicem fore exiſtimo, qui vt ex integerrimo pat. domino, Zenone Baiocenſi epiſcopo, homine tuæ laudis cupidiſsimo, accepi: ita in his humanitatis ſtudiis inuigilares, vt nullus toto terrarũ orbe princeps, nec doctrina, nec eloquentia, nec humanitate tecum comparandus ſit. &c. Many other argumentes and places may be brought, to declare what is to be eſteemed of the learning and ſtudious wit of this noble Prince.

Furthermore, as the learning of this Prince was rare and memorable, ſo was the diſcreete wiſedome and ſingular prudence in him no leſſe to be conſidered: as for yͤ more manifeſt proofe thereof, I thought here good amongſt many other his godly doings, to recite one example, reported as well by the penne of ſyr Thomas More, as alſo by M. William Tindall, the true Apoſtle of theſe our latter dayes, to the intent to ſee and note, not only the craftye working of falſe miracles in the clergye, but alſo that the prudent diſcretion of this high and mighty prince, the foreſayd Duke Humfrey, may geue vs better to vnderſtand what man he was. The ſtory lyeth thus.

A falſe miracle eſpied.

In the yong dayes of this king Henry the ſixt, beyng yet vnder the gouernance of this Duke Humfrey his protector, there came to S. Albones a certayne begger wyth his wife, and there was walking about yͤ towne, begging fiue or ſixe dayes before the kinges comming thether, ſaying yͭ he was borne blind and neuer ſaw in his lyfe, & was warned in hys dreame, that he ſhuld come out of Barwik, where he ſayd he had euer dwelled, to ſeek S. Albon, and that he had bene at his ſhrine, and had not bene holpẽ, and therefore he would go and ſeek him at ſome other place: for he had heard ſome ſay, ſince he came, that S. Albones body ſhoulde be at Colon, and in deede ſuche a contention hath there bene. But of truth as I am ſurely informed, he lyeth here at S. Albones, ſauing ſome Reliques of him, whiche they there ſhew ſhryned. But to tell you ſoorth, when the king was comen, and the towne full, ſodainly this blynde man at S. Albones ſhrine had hys ſight agayne, and a miracle ſolemnly ronge, and Te Deum ſong, ſo that nothing was talked of in al the towne, but this miracle. So happened it thẽ, that Duke Humfrey of Gloceſter, a man no les wiſe, then alſo well learned, hauing great ioye to ſee ſuche a miracle, called the poore man vnto him, and firſt ſhewing himſelfe ioyous of Gods glory, ſo ſhewed in the getting of his ſight, and exhorting him to meekenes, and to no aſcribing of any part of yͤ worſhip to himſelf, nor to be proud of the peoples prayſe, which would call him a good & godly man therby, at laſt he looked well vpon his eyne, and aſked whether he could ſee nothing at al, in al his life before. And when as well his wife as himſelfe affirmed faſtly no, then hee looked aduiſedly vpon his eyen againe, and ſayd: I beleue you very well, for me thinketh ye cannot ſee well yet. Yes ſyr, quod he, I thanke God and hys holy martyr, I can ſee now as well as any mã. (Yea can (quod yͤ duke) what colour is my gowne? Then anon the begger tolde him. What colour (quoth he) is this mans gowne? He told him alſo, and ſo forth without any ſticking, he told him the names of all yͤ colours that could be ſhewed him. And when the Duke ſaw that, he bad him walke traytour, and made him to be ſet openly in the ſtockes: For though he could haue ſeene ſodenly by miracle the difference betwene diuers colours, yet could he not by the ſight ſo ſodeinly tell the names of al theſe coulours, except he had known them before, no more then the names of all the men, that he ſhuld ſodaynly ſee.

Diſsimulation wel puniſhed.

By this may it be ſeene howe Duke Humfrey had not onely an head to diſſerne and diſſeuer trueth from forged and fayned hipocriſie, but ſtudy alſo and dilligence lykewiſe was in him, to reforme that which was amiſſe.

Commendation of Duke Humfrey.

And thus much hetherto for the noble prowesse & vertues, ioyned with yͤ like ornamentes of knowledge, & literature ſhining in this Princely duke. For the which, as he was both loued of the poore commons, and wel ſpoken of all men, & no les deſeruing the ſame, being called the good Duke of Gloceſter, ſo neither yet wanted hee his enemies and priuy enuiers, whether it was through the fatall and vnfortunate lucke of the name of that houſe which is but a vayn & friuolous obſeruation of Polydore, & Halle which followeth hym, bringing in the examples of Hugh Speſer of Thomas of Woodſtock, ſonne of K. Edward the thyrd of this Duke Humfry, and after of king Richard the thyrd Duke likewiſe of Glouceſter: or whether it was that yͤ nature of true vertue cõmonly is ſuche, that as the flame euer beareth his ſmoke, and the body his ſhadow: ſo the brightnes of vertue neuer blaſeth, but hath ſome diſdayne or enuy wayting vpon it: or els whether it was rather for ſome diuorcement from his wife, or for ſome other vice or treſpaſſe done (as ſeemeth moſt like truth) which God as well in dukes houſes correcteth, as in other inferiour parſons, eſpecially where he loueth: But howſoeuer the cauſe is to vs vnknowne, this good Duke of Gloceſter, albeit beyng both yͤ kinges ſole vncle, & hauing ſo many well willers thorough yͤ whol realme, yet lacked not hys Sathan: lacked not his ſecret maligners. Of whom ſpecially was Hẽry Beuford Cardinal, Biſh. of Wincheſter and Chaunceller of England: who of long time diſdayning and enuying the rule and authoritie of this Duke: firſt had diſpoſed and appoynted himſelfe, to remoue the kings perſon from Eltham vnto Winſor out of the Dukes handes, and there to put in ſuch gouernours, as him liſted. After that, entẽding the Dukes death, he ſet men of armes and Archers at the end of London bridge, and for barring the hye waye wyth a draw chain, ſet men in chambers, ſellers and windowes with bowes and arrowes and other weapons, to the purpoſed deſtructiõ both of the duke & his retinue, if God had not ſo diſpoſed, to turne his iourny an other way. Beſide other manifold iniuries and moleſtations, the Ambitious Cardinall, ſeeking by all meanes to be Pope, procured ſuch trouble agaynſt him, that great deuiſion was thereby in the whole Realme: in ſomuch that all the ſhops within yͤ city of London, were ſhut in, for feare of the fauourers of theſe two great perſonages, for each part had aſſembled no ſmall number of people. For the pacifying whereof yͤ archbiſhop of Caunterbury, and the Duke of Quinber, called the prince of Portingall, rode 7. tymes in one day betwene thoſe two aduerſaryes. Such were then the troubles of this tumultuous diuiſion within the realme, and al by the excitation of this vnquiet Cardinall.

The good Duke of Gloceſter.

Polyd. Hiſt lib. 23 Hall in 25. Hen. 6.

The enemies to the Duke of Gloceſter.

The malicious working of the cardinall againſt the Duke of Gloceſter.

W. De la Pole Duke of Suffolke, the cauſe of the Duke of Gloceſters death.

Ouer and beſide, this Cardinall afore mentioned, an other Capitall enemy to the ſaid Duke, was William de la Pole, firſt Earle, then Marques, at laſt Duke of Suffolke a man very ill reported of in ſtoryes, to be not only yͤ orgã & inſtrument of this good mans death, but alſo to be the noyance of the common wealth, & ruine of the realme. For by him and hys onely deuiſe, was firſt concluded the vnprofitable and vnhonourable mariage betweene the kyng & Lady Margaret daughter of yͤ Duke of Angeow: where as the king had concluded & contracted a mariage before wͭ the daughter of the Earle of Arminik, vpon conditions ſo much more profitable and honourable, as more conuenient it is for a Prince to mary a wife with riches & frends then to take a mayd wͭ nothing, & disherite himſelfe, & hys realme of old rightes, & ancient inheritance, which ſo came to paſſe. And all this the good Duke did well foreſee, & declared no leſſe: but hys counſel would not be taken. Whereupon followed firſt the geuing away the Duchy of Angeow: & the Citie of Mayne, with the whole Country of Mayne, to Reyner Duke of Angeow & father of the Damoſell, called then K. of Sicile & of Hieruſalẽ, hauing ther of no peny profite, but onely a vayne name to play withal.

The vnprofitable mariage betweene K. Hen. 6. and Queene Margaret.

Queene Margaret mortall enemy to the Duke of Gloceſter.

An other ſore enemy and mortall plague to this Duke was the Queene her ſelfe, lately before maried to the king. Who being of haute ſtomack, and all ſet vpon glory of wit and wilynes lacking nothing, and perceiuing her huſband to be ſimple of wit, and eaſy to be ruled, tooke vpon her to rule and gouerne both the king & kingdome. And becauſe the aduiſe & counſaile of Humfrey duke of Gloceſter, was ſomewhat a ſtay that her authoritie and regimẽt could not ſo fully procede, and partly becauſe the ſayd Duke before dyd diſagree from that mariage, this manly women and couragious Queene ceaſed not by all imaginations and practiſes poſſible, to ſet forwarde his deſtruction, hauing alſo for her helper herein the Duke of Buckingham. &c.

The malice of a woman.

A ſnare to catch the innocent.

Theſe being his principall enemies and mortall foes, fearing leaſt ſome commotion might ariſe, if ſuch a Prince ſo neare the kinges bloud, and ſo deare to the people, & of all men ſo beloued, ſhold be openly executed & put to death, deuiſed how to trap him, and circumuẽt him vnknowing and vnprouided. For the more ſpeedy furtherance wherof, a Parlia-

Anno. 1447.

A parliament at Bery.

a Parliament was ſũmoned to be kept at Bery, an. 1447. farre from the citizens of London, as william Tyndall in his booke of practiſe, writeth. where reſorted all the peres of the realme, and amongſt them the Duke of Glouceſter, thinking no harme to any man, & leſſe to himſelfe. who on the ſecond day of the Seſsion, was by the Lord Beamonde high Conſtable then of Englande, accompanied with the Duke of Buckingham and other, arreſted, apprehended, and put in ward, and vpon the ſame all his ſeruaunts diſcharged and put from him, of whome 32. of the principall being alſo vnder arreſt, were diſperſed into diuers priſõs to the great murmuring and greuance of the people. After this arreſt thus done, and the Duke put in to warde, the night after (ſaith Halle) 6. nightes after (ſayth Fabian and Polychron, he was found dead in hys bed the 24. of February and his body ſhewed to the Lordes and Commons, as though he had bene taken naturally with ſome ſodayne diſeaſe. And although no woũd in his body could be ſeene: yet to al indifferent perſons it might wel be iudged, that he dyed of no naturall pang, but of ſome violent hand. Some ſuſpected him to be ſtrangled, ſome that a whole ſpytt was priuily forced into his body, ſome affirme yͭ he was ſtyfeled betweene to fether beds. After the death of this Duke, and hys body being enterred at S. Albons, after he had politikely by the ſpace of 25. yeares gouerned this realme, 5. of his houſholde to wit, one knight, 3. Eſquiers, and a Yeoman, were arreigned, & conuict to be hanged, drawn & quartered. who being hanged and cut downe halfe aliue, yͤ Marques of Suffolke, there preſent ſhewed the charter of the kinges pardon, and ſo they were deliuered. Notwithſtanding, all this could not appeaſe the grudge of the people, ſaying that the ſauing of the ſeruauntes, was no amends for the murdering of the mayſter.

The cruel death or martyrdome of the good Duke of Gloceſter.

The iudgement of god vpon thẽ which perſecuted the Duke of Gloceſter.

In this cruell facte of theſe perſons, which did ſo conſpire and conſent to the death of this noble man, & whiche thought thereby to worke their owne ſafety, the meruailous work of gods iudgement, appeareth herein to be noted: who as in all other like cruell pollices of mã, ſo in this alſo turned al theyr pollices clean contrary. So that where yͤ Queene thought moſt to preſerue her huſband in honor, and her ſelfe in ſtate, thereby both ſhe loſt her huſband, her huſband loſt his realm, the realm loſt Angeow, Normãdy the Duchy of Aquitane, with all her partes beyond yͤ ſea, Calice only except, as in ſequele of the matter, who ſo will read the ſtoryes, ſhall right well vnderſtand.

Anno. 1448.

The death of the Cardinall, and maner of the ſame.

The wordes of the Cardinall of Wincheſter at his derth.

The next yeare following, it followed alſo, that yͤ Cardinall, who was the principall artificer and ringleader of all this miſchiefe, was ſuffered of God no lõger to liue. Of whoſe wicked conditions being more largely ſet foorth in Edward Halle, I omitte here to ſpeake. what he himſelfe ſpake in his deathbed for example to other, I thought not beſt to pretermit. who hearing that he ſhuld dy, & that ther was no remedy, murmured & grudged, wherfore he ſhuld dye, hauing ſo much riches, ſaying: that if the whole realm would ſaue hys life, he was able either by pollicy to get it, or by riches to buy it: adding & ſaying moreouer, fie (quod he) will not death be hyred? nor will money doe nothing? whẽ my nephew of Bedford dyed, I thought my ſelfe halfe vp the wheele, but whẽ I ſaw mine other nephew of Gloceſter deceaſſed, then I thought my ſelfe able to be equal wͭ kinges, and ſo ought to encreaſe my treaſure, in hope to haue worne the triple crown. &c. Ex Edou Hallo. And thus is the rich byſhop of wincheſter, with all his pompe and riches gone, with the which riches, he was able not onely to build ſcholes, colledges and Vniuerſities, but alſo was able to ſuſteine the kinges armies in warre (as is ſpecified in ſtoryes) without any taxing of the commons.

Will. Wanflet Biſhop of Wint.

Magdalen Colledge in Oxford builded.

In whoſe ſeate next ſucceded william wanflet, preferred to the byſhopricke of wincheſter who though he had leſſe ſubſtaunce, yet hauing a minde more godly diſpoſed, did found and erecte the Colledge of Mary Magdalen in Oxford. For the which foundation, as there haue ben, and be yet many ſtudentes bound to yeld gratefull thanks vnto God, ſo I muſt needes confeſſe my ſelfe to be one, except I will be vnkinde.

Gods puniſhment vpon the Marques of Suffolke.

Among yͤ other miſchieuous aduerſaries which ſought and wrought the death of Humfrey Duke of Glouceſter, next to the Cardinall of wincheſter (who, as is ſayd, dyed yͤ next yere following) was william de la Pole, Marques of Suffolk, who alſo liued not long after, nor long eſcaped vnpuniſhed. For although he was highly exalted, by the meanes of yͤ Queene (whoſe maryage he onely procured) vnto yͤ fauour of yͤ king, & was made Duke of Suffolke, & magnified of the people, and bare the whole ſway in the realme, whoſe actes and facts his vayne glorious head cauſed alſo by the aſſent of the commons, to be recorded, & ſubſtantially to be regiſtred in the rolles of the Parliament, for a perpetuall renowne to him, and all his poſteritie for euer: yet notwſtanding the hand of Gods iudgement ſtill hanging ouer hym, he enioyed not long this his triũphant victory. For within 3. yeares after the death and ruine of yͤ Cardinall, the voyces of the whole commons of England were vtterly turned againſt him, accuſing him in the Parliament at the blacke Fryers, for deliuery of the Duchye of Angeow, and Earledome of Maine: alſo for the death of yͤ noble Prince Humfry Duke of Gloceſter. They imputed moreouer to hym the loſſe of all Normandye, laying vnto him that he was a ſwallower vp and conſumer of yͤ kings treaſure, the expeller of al good and vertuous counſaylers from the king, and aduancer of vicious perſons, apparant aduerſaryes to the publicke wealth: ſo that he was called in euery mouth a traytour, a murderer, and a robber of the kinges treaſure.

The vaine glory of mans hart forgetting himſelfe in honour. The commons vncõſtant.

The Duke of Suffolke accuſed by the cõmons.

The Queene, albeit ſhe tenderly loued the Duke, yet to appeaſe the exclamation of the commons, was forced to committe hym to the tower, where he, with as much pleaſure and liberty as could be, remayned for a month whiche being expired, he was deliuered and reſtored agayne into his old place, & former fauour with the kyng: where at the people more grudged then before. It happened by the occaſion of a commotion then beginning amongeſt the rude people, by one whom they called Blewbeard, that the parliament, was for that tyme, adiourned to Leyceſter, thinking to the Queene, by force and rigour of lawe to repreſſe there the malice and euill will conceiued againſt the duke. But at that place few of yͤ nobilitie would appeare, wherfore it was againe reiourned vnto Londõ, & kept at weſtminſter, where was a whole company, & a ful appearance with the king and Queene, & with them the duke of Suffolke, as chiefe counſailour. The commons not forgetting their old grudge, renewed agayn their former articles and accuſations agaynſt the ſayde duke, agaynſt the byſhop of Saliſb. & ſyr Iames Fynies, Lord Say, and other. when the kyng perceaued yͭ no gloſing nor diſſimulation would ſerue to appeaſe the continual clamour of the importunate cõmons, to make ſome quiet pacificatiõ, firſt he ſequeſtred from hym the Lord ſay, treaſurer of Englande, & other the Dukes adherentes from theyr offices. Then he put in exile the Duke of Suffolke, for the terme of 5. yeares, ſuppoſing by that ſpace the furious rage of yͤ people would aſſwage.

The Duke of Suffolke againe accuſed.

Example of Gods iudgement and of bloud reuenged.

The Duke of Suffolke beheaded

But the hand of God woulde not ſuffer yͤ giltles bloud of Humfrey Duke of Gloceſter, to be vnreuenged, or that flagitious perſon further to continue. For whẽ he ſhipped in Suffolke, intending to be tranſported into Fraunce: he was encountred with a ſhippe of warre belonging to the tower: whereby he was taken, and brought into Douer rode, and there on the ſide of a ſhip boat, one ſtrake of his head: which was about the yeare of our Lord. 1450.

And thus haue ye heard the full ſtorye, and diſcourſe of Duke Humfrey, and of all hys aduerſaries, alſo of Gods condigne puniſhment vpon them for their bloudy cruelty. But before I remoue from the ſayde ſtory of the foreſayde Duke, and of the proud Cardinall his enemy, I will here by the way, annexe a certaine inſtrument by the kyng and aduiſe of his counſayle, made agaynſt the ſayde Cardinall, taking vpon him to enter into this realme, as Legate frõ the Pope, contrary to the old lawes and cuſtomes of thys realme, as by the wordes of the ſayd inſtrument here in Latine may well appeare.

An inſtrument by the king againſt the admitting the Popes legate.

The ſumme and effecte whereof in Engliſhe is this, that in the yeare of our Lord.1428.as the King with Duke Humfrey Lord protectour,& the reſt of the counſayle, were in the Dukes houſe in the Pariſh of S.Bennets by Paules warfe,one Richard Candray procuratour, in the kinges name and behalfe did proteſt and denounce by thys publicke inſtrument,that where as the kyng and all hys progenitours,kinges before him of thys realme of Englãd haue bene heretofore poſſeſſed tyme out of mynde, with ſpeciall priuiledge and cuſtome vſed and obſerued in thys Realme from tyme to time,that no Legate from the Apoſtolicke ſea ſhould enter into thys land or anye of the kynges dominions, without the calling,petition,requeſt,inuitement or deſire of the kyng, and for ſo much as Henry byſhop of Wint. and Cardinall of S.Euſebius, hath preſumed ſo to enter as Legat from the Pope, beyng neyther called,ſent for,required, or deſired by the kyng: therfore the ſayd Richard Candray in thekynges name doth proteſt by this inſtrument,that it ſtandeth not with the kinges minde or intent,by the aduiſe of hys counſayle,to admit, approue, or ratifie the cõming of the ſayd Legate in anye wiſe, in derogation of the rightes,cuſtomes and lawes of this hys realme : or to recogniſe,or aſſent to any exerciſe of this hys authoritie Legantine,or to anye actes,attempted, or hereafter by hym to be attempted in this reſpect cõtrary to the foreſayd lawes,rightes,cuſtomes, and liberties of this Realme,by theſe preſentes.&c.

And thus much as an Apendix, annexed to the ſtory of Duke Humfrey,and the Cardinal of wint. extracte out of an olde written volume,remaining in the handes of maiſter william Bowyer.

¶The benefite and inuention of Printing.

Anno. 1450.

The arte of printing inuented.

Ex Tipographia per Mattheum Iudicem.

IN following the courſe and order of yeares, we find this foreſayd yeare of our Lord.1450. to be famous and memorable,for the diuine and miraculous inuention of printing. Nauclerus,and wymſelingus folowing him,referre the inuention thereof to the yeare 1440. In paralipom. Abbatis Vrſp. it is recorded this facultie to be found. an. 1446. Auentinus and Zieglerus do ſay,an.1450. The firſt inuẽtour thereof (as moſte agree) is thought to bee a Germayne dwelling firſt in Argentine, afterward Cittizen of Mentz,named Iohn Fauſtus,a goldſmith. The occaſiõ of this inuention firſt was by engrauing yͤ letters of yͤ Alphabet in mettal:who then laying blacke incke vpon the mettall,gaue the forme of letters in paper. The man being induſtrious, and actiue,perceiuing that, thought to proceed further, and to proue whether it woulde frame as well in words, and in whole ſentences,as it did in letters. which when he perceaued to come well to paſſe,he made certayne other of his counſaile, one Iohn Guttemberge & Peter Schafferd,binding them by their othe,to keepe ſilence,for a ſeaſon. After x. yeares, Iohn Guttemberge compartner wͭ Fauſtus,began then firſt to broch the matter at Strauſbrough. The Arte beyng yet but rude, in proceſſe of tyme, was ſet forward by inuentiue wittes, adding more and more to the perfection thereof. In the number of whome, Iohn Mentell , Iohn Prus , Adolphus Ruſchius, were great helpers, Vlricus Han , in latine called Gallus, firſt brought it to Rome. whereof yͤ Epigram was made.

Printing came of God.

Printing likened to the giftes of tongues.

Notwithſtanding, what man ſoeuer was the inſtrument,without all doubt God himſelfe was the ordayner and diſpoſer thereof,no otherwiſe,then he was of the gifte of tongues,and that for a ſinguler purpoſe. And well may this gift of printing be reſembled to the gift of tongues:for like as God then ſpake with many tongues, and yet all yͤ would not turne the Iewes,ſo now, when the holy ghoſt ſpeaketh to yͤ aduerſaries in innumerable ſorts of bookes, yet they will not be conuerted:nor turne to the Goſpell.

Now to conſider to what ende and purpoſe the Lorde hath geuen this gift of Printing to the earth, and to what great vtility and neceſſity it ſerueth, it is not hard to iudge who ſo wiſely perpendeth both the time of the ſending, & the ſequele which therof enſueth.

The time conſidered when Printing was founde.

And firſt,touching the time of this faculty geuen to the vſe of man, this is to be marked : that when as the Byſhop of Rome,with all the whole & ful conſent of the Cardinals,Patriarches,Archbiſhops,byſhops,Abbots,Priours,Lawyers,Doctors,Pronoſtes, Deanes, Archdeacons,aſſembled together in the councell of Conſtance,had condemned poore Iohn Hus,& Hierom of Prage to death for hereſie,notwithſtanding they were no heretickes, and after they had ſubdued the Bohemians, and all the whole world vnder the ſupreme authority of the Romiſh ſea:and had made all Chriſtẽ people abedienciaries & vaſſals vnto the ſame,hauing(as one would ſay)all the worlde at theyr will,ſo that the matter now was paſt not only the power of al men,but the hope alſo of any man to be recouered. In this very time ſo daungerous and deſperate,where mans power could do no more,there the bleſſed wiſedome & omnipotent power of the Lord began to work for his church not with ſword and tergate to ſubdue his exalted aduerſary, but with Printing, writing, and reading to conuince darkenes by light,errour by truth, ignorance by learning So that by this meanes of printing, the ſecret operatiõ of God hath heaped vpon that proud kingdome a double cõfuſion. For where as the byſhop of Rome,had burned I. Hus before,and Hierome of Prage , who neither denyed his tranſubſtantiation, nor hys ſupremacie, nor yet hys Popiſhe Maſſe, but ſayd Maſſe,and heard maſſe themſelues, neither ſpake agaynſt his purgatory, nor anye other great matter of his popiſhe doctrine, but onely exclaymed agaynſt his exceſſiue and pompous pride, hys vnchriſtian or rather Antichriſtian abhomination of life:thus while he could not abide his wickednes onely of life to be touched, but made it hereſie,or at leaſt matter of death, what ſoeuer was ſpoken agaynſt hys deteſtable conuerſation,and maners,God of hys ſecret iudgement,ſeing tyme to helpe his Church,hath found a way by this facultie of Printing,not onely to confound his life, and conuerſation,which before he could not abide to be touched,but alſo to caſt downe the foundatiõ of his ſtanding,that is,to examine,confute, and detect his doctrine,laws, and inſtitutions moſt deteſtable in ſuch ſort,that though his life were neuer ſo pure:yet his doctrine ſtanding,as it doth,no man is ſo blinde,but may ſee,that eyther the pope is Antichriſt,or els that Antichriſt is neare coſine to the pope:And al this doth,and wil hereafter more and more appeare by Printing.

Double confuſiõ vpon the Pope by printing.

The fruit & profite of printing.

The reaſon whereof is this:for yͤ hereby tongues are knowne,knowledge groweth,iudgemẽt increaſeth,books are diſperſed,the Scripture is ſeene,the Doctours be read ſtories be opened,times compared,truth decerned,falſhod detected,and with finger poynted,and all (as I ſayd) thorough the benefite of printing. wherfore I ſuppoſe that eyther the pope muſt aboliſh printing, or he muſt ſeek a new world to raygne ouer:for els,as this world ſtandeth, printing doubtles will aboliſh hym. But the pope, and all hys Colledge of Cardinals,muſt this vnderſtãd, that through the light of printing, the worlde beginneth nowe to haue eyes to ſee,and heades to iudge. He cannot walke ſo inuiſible in a net,but he will be ſpyed. And although thorough might he ſtopped the mouth of Iohn Hus before , and of Hierome,that they might not preache, thinking to make his kingdome ſure:yet in ſtede of Iohn Hus & other God hath opened the preſſe to preach, whoſe voyce the Pope is neuer able to ſtop with all yͤ puiſſance of his triple crown. By this printing, as by the gift of tongues, and as by the ſingular organe of the holy Ghoſt,the doctrine of the Goſpell ſoundeth to all nations and countryes vnder heauen: and what God reuealeth to one man, is diſperſed to many and what is knowne in one nation, is opened to all.

Good counſaile to the Pope.

The firſt and beſt were for the biſhop of Rome, by the benefite of printing, to learne and know the trueth. If he will not, let him well vnderſtand that printing is not ſet vp for naught. To ſtriue againſt the ſtreame, it auayleth not. what the pope hath loſt, ſince printing and the preſſe began to preach, let hym caſt hys counters. Firſt when Eraſmus wrote, and Frobenius Printed, what a blow therby was geuen to all Fryers and monks in the world? And who ſeeth not, that the penne of Luther following after Eraſmus and ſet forward by writing, hath ſet the triple crown ſo awry on the popes head, that it is like neuer to be ſet ſtreight agayne.

Briefly, if there were no demonſtration to leade, yet by this one argument of printing, the biſhop of Rome might vnderſtand the counſayl and purpoſe of the Lord to worke agaynſt him, hauing prouided ſuch a way in earth, that almoſt how many printing preſſes there be in yͤ world ſo many blockhouſes there be agaynſt the high caſtle of S. Angell. So that eyther the pope muſt aboliſhe knowledge and Printing, or printing at length will roote him out. For if a man wiſely conſider the holde and ſtanding of the pope, thus he may repute with himſelfe, that as nothing made the pope ſtrong in time paſt, but lacke of knowledge and ignoraunce of ſimple Chriſtians: ſo contrariwiſe now nothing doth debilitate and ſhake the high ſpire of his Papacie ſo much as reading, preaching, knowledge & iudgement, that is to ſay, the fruit of printing: whereof ſome experience we ſee already, and more is like (the Lord before) to follow. For although, through outward force and violẽt cruelty, tonges dare not ſpake, yet the hartes of men dayly (no doubt) be inſtructed through this benefite of printing. And though the pope both nowe by cruelty, and in tymes paſt by ignoraunce, had all vnder hys poſſeſſion: yet neyther muſt he thinke, that violence will alwayes continue, neyther muſt he hope for that now, which he had then: for ſo much as in thoſe former dayes, bookes then were ſcarſe & alſo of ſuch exceſſiue price, that few coulde attayne to the buying, fewer to yͤ reading & ſtudying therof: which bookes now by yͤ meanes of this arte, are made eaſie vnto al men. Ye heard before, pag. 665, how Nicholas Belward, bought a new teſtament in thoſe dayes for foure markes and 40. pence, where as now the ſame price will ſerue well 40. perſons with ſo many bookes.

So preached the vicar of Croydẽ in K. Henry the 8. dayes, at Paules croſſe, ſaying that either we muſt roote out printing or elſe printing, will roote out vs.

Moreouer in the pag. 411. col. 1. it was noted and declared by the teſtimony of Armachanus, how for defect of bookes and good authors, both vniuerſities were decaied and good wits kept in ignoraunce, while begging Fryers ſcaping all the wealth from other prieſtes, heaped vp all bookes that coulde be gotten, into theyr owne Libraryes: where eyther they dyd not diligently applye them, or els did not rightly uſe them, or at leaſt kept them from ſuch as more fruitfully would haue peruſed them.

In this then ſo great raritie, and alſo dearth of good books, when neither they which could haue books, would well vſe them, nor they yͭ woulde, could haue them to vſe, what maruell if the greedines of a few prelates did abuſe the blindnes of thoſe daies, to the aduauncement of themſelues? wherefore, almighty God of hys mercifull prouidence, ſeeing both what lacked in the church, and how alſo to remedy the ſame, for yͤ aduauncement of his glory, gaue the vnderſtanding of this excellent arte or ſcience of printing, whereby three ſingular cõmodities at one time came to the world. Firſt, the price of all bookes diminiſhed. Secondly the ſpeedy helpe of reading, more furthered. And thirdly the plenty of all good authours enlarged: according as Aprutinus, doth truely report.

Triple commodity by printing.

Imprimit ille die, quantum non ſcribitur anno. 1.

The preſſe in one day will do in printing,
That none in one yeare can do in writing.

By reaſon whereof, as printing of bookes miniſtred matter of readyng: ſo readyng brought learning: learning ſhewed light, by yͤ brightnes wherof blind ignorance was ſuppreſſed errour detected, & finally Gods glory, wͭ trueth of hys worde, aduaunced. This facultie of Printing was after the inuention of Gunnes, the ſpace of 130. yeares: which inuention was alſo found in Germany, an. 1380. And thus much for yͤ worthy commendation of printing.

When Gunnes were firſt inuented.

¶ The lamentable loſing of Conſtantinople.

{ Anno. 1458. }

ANno. 1453. Conſtantinus Paloelogus, beyng Emperour of Conſtãtinople, the 29. day of the month of May, the great Cittye of Conſtantinople was taken by the Turke Mahometes, after the ſiege of 54. dayes, which ſiege began in the beginning of April. within the city, beſide the Citizens were but onely 6000. reſcuers of the Greekes. And 3000. of the Venetians & Gennues. Againſt theſe, Mahometes brought an army of 400. thouſand, collected out of the countryes and places adioyning nere about, as out of Grecia, Illirico, Wallachia, Dardanis, Triballis, Bulganis, out of Bithynia, Galatia, Lydia, Cecilia, and ſuche other: which places had the name yet of Chriſtians. Thus one neighbour for lucre ſake, helped to deſtroy an other.

The loſing of Conſtantinople.

The Cittie was compaſſed of the Turkes, both by the ſea & land. Mahometes the Turke deuided his armye in 3. ſondry partes, which in 3. partes of the citty, ſo bette the walles and brake them downe, that they attempted by the breaches therof to enter the cittye. But the valiauntnes of the Chriſtians therein wanne much cõmendation, whoſe Duke was called Iohn Iuſtinianus, of Genua. But for ſo much as the aſſaultes were great, and the number of the Chriſtian ſouldiours dayly decreaſed, fighting both at the walles and at the Hauen, agaynſt ſuch a multitude of the Turkes, they were not able long to hold out. Beſide the armyes which lay battering at the walles, the Turke had vpon the ſea his nauy of 200. and 50. ſayle, lying vpon the hauen of the City, reaching from the one ſide of the hauens mouth vnto the other, as if a bridge ſhould be made frõ the one banke to the other. which hauen by the cittizens was barred with yron chaines, whereby the Turks were kept out a certayne ſpace. Agaynſt whiche nauy 7. ſhips there were of Genua, within the hauen, and 3. of Creta, and certayne of Chio, which ſtoode agaynſt them. Alſo the ſouldiours iſſuing out of the Cittie, as occaſion would ſerue, did manfully gaynſtand them, and wͭ wild fire, ſet their ſhips on fire, that a certayn ſpace they could ſerue to no vſe. At length the cheynes being braſt, & a way made, the Turkes nauy entred the hauen, and aſſaulted the Cittie, whereby yͤ Turke began to conceiue great hope, and was in forwardnes to obtain the Citie. The aſſault and ſkirmiſh thẽ waxing more hoate, Mahometes the tyraunt ſtode by vppon an hill, with hys warriours about him, crying & houling out vnto them to ſkale the walles and enter the towne, otherwiſe, if any reculed, he threatned to kill them, and ſo he did. Wherefore a great number of his ſouldiours in theyr repulſe and retire, were ſlaine by the turkes men, being ſet by his commaundement to ſlay them: and ſo they were iuſtly ſerued, and well payd theyr hyer.

The tirannie of the Turke toward his owne men.

Although this was ſome comfort, to the Chriſtians, to ſee and behold out of the Cittie, the Turkes retinue ſo conſumed, yet that hope laſted not long. Shortly after by rage of warre, it happened Iuſtinian the Duke aboue named, to be hurt, who notwithſtanding that he was earneſtly deſired by Paloelogus the Emperour, not to leaue his Tower which he had to keepe, ſeeing hys wound was not deadly daungerous, yet could he not be intreated to tary, but lefte his ſtanding, and his fort diſfurniſhed, ſetting none in his place to award the ſame. And ſo this doughty Duke, hurte more with hys falſe hart, then with force of weapon, gaue ouer and fled to Chius, where ſhortly after for ſorrow, rather then for ſorenes of wound, he died. Many of his ſouldiours ſeeing their captayne flee, followed after, leauing their fort vtterly deſtitute without defence. The Turkes vnderſtanding yͤ vantage, ſoone braſt into the cittie. The Emperour Paloelogus ſeeing no other way but to flee, making toward the gate, eyther was ſlayne, or els troden down wͭ the multitude. In the which gate 800. dead mẽs bodies were found and taken vp.

The cowardnes of Duke Iuſtinian.

The Emperour of Cõſtantinople ſlaine.

The Cittie of Conſtantinople thus being gotte, the Turkes ſacking and raunging about the ſtreetes houſes, and corners, did put to the ſword moſt vnmercifully, whoſoeuer they found, both aged and young: matrones, virgins, children, and infants: ſparing none, the noble matrones and virgins were horriblye rauiſhed, the goods of yͤ cittie, the treaſurers in houſes, the ornaments in churches were all ſackt and ſpoyled, the pictures of Chriſt approbriouſly handled, in hatred of Chriſt. The ſpoyle and hauocke of the citie laſted three dayes together, while yͤ barbarous ſouldiours murdered and rifeled what them liſted.

Cõſtãtinople wonne of the Turkes.

The bloudy victory of the Turkes.

Theſe things thus being done, and the tumult ceaſed, after three dayes, Mahometes the Turke, entreth into the Citie, and firſt calling for the heades and auncientes of the Citie: ſuch as he found to be left aliue, he commaunded thẽ to be mangled and cut in peeces. It is alſo (ſayth my author) reported, that in the feaſtes of the Turks, howſoeuer matrones and virgins, and ſuch as were of the kinges ſtocke, after other contumelies, were brought and cut in peeces for their diſport.

The horrible tirãny of the Turkes.

And this was the end of that princely and famous citty of Conſtantinople, beginning firſt by Conſtantinus, and ending

Conſtantinople called new Rome.

ending alſo with Conſtātinus: which for the princely royalty thereof, was named and euer honoured, from the time of the firſt Conſtantine, equally with the City of Rome, & called alſo by the name thereof new Rome, & ſo continued the ſpace of 1120. yeares. I pray God that olde Rome may learne of new Rome, to take heed and beware by tyme.

A warning to all Chriſtendome, by Conſtantinople.

This terrible deſtruction of the Citty of Conſtantinople, the Queene of Cittyes, I thought here to deſcribe, not ſo much to ſet forth ẏ barbarous cruelty of theſe filthy rakehels and mercileſſe murtherers: as ſpecially for this, that we being admoniſhed by the dolefull ruine and miſery of theſe our euenchriſtened, may call to minde the plagues & miſeryes deſerued, whiche ſeeme to hang no leſſe ouer our owne heades, and thereby may learne betime to inuocate and call more earneſtly vpon the name of our terrible and mercifull God, that he for his ſonnes ſake, will keepe vs, & preſerue his church among vs, and mitigate thoſe plagues and ſorrowes, whiche we no leſſe haue deſerued, then theſe aboue minded, before vs. Chriſt graunt it. Amen. Ex hiſt. Wittenbergica Peucer.

✱ The hiſtory of Reynold Pecocke Byſhop of Chicheſter, afflicted and impriſoned for the Goſpell of Chriſt.

The ſtory of Reinold Pecocke.

AFter the death of Henry Chichiſley before mentioned, pag. 657. next ſucceeded Iohn Stafford. an. 1445. who continued 8. yeares. After hym came Iohn Kempe. ann. 1453. who ſate but three yeares. Then ſucceeded Thomas Burſchere. In the time of which Archbiſhop, fell the trouble of Reynold Pecocke, Biſhop of Chicheſter, afflicted by the Popes Prelates for hys fayth and profeſſion of the Goſpell. Of this Byſhoppe, Halle alſo in his Chronology toucheth a little mention, declaring that an ouerthwart iudgement (as he termeth it) was geuen by the Fathers of the ſpiritualty agaynſt him. Thys man (ſayth he) beganne to moue queſtions not priuatly, but openly in the Vniuerſityes, concerning the Annates, Peter pence, and other iuriſdictions and authorities perteyning to the ſea of Rome, and not onely put forth the queſtiōs, but declared his mind and opinion in the ſame: wherefore he was for thys cauſe abiured at Paules Croſſe. Thus muche of hym wryteth Hall. Of whom alſo recordeth Polychronycon, but in few wordes. This biſhop, firſt of S. Aſſaphe, then of Chicheſter, ſo long as Duke Humfrey lyued (by whome he was promoted and much made of) was quiet and ſafe, and alſo bolde to diſpute and to write hys mynde, and wrote (as Leland recordeth) diuers bookes and treatiſes. But after that good Duke was thus (as ye haue heard) made away, this good man lacking his backſtay, was open to his enemies, and matter ſoone found agaynſt hym. Wherupon he being complayned of, and accuſed by priuy and malignant promoters vnto the Archbiſhop, letters firſt were directed downe from the Archbiſhop, to cite al men to appeare that could ſay any thing agaynſt hym. The forme of which citation here enſueth.

✱ The copy of the Citation ſent by the Archbyſhoppe.

The citatiō of the Arch. Tho. Bowcher, alias Bourtchet.

THomas by the permiſſion of God, Archb. of Canterbury, primate of all England and Legate of the Apoſtolicke Sea, to all and ſinguler Parſons, Vicares, Chaplaynes, Curates, & not Curates, Clerkes and learned men, whatſoeuer they be, conſtitute & ordeined in any place throughout our prouince of Caunterbury, health, grace and benediction.

We haue receiued a greeuous complaint of our reuerend felow brother, Reynold Pecocke Byſhop of Chicheſter, conteyning in it, that albeit our ſayd reuerend felow brother, the Byſhop, deliuered vnto vs certayne bookes written by him in the Engliſh tongue, by vs and our authority to be examined, corrected reformed and allowed: notwithſtanding many (the examination and reformation of the ſayde bookes depending and remayning before vs vndiſcuſſed) haue openly preached and taught at Paules croſſe in London, and in diuers other places of our prouince of Canterbury, that our ſayd felow brother the Byſhop, hath propoūded, made and written, or cauſed to be writen in the ſayde bookes, certayne concluſions repugnaunt to the true fayth, and that he doth obſtynately hold and defend the ſame.

By the pretence of which preaching and teaching, the ſtate & good name and fame of the ſayd Lord Reynolde the Byſhoppe, are greeuouſly offended and hurt, and he and his opinion marueillouſly burdened. Wherefore we charge you all together, and ſeuerally apart do commaund you, firmely enioyning you, that openly and generally you doe warne or cauſe to bee warned, all and ſingular ſuch perſons, whiche will obiect any thing contrary and agaynſt the concluſions of our ſayd reuerēd felow brother the Biſhop, had or conteined in his bookes or writings: that the 20. day after ſuch monition or warning had, they do freely of theyr own accord appeare before vs and our Commiſſaryes in this behalfe appoynted whereſoeuer we ſhall then be in our Citty, Dioces, or prouince of Canterbury, to ſpeake, propound, alledge, and affirme fully & ſufficiently in writinge, whatſoeuer hereticall or erroneous matter they wil ſpeak, propound, or obiect agaynſt the ſayde concluſions conteyned in his ſayde bookes: and both to ſatiſfye and receiue, whatſoeuer ſhall ſeeme meete and right in this behalfe by the holy inſtitutions and ordinaunces.

And forſomuche as this matter depending yet vndetermined and vndiſcuſſed, nothing ought to be attempted or renewed: we charge you that by this our authority, you inhibite and forbid all and euery one ſo to preach and teach hereafter. Vnto whom alſo we by the the tenour of theſe preſents, do likewiſe forbid, that during the examination of the concluſions and bookes aforeſayde, depending before vs and our Commiſſaryes vndiſcuſſed, they do not preſume by any meanes, without good aduiſe and iudgemēt, to preach, iudge, and affirme any thing to the preiudice or offēce of the ſayd Lord Reynold the Byſhop and if ſo be, you do finde any in this behalfe gayneſaying or not obeying this our inhibitiō, that you do cite or cauſe thē peremptorily to be cited, to appeare before vs or our Commiſſaryes, in this behalfe appoynted, the 10 day after theyr citation, if it be a courte day or els the next courte day following, whereſoeuer we ſhall then be, in our City, Dioces, or prouince of Canterbury, to make further declaration by form of law of the cauſe of their diſobediēce & to receiue ſuch puniſhment as iuſtice and equity ſhall determine in that behalfe: & that by your leters, you do duely certify vs or our Commiſſaries, what you haue done in the premiſſes at the day and place aforeſayd: or that he which hath ſo executed our commaundement, do ſo certifie vs by his letters. Dated at our Manour of Lambeth the xxij. day of October. an. 1457 and in the 4. yeare of our tranſlation.

Pecocke appeareth at Lambeth before the Archb.

This citation being directed, the Byſhop vpon the ſumon thereof, was brought, or rather came before ẏ iudges and Biſhops, vnto Lambeth, where the foreſaid Thomas the Archbiſhop, with his doctors and Lawyers, were gathered together in the Archbiſhops Court. In which conuention alſo the Duke of Buckingham was preſent, accōpanyed with the Biſhop of Rocheſter, and of Lyncolne. What were the opiniōs and articles agaynſt him obiected, after in his reuocation ſhall be ſpecified. In his anſwering for himſelfe in ſuch a company of the Popes frendes, albeit he coulde not preuayle, notwithſtanding he ſtoutly defending himſelfe declared many thinges worthye great commendation of learning, if learning agaynſte power coulde haue preuayled.

Great labour, to reduce Pecocke from his opiniōs

But they on the contrary part, with all labor and trauel, extended themſelues, either to reduce him, or els to cōfound him. As here lacked no bluſtring wordes of terrour and threatning: ſo alſo many fayre flattering wordes and gentle perſuaſions, were admixt with al. Briefely, to make a ſhort narration of a long and buſy trauers, here was no ſtone lefte vnturned, no wayes vnprooued, eyther by fayre meanes to entreat him, or by terrible manaſſes to terrifye his mind, till at the length, he being vanquiſhed and ouercome by the biſhops, began to faynt and gaue ouer. Wherupon, by & by a recantation was put vnto him by the Byſhops, which he ſhould declare before the people. The copy of which his recantation here foloweth.

The retractation of B. Pecocke.

Ex regiſt.

IN the name of God Amen. Before you, the moſt reuered Father in Chriſt and Lorde, the Lorde Thomas, by the grace of God, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, primate of England and Legate of the Apoſtolicke ſea, I Reynolde Pecock, vnworthy Biſhop of Chicheſter, do purely, willyngly, ſimply, and abſolutely, cōfeſſe and acknowledge, that I in times paſt, that is to ſay, by the ſpace of theſe 20. yeares laſt paſt and more, haue otherwiſe conceiued, holdē, taught and written, as touching the Sacramentes and the Articles of ẏ fayth, then the holy Church of Rome and vniuerſall Church: and alſo that I haue made, written, publiſhed and ſet forth many & diuers pernitious doctrines, bookes, workes, writings, hereſyes, contrary and agaynſt the true Catholicke, and Apoſtolicke fayth, contayning in them, errours cōtrary to the Catholicke fayth, & eſpecially theſe errours and hereſies here vnder written.

His Articles.

1. Firſt of all, that we are not bounde by the neceſſitye of fayth, to beleue that our Lord Ieſus Chriſt after his death deſcended into hell.
2 Item, that it is not neceſſarye to ſaluation to beleeue in the holy Catholicke Church.
3, Item, that it is not neceſſary to ſaluation, to beleue the communion of Sayntes.

4. Item, that it is not neceſſary to ſaluation, to affirme the body materially in the Sacrament.

5. Item that the vniuerſall Churche may erre in matters which perteyne vnto fayth.

6. Item, that it is not neceſſary vnto ſaluation, to beleue, that that, which euery generall Councell doth vniuerſally ordeine, approue, or determine, ſhould neceſſaryly, for the helpe of our fayth, and the ſaluation of ſoules, be approued and holden of all faythfull Chriſtians.

Wherfore I Reynold Pecocke wretched ſinner, which haue long walked in darckeneſſe, and now by the merciful diſpoſition and ordinaunce of God, am reduced & brought agayne vnto the light and way of truth, and reſtored vnto the vnity of our holy mother the Church: renoũce and forſake all errors and hereſyes aforeſayd.

Notwithſtanding (godly reader) it is not to be beleued that Pecocke did ſo geue ouer theſe opinions, howſoeuer the wordes of the recantation pretend. For it is a pollicy & play of the biſhops that when they do ſubdue or ouercome any mã, they cary him whither they liſt, as it were a yoũg Stere by the noſe, and frame out his words for him before hand, as it were for a Parate, what he ſhould ſpeake vnto the people: not according to his owne will, but after theyr luſt and fantaſy. Neither is it to be doubted, but that thys Biſhop repented him afterward of his recantation: which may eaſely be iudged hereby, becauſe he was committed agayn into priſon, & deteined captiue, where as it is vncertaine, whether he was oppreſſed with priuy and ſecret tyranny, and there obteined the crown of Martyrdom, or no.

The articles of Reynolde Pecocke mentioned by Thomas Gaſcoigne.
Ex Tho. Gaſcoig. lib. De Dictionario. Theolog part. 3.

The Dictionary of Thomas Gaſcoigne, I haue not in my handes preſent. But if credite be to be geuen to ſuch as haue to vs alledged the booke, this we may finde in the 8. Century of Iohn Bale. chapter 19. that the ſayd Thomas Gaſcoigne in his third part of his ſayd dictionary, writing of Reinold Pecocke, maketh declaration of his articles cõteining in them matter of ſore hereſy. Firſt (ſaith he) Reynold Pecock, at Paules croſſe preached openly, that the office of a Chriſten Prelate, chiefly aboue all other things is, to preach the word of God. That mans reaſon is not to be preferred before the Scriptures of the old and new Teſtament. That the vſe of Sacraments, as they be now handled, is worſe, then the vſe of the lawe of nature. That Byſhops which buy theyr admiſſions of the Biſhop of Rome do ſinne. That no man is bound to beleue and obey the determination of the Churche of Rome. Alſo that the riches of Biſhops, by inheritage, are the goods of the poore. Item that the Apoſtles themſelues perſonally were not the makers of the Creed, & that in the ſame Creede, once was not the Article he went downe to hell. Item, that of the foure ſenſes of the Scripture, none is to be taken, but the very firſt and proper ſenſe. Alſo, that he gaue litle eſtimation in ſome poyntes, to the authority of the olde Doctors. Item, that he condemned the wilfull begging of the Friers, as a thing idle and needles. This out of Thomas Gaſcoigne. Leland alſo adding this moreouer, ſayth: that he, not contented to folow the Catholicke ſentence of the Churche in interpreting of the Scripture, did not thinke ſoundly (as he iudged it) of the holy Euchariſt.

B. Pecocke deteyned in priſon

At length, for theſe and ſuche other Articles, the ſayde Reynold Pecocke was condemned for an hereticke by the Archbiſhops, and Biſhops of Roſſe. Lyncolne and Wincheſter, with other diuines moe. Wherupon he being driuẽ to his recantation, was notwithſtanding deteyned ſtill in priſon. Where ſome ſay, that he was priuily made away by death.

Polydore noted.

Halle addeth that ſome ſay, his opinions to bee, that ſpirituall perſons by Gods lawe, ought to haue no temporall poſſeſſions. Other write that he ſayde, that perſonall tithes were not due by Gods lawe. But whatſoeuer the cauſe was, he was cauſed at Paules Croſſe to abiure, and all his bookes brent, and he himſelfe kepte in his owne houſe, during his naturall life. I marueil that Polydore, of this extremity of the Biſhops handling, and of his Articles, in his hiſtory, maketh no memoriall. Belike it made but little for the honeſtye of his great maiſter the Pope.

Eugenius warred againſt Sfortia and diuers other.

From perſecution & burning in England, now out of the way, to digreſſe a little, to ſpeake of forraine matters of the church of Rome: you remẽber before, in ye latter end of the Councell of Baſill, howe Eugenius was depoſed. Of whoſe conditiõs and martiall affayres, how he made war agaynſt Sfortia a famous Captaine of Italy, and what other warres he raiſed beſide, not onely in Italy, but alſo in Germany, agaynſt the City and Councell of Baſill, I ſhal not need to make any long rehearſall. After his depoſitiõ, ye heard alſo how Fœlix duke of Sauoy was elected pope. Wherupõ another great ſchiſme folowed in the church during all the life of Eugenius.

Pope Fœlix.

Pope Nicholas 5.

After his death, his next ſucceſſor was pope Nicholas the fift, who (as you before haue heard) brought ſo to paſſe with the Emperour Fredericke the third that Fœlix was contented to renounce and reſigne his papacy to Nicolas, and was therfore of him afterward receiued to the rowme of a Cardinall, for his ſubmiſſion: & Friderick for his working, was confirmed at Rome to be full Emperor, & there crowned. an. 1451. For Emperors before they be cõfirmed & crowned by the pope, are no Emperors, but onely called kinges of Romaynes.

Emperours are but kinges of Romaines, before they be crowned by the Pope.

Ex Platina de vitis.

The example of Idolatrie puniſhed.

The fruit of Idolatry.

This Pope Nicholas here mentioned, for to get & gather great ſũmes of mony, appoynted a Iubile in the yeare of our Lorde 1450. at whiche time there reſorted a greater number of people vnto Rome, thẽ hath at any time before bene ſeene. At which time, we reade in the ſtory of Platina to haue happened, that I thought here not vnworthy to be noted for the example of the thing. As there was a great concourſe of people reſorting vp to the mount Vaticane to behold the Image of our Sauior, which there they had to ſhew to Pilgrimes, the people being thicke going to & fro betwene the mount & the City, by chaunce a certayn Mule of the Cardinals of ſaynt Marke came by the way, by reaſon whereof the people not being able to auoyde the way, one or two falling vpon the Mule, there was ſuch a preaſe and throng vpon that occaſion on the bridge, that to the nũber of two hundred bodyes of men, and three horſes, were there ſtrangled, and on each ſide of the bridge many beſides fell ouer into the water and were drowned.

By meanes of which occaſiõ, the Pope afterward cauſed the ſmal houſes to be plucked downe, to make the way broder. And this is the fruite that commeth by Idolatrye. Ex Platin.

Mat. Palmerius, a Florentine, martyr.

In the time of this Pope, one Mat. Palmerius wrote a booke De Angelis, in defending whereof, he was condemned by the Pope, and burned at Corna. an. 1448 Ex Tritemio.

Toling of Aues.

After him ſucceeded Calixtus the thyrd, who amongeſt diuers other things ordeined both at noone and at euening the bell to tole the Aues, as it was vſed in the popiſh time, to helpe the ſouldiours that fought agaynſt the Turkes: for which cauſe alſo he ordeined the feaſt of the transfiguration of the Lord, ſolemniſing it with like pardons and indulges, as was Corpus Chriſti day.

S. Edmund of Cant. canoniſed.

Alſo this Pope proceding contrary to the Councels of Conſtance and Baſill, decreed that no man ſhould appeale from the Pope to any Councell. By whome alſo Sayncte Edmunde of Caunterbury with diuers other, were made Sayntes.

Pope Pius. 2.

Promotion choketh religion.

Next after this Calixtus, ſucceded Pius ſecundus, otherwiſe called Æneas Syluius, who wrote the two bookes of Commentaries vpon the Councell of Baſill before mẽtioned. This Æneas, at the time of the writing of thoſe hys bookes, ſeemed to be a man of an indifferent and tollerable iudgement and doctrine, from the which he afterward being Pope, ſeemed to decline and ſwarue, ſeeking by all meanes poſſible, how to deface & aboliſh the bookes which heretofore he had written.

¶ Sentences attributed vnto this Pius.

The Prouerbes of Pius.

The diuine nature of God may rather be comprehended by fayth, then by diſputation.

Chriſtian fayth is to be conſidered, not by what reaſon it is proued, but from whom it proceedeth.

Neyther can a couetous man be ſatiſfied with money, nor a learned man with knowledge.

Learning ought to be to poore men, in ſtead of ſiluer, to noble men in ſtead of golde, and to Princes in ſtead of precious ſtones.

An artificiall oratiõ moueth fooles, but not wiſe men.

Suters in the Lawe, bee as Byrdes, the Courte is the bayte, the Iudges be the nettes, and the Lawyers be the Foulers.

Men are to bee geuen to dignityes, and not dignityes to men.

The office of a Byſhoppe is heauy, but it is bleſſed to him that doth wel beare it.

A Biſhop without learning may be likened to an Aſſe.

An euill Phiſition deſtroyth bodies, but an vnlearned Prieſt deſtroyeth ſoules.

Mariage of prieſtes allowed by Aeneas Syluius.

Mariage was taken from Prieſtes, not without great reaſon, but with muche greater reaſon it ought to be reſtored agayne.

The like ſentence to this he vttereth in his ſecond book of the Councell of Baſil before ſpecified, ſaying, peraduenture it were not the worſt, that the moſt part of prieſtes had theyr wiues: for many ſhoulde be ſaued in Prieſtly mariage, whiche nowe in vnmaryed Prieſthoode are damned. The ſame Pius alſo, as Celius reporteth, diſſolued certayne orders of Nunnes, of the order of S. Briget and S. Clare, bidding them to depart out, that they ſhould burne no more, nor couer a Harlotte vnder the veſture of Religion.

This Pius, if he had brought ſo much piety and godlineſſe, as he brought learning vnto his Popedome, had excelled many Popes that went before him.

It ſhall not be impertinent here to touch, what the ſaid Eneas called Pius, the Pope, writeth touchinge the peace of the church, vnto Gaſper Schlick, the Emperors Chancellor, in his 54. Epiſtle.

Ex epiſt. 54. Pii. ſecund. ad Gaſparum Schlick.

All men do abhorre and deteſt ſchiſme. The way to remedye this euill Charles the French king hath ſhewed vs both ſafe and briefe, which is, that princes or their Oratours ſhould conuent & aſſemble together in ſome cōmon place, where they may cōclude vpon matters amongeſt themſelues. To bring this to paſſe, it were needfull, writinges to be ſent agayne to all Kynges and Princes, to ſend theyr Oratours to Strawesborow, or to Conſtance, with theyr full authority: there to entreate of matters appertayning to the peace of the Church. Neyther woulde it require ſo great expenſes: Foraſmuch as we ſee the yeare before 300. gildernes to be ſufficient. Conſtantine the Emperour beſtowed not muche more in the congregation of the Councell of Nice. And this way could not be ſtopped: neyther could the Pope or the Councell withſtād it, or make excuſe: as though this might not eaſily be done without them. For why? the ſecular princes may conuent and aſſemble together, will they, nill they: and yet notwithſtanding, vnity may there be concluded: For he ſhould be an vndoubted Pope, whom all Princes would obey. Neyther do I ſee any of the clergy ſo conſtant to death, which wil ſuffer Martirdom either for the one part or the other. Al we lightly hold that faith which our princes hold, which if they would worſhip Idols, we would alſo do the ſame, & not onely deny the Pope, but God alſo, if the ſecular power ſtrayn vs thereunto, for charitye is waxed colde, and all fayth is gone. Howſoeuer it be, let vs all deſire and ſeeke for peace, the whiche peace, whether it come by a councell, or by aſſemblye of Princes, call it what you will, I care not: for we ſtand not vpon the terme, but vpon the matter. Call breade if you will, a ſtone, ſo you geue me to aſſwage my hunger. Whether you call it a Councell or a conuenticle, or an aſſembly or a congregation, or a ſynagogue, that is no matter, ſo that ſchiſme may be excluded and peace eſtabliſhed. Thus much out of the Epiſtle of Pius.

The way to exclude ſchiſme, is concord of princes.

The Popes Clergie wil not abyde the fyre, eyther for prince or pope.

By this may it appeare, of what ſentence and minde this Pius was in ẏ time of the Councell of Baſill, before he was made Pope. But as our common prouerbe ſayth, honors chaungeth maners, ſo it happeneth with this Pius, who after he came once to be Pope, was much altered from that he was before. For where as before he preferred generall Councels before the Pope, nowe being Pope, he did decree that no man ſhould appeale from the high Byſhop of Rome: to any generall Councell.

The breath of this peſtilent ſeate corrupteth all that ſit in it, whatſoeuer they were before

And likewiſe for prieſtes mariage, where as before he thought it beſt to haue theyr wiues reſtored, yet afterward he altered his mind otherwiſe: In ſo much that in his book intreating of Germany, and there ſpeaking of the noble city of Auguſt, by occaſion he inueyed agaynſt a certayne Epiſtle of Hulderike once biſhop of the ſayd City, written agaynſt the conſtitution of the ſingle life of prieſts. wherby it appeareth how the minde of this Pius was altered frō that it was before. This Epiſtle of Hulderick is before expreſſed at large in the pag. 137.

Aeneas Syluius now puffed vp with worldly pompe and glorie, impugneth the trueth whiche he did before both know and profeſſe.

Here alſo might I touch ſomething concerning the diſcord betwixt this Æneas Syluius and Diotherus, Archbiſh. of Mentz, and what diſcorde was ſtyrred vp in Germany vpon the ſame betwene Frederick the Palatine, and duke of wittenberge, with others, by the occaſion whereof, beſides the ſlaughter of many, the City of Mentz, which was free before, loſt theyr freedome, and became ſeruile.

Diſcord betwene Pope Pius & the Archbiſhop of Mentz.

The cauſes of the diſcord betwixt Pope Pius and Diotherus, were theſe.

Firſt, becauſe that Diotherus would not conſent vnto him in the impoſition of certaine tallages and taxes, within his country.

Secondly, for that Diotherus would not be bound vnto him, requiring that the ſaid Diotherus being prince Electour, ſhould not call the other Electors together, wythout hys licence that is, without the licence of the Biſhop of Rome.

And thirdly, becauſe Diotherus would not permit to the Popes Legates, to conuocate his Clergy together after theyr owne luſt. This Pope Pius began his ſea, about the yere of our Lord. 1458.

Anno. 1458.

Pope Paulus. 2.

After this Pius ſecundus, ſucceded Paulus ſecūdus, a pope wholy ſet vpon his belly and ambition, and not ſo muche voyd of all learning, as the hater of all learned men. Thys Paulus had a daughter begotten in fornication, which becauſe he ſawe her to be had in reproch, for that ſhe was gotten in fornication, began (as the ſtoryes reporte) to repent him of the law of the ſingle life of prieſtes, and went aboute to reforme the ſame, had not death preuented him. Ex Staniſlao Rutheno.

Ex Staniſlao Rutheno. Vide Cent. 8. Bal.

After this Paulus, came Sixtus the fourth, whiche builded vp in Rome a ſtewes of both kindes, getting thereby no ſmall reuenues and rents vnto the church of Rome. This Pope amongeſt his other actes, reduced the yeare of Iubely from the 50. vnto the 25. He alſo inſtituted the feaſt of the Conception, and of the preſentation of Mary & of Anna her mother, and Ioſeph. Alſo he canoniſed Bonauenture, and S. Fraunces for Sayntes.

The feaſt of the conception and preſentation of our Lady.

Beades brought in.

By this Sixtus alſo, beades were brought in, and inſtituted to make our Ladyes Pſalter, thorowe the occaſion of one Alanus and his order, whome Baptiſta maketh mention of in thys verſe. Hi filo inſertis numerant ſua murmura baccis. That is, theſe menne putting theyr beades vpon a ſtring number theyr prayers. This Sixtus the Pope made xxxij. Cardinals in his time, whom Petris Ruerius, was the firſt, who for that time that he was Cardinall, which was but two yeares, ſpent in luxurious ryot, waſted and conſumed, 2. hundred thouſand Florences and was left 60000. in debt. Weſellus Groningenſis, in a certayne Treatiſe of his, de Indulgentijs papalibus, writing of thys Pope Sixtus, reporteth this, that at the requeſte of the foreſayde Peter Cardinall, and of Ierome his brother the ſayd Pope Sixtus permitted and graunted vnto the whole family of the Cardinall of S. Lucy, in the iij. hoate monethes of ſommer, Iune, Iuly, and Auguſt (a horrible thing to be ſpoken) free leaue and liberty to vſe Sodomitry, with this clauſe, Fiat vt petitur: That is, be it as it is aſked.

Weſellus Groningenſis.

The pope licenſeth the whole familie of a certaine Cardinall, to play the Sodomites three monethes in the yeare.

Next after this Sixtus, came Innocentius the eight as rude and as farre from all learning, as his predeceſſor was before him. Amongeſt the noble factes of this Pope, this was one, that in the towne of Polus apud Æquicolos, he cauſed 8. men and 6. women, with the Lord of the place to be apprehended and taken, and iudged for hereticks, becauſe they ſayd that none of them was the vicare of Chriſt which came after Peter, but they which folowed onely the pouerty of Chriſt. Alſo he condemned of hereſy, George the king of Boheme, and depriued him of his dignity, and alſo of his kingdome, and procured his whole ſtocke to be vtterly reiected and put downe, geuing his kyngdome to Mathias king of Panonia.

George king of Boheme condemned of hereſie.

Now from the Popes to deſcend to other eſtates, it remayneth likewiſe ſomewhat to write of the Emperours incident to this time, with matters and greuaunces of the Germaynes, as alſo of other princes, firſt beginning with our troubles & mutations here at home, perteining to the ouerthrow of this King Henry and of his ſeate nowe folowing, to be ſhewed. And briefly to cōtract long proces of much tumult and buſines, into a ſhort narration, here is it to be remēbred, which partly before was ſignified, how after ẏ death of the Duke of Gloceſter, miſchiefes came in by heapes vpon the king and his realm. For after the geuing away of Angeow, and Mayne to the Frenchmen, by ẏ vnfortunate mariage of Queen Margaret aboue mentioned, the ſayd frenchmen perceiuing now by the death of ẏ duke of Gloceſter, the ſtay and piller of this common wealth to be decayed, and ſeing moreouer the harts of the nobility, amōg themſelues to be deuided, foreſlacked no time, hauing ſuch an open way into Normandy, that in ſhort time they recouered the ſame, & alſo gate Gaſcoigne, ſo that no more now remayned to Englād, of al the parts beyond ẏ ſea but onely Calice. Neither yet did all the calamity of ẏ realme onely reſt in this: For the king now hauing loſt his frendly vncle, as the ſtay & ſtaffe of his age, whiche had brought him vp ſo faythfully from his youth, was now therby the more open to his enemies, & they more emboldened, ſo ſet vpon him: As appeared firſt by Iacke Cade, the Kentiſhe Captayne, who encamping firſt in Blackheath, afterward aſpired to Londō, and had the ſpoyle therof, the king being driuen into warwickſhyre. After the ſuppreſſing of Cade, enſued not long after the duke of York, who being accompanied with 3. Erles, ſet vpon the king nere to S. Albons where the king was taken in the field captiue, & the Duke of York was by Parliamēt declared protector, which was in the yeare of our Lord 1453. After this folowed long diuiſion and mortal warre betwene the two houſes of Lancaſtar and Yorke, continuing many yeares. At length about the yeare of our Lord 1459. the Duke of Yorke was ſlayne in battell by the Queene, neare to the towne of Wakefield, and with him alſo his ſonne Earle of Rutlande. By the which Queene alſo ſhortly after, in ỹ ſame yeare, were diſcomfited the Earle of Warwicke, and Duke of Northfolk, to whom the keeping of the king was committed by the Duke of Yorke, and ſo the Queene agayne deliuered her huſband.

The Northern men intended the ſubuerſion of London.

Ex hiſtoria manuſcripta, cui titulus Scala mundi.

London reſcued by prince Edw.

After this victory obteined, the Northren men aduaũced not a litle in pride and courage, began to take vpon thē great attemptes, not onely to ſpoyle and robbe Churches, and religious houſes, & villages, but alſo were fully entēded partly by themſelues, partly by the inducemēt of theyr Lords and Captaynes, to ſacke, waſte, and vtterly to ſubuert the City of London, and to take the ſpoyle therof: and no doubt (ſayth my hiſtory) woulde haue proceeded in thyr cōceiued gredy intēt, had not ỹ oportune fauor of God prouided a ſpeedy remedy. For as theſe miſchiefes were in bruing, ſodenly commeth the noble Prince Edward vnto Lōdon, wt a mighty army, the 27. day of February, who was the ſonne and heire to duke of Yorke aboue mentioned, accompanyed with the Earle of Warwicke, and diuers moe. King Henry in the meane time, with his victory, went vp to York: when as Edward being at London, cauſed there to be proclaymed certayn articles concerning his title to ỹ crowne of England, which was the 2. day of March.

Anno. 1461.

Wherupon, the next day following, the Lords both tēporall & ſpirituall being aſſēbled together, the ſayd articles were propoſided, and alſo well approued. The fourth day of the ſayd moneth of March, after a ſolemne generall proceſſion (according to the blinde ſuperſtition of thoſe dayes) the Biſhop of Exceter made a Sermon at Paules Croſſe, wherein he commended and proued by manifold euidēces, the title of Prince Edward to be iuſt and lawfull, anſwering in the ſame, to all obiections whiche might be to the contrary.

The title of Edward, to the crowne proued at Paules croſſe.

K. Edward taketh poſſeſſion of the crowne.

This matter being thus diſcuſſed, Prince Edward accompanied with the Lordes ſpirituall & temporall, & with much concourſe of people, rode ỹ ſame day to Weſtminſter Hall, and there by the full conſent, as well of the Lordes, as alſo by the voyce of all the Commons, tooke his poſſeſſion of the Crowne, & was called K. Edward the fourth.

Theſe thinges thus accompliſhed at London, as to ſuch a matter apperteined, and preparation of money ſufficiently being miniſtred of the people and commons, wyth moſt ready and willing mindes, for the neceſſary furniture of his warres: he with the Duke of Northfolke, and Earle of Warwicke, and Lord Fauconbrige, in all ſpeedy wiſe, tooke his iourney toward king Henry: who being now at Yorke, and forſaken of the Londoners, had all his refuge onely repoſed in the Northren men.

The fierce and cruell battaile betweene king Henry. 6. & K. Edward. 4.

When king Edward with his army had paſt ouer the Riuer of Trent and was commē nere to Ferebrig: where alſo the hoſt of king Henry was not far of, vpō Palm Sonday, betwene Ferebrig and Tadcaſter, both the armyes of the Southren and Northren men, ioyned together battell. And althoughe at the firſt beginning, diuers horſemen of king Edwardes ſide, turned theyr backes, and ſpoyled the king of cariage & victuals, yet the courageous prince, with his Captaynes little diſcouraged therewith, fiercely and manfully ſet on theyr aduerſaryes. The whiche battell on both ſides was ſo cruelly fought, that in the ſame conflict were ſlayne to ỹ nūber, as is reported, beſide men of name, of 30000. of the poore commons. Notwithſtanding, the cōqueſt fell on king Edwardes part, ſo that king Henry hauing loſt all, was forced to flye into Scotland, where alſo he gaue vp to the Scottes, the towne of Barwicke after he had raigned 38. yeares and a halfe.

King Henry. 6. conquered.

The clayme and title of the Duke of Yorke, and after him, of Edward his ſonne, put vp to the Lords & cōmons, wherby they chalenged the crowne to the houſe of York, is thus in the ſtory of Scala mundi, word for word, as hereunder is conteyned.

The title of the houſe of Yorke to the crowne of England.

The title of the houſe of Yorke.

EDward the 3. right king of Englande, had iſſue firſt prince Edward the 2. W. Hatfield. 3. Lionell, 4. Iohn of Gaunt. &c. Prince Edward had Richard the 2. which dyed without iſſue, W. Hatfielde dyed without iſſue. Lionel duke of Clarence, had iſſue lawfully begot, Phillip his onely daughter and heyre, the which was lawfully coupled to Edwund Mortimer, Earle of March, and had iſſue lawfully begotte, Roger Mortimer Eare of March and heyre: Whych Roger had iſſue Edmund Earle of March, Roger, Anne, and Alienor, Edmund and Alienor died without iſſue, and the ſayd Anne by lawfull matrimonye was coupled vnto Richard Earle of Cambridge, the ſonne of Edmund of Lāgley, who had iſſue & lawfully bare Richard Plantagenet now Duke of Yorke. Iohn of Gaunte gate Henry, which vnrightfully entreated king Richard: then being aliue Edmund Mortimer Earle of Marche, ſonne of the ſayde Philip, daughter to Lionell. To the which Richard duke of Yorke, and ſonne to Anne, daughter to Roger Mortimer Earle of March, ſonne and heyre to the ſayde Philip daughter and heyre to the ſayd Lionel, the 3. ſonne of king Edward the 3. the right & dignity of the crowne apperteyned & belonged, afore any iſſue of the ſayd Iohn of Gaunt. Notwithſtanding the ſayd title of dignity of the ſayde Richard of Yorke, the ſayd Richard deſiring the wealth, reſt, and proſperity of England, agreeth and conſenteth that king Henry 6. ſhould be had and taken for king of England, during his naturall life from thys time without hurt of his title.

Rich. Plantagenet.

Wherefore the king vnderſtanding the ſayd title of the ſayde duke to be iuſt, lawfull, true and ſufficient, by the aduiſe and aſſent of the Lordes ſpirituall and temporall, and the commons in the Parliament, and by the authoritye of the ſame Parliament declareth, approueth, ratifieth, confirmeth, accepteth the ſayde title for iuſt, good, lawfull and true, and thereunto geueth his aſſent and agreement of his free will and liberty. And ouer that, by the ſayde aduiſe and authority, declareth, calleth, ſtabliſheth, affirmeth and reputeth the ſayd Richard of Yorke very true and rightfull heyre to the crowne of England and Fraunce: and that all other ſtatutes and acts made by any of the Henryes late, contrary to this aduiſe, be annulled, repelled, damned, cancelled, voyd, and of no force or effect. The king agreed and conſented, that the ſayd Duke and hys heyres ſhall after his naturall life enioy the crowne. &c. Alſo, that all ſayinges and doinges agaynſt the duke of Yorke ſhall be hygh treaſon, and all actes of Parliamentes contrary to this principall act, be voyd and of none effect. &c.

In the reigne of this Henry 6. it is not be paſſed ouer in ſilence which we finde noted in the Parliament rolles how that Lewes Archbiſhop of Rhoen, after the death of the late Biſhop of Eley, had graūted vnto him by ỹ popes Bulles, during his life, all ỹ profites of the ſayd biſhoprick by the name of the adminiſtratour of the ſaid Biſhopricke, Lewes the foreſayde Archbiſhop ſheweth his Buls to the king, who vtterly reiected his Bulles. Notwithſtanding for his ſeruice done in Fraunce, the king graunted to hym the adminiſtration aforeſaid, the which to all intents at the petition of the ſayd Lewes, ſhould be affirmed to bee of as great force as though he were biſhop, touching profits, liberties and hability.

Neither agayn is here to be ouerpaſt a certayn tragicall Acte done betweene Eaſter and Whitſontide of a falſe Britone, an. 1427. Which murdered a good widdow in her bed (who had brought him vp of almes, without Algate in the ſuburbes of London) and bare away all that ſhe had, & afterward he tooke ſuccor of holy church at S. Georges in Southwarke: but at the laſt he tooke the croſſe & forſwore the kings land. And as he went his way, it happened him to come by the ſame place where he had done that curſed deed, and women of the ſame pariſh, came out with ſtones and cannell dong, and there made an end of him in the hye ſtreete, ſo that he went no further, notwithſtandinge the Conſtables and other men alſo which had hym vnder gouernaunce to conduct him forwarde: for there was a great company of them, ſo that they were not able to withſtande them.

Kyng Edward the fourth.

Anno. 1461.

King Edward. 4.

KIng Edward, after his conqueſt and victorye achieued agaynſt king Henry, returned again to London, where, vpon the Vigil of S. Peter and Paul, being on Sonday, he was crowned king of England, & raigned 22. yeares, albeit notwithout great diſquitnes, and much perturbation in his reigne.

Queene Margaret fledde the lande.

Queene Margaret hearing how her huſband was fled into Scotland, was alſo fayne to flye the land, and went to her father Duke of Angeow: From whence the next yeare following ſhe returned again to renue warre againſt king Edward, with ſmall ſuccor and leſſe lucke: For being encountred by the Earle of warwicke, about Nouember ſhe was driuen to the ſeas agayne, and by tempeſt of weather, was driuen into Scotland.

K. Henry 6. againe repulſed in the battaile of Exham.

The yeare folowing, king Henry iſſuing out of Scotland with a ſufficient power of Scottes and Frenchmen came into the Northcountrey to recouer the crowne, vnto whom the Lord Radulph Percy, & Lord Radulph Grey flying from king Edward, did adioyn themſelues: but the Lord ſo diſpoſing, king Henry with his power was repulſed in the battaile of Exham by the Lord Mountacute, hauing then the rule of the North: where the Duke of Somerſet, Lord Hungerford, Lord Roſſe with certayne other were taken. The Lord Radulph Percy was ſlayne, the reſidue fled. Albeit the hiſtory of Scal. mūdi, referreth this battel to the yeare 1464. the 15. day of May. In the which moneth of May, were beheaded the duke of Somerſet, Lorde Hungerford, Lord Roſſe, L. Philip wentworth, L. Tho. Huſſy, L. Tho. Findern, beſide 21. other belonging to the retinue and houſehold of king Hēry 6. Queene Margaret finding no reſting place here in England, tooke her progres agayne from whence ſhe came, learning in her own country to drinke that drinke, which ſhe her ſelfe had brued here in England.

K. Henry. 6. taken, areſted, & committed to the Tower.

Anno. 1465.

And not long after, the next yeare, an. 1465. on the day of S. Peter and Paule, king Henry being founde & knowne in a wood by one Cantlow (as they ſay) was areſted by the Earle of warwicke, and at laſt of a king made priſoner in the tower of London.

The kyngs ſodeine mariage with Queene Elizabeth.

The firſt falling out betweene K. Edwarde & the Earle of Warwick

In this meane time, king Edward (after the motion of mariage for him being made, and firſt the Lady Margaret ſiſter to Iames the 4. K. of Scottes thought vpon, but that motion taking no effect, afterward the Lady Elizabeth ſiſter to Henry king of Caſtelle, being intended, but ſhe being vnder age, the Earle of warwick turning then his legation and voiage to the French king Lewes the 11. to obteyne Lady Bona, daughter of the duke of Sauoy, and ſiſter to Carlot the French Queen, and obteining the ſame) had caſt fauour vnto one Elizabeth Grey, widow of Syr Iohn Grey Knight, ſlain before in the battell of S. Albōs, daughter to the Duches of Bedford, and Lord Riuers, and firſt went about to haue her to his concubine: But ſhe, as being vnworthy (as ſhe ſayde) to be the wife of ſuch a high perſonage, ſo thinking her ſelfe to bee to good to be his concubine, in ſuch ſort wanne the kings hart, that incontinent, before the returne of the Earle of warwicke, he maried her: at the which mariage were no moe then onely the Duches of Bedford, two gentle women, the prieſt & clark. Vpō this ſo haſty & vnlucky mariage, enſued no litle trouble to the king, much bloudſhed to the realme, vndoing almoſt to all her kyndred, and finally confuſion to the K. Edwardes 2. ſonnes, which both were declared afterward to be baſtards and alſo depriued of theyr liues: For the Earle of warwicke, who had bene the faythfull frend, and chiefe mayntener before of the king, at the hearing of this maryage, was therwith ſo greuouſly moued and chaffed in hys mind, that he neuer after ſought any thing more, then how to worke diſpleaſure to the king, and to put him beſide his cuſſhion. And although for a time he diſſembled his wrathfull mood, till he might ſpye a time conuenient, and a world to ſet forwarde his purpoſe, at laſt finding occaſion ſomewhat ſeruing to his mind, he breaketh his hart to his two brethren: to witte, the Marques Mountacute, & the Archbiſhop of Yorke, conſpiring with them how to bring hys purpoſe about. Then thought he alſo to proue a farre of, the mind of the duke of Clarence, king Edwards brother, & likewiſe obteined him, geuing alſo to him his daughter in Mariage.

Conſpiracie againſt king Edward.

This matter being thus prepared agaynſt the kyng, the firſt flame of this cōſpiracy began to appeare in ẏ North country: where the Northernmen in ſhort ſpace gathering thēſelues in an open rebellion, & finding captaines of their wicked purpoſe, came down from Yorke toward London. Againſt whom was appoynted by the king, W. lord Harbert Earle of Penbroke, with the Lord Stafford, and certayne other Captaynes, to encounter. The Yorkeſhyre mē geuing the ouerthrow firſt to the lord Stafford, thē to the Earle of Penbrok and his company of welchmē, at Banbery fielde, at laſt ioyning together with the army of the Earle of warwicke, and Duke of Clarence, in the dead of the night, ſecretly ſtealing one the kinges field at wolney by warwick, killed the watch, and tooke the king priſoner, who firſt being in the caſtle of warwicke, then was conueyed by night to Midleham Caſtle in Yorkeſhyre, vnder the cuſtody of the Archbiſhop of Yorke, where he hauinge looſe keeping and liberty to go on hunting, meeting wyth ſyr william Standley, ſyr Thomas of Brough, and other his frendes, was to good for his keepers, and eſcaped the handes of his enemies, and ſo came to York, where he was well receiued: from thēce to Lankeſter, where he met with the Lord Haſtinges his Chamberlayne, well accompanied, by whoſe helpe he came ſafe to London.

K. Edward takē priſoner by the Earle of Warwicke.

The rebellion in Lincolnſhire repreſſed.

After this tumult, when reconciliation could not come to a perfect peace & vnity, although much labor was made by ẏ nobility, the Earle of warwick raiſeth vp a new war in Lincolnſhyre, the captaine wherof was Sir Rob. wels knight, who ſhortly after being taken in battell wyth hys father, and ſir Thomas Dunocke were beheaded, the reſidue caſting away their coates, ran away and fled, geuing ẏ name of the field, called Loſecoat field. The erle of warwicke after this put out of comfort and hope to preuayle at home, fled out of England. An. 1470. firſt to Calice, then to Lewes the French king, accompanyed with the Duke of Clarence. The fame of ẏ Earle of warwicke and of his famous actes, was at that time in great admiration aboue meaſure, and ſo highly fauoured, that both in England & Fraunce all men were glad to behold his perſonage. wherfore the comming of this Earle & of the Duke of Clarence, was not a litle gratefull to the French king, and no leſſe oportune to Queene Margaret, King Henryes wife, and Prince Edward her ſonne, who alſo came to the Frenche Courte to meete and conferre together, touching their affayres: where a league betwene thē was cōcluded, & moreouer a mariage betwene Edward prince of wales, & Anne the ſecōd daughter of the Erle of warwick was wrought. Thus all things falling luckely vpō the Erles part beſide the large offers, and great promiſes made by the Frenche king, on the beſt maner, to ſet forwarde their purpoſe, the Earle hauing alſo intelligence by letters that the harts almoſt of all men went with him, and lōged ſore for his preſence, ſo that there lacked now but onely haſt with al ſpeed poſſible to returne: he with the duke of Clarence wel fortified with the French nauy, ſet forward toward England: For ſo was it betwene them before decreed, that they two ſhould proue the firſt venture, and then Queen Margaret with Prince Edward her ſonne, ſhould folow after. The ariuall of ẏ Earle was not ſo ſoone heard of at Dartmouth in Deuonſhyre, but great cōcourſe of people by thouſands went to him from all quarters to receiue & welcome hym, who immediatly made proclamation in the name of kyng Henry the ſixt, charging all men able to beare armour, to prepare themſelues to fight agaynſt Edwarde Duke of Yorke vſurper of the Crowne. Here lacked no frendes, ſtrength of men, furniture, nor pollicy conuenient for ſuch a matter.

The receiuing of the Earle of Warwicke into England.

K. Henry againe proclaymed kyng.

When king Edwarde (who before not paſſing for the matter, nor ſeking how, either to haue ſtopped his lāding, or els ſtraight wayes to haue encountred with him before the gathering of his frendes, but paſſing forth the time in hunting, in hauking, in all pleaſure & daliance) had knowledge what great reſort of multitudes inceſſantly repaired more and more dayly about the Erle and the Duke began now to prouide for remedy, when it was to late. who truſting to much to his friendes and fortune before, dyd nowe right well perceiue what a variable and inconſtant thyng the people is, & eſpecially here of Englād, whoſe nature is neuer to be contēt long with the preſent ſtate, but alwayes delighting in newes, ſeketh new variety of chaunges, eyther enuying that which ſtādeth, or els pitying that which is fallen. which inconſtant mutability of the light people, chaunging with the winde, and wauering with the reede, did well appeare in the courſe of this kinges ſtory. For he, through the people when he was down, was exalted: now being exalted of the ſame, was forſaken. wherby this is to be noted of all princes, that as there is nothing in this mutable world firme and ſtable: ſo is there no truſt nor aſſurance to be made, but onely in the fauor of God and in the promiſes of his word, onely in Chriſt his ſonne, whoſe onely kingdome ſhall neuer haue ende, nor is ſubiecte to anye mutation.

The inconſtant leuitie of the people of England.

The conſtant hart and truth of the Lord Haſtinges.

Theſe thinges thus paſſing in England on the Earles ſide agaynſt king Edward, he accompanyed with ẏ Duke of Gloceſter his brother, and the Lord Haſtings, who had maried the erle of warwicks ſiſter, and yet was neuer vntrue to the king his maiſter: and the Lord Scales brother to the Queene, ſent abroad to all his truſty frendes for furniture of able ſouldiors for defence of his perſon to wͭſtand his enemies. Whē litle reſcue & few in effect would come, the king himſelfe ſo deſtitute, departed to Lincolneſhyre, where he perceiuing his enemyes dayly to encreaſe vpon him, & all the countryes about to be in a rore, making fiers & ſinging ſongs, crying king Henry, king Henry, a Warwicke, a Warwicke, and hearing moreouer his enemyes yͤ Lancaſtrians to be within halfe a dayes iourney of him, was aduiſed by his frendes to flie ouer the Sea to yͤ Duke of Burgoyne, which not long before had maryed king Edwardes ſiſter.

Whether godly ſimplicitie, or mans policie be ſtronger.

¶ Here might be thought, by the common iudgement and pollicy of man, peraduēture that king Edward, as he had in his handes the life of king Henry of his Queene and Prince: ſo if hee had diſpatched them out of the way, when as he might, he had not fallen into this miſery: but becauſe he tooke not the vauntage, whiche time rather then godly reaſon gaue him, therefore that ſparing pitty of hys turned now to his confuſion and ruine. And certes, I ſuppoſe no leſſe, but if the ſame caſe had fallen in theſe our pitileſſe dayes, in which charity now waxeth vtterly colde, and humanitye is almoſt forgotten, the occaſion of ſuche a tyme ſhould not be ſo neglected. But let vs here note and learn, how godly ſimplicity alwayes in the end of thinges gayneth more then mans pollicy, forſomuche as man worketh with the one, but God worketh with the other.

The double caſe of theſe two kings conſidered

K.Edward taketh the Waſhes.

God prouideth

K.Edward taketh ſhipping.

K. Edward near taken of the Eſterlings.

God againe prouideth.

And ſo farre is it of, that the euēt and ſucceſſe of thinges be gouerned by mans aduiſed pollicy, or vnaduiſed affection in this world, that that is iudged to be weaker that floriſheth in man, then that which is caſt downe in the Lord: as in the double caſe of both theſe kings may wel appeare. And firſt let vs conſider the caſe of king Edward who being ſo beſet and compaſſed with euils and diſtreſſes on euery ſide, firſt was compelled to take the Waſhes betwene Lincolneſhyre and Lynne (which was no leſſe daungerous to his life then it was vnſemely for his eſtate.) Being come to Linne, in what perill was he there, through the doubtfull mutabilitye of the townes men, if he had beene known to his enemyes? And how could he be but known, if he had taried any ſpace? But though men and frends forſooke him, yet the mercy of God not forſaking the life of him which ſhewed mercy vnto other, ſo prouided, that at yͤ ſame preſent there was an Engliſhe ſhippe, and two hulkes of Holland ready to theyr iourney. Thus king Edward without prouiſion, without bag or baggage, without clothſacke or male, without ſtore of money, without rayment, ſaue onely apparell for warre, alſo without all frendes, excepte onely his brother Duke of Gloceſter, the Lord Scales, & Lord Haſtinges, with a fewe other truſtye frendes, to the number of 7. or 8. hūdreth perſons tooke ſhipping toward Holland: at which time he was in no leſſe ieoperdy almoſt on the ſea, then he was on the land. For certayne Eſterlinges hauing many ſhippes of warre, which lay rouing the ſame time on the ſea, and had done much domage the yeare before, as well to the Engliſhe Marchauntes, as to the French nation, ſpying the kinges ſhip, with ſeuen or eight gallaunt ſhippes made ſayle after the king and hys company. The kinges ſhippe was good of ſayle, and gate ſome ground, albeit not much of the Eſterlinges, that ſhe came to the coaſt of Halland, before Alquemare, and there caſt anker: for otherwiſe, being an ebbing water, they coulde not enter the hauen. The Eſterlings with theyr great ſhippes approched as nere as they could poſſible come for the low water, purpoſing at yͤ flood to obtein their pray, & ſo were like to do, if the Lord had not there alſo prouided Mounſiour de Grounture, gouernour for Duke Charles in Holland, at that ſeaſon to be perſonally preſent in the towne of Alquemare, who hearing of the ieopardy of the king, being there at anker, prohibited the Eſterlings on payne of death, not to meddle with any Engliſh men, which were the Dukes frendes and alies.

K.Edward deliuered from the Eſterlinges.

Thus K. Edward well chaſtiſed of God for his wantonnes both by ſea and land, but not vtterly geuē ouer frō his protection, eſcaping ſo many hard chaūces, was ſet on land with his company, who there well refreſhed, & newly apparelled, were conducted to Hage.

Charles Duke of Burgoyne, K.Edwardes brother in law.

Duke Charles at the hearing of the vnproſperous caſe and condition of king Edward his brother in lawe, was greatly amaſed and perplexed in himſelf, much caſting and doubting what he ſhould do: For, being then in war with the French king, he could not well prouoke the Engliſhe nation agaynſt him, without his manifeſt greuaunce and decay: neither yet could he without great ſhame and obloquy, leaue the king his brother in that neceſſity. Notwithſtanding, ſo he demeanured himſelfe through fayre ſpeach, pretending to the Engliſh men to ioyne part with yͤ houſe of Lancaſter, being himſelfe partly deſcended of the ſame family by his Graundmothers ſide: that he both was his owne frend openly, and the kinges friend couertly, pretending that he did not, and doing that he pretended not.

Queene Elizabeth taketh ſanctuary.

Prince Edward borne in ſanctuary.

Whē tidings was ſpred in England of king Edwards flying, innumerable people of al hands reſorted to yͤ Earle of Warwicke, to take his part, agaynſt K. Edward a fewe onely except of his conſtant friends which tooke ſanctuary. Among whom was alſo Elizabeth his wife, who deſperat almoſt of all comfort, tooke alſo ſanctuarye at Weſtminſter, where ſhe in great penury forſakē, was deliuered of a fayre ſonne called Edw. which without all pompe was baptyſed like another poore womans childe, the Godfathers being the Abbot and Prior of Weſtminſter, the Godmother was Lady Scrope.

K.Henry 6. brought out of the tower

K.Henry reſtored again to his kingdome.

To make the ſtory ſhort, the Earle of Warwick hauing now brought all things to his appetite, vpon the 12. day of October, rode to the Tower, which was then deliuered to him, and there tooke king Henry out of the ward, & placed him in the kinges lodging. The 25. day of the ſayd moneth, the Duke of Clarence accōpanyed with the Erles of Warwick, Shrewſbury, and the Lord Standley, with a great company, brought him in a long gown of blew veluet thorow the hye ſtreetes of London, firſt to Paules Church, to offer, then to the biſhops palace of London, and there he reſumed agayne the crowne royall, an. 1471. which he did not long enioy.

K.Edward returneth againe into England.

After this followed a Parliament, in the whiche king Edwarde with all his partakers were iudged traytours, Queene Margarete with her ſonne Prince Edwarde, all this while was tarying for a fayre winde, thinking long belike, till ſhe came to an euill bargayne, as it proued after. For king Edwarde within ſixe monethes after his departure out of Englande vnto the Duke of Burgoyne, whether by letters from his frendes ſollicitate, or whether by his aduēturous courage incited, made inſtant ſute to duke Charles his brother, to reſcue him with ſuch power, as he would beſtow vpon him, for he was fully reſolued to defer the matter and to protract the time no longer.

The Duke damped in double feare, in ſuch a daungerous caſe, notwithſtanding ouercome by nature and affinity, ſecretly cauſed to be deliuered to him 50000. Florence, & further cauſed foure great ſhippes to be appoynted for him in a hauen in Zeland where it was free for al men to come. Alſo the ſame Duke had for him hired 14. ſhippes of the Eſterlinges well appoynted, taking band of them to ſerue him truely, till he were landed in England, and 15. dayes after.

The gentle and fayre wordes of K.Edward.

Thus king Edwarde being furniſhed but onely with 2000. men of warre, with more lucke then hope to ſpeede, ſped his voyage into England, and landed at Rauenſpur in the coaſt of Yorkeſhyre. Although there was no way for the king with ſuch a ſmall company of ſouldiors to do any good, yet to vſe pollicy, where ſtrength did lack, firſt he ſent forth certayne light horſemen, to proue the countrey on euery ſide, with perſuaſions, to ſee whether the vplandyſhe people would be ſtyrred to take king Edwards part. Perceiuing that it woulde not be, king Edwarde flyeth to hys ſhiftes, diſſembling his purpoſe to be, not to clayme the crowne and kingdome, but onely to clayme the Duchy of Yorke, whiche was his owne title, and cauſed the ſame to be publiſhed. This being notified to the people, that he deſired no more, but onely his iuſt patrimony and lineall inheritaunce, they began to be moued with mercy and compaſſion toward him, either to fauour him or not to reſiſte him, and ſo iournying toward Yorke, he came to Beuerly. The Marques Mountacute, brother to the Earle of Warwicke, was then at Pomfret, to whom the Earle had ſent ſtrayght charge, with all expedition to ſet vpon him, or els to ſtop his paſſage: and likewiſe to the Citizens of Yorke and all Yorkeſhyre, to ſhut theyr gates and take armour agaynſt him, King Edward being in the ſtreetes, proceded notwithſtanding nere to Yorke, without reſiſtaunce: where he required of the Citizens, to be admitted into theyr City. But ſo ſtoode the caſe then, that they durſt not graunt vnto him, but contrary ſent him word to approch no nearer, as he loued his owne ſafegarde. The deſolate king was here driuen to a narow ſtrait, who neyther could retyre backe, for the opinion of the countrey and loſſe of his cauſe: neither could goe farther, for the preſent daunger of the City. Wherefore vſing the ſame policy as before, with louely words, and gentle ſpeech he deſired the meſſengers to declare vnto the Citizens, that his comming was not to demaund the realme of England, or the title of the ſame but onely the Duchye of Yorke, his olde inheritaunce, and therefore determined to ſet forward, neither wͭ armie, nor weapõ. The meſſẽgers were not ſo ſoone within yͤ gates, but he was at the gates in a manner, as ſoone as they. The Citizens hearing his courteous anſwere, and that he intended nothing to the preiudice of the king, nor of the realme, were ſomething mitigated toward him, and began to common with him from the walles, willing him to withdrawe his power to ſome other place, and they would be the more ready to ayde him, at leaſt he ſhoulde haue no damage by them.

Two conditions put to K. Edward.

Notwithſtanding, he again vſed ſuch lowly language, and deliuered ſo faire ſpeach vnto them, entreating them ſo curteouſly, and ſaluting the Aldermen by their names, requiring at their hãds no more, but only his own towne whereof he had the name and title, that at length the Citizens, after long talke, and debating vpon the matter, partly alſo intiſed with faire and large promiſes, fell to this cõuention, that if he would ſweare to be true to king Henry, & gentle in entertaining his citizens, they woulde receiue him into the Citie.

The Duke of Clarence commeth with a great army.

Concord of brethren.

This being concluded, the next morning, at the entring of the gate, a prieſt was ready to ſay Maſſe, in yͤ which, after receiuing of the ſacrament, the king receiued a ſolemne othe, to obſerue the ij. articles afore agreed. By reaſon of which othe ſo raſhly made, & as ſhortly brokẽ, and not lõg after puniſhed (as it may wel be thought) in his poſterity, he obteined yͤ city of Yorke. Where he, in ſhort time forgetting his oth to make al ſure, ſet in garriſons of armed ſoldiors. Furthermore, perceiuing all things to be quiet, and no ſtirre to be made againſt him, he thought to forſlacke no oportunitie of time, and ſo made forward toward Lõdon, leauing by yͤ way the Marques Mountacute, which lay then with his army at Pomfrete, on the right hande, not fully foure miles diſtant from his campe: and ſo returning to the hye waye againe, wente forwarde without anye ſtirring to the towne of Notingham: where came to him, ſir W. Parre, ſir Thomas of Borough, ſir Tho. Montgomery, & diuers elſe of his aſſured frends, with their aydes, which cauſed him by proclamation, to ſtand to his own title of king Edward the fourth, ſayeng that they woulde ſerue no man, but a king. At the fame hereof being blowne abroade, as yͤ Citizẽs of Yorke were not a little offended (& that worthely) ſo frõ other townes and cities, Lords and noble men began to fall vnto him, thinking with thẽſelues, that the Marques Mountagew either fauoured his cauſe, or was afraide to encounter wͭ the mã. Howſoeuer it was, K. Edward being now more fully furniſhed at al points, came to yͤ towne of Leiceſter, and there hearing that yͤ earle of Warwicke accompanied with yͤ earle of Oxford, were together at Warwicke, with a great power, minding to ſet on the Earle, he remoued from thence his army, hoping to geue him battaile. The Duke of Clarence in the meane time, about London had leuied a great hoſte cõming toward yͤ earle of Warwicke, as he was by the Earle appointed. But when the Earle ſawe the Duke to linger the time, he began to ſuſpecte (as it fell out in deede) that he was altered to his brethrens part. The king auanſing forward his hoſt, came to Warwicke, where he found all the people departed. Frõ thence he moued toward Couentry, where the Earle was: vnto whome the next day after, he boldly offered battayle. But the Earle expecting yͤ Duke of Clarence his cõming, kept him within the walles. All this made for the king. For he hearing that his brother, Duke of Clarence was not farre off, comming toward him with a great army, rayſed hys campe, and made toward him, either to entreate, or elſe to encounter with his brother. When ech hoſte was in ſight of the other, Richard Duke of Glouceſter, brother to thẽ both, as arbitour betweene thẽ, firſt rode to the one, then to the other. Whether all this was for a face of a matter made, it is vncertaine. But hereby both the brethren, leauing all army and weapon aſide, firſt louingly and familiarly commoned: after that, brotherly and naturally ioyned together. And that fraternall amitie, by proclamation alſo was ratified, and put out of all ſuſpition.

The Earle of Warwicke refuſeth to be reconciled.

K. Edward commeth to London.

Londiners take part with kyng Edward.

K. Henries cõſaylours flye away.

K. Henry againe taken and committed to priſon.

Then was it agreed betwene yͤ iij. brethren to attempt the earle of Warwicke, if he likewiſe would be reconciled: but he crieng out ſhame vpõ the Duke of Clarence, ſtoode at vtter defiance. From thence king Edward ſo ſtrongly furniſhed, & daily encreaſing, taketh his way to London: where, after it was knowne yͭ the duke of Clarence was come to his brethren, much feare fell vpõ the Londoners, caſting with thẽſelues what was beſt to do. The ſodaynnes of time permitted no long cõſultation. There was at London the ſame time, the Archbiſhop of Yorke, brother to yͤ Earle of Warwicke, and the duke of Somerſet, wyth other of K. Henries counſaile to whom the earle had ſent in cõmaundement a litle before, knowing the weaknes of the Citie, that they ſhould keepe the Citie from their enemies ij. or iij. dayes, and he would follow with all poſſible ſpeede, with a puiſſaunt army. Who, according to their cõmaundement, defended the Citie with all their power, but yet to litle purpoſe: For the Citizens conſulting with thẽſelues for their owne moſt indẽnitie, hauing no walles to defend thẽ, thought beſt to take that way, which ſeemed to thẽ moſt ſure & ſafe, & therfore concluded to take part with kyng Edward. This was not ſo ſoone knowne abroad, but the cõminaltie rane out by heapes to meete kyng Edward, & to ſalute him as their king. Wheupon the Duke of Somerſet, with other of kyng Henries Cõſaile, hearing therof, & wonderyng at the ſodayne chaunge of the world, to ſhift for themſelues, fled away & left there kyng Henry alone: who the ſame day beyng cauſed by the Archbyſhop of Yorke, to ryde about London like a kyng, was before night made captiue, and reduced agayne to the Tower.

The Earle of Warwicke commeth to Barnet.

It was not long after theſe thyngs thus done at London, but the cõming of the Earle of Warwicke was heard of, who thinking to preuẽt miſchiefes with making ſpeede came a litle to late & miſſed of his purpoſe. In the Earles army were Iohn Duke of Exceter, Edmũd Earle of Somerſet, Iohn Earle of Oxford, and Marques Mõtacute the Earles brother. The Earle had now paſſed a great part of his iourney, whẽ he hearing newes of the world ſo chaũged, & of the captiuitie of king Henry, was not a litle thereat appalled in his mynde: wherfore he ſtayd with his army at S. Albons, to ſee what way further to take. And forſomuch as there was no other remedy, but either he muſt yeld, or one conflict muſt finiſh the matter: he remoued to Barnet x. myles from S. Albons.

The battayle at Barnet.

The Earle of Warwicke and his brother ſlain

Againſt him ſet forth K. Edward, well appointed with a ſtrong army of piked & able perſons, with artillerie, engines & inſtrumẽtes meete for the purpoſe: bringing with him alſo kyng Hẽry. On Eaſter euẽ he came to Barnet, & there he embattelled himſelfe. In the mornyng vpon Eaſter day the battaile begã, and fiercely cõtinued almoſt till noone, with murder on ech ſide much doubtfull, till both partes were almoſt wery with fightyng and murderyng. King Edward thẽ deſirous to ſee an end, of or on, with a great crew of new freſh ſouldiours, ſet vpon his weried enemies. Wherby the Earles mẽ, although encouraged wͭ wordes of their captaine, ſtoutly fought, but they ſore woũded & weried, could not lõg hold out. The Earle ruſhing into the middeſt of his enemies, ventured ſo farre, that he could not be reſcued: where he was ſtrikẽ downe & ſlayne, and there lay he. Marques Mountacute thinkyng to ſuccour his brother whõ he ſaw to be in great ieopardy, was likewiſe ouerthrowne and ſlaine. After that Richard Neuell, Earle of Warwike, & his brother were gone, the reſt fled, & many were takẽ. The number of them which were in this field ſlayne, are iudged about x. thouſand, as Polydore Virgill reciteth. Fabian numbreth of them that were ſlayne, but xv. hundreth. The Duke of Somerſet & Earle of Oxford thinkyng to flye to Scotland, turned to Iaſper Earle of Pẽbroke in Wales. The Duke of Exceter hardly eſcaped to Weſtminſter, & there tooke ſanctuary. For the death of the Earle of Warwike the K. was not ſo glad, as he was ſory for the Marques Mountacute, whõ he tooke to be his frend. The corpes of theſe two were brought to the Church of Paules, where they lay open in two coffins two dayes, and then were interred. Ex Polyd. & alijs.

Hall folower of Polydore.

Polydore is ſaid to haue burned a number of our Engliſh writers.

¶ In the narration of this Hyſtory, Polydore Virgill, whom Hall followeth word for word, doth ſome deale differ from Rob. Fabian. Neither doe I doubt, but both theſe had their authors, by whõ they were directed. Notwithſtãdyng this I marueile, that Polydore writyng of ſo many thynges which he neuer ſaw, doth not vouchſafe to cite vnto vs thoſe writers of whom he borowed. And more do I merueile or rather lamẽt, if it be true that I haue heard, that he not onely nameth no author vnto vs, but alſo buried an heape of our Engliſh ſtories vnknowen, after the finiſhyng of his, in the dayes of kyng Henry the 8. But now to our text agayne.

The returne of Queene Margeret into England.

All this while yet Queene Margaret with yõg prince Edward her ſonne, was ſcarce come ouer, beyng long let with contrary windes, who at length in the moneth of Aprill arriuyng at Waymouth in Dorſetſhire, & hearing the ſorrowfull tidings of theſe thinges lately happened to her huſbãd, and to the Earle of Warwike and his brother, and of the proſperous ſucceſſe of K. Edward: was ſo diſmayd diſquieted, and pierced with ſorrow, ſeyng all things contrary to her expectatiõ, ſo to frame agaynſt her, that ſhe fared and tooke on with her ſelfe, lamenting her huſbãd, be-wayling hir ſonne, curſing her comming, and crieng out of Fortune, as though blinde Fortune were ſhe that gouerneth times and tides, rewarding iuſt puniſhments to vniuſt deſeruings of men, and not the ſecret power and terrible iuſtice of almighty God. Such was then the impaciency of that Queene, being not able to beare the vehemency of her paſſion (who rather ſhould haue ſorowed the dolorous death of Duke Humfrey, whome before ſhe neglected, but now ſhe lacked) that her ſenſes failed, her ſpirites were taken, her ſpeach decayed, and life almoſt gone, ſhe fell to the ground as one that would rather dye, then liue. In this deſolate caſe, Queene Margaret learning now to know her friends frō her foes, when it was too late, fraught ful of heauines, without ſolace, or hope of remedy, ſhe with her ſon & her company departed for her next refuge, to a Monaſtery of Monkes called Beaulie in Hamſhire, there to take ſanctuary, & priuiledge of yͤ houſe.

Queene Margaret moued by her friendes to renue warres againſt King Edward.

Yet all harts were not ſound nor ſubdued in England, eſpecially Edmond Duke of Somerſet, with Lord Iohn his brother, Thomas Courtney, Earle of Deuonſhire, Iaſper earle of Pembroke, Lord Wenlocke, Iohn Longſtrother, being Prior of the Knights of Rhodes in Saint Iohns. Theſe hearing of yͤ Queenes returne, with ſpeede reſorted to her, by whome ſhe being ſomewhat quickened in her ſpirits, and animated to warre, began to take ſome hart, and to follow their counſaile: which was, in all the whote haſt, to renew warre againſt King Edward, being now vnprouided, by reaſon his army was now diſperſed, and chiefeſt of his ſouldiours waſted. Heere great hope of victory was ſhewed, great promiſes made. Although the Queenes mind was, beeing more carefull for the yong Prince, then for her ſelfe, to ſende him ouer into France, before ſome proofe of triall made: yet following the contrary counſaile of them, and partly cut off by ſhortneſſe of time, which required haſte, ſhe began with all expedition to gather power. Likewiſe Iaſper Earle of Pembroke poſted into Wales to do the ſame.

K. Edward warreth againſt Queene Margaret.

Queene Margaret debarred from Gloceſter.

The battayle of Teukesbury.

A great matter to take a thing in tyme.

King Edward hauing intelligence of all theſe doings, firſt ſendeth out certain light horſemē, to eſpy abroad thorough the weſt parts, what waies his enemies did take. In the meane time, he vſing al celeritie to meete them before they came to London, gathered a power, ſuch as hee could make about Lōdon, and firſt cōmeth to Abyngdon: from thence to Marlebridge, hearing that yͤ Queene was at Bathe, thinking to encounter with them, before they diuerted into Wales to the Earle of Pembroke, whether he thought (as they in deede intended) that they woulde take. But yͤ Queene vnderſtanding the king to be ſo nie, remoueth from Bathe to Briſtow, ſending word in the meane while to yͤ citizens of Glouceſter, that they would graunt her leaue ſafely to paſſe by their Citie, Which whē it could not be obteined, with her army ſhe departeth frō Briſtow to Teukeſbery: where the D. of Somerſet knowing king Edward to be at hand at his very backe, willed the Queene there to ſtay, & in no wiſe to flie backward for certaine doubts that might be caſt. Although this coūſaile was againſt the conſent of many other captaines, who thought it beſt rather to draw aſide while the Earle of Pembroke with his army were with them aſſociate: yet the mind of the Duke preuailed. The place was prefixed, the field pitched, the time of battaile came, the King was looked for: who being within one mile of Tewkeſbury, with like induſtry & policy, as his enemies had done, diſpoſed his army likewiſe in their aray. This celeritie of the King taking the time, was to him great aduantage: who otherwiſe, if he had differred, till they had conioined with the Earle of Pembroke, had put the matter in great hazard. Such a matter it is to take a thing in time.

Queene Margaret take in battayle.

Prince Edwarde brought to the kyng. The ſtoute anſwere of the Prince to the kyng.

Of this battayle Hall this reporteth, adding more then Polidore, yͤ the D. of Somerſet, although he was ſtrōgly intrenched, yet through yͤ occaſion or policie of the Duke of Glouceſter, which had the fore ward of the kings part, a little reciling back, followed the chaſe, ſuppoſing that yͤ Lord Wenlock, who had yͤ middle ward, would haue followed hard at his backe. The duke of Glouceſter, whether for ſhame, rather then of policie, eſpieng his aduantage, ſodenly turned face to his enemies. Whereupon the cōtrary part was eftſoones diſcomfited, and ſo much the more, becauſe they were ſeparate frō their company. The Duke of Somerſet not a litle aggreeued at this ſo vnfortunate caſe, returneth to yͤ middle ward, where he ſeeing the L. Wenlocke abiding ſtill, reuileth him, and calleth him traytour, and with his axe ſtriketh the braine out of his head. Thus much addeth Hall beſides Polydor, but ſheweth not his author where he had it. Polydore writing of this conflict, writeth no more but this, that yͤ Queenes army being ouerſet with the number and multitude of their enemies, and ſhe hauing no freſh ſouldiours to furniſh yͤ field was at laſt ouermatched, and for yͤ moſt part ſlaine or taken. In which battaile were named to be ſlaine, yͤ Earle of Deuonſhire, the Lord Wenlocke, Lord Iohn Duke of Somerſet his brother, beſide other. Among thē that were taken, was Queene Margaret found in her chariot almoſt dead for ſorow, Prince Edward, Edmund D. of Somerſet, Iohn Prior of S. Iohns, with xx. other knightes: all which were beheaded within ij. dayes after, the Queene only and the yong prince excepted. Which prince Edward being then brought to the Kings preſence, was demaunded of him, how he durſt be ſo bold to ſtand in battaile againſt him. To this Edward Hall addeth more, and ſaith: that after the field was finiſhed, the King made Proclamation, that whoſoeuer would bring Prince Edward to him, ſhould haue annuitie of an C. li. during his life, and the Princes life to be ſaued. Whereupon ſir Rich. Croftes not miſtruſting the kings promiſe, brought forth his priſoner, &c. And ſo the king demanding of the Prince (as is ſaid) how he durſt ſo preſumptuouſly enter this Realme with his banner diſplayed againſt him, he anſwered, ſayeng: that he came to recouer his fathers kingdome and inheritance from his grandfather and father, to him deſcending: whereat (ſaid Polydor) the King with his hande diſdainingly thruſt him from him. Other ſay that the king ſtroake him on the face with his gauntlet.

Prince Edward ſonne to K. Henry ſlaine.

At the ſpeaking of theſe words was preſent George Duke of Clarence, Richarde Duke of Glouceſter, and the Earle Lord William Haſtings. Who vpon the ſame, vncourteouſly falling vpon the Prince, did ſlaye hym.

Ex Scala mundi.

K. Henry buryed at Cherteſey.

The ſame yeare, and about the ſame tyme, vppon the Aſcenſion euen, king Henry being priſoner in the Tower, departed, after he had reigned in all xxxviij. yeares, and vi. moneths. Polydore and Hall folowing him, affirme that he was ſlaine with a dagger by Rich. Duke of Gloceſter, the Kings brother, for the more quiet and ſauegard of the King his brother. In the hiſtory intituled Scala mundi, I finde theſe words, Quod in turri, in vigilia Aſcenſionis Dominicæ ibidem feliciter moriens, per Thameſiam nauicula vſque ad Abbathiam de Cherteſey deductus, ibi ſepultus eſt. That is, that king Henry being in the Tower vpon the Aſcenſion euen, there happely or quietly departing, was brought by Thames in a boate, to the Abbey of Cherteſey, and there buried.

Polydores myracles.

A K. ſainct, is dear ware in the popes market.

Ex Edu. Hallo.

The cauſe examined of the fall of Lancaſter houſe. Example of Gods iuſt rodde of correction.

Polydore, after he hath deſcribed the vertues of thys king, recordeth that king Henry yͤ ſeuenth did afterwarde tranſlate the corps of him frō Cherteſey to Windſore, and addeth moreouer, that by him certayne myracles were wrought. For the which cauſe the ſayde King Henry the ſeauenth (ſayth he) laboured with Pope Iulius, to haue him canoniſed for a Saint, but the death of the king was the let, why yͤ matter proceeded not. Edward Hall writing of this matter, addeth more, declaring the cauſe, why king Henries ſaincting went not forward, to be this: for that the fees of canoniſing of a King, were of ſo great a quantitie at Rome (more then of another Biſhop or prelate) that the ſaid king thought it better to keepe the money in his cheſtes, then with yͤ empoueriſhing of yͤ realme to buy ſo deare, & pay ſo much for a new holy day of ſainct Henry in the Calender, &c. Ex Hallo. Which if it be true, it might be replied therto the Pope Iulius, that if Popes be higher then kings in the earth, and eſpecially in heauē, why then is a Pope Saint ſo cheape in yͤ market place of Rome, and a King Saint ſo deare? Againe, if the valuation of things in all markets and buries, be according to the price & dignity of the thing that is bought, what reaſon is it, ſeing the ſaincting of a king beareth a bigger ſale then the ſaincting of any Pope in heauen, but that Kings ſhould be aboue Popes alſo vpon the earth? Sed extra locum; as I do not doubt, but that K. Henry was a good & a quiet prince, if he had not otherwiſe bin abuſed by ſome: ſo touching the ruine of his houſe, I thinke not contrary, but it came not without the iuſt appointmēt of the Lord, either for that Henry of Lancaſters houſe were ſuch enemies to Gods people, & for the burning of the Lord Cobham and many other: or elſe for the vniuſt diſplacing of King Richard 2. or elſe thirdly for the cruell ſlaughter of Humfrey the good Duke of Glouceſter his vncle: whereof ſufficiently hath bene ſaid before.

A ſore here ſ preched at Pauls croſſe

Contention in the churche, whether Chriſt was a begger or not.

Times compared.

During the time of theſe doings, being about yͤ yeare of our Lord 1465. There was here in England a certaine Frier Carmelite, who about the tearme of Michaell the Archangel preached at Paules in London, that our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, being heere in this preſent worlde, was in pouertie, and did beg. To whoſe opiniõ and doctrine, the prouinciall of that order ſemed alſo to incline, defending yͤ ſame both in his reading and preaching, with other Doctours moe and brethren of yͤ ſame order: vnto whom alſo adioined certaine of the Iacobites, and ſtifly did take their partes. On yͤ cõtrary ſide, many doctours & alſo lawyers, both in their publicke lectures & preaching, to the vttermoſt of their cunning, did withſtãd their aſſertion, as being a thing moſt peſtiferous in the Church to be heard. Such a bitter cõtention was among them, that the defendent part was driuen for a while to keepe ſilence. Much like to thoſe times I might well reſemble theſe our dayes now preſent, with our tumultuous contention of formes and faſhions of garments. But I put my ſelfe here in Pythagoras ſchoole, and keepe ſilence with theſe Friers. In the ſtory moreouer it foloweth, that this beggerly queſtiõ of the begging Friers, whether Chriſt did begge, or no, went ſo far, yͭ at length it came to yͤ Popes eares. Paulus 2. who was no beggar ye may be ſure. After that, the fame of this doctrine, mounting ouer the Alpes, came fleing to the court of Rome, which was about yͤ Aſſumption of the virgin Mary, yͤ yeare next folowing, an. 1465. it brought with it ſuch an euill ſmell to yͤ fine noſes there, that it was no neede to bid them to ſtirre: for begging to them was worſe thẽ hie hereſie. wherfore the holy father pope Paulus the 2. to repreſſe the ſparkles of this doctrine, which otherwiſe perhaps might haue ſet his whole kitchin on fire, taketh yͤ matter in hand, & eftſoones directeth downe his Bull into England, inſinuating to the Prelates here, Hæreſim illam peſtiferè aſſerentem, quod Chriſtus publice mendicauit, eſſe antiquitus a Romanis pontificibus, cum ſuis Concilijs damnatam, & eam pro damnata, vndique declarandam, & conculcandam, &c. That is, that this hereſie, which peſtiferouſly doth affirme that Chriſt did openly begge, was condemned of old time by the Biſhops of Rome, and his Councels, and that the ſame ought to be declared in all places for a damned doctrine, and worthy to be troden downe vnder all mens feete, &c. This was in the ſame yeare when Prince Edward, King Edwards ſonne was borne in the Sanctuary at weſtminſter an. 1465.

Iohn Gooſe Martyr.

Iohn Gooſe in Engliſh, is as much as Iohn Hus in the Boheman tongue

The firſt is concerning a godly and conſtant ſeruant of Chriſt, named Iohn Gooſe, which in the time of this king was vniuſtly condemned and burnt at the tower hill. an. 1473. in the moneth of Auguſt. Thus had England alſo his Iohn Hus, as well as Boheme. wherein moreouer this is to be noted, that ſince the time of King Richard 2. there is no reigne of any King to be aſſigned hetherto, wherin ſome good mã or other hath not ſuffred the paines of fire, for yͤ Religion & true teſtimonie of Chriſt Ieſus. Of this ſaid Iohn Gooſe, or Iohn Hus, this moreouer I find in another Engliſh monumẽt recorded, that the ſayd Iohn being deliuered to Robert Beliſdone, one of yͤ Shiriffes, to ſee him burnt the after noone: the Shiriffe like a charitable man, had him home to his houſe, and there exhorted him to deny (ſayth the ſtory) his errours. But the godly man after long exhortation heard, deſired the Shiriffe to bee content, for he was ſatiſfied in his conſcience. Notwithſtãdyng this he deſired of the Shiriffe, for Gods ſake to geue him ſome meate, ſaying that he was very ſore hungered. Then the Shiriffe commaunded him meate: whereof he tooke and did eate, as he had bene toward no maner of daunger: and ſayd to ſuch as ſtoode about him: I eate now a good and a competent dinner: for I ſhall paſſe a litle ſharpe ſhower, ere I goe to ſupper. And when hee had dyned, he gaue thankes, and required that he might ſhortly be lead to the place, where hee ſhould yeld vp his ſpirite vnto God. Ex Polychron.

Iohn Gooſe taketh his dynner before hee went to Martyrdome.

The vnworthy death of the Duke of Clarence.

The Duke of Clarẽce drowned in a butte of Malmeſey.

The ſecond thyng herein to be noted, is the death of George Duke of Clarence, the kynges ſecond brother: Of whom relation was made before, how he aſſiſted K. Edward, his brother, agaynſt the Earle of warwicke at Barnet field, and helped him to the crowne, and now after all theſe benefites, was at lẽgth thus requited, that (for what cauſe it is vncertaine) he was apprehended and caſt into the Tower, where he beyng adiudged for a traytor, was priuely drowned in a but of Malmeſey. what yͤ true cauſe was of his death, it can not certainely be affirmed. Diuers coniectures and imaginations there be diuerſly put forth. Some partly impute it to the Queenes diſpleaſure. Other ſuppoſe it came for taking part in the cauſe of his ſeruaunt, which was accuſed and cõdemned for poyſonyng, ſorcery, or inchantmẽt. An other fame there is, which ſurmiſeth the cauſe hereof to riſe vpõ the vayne feare of a fooliſh Prophecie, commyng no doubt (if it were true) by the craftie operation of Sathan, as it doth many tymes elles happen among infidels and gentiles, where Chriſt is not knowen: where among high Princes and in noble houſes, much miſchief groweth, firſt murther and parricide, & thereby ruine of auncient families, and alteration of kingdomes. The effect of this Prophecie (as the fame goeth) was this, that after kyng Edward, ſhould one reigne, whoſe name ſhould begyn with G. And becauſe the name of the Duke of Clarence, beyng George, began with a G. therfore he began to be feared, and afterward priuely (as is aforeſayd) was made away.

Act. 16.

* A ſpirite of diuination which could gheſſe & foredeeme thinges paſt, preſent, and to come, which knowledge God many times permitteth to the deuill.

chicuous end, and yet for all that is but a Sathan. So the dreame of Aſtiages, ſeeing a vine to growe out of his daughter, which ſhould couer all Aſia, and fearing thereby that by his nephew he ſhould loſe his kingdome, proued true in the ſequeale thereof, and yet notwithſtanding of Sathan it came, and cauſed cruell murther to folow, firſt of the ſhepheards child, then of the ſonne of Harpagus, whome he ſet before his owne father to eate. Ex Iuſt. lib. 1. Likewiſe Cyrus was Prophetically admoniſhed by his dreame, to take him for his guide, whome he firſt met the next morow. In that alſo his dreame fell true, and yet was not of God. In the ſame number are to be put all the blind Oracles of the Idolatrous Gentiles, which although they procede of a lieng ſpirit, yet ſometime they hit the truth, to a miſchieuous purpoſe. The like iudgement alſo is to be giuen of Merlynes Prophecies. The Sorcereſſe, mentioned 1. Reg. 28. raiſing vp Samuell, told Saule the truth, yet was it not of God. In the 16. chap. of the Actes, there was a Damoſell hauing the ſpirit of * Pytho, who ſaid truth of Paule and Sylas, calling them the meſſengers of the high God, and yet it was a wrong ſpirit. The vncleane ſpirits in geuing teſtimonie of Chriſt, ſaide the truth, yet becauſe their teſtimony came not of God, Chriſt did not allow it.

Ex Paulo Diac.

Paulus Diaconus recordeth of Valence the Emperour that he alſo had a blinde Prophecie, not much vnlike to this of king Edward, which was, that one ſhould ſucceed him in the Empire, whoſe name ſhould begin with θ.ο. and δ. Whereupon one Theodorus, truſting vpon the prophecie, began rebelliouſly to hope for the crowne, & for his labour felt the paines of a traitour. Notwithſtanding the effect of the prophecy folowed: For after Valence ſucceded Theodoſius. wherfore Chriſten Princes, and noble men, & all Chriſtes faithfull people muſt beware & learne.

Three thinges to be noted cõcerning falſe propheſies.

1. Firſt, that no man be inquiſitiue or curious in ſearching to knowe what things be to come, or what ſhall happen, beſide thoſe things only which are promiſed, and expreſſed in the word.
2. Secondly, to vnderſtand what differẽce there is, and how to diſcerne ẏ voice of God, frõ the voice of Sathan.
3. Thirdly, how to reſiſt and auoide the daunger of falſe and diueliſh prophecies.

Many there be, which being not cõtented with things preſent, curiouſly occupy their wittes to ſearch what is to come, and not geuing thanks to God for their life whiche they haue, will alſo know, what ſhall bechance them, how & when their end wil come, how lõg Princes ſhal reigne, and who after ſhall ſucceede them, and for ẏ ſame, get vnto thẽ ſouthſaiers, aſtrologers, ſorcerers, coniurers, or familiars. And theſe are not ſo much inquiſitiue to ſearch or aſke, but the deuill is as ready to aunſwere them: who either falſly doubleth with thẽ, to delude thẽ: or elſe telleth them truth, to worke them perpetuall care & ſorow. Thus was Pope Siluester the ſorcerer, circumuented by the diuell, who told him that he ſhould be at Hieruſalem, before he died, and ſo it fell. For as he was ſaieng his Maſſe, at a chappell in Rome, called Hieruſalem, there he fell ſicke, and within three daies after died, vide ſup. pag. 167. To King Henry the fourth alſo it ſeemeth it was prophecied, that he ſhould not die, before he went to Hieruſalem, who being brought to the Abbots chamber of weſtminſter, and hearing the name of the chamber to be called Hieruſalem, knew his time to be come, and dyed, pag. 557.

False truſt by deuiliſh propheſies.

By ſuch deceitfull prophecies, it can not be lamented inough to ſee what inconuenience both publikely and priuately groweth to the life of men, either cauſing thẽ falſly to truſt where they ſhould not, or elſe wickedly to perpetrate that they woulde not: as may appeare both by this king, and alſo diuers moe. So was Pompeius, Craſſus, and Cæſar (as writeth Cicero) deceiued by the falſe Chaldeis, in declaring to them, that they ſhould not but die in their beds, and with worſhip, and in their olde age. Of ſuch falſe truſt, riſing vpon falſe prophecies, S. Ambroſe in his booke of Exameron, writeth, ſpeaking of rayne, which being in thoſe parties greatly deſired, was promiſed and prophecied of one certainely to fall vpõ ſuch a day, which was at the changing of the new Moone: but (ſayth S. Ambroſe) there fell no ſuch raine at all, till at the praiers of the Church, the ſame was obteined: geuing vs to vnderſtand, that raine commeth not by the word of man, nor by the beginnings of the Moone, but by the prouidẽce and mercie of our creatour. Ex Ambroſ. in Examer.

Ioan. Pic. Mirandul. contra Aſtrog. lib. 2. cap. 9

Experience of falſe propheſies.

Ioan. Picus Earle of Mirandula, in his excellent bookes written againſt theſe vaine ſtartellers and Aſtrologers, Lib. 2. writeth of one Ordelaphus a prince, to whom it was prognoſticate by a famous cunning man in that ſcience, called Hieronimus Manfredus, ẏ he ſhoulde enioy long continuance of health, and proſperous life, who notwithſtanding, the ſelfeſame yeare, and in the firſt yeare of his mariage, deceaſſed: and after diuers other examples added moreouer vpon the ſame, he inferreth alſo mention, and the name of a certaine rich matrone in Rome, named Conſtantia, who in like maner departed the ſame yeare, in which ſhe receiued great promiſes by theſe Southſayers and Aſtrologers, of a long and happy life, ſaieng to her huſband theſe words: behold (ſaith ſhe) how true be the prognoſtications of theſe ſouthtellers? If it were not for noting of thẽ, which now are gone, and whoſe names I would in no caſe to be blemiſhed with any ſpot, otherwiſe I could recite the names of certaine, eſpecially one, which taking his iourney, in a certaine place, after diligent calculation, and forecaſting of the ſucceſſe and good ſpeede of his iourney, was notwithſtanding in the ſame iourney, apprehended and brought where he would not, after that neuer enioieng good day, in ſhort time he departed. In Baſill this I my ſelfe heard of one, which knew and was conuerſant with the partie, who hauing a curious delight in theſe ſpeculations of chances and euents to come, by his calculation noted a certaine day, which he miſtruſted ſhould be fatall vnto him, by ſomething, which at that day ſhould fall vpon him. Whereupon he determined with himſelfe, all that day to keepe him ſure and ſafe within his chamber, where he reaching vp his hand to take downe a booke, the booke falling downe vpon his head, gaue him his deathes wounde, and ſhortly after he died vpon the ſame. Of theſe and ſuch like examples, the world is full, and yet the curiouſnes of mans head will not refraine, ſtill to plucke the apple of this vnluckie and forbidden tree.

This man by falſe diſſemblers, was taken, betrayed, and brought into England.

A perilous matter for a man to be curious, of tymes and things to come.

Beſide all this, what murther and parricide commeth by the feare of theſe prophecies, in great blouds and noble houſes, I referre it vnto them, which reade and well aduiſe the ſtories, as well of our Kings heere in England, as in other kingdomes moe, both Chriſtened, and Turkiſh, whereof another place ſhall ſerue as well (Chriſt willing) more largely to entreat, and particularly to diſcourſe. To this perteineth alſo the great inconuenience & hinderance that groweth by the feare of ſuch Prophecies, in the vocation of mẽ, forſomuch as many there be, which fearing ſome one danger, ſome another, leaue their vocations vndone, and follow vnordinate waies. As if one hauing a blinde prophecie, that his deſtruction ſhould be on the day, would wake and do all his buſines by night and candle light: and ſo forth in other ſeuerall caſes of mẽ and women, as euery one in his owne conſcience knoweth his owne caſe beſt.

The ſeconde part, how prophecies are to be diſcerned.

The ſecond thing to be conſidered in theſe prophecies, is rightly to diſcerne and vnderſtand, as neare as we cã, the differẽce betwene the prophecies proceeding frõ God, and the falſe prophecies counterfeited by Sathan. For Sathan ſometime plaieth Gods Ape, and transformeth himſelfe into an Angell of light, bearing ſuch a reſemblaunce and colour of truth and Religion, that vnneth a wiſe man is able to diſcerne the one from the other, and the moſt part is begiled. Concerning prophecies therefore, to know which be of God, which be not, three things are to be obſerued.

In the ſecõd part three things to be conſidered.

1. Firſt, whether they go ſimply and plainely, or whether they be doubtful and ambiguous: wherof the one ſeemeth to taſte of Gods ſpirit, ſuch as be the Prophecies of the ſcripture: the other to come otherwiſe, hauing a double or doubtfull interpretation. Although ẏ time of Gods prophecies, as alſo of miracles is commonly, and ordinarily expired: yet if the Lord in theſe daies, now extraordinarily do ſhew any prophecie, by the ſimplenes & plaines thereof, partly it may be diſcerned.

The ſeconde thing to be conſidered in propheſies.

2. Secondly, this is to be expended, whether they bee priuate, tending to this familie, or that family, or publike. For as the Scriptures, ſo commonly the Prophecies of God haue no priuate interpretation, but generall: for ſo much as the care of Gods holy ſpirit is not reſtrayned partially to one perſon, more then to another, but generally and indifferently reſpecteth the whole Churche of his elect in Chriſt Ieſus his ſonne. Wherefore ſuch Prophecies as priuately are touching the armes of houſes, or names of men, riſing or falling of priuate and particular families, are worthely to be ſuſpected.

The 3. thing to be conſidered in propheſies.

3. The third note & ſpeciall argument to diſcry the true prophecies of God, from the falſe prophecies of Sathan, and his falſe Prophets, is this, to conſider the matter and the end thereof, that is, whether they be worldly, or whether they be ſpirituall, or whether they tende to any glory or ſtate of this preſent world, or whether they tend to the ſpirituall inſtruction, admonition, or comfort of the pub-licke Church.

The 3. part how to auoyde the daunger of ſiniſter propheſies.

Now remayneth thirdly, after we know what propheſies be of God, and what not, that we be inſtructed next, how to eſchew the feare and perill of all diueliſh Propheſies, which make againſt vs. wherein two ſpeciall remedies are to be marked of euery Chriſten man, whereby he may be ſafe and ſure againſt all daunger of the enemie. The firſt is, that we ſet ỹ name of Chriſt Jeſus the ſonne of God againſt them, through a true faith in him: knowing this, that the ſonne of God hath appeared, to diſſolue the works of the Diuell. And againe, this is the victory (ſaith the Scripture) that ouercommeth the world, euen our faith. whatſoeuer then Sathan worketh or cã worke againſt vs, be it neuer ſo forceable, faith in Chriſt will vanquiſh it. Such a maieſtie is in our faith, beleeuing in the name of the Sonne of God.

Two remedies againſt diuiliſhe propheſies. The firſt remedie.

The ſeconde remedy againſt dangerous propheſies.

The other remedy is faythfull prayer, which obteineth in the name of Chriſt, all things with the Lord. So that wicked feende, which had killed before ſeuen huſbands of Tobias wife, could not hurt him, entring his matrimony with earneſt praier: ſo no more ſhall any ſiniſter prophecie preuaile, where praier out of a faithful hart, doth ſtriue againſt it. Neither am I ignoraunt, that againſt ſuch temporall euils and puniſhments to this life inflicted, a great remedy alſo lieth in this, when Sathan findeth nothing, wherin greatly to accuſe our conſcience. But becauſe ſuch a conſcience is hard to be founde, the next refuge is to flie to repentaunce, with amendment of life. For many times where ſinne doth reigne in our mortall bodies, there alſo the operation of Sathan is ſtrong againſt vs, to afflicte our outwarde bodyes heere, but as touching our eternall ſaluation, neyther worke nor merite hath any place, but onely our fayth in Chriſt. And thus much briefly touching the two ſpeciall remedies, whereby the operation of all diueliſhe Prophecies may be auoyded and defeated.

Mans policy can nothing doe againſt the deuil.

No power can withſtand Sathã, but onely Chriſt, and our fayth in hym.

Now, many there be, which leauing theſe remedyes aforeſayd, and the ſafe protection which the Lorde hath ſet vp in Chriſt, take other wayes of their owne, ſeeking by their owne policie, how to withſtande and eſcape ſuche Prophecies, either in eſchuing the place and time ſubtilly, or elſe cruelly by killing the partie whome they feare: whereof commeth iniury, murther, and parricide, with other miſchiefes in cõmon weales vnſpeakable. To whom commonly it cõmeth ſo to paſſe, that whereby they thinke moſt to ſaue themſelues, by the ſame meanes they fal moſt into the ſnare, being ſubuerted and confounded in theyr owne policie, for that they truſting to their owne deuiſe, and not vnto the Lord, which only can diſſolue the operation of Satan, the Lord ſo turneth their deuiſe into a trap, thereby to take them, whereby they thinke moſt ſurely to eſcape. Examples whereof we ſee not onely in Aſtyages King of the Medes aforeſaid, and Cyrus: but in infinite other like euents, which the trade of the world doth dayly offer to our eies. So Queene Margaret thought her then cockeſure, when Duke Humfrey was made away: when nothing elſe was her confuſion ſo much, as the loſſe and lacke of that man.

So if King Richard the ſecond had not exerciſed ſuche crueltie vpon his vncle Thomas, Duke of Gloceſter, he had not receiued ſuch wrong by King Henry the fourth as he did, pag. 594. Likewiſe this King Edwarde the fourth, if he had ſuffered his brother Gorge, Duke of Clarence to haue liued, his houſe had not ſo gone to wracke by Richard, his other brother, as it did. what befell vpon the Student of Aſtrology in the Vniuerſitie of Baſill, ye heard before, who if he had not mewed himſelfe in hys chamber for feare of his diuination, had eſcaped the ſtroke that fell. Now, in auoiding ſuch Propheticall euentes, which he ſhould not haue ſearched, he fell into that which he did feare. Theſe few examples for inſtruction ſake, I thought by occaſion to inferre, not as though theſe were alone: but by theſe few to admoniſh the Reader of infinite other, which dayly come in practiſe of life, to the great daunger & decay, as well in priuate houſes, as in weales publicke.

A briefe rehearſall of the matter of propheſies, before paſſed.

wherfore briefly to repete, what before ſimply hath bin ſaid touching this matter, ſeeing that Sathan thorough ſuch ſubtile Prophecies, hath & yet doth dayly practiſe ſo manifold miſchiefes in the world, ſetting brother againſt brother, nephew againſt ỹ vncle, houſe againſt houſe, and realme againſt realme, gẽdring hatred, where loue was, & ſubuerting priuely ỹ ſimplicity of our chriſtian faith, therfore ỹ firſt thing & beſt is, for godly men not to buſie their braines about ſuch phãtaſies, neither in delighting in thẽ, nor in harkening to thẽ, nor in ſearching for thẽ, either by ſouthſaier, or by cõiuratiõ, or by familiar, or by aſtrologer: knowing and conſidering this, that whoſoeuer ſhalbe deſirous or ready to ſearch for them, the Deuill is as ready to aunſwere his curioſitie therein. For as once in the old tyme of Gentilitie, hee gaue his Oracles by Idols, and Prieſtes of that tyme: ſo the ſame deuill, although he worketh not now by Idols, yet he craftely can geue now aunſwere by Aſtrologers, and coniurers in theſe our dayes, & in ſo doyng, both to ſay truth, and yet to deceaue men whẽ he hath ſayd. wherfore, leauyng of ſuch curioſitie, let euery Chriſten man walke ſimple in his preſent vocation, referryng hid thynges not in the word expreſſed, vnto him which ſayth in his word: Non eſt veſtrum ſcire tẽpora & momenta temporum. &c. It is not for you to know the tymes, and ſeaſons of tymes, which the Father hath kept in his owne power. &c.

The deuil ready to anſwere in matters of diuination.

Curioſitie of propheſies to be auoyded.

Secondly, in this matter of Prophecies, requiſite it is (as is ſayd) for euery Chriſten man to learne, how to diſcerne and diſtinct the true Prophecies, which procede of God, and the falſe Prophecies, whiche come of Sathan. The difference wherof, as it is not hard to be diſcerned: ſo neceſſary it is, that euery good man do rightly vnderſtand the ſame, to the entent that he knowing & flying the daunger of the one, may be the more certaine and cõſtant in adhering to the other.

Thirdly, becauſe it is not ſufficient that the deceitfull Prophecies of the deuill be knowen, but alſo that they be reſiſted, I haue alſo declared, by what meanes the operation of Sathans workes and Prophecies are to be ouercome: that is, not with ſtrength and policie of mã, for that there is nothyng in man, able to counteruayle the power of that enemy. Vnder heauen there is nothyng elles that can preuayle agaynſt his workes, but onely the name of the Lord Jeſus the ſonne of God, not outwardly pronoũced onely with our lippes, or ſigned in our foreheads with the outward croſſe, but inwardly apprehended and dwellyng in our hartes by a ſilent fayth, firmely and earneſtly truſtyng vpon the promiſes of God, geuen and ſealed vnto vs in his name: For ſo it hath pleaſed his fatherly wiſedome, to ſet him vp, to be both our righteouſneſſe before himſelfe, and alſo to be our fortitude agaynſt the enemy, acceptyng our fayth in his ſonne, in no leſſe price, then he accepteth the workes & worthyneſſe of the ſame his ſonne, in whom we do beleue.

The ſtrength of a Chriſtiã mans fayth in Chriſt.

Onely Chriſt able to withſtãd the power of Sathan. Pſalm. 90.

Such is the ſtrength and effect of faith both in heauen, in earth, & alſo in hell: In heauen to iuſtifie, in earth to preſerue, in hell to cõquere. And therfore when any ſuch Prophecie, or any other thing is to vs obiected, which ſeemeth to tend agaynſt vs, let vs firſt conſider whether it ſauour of Sathan, or not. If it doe, then let vs ſeeke our ſuccour, not in our ſelues, where it doth not dwell, neither let vs kill, nor ſlay, nor chaunge our vocation therfore, folowing vnordinate wayes: but let vs runne to our Caſtle of refuge, whiche is to the power of the Lord Jeſus, remembring the true promiſe of the Pſalme: Qui habitat in adiutorio altiſsimi, in protectione Dei coeli commorabitur. That is. who ſo putteth his truſt in the ſuccour of the Lord, ſhall haue the God of heauen to his protector. And then ſhall it afterward follow in the ſame Pſalme. Ipſe liberabit te a laqueo venantium, & a verbo aſpero. That is. And he ſhall deliuer him from the ſnare of the hunter, and from all euill wordes, and Prophecies, be they neuer ſo ſharpe, or bitter agaynſt him. &c. And thus much by the occaſion of kyng Edward, of Prophecies.

Sigiſmundus Emperour.

Sigiſmundus vnproſperous in his warres.

Sigiſmundus ouercome of the Turkes.

Sigiſmundus ouercome of the Bohemians.

Now hauing lõg taried at home in deſcribyng the tumultes and troubles within our owne land, we will let out our ſtory more at large, to conſider the afflictions and perturbatiõs of other parties and places alſo of Chriſtes Church, as wel here in Europe vnder the Pope, as in the Eaſt partes vnder the Turke, firſt deducyng our ſtory frõ the tyme of Sigiſmund, where before we left: which Sigiſmund, as is aboue recorded, was a great doer in the Councell of Conſtance agaynſt John Hus, and Hierome of Prage. This Emperour had euer euill lucke, fightyng agaynſt the Turkes. Twiſe he warred agaynſt them, and in both the battailes was diſcomfited and put to flight: once about the Citie of Myſia, fightyng agaynſt Baiazetes the great Turke. an. 1395. the ſecond tyme fightyng againſt Celebinus the ſonne of Baiazetes, about the towne called Columbacium. But ſpecially, after the Councell of Conſtance, wherein were condemned and burned thoſe two godly Martyrs, more vnproſperous ſucceſſe did then folow him, fightyng agaynſt the Bohemians, his owne ſubiectes. an. 1420. by whom he was repulſed in ſo many battailes, to his great diſhonour, during all the life of Ziſca, & of Procopius, as is afore more at lẽgth expreſſed: who was ſo beaten both of the Turkes, & at home of his owne people, that he neuer did encounter with the Turkes after. Then followed the Councell of Baſill, after the beginnyng wherof, within vi. yeares, this Sigiſmũdus, which was Emperour, king of Hungary, and kyng of Boheme, dyed, in Morauia. an. 1437.

¶ Albertus Emperour.

Albertus Duke of Auſtrich, Emperour, kyng of Hungary, king of Boheme

THis Sigiſmund left behinde him one only daughter Elizabeth, who was married to Albert, Duke of Auſtrich: by reaſon whereof, he was aduanced to the Empire, and ſo was both Duke of Auſtrich, Emperour, king of Hungary, and king alſo of Boheme. But this Albert (as is afore declared) being an enemy and a diſquieter to the Bohemians, and eſpecially to the good men of Thabor, as he was preparing and ſetting forth againſt the Turkes, in the meane time died, in the ſecond yeare of his Empire, an. 1439. leauing his wife great with child, who lieng then in Hungary, and thinking to be great with a daughter, called to her the Princes and chiefetaines of the Realme, declaring to them that ſhe was but a woman, and vnſufficient to the gouernãce of ſuch a ſtate: and moreouer how ſhe thought her ſelfe to be but with childe of a daughter, and therefore required them to prouide among them, ſuch a Prince and gouernour, (reſeruing the right of the kingdome to hir ſelfe) as were fit and able vnder her, to haue the regiment of the land committed. The Turke in the meane while being eleuated and encouraged with his proſperous victories againſt Sigiſmundus aforeſaide, began then more fiercely to inuade Hungary and thoſe parties of Chriſtendome. wherefore the Hungarians making the more haſte, conſulted among themſelues, to make Duke Vladiſlaus, brother to Caſimirus King of Polony, their King.

But while this was in working betwene the Hungarians and Vladiſlaus the Duke, in the meane ſpace Elizabeth brought forth a ſonne called Ladiſlaus, who being the lawfull heire of the kingdome, the Queene calleth backe againe her former word, minding to reſerue the kingdome for her ſonne, being the true heire thereof, and therefore refuſeth marriage with the ſaide Vladiſlaus, which ſhe had before pretended. But Vladiſlaus ioyning with a great part of the Hungarians, perſiſting ſtil in the condition before graunted, would not geue ouer: by reaſon whereof, great contention and diuiſion kindling amõg the people of Hungary, Amurathes ẏ great Turke, taking his aduantage of their diſcord, and partly ſurpreſſed with pride of his former ſucceſſe againſt Sigiſmund aforeſaid, with his whole maine & force, inuaded the realme of Hũgary: where Huniades ſurnamed Vainoda, Prince of Tranſiluania, ioining with the new King Vladiſlaus, did both together ſet againſt the Turke, anno. 1444. and there Vladiſlaus the new King of Hungary, the fourth yeare of his kingdome was ſlaine. Elizabeth with her ſonne, was fled in ẏ meane while, to Fridericke the Emperour. Of Huniades Vainoda the noble Captaine, and of his Actes and alſo of Ladiſlaus (Chriſt willing) more ſhall be ſayd heereafter, in his time and place.

¶ Fridericus the third Emperour.

Fridericus 3. Emperour.

AFter the deceaſſe of Albert, ſucceded in the Empyre Fridericus the third, Duke of Auſtria, an. 1440. By whome it was procured (as we haue before ſignified) that Pope Fœlix elected by the Councell of Baſill, did reſigne his Popedome, to Pope Nicholas the fift, vpon this condition, that the ſaid Pope Nicholas ſhould ratife the acts decreed in the ſaid Councell of Baſil. In the daies of this Emperour, much warre and diſſention raged almoſt thorough all Chriſtian Realmes, in Auſtria, Hungaria, Polonia, in France, in Burgoine, and alſo heere in Englãd, betweene King Henry the ſixt, and King Edward the fourth, as ye haue already heard: whereby it had bene eaſie for the Turke, with little maiſtry, to haue ouerrunne all the Chriſtian Realmes in Europe, had not the prouidence of our mercifull Lord otherwiſe prouided to keepe Amurates the Turke, occupied in other ciuill warres at home in the meane while. Vnto this Fridericke came Elizabeth (as is aforeſaide) with Ladiſlaus her ſonne: by whome he was nouriſhed & enterteined a certaine ſpace, till at length, after the death of Vladiſlaus aforeſaid, king of Vngarie (which was ſlaine in battaile by the Turkes) the men of Auſtria, through the inſtigation of Vlricus Eizingerus, and of Vlricus Earle of Cilicia riſing vp in armour, required of Fridericke the Emperour, either to giue thẽ their yong king, or els to ſtãd to his own defence.

Vladiſlaus K. of Hungary ſlayne in battell by the Turke.

When Fridericke heard this, neither would he render to them a ſodaine anſwere, neither would they abide any longer delay: and ſo the matter growing to warre, the new Citie was beſieged, where many were ſlaine, and much harme done. At length the Emperours part beyng ẏ weaker, the Emperour through the interuẽtion of certaine Nobles of Germany, reſtored Ladiſlaus vnto their hands, who being yet vnder age, committed his iij. kingdomes to three gouernours. whereof Iohn Huniades the worthy Captaine aboue mentioned, had the ruling of Vngarie: George Pogiebracius had Boheme: and Vlricus the Earle of Cilicia, had Auſtria. which Vlrice, hauing the chiefe cuſtody of the King, bare the greateſt authority aboue the reſt, a man as much full of ambitiõ and tirannie, as he was hated almoſt of all the Auſtrians, and ſhortly after by the meanes of Eizingerus, was excluded alſo from the King and the Court, but afterwarde reſtored againe, and Eizingerus thruſt out. Such is the vnſtable condition of them which be next in place aboute Princes. But this contention betwene them I ouerpaſſe.

Ioh. Huniades, gouernour of Hũgary vnder the kyng.

George Pogiebracius gouernour of Boheme.

Vlricus gouernour of Auſtria.

Not long after, Ladiſlaus the yong King went to Boheme, there to be crowned, where George Pogiebracius (as is ſaid) had the gouernaunce. But Ladiſlaus during all the time of his being there, though being much requeſted, yet would neither enter into the Churches, nor heare the ſeruice of them, which did draw after the doctrine of Hus. In ſomuch that when a certaine Prieſt in the hygh tower of Prage, was appointed and addreſſed, after the maner of Prieſts, to ſay ſeruice before the King, beeyng knowne to hold with Iohn Hus and Rochezana, the King diſdaining at him, commaunded him to giue place and depart, or elſe he woulde ſende him downe headlong from the rocke of the Tower: and ſo the good miniſter repulſed by the King, departed. Alſo another time the ſayde Ladiſlaus, ſeeing the Sacrament carried by a Miniſter of that ſide, whome they called then Huſſites, woulde doo thereunto no reuerence. Ex Æne. Syluio.

Ladiſlaus a young popiſh kyng.

Ladiſlaus could not abide the doctrine of Hus.

At length the long abode of the King, although it was not very long, yet ſeemed to the godly diſpoſed to be lõger then they wiſhed: and that was not to ẏ king vnknowen, which made him to make the more haſt away. But before he departed, he thought firſt to viſit the noble Citie Vratiſlauia in Schleſia. In the which Citie, the foreſaid King Ladiſlaus being there in the high Church, at ſeruice many great Princes were about him: Among whome was alſo George Pogiebracius, who then ſtoode neareſt to the King, vnto whome one Chilianus, plaieng the Paraſite about the King (as the faſhion is of ſuch as faine themſelues fooles, to make other men as very fooles as they) ſpake in this wiſe as foloweth: with what countenance you do behold this our ſeruice, I ſee right well, but your hart I do not ſee. Say then, doth not the order of this our Religion ſeeme vnto you decent and comely? Do you not ſee how many and how great princes, yea the king himſelfe, do follow one order and vniformitie? And why doo you then follow rather your Preacher Rochezana then theſe? Do you thinke a few Bohemians to be more wiſe then all the Church of Chriſt beſides? why then do you not forſake that rude and ruſticall people, and ioine to theſe Nobles, as you are a noble man your ſelfe.

Chilianus a Paraſite about kyng Ladiſlaus.

The wordes of a Popiſh Paraſite to Pogiebracius.

Vnto whome, thus Pogiebracius ſagely againe doth aunſwere. If you ſpeake theſe words of your ſelfe, ſayth he, you are not the man whome yon faine your ſelfe to be: and ſo to you I aunſwere, as not to a foole. But if you ſpeake this by the ſuggeſtion of others, then muſt I ſatiſfie them. Heare therefore. As touching the Ceremonies of the Church, euery man hath a conſcience of his owne to follow. As for vs, we vſe ſuch Ceremonies, as we truſt do pleaſe God: Neither is it in our arbitrement to beleeue what we will our ſelues. The mind of man being perſwaded with great reaſons, is captiuated, wil he, nill he: and as nature is inſtructed and taught, ſo is ſhe drawne, in ſome one way, and in ſome another. As for my ſelfe, I am fully perſwaded in the Religion of my preachers. If I ſhould follow thy Religion, I might perchance deceiue men, going contrary to mine owne conſcience, but I can not deceiue God, who ſeeth the harts of all: Neither ſhall it become mee to frame my ſelfe lyke to thy diſpoſition. That which is meete for a Ieſter, is not likewiſe conuenient for a noble man. And theſe wordes eyther take to thy ſelfe, as ſpoken to thee, if thou bee a wiſe man, or elſe I referre them to thoſe which ſet thee a worke. Ex Æn. Sylu. in Hiſt. Bohem.

An anſwere proceeding of a heauenly wiſdome.

After the King was returded from the Bohemians againe to Auſtria, ẏ Hungarians likewiſe made their petitions to the king, that he would alſo come vnto thẽ. The gouernour of Hũgarie (as ye before haue heard) was Ioannes Huniades, whoſe victorious acts againſt ẏ Turks are famous. Againſt this Huniades, wicked Vlricus Earle of Cilicia, did all he could with the King, to bring him to deſtructiõ, and therfore cauſed the king to ſend for him vp to Vienna, and there priuely to worke hys death. But Huniades hauing thereof intelligence, offereth hymſelfe wythin Hungary to ſerue hys Prince, to all affaires: Out of the lande where he was, it was neyther beſt (ſayde hee) for the Kynge, nor ſafeſt for hym ſelfe, to come. The Earle being ſo diſappoynted, came downe wyth certaine Nobles of the Courte, to the borders of Hungarie, thynking eyther to apprehend him and bryng hym to Vienna, or there to diſpatch hym. Huniades, without in the fieldes, ſayde hee woulde common wyth hym, wythin the Towne he would not be brought. After that, an other trayne alſo was laide for hym, that vnder pretence of the kings ſafeconduct, he ſhoulde meete the king in the broade fieldes of Vienna. But Huniades ſuſpecting deceit, came in dede to the place appoynted, where hee neither ſeeing the Kyng to come, nor the Earle to haue any ſafe conduct for hym, was mooued (and not without cauſe) againſt the Earle, declaring howe it was in hys power there to ſlay him, which went about to ſeeke hys bloud, but for the reuerence of the king, he would ſpare him and let him goe.

Huniades ſpareth his enemie.

Not long after this, the Turke wyth a great power of fighting men, to the number of an hundreth and fifteene thouſande, arriued in Hungarie, where he laid ſiege to the Citie Alba. But through the mercifull hand of God, Iohn Huniades, and Capiſtranus a certaine Minorite, wyth a ſmall garriſon of Chriſtian ſouldiors, gaue him the repulſe and put him to flight, wyth all hys mighty hoſte: whereof more (Chriſt willing) heereafter. Ex hiſt Bohemic. Aen. Syluij. Huniades ſhortly after this victorie, deceaſed. Of whoſe death when the king and the Earle did vnderſtande, they came the more boldly into Hungarie, where hee being receiued by Ladiſlaus Huniades ſonne, into the Towne of Alba, there vewed the places where the Turkes before had pitched theyr tentes. When thys Ladiſlaus heard that the king was comming firſt toward the towne, obediently he opened to hym the gates. Foure thouſand only of armed ſouldiours he debarred from entring the Citie.

In the meane time while the King was there reſident in the Citie, the Earle with other nobles did ſitte in counſaile, requiring alſo Ladiſlaus to reſorte vnto them: who firſt doubting with hymſelfe what he might doe, at length putteth on a priuie coate of maile, and commeth to them. Whether the Earle firſt beganne wyth him, or he wyth the Earle, it is not knowen. The opinion is of ſome, that Vlricus firſt called him traitor, for ſhutting the gates againſt the kings ſoldiours. Howſoeuer the occaſion began, thys is vndoubted, that Vlricus taking his ſworde from hys page, let flie at his head. To breake the blowe, ſome putting vp their hands, had their fingers cut of. The Hungarians hearing a noiſe & tumult wythin the chamber, brake it vpon them, & there incontinent ſlewe Vlrike the Earle, wounding and cutting him almoſt alto peeces: The King hearing thereof, although he was not a little diſcontented thereat in his minde: yet ſeeing there was then no other remedy, diſſembled his griefe for a time, Frõ thence the king tooke his iourny againe to Buda, accompanied wyth the foreſayde Ladiſlaus, who paſſyng by yͤ towne, where the wife of Huniades was mourning for the death of her huſband, ſeemed wͭ many faire wordes to comfort her: and after he had there ſufficiently repaſted hym ſelfe, wyth ſuch pretence of diſſembled loue, and fained fauour, that they were without all ſuſpition & feare: from thence he ſet forward in hys iourney, taking wyth him the two ſonnes of Huniades, Ladiſlaus and Mathias, who were right ready to wait vpon him. The king being come to Buda (whether of his owne head, or by ſiniſter counſell ſet on) when hee had them at a vauntage, cauſed bothe the ſonnes of Huniades: to witte, Ladiſlaus and Mathias, to be apprehended. And firſt was brought forth Ladiſlaus the elder ſonne, to the place of execution, there to be beheaded: where meekely he ſuffered, being charged wyth no other crime, but thys, publiſhed by the voyce of the cryer, ſaying: Thus are they to be chaſtened, which are rebelles againſt their Lord. Peucerus wryting of his death, addeth thys moreouer, that after the hangman had 3. blowes at his necke, yet notwythſtanding the ſayd Ladiſlaus hauing his hands bound behinde hym, after the thirde ſtroke, roſe vpright vppon hys feete, and looking vp to heauen, called vpon the Lord, and proteſted his innocency in that behalf: and ſo laying downe his necke againe, at the fourth blowe was diſpatched. Ex Peucer. Chro. lib. 5.

It was not long after thys cruelty was wrought vpon Ladiſlaus, the king being about the age of twentye & two yeares, that talke was made of the kings marryage, wyth Magdalene daughter to the French king. The place of the marryage was appoynted at Prage, where greate preparation was for the matter. At the firſt entraunce of the King into the Citie of Prage, Rochezana wyth a company of Miniſters, ſuch as were fauourers of Iohn Hus, and of ſincere Religion, came with all ſolemnity to receiue the king, making there hys oration to gratulate the kings moſt ioyful and proſperous acceſſe into the ſame his owne Realme and countrey of Boheme. Vnto whych Rochezana, after he had ended hys Oration, ſcarce the king woulde open hys mouth to geue thankes to him, nor any chearefull countenaunce vnto hys companye, but fiercely ſeemed to frowne vppon them. In the next Pagen after theſe, came forth the Prieſtes of the high Minſter, after the moſt Popiſh maner, meeting him wyth Proceſſion, and wyth the Sacrament of the aultare: For as Panacea among Phiſitions ſerueth for all diſeaſes, ſo the ſacrament of the popes aultare ſerueth for all pompes and Pagens. Firſt it muſt lie vppon the aultare, then it muſt be holden vp wͭ hands, then it muſt hang in the pixe, it muſt ſerue for the quicke, it muſt alſo helpe the dead, it muſt moreouer viſite the ſick, it muſt walk about yͤ churchyard, it muſt go about the ſtreets, it muſt bee caried about the fieldes to make the graſſe to growe, it muſt be had to the battaile, it muſt ride on horſebacke before the Pope. And finally, it muſt welcome kings into Cities. Wherein theſe Catholicke fathers doe ſeeme ſomewhat to forget themſelues. For if the Pope, being inferiour to the Sacrament of the aultar, at the commyng of kings, doe vſe to ſitte ſtill while the kings come and kiſſe hys feete, what reaſon is it that the Sacrament of the aultare, whyche is (I trowe) aboue the Pope, ſhoulde meete kings by the way, and welcome them to the towne? But thys by the way of parentheſis: Let vs nowe continue the text.

Preparation to the kinges mariage.

Ladiſlaus the king, receaued in Boheme. Ladiſlaus the king, an infeſt enemie againſt the Huſſians. The ſacrament of the aulter vſed to many purpoſes.

When Ladiſlaus thys Catholicke king, who had ſhewed hymſelfe before ſo ſtoute and ſterne againſt Rochezana and his company, had ſeene theſe Catholique prieſts with theyr Proceſſion, and eſpecially wyth their bleſſed Sacrament, to come: wyth all reuerence and much deuotion, hee lyghted downe from his horſe, hee embraced the croſſe and kyſſed it, and wyth chearefull countenaunce ſaluted the Prieſtes in order. All thys while his young wife was not yet come out of Fraunce, but Legates were ſent, after moſt ſumptuous wiſe, to conduct her. Other Legates alſo were ſent the ſame time, to the Emperour Fredericke, for conconcluſion of peace. The thirde Legacie was directed likewiſe to Pope Calixtus about Religion, howe to reduce the Bohemians to the Churche of Rome. The authour of thys ſtory (which was Pope Pius hymſelfe) declareth further the opinion of ſome to be, that king Ladiſlaus yͤ ſame time had entended, to make a finall ende and deſtruction of all that ſecte in Bohemia, whych helde with the doctrine of Iohn Hus, and Hierome, by the aſſemble and cõcourſe of the Catholique Princes, and popiſh Prelates, whyche were appoynted there to meete together at that marriage in Prage. For there ſhoulde be firſt the Emperour Fredericke, Elizabeth the kings mother, and hys ſiſters Elizazabeth, and Anna, the Princes of Saxonie. Baioria, Sileſia, Franconia, the Palatine, and other Princes of Rhene: many alſo of the Lordes of Fraunce, beſides the Popes Cardinals, Legates, Prelates and other poteſtates of the Popes Church. Who if they had all together conuented in Boheme, no doubt but ſome great miſchiefe hadde beene wrought there againſt the Huſſites: againſt whome thys Ladiſlaus, following the ſteppes of Sigiſmundus hys graundfather, and Albertus hys father, was euer an vtter enemie. But when man hath purpoſed, yet God diſpoſeth as pleaſeth hym, Man purpoſeth but God diſpoſeth.

And therefore, truely it is wrytten of Aeneas Syluius in the ſame place, ſaying: De regimine Ciuitatum, de mutatione regnorum, de orbis imperio, minimum eſt, quod homines poſsint (tum vero De religionis conſtitutione multo minus) magna magnus diſponit Deus. That is. In regiment of Cities, in alteration of kingdomes, in ruling and gouerning the world, it is leſſe then nothing that man can do: it is the hygh God that ruleth high things. Whereunto then I may wel adde thys moreouer, and ſay: that if the gouernance of worldly kingdomes ſtandeth not in mans power, but in the diſpoſition of God, muche leſſe is it then, that mans power can doe in the regiment and gouerning of Religion. Example wherof in this purpoſed deuiſe of Princes, doth euidently appeare. For as thys great preparation and ſolemnitie of mariage was in doing, and the Princes ready to ſet forth, with a litle turne of Gods holy hand, al theſe great purpoſes were ſodeinly turned and daſhed. For in the middeſt of this buſines, about the 21. day of Nouember. An. 1461. this great aduerſarie of Chriſtes people, king Ladiſlaus, king of Boheme, of Hungarie, and Prince of Auſtria ſickened,

And thys ende made Ladiſlaus, one of the mightieſt Princes at that time in all Europe: in whome three mighty kingdomes were conioyned and combined together, Auſtria, Hungaria, and Bohemia: which countreys doe lie Southeaſt from Englande, in the fartheſt partes of all Germanie, towarde Conſtantinople, and the dominion of the Turks, & contain theſe principal townes in them.

George Pogiebracius.

After the deathe of Ladiſlaus, the kingdome of Boheme fell to George Pogiebracius aboue mentioned, whō Pope Innocent the eight, did excommunicate and depoſe for hys religion, as is afore declared.

Mathias Huniades.

Furthermore, the kingdome of Hungary, was geuen to Mathias ſonne of Huniades, who was in captiuity (as is ſayd) with king Ladiſlaus, and ſhould haue bene put to death after his brother, had not the king before bene preuented wyth death, as is aboue recorded. Moreouer, heere is to be noted that the ſayde king Ladiſlaus, thus dying wythout wife and iſſue, left behinde hym two ſiſters aliue: to witte, Elizabeth, which was maried to Caſimirus king of Polonia: and Anna, maried to william, duke of Saxonie, Elizabeth by her huſbande Caſimirus, king of Polonia, had Vladiſlaus, who at length was king both of Boheme and Hungarie. This Caſimirus, firſt was maryed to Beatrix, wife before to Mathias. Then being diuorced from her by the diſpenſation of Pope Alexander, maryed a newe wife a Counteſſe of Fraunce, by whome he had two children, Lewes, and Anna, Lewes which was heire of both kingdomes of Boheme, and Hungarie, was ſlayne fighting againſt the Turkes, Anna was maried to Ferdinandus, by whome he was Archduke of Auſtria, kyng of Boheme. &c.

Sigiſmundus left onely onedaughter.	Elizabeth, wife to Albertus Emperour. who had 3. children.	Ladiſlaus, king of Hungarie, Boheme, and Auſtria.
		Elizabeth, wyth of Caſimirus, kynge of Polonie: who had	Vladiſlaus, kyng of Boheme and Hungary, who by hys seconde wife, Counteſſe of Fraunce, had	Ludouicus, King of Boheme & Hungarie. Anne, wife to Ferdinandus, Father to thys Maximilian nowe Emperour.
		Anna, wyſe to William Duke of Saxon.

Warre betwene Mathias and Fridericke the Emperour.

Ye heard before, howe after the deceaſe of Ladiſlaus, the Hungarians by their election preferred Mathias ſurnamed Coruinus, which was ſonne of Huniades, to ye kingdome of Hungary. For which cauſe diſſention fel betwene Friderick the Emperor and him, for that the ſaid Friderick was both nominated himſelfe by diuers vnto that kyngdom, & alſo becauſe he had the crown of Hungary then remaining in his hands, which Elizabeth mother to K. Ladiſlaus, had brought to the Emperor, as was before declared. But this warre betweene them, was ceaſed by the interceſſiō of the Princes of Germany, ſo that Mathias ranſomed that crowne of Fridericke for 8000. Florences.

Georg Pogiebracius by the Pope depoſed from his kingdome, for fauoring of I. Hus.

Not long after, Pope Innocent being diſpleaſed with George Pogiebracius (or Boiebracius) king of Bohemia, for fauouring of Iohn Hus, & his Religion, that is to ſay, for playing the part of a godly Prince, dyd excommunicate & depoſe him, conferring his kingdome to Mathias. But for ſomuch as Fridericke the Emperour would not thereto conſent, and eſpecially after the death of the foreſayde George, when the Emperour and the Bohemians, leauing out Mathias, did nominate Vladiſlaus ſonne of Caſimirus, king of Polonie, and of Elizabeth, to be kyng of Boheme, therefore great warre and trouble kindled betweene him and Fridericke the Emperour: wherein the Emperour had vtterly gone to ruine, had not Albertus Duke of Saxonie reſcued the Emperour, and repreſſed the vehemencie of Mathias.

Albert Duke of Saxonie.

The noble actes of Ioh. & Mathias Huniades, againſt the Turkes.

The noble actes of Iohn Huniades, and of this Mathias hys ſonne, were not onely great ſtayes to Hungary, but almoſt to al Chriſtendom, in repelling backe ye Turke. For beſide the other victories of Iohn Huniades the father, afore mentioned, thys Mathias alſo his ſonne ſucceding no leſſe in the valiantnes, then in the name of hys father, did ſo recouer Sirminn, and the confines of Illyrica, from the hands of the Turks, & ſo vanquiſhed their power, that both Mahometes, and alſo Baiazetes hys ſonne, were enforced to ſeeke for truce.

Syrmum & the borders of Illirica, recouered from the Turkes.

Ouer and beſides, the ſame Mathias, conducting hys army into Boſna (which lyeth South from Hungary) recouered againe Iaitza, the principall towne of that kyngdome, from the Turkes poſſeſſion. who, if other Chriſten Princes had ioyned their helpes withal, would haue proceded farther into Thracia. But behold here the malitious ſubtilty of Sathan, working by the Pope. For while Mathias was thus occupied in hys expedition agaynſt the Turkes, wherein he ſhould haue bene ſet forward and ayded by Chriſten Princes, and Byſhoppes: the Byſhop of Rome, wickedly and ſinfully miniſtreth mater of ciuil diſcord betwene him & Pogiebracius aforeſayd, in remouing him from the right of hys kingdome, and transferryng the ſame to Mathias. wherupon, not only the courſe of victory againſt the Turkes was ſtopped, but alſo great warre Iaitza recouered.

The ſubtile practiſe of Sathan to ſtoppe good proceedings and bloudſhed followed in Chriſten realmes, as well betweene thys Mathias, and Pogiebracius, wyth hys two ſonnes Victorinus and Henricus, as alſo betweene Caſimirus, Vladiſlaus, and Mathias warring about Vratiſlauia, till at length the matter was taken vp by the Princes of Germanie.

The Popes excommunication not obeyed of diuers in Bohemia. Mathias adioyned Morauia & part of Sleſia vnto Hungarie. Anno. 1474.

Albeit, for al the execrable excõmunication of the Pope againſt Pogiebracius, a great part of Boheme would not be remoued from the obedience of their King, whome the Pope had curſed, and depoſed: yet Mathias toke from him Morauia, and a great portion of Sleſia, and adioyned it to his kingdome of Hungarie. An. 1474.

The religiõ of the Bohemians, defended by God againſt the 4. greateſt princes in Europe.

¶ Where this by the way is to be noted, that the Religion in Bohemia, planted by J. Hus, could not be extinct or ſuppreſſed withall the power of foure mightie Princes, Venceſlaus, Sigiſmundus, Albertus, and Ladiſlaus, notwithſtanding they wyth the Popes, did therein what they poſſibly coulde: but ſtill the Lorde maintained the ſame, as ye ſee by thys Pogiebracius king of Boheme, whome the Pope coulde not vtterly remoue out of the kingdome of Bohemia.

Mathias a great louer of learning and of learned men. The noble library of Mathias king of Hungary. Ex 5. lib, Peuc.

This forementioned Mathias, beſide his other memorable actes of chiualry, is no leſſe alſo commended for hys ſingulare knowledge and loue of learning and of learned men, whom he with great ſtipends, procured into Pannonia: where by the meanes of good letters, and furniture of learned mē, he reduced in ſhort ſpace the barbarous rudeneſſe of that countrey, into a flouriſhing common wealth. Moreouer, ſuch a Library he did there erect, and repleniſh with all kinde of authors, ſciences, and hyſtories, which he cauſed to be tranſlated out of Greeke into Latine, as the like is not thought to be foũd, next to Italy, in all Europe beſide. Out of which Librarye we haue receaued diuers fragments of wryters, as of Polybius, and Diodorus Siculus which were not extant before. Ex Peucer.

Commendation of George Pogiebracius. Ex pij pont. Deſcriptione Europæ. Gods fauor to the ſõnes of Pogiebracius.

The conſtante fortitude alſo of Georgius Pogiebracius king of Boheme, is not vnworthy of commendation: of whom alſo Pope Pius himſelfe, in Deſcriptione Europæ, doth honeſtly report (as a Pope may ſpeake of a proteſtãt) in theſe words wryting: Magnus vir alioqui, & rebus bellicis clarus. &c. Who although Pope Innocent did execrate & hys children, yet hee left not of the profeſſion of the veritie & knowledge which he had receyued. Moreouer, the Lord ſo proſpered hys ſonnes, Victorinus, and Henricus; that they ſubdued their ennemies, and kept their eſtate: In ſo much, that when Fredericke the Emperor at Vienna was in cuſtody encloſed by the Citizens. Victorinus did reſtore and deliuer him out of their hands: wherefore the Emperour afterward aduaunced them to be Dukes. Alſo God gaue them ſometimes proſperous victory againſt Mathias, as at the City of Glogonia. &c.

The death of Pogiebracius.

After the deceaſe of Georgius Pogiebracius, King of Boheme, Friderike the Emperor aſſigned that kingdom, not to Mathias, vppon whome the Pope had beſtowed it before, but vppon Vladiſlaus ſonne of Caſimirus, king of Polonye, and of Elizabeth, daughter of the Emperor Albert, and ſiſter to Ladiſlaus. For the which, Mathias being diſcontented, and for that the Emperor had denied him his daughter Kunegunda, went about to exclude Vladiſlaus out of Boheme, and alſo proclaimed warre agaynſt Fridericke. But before he accompliſhed his purpoſed preparation, death preuented him, who wythout iſſue departed, Anno 1490.

Vladiſlaus Caſimirus ſonne, made king of Hungary.

After the death of Mathias, departing wythout iſſue, Vladiſlaus ſonne of Caſimirus, king of Polonie, and of Elizabeth daughter to Albert Emperour, and ſiſter to K. Ladiſlaus maried his wife Beatrix, whom Mathias left a widow, and with her was elected king of Hungary, with this condition made betwene him and Friderike the Emperour, that if he died without lawfull iſſue, then the kingdomes of Hungary and of Boheme, ſhoulde retourne to Maximilian, ſonne to Fridericus. But Vladiſlaus not long after, did repudiate his wife Beatrix, and depriuing her of her kingdome, cauſed the ſaid Beatrix to ſwear and to conſent to the marying of an other woman, whych was the daughter of the French king, named Anne, procuryng from Pope Alexander, a diſpenſation for the ſame, as is before ſignified. By this Anne, Vladiſlaus had Lewys, & Anne, which Anne afterwarde was maried to Ferdinandus.

Thys Charles after hee had beſieged the Citie Nuſſia, or Nouaſium, the ſpace of a whole yere, went about to alienate the territorie of Colen, from the Empire to hys owne dominion: wherefore warre began to be moued betweene him and Fredericke the Emperor. At length through communication had, peace was concluded, and a marriage appoynted betweene Mary the only daughter of Charles, and Maximilian the Emperours ſonne. Anno 1475. Warre & diſſention among Chriſten princes

And thus haue you the miſerable vexations and contentions among our Chriſtian Princes heere in Europe deſcribed, vnder the raigne of thys Fredericke the thyrde Emperour, ſo that almoſt no angle nor portion of al Chriſtendome (whether we conſider the ſtate of the Churche, or ciuill gouernement) was free from diſcorde, tumults, and diſſentions. Thys cankerde worme of ambition ſo myghtely creepeth, and euery where preuaileth in theſe latter endes of the worlde, that it ſuffereth neither reſt in common weales, nor peace in the Churche, nor any ſparckle of charitie almoſt to remaine in the life of men. And what maruaile then, if the Lorde ſeeing vs ſo farre to degenerate, not onely from hys preceptes and counſailes, but almoſte from the ſenſe and bounde of nature, that brother wyth brother, vncle wyth nephewe, bloude wyth bloude cannot agree in ſtriuing, killing, and fighting for worldly dominions, do ſend therfore theſe cruell Turkes vpon vs ſo to ſcourge and deuoure vs? Of whoſe bloudy tiranny & daily ſpilling of Chriſtian bloude, heereafter (by the grace of Chriſt) we will diſcourſe more at large, when wee come to the peculiar conſideration of the Turkiſhe ſtoryes. In the meane time, thys ſhalbe for vs to note and obſerue, not ſo much the ſcourge howe greeuous it is: but rather to beholde the cauſes which being the whippe vpon vs, whych is our owne miſerable ambition and wretched warres among our ſelues.

The diſcord of Chriſtians ſcourged by the Turkes.

Diſcord and diſſention in the Church noted.

And yet if this Chriſtian peace and loue, left and commended ſo heartely vnto vs by the mouth of the ſonne of God being nowe baniſhed out of Chriſtian realmes and ciuile gouernaunce, myght at leaſt finde ſome refuge in the Church, or take Sanctuarie among menne profeſſing nothyng but Religion, leſſe cauſe we had to mourne. Nowe ſo it is, that as we ſee little peace and amitie amonge ciuil Potentates: ſo leſſe we finde in the ſpiritual ſorte of them, which chiefly take vpon them the adminiſtration of Chriſtes Churche. So that it may well be doubted, whether the ſcourge of the Turke, or the ciuill ſworde of Prynces haue ſlaine moe in the fieldes, or the Popes keyes haue burnt moe in Townes and Cities. And all be it ſuch as be profeſſed to the Churche, do not fight wyth ſword and targate for dominions and reuenewes, as warlike Princes doe: yet thys ambition, pride, and auarice, appeareth in them nothyng inferiour to other worldly poteſtates: eſpecially if wee beholde and aduiſe the doings and inſatiable deſires of the court of Rome. Great argument and profe hereof neither is hard to be found, nor farre to be ſoughte. What realme almoſt through all chriſtendom hath not only ſeene with their eyes; but haue felt in their purſſes the ambitiõ intollerable, and auarice inſatiable of that deuouring church, and alſo haue complained vpon the greuance thereof, but neuer coulde be redreſſed? what exactions and extortions haue bene here in England out of biſhopricks, monaſteries, benefices, deanries, Archdeaconries, and all other offices of the Churche, to fill the Popes coffers: and when they had all done, yet euery yeare brought almoſte ſome newe inuention from Rome, to fetch in our Engliſh money: and if all the floudes in Englande (yea in all Europe) did runne into the ſea of Rome, yet were that Ocean neuer able to be ſatiſfied.

Ambition & auarice of the church of Rome

In Fraunce lykewiſe, what floudes of money were ſwalowed vp in this ſea of Rome, it was openly complained of in the councel of Baſil as is teſtified by Henry Token, Canon and Ambaſſadour of the Archbiſhop of Maidenburge, written in his boke intituled Rapularium, where as hee wryteth that in the Councell of Baſill. An.1536. the Archbyſhop of Lions did declare, that in the time of Pope Martine, there came out of France to the court of Rome, 9.millions of golde, which was gathered of the Byſhops and Prelates, beſides thoſe whych could not be counted of the poore clergy, which daily without number, runne vnto the court of Rome, carying with them all their whole ſubſtance, The archbiſhop of Turonne ſayde alſo at Baſil, in yͤ yeare of our Lord 1439. that three millions of gold came vnto Rome in his time, within the ſpace of 14.yeres, from the prelates & prelacies, wherof no accompt could be made beſide the poore cleargy, which daily run to that court. Let the man which feareth God, iudge what a deuouring gulf this is. A million containeth x.C.M.

Concilium Bituriense.

And what made Pope Pius the 2. to labor ſo earneſtly to Lewes the 11. the French Kinge (who as is aforeſayde was a great enemy to the houſe of Burgoin) that he wold (according to his former promiſe) aboliſhe & vtterly extinct the conſtitution eſtabliſhed before at the Counſell of Bitures, by king Charles the 7. his predeceſſour, called Pragmatica Sanctio, but onely the ambition of that ſea, which had no meaſure, and their auarice which had no ende, the ſtorie is this. King Charles 7. the French king, willing to obey and folow the councel of Baſil, did ſommon a Parliament at Bitures. where by the full conſent of all the ſtates in Fraunce, both ſpiritual and temporal, a certain conſtitution was decreed and publiſhed, called Pragmatica Sanctio. wherein was comprehended, briefly the pith and effect of all the Canons and decrees cõcluded in the councel of Baſil. The which conſtitution the ſaide king Charles willed and commaunded through all his realme, inuiolably to be obſerued and ratified for the honor and increaſe of Chriſtian religion for euer. This was An.1438.

Pragmatica Sanctio.

Ex Ioan. Maria Belga. de Schiſmat. & Conciliis. cap.24.

It followed, that after the deceaſe of thys foreſayde Charles the 7. ſucceded king Lewys 11. who had promiſed before, being Dolphine to Pope Pius, that if he euer came to the crowne, the foreſayd Sanctio Pragmatica ſhould be aboliſhed. wherupon Pope Pius hearing him to be crowned, did ſend vnto him Iohn Balucus a Cardinall, wyth hys great letterg patent, willing him to be mindful of hys promiſe made. The king eyther willing, or els pretending a will to performe, and accompliſh what he had promiſed, directed the Popes letters patẽt, wyth the ſayd Cardinal, to the counſaile of Paris, requiring them to conſult vpon the cauſe.

Pope pius laboreth that Pragmatica Sanctio ſhould be aboliſhed.

Thus the matter beyng brought and propoſed in the Parliament houſe, the kings Atturney named Ioannes Romanus, a man wel ſpoken, ſingularly witted, and wel reaſoned, ſtepping forth, with great eloquence, and no les boldnes, proued the ſayd Sanction to be profitable, holy, and neceſſary for the wealth of the realme, and in no caſe to be aboliſhed. Unto whoſe ſentence the Uniuerſity of Paris adioyning their conſent, did appeal from the attempts of the Pope, to the next generall Councell. The Cardinall vnderſtanding this, toke no litle indignation thereat, fretting and fuming, and threatning many terrible things againſt them: but al his minatory words notwithſtanding, he returned againe to the king, hys purpoſe not obtained, An.1438. Ex Ioan.Mario.

The counſaile of Paris appealeth from the pope to the generall Councell Vid. ſupra pag. 670.

Thus the Popes purpoſe in France was diſappoynted, which alſo in Germanie had come to the like effect, if Fredericke the Emperor had there done his part lykewiſe toward the Germaines: who at the ſame time bewailing their miſerable eſtate, wẽt about wyth humble ſute to perſwade the Emperor that he ſhould no longer be vnder the ſubiection of the Popes of Rome, except they had firſt obtained certaine things of them as touching the Charter of Appeales, declaring their eſtate to be far worſe (although vndeſerued) then the Frenchmen or Italians: whoſe ſeruants (and eſpecially of the Italians) they are worthely to be called, except that their eſtate were altered. The nobles & comminalty of Germanie, did inſtantly intreate wᵗ moſt waighty reaſons & examples, both for the vtilitie and profite of the Empire, to haue the Emperours aide and helpe therin, for that which he was bound vnto them by an oth: alledging alſo the great diſhonor & ignominie in that they alone had not the vſe of their owne lawes, declaring how yͤ French natiõ had not made their ſute vnto their king in vaine againſt the exactions of Popes: by whom they were defended, whych alſo prouided decrees and ordinances for the liberty of his people, & cauſed the ſame to be obſerued: the which thing the Emperor ought to foreſee within hys Empire, & to prouide for hys people and ſtates of his empire, as well as other Kings doe. For what ſhall come to paſſe therby, if that forreine nations hauing recourſe vnto their kings, being relieued and defended by them from the ſaid exactions, and the Germains, & ſtates of the Empyre flying vnto theyr Emperour, be by him forſaken or rather betraied & depriued of their owne lawes and decrees? The Emperor being moued, & partly ouercome by theyr perſwaſions, promiſed that he wold prouide no leſſe for them, then the king of Fraunce had done for the Frenchmen, and to make decrees in that behalfe: but the graue authoritie of Æneas Syluius, as Platina wryteth in the hiſtory of Pius the ſecond, brake of the matter, who by his ſubtile and peſtiferous perſwaſions did ſo bewitche the Emperour, that hee contemning the equall, iuſt, and neceſſary requeſtes of hys ſubiects, choſe the ſayd Aeneas to be hys Ambaſſadour vnto Calixtus then newly choſen Pope, to ſweare vnto hym in his name, & to promiſe the abſolute obedience of al Germany, as the only coũtry (as they call it) of obedience, neglecting the ordinances & decrees of their country, as before he had done vnto Eugenius the 4. being Ambaſſadour for the ſayd Frederike, promiſing that he & all the Germaines would be obedient vnto him from hẽceforth in al matters, as well ſpirituall as temporall.

The complaint of the Germaines to the Emperour, for helpe and ayde, againſt the oppreſſion of the Pope

Thus twiſe Friderike of Auſtrich contemned and derided the Germaines, & fruſtrating them of their natiue decrees and ordinances, brought them vnder ſubiection and bondage of the Pope: whych partly was the cauſe that 7. yeres before his death, he cauſed his ſonne Maximiliã, not only to be choſen, but alſo crowned king of Romains, and did aſſociate hym to yͤ miniſtration of the Empire, leaſt after hys death (as it came to paſſe) the Empire ſhoulde bee tranſported into an other family, ſuſpecting yͤ Germains, whom he had twiſe cõtrary to his lawes made ſubiect and in bondage vnto the Popes exactions: firſt before he was crowned in the time of Eugenius the 4. and again the ſecond time after hys coronation, and death of Pope Nicholas the 5. denying their requeſts. wherupon Germany being in this miſerable pouerty and greuous ſubiection vnder the Popes tiranny and polling, with teares and ſighs lamenting their eſtate, continued ſo almoſt vnto Luthers time, as the hyſtories hereafter following do teſtify.

Fredericke made the Germaines twiſe ſubiect vnto the Pope.

And here ceaſing with the ſtory of Fredericke, we will now procede to the raigne of Maximilian his ſonne, omitting diuers things els incident in the time of this Emperour: as firſt touching the vnbrotherly contention & conflicts betwene this Fredericke and Albertus hys brother, and Sigiſmundus his vncle, for the dukedome of Auſtria, after the death of Mathias afore mentioned: Omitting alſo to ſpeake of the long and cruel war betwene the Pruſſians, and Polonians, with the religious ſect of them, which were called Tentones fratres ſanctæ Mariæ, in the time of Uladiſlaus: Omitting alſo the ſtrife and variaunce for the dukedome of Millain, betwene Fredericus the Emperor, Alfonſus, Carolus duke of Orleance, & Franciſcus Sfortia: And howe the ſayde Princedome being after geuen to Sfortia, great warres were kindled & long continued betwene Sfortia and the Milleners, then betwene the Milleners and Uenetians, and after betweene the Frenchmen and the Milleners. All which tumultes and commotions, as not pertinent greatly to the purpoſe of this ſtory, I referre to other wryters, where they are to be founde more amply diſcourſed.

Frid. Albertus his brother, and Sigiſmundus ſtriue for the dukedome of Auſtria.

Warre betwene Franciſcus Sfortia and the Venetians about Millaine.

Warre betwene Lewes the Frenchking and the citie of Millaine.

Thys as more properly belonging to the ſtorye of the Church, I thought good not to paſſe ouer touching ſuch as were condemned, & ſuffered the paines of fire for teſtimony of Chriſt and his truth: Of whom one was Iohn a paſtor or a netcheard, which was a keper of cattel: The other was Ioannes de weſalia, although not burned, yet perſecuted neere to death vnder the raigne of thys Emperour Fredericus the 3.

And firſt touching thys Iohn the Netehearde, Thus wryteth Sebaſt.Munſterus. That the Biſhop of Herbypolis, condemned and burned for an hereticke one Iohn, whych was a keeper of cattel at a towne called Niclas Hauſen in Franconia, becauſe hee taught and helde that the lyfe of the cleargy was ignominious and abhominable before God. An.1476.Ex Munſtero.

Iohn a Netherde of Franconia Martyr.

Anno. 1476.

The other was Doctour Ioannes de weſſalia, who was complained vpon vnto Dietherus the Archbiſhop of Mentz, by the Thomiſts, vppon certaine articles and opinions, gathered out of hys bookes. wherefore the ſayde Dietherus, fearing elſe to be depoſed againe from his Biſhopricke, directeth forth commiſſion to the vniuerſities of Heidelberg and Colen, to haue the mater in examination, who conuenting together the yere aboue mentioned, called thys Doctour de weſſalia before them, making hym to ſweare that he ſhuld preſent and geue vp all his treatiſes, workes and wrytings, what ſo euer hee had made or preached:

ched: that being done, they deuided hys bookes amongeſt them ſelues, ſeuerally euery man to find out what hereſies and errors they could. His articles & opinions were theſe.

The articles and opiniõs of Iohn de Weſalia.

Free will nothing.

Prelates haue no more power ouer ſcriptures, then other men.

Extreme vnction reproued.

Againſt the primacy of the Pope.

That all men be ſaued freely, and through meere grace by faith in Chriſt. Free will to be nothing. Onely that we ſhoulde beleeue the word of God, and not the gloſe of any mã, or fathers. That the worde of God is to be expounded with the collation of one place with an other. That Prelates haue no authoritie to make lawes, or to expounde the ſcriptures by any peculiare right, geuen them more then to an other. That mennes traditions, as faſtings, pardones, feaſts, long prayers, peregrinations and ſuch like, are to be reiected. Extreme vnction and confirmation to be reprooued: confeſsion and ſatisfaction to be reprehended. The primacie of the Pope alſo he affirmed to be nothing.

Certaine other articles alſo were gathered out of hym by his aduerſaries, but in ſuch ſort, that they may ſeme rather to followe their owne malicious gathering, then any true intelligence of his minde: whereof more is to be vnderſtanded in this proceſſe hereafter.

Thus when Weſalianus was commanded to appear, there conuented together, firſt the Archbiſhop, the inquiſitor, the doctors of Colen, and the doctors of Heidelberge, with the maſters of the ſame, and the Rector of the vniuerſity of Mentz, the Deane of faculties, Bachelers of diuinity, and many other maiſters of the ſame vniuerſitie, Canons, doctors, with the biſhops Chanceller, and his councellers, beſides many religious prelates, ſchollers, wyth a doctor of Franckforte, the ſumner & bedels, which all met together in the great hall of the Minorites, for the examination of this Ioannes de Weſalia.

Iohn de Weſalia brought before the prelates.

The Inquiſitour ſpeaketh.

The anſwer of Weſalianus reaſonable.

Frier Elton the Inquiſitor, firſt ſitteth in the hygheſt place, then after him others according to their degree. In the beginning of the examination, firſt the Inquiſitor beginneth with theſe wordes: Moſt reuerent father and honorable doctors. &c. Our reuerent father and prince Elector hath cauſed this preſent cõuocation to be called, to hear the examination of M. Iohn de Weſalia, in certaine ſuſpected articles concerning the catholique faith. But ſomething I will ſay before, that may doe hym good, and deſire that two or three of them that fauoure hym, or ſome other, will riſe vppe and geue him counſaile, to forſake and leaue his errours, to recogniſe himſelfe, & to aſke pardon, which if he wil do, he ſhal haue pardon: if he wil not, we wil procede againſt him without pardone. And thus Weſalianus being cited and brought in the midſt betwixt 2. minorites, being very aged, and hauing a ſtaffe in his hand, was ſette before the Inquiſitor. Who beginning to anſwer for hymſelf with a long proteſtation, could not be ſuffred to proſecute his Oration, but was cutte off and required briefly, to make an end, and to tell them in fewe wordes whether he would ſtand to his opinions, or to the determination of the church. To this he aunſwered, ẏ he neuer ſpake any thing againſt the determination of the Church, but ſayde that he had written diuers and ſondry treatiſes, in the which if hee had erred, or were found to ſay otherwiſe then wel, he was content to reuoke and cal backe the ſame, and do al things that was requiſite. Then ſaid the Inquiſitor, do you aſke then pardon? The other anſwered, why ſhuld I aſke pardon, when I know no crime or error committed? The inquiſitour ſayd: well we will call you to the remembraunce thereof, and proceede to the examination.

The cruell proceeding of the Inquiſitour.

The greater cauſe of the Pope deſcribed.

Scio.

Credo.

In the meane time, others called vppon him inſtantly to aſke pardone. Then ſayd Weſalianus. I aſke pardone. Notwithſtanding the Inquiſitor proceeded to the examination, reading there two inſtruments, declaring that hee had authority from the Apoſtolicke ſea: after this cited the ſaid Iohn to appear to hys examination. Thirdly he commaunded him vnder paine of diſobedience, in the vertue of the holy Ghoſt, and vnder paine of excõmunication of the greater curſe, (from the which no man coulde abſolue him, but onely the Pope or the Inquiſitour, except onely at the poynt of death) to tell plainly the truth vppon ſuch things as ſhould be demanded of him concerning his faith, without ambages and ſophiſtication of wordes. And ſo being demanded firſt, whether he did beleue vpon his oth taken, that hee was bounde to tell the trueth, although it were againſt himſelfe or any other: to this he anſwered, Scio, that is: I know: Thẽ the Inquiſitour biddeth him ſay, Credo, that is, I beleeue. To the which hee aunſwered agayne, what nede I ſay that I beleeue that thing I know. There the Inquiſitor ſomething ſtirred wyth the matter, as hote as a toſte (as they ſay) cried out with a loude voice, maiſter Ioannes, maiſter Ioannes, maiſter Ioannes, ſay Credo, ſay Credo. Then he anſwered Credo.

After thys, being demaunded whether he had wrytten any treatiſe, concerning the binding of humaine lawes, to one Nicolas of Boheme, and whether he had written any treatiſe of the Eccleſiaſticall power of indulgences & pardons, and of faſting and other treatiſes: he beleued that he had ſo written, and had conferred wͭ diuers learned men: Alſo that he had ſent to the Biſhops of Wormes, a certaine treatiſe of faſting.

Many other interrogatories were miniſtred vnto him, whereof ſome were vaine, ſome falſe. Such as were more principal, here we will briefly touch, leauing out ſuperfluities.

His opinion of the ſacrament.

Being demaunded whether hee was a fautour of the Bohemians, he ſayde he was not. Alſo being demaunded concerning the Sacrament of the holy body and bloude of our Lorde, whether he thought Chriſte there to be contained really, or only diuinely, and whether he dyd beleeue in the ſayde Sacrament the ſubſtaunce of breade there to remaine, or onely the fourme thereof: to thys he aunſwered, not denying but the body of Chriſte was there really contained, and alſo wyth the body of Chriſte, the ſubſtaunce of bread to remaine.

His opinion of Monkes and Nunnes.

The vowe of chaſtitie.

After this he was demaunded his opinion concerning religious men, as Monkes, Nunnes, or begwines, whether he thought them to be bound to the vow of chaſtitie, or to the keping of any other vow, and whether he ſaid to the Friers Minorites any ſuch worde in effecte: I can not ſaue you in this your ſtate and order. Thys he confeſſed, that he had ſayde, howe that not your religion ſaueth you, but the grace of God, &c. not denying but they might be ſaued.

Mortall ſinne founnd by the Pope, beſide that which is expreſſed to be mortall in the ſcripture.

What is this article, but to make the Pope a god. Chriſt left no vicar in earthe.

Item, being required whether he beleued or had wrytten, that there is no mortall ſinne, but whyche is expreſt to be mortal in the canon of the holy Bible: to this he anſwered, that he did ſo beleue as he hath written, til he was better informed. Likewiſe being required what he thought of the vicar of Chriſt in earth, he aunſwered, that he beleeued that Chriſte left no vicare in earth: For the confirmation whereof he alledged and ſayde, that Chriſt aſcending vp to heauen, ſaid: Ecce ego vobiſcum ſum. &c. Behold I am with you. &c. In the which wordes he plainly declared, that hee would ſubſtitute vnder him no vicare in earth, and ſayde moreouer, if a vicare ſignified any man, which in ẏ abſence of the principal hath to do the works of the principall, then Chriſt hath no vicar here in earth.

Pardons and indulgences be of no effect.

The treaſure of ſaintes merites is not in earth.

In like maner, concerning indulgences and pardons, ſuch as the church doth vſe to geue, they demanded of him, whether they had any efficacy, & what he thought thereof: who anſwered againe that he had written a certaine treatiſe of that matter, & what hee had wrytten in that treatiſe, he would perſiſt therin, which was thus: that he beleeued, that the treaſure boxe of the merits of Saints could not be diſtributed of the Pope to others, becauſe that treaſure is not left here in earth: For ſo it is wryttẽ in the Apocalips: Opera enim illorum, ſequuntur illos, &c. that is: their workes follow them.

Item, that theyr merites could not be applied to other men, for the ſatiſfaction of theyr paine due vnto them, and therefore that the Pope and other Prelates cannot diſtribute that treaſure to men.

This ſaying was taken out of one Cantor Parienſis, which was wont to ſay, that pardõs were holy decertes, becauſe that laye men there were prouoked, by naughtie decertes to geue good almes.

It was obiected to him moreouer, that in the ſayde his treatiſe, he called pardons & indulgences, Pias fraudes fidelium, that is, holy fraudes and deceits of the faithful.

Alſo, being demaunded what he thought of the halowing and bleſſings of altars, chalices, veſtiments, wax candels, palmes, herbes, holy water and other diuine things, &c. Hee aunſwered that they had no ſpirituall vertue and power in them to driue away deuils, and that holye water hath no more efficacie then other water not hallowed, as concerning remiſſion of veniall ſinnes, and driuing away deuels and other effectes, which the ſchoole doctours do attribute to it.

Degrees in ſcripture forbidden to marry.

Item, for degrees of mariage forbidden in the Scryptures, he beleueth that all Chriſtian men vnder deadly ſin, are bound vnto the ſame.

Item, that he beleeueth that God may geue grace to a man hauing the vſe of reaſon, without all motion of Free wil. Alſo he thinketh that S. Paule in his conuerſion, dyd nothing of his owne free wil for his conuerſion. He beleeueth moreouer, that God may geue ſuch grace to a manne hauing the vſe of reaſon, not doing that which in hym is.

Nothing to be beleued, but which is in ſcripture conteyned.

Item, he affirmed that nothing is to be beleued, which is not conteined in the Canon of the Bible.

Alſo, that the elect are ſaued onely by the grace of God.

Beſides al theſe moreouer, he was charged with ẏ old opinion of the Grecians, which they dyd holde contrary to the Romaine church, vnto the time of the councell of Ferraria aboue mentioned, concerning the proceedyng of the holy Ghoſt.

The wedneſday next following, 3, Doctours, the ſuffragane, Herwicus & Iacobus Sprenger, were ſent vnto

The Church geueth witnes who were the writers of the ſcripture, but hath no authoritie aboue that which is writtẽ.

him with perſwaſions to exhort him, and when he would not ſtand to their Canons, wherby they went about to refute his doctrine, he was then demanded of Herwicus, why he would beleue rather the 4. Euangeliſts, then the Goſpel of Nicodemns. To whõ he anſwerd, becauſe he wold. Being aſked againe why he beleued the 4. Euangeliſts, he ſaid: becauſe he ſo receiued of his parents. Then being demaunded, why he would not beleue the Doctours, becauſe (ſaid he) their doctrine is not canonical ſcripture. Againe, it was to him obiected, why he would be credited himſelf, when he preached, ſeing he would not beleue the holy doctors? To whome hee anſwered in this wiſe, ſaying, that he did preach as his duety was, but whether they gaue credit to his words, he did not care.

By this inquiſition, Chriſt himſelfe might be condemned.

Thys examination being ended, after theſe Articles were condemned by the Inquiſitour & his aſſiſtance, then ſaid he after this maner: As you do with me, if Chriſt himſelfe were here, he might be condemned as an heretike. After this they ſent diuers to him to haue communication wͭ him, and to perſwade him, ſending alſo to him wͭ his Articles a forme of aſking pardone: at length within 3. or 4. daies after, hee was content to condeſcend vnto them, and to ſubmit himſelfe to their holy mother Churche, and the information of the Doctors. In the boke of Orthuinus Gratius, and in Paralypomena, adioyned to Abbas Vrſpergenſis, we reade theſe wordes wrytten of this Ioannes de Weſalia: Dempto ſolo articulo de proceſsione ſpiritus ſancti, in alijs videtur non ita graui cenſura &c. That is: except onely the Article of the proceding of the holy Ghoſt, in other Articles it ſemeth that he was not to be chaſtened with ſo ſharpe cenſure, if reſpit and ſpace had ben geuen him, if good councellours had bene aboute him, if all they which did accuſe and moleſt him, had not bene de via realium, as Thomiſtes, that is, of the ſect of Thomas: which Thomiſts were ſet at that time, againſt the other ſect of the ſeculars, which were called Nominales, and therfore, they ſo ſpited this Doctour becauſe he did not hold with their Thomas, againſt whome otherwiſe (had it not ben for that cauſe) they would neuer haue ben ſo fierce and malitious in proceding againſt him. I take God to witneſſe, which knoweth all things, yͭ this proceſſe, which was made againſt him for his reuoking & burning of his bookes, did greatly diſpleaſe M. Engeline of Brunſwick, a great diuine, and alſo M. John Keiſersberge, being both learned, and famous men, but namely M. Engeline thought, that too much malice and raſhneſſe was ſhewed in handling of that ſame man, and did not feare to ſay, that many of his articles, and the greater part thereof, might be holden well inough, and greatly blamed the mad and phantaſticall diſſention of the Thomiſts, ſeeking by all maner of wayes, how to get the triumph ouer the ſeculare deuines. &c. Hæc ille.

Doct. Iohn de Weſalia reuoketh his opiniõs.

Although thys aged and feble old man, by weakeneſſe was conſtrained to geue ouer vnto the Romiſh clergy, by outward profeſſion of his mouth: yet notwithſtãding, his opinions and doctrine declared his inward heart, of what iudgement he was, if feare of death preſent had not otherwiſe enforſed him to ſay, then hee did thinke. Agayne, although he had reuoked after their minds, yet we reade no ſuch fourme of recantation to be preſcribed to hym to read opẽly vnto the people, as the vſe is here in England. Albert duke of Saxonie, called Dextra manus imperis.

Albert Marques of Brandenburg called Achilles Germnnicus.

As touching the raigne of this Fredericke Emperor, ſeeing we haue comprehẽded hetherto ſufficiently the moſt principal matters in his time incurrent, we wil now paſſe forwarde (the Lorde guiding vs) to Maximilian, after I haue firſt geuen a briefe memorandum of 3. valiant Princes and Captaines, floriſhing in the ſame time of thys Fredericke, in Germaine: Of the whych, was one Albert Duke of Saxonie, who for his renoumed and famous acts, was called by publique voyce, Dextera manus Imperij. The ryght hande of the Empire. The other was Albert, Marques of Brandenburge, to whome alſo the name was attribute, named of Pope Pius to be Achilles Germanicus. The third was Fredericke Earle Palatine, ſurnamed Victorioſus, who manfully defended the fredome and maieſty of yͤ Empire, from the fraudulent oppreſſions of the popes tirãny.

The abhomination of Pope Sixtus.

Ex Declamatione Agrippa ad Lonanienſes.

In the yeare of our Lorde 1484. in this Emperours time dyed Pope Sixtus the 4. a little before touched, a monſter rather of nature, then a prelate of the Church. Of him writeth Platina, that vniuſtly he vexed al Italy with warre and diſſenſion. Agrippa writing of hym, ſayeth that among all the bawdes of theſe other latter dayes, whych were builders of brothelhouſes, this Pope Sixtus 4. ſurmounted all other: who at Rome erected a ſtewes of double abhomination, not onely of women, but alſo. &c. whereupon no ſmall gaine redounded to his coffers: For euery ſuche common harlot in Rome paide to him a Iuly peece, the ſumme wherof grew in the yere, ſome while to 20000. at length to xl. A large gift of the Pope to the begging Friers.

Alanus, author of our Ladies Pſalter.

Of the ſayde Pope it is recorded, that he was a ſpeciall patron and tutor to al begging Friers, graunting them to haue and enioy reuenues in this worlde, & in the world to come euerlaſting life. Among the which Friers there was one named Alanus de rupe, a Blacke Frier, which made the Roſary of our Ladies Pſalter (ſo they terme it) and erected a certaine new fraternitie vpon the ſame, called Fraternitas Coronariorum, pertaining to the order of the Dominickes, of the which order Iacobus Sprenger, one of the condemners of Ioannes de Weſalia aboue mentioned, was a great aduãcer, and eſpecially this Pope Sixtus 4. who gaue to the ſayd fraternities large graces and priuilegies.

Then had the bleſſed virgine Mary two huſbandes.

An olde knaue to ſucke his wiues breſt.

Concerning the inſtitution of this Roſary, there was a booke ſet forth about the yere of our Lord 1480. in the beginning wherof is declared, that the bleſſed virgin entred into the celle of this Alanus, and was ſo familiar with him, that not onely ſhe did eſpouſe him to her huſband, but alſo kiſſed him with her heauenly mouth, and alſo for more familiaritie, opened to hym her pappes, and powred great plentie of her owne milke into his mouth. For the confirmation whereof the ſayde Alanus, this holy babe (ſayth the ſtorie) did ſweare deepely, curſſing himſelfe, if it were not thus, as he had made relation.

This fabulous figment, when I read in the centuries of John Bale, I began with my ſelfe to miſtruſt the credite therof, and had thought not to trouble the reader with ſuche incredible forgeries. But as the prouidence of God worketh in all things, ſo alſo it appeared in thys, that the very ſame booke came to my hands at the wryting hereof, wherein this ſelfe ſame narration is conteined, wherein I found not onely this to be true, which in Jhon Bale is expreſſed, but alſo found in like manner, an other wonder as prodigious as this: where in an other place not farre off, is ſtoried in the ſame booke, howe that about the time of S. Dominicke, there was a certaine matrone in Spaine, named Lucia, which being taken captiue by the Saracenes, hauing her huſband killed, was caried great with childe into the Turkiſh land.

The deteſtable impietie and blaſphemie of the popiſhe lying religion

When the time of her labour came, ſhee being left deſolate among beaſtes and hogs, and remembring thys twiſe holy Roſary, (firſt inſtituted ſayth the booke by S. Dominicke, and afterwarde renued by Alanus) eftſoones the holy virgin was ready and ſtoode by her, & receiued the childe at her trauaile, ſupplying all the partes of a diligent midwife: and moreouer cauſing a Prieſt ſodenly to appeare, gaue the childe to be Chriſtened, calling it after her owne name, Marianus: and ſo was ſhee wife to Alanus, midwife to Lucia, and Godmother to Marianus. Which ſtory if it be true, then is the Popes Canon, by thys example, to be controlled, whiche permitteth midwiues in time of neceſſity, to baptiſe, ſeeing the bleſſed Virgine, playing the parte her ſelfe of a midwife, durſt not Baptiſe thys childe without a prieſt.

Here endeth Platina.

It followeth more in the ſtorye, that by the helpe of the ſayd bleſſed virgin, this Lucia our Ladies goſſip, after her Purification, was reſtored wͭ her childe ſafe to her country againe. Thys booke being in Latine and Printed, beareth thys title: Roſacea Auguſtiſsimæ Chriſtiferæ Mariæ Corona: and in the front it ſheweth the name of Iodocus Biſſelaius a noble manne of Aquine. And this by the occaſion of Pope Sixtus. Which Sixtus, what a maintainer of blind ſuperſtition hee was, partly by that aforeſpoken, partly by the ende following it may be ſeene. For we reade in certaine wryters, yͭ after thys Pope had vnderſtanding that Hercules Eſtenſis, Duke of Ferraria, had ioyned peace wyth the Venetians againſt hys will, he was ſo greeued therewith, that for rancour of minde, wythin 5. dayes after, hee died: whereunto hys Epitaph following geueth ſufficient record. About whoſe time alſo died Platina, a man not vnlearned, but yet a ſhamefull flatterer and bearer wyth the wicked liues of the Popes.

But leauing here pope Sixtus with hys verſes, & vices, let vs nowe procede, as we before promiſed, to enter the ſtory of Maximilian, keeping notwithſtanding the order of our kinges here in England: For a little before the reigne of Maximilian, king Edward the fourth ceaſed his life. an. 1483. after he had raigned 22. yeares. In the tyme of which K. Edward, this alſo is not to be forgotten, yͭ one Burdet, a marchant dwelling in Cheapſide, at the ſigne of the crowne, whiche is the ſigne nowe of the flower de luce merely ſpeaking to his ſonne, ſayd that he wold make him inheritour of the crown, meaning in deed his own houſe. For the which words, when K. King Edward the 5.

K.Edward 5

This king Edwarde left behinde hym by hys wife Elizabeth 2. ſonnes, Edward, & Richard & 2. daughters, Elizabeth and Cicilie. which 2. ſonnes Edward & Richard, for ſomuche as they were vnder age and not ripe to gouern, a conſultation was called among yͤ pieres, to debate whether yͤ foreſayd yong prince & king, ſhold be vnder the gouernment of his mother, or els yͤ Rich. Duke of Gloceſter brother to K. Edward the 4. & vncle to the child, ſhould be gouernor of the K. and protector of the realme, there hath bene and is an old adage, the wordes whereof rather then the true meaning, is wraſted out of Salomon: Væ regno cuius Rex eſt puer. &c. i. wo to yͤ kingdom, the king whereof is a child. &c. But if I may finde leaue herein to thruſt in a gloſe, I would this adde and ſay: Væ illi puero, qui ſui regni Rex non eſt. i. wo to that childe, whiche is a king in a kingdome vnruly and ambitious. There was the ſame ſeaſon among other noble peeres of yͤ realm, the Duke of Buckingham, a man of great authoritie, who had maryed King Edwards wifes ſiſter. Becauſe the duke being ſo neare alliaunt to the K. had bene vnkindely (as he thought) of the king entreated, hauing by him no auauncement nor anye great frendſhip ſhewed, according to his expectation, took part therfore wͭ Richard Duke of Gloceſter, both againſt the Queene & her children, to make the foreſayd Duke, the chiefe gouernour and protector. The whiche thinge being broughte to paſſe, by the ayde, aſſiſtaunce, and workinge of the Duke of Buckingham, the Queene tooke ſanctuarye with her yōger ſonne: the elder brother, which was yͤ king remayned in the cuſtody of the Duke of Gloceſter his vncle. who being now in a good towardnes to obtayne that which he lōg loked for, ſought all the means, & ſoone compaſſed the matter, by falſe collour of diſſembled words, by periurie, and labour of friendes, namely of the Duke of Buckingham, and the Cardinall Archbiſhop of Caunterburye, that the other brother alſo ſhoulde bee committed to his credite. Thus the ambitious protector and vnnaturall vncle, hauing the poſſeſſion of his two nephewes, and and innocent babes, thought himſelfe almoſt vp the whele where he woulde clime: Although he could not walke in ſuch miſtes and cloudes, but his deuiſed purpoſes began to be eſpyed: which cauſed him more couertly to goe about to remoue from him all ſuſpicion and to blinde the peoples eyes. But before, he could accompliſh hys execrable enterpriſe, ſome there were, whom he thought firſt muſt be ridd out of his way, as namely the Lorde Haſtinges, and the Lord Stanley, who as they were ſitting together in counſaile within the tower, the protectour (the matter beyng ſo appoynted before) ſodaynly ruſhed in among them, and after a few words there commoned, he ſodainly haſted out agayne: his minde belike, being full of miſchiefe and furye was not quiet. who within the ſpace of an houre, returned agayn into yͤ chamber with a ſterne countenance and a frowning look, and ſo there ſet him downe in hys place. when the Lordes were in great meruell and muſe at the meaning hereof: then he out of a cankered hart, thus begā to bray, aſking them what are they worthy to haue, which go about to imagine the deſtruction of him being ſo neare to yͤ kings bloud, and protectour of the Realme? At the which queſtion, as the other Lords ſate muſing, the Lord Haſtinges, becauſe he had bene more familiare wyth him, thus aunſwered, that they were worthy of puniſhement, whatſoeuer they were. which when the other Lordes alſo had affirmed: that is (quoth the protectour) yonder ſorcereſſe, my brothers wife, meaning the Queene and other with her, adding moreouer, and ſaying: that ſorcereſſe & other of her counſayle, as Shores wife, with her affinitie, haue by their witchcraft, thus waſted my body: and therewith ſhewed forth his left arme a weariſh withered thing as it was neuer otherwiſe, as was well knowne.

This Shores wife had bene before a Concubine to K. Edward, & afterward was kept by the ſame Lorde Haſtinges. Moreouer here is to be noted, that by the conſent of the ſaid Lord Haſtinges, the cruell protectour had deuiſed about the ſame time, the kindred of the Queene, innocently to be headed at Pomfret, of mere deſpite and hatred. wherfore, this puniſhment not vndeſeruedly, by the iuſt hand of God, fell vpon the ſaid Lord Haſtinges.

It followeth then more in the ſtorye, that when the L. Haſtinges had heard theſe falſe accuſations of the tyraunt which he knew to be vntrue: certaynly (my Lord) ſayd he, if they haue ſo done, they be worthye of haynous puniſhement. why quoth the protector, doeſt thou ſerue me with if and with and? I tel thee, they haue ſo done, and that I wil make good on thy body traytour: and therewith geuing a great rap on the boord (for a token or watchword) one cryed treaſon without, and forthwith the chamber was full of harneyſed men, The protector then approchyng to the L. Haſtinges, arreſted him as a traytour. An other let flye at the Lord Standley: who to auoyd the blowe ſhronke vnder yͤ table, or els his head had bene cleft a ſonder: notwithſtanding he receaued ſuch a wounde, that the bloud ranne about hys eares. There were in that counſaile yͤ ſame time the Archbiſhop of Yorke, and Doctour Morton Byſhop of Ely (by whoſe procurement afterward king Henry the vii. was ſent for into England, and he made archbiſhop after that of Canterbury) theſe with the Lord Standley diuerſly were beſtowed in diuers chambers. The Lorde Haſtinges was commaunded to ſpeede and ſhrine hym a pace, for before dinner the protector ſware by S. Paule, yͭ he ſhould dye: and ſo incontinently, without farther iudgement, his head was ſtriken of, by whoſe counſayle the Queenes kindred were at the ſame time and daye, beheded at Pomfret.

After this tyrannous murder accompliſhed, the miſchienous protectour aſpiring ſtill to the crowne, to ſet his deuiſes forward, firſt through giftes and fayre promiſes, dyd ſubordinate Doctor Shaw a famous preacher then in Lōdon, at Paules Croſſe to inſinuate to the people, that neyther king Edward with his ſonnes, nor the Duke of Clarence were lawfully begotten, nor the very children of the Duke of York, but begotten vnlawfully by other perſons in adultery on yͤ Duches their mother, and yͭ he alone was yͤ true and onely lawfull heyre of the Duke of York: Moreouer to declare and to ſignifie to the audience, that K. Edward was neuer lawfully maried to the Queene, but hys wife before was dame Elizabeth Lucy, and ſo the 2. childrē of king Edward to be baſe and baſtardes, and therfore the title of yͤ crown moſt rightly to pertaine to yͤ Lord protector. That this falſe flatterer, and loud lying preacher, to ſerue yͤ protectors humour, ſhamed not moſt impudently to abuſe that holy place, that reuerent auditorye, the ſacred word of God, taking for hys theame: Adulteræ plantationes nō dabūt radices altas &c which he moſt impiouſlydid apply againſt the innocent children & right heyres of this realm. whereupon ſuch grudge and diſdayne of the people wyth worldly wonder followed him, that for ſhame of the people crying out of him, in few dayes after he pyned way.

When this ſermon would take no effect with the people the protector vnmercifully drowned in ambitiō, reſted not thus, but wͭin few dayes after, excited yͤ Duke of Buckingham, firſt to breake the matter in couert talke, to the Mayor and certayne of the heades of the Cittie, picked out for the purpoſe: that done, to come to yͤ Guildhall, to moue the people by all flattering and lying perſwaſions to the ſame which ſhameles Shaw before had preached before at Paules Croſſe. whiche the Duke with all dilligence and helpes of eloquence, being a man both learned and well ſpoken, endeuored to accompliſh, making to the people a long and artificiall Oration, ſuppoſing no leſſe, but that yͤ people allured by his crafty inſinuations would cry, king Rich. K. Ric. But there was no king Rich. in their mouthes leſſe in their hartes. wherupon the Duke looking to the Lord Mayor, and aſking what the ſilence ment, contrary to the promiſe of the one, & the expectation of yͤ other It was then anſwered of the Mayor, that the people peraduenture wel vnderſtood him not: wherfore the Duke reiterating his narration in other wordes, declared agayne yͭ he had done before. Likewiſe the thyrd time he repeted hys Oration againe and agayn. Then the commons which before ſtood mute, being now in a maſe, ſeeing this importunitie, began to mutter ſoftly among themſelues, but yet no king Richard could ſound in their lips, ſaue onely that in the nether end of the Hall, certayn of the Dukes ſeruantes with one Naſhfield, and other belonging to the protector, thruſting into the Hall among the preaſe, began ſodaynly at mens backes to cry king Richard k. Rich, throwing vp theyr cappes, whereat the cittizens turning backe theyr heades, marueiled not a little, but ſayd nothing.

An hard thing to make the tongue ſpeake againſt the hart.

A ſtolne conſent in the Guildhall,

The Duke and the Lord Mayor with that lide, taking this for ſufficient teſtimony, incontinent came blowing for haſt to the protector, then lying at Baynardes Caſtle. where the matter being made before, was now ſo contriued, that forſooth, humble petition was made in the name of the whole commons, and that with 3 ſundry ſutes, to yͤ humble and ſimpel protector, that he, although it was vtterly againſt his will to take it: yet would of his humilitye ſtoupe ſo low, as to receaue the heauy kingdome of England vpon his ſhoulders. At this their tender requeſt and ſute of the Lords and commõs made (ye muſt know how) yͤ milde Duke ſeing no other remedy, was contented at length to yeld, although ſore againſt his will (ye muſt ſo imagine) and to ſubmit himſelfe ſo low, as of a protector to be made king: not much herein vnlike to our prelates in yͤ Popiſh churche, who when they haue before well compounded for the popes Buls, yet muſt they for maner ſake make curteſy, and thriſe deny that for whiche they ſo long before haue gaped, and ſo ſweetly haue payed for.

AND thus Richard Duke of Glouceſter tooke vpon to be made & proclaymed king of England, the yeare aforeſayd. an. 1483. in the mõth of Iune. who then comming to the Tower by water, firſt made his ſonne a childe of x. yeare old, prince of wales, & Iohn Haward (a man of great induſtry & ſeruice) he aduaũced to be Duke of Northfolke, & Sir Tho. Haward his ſonne, he ordained Erle of Surry. Alſo william Lord Barckeley was appoynted Earle of Notingham. Frances L. Louell, was made Vicunt Louell. L. Stanley for feare of his ſonne, was deliuered out of the Tower, and made Steward of the kings houſhold. Likewiſe the Archbiſhop of Yorke was ſet free: but Morton Biſhop of Ely was committed to the Duke of Buckingham, by whome was wrought the firſt deuiſe to bring in Henry Erle of Richmond into England, and to cõioin mariage betweene Elizabeth king Edwardes daughter, and him, whereby the two houſes of Yorke and Lancaſter were vnited together.

King Richard crowned.

After the kingdome of England was thus allotted to king Rich. the vſurper, as in maner aboue remembred, he taried not long for hys coronation, which was ſolemniſed the month next enſuing, the 6. day of Iuly.

The triumph and ſolemnitie of this vſurped coronation, being finiſhed, & al thinges to the ſame appertayning, this vnquiet tyraunt yet coulde not thinke himſelfe ſafe, ſo long as yong Edward the right king & hys brother, were aliue: wherefore the next enterpriſe which he did ſet vpon was this, how to rid theſe innocent babes out of the way, that he might reigne king alone.

In the meane time while al this ruffling was in hand what dread & ſorow the tender harts of theſe fatherles and friendles children were in, what little ioy of them ſelues what ſmal ioy of life they had, it is not ſo hard as dolorous for tender harts to vnderſtand. As the yonger brother lingered in thought and heauines, ſo the prince which was a 11. yeare old, was ſo out of hart and ſo fraught with feare that he neuer tyed his poyntes, nor ioyed good day, till the trayterous impietie of their cruell vncle had deliuered thẽ of their wretchednes, whiche was not long in diſpatching For after king Richard their vncle, firſt attempting to cõpaſſe his diueliſhe deuiſe by Robert Brakenbury Conſtable of the tower, and could not winne him to ſuche a cruell fact (to die therefore) then he got one Iames Tyrell, ioyning with him Iohn Dighton, and Miles Foreſt, to perpetrate this heinous murder. Which Dyghton and Foreſt about midnight entring into their chamber, ſo bewrapped and entangled them amongſt the clothes, keeping downe the fetherbed and pilowes hard vnto their mouthes, that within a while: they ſmoothered and ſtifeled them pitiouſly in their bed.

And thus ended theſe two yong princes their liues, through the wretched cruelty of theſe forenamed tormentors who for their deteſtable and bloudy murder committed, eſcaped not long vnpuniſhed by the iuſt hand of God. For firſt Miles Foreſt, at S. Martines le grand, by peecemeale miſerably rotted away, Iohn Dighton liued at Callis lõg after ſo diſdained and hated, that he was pointed at of all men, and there died in great miſery. Sir Iames Tyrell was beheaded at Tower hill for treaſon. Alſo King Richard himſelfe within a yeare and a halfe after, was ſlayne in the field hacked and hewed of his enemies handes, torne and tugged like a curre dogge.

Furthermore, the ſaid iuſtice of gods hand left not the Duke of Buckingham eſcape free: whiche was a greate maintainer and ſetter vp of this butcherly vſurper: for les then within a yeare after ſo God wrought, that hee was himſelfe beheaded for treaſon by the ſayd king, whom he ſo vniuſtly before had aduaunced and ſet vp.

The puniſhmẽt of God vpon the Duke of Buckinghã.

In the ſame catologue and order of theſe wicked doers afore recited, we haue alſo to comprehende two other, as well worthy of memoriall, as the beſt or rather as yͤ worſt. The name of the one was doctont Shawe, aboue rehearſed: The other doctor Pinkie, prouincial of the Auſten Friers: both famous preachers, and both Doctors in diuinitie both of more learning then vertue (ſayth the ſtory) of more fame thẽ learning, & yet of more learning thẽ truth. Shaw made a Sermon in the prayſe of the Protector, before hys coronation. Pinkie preached after thys coronation. Both were ſo full of tedious flatterye, that no good eares coulde abide them. Pinkie in his ſermon ſo loſt his voyce, that he was fayne to leaue of & came downe in in the midſt. Doctour Shaw by his ſermon loſt his honeſty, and ſoone after, his life for very ſhame of the world, ſo that he neuer durſt after that, ſhew his face againe. But as for the Fryer, he was ſo farre paſt ſhame, that the loſſe therof did little touch him.

Doct. Shaw and Doct. Pinkie, two flattering preachers.

Gods iudgement vpon flattering preachers.

Mention was made a little before, of Doctor Morton Biſhop af Ely, by whoſe meanes the deuiſe was firſt broched, for the conioyning the two houſes of Yorke & Lancaſter together. This deuiſe was firſt broken to the Duke of Buckingham, which ſoone after coſt hym his life. But yͤ biſhop more crafty to ſaue hymſelfe, incontinent fled into Brittain. Notwithſtanding, the deuiſe once being broched was ſo plauſible, and tooke ſuch effect, that meſſage was ſent ouer the ſea to Henry Earle of Richmond, by his mother and by the Queene, mother to the Ladye Elizabeth, that if he would make hys returne, and promiſe to marry with the ſayd Lady Elizabeth King Edwards daughter, he ſhould be receaued. To make a longer diſcourſe of thys matter, which is ſufficiently ſet forth by S. Tho. More ſo ornately, it needeth not.

The firſt motion of ioyning the two houſes, Yorke and Lancaſter togeather.

Briefly (to contract that in a ſmall compaſſe of wordes, which was not ſo ſmall a thing in doing) after that the Earle Henry, with ſuch other baniſhed mẽ, as fled out of Englãd at the taking of the Duke of Buckingham, had perfect intelligence by his mother and by the Queene and other frends moe out of England, how the caſe of yͤ realm ſtode, and how it was here purpoſed by his frendes, that is, that he ſhould with all conuenient ſpeede, haſt hys returne ouer into England, promiſing to mary with Ladye Elizabeth: he with all diligence as tyme and preparation would ſerue, aduaũced forward his iourny, being wel helped and furniſhed by Fraunces Duke of Britayne, and ſo ſhipped his mẽ. Albeit his firſt voyage ſped not, for that the winds turning contrary: by force of weather his ſhips were diſparcled, and he repulſed backe into Fraũce agayn. His ſecond viage was more proſperous. Who taking the ſeas at Harflet, in the moneth of Auguſt. an. 1485. accompanied onely with two thouſand men, and a ſmal number of ſhippes, aryued at Milford Hauen in wales, and fyrſte came to Dale, then to Harford weſt, where he was ioyfully receiued, and alſo by the cõming in of Arnolde Butler and the Pẽbroke men, was in power encreaſed. Frõ thẽce he remoued by Cardigan to Shrewſbery, & then to Newport, and ſo to Stafford, from thence to Liechfield, his army ſtill more and more augmented. Lyke as a great floud by comming in of many ſmall riuers, gathereth more aboundaunce of water: ſo to this Earle diuers noble Captaynes tains and men of power adioyned themſelues as Richard Griffith, John Morgan. Rice ap Thomas, thē ſir Georg Talbot, with the yong Erle of Shrewſbery his warde, Sir william Stanley, Sir Tho. Burchier, and Sir walter Hungerford, knightes. At laſt the ſaid Erle hearing of the kinges comming, conducted his whole army to Tamworth.

K. Richad gathered his power to encounter with Earle Henry.

King Richard firſt hearing of the arriuall of the Erle Henry in the partes of wales after ſuch a ſlender ſort, did giue little or no regard vnto it. But after, vnderſtanding that he was come to Lichfield, without reſiſtaunce or incombraunce, he was ſore moued, and exceedingly tooke on curſing and crying out againſt them whiche had ſo deceaued him, & in all poſt ſpeed, ſent for John Duke of Northfolke, Hen. Erle of Northumberlād. Tho. Erle of Surrey with other his frendes of ſpecial truſt. Robert Brakenbury alſo lieſetenaunt of the tower was ſent for, with Sir Tho. Burchier, and Sir walter Hungerforde, with certaine other knightes and Eſquiers, of whome he partlye miſdoubted, or had ſome ſuſpicious gelouſy. Thus K. Richard, after moſt forceable maner well fortified and accompanied, leauing nothing vndone yͤ dilligence could require ſet forward toward his enemies. The Earle by this time was come to Tamworth, to whō ſecretly in the Euening reſorted ſir John Sauage, ſir Bryan Sanford, ſir Simon Digby, and many other, forſaking the part of K. Richard, whome all good men hated, as he no otherwiſe deſerued. The king hauing perfect knowledge the Earle to be encamped at Tamworth, embatled himſelfe in a place neare to a village called Boſworth, not farre from Leiceſter, appointing there to encounter with his aduerſaries. Here yͤ matter lay in great doubt and ſuſpenſe concerning yͤ Lord Stanley (which was yͤ Erles father in law & had maryed his mother) to what part he would encline. For although his hart went (no doubt) with the Earle, & had ſecret conference with him the night before, yet becauſe of his ſonne and heyre George Lord Straunge, being then in the hāds of king Richard, leaſt the king ſhould attempt any preiudiciall thing againſt him, durſt not be ſeene openly to goe that way, where in hart he fauoured, and therefore cloſely kept himſelfe betweene both, till the puſh came that hys helpe might ſerue at a pinch.

K. Richard taketh the field of Boſworth. This Lord Stanley was he, which was hurt at the Tower when the L. Haſtings was areſted Vide. pag. 727.

The number of the Erles part exceeded not to the one halfe of the ſide of king Richard. When the time and the place was appointed, where the two battailes ſhould encounter and ioyne together, ſore ſtripes and great blowes were geuen on both ſides, and many ſlayne. If number & multitude might gouerne the ſucceſſe of battaile, king Richard had double to the erle. But God is he, not man, that geueth victorye, by what meanes it ſeemeth to his diuine prouidence beſt. In what order and by what occaſion this field was wonne and loſt, the certain intelligence we haue not certainly expreſſed, but onely by the hiſtorye of Polydore Vergile, whom ſir Thomas More doth follow word for word. In the which hiſtory it doth appeare, yͤ as theſe 2. armies were coupling together, king Richard vnderſtanding by his eſpials where the earle of Richmond was, and how he was but ſlenderly accompanied, and ſeeing him to approch more neare vnto him, he rather caryed with courage, then ruled with reaſon, ſet ſpurres to the horſe and raunging out of the compaſſe of hys ranckes, preſſed toward the Erle, ſetting vppon him ſo ſharpely, that firſt he killed ſir william Brandon, the Erles ſtandard bearer, father to yͤ Lord Charles Brandon Duke of Suffolke, thē after ouerthrew ſir John Cheny, thinking likewiſe to oppreſſe the Erle. But as the Lorde by his ſecret prouidence diſpoſeth the euent of all thinges, as the earle with his mē about him being ouermatched, began to diſpayre of victory, ſodeinly & oportunely came ſyr william Stanley with 3. thouſand well appointed able men, whereby king Richardes men were driuen backe & he himſelfe cruelly fighting in the thick of his enemies, was there ſlain, & brought to his confuſion and death, which he worthely deſerued.

In the meane time the Earle of Oxford, who had the guiding of the forewarde, diſcomfited the forefrunt of king Richards hoaſt, and put them to flight, in which chaſe many were ſlayne, of noble men eſpecially aboue other, John Duke of Northfolke, Lord Ferrers, ſir Richard Radcliffe and Robert Brakenbury Lieutenaunt of the Tower. &c. Lord Thomas Haward Earle of Surrey, there ſubmitted himſelfe, and although he was not receaued at firſt to grace, but long remayned in the Tower, yet at length for his fidelitie, was deliuered and aduanced to his recouered honour and dignitie againe.

Moreouer as touching the Lord Stanley, thus reporteth the ſtory, that king Richard being in Boſworth fielde, ſent for the Lord Stanley by a purſeuaunt, to auaunce forward with his company, and come to hys preſence: otherwiſe he ſware by Chriſtes paſſion, that he would ſtrike off his ſonnes head before dinner. The L. Stanley ſent word agayne, that if he did, he had more ſonnes aliue. Wherupō the kyng immediately commaunded the Lord Strange to be beheaded: which was the very time whē both yͤ armies were within ſight, & were ready to ioyne together. Wherfore the kinges counſailers pondering the tyme and yͤ caſe perſwaded the king, that it was now time to fight, & not to doe execution, aduiſing him to delay the matter tyll the battail were ended. And ſo (as God would) king Richard breaking hys othe, or rather keeping hys othe, for he hymſelfe was ſlayne before dyner, the Lord Straunge was cōmitted to be kept priſoner within the kinges tente: who then after the victory gotten, was ſought out and brought to his ioyfull father. And thus haue ye the tragicall life and end of this wretched king Richard.

Henry the Erle of Richmond, after harty thankes geuen to almighty God, for hys glorious victorye obteined, proceeded to the towne of Leiceſter, where was brought to him by the Lord Straunge, the Crowne and put on the Earles head.

In the meane time the dead corpes of king Richarde was ſhamefully caried to the towne of Leiceſter, being naked and deſpoyled to the ſkinne, & being truſſed behinde a purſeuaunt of armes, was caryed like a hog or a dog, hauing his head & armes hanging on the one ſide of yͤ horſe, and the legges on the other ſide, all ſprincled with myre & bloud. Maximilian firſt ordeiner of the vnyuerſitie of Wittenberg.

So happy was ẏ education of this Emperour in good letters: ſo expert he was in tongues and ſciences, but eſpecially ſuch was his dexteritie and promptnes in the latin ſtile, that he imitating the exãple of Iulius Cæſar, did write and comprehend in Latine hiſtoryes, his owne actes and feates done, and that in ſuch ſort, that when he had geuen a certayne taſt of his hiſtory, to one Pircamerus a learned man, aſking his iudgemẽt how his warlike ſtile of Latine did like him, the ſayd Pyrcamerus did affirme and reporte of him to Iohn Caron (the witnes and writer of this ſtory) that he did neuer ſee nor read anye Germane ſtorye, a thing more exactly (and that in ſuch haſt) done as this was of Maimilian. Moreouer, as he was learned himſelfe, ſo was he a ſingular patrone and aduauncer of learned ſtudentes, as may well appeare by the erecting and ſetting vp the vniuerſitie of Wittenberge. By this Emperour many in thoſe dayes were excited to the embraſing as wel of other liberall artes, as alſo namely to the ſearching out of old antiquities of hiſtoryes, whereby diuers were then by him firſt occaſioned in Germany, to ſet their mindes & to exerciſe their dilligence, in collecting & explicating matters pertayning to the knowledge of hiſtory, as well of ancient as alſo of latter times, as namely Cuſpinianus, Nauclerus, Conradus Peutingerus, Manlius, and other.

Learned mẽ begin to grow in Chriſtendome.

Here now it began right well to appeare, what great benefite was broched to the world, by the Arte and facultie of Printing, as is before mentioned. Through the meanes of which printing, the church and common wealth of chriſt began now to be repleniſhed with learned men, as bothe may appeare by this Emperour being ſo induced himſelfe with ſuch excellent knowledge of good letters, and alſo by diuers others famous and worthy wittes, whiche began now in this age exceedingly to encreaſe and multiplye, as Baptiſta Mantuanus, Ang. Politianus, Hermolaus Barbarus, Picus Mirandula, and Franciſcus his couſin, Rodol. Agricola, Põtanus, Philippus, Beroaldus, Marſilius Ficinus, Volateranus, Georgius Valla, with infinite other.

Doct. Weſelus Groningenſis.

Weſelus called Lux Mundi.

Among whom is alſo to be numbred Weſelus Groningenſis, otherwiſe named Baſilius, who was not longe after Ioan de Weſalia aboue recited, both muche about one tyme, and both great friendes together. This Weſelus dyed the yeare of our Lord. 1490. After that Ioannes Doctor De Weſalia aforeſayd was condemned this Weſelus being familiar with him, thought that the Inquiſitour woulde come and examine hym alſo, as he himſelfe in a certaine Epiſtle doth write. He was ſo notable and worthye a man that of the people he was called Lux Mundi. That is: The light of the worlde.

The doctrine of Weſelus Groningenſis.

Concerning his doctrine, firſt he reprehended the opinion of the papiſtes, as touching repentaunce, which they deuided in three partes, of the which three partes, ſatiſfaction and confeſſion he did diſalow. Likewiſe Purgatorye and ſupererogation of workes & pardons he did diſprone, both at Rome and at Paris. He ſpake agaynſt the popes indulgences, by the occaſion whereof diuers of the Popes court, perſwaded by him, began to ſpeake more freely agaynſt the ſame matter, then he himſelfe had done.

Ex lib. D. Weſels, De ſacramẽto penitẽtiæ.

The Popes ſupremacie written againſt.

The abuſes of Maſſes and praying for the dead he diſalowed: and likewiſe the ſupremacy of the Pope, he vtterterly reiected (as appeareth in a booke of his De Sacramento pœnitentiæ) denying vtterly that anye ſupreme head or gouernour ought to be in the world ouer all other: affirming alſo & ſaying many times, ẏ the pope had no authoritie to do any thingby commaundement but by truth: that is, ſo farre as trueth goeth with hym, ſo farre hys ſentence to ſtand: neither ẏ he ought to preuayle by commaunding but onely by teaching, ſo as euery true chriſtian Biſh. may preuayle ouer an other. Alſo in ſome place in his writings he denyeth not, but that popes and their ſpirituall Prelates, proceeding agaynſt Chriſtes doctrine, be playne Antichriſtes: ſuch as were infirm and not able to perform the bond of chaſtitie taken vpon them, he ſayd they might wel breake their vow.

Alſo the ſayd Weſelus witneſſeth, that the forefathers which were before Albert and Thomas, did reſiſte and withſtand the popes indulgences, calling them in theyr wrytinges playne Idolatry, mere fraude and erroure: adding moreouer that vnles the ſeueritie of ſome good Diuines, had not withſtand theſe pardons and indulgences of the Pope: innumerable errours had ouerflowne the church.

Amongeſt theſe workes of Weſelus, there is a certaine Epiſtle of one written to hym, in which the authour of the Epiſtle confeſſeth, that in hys time there was a certayne learned man at Paris called maiſter Thomas de Curſelis a Deane: who being in the councell of Baſill, wheras diuers began to aduaunce the power of the pope to farre, declared and affirmed, to be ſayd to him of Chriſt: Quicquid ligaueris ſuper terram erit ligatum & in cœlo: &c. Et non, quicquid dixeris eſſe ligatum. That is. What ſoeuer thou ſhalt bynde vpon earth ſhall be bound in heauen, but not, what ſoeuer thou ſayſt to be bound. As who ſhould ſay the pope cannot nor doth not binde therfore, becauſe he ſo ſayth, except truth and righteouſnes go alſo with him: then he doth ſo bynde in deed. There is a certayne booke of this man amongſt diuers others, which he intituleth, De ſubditis & ſuperioribus, in ẏ which he diſputeth greatly againſt ẏ pope & his Prelates: affirming that the pope vnleſſe hys faith & doctrine be ſound, ought not to be obeyd. He affirmeth alſo that the pope may erre, and when he erreth, men ought by all manner of meanes to reſiſt him. Item, that great & ſuperfluous riches in the clergy do not profite, but hurt ẏ church. That the pope doth wickedly diſtribute the rentes of the Church, and the Church it ſelfe, to vnworthy Miniſters by Simony for hys owne profite and gayne, wherby it may appeare that he neyther careth for GOD, nor the health of the Churche. Item, that the preceptes and commaundementes of the pope and prelates be no otherwiſe but as the Councels and preceptes of Phiſitions, binding no further then they are founde to be holeſome and ſtanding with the trueth of the word. Item, that the Pope can commaunde no man vnder payne of deadly ſinne, except God commaund him before. He ſayth that the keyes of the Pope and of the prelates be not ſuch, wherwith they open the kingdome of heauen, but rather ſhut it, as the Phariſeis did. Concerning vowes, he diſputeth that ſuche as be fooliſh and impoſſibile, ought to be brokẽ: that the hearers ought to diſcerne and iudge of the doctrine of their Prelates, and not to receiue euery thing that they ſay, without due examination.

Excommunication.

He ſheweth moreouer that the ſentence or excommunication is of more force, proceeding from a true godly honeſt, ſimple and learned men, then from the Pope, as in ẏ Councell of Conſtance, Bernard was more eſteemed then Eugenius. Alſo if the pope with hys prelates, gouern and rule naughtely, that the inferiours, be they neuer ſo baſe, ought to reſiſt him.

Writing moreouer of two Popes, Pius the ſecond and Sixtus the fourth, he ſayth, that Pius the ſecond dyd vſurpe vnto hymſelfe all the kingdomes of the whole world & that Sixtus the pope did diſpenſe with al maner of othes in cauſes temporall, not onely with ſuche othes, as haue bene already, but alſo with all ſuche, as ſhalbe made hereafter: which was nothing els but to geue libertie and licence for men to forſweare themſelues and deceiue one an other.

Ex Nouiomago.
A propheſie of Weſelus.
This Oſtendorpius was a man well learned and Canon of the minſter of Lubecke.

This Weſelus beyng a Phriſian borne, and now aged in yeares, vpon a certayne time, when a yong man called mayſter Ioannes Oſtendorpius, came to hym, ſayd theſe wordes: Well my childe, thou ſhalt lyue to that day, when thou ſhalt ſee the doctrine of theſe new and contentious diuines, as Thomas and Bonauenture, with others of the ſame ſort, ſhalbe vtterly reiected and exploded from al true Chriſten deuines: And thys which Oſtendorpius then being young, heard Weſelus to ſpeake, he reported himſelfe to Nouiomagus, which wrote this ſtory. an. 1520. & heard it of the mouth of the ſayd Weſelus, an. 1490. Martij. 18.

Philippus Melanchton writing of the lyfe, of Rodolphus Agricola, ſayth: that Ioſquinus Groningenſis, an auncient and a godly man, reported that when as he was young, he was oftentimes preſent at the Sermons of Rodolphus and Weſelus, wherein they many times lamented the darckenes of the church, and reprehended the abuſes of the Maſſe: and of the ſingle life of prieſtes. Item, that they diſputed oftentimes of the righteouſnes of fayth, why S. Paule ſo oftentimes did inculcate, that men be iuſtified by faith and not by workes, the ſame Ioſquine alſo reported, that they did openly reiecte and diſproue the opinion of monks, which ſay that men be iuſtified by their works. Item, concerning mens traditiõs their opinion was, that all ſuche were deceiued, whatſoeuer attribued vnto thoſe traditions any opinion of Gods worſhip, or ẏ they could not be broken. And thus much for the ſtory of doctour Weſſellianus and Weſilus.

Here it appeareth that this R. Agricola was of good iudgement, though the Friers afterward buried him in a Friers weede.

Rodol. Agricola.
Weſelus lamenteth the darcknes of the Church

By this it may be ſeene and noted, how by the grace of God and gift of printing, firſt came forth learning: by learning came light to iudge and diſcerne the errors of ẏ pope from the truth of Gods word, as partly by theſe abouesaid may appeare partly by other that followe after by ẏ grace of Chriſt) ſhall better be ſeene.

About the very ſame tyme and ſeaſon, when as ẏ Goſpell began thus to braunch & ſpring in Germanie: the hoſt of Chriſtes church began alſo to muſter & to multiply likewiſe here in Englād, as by theſe hiſtoryes here conſequent may appeare. For not long after the death of this weſelus in the yeare of our Lorde 1494. and in the 9. yeare of the reigne of K. Henry 7. the 28. of Aprill, was burned a very old woman named Ioane Boughton widow, and mother to the Lady Young, which Ladye was alſo ſuſpected to be of that opinion which her mother was. Her mother was of foure ſcore yeares of age or more, & held 8. of wickleffes opinions (which opiniōs my author doth not ſhew) for the which ſhe was burnt in Smithfield the day aboueſayd. My author ſayth, ſhe was a Diſciple of wickleffe, whome ſhe accompted for a Sainct, and helde ſo faſt and firmly viij. of his x. opinions, that all the Doctours of Lōdon coulde not turne her from one of them, and when it was told her that ſhe ſhoulde be brent for her obſtinacie & falſe beliefe, ſhee ſet nothing by theyr manacing wordes, but defied them, for ſhe ſayde ſhe was ſo beloued of God, and hys holy aungels, that ſhe paſſed not for the fire, & in the midſt therof ſhe cryed to God to take her ſoule into his holy handes. The night following that ſhe was burnt, the moſt parte of her aſhes were had awaye of ſuche as had a loue vnto the doctrine that ſhe dyed for.

In the ſame yeare alſo, which was of the Lord. 1499. fell the martyrdome and burning of Hieronimus Sauonarola, a man no leſſe godly in hart, then conſtant in his profeſſion. who being a Monke in Italy, & ſingularly well learned, preached ſore agaynſt the euill lyfe & liuing of the ſpiritualty and ſpecially of hys own order, complayning ſore vpō thē, as the ſpringes and authors of all miſchieues & wickednes. wherupō by ẏ helpe of certeine learned men he begā to ſeek reformatiō in hys own order. which thyng the pope perceauing, and fearing that the ſayde Hierome, which was now in great reputation amōgſt al men, ſhold diminiſh or ouerthrow his authoritie, he ordained his vicar or prouinciall to ſee reformatiō of theſe matters: which vicare wͭ great ſuperſtition began to reforme thinges, but the ſayd Hierome did alwayes withſtand hym, wherupon he was complayned of to the Pope, and becauſe that contrary vnto ẏ popes commaundement, he did wͭſtand hys vicare, he was accurſed. But for all that Hieronimus lefte not of preaching, but threatned Italy with ẏ wrath and indignation of God, and prophecied before vnto them, that the land ſhould be ouerthrowne for the pride and wickednes of ẏ people, and for the vntruth, hipocriſie and falſhood of ẏ clergy, which God would not leaue vnreuēged, as afterward it came to paſſe, when as king Charles came into Italy and to Rome, and ſo ſtraitly beſet the pope Alexander, ẏ he was forced to make compoſition with the king.

{ Anno. 1499. }

Hieronimus Sauonarola, with two fryers Martirs.

Propheſie of Hie. Sauonarola againſt Italy.

Pope Alexāder beſieged by Charles the French king.

Now for ſomuch as the ſaid Hierom would not leaue of preaching, he was commaunded to appeare before the pope, to geue accompt of his new learning, (for ſo thē they called the truth of the Goſpell,) but by meanes of the manifold perilles, he made his excuſe that he could not come. Then was he againe forbidden by the pope to preach, and his learning pronounced and condemned as pernicious, falſe and ſeditious.

Sauonarola cited to appeare before the Pope

The doctrine of Sauonarola condemned becauſe he would not come before the Pope

This Hieronimus, as a man worldly wiſe, foreſeeing the great perils and daungers that might come vnto him, for feare, left of preaching. But when as the people, which ſore hungred and longed for Gods word, were inſtant vpon him that he would preach agayne, he began agayne to preach in the yeare of our Lord. 1496. in the Cittie of Florence, and albeit ẏ many counſailed him that he ſhould not ſo do without the Popes commaundement, yet did he not regard it, but went forward freely of his owne good will. when as the Pope and his ſhauelinges heard newes of this, they were greuouſly incenſed and inflamed agaynſt him, and now againe curſed him, as an obſtinate and ſtifnecked hereticke. But for all that, Hieronimus proceeded in teaching and inſtructing the people, ſaying that men ought not to regard ſuch curſes, whiche are agaynſt ẏ true doctrine and the cōmon profite, whereby the people ſhold be learned and amended, Chriſt kingdome enlarged, and the kindome of the deuill vtterly ouerthrowne.

Sauonarola preacheth contrary to the Popes commaūdement.

In all his preaching he deſired to teach no other thing then the onely pure and ſimple word of God, making often proteſtation that al men ſhould certifie him if they had heard him teach or preach anye thing contrary thereunto, for vpon his owne conſcience he knew not ẏ he had taught anye thing but the pure word of God. what his doctrine was all mē may eaſely iudge by his books ẏ he had writtē.

After this, in the yeare of our Lord. 1498. he was takē and brought out of S. Markes cloyſter, & two other Fryers with hym, named Dominicke and Siluester, whiche fauoured hys learning, and was caried into priſon, wheras he wrote a godly meditation vpon that moſt comfortable 31. pſalme In te Domine ſperaui non confundar in æternū ſed in iuſticia tua libera me. wherein he doth excellently deſcribe and ſet forth, the continuall ſtrife betweene the fleſh and the ſpirite.

Hieron. with 2. other Friers cōmitted to priſō.

The commentarie of Hierome Sauon. vpon the Pſalme beginning: In te domine ſperaui.

After this the Popes Legates came to Florence, & called forth theſe three good men, threatning thē marueilouſly but they continued ſtill conſtant. Then came the chief cōſailers of the citty, with the popes commiſſioners, whiche had gathered out certain Articles againſt theſe men, wher upon they were condemned to death: the tenour of which Articles hereafter enſue.

Articles obiected againſt Hierome & the two Fryers.

1. The firſt article was as touching our free iuſtification through fayth in Chriſt.
2. That ẏ communion ought to be miniſtred vnder both kyndes.

3. That the indulgences and pardons of the pope, were of no effect.
4. For preaching againſt the filthy and wicked liuing of the Cardinals and ſpiritualtie.
5. For denying the popes ſupremacie.
6. Alſo that he had affirmed, that the keyes were not geuen vnto Peter alone, but vnto the vniuerſal Church.
7. Alſo, that the pope did neither follow the life nor doctrine of Chriſt, for that he did attribute more to his owne pardons and traditions, then to Chriſtes merits, and therfor he was Antichriſt.
8. Alſo, that the popes excommunications are not to be feared, and that he which doth feare or flye them, is excommunicate of God.
9. Item, that auriculer confeſſion, is not neceſſary.
10. Item, that he had moued the Cittizens to vprore and ſedition.
11. Item, that he had neglected and contemned the popes Citation.
12. Item, that he had ſhamefully ſpoken agaynſt, & ſlandered the pope.
13. Itẽ, that he had taken Chriſt to witnes of his naughtines and hereſie.
14. Alſo, yͤ Italy muſt be clenſed through Gods ſcourge, for the manifold wickednes of the princes and clergy.

These & ſuch other like Articles, were layd vnto them & read before them. Then they demaunded of the ſaid Hierome and his companions, whether they would recant & geue ouer their opinions. Whereunto they anſwered, that through Gods help, they would ſtedfaſtly continue in the manifeſt truth, and not depart from the ſame. Then were they diſgraded one after an other, by the byſhop of Vaſion and ſo deliuered ouer to the ſecular rulers of Florence, wͭ ſtraight commaundement, to cary them forth, and handle them as obſtinate and ſtifnecked heretickes,

The propheſies of Hierome Sauonarola.

This man foreſhewed many thinges to come, as the deſtruction of Florence and Rome, and the renuing of the Church: which three things, haue happened in theſe times within our remembraunce. Alſo he foreſhewed that the Turkes and Mores in the latter dayes, ſhould be conuerted vnto Chriſt. He alſo declared that one ſhould paſſe the Alpes into Italy, like vnto Cirus, which ſhould ſubuert and deſtroy all Italy. Whereupon Iohannes Franciſcus Picus, Erle of Mirandula, called him a holy prophet, and defended him by his writings againſt the pope. Many other learned men alſo, defend the innocencie of the ſaide Sauonarola. Marſilius Ficinus alſo in a certayne Epiſtle doth attribute vnto him the ſpirit of prophecie, greatly commending and prayſing him. In the like maner Philippus Comineas a French hiſtoriographer, which had conference with him witneſſeth that he was a holy man, and full of yͤ ſpirit of prophecie, for ſo muche as he had foreſhewed vnto hym ſo many thinges, which in euent had proued true.

Ex Ioan. Franciſ. Mirandula. Ex Marſilio Ficino.

Ex Philip. Cominea.

There were beſides theſe, many other, not to be paſſed ouer or forgotten: as Philip Norice an Iriſhman, profeſſour at Oxford, who albeit he was not burned (yet as it is ſayd) he was long time vexed and troubled by the religious route. But would to God, that ſuch as haue occupied themſelues in writing of hiſtories, and haue ſo dilligently committed vnto memory all other thinges done in foreign common wealthes, had beſtowed the lyke diligence & labour, in noting and writing thoſe thinges, which pertayn vnto the affayres of the Churche: whereby the poſteritie might haue had fuller and more perfecte vnderſtanding & knowledge of them.

This Sauonarola aboue mencioned, ſuffered vnder pope Alexander the 6. of which pope, more leyſure & oportunitie ſhall ſerue hereafter (Chriſt willing) to entreat, after that we ſhall firſt make a little digreſſion to entreate of certayn caſes and complayntes of the Germaynes, incidẽt in the meane time, which as they are not to be ouerpaſt in ſilence, ſo can they haue no place nor tyme more conueniẽt to be inferred. What complayntes of the Germaines were made and moued vnto the Emperour Fredericke agaynſt the popes ſuppreſſions and exactions, mencion was made before pag. 724. where alſo was declared, howe the ſayde Germaines at that time, were twiſe put backe and forſakẽ of the Emperour: whereby they continued in yͤ ſame yoke and bondage, vntill the time of Luther. Wherefore it cometh now to hand, and we thinke it alſo good, here briefly to declare, how the ſayd Germaynes, in the tyme of Maximilian the Emperour: renuing their complayntes agayn, deliuered vnto the Emperour, x. principall greuaunces, whereby the Germaynes haue bene long time oppreſſed: ſhewing alſo the remedies agaynſt the ſame, with certayne aduiſements vnto the Emperours maieſty, how he might withſtand and reſiſt the popes ſubtleties and craftes: The order and tenour whereof here enſueth.

The complaintes of the Germaines agaynſt the Popes greuances renued.

¶ The x. greuaunces of the Germaines.

Ten greuances complayned of by the Germaines.

1. That the Biſhops of Rome, ſucceſſors one vnto an other, do not thinke themſelues bound to obſerue & keepe the bulles, couenauntes, priuiledges, and letters, graunted by theyr predeceſſours, without all derogation: but by often diſpenſation, ſuſpenſion and reuocation, euen at the inſtance of euery vile perſon, they doe gaynſaye and withſtand the ſame.
2. That the elections of prelates are oftẽtimes put back.
3. That the elections of Preſidentſhips are withſtande, which the chapterhouſes of many churches haue obtained with great coſt and expence, as the Churche of Spyre and Haſell do well know: whoſe bull, touchyng the election of theyr preſident, is made fruſtrate, he being yet aliue which graunted the ſame.
4. That benefices and the greateſt eccleſiaſticall dignities, are reſerued for Cardinalles and head notaries.
5. That expectatiue graces, called vowſans, are granted without number, and many oftentimes vnto one man: Whereupon continuall contentions do ryſe, and much money is ſpent, both that whiche is layd out for the Bulles of thoſe vowſõs which neuer take effet, and alſo that whiche is conſumed in goyng to lawe. Whereupon this prouerbe is riſen, whoſoeuer will get a vowſon from Rome, muſt haue C. or CC. peeces of golde layde vp in his cheſt, for the obtayning of the ſame, which he ſhall haue neede of, to preſecute the law withall.
6. That Annates or yearly reuenewes, are exacted without delay or mercy, euen of the biſhops lately dead, and oftentimes more extorted then ought to be, through new offices and new ſeruauntes, as by the examples of the churches of Mentz and Strauſburgh, may be ſeene.
7. That the rule of the churches are geuen at Rome vnto thoſe that are not worthy, which were more fitt to keep and feede Mules, then to haue the rule and gouernance of men.
8. That new indulgences and pardons, with the ſuſpenſion and reuocation of the old, are graunted to gather and ſcrape money together.
9. That tenthes are exacted vnder the pretẽce of making warre agaynſt the Turke: when as no expedition doth follow thereupon.
10. That the cauſe whiche might be determined in Germany, wheras there are both learned and iuſt iudges, are indiſtinctly caryed vnto the Court of Rome, which thing S. Bernard, writing to Pope Eugenius, ſeemeth wõderfully to reproue.

¶ Here enſueth the remedy agaynſt the ſayd greuaunces.

Remedies againſt the foreſayde greeuances.

IF it ſhal ſeeme good vnto the Emperors maieſty, let it be declared vnto the biſhop of Rome, how greuous and intollerable a thing it is vnto the Germaynes, to ſuffer continually ſo great charge & greeuances, to pay ſo great Annates for the confirmation of the Biſhops & Archbiſhops, and eſpecially in ſuch Biſhopprickes, whereas the Annates by ſucceſſe of time, are enhaunced, & in many (as it is ſayd) doubled. For the Archbiſhops ſea of Mentz (as it is ſayde) ſometime payd onely 10000. floreines: which ſumme, whẽ as one which was choſen there, refuſed to geue, and ſo cõtinued euen vnto his death, he which was afterward elect, being deſirous of confirmation, fearing to withſtande the Apoſtolicke ſea: offered the old ſumme of 10000. floreines: But notwithſtanding, he could not get his confirmation, except he would pay yͤ other 10000. which his predeceſſour before him had not payd.

The Archbiſhops Palle of Mẽtz what it coſteth.

By this meanes he was compelled to pay 20000. floreines. which being enrolled in the regiſter of the chamber hath bene exacted of euery archbiſhop ſince, vntil theſe our dayes: and not onely 20000. but alſo 25000. for theyr newe offices, & new ſeruants. At laſt the ſumme drew to 27000. floreines, which Iames the Archbiſhop of Mentz was cõpelled to paye, as his Commiſſary did report. So by this meanes, in a litle time, there was 7. tymes 25000. floreines payd out of the Archbiſhopricke of Mentz, vnto Rome for the confirmation of the Archbiſhop. And when this Archbiſhop Iames had kept the Archbiſhopricke ſcarce foure yeares, the Lord Vriel was elect after him, who was compelled to pay at the leaſt 24000. or 25000. forcines. whereof a part he borowed of Marchauntes: but to ſatiſfy and pay them agayne, he was forced to exact a ſubſidye of his poore ſubiectes and huſband men, whereof ſome haue not yet ſatiſfied and payd the tribute for the Biſhops Palle, ſo that by this meanes, our people are not onelye tormented and brought to extreme pouertye, but alſo are moued vnto rebellion to ſeeke theyr liberty by what meanes ſoeuer they may, greeuouſly murmuring agaynſte the crueltye of the Clergy.

The Popes palle dearely bought.

The pope alſo ſhould be admoniſhed, how that, through diuers and ſundry wars and battels, the lands of Germany lye deſolate & waſte, and through many mortalityes the number of mẽ is diminiſhed, ſo that for yͤ ſcarcenes of huſbandmen, the fieldes, for the moſt part, lye vntild, the toles are by diuers meanes diminiſhed, the mines conſumed, & the profites dayly decay, whereby the Archbiſhops & Byſhops ſhould pay theyr annates vnto the Apoſtolicke ſea: beſides their other neceſſary and honeſt charges: inſomuch that not without iuſte cauſe, Iames the Archbiſhoppe of Mentz being euen at the poynt of death, ſayde that he dyd not ſo much ſorrow for his own death, as for that his poore ſubiectes ſhould be agayne forced, to pay a greuous exaction for the Palle. wherfore let the high Biſhop as a godly father and louer of his children, and a faythfull and prudẽt paſtor, deale more fauourably with his children the Germaynes, leaſt that perſecution happen to riſe agaynſt the Prieſtes of Chriſt, and that men folowing the example of the Bohemians, do ſwarue from the Church of Rome.

The people polled for the popes Palle.

At the leaſt, let him be more fauorable, as often as any Archbiſhop or biſhop happeneth to rule his Church but a few yeares: as it happened to the Biſhops of Bamberge, whereof 3. dyed within few yeares. The like alſo might happen by other biſhopprickes, whereof (as Æneas Syluius witneſſed) there are in Germany to the number of 50. beſides Abbots, whereof a great number are confirmed at Rome.

Aboue 50. Byſhopricks in Germany

And admitt that in Germany there were greater profite and reuenewes riſing of the ground, mines and toles: notwithſtanding the Emperour and the other Princes, ſhould lacke treaſure and munition of warre agaynſt their enemies, and ſpecially the infidels, and to preſerue Germany in peace and quietneſſe, & to miniſter iuſtice vnto euery man: for which purpoſe, the Councell of the chamber being moſt holyly inſtructed and furniſhed with great coſt & charges, doth chiefly ſerue. Beſides that the Emperour hath need of treaſure, to ſuppreſſe the rebelles in the Empyre, to baniſh and driue away theeues and murtherers, wherof a great nũber are not aſhamed to ſpoyle churches onely, and to robbe them of theyr goods, but alſo to aſſaile the Clergy themſelues. Finally our nation and country of Germany, hath need of great riches and treaſure, not only for the repayring of Churches & monaſteries, but alſo for hoſpitals, for children that are layd out in the ſtreetes, for widowes, for women with childe, for Orphanes, for the mariage of yͤ daughters of poore men, that they be not defloured, for ſuch as haue neede and neceſſity, for the olde and weake, for the ſicke and the ſore, wherof (the more is the ſorrow) Germany is fully repleniſhed and filled.

¶ Aduertiſementes vnto the Emperours Maieſty.

The Emperour aduertiſed of the ſubtill practiſes of the pope, and popiſh prelates.

LEt the Emperors maieſty foreſee and prouide, that the begging friers do not preach againſt his maieſty which are wont to complayn gladly vnto the Apoſtolick ſea, fearing to loſe their priuiledges, which I would to god, were aſwel grounded vpon Chriſt, as they are vpon profite. Let the Emperours maieſty alſo beware that the Pope do not geue cõmaundement vnto the Electours, to proceed to the electiõ of a new king of Romaines, as he did agaynſt Frederick the ſecond, when as the Lantgraue of Thurin, and William Earle of Holland, were elect by the commaundement of the Pope. Let the Emperours maieſty alſo feare and take heed of all the Prelates of the Churches, and eſpecially of the Preſidentes, which by theyr oth are bounde to aduertiſe the Pope. Let the Emperours Maieſty alſo feare and beware that the Pope do not take away from his ſubiectes, their obedience, & prouoke the people bordering vpon him, to make inuaſiõ into yͤ Emperours dominiõs and Archduchy of Auſtrich: which thoſe men, vnder colour of ſhewing obedience vnto the Popes commaundemẽt, be ready to do.

Let the Emperours Maieſty alſo take heede of the Apoſtolicke cenſures, frõ which the pope will in no caſe refraine. Finally let yͤ Emperours maieſty diligently foreſee & take heede, that the pope do not perſwade the people wͭ moſt ſubtile argumẽtes, contrary to the pragmaticall ſanction, excuſing himſelfe, and getting the good will of yͤ ſimple, alledging yͭ wͭ great coſtes & charges, he will repayre yͤ Church of S. Peter in Rome, & build in certaine places, againſt the Turkes, and recouer againe the landes & patrimony pertaining vnto the Church of S. Peter, as he is boũd by his office. Therfore, let your maieſty diligẽtly foreſee and deliberate, how through your moſt wiſe & diſcrete counſaile, if neede ſhall require, you will anſwere to thoſe ſubtilties of the Pope.

The popes pretence of building S. Peters church in Rome

¶ A certaine godly exhortation vnto the Emperours Maieſtie.

A ſupplication or exhortation to Maximilian Emper. for redreſſe of the church.

YOur maieſty cã do nothing better, nothing more acceptable, or more worthy eternall remembrãce, thẽ to moderate the great exactions and oppreſſions of the Germaines: to take away all occaſion frõ the laitie, to perſecute the Clergy: alſo to take away yͤ benefices out of the handes of courtiſans, which can neither preach, comfort, nor counſaile any man (of which benefiſes, as Æneas Syluius writeth ſome are equall to the Byſhopprickes of Italye) to encreaſe Gods honour and worſhip: and ſo to bridle the auarice & vngodlines of thoſe courtiſans, wherby your maieſty may the better prouide for the children of many noble & famous men and Cityzens in Germanie, which being brought vp from their youth in the vniuerſities, learning both the Scriptures and other humaine letters, may without vnquiet vexations, and moſt ſumptuous charges & contentions, aſpire to the Eccleſiaſticall promotions: who by their coũſaile & prayers, may be helpes vnto the whole Church: For there is no ſmall occaſion, why the realme of Fraunce ſhould ſo floriſh, hauing ſo many notable learned mẽ in it. If the Emperour would aboliſh this impiety, and reſtore Germany vnto their auncient liberty, which is now oppreſſed with greuous tributes, and would make way for learned & honeſt mẽ vnto Eccleſiaſticall promotions: then might he truely & perpetually be called of all men, & in all places, yͤ reſtorer of Germany to his aũciẽt libertie, & yͤ father of his countrey, & ſhould obtayne no leſſe glory thereby vnto himſelfe, and profite vnto Germany, then if he had by force of armes, ſubdued any prouince vnto thẽ: And ſo ſhall Germany render no leſſe thankes vnto yͤ ſaide Maximilian, then vnto all the reſt, which hauing tranſlated the Empire from the Grecians vnto Germany, haue raigned many yeares before.

Hereafter enſueth the copy of a certaine letter of yͤ Emperour Maximiliã, geuen out in maner of a decree or cõmaundemẽt, againſt certaine abuſes of the Clergy. Wherunto we haue alſo annexed the aunſwere of Iacobus Seleſtadienſis, vnto the Emperours letters, wherein he ſeemeth alſo to haue ſought aduiſe for the remedy of the like abuſes. which we thought good here not to be omitted.

✱ An Edict of Maximilian Emperour.

WE according to the example of our dearely beloued father Fredericke Emperour of Rome, reuerenſing the chiefe Paſtour of the Church, and all the Clergy, haue ſuffered no ſmall reuenewes of the Eccleſiaſticall dignityes, to be caryed out of our dominion by the Prelats and Clergy that are abſent, whoſe faultes committed by humayne frailty, with Conſtantine our predeceſſor, we haue not diſdeyned to hide and couer. But for ſo much as thorugh our liberality, the decay of Gods honour is riſen, it is our part to foreſee (which are elect vnto the Empyre without any deſert) that amongeſt all other affayres of peace and warre the Churches do not decay, Religion quayle not, or Gods true worſhip be not diminiſhed: which we haue manifeſtly experimented and dayly doe perceiue by the inſatiable couetouſneſſe of ſome, which are neuer ſatiſfied in getting of benefices: through whoſe abſence (being but reſident onely vpon one) Gods honour and worſhip is diminiſhed, houſes decay, Churches decreaſe, the Eccleſiaſticall liberty is hurt, learning and monuments are loſt and deſtroyed, hoſpitality and almes diminiſhed, and by their vnſatiable greedineſſe, ſuch of the Clergy as for theyr learning and vertue were worthy of Benefices, and theyr wiſedome, profitable in common wealthes, are hindered and put backe. Wherefore according to the office and duety of our eſtate, for the loue of the encreaſe of Gods honour, we exhort and require that no man from henceforth, hauing any Canonſhip or Vicarage in one City of our Empyre, ſhall occupy or poſſeſſe a prebend in an other Church of the ſame City, except he geue ouer the firſt, within a yeares ſpace, vnto ſome perſon fitte and profitable for the Church: neither that he doe by vniuſt quarelles, vexe or trouble any man in getting of benefices, neither that any man doe falſely fayne himſelfe to haue bene of the Emperors houſhold, which hath not ben comprehended within the league and agreement made by the Princes, neither that any man attempt to take away the patronages from any lay man, or aggrauate the ſmall prebendes of Curates of Churches, with penſions, neyther that they doe vſe in getting of benefices and Bulles, any fraude, deceite, falſe inſtrumentes, corrupte witneſſes and cloaked Simonye, neyther that any man preſume to obteyne any regreſſe, or other thing contrarye to the ſacred Canons, right, honeſty, equity and reaſon, vpon payne of the moſt greeuous offence of treaſon: the whiche we will that, not onelye they, going ſo contrary to God and all honeſty: but alſo all theyr fauourers, which doe helpe, counſell, harbour or geue them any thing, all theyr meſſengers and writers, proctours, ſuretyes and other theyr friendes, ſhall incurre, and receiue condigne punyſhment for ſo great offence and contempt of our commaundemēt. From Oenopont. &c.

No man to haue two Canonſhips or prebēds at once.

¶ Here enſueth the copye of a letter written vnto the Emperour Maximilian,

¶ To our moſt victorious Lord Maximilian the Emperour, Iacobus Seleſtadienſis, moſt humble commendations.

MOſt victorious Emperour, when I had read your maieſtyes Epiſtle, and receiued inſtructions of your Secretary, I prepared my ſelfe with all my whole endeuour, to ſatiſfye your maieſtyes deſire: For euen from my youth hitherto, I haue applyed all my care and ſtudy, fyrſt for the honour of your maieſty, and conſequently for the amplifying of the Germayne nation, and ſacred Romayne Empire. Albeit I knowe my ſelſe farre vnable to ſatiſfye your deſire and purpoſe, and there are many which can fulfill thys matter much better, which haue greater learning and experience of theſe common matters. There be alſo with other Princes, and in the Senates of common wealthes, many excellent learned men, which can exonerate and beautify Germany, and perſwade to reduce all the Clergy vnto a Chriſtian diſcipline, and to an vnity & peace of the vniuerſall Church. Wherein not onely your Maieſty, but alſo your predeceſſours, as Charles the great, and his ſonne Ludouicus Pius, the Othoes, Conrades, Frederickes, and Henrikes, and laſt of all, Sigiſmundus, haue with all labour and diligence trauelled, being ſtirred thereunto, vndoubtedly throughe the zeale & charity which they bare vnto almighty God, & thākfulnes vnto Chriſt, for his benefites which he hath beſtowed vpon mankinde, and ſpecially for the benefite of his moſt bitter paſſion. For Chriſt became not poore for vs, that we ſhould liue in all riote and wantonnes vpon his patrimony, and ſhew forth our ambition and couetouſneſſe: neither did he ſuffer hunger that wee ſhould glut vp our ſelues: or ſuffered labors, chaſtity, and greuous torments, that we ſhuld liue in idleneſſe, wantōnes, and al kind of voluptuouſneſſe. Neither they which were contributers, and benefactours to Churches, induing the miniſters thereof with theyr temporall riches, had any ſuche reſpecte herein, that the Clergye ſhoulde liue onely in idleneſſe, hauing all thinges at theyr wyll, without labour. Surely there was another cauſe why that they in times paſt did empoueriſh themſelues and theirs to endow the Church: veryly that they might the better attend vnto diuine ſeruice, without care of want of liuing (which they might eaſily get and gather out of the fieldes, woodes, medowes, and waters) and to the intent that they ſhould liberally geue almes vnto the poore Chriſtians, Widdowes, Orphanes, aged and ſicke perſons. For in the inſtitutions of the canonicall profeſſion, whiche we ſuppoſe was written by the commaundement of Ludouicus Pius the emperour, and allowed by the counſell of the Byſhoppes, thus it is read: The goodes of the Churche (as it is alledged by the fathers, and conteyned in the chapters before) are the vowes of the faythfull, and patrimony of the poore. For the faythfull, thorow the feruentnes of theyr fayth, and loue of Chriſt being inflamed, hauing an earneſt deſire of that heauenly kingdome, haue enriched the holy Church with theyr owne goodes, that thereby the ſouldiors of Chriſt might be nouriſhed, the Church adourned, the poore refreſhed, and captiues according to the oportunitye of time, redemed. Wherfore ſuch as haue the adminiſtration of thoſe goods, ought diligently to bee looked vpon, that they doe not conuert them vnto theyr owne proper vſe, but rather, according to theyr ſubſtaunce and poſſibility, they doe not neglecte them in whome Chriſt is fed and clothed. Proſper is alſo of the ſame minde, affirmyng that holy men did not chalenge the Church goods to their owne vſe, as their owne proper goodes, but as thinges commended vnto the poore, to be deuided amongeſt them: For that is to contemne that which a man poſſeſſeth, not to poſſeſſe a thing for himſelfe, but for others, neyther to couet the Church goods with couetouſneſſe, to haue them himſelfe, but to take them with a godly zeale to helpe other. That which the church hath, is cōmō to all them which haue nothing, neyther ought they to geue any thing of that vnto them, (ſayth he) which haue of theyr owne: for to geue vnto them whiche haue enough, is but to caſt thinges away. Ex Illyrico.

Pope Alexander 6,

To returne nowe to the order of Popes where we left before ſpeaking of Innocentius the eight, after the ſayde Innocentius, next ſucceeded Pope Alexander the 6. In which Alexander, among other horrible thinges, this is one to be noted, that when Gemes (Peucerus named him Demes) brother to Balazetes the great Turke, was committed by the Rhodians, to the ſafe cuſtodye, firſt of Pope Innocent, then of Alexander the 6. for whoſe keeping the Pope receiued euery yeare 40000. crownes: yet notwithſtanding, whē pope Alexander afterward was cōpelled to ſend the ſayd Gemes to Charles the eight the French king for a pledge: becauſe the Frēch king ſhould not procure the great Turkes fauour, by ſending his brother Gemes to him to be ſlayne, he being hyred by the Turke, cauſed the ſayde Gemes to be poyſoned, who in his iourney goinge toward the French king, dyed at Terracina. Ex Hieronymo Mario.

The pope poyſoneth Gemes the turks brother, beyng committed to his cuſtodie.
Ex Paul. Iouio lib. 2.
Ex Peucero, lib 5.
Ex Hieronym. Mario.

Moreouer in the ſayd Hieronymus Marius it appeareth, that this Alexander taking diſpleaſure with the foreſayd Charles the French king, about the winning of Naples, ſent to Baiazetes the Turke, to fight againſt the foreſayd Charles. Ex eodem.

The Pope ſetteth the great turke againſt the French K.
Ex Seb. Munſtero, lib. 4. Coſmograph.

Munſterus lib. 4. Coſmog. Declaring the foreſayd hyſtorye of Gemes, ſomething otherwiſe, firſt calleth him Zizymus, and ſayth, that he was firſt committed by the Rhodians to the french king. And when as Ioannes Huniades afore mentioned, did labor to the French king to haue him, thinking by that meanes to obtain a noble victory againſt the Turke, as it was not vnlike: this Alexander the pope, thorow his fraudulent flatterye, gotte him of the Frenche King, into his owne handes: by whoſe meanes the ſayd Gemes afterwarde was poyſoned, as is in maner before expreſſed.

Mancinellus writing againſt the wickednes of the pope, loſte hys handes and tongue.

Unto theſe poyſoned actes of the Pope, let vs alſo adioin his malicious wickednes, with like fury exerciſed vpō Antonius Mancinellus, which Mancinellus being a mā of excellent learning, becauſe he wrote an eloquēt oratiō againſt his wicked maners & filthy life, with other vices, he therfore commaunded both his hands & his tong to be cut of, playing much like with him, as Antonius ẏ tirant once did with M. Cicero, for writing agaynſt his horrible life. At length, as one poyſon requireth another, this poyſoned Pope, as he was ſitting with his Cardinals, & other rych Senatours of Rome at dinner, his ſeruauntes vnwares brought to him a wrong bottell, wherewith he was poyſoned, and his Cardinals about him.

Poyſon requited with poyſon.

In the time of this Pope Alexander, alſo it happened (whiche is not to bee pretermitted) how that the Aungell whiche ſtood in the high toppe of the Popes Churche, was beaten downe with a terrible thunder: which thing ſemed then to declare the ruine and fall of the Popedome. After this Pope next ſucceded Pius the 3. about the yeare of our Lord 1503. After whome came next Iulius the ſecond a man ſo farre paſſing all other in iniquity, that Wicelius, &

Pope Iulius. 2.

ſuch other of his owne friendes writing of him, are compelled to ſay of him, Marti illum quam Chriſto deditiorem fuiſſe: that is, that he was more geuen to warre and battayle, then to Chriſt. Concerning the madneſſe of this man thys is moſt certaynely knowne, that at what time he was going to warre, he caſt the keyes of S. Peter into the riuer of Tybris, ſayinge, that for as much as the keyes of Peter would not ſerue him to his purpoſe, he woulde take himſelfe to the ſword of Paule. wherupon Philip Melancthō, amongeſt many other writing vpon the ſame, maketh this Epigrame.

Cum contra Gallos bellum papa Iulius eſſet
Geſturus, ſicut fama vetuſta docet:
Ingentes martis turmas contraxit, & vrbem
Egreſſus ſæuas edidit ore minas.
Iratuſq; ſacras claues in flumina iecit
Tibridis, hic vrbi pons vbi iungit aquas.
Inde manu ſtrictum vagina diripit enſem,
Exclamanſq; truci talia voce refert:
Hic gladius Pauli nos nunc defendet ab hoſte,
Quandoquidem clauis nil iuuat iſta Petri.

Whereupon alſo Gilbert Ducherius maketh this Epigrame.

In Gallum vt fama eſt, bellum geſturus acerbum,
Armatum educit Iulius vrbe manum:
Accinctus gladio, claues in Tibridis amnem
Proijcit, & ſæuus talia verba facit:
Quum Petri nihil efficiant ad prælia claues,
Auxilio Pauli forſitan enſis erit.

¶ The ſenſe of theſe Epigrammes in Engliſh is this.

When Iulius Pope agaynſt the French determined to make warre:
As fame reportes, he gathered vp great troupes of men from farre.
And to the bridge of Tybur then,
marching as he were wood:
His holy keyes he tooke, and caſt them downe into the floud.
And afterward into his hand,
he tooke a naked ſword:
And ſhaking it, brake forth into this fierce and warlike word.
This ſword of Paule (quoth he) ſhall now defend vs from our foe:
Since that this key of Peter doth nothing auayle thereto.

The popes law geueth leaue to kyll all that be accurſed of him.

The warres and bloudſhed of pope Iulius.2.

Of this Iulius it is certaynely reported, that partly wͭ his warres, partly with his curſinges, within the ſpace of 7. yeares, as good as 200000. Chriſtians were deſtroyed. Fyrſt he beſieged Rauenna agaynſte the Venetians, then Seruia, Imola, Fauentia, Forliuium, Bononia and other cities, which he gate out of Princes handes, not without much bloudſhed. The Chronicles of Iohn Sledan maketh mention, that when this Iulius was made Pope he toke an othe, promiſing to haue a Councell within two yeares: but when he had no leyſure thereunto, being occupyed with his warres in Italy amōg the Venetians, and with the French king, and in Ferraria, and in other countryes: 9. of his Cardinalles departing from him, came to Millayne, and there appoynted a Councell at the City of Piſe, amongeſt whome the chiefe, were Bernardus, Cruceius, Gulielmus Preneſtinus, Franciſcus Cōſtantinus, with diuers others: amongeſt whome alſo were adioyned the Procuratours of Maximilian the Emperour, and of Charles the French king. So the Councell was appoynted the yeare of our Lord 1511. to begin in the Kalendes of September. The cauſe why they did ſo call this Councell was thus alledged, becauſe the Pope had ſo brokē his oth, and all this while he gaue no hope to haue any councell, & alſo becauſe there were diuers other crimes, wherupō they had to accuſe him. Theyr purpoſe was to remoue him out of his ſeat, the which he had procured through bribes and ambition. Iulius hearing this, geueth out contrary commaundement vnder great payne, no man to obey them, & calleth himſelfe another councell agaynſt the next yeare, to be begon the 19. day of Aprill. The French king vnderſtāding Pope Iulius to ioyne with the Venetians, and ſo to take theyr part agaynſt him, conuented a councell at Thurin in the month of September, in the which councel theſe queſtions were propoſed.

The pope periured. A councell called to depoſe pope Iulius.

Whether it was lawfull for the Pope to moue warre agaynſt any prince without cauſe.
Whether any Prince in defending himſelfe, might inuade his aduerſary: and deny his obedience.

The Pragmaticall Sanction eſtabliſhed, mentioned before, pag. 674.

No vniuſt excommunication to be feared.

Vnto the which queſtions it was anſwered, that neither the biſhop ought to inuade, and alſo that it was lawfull for the king to defende himſelfe. Moreouer that the Pragmaticall ſanction was to bee obſerued thorowe the realme of Fraunce: Neyther that any vniuſt excommunications ought to be feared, if they were founde to be vniuſt. After this the king ſent vnto Iulius, the aunſwere of his councell, requiring him either to agree to peace, or to appoynt a generall Councell ſome other where, where thys matter myght bee more fully decided. Iulius woulde neyther of both theſe, but forthwith accurſed Charles the French king, with all his kingdome. At the lenth, at Rauenna in a great war, he was ouercome by the frēch king, and at laſt, after much ſlaughter and great bloudſhed, and mortall warre, this Pope dyed in the yeare of our Lorde 1513. the 21. day of February.

The turkes doing requiſite to be knowen of Chriſtians.

If it were not that I feare to ouerlay this our volume wͭ heapes of forreigne hiſtoryes, which haue profeſſed chiefly to entreat of Actes and Monuments here done at home: I woulde adioine after theſe popes aboue rehearſed, ſome diſcourſe alſo of the Turkes ſtory: of theyr riſing, and cruell perſecution of the ſayntes of God, to the great anoiance and perill of Chriſtendome: yet notwithſtanding certayne cauſes there be which neceſſarily require the knowledge of theyr order and doinges, and of theyr wicked procedings, theyr cruell tyranny, and bloudy victories, the ruine & ſubuerſion of ſo many Chriſten Churches, with the horryble murders and captiuitye of infinite Chriſtians to bee made playne and manifeſt, as well to this our countrey of England, as alſo to other nations:

The firſt cauſe.

Firſt for the better explayning of the Prophecies of the new Teſtament, as in S. Paules Epiſtle ad Theſſal. and alſo in the reuelation of S. Iohn. whiche Scriptures otherwiſe, without the opening of theſe hiſtoryes, can not ſo perfectly bee vnderſtand. Of the whiche Scriptures we mynde hereafter (Chriſt graunting) orderly, as the courſe of matter ſhall lead vs, to make rehearſall.

The ſeconde cauſe.

An other cauſe is, that we may learne thereby eyther with the publique Churche, to lament with our brethren ſuch a great defection and decay of chriſtian fayth, through theſe wicked Turkes: or els may feare thereby our owne daunger.

The third cauſe.

The thyrd cauſe, that we may pōder more deeply with our ſelues, the ſcourge of God for our ſinnes, and corrupte doctrine, which in the ſequele hereof, more euidently may appeare to our eyes, for our better admonition.

The fourth cauſe.

Fourthly, the conſideration of this horrible perſecution of the Turkes, riſing chiefely by our diſcord and diſſention among our ſelues, may reduce vs agayn from our domeſticall wars, in killing and burning one of an other, to ioyne together in Chriſtian patience and concorde.

The fiſt cauſe.

V. but chiefely theſe great victoryes of the Turkes and vnproſperous ſpeed of our men fighting agaynſt thē, may admoniſh & teach vs, folowing the example of the olde Iſraelites, how to ſeek for greater ſtrēgth to encounter with theſe enemyes of Chriſt, then hitherto we haue done. Firſt we muſt cōſider, that the whole power of Sathan ẏ prince of this world, goeth with the Turkes. whiche to reſiſt, no ſtrēgth of mans arme, is ſufficient, but onely the name, ſpirite, and power of our Lord Ieſus the ſonne of god, going with vs in our battels, as among the olde Iſraelites, the Arcke of Gods couenaunt and promiſe wente with them alſo, fighting agaynſt the enemies of God. For ſo are wee taught in Scripture, that we chriſten mē haue no ſtrength, but in Chriſt onely. whether we warre agaynſt the deuill, or agaynſt the Turke it is true, that the Scripture ſayeth: Sine me nihil poteſtis facere. i. without me you cā do nothing. Otherwiſe there is no puiſſaunce to ſtand agaynſt ẏ deuill or to conquere the world, Niſi fides noſtra: that is, our fayth onely all the promiſes of God (touching ſaluation) be annexed, beyonde which promiſes we muſte not goe; for the worde muſt be our rule. He that preſumeth beyond the promiſes in the word expreſſed, goeth not, but wandereth, hee can not tell whether. Neither muſt we appoynt God, how to ſaue the worlde, but muſt take that way whiche he hath appointed. Let vs not ſet our God to ſchoole, nor cōprehed his holy ſpirite within our ſculles. He that made vs wͭout our counſell, did alſo redeeme vs as pleaſed hym. If he be mercifull, let vs be thankefull. And if his mercyes ſurmount our capacity, let vs therfore not reſiſt, but ſearch his word, and thereunto apply our will: which if we will doe, all our conten-

Admonition to fight againſt the turke.

Chriſtian fayth neceſſary to be ioyned with outward force againſt the turke.

Gratis venum dati eſtis, gratis redimemini. Eſai 52.

Omnes ſitientes venite ad aquas, emite abſque argento et commutatione. Eſai. 55.

contentions wil ſoone be at a poynt. Let vs therfore ſearch the will of our God in his word, and if he will his ſaluation to ſtand free to all nations, why do we make marchandiſe therof? If he haue graciouſly offred his waters to vs, without mony or mony worth, let vs not hedge in the plẽtuous ſpringes of his grace geuen vs.

And finally, if God haue determined his owne ſonne onely to ſtand alone, let not vs preſume to admixt with his maieſty any of our trumpery. He ẏ bringeth S. George or S. Deniſe as patrons, to ẏ field to fight againſt ẏ turk, leaueth Chriſt (no doubt) at home. Now how we haue fought theſe many yeres agaynſt the Turke: though ſtoryes keep ſilence, yet ẏ ſucceſſe declareth. We fight agaynſt a perſecutour, being no leſſe perſecutours our ſelues. We wraſtle againſt a bloudy tyraunt, and our handes be as full of bloud as his. He killeth Chriſtes people with the ſword: and we burne them with fire. He obſeruing the works of the law, ſeeketh his iuſtice by the ſame: the like alſo do we. But neither hee nor we ſeeke our iuſtification as we ſhoulde, that is, by fayth onely in the ſonne of God.

Reformation of religion requiſite before we fight with the turkes.

And what maruell then, if our doctrine being as corrupt almoſt, as his: and our conuerſation worſe, if Chriſte fight not with vs, fighting agaynſt ẏ Turke? The Turke hath preuayled ſo mightely, not becauſe Chriſt is weake, but becauſe that Chriſtians be wicked, and theyr doctryne impure. Our temples with Images, our hartes with idolatry are poluted: Our prieſtes ſtinck before God for adultry, being reſtrayned from lawfull matrimony. The name of god is in our mouthes, but his fear is not in our harts. We warre agaynſt the Turke with our workes, Maſſes, traditions and ceremonies: but we fight not agaynſt hym with Chriſt and with the power of his glory, whith if we did, the field were wonne.

Faith getteth victory.

Wherfore briefely to conclude, ſaying my iudgement in this behalfe, what I ſuppoſe: this hope I haue, & do beleue that when the Churche of Chriſt with the Sacramentes therof, ſhalbe ſo reformed, that Chriſt alone ſhall be receaued to be our iuſtifier, all other religions, merites, tradition, images, patrons and aduocates ſet a part: the ſword of the Chriſtians, with the ſtrength of Chriſt, ſhall ſoone vanquiſh the Turkes pride and fury. But of this more largely in the proceſſe of this ſtory.

The ſixt cauſe.

The ſixte and laſt cauſe, why I thinke the knowledge of the Turkes hiſtory, requiſite to be conſidered, is this: becauſe that many there be, which for ẏ they be farther frõ the Turkes, and thinke therfore themſelues to be out of daũger, take little care and ſtudye, what happeneth to theyr other brethren. Wherefore to the intent to excite theyr zeale and prayer to almighty God, in this ſo lamentable ruin of Chriſtes church: I thought it requiſite by order of hiſtory, to geue this our natiõ alſo ſomething to vnderſtand, what hath bene done in other nations by theſe cruell Turkes, and what detriment hath bene and is like more to happen by them, to the Church of Chriſt, except we make our earneſt inuocatiõ to almighty God, in the name of hys ſonne, to ſtop the courſe of the deuill by theſe Turkes, and to ſtay this defection of Chriſtians falling daylye vnto them, and to reduce them agayn to his fayth which are fallen frõ him. Which the Lorde Ieſus of his grace, graunt wyth ſpeede. Amen.

Earneſt inuocation neceſſary in the Church of Chriſt.

2. theſſ. 2.

Before we enter into this ſtory of the Turks and Saracens, firſt let vs call to remembraunce the Prophecy and forewarning of S. Paule writing to the Theſſ. in his 2. Epiſtle, in theſe words: Be not moued nor troubled in your myndes, eyther by preaching, or by writing, or by letter frõ vs, as though the day of the Lorde were at hande: for the Lord will not come except there come a defection firſt, and the wicked perſon be reuealed. &c. Of this defection ſundry mindes there be, of ſundry expoſitours: ſome thinking this defection to meane a falling away from the Empyre of Rome: ſome from the obedience of the Pope. But as S. Paul little paſſed vpon the outward glory of the Romayn Empyre: ſo leſſe he paſſed vpon the proud obedience of the Pope. What Saynt Paule ment by this defection, the reading of theſe Turkiſhe ſtoryes, and the miſerable falling away of theſe Churches by him before planted, will ſoone declare.

The place of S. Paule expounded. 2. theſſ. 2. ſpeaking of the defection to come.

The number of the Apocalips, cap. 13. expounded.

Another miſtery there is in the Reuelations, Apoc. 13. where the number of the beaſt is counted 666. Wherby may ſeeme by all euidences, to be ſignified the firſt origene and ſpringing of theſe beaſtly Saracens, as by ſequele hereof may appeare by the firſt riſing of this deuiliſh ſect of Mahumet.

An other place, Apocal. 16. Et ſextus Angelus effudit phialam ſuam, &c.

Moreouer, an other place there is, cap. 16. Apoca. where we read that by powring out of the Phial of Gods wrath, of the ſixt Aungell, the great floud Euphrates was dryed vp, to let in the kinges of the Eaſt: the openyng of which Prophecy, may alſo more euidently appeare, in cõſidering the order and maner of the comming in of theſe Turks into Europe.

Some alſo apply to the Turkes certayne Prophecyes of Daniell, Ezechiell, and other places of the old Teſtamẽt moe, which here I omit, for ſo much as the Prophecyes of the old Teſtament, if they be taken in their proper & natiue ſence, after my iudgement, do extend no further, then to the death of our Sauior, and the end of the Iewes kingdome. Albeit herein I do not preiudicate to any mans opiniõ, but that euery man may abound in his owne ſenſe.

The time of Mahumete the falſe prophet expounded.

As touching the yeare and time when this peſtiferous ſect of Mahumet firſt began, hiſtories do not fully conſent: Some affirming that it began, an. 621. and in the 10. yeare of Heraclius Emperour of Conſtantinople: in whyche minde is Ioannes Lucidus. As Munſterus counteth, it was in the yeare of our Lord 622. Martin Luther, & Iohn Carion referreth it to the 18. yeare of the raigne of Heraclius, which is the yere of our Lord 630. Unto the which nũber the computation of the Beaſt ſignified in the Apocali. doth not farre diſagree, whiche numbreth the name of the Beaſt, with three Greeke letters χξσ whiche Greeke letters after the ſupputation of the Greciãs, make the number of 666.

The number of the beaſt in the Apo. cap. 13.

Mahumet of the ſtocke of the Iſmalites dwelling in Arabia.

In this all writers agree, that this damnable Mahumet was borne in the country of Arabia, bordering on the Eaſt part of Iewry. His father was a Syrian, or a Perſian, his Mother was an Iſmalite, which Iſmalites being a people of Arabia, were called then Agarens: which term Mahumet afterward turned to the name of Saracens. Of this wretched Mahumete mention was made before. pag. 124. where we ſhewed, how he making himſelfe the higheſt Prophet of all other, yet denyeth not Chriſt to be an holy Prophet and next to him, and Moſes alſo to be an other. Moreouer he denieth not Mary the mother of Chriſt to be a virgin, and to haue conceiued Chriſt by the holy ghoſt, affirming further that Chriſt in his owne perſon was not crucified, but another called Iudas for him. He greatly cõmendeth alſo Iohn the ſonne of Zachary for a virgin: whẽ he himſelfe permitteth a man to haue 4. wiues, and as many concubines as he is able to finde: & ſayth that where as Chriſt & other Prophets had the gift geuen them to worke myracles, he was ſent by force of ſword, to compell men to his religiõ. The prodigious vanityes, lyes, & blaſphemies conteyned in his lawe called Alchoran, are rather to be laught at, then recited.

The prodigious lyes & blaſphemies of Mahumets Alchoran.

It is thought that Sergius a Neſtorian, was a great doer with Mahumet, in cõtriuing of this lying Alchorã & ſo it doth well appeare by the ſcope and pretence thereof which eſpecially tẽdeth to this end, to take the diuinity frõ the perſon of Chriſt, whom he graunteth notwithſtanding to be a moſt holy man, & alſo that he is receiued vp to God and ſhall come agayne to kill Antichriſt. &c.

Mahumetes Alchoran mingled with diuers lawes.

Moreouer this ridiculous Alchoran is ſo blaunched & pondered with ſo diuers mixtures of ẏ Chriſtians, Iewes and the Gentiles lawes, geuing ſuche liberty to all wantonneſſe of fleſh, ſetting vp circumciſion, abſteyning from ſwines fleſh and Iudaicall lotions, and ſo much ſtandeth vpon Father Abraham, that it is ſuppoſed of ſome, this filthy Alchorã, not to be ſet out in the dayes of Mahumet, but that certayne Iewes had ſome handling alſo in this matter, and put it out after his death: and ſo ſemeth firſt to take his force about the number of yeres limited in the Apocal. as is aforeſayd, where thus it is written: He that hath intelligence, let him count the number of the beaſt: For it is the number of a man, and his number is ſixe hundred, ſixe ſcore and ſixe.

The numeration of the Apoc. 666.

After this deuiliſh Mahumet had thus ſeduced ẏ people, teaching thẽ that he came not by miracles, but by force of ſword, to geue his law, & that they which wil not obey it muſt either be put to death or els pay tribute (for ſo be the wordes of the Alchoran) and after that hee had gathered ſtrength about him, of the Arabians, which Arabians thẽ had occaſion to rebell agaynſt the Emperor, becauſe theyr ſtipendes were not paid them of Heraclius the Emperors officers: he began to raunge with force and violence in the partes of Syria bordering nere vnto him, and firſt ſubdued Mecha, then Damaſcus: and further encreaſing in power, entred into Egypt, and ſubdued the ſame. From thence he turned his power agaynſte the Perſians, with whome Coſroes the king of Parſia, encountring with a puiſſaunt army, ouerthrew the Saracens, & put Mahumet to fight. Of theſe Perſians came the Turkes, which afterward ioining with the Saracens, maynteyned them agaynſt the Chriſtians. Ex Munſter.

Damaſcus ſubdued of the Saracens.

Mahumet put to flight by Coſroes kyng of the Perſians.

After the death of this beaſt, which as ſome ſay, was poiſoned in his houſe ſucceeded Ebocara, or Ebubecer his father in law, or as Bibliander affirmeth, his ſonne in law who toke vpon him the gouernmēt of the Saracens, and gotte the Cittye Gaza, and beſieged alſo Hieruſalem two yeares. He raigned two yeares, hauing for his chiefe City, Damaſcus.

After him folowed Omar, or Ahumar, who conquered a great part of Syria, and got Egypt.

Ceſaria got of the Saracens.

The kyngdome of the Perſians ſubdued to the Saracēs.

The 4. king of the Saracens after Mahumet, was Odmē, then folowed Haly, & after him Muhanias: which after the ſiege of 7. yeares, obteined & got the chriſtian City of Ceſaria: alſo ouercame the Perſians, with theyr king Ormaſda, and ſubdued that country to his law.

Arabia, Paleſtina, Phenicia, Syria, Egypt and Perſia, ſubdued of the Saracens

Thus the wicked Saracens in the ſpace of 30. yeares ſubdued Arabia, got Paleſtina, Phenicia, Syria, Egypt, and Perſia: whiche came directly to the 666. yeares, prophecied of in the Reuelations of S. Iohn, as is aforeſayd. And not long after they proceded further, and got Affrike, and then Aſia, as in the proceſſe of theyr ſtory ſhal appeare, the Lord willing.

Conſtance the Emperour ouercome by the Saracens.

Murder cōmonly proſpereth not with the Lord.

Rhodes ſpoyled of the Saracēs.

Not long after, Heraclius Emperor of Conſtantinople, ſucceded Conſtans his nephew, who in the 13. yere of his Empyre, fighting vnluckely agaynſt the Saracens in Licia, was ouerthrown of Muhanias aforeſayd in ẏ yeare of our Lord 655. which Conſtans if he were not proſpered by the Lord in his warres, it was no great maruell, conſidering that he had ſlaine his brother Theodoſius before at home: moreouer liued in inceſtious matrimony: alſo being inclined to certayne new ſects, could not abide the cōtrary teachers, but ſlew thē which admoniſhed him thereof. The ſayd Conſtans going afterward to Italy, was alſo ouercome of the Lumbardes. &c. the Saracens after this victory ſpoyled alſo Rhodes.

Sultanes firſt called.

The firſt ryſing of the turkes.

Although theſe curſed Saracens, in theſe theyr greate victories & conqueſts, were not without domeſticall ſeditions and deuiſions among themſelues, yet the princes of ẏ Saracens, being called then Sultans, had in theyr poſſeſſion, the gouernment of Syria, Egypt, Affrike, & of a great part of Aſia, about the terme of 400. yeares: till at length the Saracen king which ruled in Perſia, fighting agaynſt the Saracene of Babilon, ſought ayde of the Turkes, to fight with him agaynſt ẏ Sultane of Babilon. The which Turks by litle and litle ſurpriſed vpō ẏ Sultan of Perſia, & not long after putting him out of place, vſurped the kingdome of Perſia: which afterward went further, as ye ſhall heare the Lord willing. And this is the firſt beginning of the Turkes dominion.

The turkes dominions parted into 4. familyes.

Theſe Turks after they had thus ouercome great coūtryes and prouinces: and made their power large & mighty both in Aſia and Europa, begā to deuide theyr kingdōes & countryes amongeſt themſelues. But when they coulde not agree, but with deadly war contended for the boundes of thoſe kingdomes and dominions: in the meane tyme 4. of the principall families conquering and ſubduing all the reſt, parted the whole Empyre amongſt thēſelues. And yet they alſo not ſo contented, fell to ſuch cruell hatred, contētion, warre, and ſlaughter (no doubt by the iuſt iudgement of God againſt his blaſphemous enemies) that there was no end thereof, vntill the remnant of the auncient Turkes was vtterly rooted out.

For it is euident, that there are fewe nowe remayning which are Turkes in deed by birth and bloud, and that the ſtate of that great empyre is not vpholdē, but by ẏ ſtrength and power of ſouldyors, which haue bene Chriſtians, and now are turned to Mahumetes Religion: ſo that euen theyr owne naturall language is now out of vſe amongeſt them, ſauing in certayne families of theyr nobility and gētlemen.

Theſe foure familyes aboue mentioned, with theyr Captaynes and armyes, about the yeare of our Lorde. 1330. went raging throughout all Aſia and Europa, and euery one of them conquered ſome parte of the countryes where they paſſed.

The diſſenſention of the Chriſtians do make the turkes ſo ſtrong.

The cauſes of theſe great inuaſiōs and victoryes were the diſſention and diſcorde, falſehode, idleneſſe, vnconſtancy, greedy auarice, lacke of trueth and fidelity among Chriſtian men of al ſtates and degrees, both high and low. For by the wilfull defection and backeſliding of the Chriſtians, the Turkiſh power did exceedingly encreaſe, in that many deſiring the licentious life & liberty of war, & allured with the proſperous ſucceſſe of thynges, forſoke the Churche of God, and made themſelues bond ſlaues to Mahumet and his deuiliſh ſect: both becauſe that fleſhly liberty is delighting to all men, and partly alſo becauſe, as fortune fauoreth, ſo commonly the willes of men enclyne: And agayne ſuche as be prophane and without the feare of God, (whereof there is an infinite number in the Church) in all ages, are wont commonlye to iudge of Religion, according to the ſucceſſe of realmes and kingdomes. For if any, not onelye for the variety of opinions, but alſo for the diuerſitye of euentes and fortune amongeſt men, haue inquired and doe inquire, whether there be any Churche of God diſtyncte from other nations: what it is, and where it is: eſpecially, for ſo muche as the greateſt part of men, bothe in the olde time, when as the foure Monarchyes flouriſhed in order, was ignoraunt of this doctrine, whiche is peculier to the Churche alone, and nowe alſo the barbarity of Mahumet preuayleth & raigneth in the moſte part of the worlde. And how ſtandeth this with mans reaſon, that a ſmall number both miſerable and alſo feebled and broken with manye battayles, ſhoulde be regarded and loued of God, and the other flouriſhing in all wealth, proſperity, victoryes, authority and power, ſhould be reiected and deſpiſed of God, ſeing there is no power and authoritye, but by the ordynaunce of God? Albeit therefore, the power of the Turkes hath bene, for theſe two hundreth yeares, of greater force, then any other Monarchy of the world beſides: yet is there no Imperiall dignity to be eſtemed in that Turkiſh tyrāny: but amongeſt thoſe nations onely, where the heauenly doctrine of the Goſpell is preached, & other diſciplines neceſſary for the Churche of God, & the common life of man mayntayned and regarded: where the lawes of God, & other honeſt and ciuil ordinaunces agreable to the ſame, doe flouriſh and reigne: where lawful iudgement is exerciſed: where vertue is honoured and rewarded: where ſinne and wickednes is puniſhed: where honeſt familyes are mayntayned and defended.

No imperiall countrie in all the turkiſh dominions.

The deſcription of the turkes vnordinate Empyre.

Theſe thinges are not regarded amongeſt the Turkes, the enemies of the ſonne of God, and all lawfull Empyres: becauſe they diſſolue and reiect all godly ſocietyes, honeſt diſcipline, good lawes, pollicyes, righteous iudgemēts, the ordinaunce of matrimony, and godly familyes. For what hath the Empyre of the Turkes bene hetherto, but moſte deadly, cruell, and perpetuall warre, to worke all miſchief, deſtruction and deſolation? to ſubuert good lawes, Cityes, kingdomes, policies, and to enlarge theyr cruell power & dominion? The ſtay and ſtrength whereof, is not loue and fauour proceeding of vertue and iuſtice, as in lawefull and well gouerned Empyres: but feare, violence, oppreſſion, ſwarmes and infinite thouſandes of barbarous and moſt wicked people, miniſters of Satans malice & fury. Whiche kinde of dominion and tyranny hath bene condēned by the voyce of God, many yeares agoe: the teſtimonyes wherof the Lord would haue to remayne in the Church, leaſt the godly being moued with ẏ power & ſucceſſe therof, ſhould fall away and forſake the ſonne of God.

Ezech.39.
Apoc.20.

Wherefore, let vs not ſeeke for any Imperiall ſtate in that barbarity: but let vs be thankefull, & acknowledge the great benefite of God, for that he hath reſerued to vs certayne remnaunts of the Romayn Empyre: And let vs call vpon him dayly with harty petitions and grones & wyth zeale and loue to the houſe of God, that this Turkiſh power ioined with the malice of Sathan, againſt the ſonne of God, preuayle not agaynſt the pore congregations & litle remnant of his Churche, as it hath hitherto done agaynſte thoſe ſtrong and noble chriſtian kingdoms and churches, were now we ſee the Turkiſh tyranny to raigne & Sathā to haue taken full poſſeſſion. Whoſe ſtate was once farre better then ours is now, and more like to continue without ſuch horrible ouerthrowes and deſolation Oh that we might foreſee a litle the great daunger that hangeth ouer our heades. For though the Turke ſemeth to be farre of, yet doe we nouriſhe within our breſtes at home, that maye ſoone cauſe vs to feele his cruell hand and worſe, if worſe may be, to ouerrunne vs: to lay our land waſte: to ſcatter vs amongeſt the Infidels, the enemies and blaſphemers of the ſonne of God.

The Chriſten kingdomes and churches deſtroyed by the turkes, are a warning for vs, whom God hath yet ſpared.

Foure principall families of the turke.

The family of Ottomannus.

Nowe, although theſe 4. families aboue mentioned, long continued together in bloudy warres and deadly hatred, yet one of them paſſed the reſt in all crueltye and tyranny, and ſubduing the other 3. familyes, toke vpon him the gouernement alone, and ſo became the firſt Monarch, or Emperour that reigned amōg thē, called Ottomannus, of whome all that raigned after him, were called Ottomanni. Who ſucceeding orderly of his lyne, haue occupyed the ſame dominion and ſeate of the Turkes, from the yeare of our Lord 1300. vnto this preſent time, which haue bene to the number of 12. Of the which 12. in ſuche order as they liued and raygned, I intend (Chriſt ſo permitting) ſeuerally and compendeouſly ſomething to entreat, briefely abſtracting out of prolixe and tedious writers, ſuch ſpecialties, as for vs Chriſtians, ſhall be chiefely requiſite to be knowne.

¶ Ottomannus the firſt great Emperour or Tyraunt of the Turkes.

Ottomannus the firſt Emperour of the Turkes.

THis Ottomannus was at the firſt, of poore eſtate and obſcure amongeſt the common ſort of men, comming of a baſe progeny and of ruſticall parentes: but through hys valiantnes and actiuity in warre, he got him a great name amongeſt the Turkes. For he being a man of fearce courage, refuſing no labour and delighting in warre, and gathering together by great ſubtlety and multitude of common ſouldiours, began to make warre, and by conqueſtes and victories, to aduaunce himſelfe and his family. Fyrſt he began to robbe and ſpoyle with a great band of rouers and afterward he attempted to ſet vpon all men. Neither did he vexe and deſtroy the Chriſtians onely, but ſet vpon his owne nation alſo, and ſought al occaſion to ſubdue thē wholy vnto him. For now the Princes and Captaynes of the Turkes, inflamed with ambition and deſire of rule, began to fall out and contend among themſelues, in ſo much that they fell to domeſticall and inward warre, with all the power they could.

Inward warre amonge the Turkes.

The comming vp of Ottomānus.

Ottomannus hauing this occaſion very fitte & meete to accompliſhe that whiche he long had ſought for, gathering vnto him all ſuch as he thought to be geuē to robbing and ſpoyling, and ſette all vpon miſchiefe, in ſhort time began to grow in authority, & firſt ſet vpon certayn townes, as he ſaw oportunity to ſerue him: Of which towns, ſome he tooke by force, ſome by yelding, other ſome he ſpoyled & ouerthrew, to terrify the reſt, thus laying the firſt foundation of his riſing. In the meane time, the diſcorde whiche was among the Chriſtians, was no ſmall aduauntage to this Ottomannus, by occaſion whereof, he within x. yeres ſpace, ſubdued Bethinia, and al the prouinces about Pontus: Alſo Natolia, which comprehendeth all the dominion of the Greekes within Aſia: Ancyra a City in Phrigia: Sinope a Cittye in Galatia: and Sabaſtia a Cittye in Capadocia: and thus ſtill preuayling, he encreaſed in ſhort time, to a mightye power, either through the ſecret iudgemente of God agaynſt that nation, or els becauſe God woulde haue them ſo farre & ſo cruelly to preuayle, for the puniſhmen of the ſinnes of other nations, like as it was prophecyed before, that ſuch a kingdome there ſhoulde be of Gog and Magog.

This Ottomannus, after he had raigned 28. yeares in the yeare of our Lord 1527. dyed, and departed to his Mahumet, leauing behind him three ſonnes, of whom Orchanes being the youngeſt, killed his two brethren, whileſt they were at variaunce betwene themſelues.

Ciuil warre among the Grecians.

ORchanes, the youngeſt of the ſonnes of Ottomannus, after he had ſlayne his two brethren, tooke the regimēt of the turkes after his father. Who after he had drawne to him the hartes of the multitude, ſuch as had theyr diſpoſitions ſet vpon the licētious life of warre, cōuerted his power, further to enlarge his fathers dominion: winning & ſubduing Myſia, Lydia, Lycaonia, Phrygia, and Caria: All whiche countryes, being within the compaſſe of Aſia, vnto the ſea ſide of Helleſpontus, and the ſea Euxinus, he added to the Turkiſhe Empyre. Alſo he wanne Pruſia: which was the metropolitane City of Bithynia, which thē he made the chiefe ſeate of the Turkes Empyre. Beſides theſe moreouer, he conquered Nicea, & got Nicomedia: all which were before Chriſtian Cities & regions. And yet all this could not make the Chriſtian Princes in Grecia, to ceaſe theyr ciuill warres, & to ioyne & accord among themſelues: Such debate and variaunce was thē betwene Cātacuzenus, on the Greeks part, & Paleologus ẏ Emperor of Conſtantinople. By reaſon whereof, ẏ turkes ayd was ſent for out of Aſia, to helpe our Chriſtians one to kil an other, and at length to get all thoſe partes of Europe from them both. Who if they had according to theyr profeſſion, ſo well ioyned in brotherly vnity, as they did in cruel hoſtility diſſent, neither had Orchanes ſo preuayled in gettynge Pruſia from the Grecians, neither had the turkes ſo ſoone preſumed into Europe as afterward they did. Orchanes after theſe victories, when he had raigned 22. yeares was ſtrokē, as ſome ſay, with a dart in the ſhoulder, at the ſiege of Pruſia. The opiniō of others is, that he fighting againſt the Tartariās, where he loſt a great part of his army, was there alſo ſlayne himſelfe. an. 1349.

¶ Amurathes the 3. after Ottamannus.

THe Greeke writers doe holde that Orchanes had two ſonnes, Solimannus, and Amurathes. Of which two, firſt Solimannus raigned albeit not long. After him folowed Amurathes, who after that Aſia nowe was ſubdued by his predeceſſors, ſought by all meanes and wayes how to proceede further & to inuade Europe. To whoſe ambitious purpoſe the domeſtical warres of the Chriſtians gaue vnproſperous occaſion: which occaſion is thus declared. Certaine diſcord fell betwene the princes of Greece (whoſe captayne was Cantaguzenus) and Paleologus Emperor of Conſtantinople. Whereupō Paleologus, for that he was not able to make his party good with the Grecians, moſte vnwiſely ſent for Amurathes, to helpe him. Who beinge glad to haue ſuch an occaſion offered, which he ſo long had ſought, ſent to ayde him 12000. Turkes into Thracia: but firſt vſed all delayes he could, of crafty pollicy to the entent that the Greekes firſt ſhoulde waſte theyr ſtrength and power vpon themſelues, whereby he might be more able afterward to ſet vpō them, and to accompliſh his conceiued deſire.

Amurathes the third after Ottomannus.

Amurathes ſeeketh occaſion to inuade Europe.

The Turkes thus being called into Europe, by the Chriſtians, whether they taſting the ſweetneſſe of the ſoyle incenſed Amurathes theyr Emperor to make inuaſion, or whether Amurathes of his owne head thought good to vſe the time, in the yeare of our Lord 1363. he came himſelfe ouer into Europe with 60000. Turkes, falling vpon the Grecians, being waſted and ſpent with their long warres and battelles before. The pretence of the deuiliſhe Turke was to ayd and to aſſiſt the Emperour Pelcologus, whether he would or no, and to ſubdue ſuch as had fallen from him. The Chriſtian ſhippes of the Ligurians for money were hyred to conduct them ouer, taking for euery ſouldiour a peece of gold. Ex Pucer. & alijs.

The firſt comming of the Turke into Europe

The couetouſnes of Chriſtians brought ouer the Turkes.

Callipolis, Philippolis, Adrianopolis, Thracia, gotten of the Turkes.

Thus the Turkes armye being conueyed ouer by the Grecian ſea called Helleſpōtus, firſt got Callipolis wyth other townes and Cityes bordering about the ſea, & there planting themſelues, and preparing ſhippes of theyr own for tranſporting theyr munitions out of Aſia, aduaunced their power further into Thraſia, and there wanne Philippolis, then gotte Adrianopolis, which was not farre from Conſtantinople, & there Amurathes made his chiefe ſeat. Then beganne Paleologus the Emperour at lenth to bewayle his offer & couenaunt made with Amurathes. Whē the Turkes had expugned thus a greate part of Thraſia, they extended forth theyr armye vnto Myſia, whiche they ſoone ſubdued: from thence proceding and conquering the Beſſos and Triballos, they entred into Seruia, and Bulgaria: where they ioyning battell with Lazarus Deſpota prince of Seruia, and with other Dukes of Dalmatia, and Epirus, wanne of them the field, & put them to the worſe: where Lazarus Deſpota being taken, and committed to priſon, ended his life. This Lazarus had a certayne faythfull client or ſeruaunt, who to reuenge his maiſters death, with a bolde courage, although ſeing death before his eies, yet ventred his life ſo far, that he came to the tyraūt & thruſt him through with his dagger. This Amurathes reigned. 23. yeares, and was ſlayne in the yeare of our Lord 1372.

Baiazetes the 4. after Ottomannus.

Baiazetes the 4. after Ottomannus.

THe power of the Turkes began to encreaſe in Europe, what time Baiazetes, the firſt of that name, after the death of his father, entred the poſſeſſion of the turkes kingdome. This Baiazetes had 2. brethrē, Solimānus & Sances. Whiche Sances had his eyes put out by his father for ſtriuing for the kingdome. Solimānus was ſlayne of hys brother. Thus Baiazetes beginning his kingdome wyth the murther of his brother, reduced his Imperiall ſeat frō Pruſia a city of Bithynia, vnto Adrianople, entēding with himſelf to ſubdue both Aſia & Europe to his own power. Firſt he ſet vpon the Seruians and Bulgarians, thinking to reuenge his fathers death, where he gaue the ouerthrow to Marcus Deſpota, with all the nobility of the Seruians and Bulgarians, and put all thoſe partyes vnder his ſubiection vnto the fines and borders of the Illyrians. All Thracia moreouer hee brought likewiſe vnder his yoke, onely Conſtantinople and Pera excepted. That done, he inuaded the reſidue of Grecia, preuaylyng agaynſte the countryes of Theſſalia, Macedonia, Phocides, and Attica, ſpoyling and burning as he paſſed, without anye reſiſtaunce: and ſo returning with innumerable ſpoyle of the Chriſtians, vnto Adrianople, layd ſiege to Conſtantinople the ſpace of viij. yeares, and had expugned the ſame, but that Paleologus beyng brought to extremitye, was driuen to craue ayde of the frenchmen, and of Sigiſmund the Emperour. Who being accompanyed with a ſufficient power of Frenchmen & Germaynes, came downe to Hungaria & toward Seruia agaynſt the Turk. Baiazetes hearing of theyr comming, raiſed his ſiege frō Cōſtantinople, and with 60000. horſemen, came to Nicopolis, where he encountring with them, ouerthrew all the Chriſtian army, tooke Iohn the Captaine of the French power priſoner: Sigiſmundus, which before in the Councell of Conſtance, had burned Iohn Hus & Hierome of Prage, hardly eſcaped by flieng. Baiazetes after the victory got, carried away Duke Iohn, with fiue other in bands, into Prulia, where before his face he cauſed all the other chriſtian priſoners to be cut in peeces.

Afterwarde the ſayde Iohn beeing raunſomed wyth 200000. crownes, was deliuered. Some authors referre this ſtory to the time of Calepinus, as followeth heereafter to be ſeene.

Tamerlanes a Parthian ſtirred vp of God to reuenge the cauſe of the Chriſtians. Baiazetes ſonne taken and ſlaine. Crueltyiuſtly reuenged with cruelty. Baiazetes raiſeth hys ſiege from Conſtantinople.

Baiazetes the cruell tirant after this victory wonne, & tirannie ſhewed vpon the Chriſtians, returned againe to his ſiege of Conſtantinople, fully bending himſelfe to cōquere and ſubdue the ſame, whiche thyng no doubt he had accompliſhed, but that the prouidence of God had founde ſuch a meanes that Tamerlanes King of Parthia, wyth an 100. thouſand horſemen, and ſwarmes of footemen, like a violent floud, ouerrunning Aſia, and preſſing vpon Siria and Sebaſtia, had taken Orthobules the ſonne of Baiazetes, priſoner, and afterward ſlue him, exerciſing the like crueltie vpō his priſoners, as Baiazetes had done before vpon the Chriſtians: inſomuch that he ſpared neither ſexe nor age of the Turkiſh multitude: of whome he cauſed xij. thouſand at one time, to be ouerriden and troden downe vnder his horſes feete. By reaſon whereof, Baiazets the tirant was enforced to raiſe his ſiege from Conſtantinople, & to returne his power into Aſia: where he, neere the hill called Stella, pitched his tents there to encounter with Tamerlanes.

Baiazetes ouercome of Tamerlanes king of Parthians.

The fight betweene theſe ij. was long & great on both ſides, which was in the yeare of our Lord 1397. and the ſecond yeare after the ſlaughter of our Chriſtians at Nicopolis in Ponnonia: but the victorie of this battaile fell to Tamerlanes at lēgth. In the which battaile as Munſterus writeth, were ſlaine 2000000. Turkes. Among whome, Baiazetes the tirant, hauing his horſe ſlaine vnder him, was takē priſoner, and to make a ſpectacle of his wretched fortune, was bounde in golden fetters, and ſo beeing encloſed in an iron grate (whome before all Grecia could not holde) was ledde about and ſhewed through all Aſia, to be ſkorned & laught at: and moreouer was vſed in ſtead of a footeſtoole to Tamerlanes, or a blocke, as often as he mounted vpon his horſe. Some adde alſo, that he was made like a dogge to feede vnder Tamerlanes table. The tirannie of which Baiazetes againſt the Chriſtians, as it was not much vnlike to the crueltie of Valerianus yͤ Romaine Emperour aboue mentioned, pag. 73. ſo neither was the example of his puniſhment much diſcrepant, for as Sapores King of the Perſians did then with Valerianus in time of the eight perſecution of the primatiue Church: ſo likewiſe was Baiazetes this perſecutor worthely handled by Tamerlanes king of the Parthians, as in maner aboueſayd.

The great victories of Tamerlanes in Aſia.

Tamerlanes after thys conqueſt, paſſed wyth hys army into Meſopotamia, to Egypt, and all Syria, where he victoriouſly ſubduing the Cities and munitions of the Turkes, at length alſo conquered Damaſcus. In his ſieges his maner was, the firſt day to go all in white attire, the ſeconde daye in red, the third day in blacke: ſignifieng thereby mercie the firſt daye to them that yeelded, the ſeconde day the ſword, the third day fire and aſhes. At laſt, after great victories, and ſpoiles gotten of the Turkes, he returned into his Countrey againe, and there dyed, anno 1402.

Ex Seb. Mūſtero lib. 4. Coſmograph

Seb. Munſterus writing of this Tamerlanes, recordeth that he had in his army 200. thouſand men: and that hee ouercame the Parthians, Scythians, Hiberians, Albans Perſians, Medes, and conquered all Meſopotamia: and after he had alſo ſubdued Armenia, paſſing ouer the riuer Euphrates with ſixe hundred thouſande footemen, and 4000000. horſemen, he inuaded all Aſia Minor, conquering and ſubduing from the floud Tanais vnto Nilus in Egipt, and was called terror orbis, the terror of the world. He lefte behinde hym two ſonnes, who falling in diſcorde for theyr poſſeſſions, loſt all agayne that their father gotte.

A generation of Vipers

In the meane time Baiazetes in the ſecond yeare of his captiuitie, died, leauing behind him diuers ſonnes, Ieſus or Ioſua the eldeſt, Mulſumanes, Moſes, Celebinus, or Calepinus, Ieſus the yonger, Muſtaphas, and Hali, of whome firſt Ieſus the eldeſt was ouercome and ſlaine of Mulſumanes: which Mulſumanes afterwarde was deliuered to Moſes his brother, and by him was ſlaine likewiſe, which Moſes had alſo the like ende by his brother Calepinus, hauing his necke broken with a bowe ſtring, which was then the vſuall maner among the Turkes in killing their brethren. The ſame Calepinus ſparing onely the life of Muſtaphas his other brother, condemned him to perpetuall priſon. Ieſus the younger was Baptiſed, & ſhortly after departed at Conſtantinople. In theſe ſuch diſorders and diuiſions among the Turkes, what occaſions were geuen to the Chriſtiās to haue recouered agayne of the Turkes that they had loſt, if they had not bene either negligent, or in their own priuate warres otherwiſe occupied with themſelues.

¶Calepinus the 5. after Ottomannus.

Calepinus the fift, after Ottomannus.

Calepinus, or Celebinus was the ſonne of Baiazetes, and of foure brethren, the eldeſt: who beyng all taken captiues of the Parthians, he onely eſcaped and obteined his fathers kyngdome. This Calepinus encouraged by the ſloth and negligence of the Princes of Europe, and by the diſcord of the Grecians amongeſt them ſelues and other nations neare about them, long troubled and vexed the Bulgarians, Seruiās, and Macedonians, euen to the tyme of Sigiſmundus. which Sigiſmundus ſeyng now Baiazetes to be ouercome and taken of Tamerlane, and the power of the Turkes weakened in Europe, & hauing ſuch occaſion offered him, as it were from heauen, to deſtroy and vtterly to roote out, not onely out of Aſia but alſo all Europe, that barbarous nation, and cruell enemies to the name and Religiō of Chriſt: and alſo to reuenge the great ſlaughter and diſcomfiture of his army fighting before with Baiazetes at Nicopolis a Citie in Myſia: with great power made warre agaynſt Calepinus at Columbatium a Towne in Seruia, as is alſo before mentioned. pag. 719. but as vnluckely and with as little ſucceſſe as he did before agaynſt Baiazetes his father: For in that battaile were ſlayne of the Chriſtiās to the nūber of xx. thouſand, and the reſt vtterly diſcomfited, the kyng himſelfe eſcaping ſo hardly, that he entred not agayne into his kingdome for the ſpace of 18. monethes after. Some write that this was done vnder Baiazetes, other ſome referre this battaile to Amurathes, but howſoeuer it was, moſt pernicious was it to the Chriſtiās. He raigned but vi. yeares and dyed very young. an. 1404.

Orchanes and Moſes his vncle. Diuerſitie in hyſtories.

After the captiuitie of Baiazetes aboue mentioned, hiſtories diuerſly doe diſſent. The Greeke writers making no mention at al of Calepinus, onely make mētion of the ſonnes of Baiazetes, & of the contention among them, vntill the time of Muhumetes. The Latin ſtories writing of the children of Baiezetes and of their ſucceſſion, doe not therein agree, ſome affirmyng that Baiazetes had two ſonnes, Orchanes ſurnamed Calepinus, & Mahumetes his brother, which within two yeares ſlew the ſayd Calepinus, and entred his dominion. Other attribute to Baiazetes moe ſonnes, as is aboue rehearſed. Some agayne doe geue to Baiazetes onely theſe two ſonnes Celebinus and Muſtaphas: and hold that Calepinus or Celebinus had two ſonnes, to wit, Orchanes and Mahumetes, and adde moreouer that the ſayd Orchanes beyng ſomewhat yoūg, was ſlayne of his vncle Moſes, who gouerned but ij. yeares. For Mahumetes to reuenge his brothers death ſlew Moſes, and inuaded his dominion. The Greeke ſtories make no mention at all of Orchanes.

This Mahumetes, whether he was the ſonne of Baiazetes, or els of Calepinus, conuerted to himſelfe alone the kingdome, or tyrāny rather, of the murdering Turks. who afflicted the Chriſtiās with ſore warres within Europe, eſpecially the countrey called Wallachia, lying not farre frō the floud Danubius, betwene Hungary & Thracia. From thence he remoued into Aſia, where he recouered diuers partes in Galatia, Pontus, Capadocia, Cilicia, whiche before Tamerlanes had alienated from the Turkes. This Mahumetes planted his chief Imperiall ſeate in Adrianople not farre from Conſtātinople, within the countrey of Thracia. In ſome writers the conflict betwene Sigiſmund & the great Turke, wherein the Chriſtians were ſo diſcomfited, is referred rather to this Mahumetes, then to Calepinus: of which conflict mention is aboue made in the ſtory of Sigiſmundus. pag. 719. ¶ Amurathes the ſecond, 8. after Ottomanus.

Amurathes the 8. after Ottomanus.

AMurathes, as Philelphus ſayth, was the ſon of Celebinus, as Laonicus Chalcondiles teſtifieth, of Mahumetes: whoſe ſon ſoeuer he was, a wretched tiraunt he was, and permitted as a ſcourge of God, to correct ẏ ſins of the Chriſtians. In the ſtory of Baiazetes, mentiō was made before of Muſtaphas his ſonne, who was cōdemned to perpetual priſon by Calepinus his brother. This Muſtaphas eſcaping out of his brothers priſon, was conueied to the Grecians, where he remained long in cuſtody, til at length they vnderſtanding the purpoſe of Amurathes, ſet him vp with ſufficient habiliments and furniture of war, to fight againſt the ſayde Amurathes his nephew. But in cōcluſion, he being not able to make his partie good, came into ẏ hands of his enemie, and had his necke broke with a bowſtring, after the maner of the Turkiſh execution.

Muſtaphas murthered by Amurathes his nephew.

The Grecians then terrified with this ſiniſter aduerſity required truce of the Turke, but when that would not be graunted, they procured vnto them Muſtaphas, the other brother to Amurathes, being of the age of xiij. yeares: who likewiſe being armed of ẏ Grecians, got the City of Nice in Bithynia, from Amurathes his brother: Albeit it was not long but he was circumuented in the ſame Citie, and brought to Amurathes: who cauſed him likewiſe to taſte of the ſame whip, as the other Muſtaphas had done before. Amurathes being now out of all feare and doubt of brethren & kinſfolke to riſe againſt him, conuerted all his power againſt the Grecians: and firſt raunging throughout Thracia, where diuers Cities yelded vnto him, which before belonged to the Emperour of Conſtantinople, frō thence he ſet forward to the noble and famous City Theſſalonica, being then vnder the league and protectiō of the Venetians. This Theſſalonica is a Citie in Grecce, bordering vpon Macedonia, to ẏ Citizens wherof, S. Paule writeth, foreſhewing vnto them in his 2. Epiſtle, of a defection to come before the comming of the day of the Lord 2. Theſſ. 2. By the which apoſtacie or defection, what the holy Apoſtle doth meane, this ſtory of the Turkes maye eaſely declare. After Theſſalonica was ſubdued, Phocis, with all the countrey about Athens, Beocia likewiſe, Aetolia, Acarnania, with all the region beyond Peloponeſus, vnto the coaſt of Corinth, to whome S. Paule alſo wrote other two epiſtles, were brought in bondage and ſlauery vnto the Turke.

Ioannes Caſtriotus.

In Epirus, and in that quarter that adioyneth to Macedonia, named Albania, reigned then one Ioannes Caſtriotus, who perceiuing himſelfe too weake to matche with the Turkes power, made with the Turke this cōuention, that he ſhould haue Croia, a famous Citie in Grecia, and alſo gaue to him his three ſonnes for hoſtages, to wit, Conſtantinus, Repoſius, and Georgius.

In this George, ſuch towardnes of noble courage, ſuch vigour of minde, and ſtrength of body ſingularly did appeare, that the Turke cauſed him more freely to be inſtructed after the Turkiſh religion and maner in his owne court: where he being traded vp, did ſo ſhoote vp as well in feates of actiuitie, as in ſtrength of body, that he excelled all his equals: in ſo much that he was named Scanderbeius, which ſoundeth as much as Alexander Magnus.

After this Alexander was grown vp to mature ripenes of age, and was well trained vp in feates of war, he was ſent out by the Turke, to warre againſt Caramannus of Cilicia, The Turkes enemy. In which expedition he ſped himſelfe moſt manfully, fighting hand to hande, firſt with a footeman of Scythia, then with an horſeman of Perſia, being chalenged by them both to encounter, firſt with the one, after with ẏ other: whom he ſo valiantly ouerthrew, ẏ he wan great renoun with ẏ Turk: In ſo much that he truſting to ẏ Turks fauour, whē he heard of the deceaſe of his father, durſt aſke of ẏ Turke the graunt of his fathers dominion to be giuen vnto him. which requeſt, although Amurathes ẏ Turke did not denie him: yet notwithſtanding he perceiuing the matter to be dalied out with fayre wordes, by ſubtill meanes and policie * ſlipt out of the Turks court, and came to Epirus his owne inheritance: where firſt by forged letters he recouered Croia. The other Cities of their voluntary minde, yeelded themſelues vnto him, who then gathering vnto him the people of Epirus & Macedonia (which were not ſo many in nūber, as with good willing minds they ſtucke vnto him) ſo mānfully and valiantly behaued himſelfe, that againſt all the puiſſance both of Amurathes, and alſo of Mahumete, he mainteined his owne, repulſed their violence, and put to flight their armies, many yeres together. But to returne againe to the courſe of Amurathes victories, after he had thus preuailed (as is before ſignified) agaynſt the Eaſt parts of Europa and Grecia, and had conuented thus for the dominion of Epirus, he inuaded Illiricum, (otherwiſe called now Sclauonia) conteining in it Dalmatia, Croacia, Iſtria, and Liburnia: which Countreys after he had ſpoiled and waſted, he continued his courſe to Albania, and Boſna. In which regions, when he had ſubdued a great part, and had led away an innumerable multitude of captiues, he moued further to Walachia and Seruia, vpon hope to conquere all Pannonia.

There reigned at the ſame time in Seruia a certayne prince named Georgius Deſpota, who made great ſute to the Turke for truce & peace, promiſing to giue his daughter to mariage: for by ẏ Turkes lawe they may marry as many wiues as they luſt. It was not long after Amurathes had maried the daughter of Deſpota, but he contrary to his league and promiſe, made warre vpon Deſpota his father in law, and expelled him out of his kingdome, taking from him diuers Cities, as Scopia, Nouomonte, Sophia, and all Miſia. Georgius himſelfe fled into Hungary, leauing behind him his ſon to defēd ẏ town of Sinderonia. Amurathes vnderſtāding of the flight of Deſpota his father in law, compaſſed the Citie of Sinderonia with a ſtrōg ſiege, which whē he in few daies had expugned, he tooke his wiues brother, ſonne of Deſpota, and without regard of all mercy and affinitie, after the barbarous tyranny of the Turkes, put out his eies, with a baſen red hoat ſet before his eies, and after that led him about with him, in deriſion and deſpite of his cowardly father. But Huniades with the power and ayde of Ladiſlaus King of Polonia (but ſpecially by the power of the Lord) did ſoone infringe the puiſſance of the Turke, and gaue him the ouerthrow, recouering vnto the Chriſtians the greateſt part of Seruia and Bulgaria.

Fiue victories of Ioan. Huniades, againſt the turke gotten in one day.
The great Baſſa or duke of the turkes ouerthrowen by Huniades.

In this battaile Huniades had fiue ſundry conflictes with the Turks vpō one day, and with fiue victories put them to the worſe, and toward night did ſo diſcomfit and ouerthrow the great captaine of Amurathes, called Baſſa, the Duke of Anatolia (which is otherwiſe named Aſia Minor) that he ſlue of the Turks that day, to the number of 30. thouſand. Amurathes, although he was not a little thereat diſcouraged, yet diſſembling his feare, with ſtout countenāce ſent for Carambeius his principal ſtay & captaine, with a new power brought out of Aſia, to aſſiſt him in his warres. Then Carambeius, in ẏ downes of Trāſiluania, Ladiſlaus the foreſaid king of Polonie (the Lord ſo working) through the induſtrie of Ioannes Huniades, ſo receiued & with ſuch celerity oppreſſed him vnprouided, that all his ſtout & ſturdy army either was ſlaine downe right, or elſe put to flight & diſparcled, Carambeius the Captaine being himſelfe taken priſoner in the ſame field.

The victory of Huniades againſt Carambeis the great captaine of the turkes.
The great turk brought to a great diſtreſſe.

These victories of Huniades ſtroke no little terror to Amurathes, in ſomuch ẏ for diſtreſſe of minde he was ready to deſtroy himſelfe (as ſome do write) but being cōfirmed by Helibeus Baſſa his coūſailer, he kept himſelfe within ẏ ſtreites of ẏ mount Rhodope. who then hearing that Caramannus inuaded the ſame time the countrey of Bithinia and Pontus in Aſia: was glad to take truce wyth Ladiſlaus and Huniades vpon ſuch conditions as they liſted to make themſelues: which conditions were theſe, that Amurathes ſhould depart clearely from all the region of Seruia, and ſhould remoue from thence all his garriſons, which were placed in the Caſtles and forts of the ſame: Alſo he ſhould reſtore George Deſpota (which is to ſay) Prince of Seruia vnto his poſſeſſion, and ſet his children free, whome he had in captiuitie, and reſtore them to their inheritance. Item, that he ſhoulde make no more claime nor title to the countrey of Moldonia aboue mentioned, nor to that part of Bulgrauia which he had loſt: and that he ſhould deſiſt heereafter from all wrongs and iniuries againſt the Chriſtians. Vpon theſe conditions the Turke being agreed, ſo was truce concluded on both parts for tenne yeares, and with ſolemne othe betweene them confirmed.

Amurathes ſeketh truce of the Chriſtians.
The conditions betweene Ladiſlaus kyng of Polonie, and Amurathes.
Truce betwene the Chriſtians & the turkes for x. yeares.

This

Amurathes returneth into Aſia. The Popes diſpenſation and abſolution abuſed.

This done, Amurathes the tyraunt addreſſeth himſelfe toward Aſia, to reſiſt the inuaſion of Caramannus aforeſaid. At what time Pope Eugenius ſo ſoone as he heard the Turke to be returned into Aſia, ſendeth Iulianus Cæſarianus his Cardinall (whoſe ſtory is before touched, page. 683.) vnto Ladiſlaus the foreſaid king, with full diſpenſation and abſolution, to breake his othe and league wyth the Turke, promiſing moreouer great hope of aide, if he would go in armes ſtoutly againſt the tirant.

The popes raſhe counſayle pernicious to Chriſtendome. Nothyng proſpereth that is taken in hand by the popes ſetting on. The pope breaketh truce made betwene the Chriſtians and the turke.

¶ Where by the way is to be noted, that as there is no truth of promiſe in that peſtilēt ſea of Rome, neither was there euer any war proſpered, which was taken in hande by the Popes counſaile: ſo was there neuer any counſaile of the Pope, that brought with it more detriment to Chriſtianitie, then this. But the Pope belike thought, that as he might lawfully breake promiſe with Iohn Hus, and with other Chriſtians, ſo alſo he needed not to obſerue anye league or truce taken with the Turke: but it turned much otherwiſe then the Popes blinde braines imagined, as by the ſequele is to be ſeene. For Ladiſlaus being thus excited by the vnaduiſed and ſiniſter inſtigation of Pope Eugenius, contrary to the truce ſtabliſhed a little before, ſet out with his army from Seledinus, and ſo proceeding to Walachia and Burgaria, came to Varna, a towne of Bulgary, where he fell ſicke.

The pope moued Ladiſlaus to breake truce The falſe dealing of the Italian Nauie. The battell of Varna, betwene Ladiſlaus king of Polonie, and Amurathes.

It was not long but the Turke hauing thereof intelligence, left his warres begon with Caramannus in Aſia, and with great iourneis made haſte into Europe, paſſing ouer by yͤ ſtraites neare to Calipolis, where all yͤ Italian nauy ſtill looking on, and whether of purpoſe, or whether for cowardlines, would not ſtirre one ore to ſtop the paſſage of the Turkiſh army. When Amurathes was come to Adrianopolis in Thraſia, vſing ſuch celeritie as no mā looked for, within viij. daies he was in Burgaria, & there encamped himſelfe againſt Ladiſlaus. The day of battaile being ſet, the armies ioined on both ſides. Huniades was himſelf there preſent, but all the matter was ruled by Iulianus the Cardinall, and yͤ Popes Clergy. The fight cōtinued three daies and three nightes together, with great courage & much bloudſhed on each ſide: inſomuch that the field did ſtand with lakes of bloud. They ſemed at the firſt to incline to the Chriſtians, by breaking the firſt ranks of the Turkes. But the Prieſts and Prelates which were at the field (which had bene more fitte to haue bene in the Church) ſeeing the Turkes to begin to flie, vnſkilfully left their array to purſue the enemy, ſo that they leauing the other ſtandings of the Chriſtians naked, gaue great aduantage to the Turks, with their darts & ſhot to diſturbe the Chriſtian rankes. By the which occaſion, Amurathes incloſing yͤ Chriſtiās with his army roūd about, obteined the victory. In the which field, Ladiſlaus the yong king of Polony, hauing his horſe firſt killed vnder him, was ſtrooken downe, & ſlaine. The Popes Biſhops flieng to ſaue themſelues, fell into the mariſhes, and there were deſtroied, ſuſteining a durtey death condigne to their filthy falſhode and vntruth. Iulianus yͤ Cardinall, which with the Pope was the chiefe doer in breaking the league, in the way was found dead, being full of wounds, and ſpoiled to his naked ſkinne. Of the reſt of yͤ army that eſcaped by flieng, part was drowned in yͤ mariſhes, ſome periſhed miſerably for hunger, ſome for cold, watching & wādering in the woods. Huniades hardly eſcaped the danger, by the mercifull prouidence of God, being reſerued to the further profite and commoditie of Chriſtendome.

The popiſh prelats were the cauſe of loſing the field. A iuſt puniſhment vpon the popiſh prelates for their vniuſt dealing. Iulianus the Cardinall ſlaine in the warre and ſpoyled. Huniades eſcapeth. The worthy commendation of Iohn Huniades.

This Iohn Huniades the worthy warrier was borne in Walachia, being Earle of Biſtrice, of all Captaines yͭ euer went againſt the Turkes, moſt famous & ſingular, prudent in wit, diſcreet in counſaile, expert and politike in warre, prompt of hand, circumſpect before he attempted, quicke in expedition: in whom wāted almoſt no good propertie requiſite in a warlike Captaine. Againſt two moſt mighty and fierce tirants, Amurathes and Mahumetes, through the Lords might, he defended all Pannonia, and therefore was called the thunderbolt and terrour of the Turkes. Like as Achilles was vnto yͤ Grecians, ſo was he ſet vp of God to be as a wal or bulwarke of al Europe againſt the cruell Turkes and enemies of Chriſt, and of his Chriſtians. Neither was there any King or Prince that euer achieued ſuch noble victories, either ſo many in number, or ſo profitable for yͤ publique vtilitie of all Europe, as did he, and that not onely in the daies of this Amurathes, but alſo of Mahumetes his ſucceſſour, as heereafter remaineth further to be ſeene. This battaile of Amurathes againſt the Chriſtians at Varna in Bulgaria, was fought in the yeare of our Lord 1404.

Amurathes taketh his viage againſt the Grecians.

Amurathes by reaſon of this victorious ouerthrow againſte the Chriſtians, ſurpriſed with no ſmall pride, directed his iourney incontinent toward the Grecians, where Caſtriotus was, otherwiſe called Scanderbeius. And firſt commyng to Peloponeſus, and breaking downe the wall about the ſtraits of Corinthe, encoūtred with the brother of the Emperour of Conſtantinople, whom with his ſodeine commyng he oppreſſed, with all the Greekes army, ere they were prouided. Paleologus the Emperour after that, did build vp the wall againe: but at the Turkes biddyng he was cōpelled to vndoe it agayne: which wall afterward the Venetians did repayre. After the demolitiō of the wall, Amurathes entring into *Peloponeſus, tooke diuers townes and Cities, as Sycione, and Patris, and moreouer made all the parts of Theſſalia and Achaia tributaries vnto him.

* Peloponeſus, Sycione, Patris, with all the partes of Theſſalia & Achaia, brought vnder the turke. The memorable actes of Scanderbeius againſt Amurathes.

The next yeare after this battaile of Amurathes fought agaynſt the Chriſtians at Varna, the Turke beyng now about the partes of Grecia, purpoſed to bend all his force and mayne agaynſt the countrey of Epyrus belongyng to Georgius Caſtriotus Scanderbeius. Of this Scanderbeius mētion was made before, how he was brought vp in the Turkes Court, from whence we declared alſo how ſubtillie he conueyed him ſelfe, and came to the poſſeſſion of his owne patrimony of Epyrus. *Which Epirus this noble and victorious Scanderbeius (whom the Lord alſo had rayſed vp the ſame tyme with Huniades, to bridle the fury of the Turkes) valiaūtly defended agaynſt all the power of Amurathes: In ſo much that he diſcomfited and vanquiſhed vij. of the moſt expert Baſſas or Dukes of the Ottomā Emperour, one after an other, with all their armies of moſt piked and choſen ſouldiours, diſlodged them of their tentes, and expulſed them vtterly out of all Epyrus. Alſo when Amurathes himſelfe with his whole puiſſaunce, had enuironed about the Citie of Croia, with cruell ſiege and ordinaunce out of meaſure, yet notwithſtandyng the ſayd Scāderbeius (through the power and bleſſing of the Lord) beate him out of the field, & repulſed him from his ſiege.

* This Epyrus is a countrey in Grecia bordering neare to the partes of Macedonia. Vij. captaines of the turkes ouercome by Caſtriotus. Scanderbeius.

Amurathes renounced his dominion, & made himſelfe a turkiſh monke.

After this diſcomfiture, the ſaying is that Amurathes, to keepe his vow made before, after his victory at Varna, gaue himſelfe into a religious order, liuyng a contemplatiue life with certaine other Prieſtes ioyned vnto him, in the foreſt of Bithynia, renouncing the gouernement of his realme to the handes of Haly one of his Princes (for thou muſt vnderſtād, good Reader, that the Turkes alſo be not without their ſondry ſectes of Religion, no more then we Chriſtians are without our Friers and Monkes.)

Two Chriſtian warriers in Europe ſtirred vp of God to vanquiſh the turks.

In the meane tyme while Amurathes this Turkiſhe tyrāne was cloyſtered vp in his Monkiſh Religion, Ioannes Huniades in the kyngdome of Hungary, and Caſtriotus Scanderbeius in Grecia, kept great ſtyrre againſt the Turkes. By reaſon wherof Amurathes was takē againe from his Monkiſh vow and profeſſion, & brought agayne into the field: For firſt Huniades had reſcued the whole cōtrey of Hungary: and had propulſed moreouer all the might of the Turkes farre frō Seruia. And although the peuiſhe practiſe of Georgius Prince of Seruia, had oft tymes diſcloſed his counſailes vnto the Turkes, whereby twiſe he was brought in daunger, yet notwithſtandyng (through the Lordes gracious protection) he was preſerued, and deliuered by the ſayd George vnto the Hungarians agayne, & after that manfully vāquiſhed the Turkes, ſo that they had no reſting place about thoſe parts of Seruia and Bulgaria, ſo long as he liued.

This Iohn Huniades is reported of 20. battels with the turke, to loſe but two.

Epyrus & Macedonia, defended by Scanderbeius.

On the other ſide in Grecia, Caſtriotus Scāderbeius ſo foyled the Turke in defence of his cōtrey Epirus and Macedonia, and kept Amurathes ſo ſhort, that not onely he was not able to wynne any great Towne in all Epyrus: but alſo commyng from Epyrus in the ſtraites, was ſo intāgled by Caſtriotus, that he was forced to geue battaile: In the which battaile he was ſo vanquiſhed, & moſt part of his army ſlayne, that for grief and ſorrow conceaued, he fallyng into a rauyng ſickneſſe, was trāſported out of his pauilion vnto Adrianople, and there in fury & madneſſe dyed, after he had reigned 34. yeares, which was about the yeare of our Lord. 1450.

Amurathes ouercome by Scāderbeius.

This Amurathes firſt ordained the order of Ianizarites. Which were the men children of ſuch Chriſtians as he conquered & tooke captiue: whom he forced to renounce the faith of Chriſt, wherein they were Baptized & brought them vp in Mahumetes law, & exerciſed them in the ſame feates of warre as he did his owne people: and after that they came to mens eſtate, he named them Ianizari (that is to ſay) ſouldiours of a ſtraunge countrey, and made them to garde his perſon. They weare on their head is ſtead of an helmet, a white attire made of the groſſeſt ſort of woll, and in ſo manifolde aboute their head, that it can not bee pierced with a ſword. It hāgeth downe on the backe with a taile, and before on the forehead it is garniſhed with golde and ſiluer. They were wont to vſe bowes and launces in the fielde, but nowe they vſe dagges as oure horſemen do.

At the firſt inſtitution there were but 8000. in theyr garriſon, but now they be twiſe ſo many. This of all bondage and ſeruitude that the Chriſtians ſuffer vnder the Turke is moſt intollerable, and greatly to be of all true Chriſtians lamented. For what can godly mindes behold more to their griefe, then to ſee their children pulled from the faith of Chriſt, wherein they were baptiſed, and by whoſe bloud they ſhould eternally be ſaued, and to be inſtructed and nouriſhed with the blaſphemous doctrine of Mahumet, and to be profeſſed enemies of Chriſt and hys Churche, to make warre againſt heauen, and to periſh euerlaſtingly? And finally, what a lamentable thing is it, to ſee and beholde our owne children borne of our owne bodies, to become our mortall and cruell enemies, and to cut our throtes with their owne hands? This ſeruitude of minde is farre greater then death it ſelfe, which if oure Princes would well conſider, it would cauſe them the rather to agree, and bende their whole force and power againſt this cruell enemy.

¶ Mahumetes ſecond, the ix.
after Ottomanus.

Mahumetes the 9. turke after Ottomannus.

AMurathes left behind him three ſonnes, Mahumete borne of the daughter of Deſpota, Prince of Seruia, being twentie yeares of age, the ſecond ſonne called Turcines, the third named Calepinus. This Turcines being an infant, and but eighteene moneths old, was ſtrangled at the commandement of the Turke, by his ſeruant Moſes, himſelfe being there preſent, and beholding the horrible murther. And when Moſes the executour of yͤ murther had deſired him not to pollute his handes with the bloud of his brother, he anſwered, that it was the manner of all the Ottoman Turkes, that all the other brethren being deſtroied, none ſhould be lefte aliue but one to gouerne the Empire. wherefore Moſes was commaunded by the tirant, there preſently, and in his ſight, to kill the infant. This horrible fact when the mother of the childe vnderſtoode, ſhe crieng out, and almoſt mad for ſorrowe, curſed the tirant to his face. But he to mitigate ths rage of his mother, at her requeſt being deſirous to be reuenged vpon the executour of her ſonnes death, deliuered the ſaid Moſes bound into her hands, who then in the preſence of the tirant, thruſt him to the hart with a knife, and opening his ſide, tooke out his liuer, and threw it to the dogges to be deuoured.

The tyranny of Mahumets in murthering hys brethren.

The third ſonne called Calepinus, which was but ſixe moneths old, the foreſaid Amurathes his father commended to the cuſtody of Halibaſſa one of his Nobles, who to gratifie and pleaſe yͤ tirant, betraied the infant, & brought him vnto him, and thereupon he at the tirants commandement was ſtrangled. Some affirme, that in the ſtead of Calepinus, another child was offered vnto the tirant, and that Calepinus was conueied to Conſtantinople, and after the taking of Conſtantinople, was caried to Venice, and then to Rome to Pope Calixt, where he was baptiſed, and afterward came into Germany to Fridericke the Emperour, and there was honorably enterteined, & kept in Auſtrich during his life. where note how the mercifull prouidence of God, whom he liſt to ſaue, can fetch out of yͤ diuels mouth. And note moreouer touching the foreſayde Halibaſſa the betraier of yͤ infant, how he eſcaped not vnreuẽged: For Mahumet vnderſtanding him to be a man of great ſubſtance and richeſſe, thorough forging of falſe crimes, with great torments put him to death to haue his richeſſe: for this tirant was geuen to inſatiable auarice. Thus this bloudy Mahumete began his regiment with horrible murther, after yͤ example of other curſed tirants his predeceſſours.

Horrible paricide of the abhominable turke

Gods prouidẽce can fetch out of the deuils mouth whom he liſt to ſaue.

Note here gods puniſhment vpon the betraer of innocent bloud.

Although this Mahumete, notwithſtandyng that hee came of a Chriſten mother, being the daughter of Deſpota prince of Seruia, and by her was brought vp and inſtructed from his childhood in the precepts of Chriſtian religiõ and maners, yet he ſoone forgetting all, gaue himſelfe to Mahumetes religion, and yet ſo, that he being addicted to neyther Religion, became an Atheiſt, beleeuing and worſhipping no God at all, but onely the Goddeſſe of good Fortune, irriding and mocking yͤ mindes and iudgemẽts of men, which beleue that God by his prouidence, gouerneth and regardeth the ſtate of humaine things on earth.

After that this Mahumete heard of the victories and conqueſts of other his predeceſſours, and had vnderſtanding how Baiazetes lay eight yeares about Conſtantinople, and could not winne it: he diſpraiſing Baiazetes, and diſdaining that ſo long time ſhould be ſpent aboute the ſiege thereof, and yet no victory gotten, bent all hys ſtudie and deuice how to ſubdue the ſame. But firſt hauing a priuie hatred againſt the Citie of Athens, and hauing his hands lately embrued with the bloud of his brethren, this murthering Mahumete firſt of all taketh his viage to ſubuert and deſtroy the Citie aforeſaid, being a famous Schoole of all good learning and diſcipline. Againſt the which Citie he did ſo furiouſly rage for the hatred of good letters, that he thought he ought not to ſuffer the foundation thereof to ſtand, becauſe that Citie was a good nurſſe and foſterer of good Artes and Sciences: wherefore, he commaunded the Citie to be raſed, and vtterly ſubuerted: and whereſoeuer any monuments or bookes could be found, he cauſed them to be caſt into durty ſinkes, and the filthieſt places of the Citie, or put to the moſt vile vſes that could be deuiſed, for extirping and aboliſhing of all good literature, and if he vnderſtood any to lament the caſe and ruine of that noble place, thoſe he greeuouſly puniſhed and put to death.

Athens deſtroyed.

Thus the famous and auncient Schoole of Athens being deſtroied and ouerthrowne, he returned his army & power into Thracia, where in all haſte he gathering hys power together both by ſea & by lãd, with a mighty multitude compaſſed the Citie of Conſtantinople about, and began to lay his ſiege againſt it, in the yeare of our Lord 1453. and in the 54. day of the ſaid ſiege it was taken, ſacked, and the Emperour Cõſtantinus ſlaine. As touching the cruelty and fearcenes of the Turkes in getting of this City, and what ſlaughter there was of men, women, and children, what calamitie and miſery was there to be ſene, forſomuch as ſufficient relation, with a full deſcription thereof, hath bene made before, pag. 708. it ſhall be ſuperfluous now to repeate the ſame. This only is not to be omitted touching three principall cauſes of the ouerthrow of this City: whereof was the firſt the filthy auarice of thoſe Citizens, which hiding their treaſures in the groũd, would not imploy the ſame to yͤ neceſſary defence of their City. For ſo I finde it in ſtory expreſſed, that when the Turke, after the taking of yͤ City, had found not ſo much treaſure as he looked for, ſuſpecting with himſelfe (as the truth was) the treaſures and riches to be hidden vnder the ground, commaunded the earth to be digged vp, and the foundations of the houſes to be ſearched: where when he had found treaſures incredible, what (quoth he) how could it be that this place could euer lacke munition and fortification, which did flow and abound with ſuch great riches as heere is, and plenty of all things? The ſecond cauſe was the abſence of the Nauy of the Venetiãs, which if they had bene ready in time, might haue bene a ſafegard againſt the inuaſion of the enemies. A third cauſe alſo may be gathered vpon occaſion incident in ſtories, either for that the City of Conſtantinople fifteene yeares before did yeeld to the Biſhop of Rome, as is before to be ſeene, pag. 76. or elſe becauſe (as in ſome writers it is euident) that Images were there receaued & mainteined in their Churches, and by the Turkes the ſame time deſtroyed.

Ex Ioanne Ramo lib. 1. rerum Turcicarum.

Vid. ſupra. pag. 67.

Ioannes Ramus writing of the deſtructiõ of this Citie, amongſt other matters maketh relation of the Image of the Crucifixe, being there in yͤ high temple of Sophia: which Image the Turke tooke, and writing this ſuperſcription vpon the head of it Hic eſt Chriſtianorum Deus. i. This is the God of the Chriſtians, gaue it to his ſouldiours to be ſcorned, and commaunding the ſayde Image with a trumpet to be carried through all his army, made euery man to ſpit at it moſt contumeliouſly. wherin thou haſt (good Reader) by the way to note, what occaſion of ſclaunder and offence we Chriſtians geue vnto the barbarous Infidels by this our vngodly ſuperſtition, in hauing Images in our temples, contrary vnto the expreſſe commandement of God in his word. For if Saint Paule writing to the Corinthians, ſaith: we knowe Chriſt now no more after the fleſh: how much leſſe then is Chriſt to be knowne of vs in blind ſtockes and Images ſet vp in our Temples, ſeruing for none other purpoſe, but for the Infidels to laugh both vs & our God to ſcorne, and to prouoke Gods vengeance? which by yͤ like example (I feare) may alſo fall vpon other Cities, where ſuch Images and Idolatrous ſuperſtition is mainteined, whereof God graunt Vienna to take heede betime, which hath bene ſo long, and yet is in ſuch great danger of the Turke, and polluted with ſo many Images, and plaine Idolatrie.

In ſumma, to make the ſtory ſhort, ſuch was the cruelty of theſe Turkes in winning the Citie, that when Mahumete had geuen licence to the ſouldiours three dayes together, to ſpoile, to kill and to do whatſoeuer they liſted,

The cruell murther by the turkes in rhe citie of Conſtantinople.

there was no corner in all Conſtantinople, which did not either flow with Chriſtian bloud, or elſe was polluted wᵗ abhominable abuſing of maids, wiues & matrones, without al reuerēce of nature. Of the which Citizēs, ſome they murthered, ſome they roſted vpon ſpits, of ſome they fleyed of their ſkin, hanging thē vp to conſume with famine, of otherſome they put ſalt into their woūds, the more terribly to torment them, inſomuch, that one of them contended with another who could deuiſe moſt ſtrange kinds of new torments and puniſhments, exerciſing ſuch crueltie vpon them, that the place where the Citie was before, ſeemed now to be no citie, but a ſlaughter houſe or ſhambles of Chriſtian mens bodies. Amōg the dead bodies, the body alſo of Conſtantine the Emperour was found: whoſe head being brought to Mahumete, he commaunded to be caried vpon a ſpeare through the whole City for a publike ſpectacle & deriſion to all the Turkiſh army. And becauſe he would diminiſh the number of the captiues, which ſeemed to him to be very great, he neuer roſe from his table, but he put euery day ſome of the nobles to death, no leſſe to fill his cruell minde with bloud, then his body was filled with wine: which he vſed ſo long to do as any of the nobles of that Citie was left aliue: And of the other ſorte alſo, as the ſtories do credibly report, there paſſed no day, in the which he did not orderly ſlay more then three hundreth perſons, the reſidue he gaue to his raſcal ſouldiours to kill, and to do with them what they would. Where is to be noted, that as Conſtantinus the ſonne of Helena, was the firſt Emperour of Conſtantinople, ſo Conſtantinus the ſonne alſo of Helena, was the laſt Emperour thereof.

A lamentable deſtruction of the Citie of Conſtantinople.

The bloudie cruelty of the turk againſt the Chriſtian captiues.

Not farre from the ſaid Citie of Conſtantinople, there was another little City called Pera, & once called Gallatia, ſituated by the Sea ſide: who hearing of the miſerable deſtruction of Conſtantinople, and ſeing the City flaming with fire, ſent certain of their chiefmē with ſpeed to Mahumete, declaring vnto him that they neither had ſent any helpe to the City of Conſtantinople, neither yet wrought any detrimēt to any of his army: wherefore they deſired & praied him, that as they would gladly yeeld vnto him, ſo he would be fauourable vnto thē and ſpare them, & not to puniſh the giltles with the gilty. Mahumete, although he was not ignoraunt that for feare, rather then of any good will, they ſubmitted themſelues, and that they would rather reſiſt him if they had ben able, yet he receiued for that time, the ſubmiſſion of the meſſengers: but ſending wyth them his Embaſſadour into the Citie, he commanded alſo his army to follow withall, and to enter with him into the City, which, although it was greatly ſuſpected & miſliked of yᵉ Citizens, yet they durſt no otherwiſe do, but ſuffer them to enter: which beeing done, the Embaſſadour gaue a ſigne to yᵉ ſouldiours, euery man to do whatſoeuer he was bidden, of whom, ſome ranne to the walles, ſome to the temples and Churches, ſome to yᵉ ſtreetes & houſes of the City, plucking all things downe to yᵉ grounde, ſacking and rauging with no leſſe fury and abhominable filthines, then they had done at Cōſtantinople before, ſauing only that they abſteined frō murther: but the ſame day letters came from Mahumete to the Embaſſadour, that he ſhould ſpare none, but deſtroy and murther all that euer were in the Citie: which meſſage, becauſe it ſeemed to the Embaſſadour to be too cruell, forſomuch as they had yeelded thēſelues, he ſtaied his hand a little vntill night came. In the meane time drunken Mahumete comming ſomething to himſelfe (whome drunkennes had before ouercome) ſent his ſecond letters to reuoke the firſt. Where againe is to be noted the mercifull prouidence of God towardes his people in their deſerued plagues, by ſtaieng the handes, and brideling the fury many times of their enemies, when otherwiſe the caſe ſeemeth to be paſt all remedy.

The ſiege of Belgradum in Hungary.

Ioan. Huniades.

Mahumete thus beeing in himſelfe not a little aduanced and eleuated by the winning of Cōſtantinople, where he had now made the Imperiall ſeat of the Turkiſh dominion, the third yeare next folowing, to aduēture more maſteries, he ſet out to yᵉ ſiege of Belgradum, a City of Hungary, lieng neare to the bankes of Danubius, thinking to haue the like ſucceſſe there, as he had in the winning of Conſtantinople, albeit through the Lords diſpoſing, it fel out much otherwiſe. Within the Citie of Belgradum the ſame time of the ſiege thereof, was Ioannes Huniades the valiant Captaine, of whom in diuers places mentiō hath bene made before, who with a ſufficient ſtrength of piked ſouldiours, albeit in number nothing equal to the Turks army, valiātly defended the City with great courage, and no leſſe ſucceſſe. In the which ſiege great diligēce was beſtowed, and many of the Turkes ſlaine. Amōg whom alſo Mahumete himſelfe, being ſtroken with a pellet vnder the left arme, was faine to be caried out of yᵉ field for halfe dead, and the reſt ſo put to flight, that of the Turkes the ſame time were deſtroyed to the number, or not much vnder the number of 40. thouſād, beſides the loſſe of all their ordinaunce, which the Turkes in haſt of their flight, were forced to leaue behinde them.

40000. turkes ſlain at the ſiege of Belgradum.

Ex Hier. Zieglero, in lib. de illuſtrib. Viris Germa. ca. 98.

Hieronymus Zieglerus writyng of the ſiege of this Belgradum, addeth moreouer, that whē Mahumete was at the ſiege therof, ſeyng the towne to be ſo ſmall & weake of it ſelfe, that it could not be won with all his great multitude, he ſtaryng and faryng like a mad man, commaunded all his braſen peeces to be layd, to battare downe the walles and Towers of the Towne: So that the Chriſtians within the walles were vehemently diſtreſſed, for the ſiege continued both night and day without intermiſſion. Amōg yᵉ reſt of the Chriſtians which defended the towne. Hieronymus Zieglerus maketh mentiō of a certaine Bohemian, much worthy of his condigne cōmendation: who beyng vpon the walles, and ſeyng a Turke with a bāner or enſigne of the Turkes to be gottē vp, by the ſight wherof the whole Towne was in daunger to be cōquered and taken, runneth vnto the Turke, and claſpyng him about the middle, ſpeakyng to Iohn Capiſtranus ſtandyng by low, aſking him, whether it were any daunger of damnation to him, if he of his voluntary mynde, did caſt himſelfe with that dogge (ſo he termed him) downe headlong from the wall, to be ſlayne with him: what ſhould become of his ſoule, and whether he might be ſaued or not. To whō when the other had aunſwered that hee ſhould be ſaued without doubt, hee eftſoones tombleth him ſelfe with the Turke, downe of the wall, where by his death he ſaued the ſame tyme, the lyfe of all the Citie: Mahumete beyng ſo wounded and in diſpayre of wynnyng the Citie, was caryed (as ye heard) out of the field. Who at length commyng agayne to himſelfe, partly for feare and partly for ſhame, was ready to kill himſelfe. And thus was yᵉ towne of Belgradum at that tyme reſcued through Gods prouidence, by the meanes of Ioannes Hunianes and this good Bohemian.

Of whom more then 40. thouſand (as is aforeſayd) were ſlayne: where the victory fell to the Chriſtians through the proſperous ſucceſſe geuen of God to Ioannes Huniades, & Capiſtranus. Which Huniades not long after the ſayd victory, through the importune labour and trauaile in defendyng the ſayd towne, was taken with a ſore ſickeneſſe and thereof departed, to whoſe valiaunt prowes and ſingular courage, ſtories doe geue great laud and commendation.

200. thouſand turkes at the ſiege of Belgradum.

The deceaſe of Ioannes Huniades.

Mahumetes the Turke after this done in Europe, returned into Aſia to warre, with Vſumcaſſanes a Perſian, one of the Turkes ſtocke with whō he had three battailes. The firſt was about the Riuer Euphrates, where the Turke loſt 10. thouſand men, and was put to the worſe. In the ſecond field likewiſe he was diſcomfited. The third battaile was at Arſēga, where through the terrible noyſe of the braſen peeces, the Perſian horſes diſturbed the cāpe, and ſo was Vſumcaſſanes ouercome.

The turkes war againſt Vſumcaſſanos.

From thence the Turke reduced agayne his power againſt the Chriſtians, and firſt ſubdued vnto him Synope and all Paphlagonia: Alſo the kingdome of Trapezunce, which he beſiegyng both by land and water, wanne from the Chriſtians, and ſent Dauid the kyng of the ſame with his two ſonnes and Calus his vncle, vnto Conſtantinople, where they were miſerably and cruelly put to death, & all the ſtocke of the Conneni, which were of the kynges ſtocke, by the Turke were deſtroyed. Whiche was about the yeare of our Lord. 1459. at which tyme this miſchienous Mahumete was firſt ſaluted Emperour.

Synope, Paphlagonia, Trapezuntus gotten of the turkes.

Dauid Emperour of Trapezuntus with hys two ſonnes and vncle cruelly killed of the turke.

Not long after, he got from the Grecians Corinthus and Mitylene, not without great ſlaughter of Chriſten men: in ſomuch that the whole Citie of Mitylene was vtterly to the grounde almoſt deſtroyed. The Iſles alſo of Lemnus & Leſbos he wanne from the Venetians: In the which Iſlād of Leſbos is the Citie of Mitylene aforeſayd.

Corinthus, Mitylene, Leſbos, Lemnous ſubdued of the turke.

Not farre frō this Iſle of Leſbos and Mitylene, there is a countrey in Aſia toward the ſea ſide borderyng next to Europe, called Myſia, or of ſome called Mœſia, wherein ſtode the Citie of Troye. This countrey Mahumete coueting to wynne rather by policie & falſhode, then by doubtfull daunger of warre, ſecretly ſent for the Prince therof to come to ſpeake with him for certaine cauſes (as he pretended) which ſhould concerne the profite and commoditie of thē both. Which when the king of Myſia, either for ſhame would not, or for feare durſt not denye, he came to him as to conferre vpon neceſſary affaires in commō to them appertaining. Mahumete when he had brought that to paſſe which he would, he cauſed the king to be apprehended, and cruelly to be ſlaine, or rather torne in peeces: and ſo inuading the land of Miſia, exerciſed the like tyrannie vpō all his kindred and affinitie.

This Miſia by fraude being taken and loſt, Mahumete flieth againe toward Europe, where he aſſailed the Iland Euboia, otherwiſe called Nigroponte, making a bridge of a maruellous frame ouer the ſea Euripus, to conuey ouer his army out of Grecia, and there laide his ſiege to the Citie Chalcis, which at length in thirty dayes he ouercame, not without a great ſlaughter of his army: who in yͤ ſiege thereof is ſaid to haue loſt 40. thouſand of yͤ Turkes. But yͤ ſlaughter of the Chriſtians was greater: for when the City was won, the tirant commanded moſt cruelly, none to be ſpared within the whole citie, but to be put to the ſword, whoſoeuer was aboue the age of twenty yeares. This cruelty was ſhewed of yͤ barbarous Tirant for anger and fury, becauſe ſuch a number of his Turkes were ſlaine at the ſiege therof, being reckned (as is ſaid) to 40. thouſand. In the fierce ſiege of this Citie, it is memorable that is in ſtories recorded, how that the women of that Citie, ſeeing the men to begin to faint, and the Citie to lie in preſent danger, tooke the matter themſelues in hand, and plaieng the men, went to the walles, and there defended the Citie with no leſſe trouble to the enemie, then the men had before done, and ſo for a ſpace continued, ſo long as any mans ſtrength and diligence could do anie good. A great cauſe of the loſſe of this Citie and Iland, is imputed to the cowardly timidity of the Venetians nauy: who being there preſent, and hauing proſperous winde, yet durſt not, or would not aduenture vpon the Turkes bridge, which if they had done, the Iland of Euboia and Chalcis, had not ſo ſoone bin ouermatched of the Turks.

Thus all the Eaſt partes of Grecia being ſubdued to yͤ Turkiſh tiraunt, with all Achaia, Attica, Acarnania, & Euboia, ſhortly after folowed alſo Peloponeſus, brought in like ſubiection to the Turke. within this Peloponeſus were theſe prouinces conteined, Achaia, Meſſenia, Laconia, Argolica, and Archadia, &c. The Venetiās in this Peloponeſus had great poſſeſſions, and had made vp the wall againe toward the Sea ſide, neare to the ſtreites of Corinth before mentioned, where for the more ſpeede of the worke, they had 30. thouſand workemen to the building thereof, which when it came to the knowledge of the Turke, he braſt into the countrey of Peloponeſus wyth an army of 80. thouſand, and firſt waſting the regions of the Coroneans, and Methoneans, and making a greate ſlaughter of the Venetians, in ſhort time he brought the whole dominiō of Peloponeſus vnder his yoke & tribute.

Peloponeſus, Achaia, Meſſenia, Laconia, Argolica, Archadia, Chriſten prouinces in Grecia, ſubdued of the turke.

Long it is and more lamentable to recite all the victories of this Mahumete gotten againſt the Chriſtiās both by land & ſea: who after he had ouercome the Iſle Leſbos aboue mentioned, and had cruelly ſlaine Nicolaus Cataluſius the Prince thereof, turning his army towarde the ſea of Pontus Euxinus, got the countrey of Capha from the Genuans. Before was declared how truce was taken betweene Georgius Scanderbeius, and the Turke for ten yeares: which truce being expired, Mahumete leaueth no time vnſpēt, no diligence vnſought, but maketh all his power to Epyrus & Albania, which he after long fatigation of ſiege, at length ouercame and ſubdued. In yͤ which tract alſo he wanne from the Venetians, Scodra, Lyſſon and Dinaſtrum. Notwithſtanding, when Scanderbeius the valiant Captaine had done againſt the Turke what in mans ſtrength did lie, yet being ouermatched with power and multitude, ſeeing no poſſibilitie to make his partie good, was forced to depart his countrey as an exile, and went to Italy, & there being ſent for by yͤ Popes letters, openly declared not to be poſſible otherwiſe to reſiſt yͤ furious rage of the barbarous Turkes by the ſtrength of any one king or prince, vnleſſe all Europe, with one cōſent ſhuld ioine their power & force together. And thus Georgius Scanderbeius, a man of puiſſant courage, being driuen out of his countrey, continued his age in exile. whoſe courage & vehemency is reported to haue bin ſuch, that in fighting againſt yͤ barbarous enemie, for very egernes of ſpirit, his blond was ſeene to burſt out of his lippes. It is teſtified alſo of him, that being prouoked, he neither denied to fight, and in his fighting, neuer turned his backe, neyther yet was euer wounded, but onely once with a lyght ſhaft in his foote, neither euer ſet againſt the Turke wyth moe then 6000. horſemen, and 3000. footemen: who is ſaid with his owne hand to haue ſlaine aboue 2000. Turkes, whome with ſuch violence he did ſtrike, that many of thē he did cleaue aſunder from the head to the middle.

Neither yet was the vnſatiable greedines of thys Turkiſh helhound with all this ſatiſfied, but ſtill he conceiued greater things in his minde, thynking to conquere the whole world, and ſo paſſing forward towards Europe, ſubdued all Illiria, ſlaieng Stephanus the King of Boſna, about the yeare of our Lord 1463. But afterwarde Mathias Coruinus, the ſonne of Huniades afore mentioned, recouered againe the ſaid kingdome of Boſna, with many other Cities neare vnto Croacia and Dalmatia, and moreouer repulſed Mahumete the Turke in his ſecond ſiege of Iaiza, taking his tents and munitions lefte behinde him.

Mathias the ſonne of Huniades.

Moreouer, the ſayd Mahumete paſſing vnto walachia, ſet vpon Dracula the Prince thereof, by which Dracula, although he had no great power of ſouldiours, yet he ſo incloſed & enuironed yͤ Turke, that he had almoſt loſt his whole army, of whom a great part notwithſtanding was deſtroied, and many of his enſignes taken. Into Dalmatia was ſent two Captaines of the Turke, who fighting againſt the prouinces of yͤ Venetians, made great ſpoyle and waſte about yͤ regions of Stiria & Carinthia: where alſo the Venetian power was diſcomfited, & Hieronimus Nouell their Captaine ſlaine. At length truce was taken betweene yͤ Turke & the Venetians, vpon this conditiō, that Scodra, Tenarus, & Lemnus ſhould be yeelded vnto him, and that they ſhoulde pay to him yearely 8. thouſand duckets for the free paſſage of their Marchants.

Stiria, Carinthia, taken of the turke.

After this peace concluded with the Venetians, Mahumete himſelfe ſaileth ouer into Aſia, ſending two of his great captaines abroad to ſundry places: of whom, Meſithes was ſent againſt yͤ Rhodes wͭ a mighty nauie. The other called Acomates Baſſa was ſent into Italy to take Rome and all the weſt Empire. Concerning the viage of which two Captaines, this was the euent, that Meſithes after his great trauaile and bloudy ſiege againſt yͤ Rhodians, was faine to retire at length with great ſhame and loſſe. The other Captaine Acomates (as is ſaid) was ſent into Italy, with a nauie of a hundreth Ships, and fifteene thouſand men, who by the way in his ſailing got Lencadia (which now they call S. Maure) Cephalenia, and Zacynthus, and ſayling by Fauelona, arriued in Apulia, and ſo paſſing along by the ſea ſide, ſpoiled and waſted diuers parts by the coaſt, till at length he came to Hidruntum, a City of Calabria in Italy, which after long ſiege he ouercame and ſubdued, and brought ſuch a terrour into all Italy, that the Pope forgetting all other things, yet mindfull of himſelfe, with all haſte fled out of Rome. After the Citie of Hydruntum was taken, and the Turkes placed in the ſame, which was the yeare of our Lord 1481. Mathias Coruinus Huniades ſon was ſent for by the Italians, to ſet vpon the ſaid Citie: vnto the reſcue whereof, when Acomates was about to make his returne with 25. thouſand Turkes, in the meane time newes came yͤ Mahumete the great Turke was dead, by reaſon wherof the ſiege brake vp, and yͤ Citie was deliuered to the Italians againe, and ſo was Italy deliuered at that time out of that preſent perill and daūger. This Mahumete wanne from the Chriſtians 200. Cities, and twelue kingdomes, and two Empires, which he ioined both together. He died in the yeare aboueſayd, anno. 1481.

¶ Baiazetes ſecond, the 10. after Ottomannus.

MAhumetes aforeſaid had three ſonnes, of the which, Muſtapha the eldeſt, through voluptuouſnes & carnall luſt, died before his father. The other two were Baiazetes and Demes, otherwiſe called Zizimus. Aboute whom, great cōtrouerſie aroſe amongſt the Turks which of them ſhould ſucceede in their fathers kingdome: For neither of them was preſent at Conſtantinople whē Mahumetes died, Baiazetes being in Cappadocia, & Demes in Lycaonia, wherfore when great diſſention was amōg the nobles for the ſucceſſion, and great ſtrife & bloudſhead for the matter, the Ianizarites, which were the Turkes garde, did proclaime Baiazetes Emperour: others in the abſence of Baiazetes the father, did chooſe Corcuthus his ſonne. Baiazetes the father cōming at length from Cappadocia, partly through yelding, partly by corrupting wͭ money, got yͤ wils of the Ianizarites, & was made Emperour. Demes the other brother being in Lycaonia more neare, although he made no leſſe ſpeede in his cōming, yet was preuented of Baiazetes, and excluded out of Cōſtantinople. wherfore he being put backe from all hope of his kingdome, incited by ſome of his frends, moued warre againſt his brother, who being ouercome in three battailes by Acomates Baiazetes Captain, who had got Hydruntum before, did flie to the greate Maiſter of the Rhodes, leauing in a place called Carræ, his mother, and two yong children,

This Demes being wyth the maiſter of the Rhodes, was deſired firſt of Pope Innocent the 4. then of Ludouicus the 2. Frenche king, but eſpecially of Mathias Coruinus, king of Hungarie, entending by him to obtaine great victory againſt Baiazetes. But in concluſion the Knights of the Rhodes ſent him to the B. of Rome, where he being kept, and afterwardes ſent to Charles the 8. French king, for an hoſtage of Pope Alexander the 6. was poyſoned by the way at Terracina, by the ſayde Pope Alexander, as is before declared. After whoſe death Baiazetes, to requite the foreſayde Acomates for his good ſeruice, put hym to the halter, partly miſdoubting his power, partly for lucre ſake to haue his treaſure: whoſe death redounded to the great profit of the chriſtians, for ſomuch as he was euer an vtter enemy to the religion and name of Chriſt.

Lithoſtomus, Moncaſtrum, Chriſtian fortes ſubdued of the turke.

The turke ouerthrowen at Tarſus.

Baiazetes thus being confirmed in his tyrannie, made hys firſt expedition againſt walachia, where hee ſubdued two great fortes, one called Lithoſtomus, the other called Moncaſtrum. From thence he remoued hys power, taking his voiage into Aſia, thinking to be reuenged of the Sultane of Egypt, which had ſuccoured and entertayned before hys brother Demes againſt hym, where he loſt two great battailes, the one fought at Adena, the other at Tarſus: but ſpecially at the fielde at Tarſus the armye of the Turke tooke ſuch a wound, that of a 100. M. brought into the fielde, ſcarſe the thirde part remained vnſlayne. But as touching the Rhodians, although they were ſuccourers of Demes aforeſayde, yet Baiazetes (whether for feare, or for ſubtilty) abſtained to prouoke them with warre, but rather entred with them the league of peace, requiring the maſter of the Rhodes to kepe hys brother ſafe vnder his cuſtody, promiſing for his yerely ſalary, to be paied vnto him euery yere in the moneth of Auguſt. 45000. duckets, Dyrachium taken of the turke.

Thus Baiezetes being ouerthrown and terrified with euill lucke fighting againſt the Sultane of Egypt, remoued from Aſia, and directed his army into Europe, where he got Dyrrachium neare vnto Velona, & had a great victory ouer the Chriſtian armye in the countrey of Croatia, wher the Illyrians, Pannonians and Croatians ioyning their power together, encountred with the Turke and loſt the field, about the yeare of our Lord. 1493.

The turke againſt the Venetians.

The Chriſtians caryed away captiues.

From thence the Turke leading his armye againſt the Venetians, had with them diuers and doubtfull conflicts, where the Turke ſometimes was put to the worſe, and ſometimes againe preuailing, out of Iadra and diuers other cities about Dalmatia, caried away great multitudes of Chriſtians into captiuitie, whych was about the yere of our Lord. 1498.

Peloponeſus agayne inuaded by the turke.

Methone taken of the turkes, and miſerably deſtroyed.

Coron, Pilus, Criſſeū yelded to the turkes.

Two yeares after thys, whych was the yeare of oure Lorde. 1500. Baiazetes with 150. M. armed men, entred into Peloponeſus, whych although Mahumete had expugned before, yet the Venetians had defended Methone, otherwiſe called Modon, all this while againſt the Turks. which Methone the Turke beſieged wyth three armies, hauing about the wals 500. great braſen Canons, wherof 22. were moſt violent and hurtfull, wherewith he battered the City both day and night: but the Citizens, which were wythin the Citie, committing themſelues to God, defended their Citie as well as they could, rather chuſing to dye then to yeelde vnto the Turkes tyrannie. But the Turcke preuailing, and they not able to wythſtande the ſiege, the Chriſtians conuented together into a certaine houſe prepared for the purpoſe, bothe menne, women, and children, where they ſetting the houſe on fire, gaue themſelues rather to be burned, then to come into the tyrauntes handes. Certaine women alſo wyth their children, caſt themſelues headlong into the ſea, by that meanes to auoid the turkiſhe captiuitie. Some wryters there be which affirme that the Methonians, ſeeing 5. great ſhyps of the Venetians comming with men and vitailes towarde them, iſſued downe from the walles to the ſea ſide to receiue them, which were all taken captiues, being aboue the number of a thouſand: which al being tied with long ropes, were brought before the tyraunt, and in his ſight were cruelly ſlaine, except certaine Nobles whom Cherſeugles, ſonne in lawe to Baiazetes, got to be pardoned, amongſt whome was Andreas Gritto. The Citie of Coron, & alſo Pilus Cities in Grece being terrified with the example of the Methonians, yeelded themſelues to the power of the turks. Criſſeum otherwiſe called Caput Sancti Galli, was expugned by Cherſcogles, by force of gunnes.

Chephalenia, Leucas, Nericus Ilandes recouered of the turkes by the Venetiās.

These thynges thus atchieued, although Baiazetes went away victor vnto Conſtantinople, yet notwithſtanding the Venetians, through the helpe of the kynges of Fraunce and Spayne, had wonne from the Turke Chephalenia an Ilande very commodious for theyr trafficke: Alſo had gotten other two Ilandes, Leucas and Nericus otherwiſe called Sancta Maura, ſlaying al the garriſon of the Turkes. But afterwarde peace being taken betweene the Venetians and the Turckes, by the counſaile of Andreas Gitto aforeſayde, the Turkes ſo agreed, that Leucas and Nericus the Ilandes aboueſayde, ſhould be rendred vnto the Turke, and the Venetians ſhould keepe ſtil the poſſeſſion of Chephalenia.

Truce betwene the Venetians & the turke.

Warre betwene Sophus and Baiazetes.

Caragius the turkes captayne taken priſoner & ſlaine of Sophus

Halibaſſa the turkes captayne ſlaine.

Unto this league the Turke did the rather condeſcend, for that hee had to maintaine warre agaynſt Iſmaell Sophus in Aſia, king of Perſia: which Sophus was ſtirred vp by Gods prouidence to warre wͭ thys Baiazetes, wher by the Chriſtian Churches in Europe myght haue ſome breathing time, and freedome from the Turkes cruell tyranny & bloudſhed. This Sophus was a valiant Turke, who with great power & victories had ouerrunne a great compaſſe of the Eaſt partes of Aſia: then paſſing from Aſiria into Media, and returning againe into Armenia, hee made warre againſt the Albanians, Hiberians, and Scythians, and from thence comming vnto Aſia Minor, encountred with Corcuthus Baiazetes ſonne, and afterward cōming to Bithynia, fought with Caragius Baſſa, Baiazetes Captaine, whome he ouercame and put to flight, and afterward tooke him aliue and his wife priſonners. Afterward he was encountered by Halibaſſa an other captaine of the Turkes, whome Techelles one of the ſayd Sophus captaines meeting in the plaine of Galatia did withſtand, and ſo by the way ſlue Caragius the Captain, and hanged hym vppon a poale in the ſight of Halibaſſa, which Halibaſſa ſhortly after was ſlaine in warre, and hys army ſcattered and put to flight.

Reſt geuen to the Chriſtians by the diſcorde of the turkes.

Thus through the admirable example of Gods iuſtice and prouidence, were theſe turks kept occupied, & ſo came it to paſſe, yͤ theſe Barbarians being blaſphemous againſt the ſonne of God, ſhoulde thus horribly runne one to the deſtruction of an other, being worthely puniſhed wͭ mutuall ſlaughter and bloudſhed for theyr impiety and blaſphemy againſt Chriſt and his religion, wherby in the meane time ſome reſt was geuen to the Chriſtians.

Zelymus made Emperour againſt his fathers will.

Baiazetes partly by theſe victories diſcouraged, partly diſeaſed and languiſhing of the goute, and partly alſo broken with age, finding himſelfe vnweldy to the regiment of that tumultuous kingdome, began to haue talke with his nobles about the chuſing of one to ſuccede him. The occaſion whereof miniſtred much matter of inward warres amongſt the Turkes. This Baiazetes had in all 6. ſonnes, wherof three died before him, and three yet were left aliue, to witte, Acomates, Corcuthus and Zilymus, Baiazetes himſelfe had moſte minde to Acomates, but the chiefeſt of his nobles did fauor rather Zelymus: who through theyr traiterous incitation prouoked him to ſtirre warre againſt hys father; and notwythſtanding that he was ouercome in war, yet through interceſſion he was reconciled agayne to his father, and afterwarde proclaimed againe Emperor againſt his fathers will, through the helpe & fauour of the ſouldiours, entring the firſt beginning of hys kingdome, wͭ the murthering of hys owne father. The ſtorye whereof in ſome authors is thus declared.

What theſe Ianizarites were, read pag. 736.

The counſaile of Baiazetes to his ſonne Zelymus.

After that the Ianizarites had perſwaded wyth Baiazetes for that he himſelfe was vnweldy, therfore he ſhould do well to conſtitute ſome ſucceſſour, and that he had aſſigned Acomates to ſuccede him, yͤ Ianizarites being offended with the ſayd Acomates, becauſe he would not enlarge their ſtipends and bribe them, compaſſing about the kings pallace wyth their priuy ſwordes whych they hadde vnder theyr garments, wyth a mighty crie, required Zelymus to be appointed for their Emperor. Unto whom when Baiazetes had anſwered that he had aſſigned Acomates, they refuſed him becauſe he was fatte, groſſe, and vnable therunto: but needes would haue Zelymus, which was ſtoute and warlike, to be made Emperour: and withall drew out their ſwords, crying Zelymus, Zelymus. The Baiazetes geuing place to their fury, ſhewed himſelfe content to geue them Zelymus: whom the Ianizarites receiuing, brought him into the pallace: vnto whom Baiazetes his father geuing place, willed him not to be ſo haſty & furious in hys doings, but to be modeſt and take heede what hee dyd, and not to follow hys fury, but to geue place vnto time, whych reuealeth all thinges, and thinke hymſelfe to be a man ſubiect to dangers and ieoperdies as other men are; and thus ſpeaking, he reſigned hys Imperiall throne and ſeate vnto him, & went away all heauy, entring into a certaine order of their religion. wherupon folowed great exclamatiōs of the people ſaluting Zelymus as Emperor. who then taking the rule vpō him, begā wͭ great cruelty to gouern, deſtroying many of his nobles, ſuch as had ſtood againſt him ſonne with poyſon, ſome by other cruel meanes, & aduauncing his owne ſide with great honors and promotions.

Not long after that Zelymus was thus ſetled in hys kingdome, Baiazetes his father entending to ſee & proue howe he behaued himſelfe in his gouernment, firſt entred into the treaſure houſe, where he found all his riches to be ſcattered and gone. Afterwarde he came into hys armorie, where all the ſpoyles gotten by warre were likewiſe waſted: then entring into the Jewel houſe, where al his plate and gifts ſent from Kings and Princes were kept, whych likewiſe were diſpearſed & geuen away. At length he came into the ſtable, where alſo he ſeeing his principall horſes to be lacking, ſighing wyth himſelfe, and crying vengeaunce vpon him, he prepared himſelf with the reſidue of the treaſure which was remaining, to ſaile ouer into Natolia vnto his eldeſt ſonne, and paſſing by an Orchard neare to the ſea ſide, where he had appoynted to take ſhip, in the meane time whileſt the ſhippes were in furniſhing he ſate downe vnder a tree, & began to curſe his ſonne, and to axe vengeance vpon him, for that he had ſo deſpiſed his father & was become ſo impious a wretch.

The diſpleaſure of Baiazetes againſt his ſonne Zelymus.

Zelymus vnderſtāding of his fathers departure, came into the orchard where his father was, ſeeming to be very heauy, and much lamēting that hys father would ſo priuely depart and goe away, ſeeing that hee deſired not the gouernement of the Empire, but was contented onely wyth the title thereof. O father (ſayd he) do not thus priuely depart away: doe not procure this ſhame to your ſonne, who ſo tēderly loueth you. Let me haue but the name only: and be you the Emperor in dede. The ende of your natural life moſt paciently I ſhal expect, which I pray God may long cōtinue. And thus vſing many faire & flattering words to his father, he cōmanded a banket wᵗ many deinty iunkets, to be brought vnto him, but tempered and infected wᵗ poyſon. which, as ſoone as Baiazetes had begon to taſt of, and felt the ſtrēgth of the poyſon working in his body, he toke his laſt farewell of his ſonne, and going out of the citie accompanied with a great retinue of mē, yelling and crying out in the ſtreetes, in the middle of his iourney fell downe and miſerably died, in the yeare of our Lorde. 1512. Heere mayeſt thou ſee, good Reader, a curſed broode of thys Turkiſh generation, where ẏ father dieth in curſing the ſonne, and the ſonne raigneth by poyſoning his father.

The diſſembling wordes of Zelymus to his father

Zelymus the ſonne poyſoneth his father.

Zelymus the 11. after Ottomannus,

Zelymus the 11. after Ottomannus.

After ẏ thys wretched Zelymus had exerciſed hys barbarous cruelty vpon hys father, wᵗ like impietie he ſeeketh the deſtruction of hys brethren and their children, firſt beginning his murther wyth the fiue children hys Nephewes, which were the ſonnes of hys 3. brethren before departed. which done, then remained his other 2. brethren yet aliue, Acomates and Corchutus wyth theyr chyldren likewiſe to be deſtroyed. Of whome the one had 3. ſonnes, whom the father ſent to Zelymus his brother & their vncle, with faire and gentle wordes to entreat him to be good vnto their father, offering to him their ducty and ſeruice in all things, honoring him alſo as Emperor. But cruel Zelymus commaunded forthwith his ſaide Nephewes to be ſtrangled. The father hearing of the cruell murther of hys ſonnes, leauing houſe and home, went and hid hymſelfe in mountaines, where he liued for a ſpace with hearbes and wilde honie, but being bewrayed by one of hys men, was brought to Zelymus, and ſo was ſtrangled.

The crueltie of Zelymus againſt his father and his bretheren.

The crueltie of Zelymus againſt his couſins.

Chriſtophorus Richerius, wryting of theſe matters, ſeemeth ſome thing to differ from other ſtoryes, and ſayeth that Zelymus, after the death of hys brother Corchutus, came to Burſia, where hee, vnder the colour of making a great triumph, ordeined a feaſt for his frends and kinſfolk, wherunto were called eſpecially his nephewes: who then at the end of the feaſt calling his nephewes aſide (as vnder the pretēce of conferring with them ſecretly about hys neceſſary affaires) committed them to hys ſeruauntes to be ſtrangled and put to death. All this while Acomates hys brother, through the help & inſtruction of his mother, was kept out of the tyrants hands, till at length, after great labor and ſearch made how to get him, certain forged letters were caſt abroad, wherin was cōteined that Acomates, to reuenge the great impiety & ſubdue the tirāny of Zelimus his brother, ſhould ſhew himſelf abroad. which if he wold do, he ſhould find frends enough to take his part. Acomates circumuented with theſe ſubtill traines, partly for hope of reuengement, partly for deſire of ẏ Empire, ſhewed him ſelfe abroad with ſuch power and ſtrength as he had: who being ſet vpon incontinent by Zelymus hys brother, was ouercome in battaile, and falling from hys horſe, beyng a man corpulent and groſſe, and his horſe falling vpon him, was ſo ouerpreſſed and ſlaine.

Ex Chriſt. Richerio.

Zelymus the turke warreth againſt his brother.

Touching the death of thys Acomates, Munſterus ſomwhat differing from this narration, addeth moreouer, and ſayeth, that hee was not killed with the fall from hys horſe, but ſitting all diſmayed vpon a ſtone, and ſeeing no other remedy but death, deſired the Captaine, taking hys rings from his fingers, to deliuer the ſame to his brother, deſiring hym that he might not be put to any extreme cruelty of death, but that hee gently would ſuffer him to be let bloud in the bath, and ſo to die. But Zelymus being not ignoraunt of thys, ſuborneth priuy tormenters, who binding his hands behinde him, wᵗ their feete caſt hym downe vpon the ground, and ſo twiꝛting his necke with a coarde, did ſtrangle him. This Acomates had two ſonnes, who hearing of the death of their father, did flie for ſuccour, the one to Sophus in Perſia, and the other to the Sultane in Egypt.

The crueltie of Zelymus againſt his brother.

The two ſonnes of Acomates flie away from the tyrannie of Zelymus the turke.

By the meanes whereof, new occaſion of warre grew vnto Zelymus, whereby hee was kept in Aſia at home, to fight againſte the Perſians & Egyptians: ſo that throughe the Lordes prouidence, Chriſtendom by that meanes was deliuered from great daunger and perill of the Turkes tirannie: For otherwiſe, the Turke was wholy minded, wyth all his force and puiſſance, to inuade the Chriſtians, being in doubt whether firſt to beginne wyth Rhodes, or whether to aſſault Pannonia, or els to ſet vpon Italy, being then at great diſcorde within it ſelfe: but thys cauſe occupied the Turks mind otherwiſe, and kept him at home. Suche was then the prouidence of the Lorde for the ſafegard of hys people.

The prouidēce of God in ſtirring vp occaſions for his people.

wherfore, for ſomuch as the affaires and doings of this Turke were ſpent for the moſt part in the Turkiſh & heatheniſh countreys: it ſhal not be greatly neceſſary to trouble our chriſtian ſtories therwᵗ, but onely ſhal ſuffice to contracte them in a briefe ſumme, declaring ſuperficially what vnquietnes was amongſt them there, which coulde neuer be quiet, but euer working ſome miſchief either abroade, or at home. Amurathes the Turks nephewe aforeſaide, after he had obtained aide of Sophus the king of the Perſians, firſt inuaded Cappadocia: not long after whome folowed Iſmael, Sophus the Perſian king.

Warre betweene Zelymus and Sophus the Perſiā king.

By reaſon whereof a great battell was fought betwixt the Perſians and Zelymus in the fieldes of Armenia maior. In the which battaile Iſmael Sophus the Perſian Kyng was hurt on the ſhoulder with a pellet, and ſo being caryed out of the field, left the victory to Zelymus: who all be it had an army of 150. M. men, yet he in the ſame fielde loſt about 30000. of hys Turkes. which field was fought in the yere of our Lorde. 1514. Zelymus after thys victorie went to Tauricia the imperiall Citie of the Perſians, whiche he by yelding ſubdued.

"In thys meane time it happened that one Aladulus a king in Armenia the greater, was alſo a helper to Iſmael againſt the Turk, wherupon Zelymus the Turke taking great indignation, the next yere folowing, leauing ẏ Perſians, fought againſt the ſayd Aladulus, & in the end ouercame him, and afterward being found in a caue in a woode, was taken out and brought to Zelymus and ſo beheaded: whoſe hed being firſt caried about Aſia for a triumph, was afterward ſent to the Senate of Venice for a terrour vnto them. The eldeſt ſonne of Aladulus ſcaping the handes of his purſuers, fled into Egypt. This battaile thus fought and ended, Zelymus after he had deuided the kingdome of Aladulus into three prouinces, went to Lycaonia, & from thence to Europe, there to defend the Citie of Samandria, againſt the Chriſtians in Hungary. But the Hungarians being ſone repreſſed by Iuno Baſſa the Turkes captaine, great preparation began to be made by the Turks againſt the confines of Seruia bordering vpō Hungary: The terrour wherof ſtirred vp Maximilian the Emperour, and Ladiſlaus king of Hungarie, and Sigiſmundus Kyng of Polonie, to conſult together, and conioyne their power for defence of Chriſtendome. But through new incumberances incident, the turke leauing Europe, made haſte againe into Aſia, to renue againe his warres againſt the Perſians, who had made a vow not to geue ouer that warre before Iſmael was ouerthrowne.

The turke called away from the Chriſtians. A turkiſhe vowe,

But before he entred that warre, firſt he ſent hys meſſengers to the Sultane of Egypte, requiring hym not to entermedle in that warre, for this ſultane before had promiſed to aſſiſt the Perſians againſt the Turke. The name of the Sultane which reigned then in Egypt, was Campſon, ſet vp by the Mamaluci. Theſe Mamaluci were a certain order amongſt the Egyptians, much like to the Ianizarites about the Turke, being the childrē of chriſten men, and after denyeing Chriſt, were the cheſeſt doers in ẏ Sultanes court, and being growne into a great multitude, did degene-degenerat into a turkiſh barbarity, or rather became wors then Turkes. This Campſon vnto the meſſengers of the Turke gaue this aunſwere againe, that vnleſſe he woulde leaue of his warre againſt Iſmael, and reſtore the ſonne of Aladulus, otherwiſe he woulde not lay downe his armor.

Zelymus being incenſed not a little wyth this inſolent aunſwere of the Sultane, leauing all other warres aſide, with great celeritie aduanced hys power againſt the Sultane. which Sultan partly through the falſhode of his captaine Caierbeius, partly by the ſodeinneſſe of the Turkes comming, not farre from the citie of Damaſcus encoūtred with the turke, and there ouerthrowne from his horſe, being a fatte and groſe body, and falling vnder his horſe, and his horſe alſo falling vpon him, was quaſhed in peces and ſo died, which was the yere of our Lord. 1516.

Campſon ſlaine.

Mamalucie, of whome more then a M. in thys battaile were ſlaine, flyeng from thence to Memphis, ſet vp Tomoumbeius in ſtede of Campſon: whoſe captaine Gazelles was ouercome at the City of Gaza, & he afterward himſelfe driuen out of Memphis, where a great part of the Mamaluci were deſtroyed. Then Tomoumbeius flying ouer the floud Nilus, renued his army agayne: but in the ende was diſcomfited and chaſed into a mariſh, where hee was found ſtanding in the water vp to the chinne, and ſo being brought to Zelymus, was put to the rack and great tormentes, to make him confeſſe where Campſons treaſures were. But when he would not declare, he was caryed about the Towne with a halter about his necke, & hanged vp vpō a hie gibbet for a ſpectacle to all Egypt: which was the yeare of our Lorde. 1517. And thus were the two Sultanes in Egypt deſtroied with the Mamaluci, whych there had borne the rule in Egypt the ſpace of 243. yeares. The progenie of the whych Mamaluci remaining of the warres, the Turke commaunded in pryſon gates of Alexandria to be cut in peces. Zelymus frō thence, triumphing departed to Conſtantinople, entending to ſpend the reſt of his time in perſecuting the Chriſtians: But in that meane ſpace he was ſtroken with a cankerd ſore rotting inward, and died after hee had raigned 7. yeares like a beaſt, in the yeare of our Lord. 1520.

A worthy deſtruction of the Mamaluci forſaking their faith and religion. Note againe the prouidence of God. The death of Zelymus.

The raigne of this Turke was but ſhort in number of yeres: but in number of his murthers and cruel bloudſhed it might ſeme exceeding long: which liued more like a beaſt then a mā, for he neuer ſpared any of hys frends or kinred. His father firſt he poyſoned, his brethren and al his coſins he quelled, leauing none of all his kinred aliue. Moreouer his chief and principal captaines for ſmal occaſions he put to death, as Muſtapha, Calogere, Chendeme, Boſtāg hys ſonne in law, and Iunobaſſa.

The beaſtly crueltie of Zelymus againſt his kinred.

It is ſaid moreouer that he entended the poyſoning of his owne ſonne Solyman, ſending vnto him a ſhirt infected wͭ poiſon, becauſe he ſeemed ſomething freely to ſpeake againſt yͤ cruel demeanor of his father: But by the meanes of hys mother, the gifte being ſuſpected, was geuen to an other which was his Chamberlaine, who putting on the ſhirt, was ſtrucken with the poyſon therof, and therewith all died.

As touching thys Turke Zelymus, by the way heere may be noted how yͤ ſecret prouidēce of the Lord kept hym occupied wͭ hys Turkiſh warres at home, while that the reformation of chriſtian religion here in Europe the ſame time begō by Martin Luther, might the more quietly take ſome roting without diſturbance or interruption. For ſo it appeareth by the computation of time, that in the dayes of this Zelymus, Martin Luther firſt began to write againſt the Popes indulgences, which was in the yeare of oure Lord. 1516.

The cruelty of Zelymus againſt his ſonne Solyman.

Solymannus the 12. after Ottomannus.

SOlymannus the onely ſonne of Zelymus ſucceded after hys fathers death, who in the firſt beginning ſeemed to ſome to be ſimple and ſhepiſh, and not mete for the turkiſh gouernmēt. wherfore certain of his nobles cōſulting how to depoſe him, entended to ſet vp an other Emperour. In which conſpiracy, eſpecially are named Caierbeius & Gazelles. This Caierbeſius was he yͭ betraied before Campſon the Sultane of Egypt to Zelymus, as is aforeſayde: who nowe alſo being in conſultation wͭ Gazelles & other about this matter, detected thē alſo vnto Solyman. wherfore the ſayd Gazelles and his fellowes being thus detected, were put to death by Solyman, declaring thereby that he was not ſo ſhepiſh as he was thought of them to be, & as alſo by his acts afterward did more appeare.

A note of Gods prouidence for the reformation of religyon.

Solymānus the 12 after Ottomānus Read in the pag. 738.

Solymannus after thys execution done vpon the conſpiratours, taking his voiage into Europe, firſt beſieged Belgradum: which being a Citye in Hungarie, was the ſtrongeſt forte of all the Romaine Empire, and the chiefe defence at that time, of al chriſtendom, whith alſo being aſſaulted before time by Amurathes the 2. was valiantly defended by Ioannes Huniades as is aboue ſpecified. But here nowe lacked ſuche a one as Huniades was: For the kingdome of Hungary at that time, was vnder yͤ gouernment of Ludouicus a yong king, vnexpert and of a ſimple wit. whom other Princes, & ſpecially the couetous churchmen did ſo pil and pol, that they left hym nothing but only the bare name and title of his kingdom: wherby he being vnfurniſhed both of men and mony, was vnable to match with ſuch an enemie.

Belgradum againe beſieged of the turke.

Read before pag 743.

An other vauntage alſo the Turkes had in beſieging of Belgrade: For the Chriſtian princes at that time were in ciuill diſſention and variance amongſt themſelues: and the Pope with his Churchmen alſo were ſo buſye in ſuppreſſing of Luther, and of the Goſpell then newly ſpringing, that they minded nothing els, except it were to maintaine the welth of their own bellies. which pope if he had ſet his care (as his duety was) ſo muche in ſtirring vp Princes againſt the common enemy, as he was bent to deface yͤ goſpel, & to perſecute the true profeſſors therof: ſoone might he haue brought to paſſe, not only that Belgrade might haue bene defended againſt the Turk, but alſo yͭ to be recouered againe which was loſt before: and moreouer myght haue ſtopped the great dangers and perils which nowe are like to fall vpon the religion and church of Chriſt: whyche the Lord of his great mercy auert and turne away.

Diſcorde amongeſt Chriſtian princes what miſchiefe it bringeth.

Certeſſe what ſo euer the Pope then did, this had bene his duty, ſetting al other things apart, to haue had an earneſt compaſſiō of ſo many miſerable & loſt captiues, which were fallen from their faith & religion, vnto the miſery and ſlauery of the Turke, & thraldome of the deuil, and to haue ſought all means poſſible to haue reduced thē, as loſt ſhepe into the fold againe: which then might ſone haue ben done if prelates & princes ioyning together in chriſtian concord, had loued ſo well the publike glory of Chriſt and ſoules of Chriſtians, as they tendered their owne priuate, worldly, & friuolous quarels. And admit that the Pope had conceiued neuer ſo much malice againſt Luther, hys quarell alſo being good: yet the publike church ſtanding in ſuch danger, as it then did by the inuaſion of the Turke, reaſon woulde nature led, religion taught, time required that a good Prelate forgetting lighter matters, ſhuld rather haue laid hys ſhoulder to the excluding of ſo great a dāger, as then was imminent both to himſelfe, and the vniuerſall Churche of Chriſt: But nowe his quarel being vniuſt, and the cauſe of Luther being moſte iuſt and godly, what is to be ſayde or thought of ſuche a Prelate, who for bearyng the Turke, whome in a time ſo daungerous, hee ought chiefly to haue reſiſted, perſecuted the trueth, whych hee ſhoulde ſpecially haue mainteined? But Chriſt for his mercy ſtande for hys Churche, and ſtirre vp zealous Princes and Prelates, if not to recouer that is loſt, yet at leaſt to retaine that little which is left.

The pope ſo buſie againſt Luther, that he neglecteth the ruine of Chriſtēdome.

True compaſſiō lacking in the Pope.

Solyman therefore taking hys occaſion, and vſing the commoditie of time, while our princes were thus at variance betwixt themſelues, wythout any reſiſtance or interruption, brought his army vnto Belgrade, in yͤ yere of our Lorde. 1521. which Citye being but ſlenderly defenced, the Turke through his vnderminers, guns and other engins of warre, without great difficultie, & with little loſſe of hys ſouldiours, ſoone ſubdued and ouercame.

The city of Belgrade wonne of the turke.

After thys victorye, Solyman reſting himſelfe a whole yeare, and caſting in his mynde howe to make all ſure behinde him, for feare of ennemies to come vppon his backe, thought it expedient for his purpoſe if he might obtain the Iland of Rhodes: for that onely remained yet Chriſtian betwixt him and Aſia: wherfore the next yeare following, he brought hys army of 450. ſhips, and 300. M. men to the beſieging thereof. This Rhodes was a mighty and ſtrong Iland, wͭin the ſea called Mare mediterraneum. The inhabitants wherof at yͤ firſt did manfully reſiſt yͤ turke, ſparyng no labor nor paines for the defence of thēſelues & of al chriſtendome: But afterward being brought to extremity, and pinched wͭ penury, ſeing alſo no aid to come from yͤ chriſtians: ſomwhat began to languiſh in thēſelues. The turkes in the meane time caſting vp two great mountaines wyth ſtrength of hand, 2. miles of frō the citye, like rolling trenches caried them before thē neare vnto the city, in the tops wherof they plāted their ordinance & artillery, to batter the city. The maiſter of the knightes of the Rhodes was then one Philippus Villadamus a Frenchman, in whome no diligence was lacking yͭ appertained to the defence of the city. The Rhodians likewiſe ſo valiantly behaued themſelues vpon the walles, that wͭ their ſhot all the ditches about the city, were filled wͭ the carcaſes of dead Turkes.

Rhodes beſieged.

Beſides thys, ſuche a diſeaſe of the bloudy flixe raigned in the Turkes campe, that 30.M. of them died thereof: and yet for all thys, Solyman woulde not ceaſe from hys ſiege begonne: who at length by vnderminers caſting downe the vamures and vttermoſt partes of the citie, wan groũd ſtill more and more vpon the Rhodians, and with mortary pieces ſo battered the houſes, yͤ there was no free place almoſt ſtanding in all the Citie. And thus continued the ſiege for the ſpace of fiue or ſixe monethes, and yet all thys while came no help vnto them from the chriſtians. wherfore they being out of all hope, thorough the aduiſe of Valladamus, yelded themſelues vnto the Turke vppon condition that hee woulde ſpare them wyth life and goodes, which conuention the Turke kepte wyth them faithfully and truely.

Thus Solyman with his great glory and vtter ſhame to all chriſtian princes, and alſo ruine of all Chriſtendome, got the noble Iſle of Rhodes, although not wythout great loſſe and detriment of hys army: in ſo much that at one aſſault 20. thouſande Turkes about the walles, were ſlayne with fire, ſword, ſtones, and other engines. wherby it may be coniectured what theſe Rhodians might or would haue done, if ſuccor had come to them from other chriſtian princes as they looked for. This city was wonne vpon Chriſtmas day. An. 1522.

Chriſtian princes negligent in helping their felowes.

Rhodes wonne of the turke.

Thys conqueſt of Rhodes obtained, Solyman the 4. yeare after, bringeth backe his army againe into Hungary, where he founde none to reſiſt him but onely Ludouike the yong king: who being accompanied with a ſmal army, and nothing able to matche wyth the Turke, yet of a haſty raſhnes and vaine hope of victory, would needes ſet vpon him: who if he had ſtaide but a little, had proſpered the better. For Ioannes Vaiuoda being a Capitaine well exerciſed in Turkiſh warres before, was not farre off, comming with a ſufficient power of able ſouldiors. But Paulus the Archbiſhop Coloſſ. a Franciſcane Frier, a man more bold then wiſe, with his temerity and raſhnes troubled al their doings: For the whole ſumme of the army of the Hungarians, contained in all but only 24.M. horſmen and footemen, who at length comming vnto the battaile, and being compaſſed about wyth a great multitude of the Turkes army, were brought into great diſtres. The Turks twiſe ſhotte of their pieces againſt the Chriſtian army: yet ſcarce was any Chriſtian touched with the ſtroke therof: whych was thought to be done of purpoſe, bicauſe they were chriſtians whych had the ordering of the gunnes, for then the ſpeciall gunners of the Turkes were Chriſtians, whome for the ſame cauſe they ſpared. Then the Turkes horſmen comming vpon the backe of the chriſtian armie, compaſſed them about, and by reaſon of their multitude, ouercharged their horſemen. Amongſt whom was ſlaine the ſame tyme the Archb. Frier aforeſayd, wyth the Biſhops of Strigone and Varadine & many other nobles beſides. Alſo the kyng himſelfe being deſtitute of hys neceſſary aide and ſuccour, was compelled to flie into a mariſh, where he falling from his horſe, being heauy loden with his harneis, was not able to riſe againe, but there miſerably periſhed.

king Ludouicke periſhed in war

Solyman the Turke marueiled at the foolyſhneſſe of Ludouike the King, who wyth ſo ſmall an armye woulde preſume to encounter wyth ſuch a great hoſte of two hundreth thouſande. This battaile in Hungarie was fought, Anno. 1526.

After the deceaſſe of Ludouicke, Ferdinandus ſucceded in the kingdome, being Duke of Auſtria and king of Hungarie. Then Solyman ſetting contention betwixt Ioannes Vaiuoda and Ferdinandus for the kingdom of Hungarie, ſpedde his viage to the Citie of Buda, whych alſo in ſhort time he made to be yelded vnto hym vpon condition that they ſhould eſcape with their liues and goodes: whych cõdition ſome ſay he kept, and ſome ſay he did not. Beſides Buda diuers places and munitiõs the ſayd Turk, contrary to his league made before, did ſpoile and waſte, as Varadinum, Quinque Eccleſias, and other fortes and munitions moe, bordering about the coaſtes of Hungary.

Ferdinandus K. of Hungary.

Buda, Varadinum, and the citie called Quinqueecleſia taken of the turke.

In the yeare of our Lorde 1529. Ferdinandus king of Hungarie aforeſaid, recouered diuers holdes gotten of the Turke before, and alſo warring againſte Ioannes Vaiuoda his enemy, with whom he had variance (as ye heard before) expulſed him out of his kingdom. wherupon Vaiuoda flying to the Turke, deſired his ayde. The Turke glad to take that occaſion, wyth great preparatiõ addreſſed him ſelfe to returne into Hungary, where he recouering againe the Citie of Buda, which Ferdinandus had gotten from him a little before, remoued his armye into Auſtria, ſpoyling and deſtroying by the way all that came to hys handes, ſhewing many examples of great cruelty & tyranny moſt lamentable to here and vnderſtand. For of ſome he put out their eies, of ſome he cutte of their handes, of ſome their eares and noſes, and of their children he cut of theyr priuy members. The maidens he corrupted, the matrones had their breſtes cut of, and ſuch as were with childe, were ript and their childrẽ caſt into the fire. And theſe examples of horrible and barbarous tyranny, thys wretched Turke perpetrated by the way comming toward Vienna a noble City in Auſtria, beſides the captiues which he tooke by the way, and led into ſeruitude moſte miſerable, mounting to the number of 30. thouſand.

Contention betweene Ferdinandus, and Vaiuoda. Vaiuoda flieth to the turks.

Horrible examples of the turkes crueltie.

Among other holdes by the waye as the Turke came, there was a caſtle called Altenburch ſtrongly by nature ſituated, and by art defenced, which caſtle the Turke entending not to ouerpaſſe becauſe he woulde make all thynges ſure behinde him, began to make hys aſſault, and lay hys ordinance againſt it. The warders and kepers of the Caſtle, ſo ſoone as the Turks began to lay ſiege againſt them, making no reſiſtance, of a womanly cowardnes ſent their meſſengers to the Turke to yelde themſelues, ready to doe his commaundement, and further him with their vitaile. Amongeſt whome were three hundreth Bohemians, who were commaunded to followe the hoſte, that the Turke by them might learne what ſtrength was in the city of Vienna: alſo where the king was, and what was to be done for the winning therof.

The effeminate cowardlynes of the ſouldiours in Altenburch.

The caſtell of Altenburch yelded to the turke.

Of whom when the Turke had vnderſtanding howe all things ſtoode, and how that there was but 20. thouſand men in Vienna able to beare armour, and that other cities of Auſtria would ſoone yeelde if that were gotten, and that Vienna was vitailed but for 2. monthes, and that the king was of late in Boheme, thus the Turk of all things being certified, hauing no doubt in hys minde of victorie, made ſpeede toward Vienna: and firſt comming to Neapolis a city but 8. miles diſtant from Vienna, he required them to yelde themſelues: who notwithſtanding withſtoode them, and repulſed them valiantly. Then the Turkes aſſigned a place for the pitching of their tents, whych becauſe it ſemed ſome thing too litle for ſuch a great multitude, they tooke in more ground to the compaſſe of 7. miles circuit. The multitude of his armye, which hee there planted, is accompted of ſome to extend to 250.M. ſouldiours. The Turke thus being planted, made daily excourſes ouer all the countrey of Auſtria, ſpecially about the citie of Vienna, waſting and ſpoyling with great crueltye & murther amongſt the poore Chriſtians.

Neapolis beſieged of the turke. The turkes army of 250 thouſand ſouldiours.

Moreouer, to make al things more ſure toward yͤ preparation of the ſiege, ſcoutes were ſent abroade, and buſhments were laid about the riuer ſide of Danubius, to prouide that no aid nor victual ſhould be brought to Vienna. So it pleaſed the prouidence of the Lord (who diſpoſeth all things) that 3. daies before the comming of the Turk, Fridericus the Earle Palatine, which was then aſſigned by yͤ Empire to take the charge of Vienna, was come downe by the riuer of Danubius with 14.M. and with a certaine troupe of horſemen well apoynted and picked for the purpoſe. After the comming of thys Fridericke, prouiſion alſo of victuall was appoynted to followe ſhortly after, by the ſayd riuer of Danubius.

Vienna beſieged of the turke.

Fridericus Earle palatine captaine of Vienna.

In the meane time, they which had the cariage & trãſporting therof, hearing how the waies were laid, & all the paſſages 10. miles about Vienna, ſtopped by the Turkes although they knew yͤ city to ſtand in great nede of vitail, yet ſeing there was no other remedy, rather then it ſhould come to the ennemies hande, thought it beſt to ſincke theyr boats wͭ their cariage, and ſo they did. wherby, all be it the chriſtians wanted their reliefe, yet were the Turks diſappoynted of their pray & purpoſe. The captains whych had the keping of the City, which were chiefly Fridericus the Earle Palatine, Gulielmus Rogendorffius, and Nicolaus erle of Salme, ſeing themſelues ſo ſtraightned contrary to their expectation, although they had great cauſes to be diſcouraged, yet calling their courage vnto them, they conſulted together for the beſt way to be taken: and ſeing that the little city Neapolis (aboue mentioned) being 8. miles diſtaunt from them, ſo valiauntly withſtoode the Turkes, that in one day they ſuſtained 7. greuous aſſaultes againſt all the maine force of the Turkiſh armye: by their example and manfull ſtãding, being the more animated and encouraged, thought to abide the vttermoſte before they woulde geue ouer, and firſt plucking downe all the ſuburbes, and buildings wythout the walles, wherby the enemy myght haue any ſuccor, they willed all the farmers & inhabitantes about the Citye to ſaue themſelues, and to bryng in theyr goods wͭin the walles. Such places as were weake wythin the walles, they made ſtrong. About the towers & munition of the walles, they prouided rampires & bulwarks diſtant 80. foote one from another, to kepe of the ſhot: and euery man hadde hys place and ſtanding awarded to hym

Preparation within the Citie of Vienna, againſt the turke.

vpon the wal, and his office appoynted what to do: but eſpecially that ſide of the City which lyeth to the riuer of Danubius, they fortified after the beſt wiſe: for that way only now remained for vitail to be tranſported from the Bohemians vnto them. wherefore 8. enſignes were aſſigned to the keping of the bridge, and in the plaine, which was lyke an Iland incloſed wythin the riuer, a ſufficient garriſon of horſmen were placed, lying within the gunſhot of the city, to the entent that if any graine or vitail were ſent from the Bohemians, they myght prouide yͤ ſame ſafely to be brought into the Citie.

Raſhe hardines of our Chriſtians in ſkirmiſhing with the turke.

The wretched cruelty of the turkes againſt the Chriſtian captiues.

These things thus being diſpoſed and ſet in order, L. William Rogendorffe, to aſſay the ſtrength of the Turks, made diuers rodes out wyth his horſemen, albeit much againſt yͤ mindes of the Auſtrians: who knowing the maner of the Turkes, thought it better to ſuffer them, while either wyth time they myght be ouerweried, or for lacke of victuals conſumed. Among many and ſondry ſkirmiſhes which the Chriſtians had with the Turkes, one eſpecially was to our men vnproſperous: in whych certaine of the horſemen eſpying a ſmall troupe of the Turkes ſcattering abroad from theyr company, made out after them, who ſodenly & guilefully were incloſed and circumuented by the Turks, before they could recouer the gates of the citie, and ſo were all taken aliue: Of whome 3. were ſent from the Turkes into the Citye, to declare to the Viennians what ſtrength they had ſeene in the campe of their aduerſaries, and to ſollicite them to yelde their city for feare of puniſhment which would followe: The reſidue they reſerued to torments and puniſhment, whom in the ſight of the whole army, and of the Chriſtians (whych ſhould tell the ſame to the Citizens) they cauſed euery man to be drawne with 4. horſes a piece, and ſo to be diſmēbred and pluckt a ſonder.

The meſſage of the turke to the Viennians.

The aunſwere of the Viēnians to the turke.

After thys done, the barbarous Turk immediatly ſent his Herold to talke wyth the Captaines of the City, whether they would yelde the City vpon honeſt conditions, or els would abide the arbitrement of warre. If they would gently ſubmit them ſelues, they ſhould haue all gentlenes to them ſhewed: If they would be ſtubburne, and ſtand to their defence, he wold alſo ſtand to hys ſiege begon, ſo that he neither woulde ſpare man, woman nor childe. To thys the captaines aunſwered againe, that they were contented Solyman to ſtand to his ſiege begon, and to do his vttermoſt, what he would, or what he coulde. As for them, they were at a poynte to defende them ſelues and their Citie ſo long as they might: the euent & fall of victory to be doubtfull, and many times ſo to happen, that they whych begin the warre, are wearied ſooner then they which be prouoked: neither againe that they were ſo vnmindfull eyther of themſelues, or of their country, but that they did remember well what they are, and what they be called, named to be Germaines: who vſe alwayes firſt to aſſay the aduerſary, what he is able to doe, and not raſhly to committe themſelues into their enemies handes.

Solymanus approcheth Vienna with three great armies

Solymannus not a little diſdaining at thys aunſwer, firſt burning and conſuming all the villages, houſes, and places round about the city, infecting alſo the ſprings and fountaines whych gaue water into the Citye, and ſo ſtopping al paſſages, that no reliefe ſhould haue way vnto thē, began wͭ angry moode to approche more neare to the Citie, with 3. great campes, ſending them worde in ſkorne and contumely, by one of his captiues, that if they ſtood in nede of helpe of ſoldiors, he would ſend vnto them the 300. Bohemians (mentioned a little before) to aid them in theyr defence. To whom the Palatine directed anſwer again, that they had moe ſoldiours in the City then they neded. As for the Bohemians which had yelded themſelues, he might do wyth them, what he would, for Vienna ſtoode in no great neede of them.

A meſſenger ſent from Ferdinādus to Vienna.

In the meane time a meſſenger comming from Ferdinandus, was priuily let in by night into the Citie, which brought word that they ſhould play the men in keping out the enemy a while: for it would not be long but both Ferdinandus and Carolus his brother, with the ſtrēgth of all Germanie, would be ready to reſcue them. At whych meſſage the hearts of the ſoldiours began ſomwhat to be cheared, and to contemne the huge multitude of the aduerſaries, being ſo great as they neuer did beholde, nor did euer almoſte heare of before. The largeneſſe of whoſe army, extended to no leſſe in compaſſe (as is aboue ſayde) then of 7. miles round about the Citie walles.

The ſiege of Vienna beginneth.

Long it were to recite the whole order of thys terrible ſiege, with all the partes and circumſtances therof. Briefly to touch ſo much as ſhal ſuffice for this hiſtory, with fewer wordes then were ſtripes geuen at the ſiege thereof: thys is to be iudged and confeſſed: whoſoeuer beholdeth the nōber and fierceneſſe of the Turkes, the abſence of the king Ferdinandus, the lacke of prouiſion and vitaile within the city, the noiſe of the gunnes, the violence of the ſhot, the terror of the ſight, and yet no ſuccour ſent vnto them: that the cuſtody of that city was no mans doing, but the arme only of the Lorde God of hoſtes, according to the true ſaying of the Pſalme: Vnleſſe the Lorde doe kepe the Citie, the watchmen watch in vaine, which watch to ſaue it: Vnles the Lord doe build the houſe, the builder ſtriueth in vayne, whych taketh vpon hym to builde it. Experience whereof in keping thys citie may well appeare.

The Lordes power and prouidence in keeping the Citie of Vienna.

Firſt Solymannus bending hys ſhotte and ordinance againſt the City, beate downe to the ground the vāmures with all the vttermoſt ſuburbs of the city, and that in ſuche a ſhort moment of time, that the hearts of the Viennians a little before refreſhed, were now as much appaled agayne with feare, miſdoubting wyth themſelues, leaſt the Turke with the ſame celerity and violence woulde haue preuailed againſt the inwarde walles, as he did in beating down the outward vamures. And no doubt the ſame time the Turk had put the city in great hazard, had not night commynge on, broken of the ſiege for that day.

In the meane time the Citizens laboured all night in repairing and refreſhing the wals, to make all things ſure againſt the next aſſault. The next day early in yͤ morning, the Turks approching the city againe with a new aſſault, thinking to ſcale the walles, were ſo repulſed & manfully reſiſted by the Germaines, that vnneth any ditches aboute the walles could be ſene for the bodies of the dead Turkes, wherwith they were repleniſhed: ſo that the Turks were faine to fight ſtanding vpon the bodies of them which wer ſlaine. By the which calamitie the force of the enemye was not a little abated,

The ſlaughter of the turkes about the walles of Vienna.

The manlynes of Captaine Rogendorffius againſt the turkes

It happened the ſame time, that a companye of the Turkes being ſpied oute of the Citie wandering oute of order, the Captaine Rogendorffius wyth two legions of horſemenne iſſuing out of the Citie gate called Salmaria, and ſo paſſing cloſely vnder the hilles ſide, did ſo ſet vpon them, that they ſlew a great number of them: the reſt being driuen to take the riuer, whome with ſtones and ſhot likewiſe they deſtroyed, and ſo retired backe into the Citie againe. By thys victorie the Captaine Rogendorffius began to be terrible to the Turkes. For in the ſame ſkirmiſh (as after was knowen) was ſlayne of them ſo many, that of 5000. and 300. horſemen and footemen, ſcarſe 140. eſcaped aliue.

An other aſſault of the turkes againſt Vienna.

Solyman diſdayning at this repulſe, thought to proue an other way, & ſo bringing his power toward yͤ gate called yͤ kings gate, there making his trenches & bulwarkes, placed his ordināce, wͭ the violence wherof yͤ walles were ſo battered & ſhaken, that no man was able there to ſtand. wherefore the Turke ſeeing 2. great breaches made in the wal cōmaunded his ſouldiors couertly in the darck ſmoke of gunnepouder to preaſe into the City. The like alſo was done at yͤ ſcottiſh tower, whereby yͤ city was inuaded in 2. ſundry places at one time. The Viēnians at yͤ firſt, freſhly began to withſtand thē, new ſouldiors ſtill cōming in the place of them that were ſlaine and hurt: and ſo this aſſault continuing more thē 6. houres together, our mē beganne at length to languiſh & faint, not onely in ſtrength but alſo in courage: wherby the Citie had bene in great daunger of looſing, had not yͤ two foreſaid Capitaines Rogendorffius in the one place, and the Earle of Salme in the other place, manfully encouraged the ſouldiors to abide yͤ brunt, and to beare out a while the violence of the Turkes, promiſing that immediatly they ſhould haue ayde from Ferdinandus.

In the meane time the Turkes came ſo thicke for gredines of the victory, ſcaling, climing, and fighting vpō the walles, that had it not bene for the preaſe and throng of the great multitude of the Turkes comming ſo thicke that one of them could not fight for an other, Vienna that ſame day had bene taken and vtterly loſt: But by the pollicy of yͤ captaines geuing a ſigne within the city, as though new ſouldiors were called for, our men began to be encouraged, & the Turkes hartes to be diſcomfited.

Another repulſe of the turkes.

when Solymannus ſaw his army the ſecond time, repulſed, he began to attempt a new way, purpoſing by vndermining to ouerthrow the city: in the which work ſpecially he vſed the helpe of the Illyrians, of whome he had a great number in his campe, expert in that kinde of feate. Theſe Illyrians beginning to breake the earth at the gate Carinthia and comming neare to the foundations of the Tower, which they by ſtrength of hand attēpted to break, could not worke ſo cloſely vnder the groūd, but they were perceiued by certayne men aboue, which were ſkilfull & expert in yͤ kind of matter: who cōtrariwiſe vndermining againſt thē, & filling their trēches as they wēt, wͭ gūpouder, ſo con-

Vienna vndermined by the turkes, conueyed their traine, that when fire ſhould be ſet vnto it, the violence thereof ſhould braſt out by the trenches of the enemies: which done, ſodenly the ground beneath made a great ſhaking, ſo that the tower did cleaue aſunder, and all the vnderminers of the Turks working in their trẽches, were ſmothered and deſtroyed, which came to the number (as it was ſuppoſed afterwarde) of 8000. perſones: in ſo much that yet till thys day a great number of deade mens ſkuls are found in the ground.

An other aſſault of the turkes againſt Vienna.

When Solyman ſaw yͤ this way alſo would not ſerue and had priuy intelligence that the walles about the gates of Stubarium were negligently kept, and that hee might haue there more eaſy entrance: ſecretly he conueyeth about 10. garriſons of freſh ſoldiours, in ſuch ſort as the townes men ſhould not perceiue them: who came ſo ſodenly vpon them, that they had filled the ditches, and were vpon yͤ top of the fortreſſes and munitions, before that our men were aware of them, or coulde make themſelues ready to reſiſt them. For although there was no lacke of ſoldiors wythin the Citie, yet for ſomuch as the whole brunt of the ſiege did lye, ſpecially at the 2. gates aforeſaide, from whence the ſoldiors which were there warding, could not be wel remoued, for a ſhifte the reſcuers (which wythin the Citie were ready for all ſodaine aduentures) were ſent to the walles: by whoſe comming, thoſe fewe whych kept the enemies of before, being ſore hurted and woũded, were ſuccoured and ſent to ſurgery: and thus the ſayed aſſault continued terrible and doubtfull vntill (the darcke night commyng vpon them) they could not wel know the one from the other. In thys bickering were counted of the Turkes to be ſlayne, more then 5000.

The turkes a gayne repulſed.

Then the Captaine Rogendorffius commendyng the valiant ſtanding of his ſouldiours, miſdoubting with him ſelfe (as it happened in dede) that the Turks would not ſo geue ouer, but would ſet vppon him the next day wͭ a freſh aſſault, prouiding wyth all diligence for the purpoſe, made vp the breaches of the walles, & prepared all things neceſſary for reſiſtaunce: The next morning following, whych was ſome thing darke and miſtie, the Turkes thinking to preuent our men with their ſodain comming, began againe buſily to bicker vpon the toppe of the walles.

An other aſſault of the turkes repelled.

It would require a longe tractation heere to deſcribe the great diſtres and danger that the city, thoſe 3. daies following, was in. During all the whych time, there was no reſt, no intermiſſion, nor diligẽce lacking, either in the enemies, fighting againſt the City, either in our men in defending the ſame. For the Turkes beſides the multitude of the great ordinance, wherwith (as wyth a great tempeſt of gunſhot) they neuer ceaſed, ſtill battering the walles and beating the munitions of the Citie, ſent alſo ſuch heapes & multitudes of the Turkes, to the ſcaling and climing the walles, that vnneth wyth all the ordinance and ſhot of the city, either yͤ violence of them could be broken, or the number of them diminiſhed: til at laſt the ſoldiors of yͤ Turkes perceiuing themſelues able by no meanes to preuaile, but onely to runne in daunger of life, and to do no good, began to wrangle among themſelues, grudging and repining againſt their dukes and captaines, imputing yͤ whole cauſe onely to them: that the City was yet vntaken, ſeeing there was in them neither diligence nor good will lacking: and ſo ceaſed the ſiege for that time.

The turkes at variance among themſelues.

After this, when Solymannus had purpoſed in hym ſelfe, with his laſt and ſtrongeſt ſiege, to try againſt the city the vttermoſt that he was able to doe, and had encouraged hys ſoldiers to prepare thẽſelues in moſt forcible wiſe therunto: the ſoldyers ſhewed thẽ ſelues much vnwilling to returne againe from whence they were ſo often repulſed before: by reaſon wherof great commotion begã to riſe in the Turkes campe. The rumour wherof when it came to Solymans eares, he ſendeth his grand captaine to kepe all the ſouldiers in order and obedience, or if they would be ſtubborne, to compell them whether they would or not, to accompliſh his commandement. Who comming to the ſoldiers, ſhewed to them the great Turkes meſſage, and to animate & encourage them, declared that the oportunitie of the time preſẽt was not to be neglected, neither could they now wͭout great ſhame geue ouer, after ſo many aſſaultes attempted: who if they would ſuſtein but one brunt more, yͤ victory were in their owne handes. The townesmen, he ſaide, were waſted and their victualles ſpent: and the more to enflame their mindes, he promiſed them not onely great thanks and reward of their Emperour, but alſo the whole ſpoyle of the Citie, in recompence of their trauaile.

The Turke and his ſouldiours could not agree.

The turke entreateth his ſoldiours.

But when all thys could not ſtir vp yͤ ſturdy ſtomacks of the tired Turkes, vſing compulſion where perſwaſion would not ſerue, he appoynted a number of horſmen to be ſet at their backs, wherby to enforce them, either to go forwarde, or if they denied, wͭ gunnes and ſpeares to deſtroy them. The Turkes ſeeing themſelues in ſuch a ſtrait, that whether they went or taried, it was to them like perill, yet woulde they not ſet forwarde, except the Captaine woulde take the vẽture before them. Who warding forward in his array, thus ſpake vnto his felows, ſaying: Do you forſake your faith & allegeance, and betray the Emperor of Conſtantinople vnto the Chriſtians, if you wil: but I will diſcharge my duety towardes the commune wealth and my Emperour, and with that worde auaunced his enſigne, making toward the city walles. Whõ when other folowed & ſtil mo and mo preſſed after, ſo it came to pas that whole routs of them were ouerthrowen & ſlain of our men vpon the wals, before it was knowne what they meant. Other terrified by their example, gaue backe and left their array, and wineding them ſelues by bie wayes and vnder couert of hilles, retourned againe into their tentes, and ſo came it to paſſe that the ſtrength of the ennemies daily more and more decreaſing, they had leſſe hope euery day more then other of obtaining the Citie. For beſides the innumerable ſlaughter of Turkes vpon the walles, the townеſmen alſo watching the forragers and purueyers of the Turkes, as they raunged about for victual for the campe, euer as occaſion ſerued them, did compaſſe them about, and ſo encountered with them by the way, that of a whole Legion, ſcarſly the tenth part returned again to their felowes aliue, by meanes wherof the courage of the enemies began greatly to faint. Wherby ſuch a maruelous alteration hapned, that as our mẽ began to receiue more hope and courage, ſo the Turkes began ſtill more to droupe and to languiſh wyth diſpaire, ſo that at length ſkarce durſt they appeare wythout the bounds, where they were entrenched, but onely in light ſkirmiſhes, when they were prouoked by our men to come out, and to ſhew them ſelues.

Compulſiō of men ſerueth not where the Lord defendeth.

The ſlaughter of the turkes at Vienna.

The turkes ſlaine.

Solymannus perceiuing his ſoldiers thus daily to go to wracke, of whome he had loſt already more then 80. M. and that wyth long tarying he could do no good, being alſo in lacke of forrage, for that the countrey about hym was waſted: beginneth to conſult with hys captaines & counſailors, what remained beſt to be done. Of whom the moſt parte aduiſed hym to raiſe his ſiege, and betime to prouide for hymſelfe. Which to doe, many cauſes there were that mooued hym.

The turke beginneth to take counſaile to retire.

Firſt the loſſe of his men, which daily were cut frõ him by great numbers, beſides them which lay in hys campe wounded, or ſicke, or famiſhed. Secondly, lacke of perueyance. Thirdly, yͤ approching nere of winter. But yͤ chiefeſt cauſe was, for that he heard Friderike Palatine aboue mẽtioned cõming with a great army at Ratiſbone towardes Vienna, and there had done great moleſtation to a greate number of the Turks forragers, whom by the way he preuented and ſo encloſed in the woods, yͭ he ſlew them. Wherof when Solyman had intelligence, thinking it not beſt to abide the comming of the Palatine, made haſt wyth bagge and baggage to remoue hys campe and to retire: and firſt ſending away his cariage before him, made ſpeede hymſelf with his army, to follow ſhortly after.

Solyman remoueth & raiſeth his ſiege from Vienna.

The Viennians, when they heard of the remouing away of the Turkes, although at the firſt they ſcarſly beleeued it to be true, being afterwarde certified out of doubt, both of their remouing, and alſo of the order therof, how it was in a maner of a flight or chaſe, were greatly deſirous to make out of the City after them. Wherein, albeit the preſence of the Palatine wyth his armie, if hee had bene there preſent, might haue ſtand them in great ſtead, yet notwithſtanding they tooke the oportunitie of the time preſent, and iſſuing out of the Citie, in moſte ſpeedy wiſe, ſet after them wͭ their horſemen: and firſt ouerpaſſing the tentes (where yͤ Turkes had pitched their ſtations or pauillions) for haſt of the way, they made ſuch purſute after them, that wythin litle time, they ouertooke the rereward or latter ende of the armie, whereof they made ſuche hauocke and deſtruction, that (as the author reporteth) there was neuer a ſhotte of the purſuers, nor weapon drawen, nor ſtroke ſtrucken, which light in vain. Which was no hard thing for our men to doe: For as the Turkes in their flight went ſcattered out of order & aray, neither woulde they in the fore rancke (being ſo farre off from ieopardy) retourne backe to helpe their felowes, it was eaſie for our men, without reſiſtance, to come vpon their backes as they would.

The turkes campe purſued in their flight.

Yet notwythſtanding in long purſute, when our men could not ſee the cariage of the Turkes, which was woont in armies to come away behinde after the hoaſt, and ſuſpecting (as trueth was) ſome ambuſh to be left in priuie wayte behinde them, to come betwixt them and home: called themſelues to retraite, and conſulted vpon the matter, thinking good, firſt to ſende out certaine ſcoutes, to eſpie and and bring them word, where the enemies lay, & what was the number of them. Wherof when intelligence was geuē them, that the remnaunt of the Turkes army was remayning in the tentes behind, word was ſent to their fellowes in Vienna, to iſſue out, and to ioyn alſo with them againſt the tayle of the turkes, whiche had entrenched themſelues within the campe. Other were appoynted to followe the chaſe, leaſt peraduenture yͤ turks ſeeing our men to recule backe might returne again vpon thē, & help their felowes. Which thinges being thus ordered and appoynted, in the meane time, while part of the Vienians were houering after the mayne armye, the reſt encountered with them that were left in the campe. Who ſeeing themſelues ouermatched, firſt defenced theyr campe with a deepe ditch & Bulwarke, to delay the time, vntill ſome helpe might come to them from the army. Secondly they directed meſſengers to the Chriſtians, to entreate for peace. Thirdly they conueied their priuy letters vnto Solyman for ſpeedy ayde and reſcue. But all the wayes and paſſages being ſtopped by the Chriſtians, there letters were intercepted, and ſo the miſerable Turkes being deſtitute of all hope & ſucour, ſeing no other remedy, made out of theyr campe, to haſſarde and proue the vttermoſt for theyr defence: but in concluſiō, in their deſperate venture they were encloſed about by our men on euery ſide, and there put to the ſword and ſlayne, a few only excepted, who eſcaping out very hardly by ſecret paſſages, ſhifted after the reſt of their fellowes, as well as they could. Their carriage and other furniture lefte behind them in their tentes, was diſtributed amongſt yͤ ſouldiers onely ſuch thinges reſerued as might ſerue for the publike vſe and commoditie of the Cittie.

The reſt of the turkes ſlaine in the campe.

Thus through the mercifull protection and benefite of almighty God, Auſtria was deliuered from the fierce and barbarous hoſtilitie of the cruell Turkes: notwithſtāding that neither Ferdinandus the king, nor the Emperour his brother were there preſent, but only yͤ power of God, thorough the valiauntnes of the worthy Germaines, defēded that cittie, in defence wherof conſiſted yͤ ſafety & deliuerāce, (no doubt) of all theſe weſt partes of Chriſtendome. For the which immortall prayſe and thankes be vnto our immortall God in Chriſt our Lord, according as he hath of vs moſt graciouſly and worthely deſerued. Wherin by the way take this for a note (gentle reader) how & after what maner Gods bleſſing goeth with the true reformers of his religion, and ſo much the more is it to be noted, for that the Turkes in ſo many battailes & ſieges heretofore, were neuer ſo repulſed & foyled, as at this preſent time in incountring wͭ the proteſtantes & defenders of ſincere Religion. This city of Vienna was beſieged & deliuered yͤ yeare of our Lord. 1529. The aſſaultes of the Turke againſt yͤ City are numbred to be 20. and his repulſes as many. The nūber of his army which he firſt brought, was 25000. wherof were reckened to be ſlayne 80. thouſand and aboue. During the time of his ſiege, he led away out of the country about many captiues; virgins and Matrones he quelled & caſt them out naked: the children hee ſtucke vpon ſtakes.

Gods bleſſing goeth with the mainteyners of his true worſhip & religion.

Solymannus thus put from yͤ hope of victorye of Vienna after he had breathed himſelfe a while at home, the ſecond yere after, which was an. 1531. repayring his hoſt, returned agayne into Hungarye, with no leſſe multitude, then before: where firſt he got the towne called Gunza being but ſlenderly kept with a ſmall garriſon. By reaſon whereof the townſmen and ſouldiours yelding thēſelues vnto the Turke, were conſtrayned to agree vpon vnreaſonable conditions. Ex Ioan. Ramo.

Ex Melchiore Soitero lib. 2. de Bello Pannonico.

Nicholaus Iureſchitz a valiaunt Captayne.

Melchior Soiterus in his ſecond booke writing De bello Pannonico, touching the foreſaid Towne of Gunza, or Gunzium, differeth herein ſomething from Ramus, declaring how this Gunza being a ſmall town in Hungary and hauing in it but onely a 100. ſouldiours (or as Wolfegangus Drechſlerus in his chronicle reporteth, at the moſt but 200. ſouldiours) vnder the valiaunt captayne Nicholas Iureſchitz, defended themſelues ſo manfully and wonderfully, through the notable power of God, againſt the whole puiſſance of 200. thouſand Turkes, that they beyng notwithſtanding diſtreſſed with lacke and penury of purueiance and ſodenly of the Turkes inuaded, yet with pure courage and promptnes of hart, ſuſteined the vttermoſt force and violence of xiij. aſſaultes of that great multitude, for the ſpace of 25. dayes together.

Although the narration of the authour may ſeeme to ſome incredible, yet thus he writeth, that what tyme the great ordinance and battering peeces of the Turkes were planted vpon two mountaynes much higher then yͤ town whereby they within the towne were oppreſſed both before and behinde, in ſo much that 8 enſignes of the Turks were already within the towne, yet by the reaſon of women and children and other impotent perſons, who in the middle of the towne were congregate in an houſe together ſuch a noyſe and clamour went vp to heauen praying and crying to God for helpe, that the turkes within the walles ſuppoſing a new army of freſh ſouldiours to be ſent into yͤ towne for ſodayn feare, voyded the towne, & leaped down from the walles agayn (which before they had got) whom no man eyther purſued or reſiſted: for neuer a ſouldiour almoſt was left on the walles, which was not eyther ſlayne or els wounded with the Turks ordinance. At what time through the Lordes prouidence it ſo happened, that one Ibrahimus Baſſa, neare about the Turke, ſeeing bothe the town to be ſmall, and the great deſtruction of the Turkes in the ſiege thereof, and that the captayn in no caſe woulde yeld, perſwaded ſo the Turke, declaring howe the Towne being ſo little was not worth the loſſe of ſo many men, in yͤ winning wherof there was no glory, & if he were repulſed, great diſhonour might follow: wherby the Turke being perſwaded, did follow hys counſaile, which was thys yͭ Nicholaus the Chriſten captaine beyng called vnto him vnder pledges and ſafe conduict, ſhould receaue the town as of his hand and gift, with condition, that he ſhold do no violence to hys ſouldiours left behinde and wounded, but ſhould procure ſuch meanes as he could, for the recuring of them: and ſo he rayſing his ſiege departed. An other cauſe might be alſo, whiche moued him ſo ſodaynly to rayſe hys ſiege, for that he heard the Palatine not to be far of in purſuing after him, and therfore taking his flight by yͤ mountaines of the Noricians, he returned with muche ſpoyle of Chriſtian mens goods into Conſtantinople. A miraculous example of the Lordes protection & prouidence

The turke raiſeth his ſiege from Gunza.

For ſo it was prouided the ſame time in Germany, after the counſaile of Auguſt and of Ratiſboon (at what time the controuerſie of Religion betweene the Proteſtantes & the papiſtes, was differred and ſet of, to the next generall Councel) that Charles the 5. and Ferdinandus his brother hauing vnderſtanding of the Turke thus raunging in Hungary, ſhould collect of the Germaynes, Hungarians, and Spanyardes and others, an able army of 80. thouſand footmen, and 30000. horſemen, to repulſe the inuaſions of the Turke. But Solymanus hauing intelligence of thys preparation of the Chriſtian power comming toward him whether for feare, or whether to eſpy further oportunitie of tyme, for hys more aduauntage and our detriment, refuſed at that time to tary theyr comming, and ſo ſpeeding hys returne vnto Conſtantinople, retired with much ſpoyle and pray ſent before him, as is aboue premiſed: whiche was in the yeare of our Lord. 1532.

The Emperour Charles & Ferdinandus begin at length to ſturre againſt the turke.

The turke refuſeth to tarry the Chriſtian army.

Not long after, being the yeare of our ſaluation, 1534. Solymannus intending ij. warres at once, firſt ſent Corradinus Barbaroſſa the admiral of his nauies into Afrike to war againſt the kyng of Tunece: whō the Barbaroſſa alſo diſpoſſeſſed & depriued of his kingdome: but Charles the Emperour, the next yeare following, an. 1535. reſtored the ſaid king agayne into hys kingdome, and deliuered in the ſame viage 20. thouſand captiues out of ſeruitude.

The turke warreth againſt the king of Tunece. Tunece wonne of the turke. Tunece recouered againe by Charles the Emperour.

The ſame tyme the Turke alſo ſent an other captayne into Hungary, to warre agaynſt Vaiuoda while he hymſelfe taking hys courſe to Perſia, planted his ſiege agaynſt the Citty Taurus, which he in ſhort ſpace ſubdued and expugned. Albeit he long enioied not the ſame: for Tahames king of the Perſians, ſodaynly comming vpon the Turks vnprepared, ſlue of them 20. thouſand, and tooke hys concubines to the great foyle and reproch of the Turke.

Two yeare after this, which was the yere of our Lord 1537. Solymannus, who coulde not be quyet at home nor reſt in peace, returning agayne out of Aſia into Europe wͭ 270. ſhips, great and little, ſet vppon Corcyra, an other Iland belonging to yͤ Venetians, which he beſieged x. daies waſting and burning the Townes and fieldes as he went beſide the deſtruction of much people therein, whom partly he ſlue, partly led away captiues. From thence he ſayled to Zacynthus and Cythara, an other Ilande not farre off from Corcyra, bordering neare to the coaſtes of Epyrus and Grecia. Where he ſodaynly by night inuading the huſbandmen in villages and fields, ſleeping and miſtruſting no harme, drew them out of theyr houſes and poſſeſſions, men and women, beſides children, to the number of ix. hūdreth whom he made hys bondſlaues; burning moreouer theyr houſes, and carying away all the goodes and cattell beyng without the ſayd Citties of Zazinthus and Cythara. From thence theſe helhoundes turned theyr courſe to yͤ ſiege and ſpoyle of Egina, a rich and populous Iland, lying betweene Grecia and Aſia. Where firſt the Egenians did manfully in battaile reſiſt them, and were like to haue preuayled: but being weryed at length and oppreſſed with innumerable thouſandes of freſh Turkes, which ſtil were ſent in, to reſcue the other whiche were ouercome before, were compelled to flye into the Cittie of Egina. Which city the cruell Turkes (or rather Deuils on earth) wᵗ muche labour, & violence of their great ordinaunce ſet out of their ſhippes, ſubdued and caſt downe to the ground: the Citizens and inhabitauntes whereof, the Turke after he had burned their houſes, and ranſackt theyr goodes commanded to be ſlayne and killed euery one. The weomen both noble and vnnoble, with their infantes, were geuen to the mariners to be abuſed, and from thence being ſhipped vnto Conſtantinople, were led away to perpetuall miſery & ſlauery, which was in the yeare of our Lord. 1537.

The Ile Parum and Naxus. Ciclades ſubdued of the turke. Ex Ioan. Criſpo

In the ſame iourny Solyman alſo tooke the Ile in the ſayd ſea of Eugeum, called Parum: alſo the Ile adioyning to the ſame named Naxus, and made them to him tributaries. The duke whereof was he which wrote the ſtory both of theſe Ilandes aforeſayd, and alſo of the other Ilandes called Cyclades, and other Dukes. Ex Ioan Criſpo, Duce Naxi. &c.

Note what hurt commeth by the diſſention of Chriſtiã princes

Stiria is a countrey or prouince neare adioyning to Auſtria.

Thys done, Solymannus directed his Nauy vnto Apulia, where he ſet on land. x. thouſand footmen, & 2000. horſemen, which ſpoiled likewiſe and waſted thoſe parties while the Emperour, the pope and yͤ Venetians were together in warre and diſſenſion. Furthermore the next yere folowing. an. 1538. great attemptes began in Stiria, but by the reſiſtance of the inhabitantes, the force of the barbarous turks was repulſed: notwithſtanding great ſpoyles of men & cattell were caryed from thence, and the country miſerable ſpoyled. In the which yeare alſo the Turk turning into Hungary, gaue battaile vnto the Chriſtians in Sauia: where through the fraudulent falſhood of the Captayne Caſſianerus (Wolfegangus nameth him Calcianus beyng (as they ſay) corrupted with money, our men were put to the worſe. an. 1538.

The falſhood of the turke with the Venetians.

After that the Turkes had inuaded the Ilande of Corcyra aboueſayd, the Venetians with Solyman the Turke had ioyned truce for a certayne time, for yͤ which they gaue the turke 300. thouſand crownes, with the city of Neapolis, and Maluaſia in the borders of Macedonia. But within 4. or 5. yeares, the Turke to get a newe ſtipend of the Venetians, brake hys league, and inuaded theyr dominions: whereby they were enforced to enter new conditions agayn with him.

Nouum Caſtellũ in Dalmatia, ouerthrowen by the turke, & the people ſlaine.

In the yeare of our Lord, 1540. the reſtles Turke making hys return toward Hungary, by the way paſſing by Dalmatia, lay againſt the towne called Newcaſtle, beyng defended by the Spanyardes. In the which town becauſe they refuſed to yeld themſelues all the inhabitauntes and ſouldiours were put to the ſword & ſlain euery one. This Nouum Caſtellum or Newcaſtle was a ſtrong fort of yͤ Chriſtians, whiche being nowe in the Turkes power, he had great aduauntage ouer all thoſe quarters of Dalmatia, Stiria, Carinthia, and Hungaria. From thence he proceeded further, keeping his courſe into Hungary, where he planted his power againſt the City of Buda.

The contention in Hungary betweene Ferdinãdus & Vaiuoda & his ſucceſſors.

The communication betweene Monachus and Ferdinandus.

What hurt may come of raſhe ſuſpicion.

The turke called agayne into Hungary by the diſſentiõ betweene Monachus and Ferdinandus.

This Buda was a principall city in Hungary, about which great contention had bene (as ye heard before) betweene Ioannes Vaiuoda, and Ferdinandus. By reaſon wherof the Turke occaſioned by Vaiuoda, came into Hũgary and deliuered the City to Vaiuoda. This Vaiuoda liuing not long after, left behinde him a ſonne, whome being an infant he committed to the gouernance of one Georgius Monachus: who being left tutour vnto the infant, reduced all Tranſiluania, Buda, Peſta, with other parties of Hungary, which belonged to Vaiuoda before, to the ſubiection of the child. Ferdinandus hearing therof, in a great haſt and anger: leuyed an armye to recouer his landes in Hungarie, and ſo laid ſiege to Buda. Monachus ſeing his part weake, firſt ſent his legate to Ferdinandus, deſiring him to talke and conferre with him vppon matter, as he pretended, pertayning to the behoofe of them both. Whereupon both the parties being agreed, the place and manner of their conuention was appoynted, and alſo the day and tyme aſſigned. Thus the partyes (according to the agreement) conuenting together with their armyes, with drawing a little aſide, as they were entred in communication, ſodenly among Ferdinandus men, happened a dagg to be heard, which by the heate of the day (as is thought) looſing of hys own accord, gaue a cracke. The ſound whereof comming to the eares of Monachus, he ſuppoſing the ſame to haue bene diſcharged, agaynſt him, in great anger drewe out his ſworde, bidding Ferdinandus auant wᵗ his doubling diſſimmulation, ſaying that he would neuer any more truſt the promiſes of Chriſtians, and immediatelye vppon the ſame ſent to Solymannus the Turke, for ayde agaynſt the Chriſtians, promiſing that he would ſurrender to him free poſſeſſion of Hungary, if he woulde come and vanquiſh the army of Ferdinandus lying about the ſiege of Buda. The Turke maketh no long tarying, but taketh the occaſion, and with a mighty power, flieth into Hungary, and eftſoones diſcharging the hoſt of Ferdinandus, and putting them of from the ſiege of Buda, getteth the City into his own handes, commaunding the ſonne of Vainoda with his mother, to follow after his camp.

The cowardly viage of Ioachimus Duke of Brandeburg, againſt the turke.

500. Chriſtian ſouldiours taken and carried away of the turkes.

The horrible puniſhments practiſed of the turkes againſt the Chriſtians.

Ex Ioan Ramo, de rebus turcicis, lib. 2.

In the hiſtory of Ioannes Ramus it followeth, that when Solyman the Turk had thus preuayled againſt the Cittie of Buda aforeſayd, & agaynſt other parties more of Hũgary, by the aſſẽt of the Empyre, one Ioachimus duke of Brandeberg, prince Electour was aſſigned with a puiſſant army of choſen ſouldiours of all nations collected, to recouer the City of Buda from the Turke, and to deliuer the other parties of Chriſtendome from the feare of the Turke. an. 1542. Whiche Ioachimus at his firſt ſetting forth, appeared ſo couragious and valiaunt, as though he would haue conquered the whole world: but this great heate was ſo ſlaked in ſhort time by the Turke, that before any great ieoperdy was offered vnto him, he was glad to to be diſcharged of the viage, and with ſhame enough, returned home againe. And would God he had left behynde him in the field, no more but his owne ſhame. For the enemies hauing intelligẽce before of his cowardly departure, thinking to worke ſome poynt of maiſtry or victory before his goyng, did ſet vpon the right wing of his army (which chiefly conſiſted of Dutchmen of low Germany) out of the which they tooke awaye with them aboue 500. ſtrong and valiaunt ſouldiours, not killing them, but carying them away aliue. For whome it had bene muche better to haue ſtand to their weapon and to haue dyed manfully vppon the turkes, then by yealding themſelues to be diſgarniſhed of weapon and armoure, and ſo to be lefte to the curſed curteſie of the foule Turkes. To whome what curteſie was ſheweed, by the ſequele did appeare. For after yͤ Turkes had led them out of Hungary into their own dominiõ, after a moſt horrible & beaſtly ſort they diſſigured & mangled them, & ſo ſent them abroad through all Grecia to be witneſſes of the Turkes victory. Their kind of puniſhment was thus: Firſt they had their right arme thruſt through with an iron red hot, whereby they ſhould be vnable and vnmeet to all labour & warfare. Secondly, theyr heades were ſhauen to the very ſculles, after the maner of our Friers & monks, when they are newly ſhauen. Thirdly, they had all their priuy members cut of frõ their bodies to the intent to make thẽ vnfruitful for propagation which wound was ſo grieuous vnto them, that the greateſt part of them died therupon, the few that recouered the torment therof, led a life more bitter & more miſerable then death it ſelfe. And this kinde of cruelty was executed in order vpõ them all. In much like ſort did cruell Pharao exerciſe hys tyranny agaynſt the people of God in Egipt: who to deſtroy the generation of them, cauſed all the male children to be drowned in the riuer. Whereby it is the more to be hoped, that ſeing the tiranny of this turkiſh Pharao is come to ſuch an extremetie, the mercifull goodneſſe of God will the more ſhortly ſend ſome Moſes or other vnto vs for our ſpeedy deliueraunce. This was by the cruell Turkes done. an. 1542. witneſſed by Ioannes Ramus, which not onely writeth the ſtory, but by the teſtimony alſo of hys owne eyes recordeth the ſame to be true, beholding with his eies one of the ſame number in the city of Vienna, who hauing wife and children in Bruxelles, eyther for ſhame or ſorrow had no minde to returne home to his own houſe. Ex Ioan Ramo.

The falſenes of the turke in keeping no promiſe with the Chriſtians.

But to returne agayne to the city of Buda, from whẽce we haue digreſſed, here is not to be pretermitted, what falſhood and what cruelty the turkes vſed toward the Chriſtians there, after theyr victory. For after that Solyman yͤ Turke vpon the yelding and ſubmiſſion of the men of Buda, had geuen to them his promiſe of ſafety and life, within ſhort time, the ſayd turke picking a quarrell with them for ſelling Oxen vnto the Chriſtians, and for barganing with them, ſlue all the Magiſtrates of the ſayde Citty of Buda: like as in all other Citties, where ſo euer the Chriſtians yelded vnto him, he neuer, or very rarely kept his promiſe with them, neyther did euer any chriſtians ſpeed better wᵗ the turke, then they which moſt conſtantly did reſiſt him.

An horrible example of the beaſtly crueltie of the falſe turke.

And as hys promiſe with the Magiſtrates of Buda was falſe and wretched: ſo hys cruelty with the ſouldiors therof was more much notorious & abhominable. For in yͤ expugnation of Buda among yͤ reſt whiche were ſlayne ij. cohortes or bands of Chriſtian ſouldiors came alyue to his hands. To whom, when he ſeemed at the firſt to grãt pardon of life, he commaunded to put on their armour agayn, and to diſpoſe themſelues in order and battayle array after yͤ warlike maner of the chriſtians. whiche when they had accompliſhed readily, according to his commaundement, & he riding about the ranckes of them, had dilligently vewed and beholden them a certain ſpace, at length he commannded thē to put of their armour againe. which done, certaine of the talleſt and ſtrongeſt of them he pyked out, the reſidue he commanded by his ſouldiors comming behinde them, with ſwordes to be cut in peeces and ſlayne. Of the other, whome he had elected and choſen, ſome he ſet for markes and buttes to be ſhot at: ſome he appointed to his two ſonnes, for them to ſlaſh with their ſwordes, & try theyr ſtrength, which of them could geue yͤ deper woūd and (as they termed it) the fayrer blowe, whereby moſte bloud might follow out of their Chriſtian bodies. Ex Mart. Stella. De ſucceſsibus Turcarum.

Ex epiſt. Marti. Stellæ. de ſucceſsibus turcarum.&c.

After the winning of Buda, the Turke purpoſing not ſo to ceaſe before he had ſubdued and brought vnder his obedience all Hungary, proceeding further with his armye firſt brought vnder a ſtrong hold of chriſtians named Peſtum or Peſta, where a great number of Chriſtian ſouldiours partly were ſlayne, partly were ledde awaye to more cruell affliction.

The caſtle of Walpo wonne of the turkes.

Then he came to an other Caſtle called walpo ſituate in the confines of Boſna, Croatia, and Hungary. whiche forte or caſtle he beſieged three mōthes, while no reſcue nor ayd was ſent vnto them, neyther from Ferdinandus king of Hungary, nor from any other chriſtian Prince or Princes. whereupon at length the forte was geuen vp to the Turke, but more through the falſe treachery or cowardly hart of the ſouldiours, then of the Captaine. wherein is to be noted an example not vnworthy of memory. For when the cowardly ſouldiours, eyther for feare or flattery, wold needs ſurrender themſelues & the peece vnto the Turke, contrarye to the minde of the Captaine, whiche in no caſe would agree to theyr yelding: they thinking to find fauour with the turke, apprehended theyr captaine, and gaue him to Solyman. But ſee howe the iuſtice of God ſometymes by yͤ hands of the enemy, diſpoſeth the end of things to the rewarding of vertue, & puniſhing of vice. For where they thought to ſaue themſelues by the daunger of the faithfull Captain, the euent turned cleane contrary, ſo that yͤ Turk was to the captayne bountifull and very liberalll: and the ſouldiours, notwithſtanding that they had all yelded thēſelues, yet were all put to death and commaunded pitiouſly to be ſlayne, Ex Ioan. Martino Stella De Turcarum in Hungaria ſucceſsibus.&c.

The byſhop leaueth his flocke in the bryers.

There is in Hungary an other towne bearing yͤ name of fiue Churches, called Quiquecclesienſis, partly ſpoyled before, as is aboue mentioned, pag.751. but nowe thorough the loſſe of walpo, & by the hugenes of the Turkes armye (conteining in it.220.thouſand fighting men) was ſo diſcouraged and put out of hope and hart, that the biſh. and chiefe nobles of yͤ town fled before yͤ ieoperdy: the reſt of the cōmons, which were partly preuented by the ſodein comming of the turkes, partly for pouerty could not auoid ſent theyr meſſengers to the Turke, to yealde and ſurrender the towne, vppon promiſe of life, vnto his handes. whoſe promiſe how firme it ſtood, the ſtory leaueth it vncertaine. This is affirmed, that three dayes after the yelding of this Quinquecclesienſis, neuer a Turke durſt enter the Cittie.an.1543. Ex Ioan.Mart.Stella. & alijs.

Socloſia a towne in Hungary ſubdued of the turkes.

The next fort or holde gotten by the Turkes in Hungary, was Socloſia. The towne at the firſt inuaſion of the Turkes, was wonne, ſackte, and fiered. The caſtle within the towne, did ſomething hold out a tyme, and firſt requiring truce for 14. dayes, to ſee what ayd ſhould be ſent vnto them, and to deliberate vpon the conditions that ſhould be propoſed vnto thē, after the 14. daies expired, they (truſting to the ſituation and munitiō of the place, which was very ſtrong) began for a certayne ſpace ſtoutly to put back the enemy: But afterward ſeeing their walles to be battered, theyr foundations to ſhake (for the Turke had ſet xij. thouſand vnderminers vnder the diches of yͤ caſtle) & their ſtrength to diminiſhe, and miſdoubting themſelues not to be able ſong to hold out, agreed in like maner to yeld themſelues, vpon condition to eſcape with life & goods. which condition of ſauing theyr goodes, was the looſing of theyr lyues, eſpecially of the richer ſort. For the Turkes perceauing by that condition, that they were of wealth and ſubſtaunce, omitting the inferiour or baſer ſorte, fell vpon the wealthy men for their riches, and ſlue them euery one, an. 1543. Ibid.

Couetouſnes of wordly goodes is the deſtructiō of many a man.

The turke keepeth no promiſe.

In the which his hiſtory this is alſo to be noted, that during the time while the caſtle of Socloſia was beſieged, the villages & pages round about the ſame, came of theyr own accord, ſubmitting and yelding themſelues vnto the Turke, bringing in (as they were commanded) all kynd of victuall and forage, into the Turkes campe. which done, Solyman the Turke commaunded all the head men of the pages to appeare before hym, whiche humbly obeyed and came. Then the turke warned them to returne agayne the next day after, euery one bringing with him his inferiour retinue, and houſhold ſeruauntes. whiche when they had with like dilligence alſo, according to his commaundemēt accompliſhed, the turke immediately commaunded them euery one, in the face of hys whole army, to be ſlayn and ſo was this theyr reward. which reward the more that it declareth the bloudy crueltie of the turke: the more encourage it may miniſter to our men, the more conſtantly to withſtand him. Ex Martino Stella.

Example what commeth by Chriſten mens yelding to the turke.

Strigonium a citie in Hungary beſieged of the turkes.

An other ſtrong town there is in Hūgary named Strigonium, diſtant from Buda aboue ſayde, the ſpace ot fiue Dutch miles, agaynſt the whiche the Turkes made great preparation of ordinaunce, and all other inſtruments of artillary neceſſary for the ſiege therof. which cittie in like maner began alſo to be compaſſed and incloſed by yͤ turks, before it could be ſufficiently prepared & garniſhed of our mē but that the archbiſhop onely of Strigon priuely conueyed vnto them 200. Oxen. Such was then the negligence of Ferdinandus king of Hungary, which ſo ſlenderly looked vnto the neceſſary defence of his townes and cities. Moreouer ſuch was the diſcorde then of chriſten kinges & Princes, which in their ciuile diſſenſion and warres were ſo occupied and hoate in needeles quarrels, that they had neyther leaſure nor remēbraunce, to help in tyme there, where true neede required. which ſlender care, and cold zeale of yͤ Chriſtian rulers, not in tendering yͤ publicke cauſe, while they contend in priuate trifles, hath cauſed the Turke to come ſo farre as hee hath, and yet farther is like, vnleſſe the mercy of the Lord doe helpe more, then our dilligence. One of the chiefe captaynes within the Cittye, was Martinus Laſcanus, a Spanyard.

Negligence of Chriſten princes in publicke defence.

The Turkes in the beginning of the ſiege began firſt to attempt the Cittizens with fayre wordes, and accuſtomed promiſes, to yelde and gently to ſubmit themſelues. But they not ignoraunt of the Turks promiſes wiſely refuſed, and manfully ſtood ſo long as they coulde to the defence of their citty, now and then ſkirmiſhing with them in out corners, and killing certayne numbers of them: ſometime with their ſhot diſturbing their munitions, & breaking the wheeles of their gunnes. &c.

Three ſpeciall meanes the Turkes vſe in winning great fortes and cities: great multitude of ſouldiors: great ordinaunce and mortarie peeces: the third is by vndermyning. All which here in the ſiege of this Cittie, lacked not. This ſiege continued vehement a certaine ſpace: in whiche the Strigonians had borne out foure ſtrong aſſaultes, and ſlue many thouſandes of yͤ turkes, till at length the turkes eyther departing away, or els ſeeming to depart vnto Buda, the people at laſt being ſo perſwaded and made to beleue of ſome chiefe rulers of the citty (peraduenture not the trueſt men) the citizens being erected with hope and comforte, and ſinging Te Deum, as though the city had bene free from all daunger, ſodenly (by whoſe counſaile it is vnknowen) conueyed themſelues all out of the Citty. 300. horſemen alſo paſſed ouer the riuer and departed. The Italiās which were vnder Frāciſcus Salamanca a Spaniſh captayne hardly coulde be perſwaded by him to abide, whiche were in all ſcarſe.600.

within 3. daies after 300. Germaine ſouldiours, with 2. ſhips laden with ſhot, pouder, & artillery, were priuily let into yͤ town: So that of our men al there were ſcarſe 1300. ſouldiors. who ſeing the ſmall quantitie of their number, burning and caſting downe the towne & ſuburbes, tooke thē to yͤ caſtle: from whence they beate of the turkes valiantly with theyr ordinaunce, a good ſpace, and with wyld fire deſtroyed great companies of thē, till at laſt they ſeyng theyr walles to fayle them, and the whole caſtle to ſhake by vndermyning, but eſpecially by the working of a certayne Italian ſurnamed Preſbyter, they gaue ouer. Thys Italian whether for feare or falſhood, ſecretly vnknowing to the reſt of the ſouldiours, accompanied with two other conueyed himſelfe down from the walles, & being brought into the tentes of the next captayne or Baſſa of the turkes, there in the name of all hys fellowes, conuented with the turkes, to geue vp to them the Caſtle: wherupon yͤ turkes were bid to ceaſe the ſhooting. The goyng out of this Italian being priuy to the reſidue of hys fellowes, cōtrary to the lawes and diſcipline of warre, although it ſeemed to come of hys own head: yet for ſo much as the other ſouldiours were not ſure, but rather ſuſpected leſt the other Italians his countreymen had beene in ſome parte of

A turkiſhe truce taken with the Chriſtians, they not knowing thereof.

Thus while Laſcanus the chiefe captaine of the Chriſtians aforeſayd, wͭ his fellowe ſouldiours, were in a maſe what to doe or not to do: in the meane time came one running, who geuing a ſigne both to the Chriſtians and the Turkes, to hold theyr hands and weapons, for that it was againſt all lawe of warre to fight after peace and truce taken: our men, as they were commaunded, went into yͤ inward tower. The turkes in the meane time, had got into the Caſtle, and occupyed all the vtter parties. Then was Salamanca by the conſent of the reſt, ſent out to the Turk, who there being ſtayde that night, the next morrowe the Turkes bull or warant was ſent into the Caſtle, permitting free libertie to the Chriſtians to depart with bag and baggage. Who now beyng ready to depart, firſt were cōmaunded by the turkes compaſſing them round about, to caſt from them theyr dagges, launces, and battaile axes, into the trench. Then comming to the gate to go out, theyr ſwordes were taken from them, looking then for nothing but preſent death.

The falſe turkes neuer true in promiſe.

At laſt whē they were come a little further, other were ſent to them to diſcharge them of theyr helmettes, their tergattes, currettes, and what ſoeuer peece of harnes, was about them. Whereupon great feare came vpon them, leaſt ſome great cruelty ſhould be ſhewed vpon them. Solymā after he had long deliberated wͭ himſelf, whether to kil thē or not, at laſt contrary to all expectatiō, granted theyr liues but before they ſhould be diſmiſſed, he firſt cauſed them, in deriſion of Chriſtianitie, to be bayted with ſcornes and mockes throughout all the Turkiſh army, and ſo the next day commaunded them being ſtript out of theyr coats and apparell, to be reduced againe into the caſtle by companies ſetting ouer them certayne turkes with cudgels, & battes to lay vpon their backes and ſides, cauſing them to bury yͤ dead carcaſes, and to gather vp the rubbiſh broken downe from yͤ caſtle walles, and to ſcoure the ditches. Which done the next day following he demaunded of them by an interpreter, whether they would enter wages with hym, & take horſe and armour to ſerue hym in his warres, which condition diuers for feare were contented to take, ſeyng no other remedy to auoyd preſent death. Some neyther by manaſing wordes, nor for any feare of death, coulde be compelled thereunto, of whom certayn which ſtoode ſtoughtly in refuſing thereof, were preſently ſlayne, whome I may worthely recite in the number and catalogue of holy martyrs.

Holy ſouldiours & Martirs ſlaine of the turkes for their faithfull religion.

Of the foreſayde chriſtians, part were caryed ouer the riuer of Danubius, not without great vilany, & contumely moſt deſpitefull, For ſome had theyr wiues taken from them and caryed away, ſome had theyr wyues rauiſhed before theyr face: and ſuch as made or ſhewed any reſiſtance therat, had their wiues before them caſt into the riuer and drowned: alſo theyr infantes and yong children, beyng appoynted by the turkes to the abhominable order of the Ianizarites, mentioned before pag. 736. theyr parentes not conſenting thereunto, were precipitate and throwne into the riuer and drowned. All whiche thinges are teſtified by Iohn Martinus Stella, in hys Epiſtles in print extant, written to his two brethren, William, & Michaell. &c. Whiche Mart Stella moreouer this addeth & affirmeth, that he hymſelfe being the ſame time at Vienna, did ſee one of the foreſaid wiues, who being holden faſt by the heare of the head yet notwithſtanding hauing her heare pluckt off, caſt her ſelfe into the riuer Danubius, for the ſinguler loue to her huſband, and ſo ſwamme to the ſhippe where he was. And thus this miſerable company of Germaynes, Spanyards and Italiās mixt together, macerate with labours, with hunger pyned, with watchinges, dolours, and ſorow conſumed came at length to Schinda.

Ex Ioan. Mart. Stellæ in Epiſt. ad fratres.

When the tidings therof was noyſed at Vienna, partly with feare and dread, partly with indignation, all mens hartes were moued & vexed diuerſly. Some thought them not worthy to be receiued into their citty, ſhewing themſelues ſo daſtardly and cowardly. Other thought agayne that mercy was to be ſhewed vnto them, and commended their fact for that they being ſo few, & vnfurniſhed of ayde neither able to match by any meanes with ſuche an innumerable multitude of the turkes, kept themſelues till better time might ſerue thē. But howſoeuer the matter was to be thought of, the captaines brought the poore remnant of that rufull company, vnto poſſidonium, where the ſayd Captayns were layd faſt, and their kept in durance, to render accompt of the whole matter, howe it was wrought and handled. And thus haue ye, the lamentable ſtory of Strigonium.

Diuers opinions of the Viēnians touching theſe miſerable afflicted ſouldiours.

The Turke proceeding in his victories, conducted his army next vnto Tath, and to the parties lying nere about Comaron. This Tath was alſo a ſtrong hold in Hungary wherein were placed certayne garriſons, pertly of the Germaynes, partly of the Italians. The chieftayne of the Italians was one Anniball Toſſo, conſtitute by Philippus Torncilius. This Taſſo was a man well experte in prowes of warre: but of a filthy corrupt life, & alſo a foule ſwearer: and horrible blaſphemer of God and his ſaintes. To make the ſtory ſhorte, this forte of Tathe, before anye ſiege was layde vnto it, was yelded and geuen vp to the Turkes: vpon what conditions, or by whoſe meanes, the author ſheweth not: Thus much he ſheweth, that the ſayd Anniball ſhortly vpō the ſame, returning into Italy, was commaunded by Tornellius aforeſaid: to be apprehended and beheaded.

Tath, ſubdued of the turkes.

Victory hath neuer ſucceſſe vnder a wicked captaine and ſwearer.

After the turkes had ſubuerted and deſtroyed the forte of Tathe, they turned their power againſt Alba, ſurnamed Regalis, for that the kinges of Hūgary haue bene always wont there to be crowned, and buryed. This Alba is a litle well compacted citie in Hungary, hauing on yͤ one ſide a mariſhe ſomewhat foggiſhe or fenny, whiche made the town leſſe aſſaultable. But nere to the ſame was a woode from yͤ which yͤ turks euery day with vi. C. cartes, brought ſuch matter of wood and trees felled for the ſame purpoſe, into the mariſh, that within leſſe then 12. dayes they made it apte, and harde to their feete, whiche the townes men thought neuer could be gone vppon, but onely in the hard froſtes of wynter. At the firſt beginning of the ſiege, there ſtoode a little without the munitions in the front of the citie, a certayne church or Monaſtery, whiche the Cittizens pretending to mayntayne and keepe agaynſt the turkes, had priuily cōueyed light matter eaſely to take flame, with pouder, in ſecret places therof, and had hid alſo fire withal. Whiche done, they (as agaynſt theyr willes being driuen backe, withdrew themſelues within the munitions, wayting the occaſions, when this fire woulde take. Thus the turkes hauing the poſſeſſion of the churche, ſodenly the fire comming to the pouder, rayſed vp the Churche, and made a great ſcatter and ſlaughter among the barbarous turkes This was not ſo ſoone eſpyed of them within the towne, but they iſſued out vpon them in this diſturbance, and ſlue of them a great number: Among whom diuers of theyr nobles alſo the ſame time were ſlayne, and one Baſſa an Eunuch, which was of great eſtimation with yͤ turkes. Moreouer, in the ſame ſkirmiſh was taken one of thoſe gunners which the french king is ſayd to haue ſent to the Turke a little before. Whiche if it be true, let the Chriſtian Reader iudge what is to be thought of thoſe Chriſten princes, which not onely forſaking the common cauſe of Chriſtes Churche ioyned league with the turke, but alſo ſent hym gunners to ſet forward hys warres to the deſtruction of Chriſtes people, and to the ſhedding of theyr bloud, for whom they know the bloud of Chriſt to be ſhed. If this be not true, I ſhew myne authour: If it be, then let the Pope ſee and marke well howe hys title of Chriſtianiſsimus, can well agree with ſuch doinges.

Ex epiſt. Ioan. Marti Stellæ. ad fratres. De Turcar. in Hungaria ſucceſſibus.

But to let this matter ſleape, although the turkes (as ye heard) had wonne the fenne, with theyr pollicie and induſtry, againſt the Cittie of Alba, yet all this while the Albanes were nothing inferiour to theyr enemies, through yͤ valiant help & couragious indeuour of Octauianus Scruzatus, a captayne of Millane. By whoſe prudent counſaile and conſtant ſtanding, the buſy enterpriſes of the turkes did little preuayle a long time, till at length, ſodainly aroſe a thick fog or miſte vpon the cittie, where as rounde about beſides, the ſunne did ſhine bright. Some ſayde it came by Arte Magicall, but rather it may appeare to ryſe out of the fenne or mariſh, beyng ſo preſſed downe with mensfeete and other matter layd vpon it.

The turkes vſing the occaſion of this miſty darckenes in ſecret wiſe approching the walles, had got vp to a certayne fortreſſe, where the Germaynes were, before our men coulde well perceaue them: where they preſſed in ſo thicke, & in ſuch number, that albeit the chriſtian ſouldiors ſtanding ſtrongly to the defence of theyr lyues, dyd what valiaunt men in caſes of ſuch extremetie were able to doe: yet beyng ouermatched with the multitude of the Turks, & the ſodennes of their comming, gaue backe, ſeeking to retyre into the inward walles. Which when theyr other felowes did ſee to recule, then was theyr flyeng of all hands euery man ſtriuing to get into the Cittie. There was betweene the outward wales or vamures, and inward gate of the citty, a ſtraite or narrow paſſage, caſt vp in maner of a bancke or cauſey, pitched on both ſides: which paſſage or ingreſſe happened yͤ ſame time to be barred & ſtopped. By reaſon whereof the poore ſouldiors were forced to caſt them ſelues into the ditch, thinking to ſwimme as well as they could, into the cittye: where many of them ſticking in the mudde, were drowned: one preſſing vpon an other: many were ſlayne of their enemies comming behinde them, they hauing neither hart, nor power to reſiſt. A fewe whiche could ſwimme out, were receiued into the Citty: but the chiefe Captaines and warders of the towne were there ſlayne.

The cittizens being deſtitute of theyr principall captaines and warriors, were in great perplexitie and doubt among thẽſelues, what to do, ſome thinking good to yeld, ſome counſayling the contrary. This while the mindes of the cittizens were diſtract in diuers & doubtfull ſentences, the Magiſtrates minding to ſtand to yͤ turkes gentlenes, ſent out one of theyr heads vnto the turke, who in yͤ name of them all, ſhould ſurrender to him the citty, and become vnto him tributaries, vpõ cõdition they might enioy liberty of life & goods, which being to thẽ granted, after the turkiſh faith & aſſurance, firſt yͤ ſouldiors which were left wͭin yͤ citty, putting of theyr armour, were diſcharged & ſent away. Who being but onely 300. left of 4. enſignes of Italians, & of a thouſand Germaynes, by the way were layd for by the Tartarians, for hope of theyr ſpoyle: ſo that they ſcattering a ſunder one one way, an other an other to ſaue themſelues as wel as they could: fled euery one what way he thought beſt. Of whome ſome wandering in woodes & mariſhes faynted for famine: ſome were taken and ſlayne by the Hungarians, a few with bare and empty, and wythered bodies, more like ghoſtes then men, eſcaped & came to Vienna. And this befell vpon the ſouldiors.

Let neuer good Chriſtians ſtand to the turks gentlenes.

Now vnderſtand what happened to the yelding Citizens. So in ſtory it followeth, that when the turke had entred the towne, and had viſited the ſepulchre of the kynges for three or 4. dayes he pretented muche clemency toward the cittizens, as though he came not to oppreſſe them, but to be reuẽged of Ferdinãdus their king, & to deliuer them from the ſeruitude of the Germaines. On the fourth day, al yͤ chiefe & head men of the citty were cõmaunded to appeare before yͤ turke in a playne, not far frõ the citty where the condemned perſons before, were wont to be executed, as though they ſhould come to ſweare vnto the turke. At this commaundement of the turke, when the cittizens in great number, & in their beſt attyre were aſſembled, yͤ turk contrary to his fayth and promiſe, commaunded ſodenly a generall ſlaughter to be made of them all. And this was yͤ end of the citizens of Alba.

In which ſtory is alſo reported & mentioned of mine author, an horrible ſight and example of miſery, concerning a certayne captiue (a Chriſtian belike) who comming into Vienna, was found to haue in his ſcrip or ſatchel the halfe of a yong childe of two yeares old, which remayned yet vneaten, the other halfe beyng eaten before. an. 1543. The like fidelitie the turkes alſo kept, with the fort of Wizigradum and the ſouldiours therof. This Wizigradũ is ſituate in the mid way betweene Buda and Strigoniũ. Of the which fort or Caſtle, the higheſt tower ſo mounteth vpon the hil, that vnleſſe it be for famine and lack of water they haue not to dread any enemy. Notwithſtanding ſo it happened, that the lower peece being wonne, they in the higher tower abiding foure dayes without drink were cõpelled wyth liberty graunted of life and goodes, to yelde themſelues. But the deuiliſh turkes keeping no fayth nor promiſe, ſlue them euerye one, onely Petrus Amandus the captaine of the peece, excepted: who priuely was conueyed by the Captayne of the Turkes, out of the ſlaughter. an. 1544.

To theſe moreouer may be added the winning of Nouum Caſtellum in Dalmatia, where he ſlue all that were wͭin both ſoldiors & other, for that they did not yeld themſelues in time. Thus the turke, whether they yelded to hym or not, neuer ſpared the people and flocke of Chriſt.

As the falſe & cruell Turk was thus raging in Hungary, and intended further to rage without all mercy and pitie of the Chriſtians, and eaſely might then haue preuayled and gone whether he would for that Charles the Emperour and Franciſcus the french king were the ſame tyme in warre and hoſtilitie, and alſo other Chriſten Princes, as Henry Duke of Brunſwike, againſt Iohn Fredericke Duke of Saxonie, alſo Princes and rulers were contending among themſelues: beholde the gracious prouidence of our Lord and God toward vs, who ſeeing the miſery & hauing pittie of hys poore Chriſtians, ſodeinely as with a ſnafle reined this raging beaſt, and brought him out of Europe into his owne country againe, by occaſion of the Perſians, who were then in great preparation of war agaynſt the turkes, & had inuaded hys dominion. By reaſon wherof the turkes was kept there occupyed, fighting with the Perſians a long continuance. Whiche warres at length being atchiued and finiſhed, (wherein the ſayd Turke loſt great victoryes, with ſlaughter of many thouſandes of his Turkes) he was not onely prouoked by the inſtigation of certaine euil diſpoſed Hungarians, but alſo occaſioned by the diſcord of Chriſtan Princes, to returne agayn into Europe, in hope to ſubdue all the partes thereof vnto his dominion. Whereunto, when he had leuyed an armye incredible of ſuch a multitude of turks, as yͤ like hath not lightly bene heard of, ſee agayne the mercifull prouidence & protection of our God toward his people. And as the Turke was thus intending to ſet forward with this innumerable multitude againſt yͤ Chriſtians, the hand of the Lorde ſent ſuch a peſtilence through all the turkes army and dominions, reaching from Bithynia, and from Thracia, to Macedonia and alſo to Hungary, that all the turkes poſſeſſions almoſt ſeemed nothing els, but as a heape of dead corſes, whereby his viage for that time was ſtopped, and he almoſt compelled to ſeeke a new army.

Beſide this plague of the Turkes aforeſayde, whiche was worſe to them then any warre, other lets alſo and domeſticall calamities through Gods prouidence happened vnto Solymannus, the great rouer and robber of yͤ world which ſtayd him at home from vexing the chriſtians, eſpecially touching hys eldeſt ſonne Muſtapha.

This Muſtapha being hated and partly feared of Ruſtanus the chiefe counſailour about the Turke, and of Roſa yͤ turkes concubine & after his wife, was diuers times complayned of to his father, accuſed, & at length ſo brought into ſuſpicion and diſpleaſure of the turke, by them aforeſayd: that in concluſion hys father cauſed him to be ſent for to hys pauilion, where 6. Turkes with viſours were appoynted to put hym to death: who comming vppon hym, put (after theyr manner) a ſmall corde or bowſtring full of knottes about hys necke, & ſo throwing him downe vpon yͤ ground, not ſuffering hym to ſpeake one word to hys father, wͭ the twitch therof throtled & ſtrangled him to death his father ſtanding in a ſecret corner by, and beholding the ſame. Whiche facte being perpetrate, afterward when the Turke would haue geuen to an other ſonne of hys and of Roſa called Gianger, the treaſures, horſe, armour, ornamentes and the prouince of Muſtapha his brother: Gianger crying out for ſorow of his brothers death: phy of thee, ſayth he to hys father, yͧ impious and wretched dog, traytour, murderer, I cannot cal thee father, take the treaſures the horſe and armour of Muſtapha to thy ſelfe: and wyth that taking out hys dagger, thruſt it through hys own body. And thus was Solyman murderer & parricide of hys owne ſonnes: which was in the yeare of our Lord. 1552.

Sylyman the turke murdereth Muſtapha his owne ſonne.

Wherein notwithſtanding is to be noted the ſingular prouidence and loue of the Lord toward his afflicted chriſtians. For this Muſtapha as he was couragious & greatly expert and exerciſed in all practiſe of warre: ſo had he a cruell hart, maliciouſly ſet to ſhed the bloud of chriſtians: wherfore great cauſe haue we to congratulate, & to geue thanks to god, for yͤ happy taking away of this Muſtapha And no leſſe hope alſo and good comfort we may conceaue of our louing Lord, hereby miniſtred vnto vs, to thinke yͭ our mercifull God after theſe ſore afflictions of his Chriſtians vnder theſe 12. Turks afore recited: now after this Solyman intendeth ſome gratious good worke to Chriſtendom, to reduce & releaſe vs out of this ſo long & miſerable turkiſh captiuitie: as may be hoped now by takyng away theſe yong impes of this impious generation, before they ſhould come to worke theyr conceaued malice againſt vs: the Lord therefore be glorified and prayſed. Amen.

The louing prouidence of our Lord for his Chriſtians.

Good hope at Gods hand to be conceaued of Chriſtians.

Moreouer as I was in writing hereof, oportunely came to my handes a certayne writing out of Germanye, certifyeng vs of ſuche newes & victory of late atchieued againſt the turke, as may not a little increaſe our hope and comfort vs, touching the decay and ruine of the Turks power & tyranny againſt vs. Which newes are theſe: yͭ after yͤ turkiſh tyrant had beſieged with an army of 30000. men, the famous & ſtrong town and caſtle of Iula in Hungary lyeng 40. dutch myles beyond the riuer Danubius, which cittye had, by the ſpace of 6. weekes ſuſteined many grieuous aſſaultes: God through hys great mercy & goodnes ſo comforted the ſayd towne of Iula and the poore Chriſtians therein, at theyr earneſt prayers, that the Turke with all hys hoſte was driuen backe, by the handes of the generall, called Raretſhim Laſlaw and his valiaunt company, who not onely defended the ſaid town, but alſo conſtrayned the Turks to retyre, to the great ſhame and confuſion, with a great ſlaughter of the turkiſh rable: For the whiche the euerlaſting God be prayſed for euer.

The maner of the ouerthrow was this. As the foreſaid generall did ſee his aduauntage wᵗ Captayne George, and other horſemen of the Sclesians and Hungarians, they ſet on yͤ rereward of the Turks and killed about 8000. of thẽ, and tooke alſo ſome of their artillery and followed them ſo faſt, yͭ the Turkes were conſtrayned to flye into a mariſhe ground, and to breake the wheeles of the reſt of theyr artillary, to ſaue themſelues, and therwith they got a very rich booty, reſcuing beſides and taking from the Turks a great number of chriſtian priſoners. Like thankes alſo are to be geuen to God, for the proſperous ſucceſſe geuen to Magotſchie the valiaunt Captaine of Erla, who making toward the Turkes, and recountring with the Tartarians, ſlue of them about 8. hundreth.

Not long after this, it happened through the like prouidence of our God, a turkiſh Captayne called Begen, accompanyed wᵗ a thouſand freſhe horſemen came newly out of Turky, to go toward the citty named Quinque Eccleſiæ, or Finffenkyrchen: with whome the Erle of Serin by the way did encounter, and in the night ſetting vpon hym, killed the captayne and tooke 8. Cammels, and 8. Moyles laden with treaſure, and alſo got two red Guidons, wyth a whole great peece of rich cloth of gold, and with an other fayre and ſtraunge Jewell. The horſe of this foreſayd turkiſh captayn, was betrapped and decked moſt richly. The ſadle whereof had the pommell and the backe part couered ouer with plate of fine Arabicke golde, and the reſt of the ſadle, beſide the ſitting place, was plated with ſiluer very fayre gilded. The ſeate of the ſadle was couered with purple veluet: the trappers and bridle beſet with little Turkeys, and Rubies: which horſe was ſent to Vienna vnto the Emperour Maximilian for a preſent.

A great captaine of the turkes ſlaine and his treaſure taken.

Although the Earle would very fayne haue ſaued the Captayn, not knowing what he was, yet the Janizarites labouring to carry away their captayne, ſo ſtiffly defended thẽſelues, that the Earle with his company, was conſtrayned to kill both them and theyr Captayne. From whome the ſaid Erle of Serin yͤ ſame time got, xv. thouſand Turkiſh and Hungariſh Ducates: which mony was brought for the payment of the Turkiſhe ſouldiours in the towne aforeſayd of Finffenkyrchen. &c. All which be good begynninges of greater goodnes to be hoped for hereafter, thorough the grace of Chriſt our Lord, eſpecially if our Chriſtian rulers and potentates, firſt the churchmen & prelates for theyr partes: then the ciuile powers & princes for their partes, with holding theyr affections a little, will turne their brawles & variance, into brotherly concord and agrement, which the Lord of peace put in theyr mindes to doe. Amen. Or otherwiſe if it will ſo pleaſe the Lorde, that the turke come further vpon vs, ſo as he hath begonne, for our puniſhment & caſtigation, his grace then geue to the flock of his poore Chriſtians, conſtancie of fayth, pacience in ſuffering, and amendmẽt of life: For ſo J vnderſtand by publicke fame, although vncertaynly rumored by the voyce of ſome, that the Turkes power of late, this preſent yeare of our Lord 1566. hath perced the parties of Apulia within Jtaly, waſting and burning the ſpace of an. 100. myles toward Naples. which if it be certaine, it is to be feared, that the Turke hauing thus ſet in his foote, & feeling the ſweetnes of Jtaly, wil not ſo ceaſe before he get in both head and ſhoulders alſo ſo farre into Jtaly, that he will diſplay hys banners within the walles of Rome, & do with old Rome the like as Mahumete his great granfather did with newe Rome, the city of Conſtantinople, and as the Perſians did with Babylon.

The turke pearcing into Italy.

Coniectures why it is to be feared that the turke ſhall gette Rome.

The cauſes why we haue ſo to iudge, be diuers: firſt yͭ the ſea of Rome hath bene defended hetherto and mayntayned with much bloud, and therefore it may ſeeme not vncredible, but that it will not long continue, but be loſt wᵗ bloud agayne, according to the verdict of the Goſpell: He that ſtriketh with the ſword, ſhall periſh with yͤ ſword. &c. An other cauſe is, the fulfilling of the 18. chapter of the Apocalips: where is written that great Babilon ſhall fall & be made an habitation of deuils, and a denne of vncleane ſpirite, and a cage of filthye and vncleane byrdes: the fall whereof ſhal be like a milſtone in the ſea, that is, which ſhal not riſe agayne. And this to come before the day of iudgement, the text of yͤ ſayd chapter doth apertly declare: where the wordes do follow, ſhewing that the kynges of yͤ earth, and the marchantes which had to doe with the whooriſhe City, ſtanding a farre of for feare of the heate, and beholding the ſmoke of the ſayd Cittie flaming and burning wᵗ fire, ſhall bewayle and rue her deſtruction and deſolation &c. what citty is this, called great Babilon, whiche like a mylſtone ſhall fall and burne, and be made an habitation of vncleane ſpirites, and beaſtes, let the reader conſtrue. This is certayn and playne by theſe her kinges and marchantes ſtanding a far of for feare, and beholding her burning, that the deſtruction of this city (what cittye ſoeuer it be) ſhall be ſeene here in earth before the comming of the Lordes iudgement, as may eaſely be gathered by theſe iij. circumſtances, that is, by the ſtãding, the beholding, and the wayling of her marchauntes. By the which marchauntes and kynges of the earth, peraduenture may be ſignified, yͤ Pope, the rich Cardinalles, the great prelates and fat doctours, and other obedienciaries of the Romiſh ſea: who at the comming of the Turkes, will not auenture theyr liues for theyr Church, but will flee the citty (no doubt) and ſtãd a farre of from daunger: and when they ſhal ſee with their eyes, and heare with theyr eares the city of Rome to be ſet on fire and conſumed by the cruell Turks, the ſight thereof ſhall ſeeme to them piteous and lamentable, to behold the great and fayre city of Rome, the tall caſtle of S. Angell, yͤ Popes mighty ſea (where they were wont to fiſhe out ſuch riches dignities, treaſures, and pleaſures) ſo to burne before theyr eyes, and to come to ſuch vtter deſolation, which ſhal neuer be reedefied agayne, but ſhall be made an habitation of deuils and vncleane ſpirites, that is, Turkes and heathen Sultans, and barbarous Saracens. &c. This (J ſay) peraduenture may be the meaning of that prophetical place of the Apoc. not that J haue here anye thing to pronounce, but onely geue my geſſe, what may probably be coniectured. But the end at length will make this and all other thinges more playne and manifeſt. For miſtical propheſies lightly are neuer ſo well vnderſtand, as when the euent of them is paſt and accompliſhed.

The phropheſi of the 18. chap. of the Apoccalipſexpounded.

An other cauſe concurring with the cauſes aforeſayde may be collected, out of Paulus Iouius, who writing of yͤ ſubuerſion of Rhodes, which was as ye heard. an. 1522. vpon Chriſtmas day, ſayth that it chaunced ſodenly the ſame day in Rome, that as Pope Hadrian the vi. was entring into the church to his ſeruice, ſodeinly ouer hys head the vpper frontier or toppe of the chappel dore, which was of marble immediately as the pope was entring, fel downe and ſlue certayne of hys garde wayting vpon hym. whereby peraduenture may be ment, that the ruine of Rome was not long after to folow the loſſe of Rhodes.

The third cauſe Ex Paulo Iouio.

The fourth cauſe J borowe out of Ioannes Auentinus, who in his thyrd booke alledging the names, but not the wordes of Hildegardis, Brigitte, and other propheticall men hath theſe wordes: Si vera ſint carmina & vaticinia D. Hildegardæ, & Brigittæ. Sybillarum Germaniæ, & Bardorum fatidicorũ, qui ea quæ noſtro æuo completa vidimus, longo ante tempore nobis cecinerunt: Agrippinenſis Colonia, nolimus, velimus, Turcarũ caput erit, &c. That is, if the ſayings and propheſies of Hildegarde, of Brigitte, & of other propheticall perſõs be true, which beyng foretold long before, we haue ſeene now in theſe our dayes accõpliſhed: yͤ town of Colen wil we, nil we, muſt needes be the head city of yͤ turks. &c.

The fourth cauſe Ex Ioan. Auentino. Annal. lib. 3. fol. 30.

A propheſi.

And this J write not as one pronouncing agaynſt the City of Rome, what wil happen, but as one fearing what may fall. which if it come to paſſe (as J pray God it do not) then ſhall the Pope well vnderſtand, whether hys wrong vnderſtanding of the Scriptures, & his falſe flattering gloſers vpon the ſame, haue brought hym.

A caueat to the biſhop of Rome, if he be wiſe.

Wherefore my counſayle is to the Pope, & all hys Popiſh mayntayners and vpholders to humble themſelues, & to agree with theyr brethren by tyme, letting all contention fall: leſt that while the Byſhop of Rome ſhal ſtriue to be the higheſt of all other Byſhops, it ſo fall out ſhortly, yͭ the byſhop of Rome ſhalbe found the loweſt of all other Byſhops, or peraduenture no byſhop at all.

Whereupon alſo an other cauſe may be added, taken out of Hieronimus Sauonarola, who prophecieth that one ſhall come ouer the Alpes lyke vnto Cyrus, & deſtroy Jtaly. wherof ſee more, pag. 737.

Ex Paulo Iouio.

Thys Solimanus, if he be yet aliue, hath now reigned 46. yeares, who began the ſame yeare, in the which yͤ Emperour Charles the v. was crowned, which was an. 1520. and ſo hath continued by Gods permiſſion, for a ſcourge to the Chriſtians, vnto this yere now preſent. 1566. This Solyman by one of hys Concubines, had hys eldeſt ſonne called Muſtapha. By an other Concubine called Roſa, he had foure ſonnes, Mahumete, Baiazates, Zelymus, and Gianger. Of the whiche ſonnes, Muſtapha and Gianger were ſlayn (as ye heard before) by the meanes of their own father. And thus much concerning the wretched tyranny of the Turkes out of the authors here vnder written.

¶ A Notice touching the miſerable perſecution, ſlaughter and captiuity of the Chriſtians vnder the Turkes.

Perſecution vnder the turkes.

HEtherto thou haſt heard (Chriſtian Reader) the lamentable perſecutions of theſe latter dayes, wrought by yͤ Turkes agaynſt the people and ſeruauntes of Chriſt. In the reading wherof, ſuch as ſitte quietly at home, & be farre frõ ieopardy, may ſee what miſery there is abroad, yͤ knowledge and reading wherof, ſhall not be vnprofitable for all chriſtians earneſtly to wey & conſider, for that many there be, which falſely deceauing themſelues, imagin that Chriſtianity is a quiet and reſtfull ſtate of life, full of pleaſure & ſolace in this preſent worlde, when in deede it is nothing leſſe, teſtified by the mouth of our Sauiour himſelfe, who rightly defining his kingdome, teacheth vs that his kingdome is not of this world, premoniſhing vs alſo before, yͭ in this worlde we muſt looke for affliction, but in hym wee ſhall haue peace. Examples hereof in all partes of thys hyſtory through all ages are plenteous and euidẽt to be ſene, whether we turne our eyes to the firſt x. perſecutiõs in the primitiue Church during the firſt 3. hundreth yeares after Chriſt: or whether we conſider the latter 3. hũdreth yeares in this laſt age of the Churche, wherein the poore flocke of Chriſt hath bene ſo afflicted, oppreſſed & deuoured, yͭ it is hard to ſay whether haue bene more cruell agaynſt yͤ Chriſtians, the infidel Emperors of Rome in the primitiue age of the Church, or els theſe barbarous Turkes in theſe our latter times of the Church now preſent.

Compariſon betwene the perſecutions of the primitiue church and of the latter church.

Three ſpeciall enemies of Chriſtes Church.

Thus from time to time the Churche of Chriſt almoſt hath had litle or no reſt in this earth, what for the Heathen Emperours on the one ſide, what for the proude Pope on the other ſide, and on the third ſide what for the barbarous Turke: for theſe are and haue bene from the beginning the three principall & capital enemies of the Church of Chriſt, ſignified in the Apocalips by the beaſt, the falſe Lamb, and the falſe Prophet, from whom wẽt out three foule ſpirites like frogges, to gather together all the kinges of the earth to the battell of the day of the Lord God almighty. Apocal. 16. The cruelty and malice of theſe 3. enemyes agaynſt Chriſtes people hath bene ſuch, that to iudge which of thẽ did moſt exceede in cruelty of perſecution, it is hard to ſay: but yͭ it may be thought that the bloudy & beaſtly tyrannye of the Turkes eſpecially aboue the reſt, incomparably ſurmounteth all the afflictions and cruell ſlaughters that euer were ſeene in any age, or read of in any ſtory: In ſo much yͭ there is neither hiſtory ſo perfect, nor writer ſo diligẽt, who writing of the miſerable tyranny of the Turkes, is able to expreſſe or comprehend the horrible examples of theyr vnſpeakable cruelty and ſlaughter exerciſed by theſe 12. Turkiſh tyrants, vpon poore Chriſtẽ mens bodies, within the compaſſe of theſe latter 3. hũdreth yeares. wherof although no ſufficient relation can be made, nor nũber expreſſed: yet to geue to the Reader ſome generall geſſe or view thereof: let vs firſt perpend and conſider what dominions & Empyres, how many countries, kingdomes, prouinces, cities townes, ſtrong holdes and fortes, theſe Turkes haue ſurpriſed and wonne from the Chriſtians. In all which victories, being ſo many, this is ſecondly to be noted, that there is almoſt no place, which the turkes euer came to and ſubdued, where they did not either ſlay all yͤ inhabitants therof, or led away the moſt part therof into ſuch captiuity and ſlauery, that they continued not long after aliue: or els ſo liued, that death almoſt had bene to them more tollerable.

Apoc. 16. The crueltie of the furious turkes deſcribed.

Two things to bee noted in the turks: how many victories they haue got, & howe cruelly they haue vſed their victories.

Like as in the time of the firſt perſecutions of the Romayne Emperors, the ſaying was, that no man could ſtep with his foote in all Rome, but ſhould tread vpon a Martyr: ſo here may be ſayd, that almoſt there is not a towne, city, or village in all Aſia, Grecia, alſo in a great part of Europa, and Aphrica, whoſe ſtreetes haue not flowed with bloud of the Chriſtians, whom the cruell turks haue murthered. Of whom are to be ſene in hiſtories, heapes of ſouldiours ſlaine, of mẽ & womẽ cut in pieces, of childrẽ ſticked vpõ poles & ſtakes, whõ theſe deteſtable turks moſt ſpitefull (& yͤ in the ſight of theyr parentes) vſe to gore to death: ſome they drag at theyr horſe tailes & famiſh to death: ſome they teare in pieces, tying theyr armes and legges to foure horſes: other ſome they make markes to ſhoot at: vpõ ſome they trye theyr ſwordes, how deep they can cut and ſlaſh, as ye before haue read, pag. 777. The aged & feeble they tread vnder theyr horſes: womẽ wͭ child they ſpare not, but ripp theyr bodyes, and caſt the infantes into the fire, or otherwiſe deſtroy them, whether the Chriſtians yeld to them, or yeld not, all is a matter. As in theyr promiſes there is no truth: ſo in theyr victoryes there is no ſenſe of manhood or mercy in them, but they make hauocke of all.

Ex Marino Barletio de Scodr. expugnat. lib. 2.

So the Citizens of Croia, after they had yelded & were all promiſed theyr liues, were all deſtroyd and that horribly. In Myſia, after the king had geuen himſelfe to the turkes hand, hauing promiſe of life, Mahumet the Turke ſlew him with his owne hands. The Princes of Raſia had both theyr eies put out with baſens redde hoate ſet before them. Theodoſia, otherwiſe called Capha, was alſo ſurrẽdered to the Turke, hauing the like aſſuraunce of life and ſafety: & yet contrary to the league, the Citizens were put to the ſword and ſlaine. At the winning and yelding of Leſbos, what a number of young men and children were put vpon ſharpe ſtakes and poles, and ſo thruſt thorough? At the winning of the City of Buda, what tyrannye was ſhewed and exerciſed agaynſt the poore Chriſtians, whiche had yelded themſelues, and agaynſt the two Dukes Chriſtopher Billerer and Ioannes Tranbinger, cõtrary to the promiſe and handwriting of the Turke, is to be ſene in the ſtory of Melchior Soiterus, de Bello Pannonico.

Ex Michael. Soitero. lib. 1. de Bello Pannonico fol. 515.

Ex Bernardo de Breydenbach Decano Eccl. Magunt.

The like alſo is to be read in the ſtory of Bernardus de Breydenbach, who writing of the taking of Hydruntum, a City in Apulia, teſtifieth of the miſerable ſlaughter, of the young men there ſlayne, of old men troden vnder the horſe feet, of matrons & virgines rauiſhed, of women with child cut & rent a pieces, of the Prieſtes in the Churches ſlayne, & of the Archbiſhop of that Citty, who being an aged man and holding the croſſe in his hands, was cut a ſonder with a woodden ſaw. &c. The ſame Bernerdus alſo wryting of the ouerthrow of Nigropontus, otherwiſe called Chalcides, an. 1471. deſcribeth the like terrible ſlaughter: whiche there was exerciſed: where the Turke, after hys promiſe geuẽ before to the cõtrary, moſt cruelly cauſed all the youth of Italy to be pricked vpon ſharp ſtakes: ſome to be daſhed againſt the hard ſtones, other ſome to be cut in ſonder in yͤ middeſt, and other mo with other kinds of torments to be put to death: in ſo much that all the ſtreetes and wayes of Chalcides did flowe with the bloud of them, whiche were there ſlayn. In which hiſtory the foreſayd writer recordeth one memorable example of maydẽly chaſtity, worthy of all Chriſtians to be noted and commended. The ſtory is tolde of the Pretors daughter of that City, who being the onely daughter of her father, & noted to be of an exceeding ſingular beuty, was ſaued out of the ſlaughter, & brought to Mahumet the turke, to be his concubine: But ſhe denying to conſent to his turkiſhe appetite and filthynes, was commaunded therewith to be ſlayne and murthered, and ſo died ſhe a Martyr, keping both her fayth and her body vndefiled vnto Chriſt Ieſus her ſpouſe. Ibid.

Ex Bernardo Breydenb.

A notable example of maydenly chaſtitie.

The like cruelty alſo was ſhewed vpon them whiche kept the Caſtle, & afterward yelding themſelues vpõ hope of the turkes promiſe, were ſlayne euery one. What ſhould I ſpeake of the miſerable ſlaughter of Methone, & the Citizẽs therof dwelling in Peloponeſus: who ſeing no other remedy but neede to come into the Turkes hands, ſet the barne on fire where they were gathered together, mẽ, women, and children: ſome women alſo with child volũtarily caſt themſelues into the Sea, rather then they would ſuſtayne the Turkes captiuity. Vide pag. 734.

Vid. ſupra. pag. 734.

Miſerable it is to beholde, long to recite, incredible to beleue all the cruel parts and horrible ſlaughters wrought by theſe miſcreantes, agaynſte the Chriſtians, through all places almoſt of the world, both in Aſia, in Africa, but eſpecially in Europa. who is able to recite the innumerable ſocietyes and companyes of the Grecians Martyred by the Turkes ſword in Achaia, Attica, Theſſalia, Macedonia, Epirus, and all Peloponeſus: beſides yͤ Iland of Rhodes and other Ilandes, and Cyclades adiacẽt in the ſea about, numbred to 52. of the which alſo Pathmos was one, wher S. Iohn being baniſhed, wrote his reuelations. Where did euer the Turkes ſette any foote, but the bloud of Chriſtians there, without pitty or meaſure, went to wracke? & what place or prouince is there almoſt thorow yͤ world, wher yͤ turks either haue not perced, or are not like ſhortly to to enter? In Thracia, & through all the coaſtes of Danubius, in Bulgaria, Dalmatia, in Seruia, Tranſiluania, Boſna, in Hungaria, alſo in Auſtria, what hauocke hath bene made by them, of Chriſten mens bodies, it will rue any Chriſten hart to remember. At the ſiege of Moldauio, at the winning of Buda, of Peſta, of Alba, of Walpo, Strigonium, Socioſta, Tathe, Wizigradum, Nouum, Caſtellum in Dalmatia, Belgradum, Varadinum, Quinque eccleſie: alſo at the battel of Verna, where Ladiſlaus king of Polonie with all his army almoſt, through the raſhnes of the Popes Cardinall were ſlayne: at the winning moreouer of Zabiacchus, Lyſſus, Dimaſtrum: at the ſiege of Guntza, and of the faythfull towne Scorad, where the nūber of the ſhotte agaynſt theyr walles, at the ſiege thereof, were reckoned to 2539. likewiſe at the ſiege of Vienna where all the Chriſtian captiues were brought before the whole army and ſlayne, and diuers drawne in pieces with horſes: but eſpecially at the winning of Conſtantinople aboue mentioned, pag. 706. alſo at Croia & Methone, what beaſtly cruelty was ſhewed, it is vnſpeakeable. For as in Conſtantinople, Mahumet the dronken Turk neuer roſe from diner, but he cauſed euery daye, for his diſport, 300. Chriſtiā captiues of the nobles of that City to be ſlayn before his face: So in Methone, after that his captayn Omares had ſent vnto him at Conſtantinople 500. priſoners of the Chriſtians, the cruell tyraunt commaunded them all to be cut and deuided in ſonder by the middle, & ſo being ſlain to be throwne out into the fieldes.

A ſtraunge and a prodigious wonder of a brute beaſt towarde a dead Chriſtian body.

More humanitie ſeene in a brute beaſt then in the turke.

Leonicus Chalcondyla, writing of the ſame ſtory, addeth moreouer a prodigious narratiō (if it be true) of a brute Oxe, whiche being in the fieldes, and ſeing the carcaſes of the dead bodies ſo cut in two, made there a loud noiſe after the lowing of his kind and nature: & afterward comming to the quarters of one of the dead bodyes lying in the field, firſt toke vp the one halfe, & then comming agayne, toke vp likewiſe the other halfe, and ſo (as he could) ioyned thē both together. Which being eſpyed of them which ſaw the doing of the brute Oxe, and maruelling thereat, and word being brought thereof to Mahumet, he commaunded the quarters agayne to be brought, where they were before, to proue whether the beaſt would come agayne: who fayled not (as the author recordeth) but in like ſort as before, taking the fragmentes of the dead corps, layde them agayne together. It foloweth more in the author, howe that Mahumet being aſtonied at the ſtraunge wonder of the Oxe, commaunded the quarters of the chriſtiā mans body to be interred, and the Oxe to be brought to his houſe, and was much made of. Some ſayd it to be the body of a Venetian: ſome affirmed, that he was an Illyrian: but whatſoeuer he was certayne it is, that the Turk himſelfe was much more beaſtiall then was the very brute Oxe: which being a beaſt ſhewed more ſence of humanity to a dead man, thē one mā did to an other Ex Leonic. Chalcondyla.

The Byſhop with the Citizens of Methone ſlayne of the turke. Ex Andrea de Lacuna, & alijs.

To this crueltye adde moreouer, that beſide theſe 500. Methonians thus deſtroyed at Conſtantinople, in the ſaid City of Methone, all the townes men alſo were ſlayne by the forſayd Captayn Omares, and among them theyr Biſhop likewiſe was put to death. Ex Andrea de Lacuna, & ex Wolfgango & alijs.

Ex Ioanne Fabro, in oratione ad Regem. Henr. 8.

Iohn Faber in his Oration made before king Henrye the 8. at the appointment of king Ferdinandus, and declaring therin the miſerable cruelty of the Turkes toward al chriſtians, as alſo toward the biſhops and miniſters of the church, teſtifieth how that in Mitilene, in Conſtantinople, and Trapezunda, what Byſhops & Archbiſhops, or other eccleſiaſticall and religious perſons the Turks could find they brought them out of the cityes into the fieldes, there to be ſlaine like Oxen and Calues. The ſame Faber alſo writing of the battell of Solyman in Hungary, where Ludouicus the king of Hūgary was ouerthrown, declareth that 8. Byſhops in the ſame field were ſlayne. And moreouer, when the Archbiſhop of Strigon, and Paulus the Archbiſhop Coloſſenſis were found dead, Solyman cauſed thē to be taken vp, & to be beheaded and chopt in ſmall pieces. an. 1526.

The crueltie of the turke in Euboia.

What chriſtian hart will not pity the incredible ſlaughter done by the Turkes in Euboia, where as the ſayd Faber teſtifieth that innumerable people were ſticked & gored vpon ſtakes, diuers were thruſt through with a hoat iron, childrē and infants not yet wayned from the mother were daſhed agaynſt the ſtones, & many cut a ſūder in the midſt. Ex Iohan Fabro & alijs.

The prince of Seruia ſlayne & ſlayne of the turke.

Let neuer Chriſten prince truſt the turke.

But neuer did country taſte and feele more the bitter & deadly tyranny of the Turkes, then did Raſia, called Myſia inferior, & now Seruia. Where (as writeth Wolfgangus Dreſchlerus) the prince of the ſayde countrey being ſent for, vnder fayre pretence of words & promiſes, to come & ſpeak with the Turke, after he was come of his own gentlenes, thinking no harme, was apprehended & wretchedly & faſly put to death, & his ſkin ſlain of, his brother & ſiſter brought to Conſtantinople for a triumph, and all the nobles of his country (as Faber addeth) had theyr eyes put out. &c.

The turkes ſtirred vp of the deuil to fight againſt Chriſt.

The turkes are butchers of the Chriſtians.

Briefly to conclude, by the vehement and furious rage of theſe curſed caytifes, it may ſeme that Satan the old dragon, for the great hatred he beareth to Chriſt, hath ſtyrred them vp to be the butchers of all chriſten people, inflaming theyr beaſtly hartes with ſuche malice & cruelty agaynſt the name and religion of Chriſt, that they degenerating frō the nature of men to deuils, neither by reaſon wil be ruled, nor by any bloud or ſlaughter ſatiſfied. Like as in the primitiue age of the Church, and in the time of Diocleſian and Maximiliā, whē the deuil ſaw that he could not preuaile againſt the perſon of Chriſt which was riſen agayne, he turned all his fury vpon his ſely ſeruants, thinking by the Romayn Emperours, vtterly to extinct the name and profeſſion of Chriſt, out from the earth: So in this latter age of yͤ world Satan being let loſe agayne rageth by the Turkes, thinking to make no end of murdering and killing, till he haue brought (as he entendeth) the whole church of Chriſt, with all the profeſſors therof, vnder foot. But the Lord (I truſt) will once ſend a Conſtantinus to vanquiſh proud Maxētius: Moyſes to drowne indurate Pharao: Cyrus to ſubdue the ſtout Babilonian.

The miſerable ſtate of the Chriſtian captiues vnder the turke.

The buying and ſellyng of Chriſten captiues vnder the turks

And thus much hitherto touching our chriſtian brethrē, which were ſlain & deſtroied by theſe blaſphemous turks. Now forſomuche as beſides theſe aforeſayde, many other were pluckt away violently from theyr country, from their wiues & children from liberty, & from all their poſſeſſions, into wretched captiuity and extreme pouerty, it remaineth likewiſe to entreat ſomewhat alſo cōcerning the cruel maner of the Turkes handling of the ſayd chriſtian captiues. And firſt here is to be noted that yͤ turke neuer cōmeth into Europe to war againſt the chriſtiās, but there foloweth after his army, a great number of brokers & marchaunts, ſuch as buy men & children to ſell again, bringing with thē long cheines in hope of great cheates: In yͤ which cheynes they linke thē by 50. & 60. together, ſuch as remayne vndeſtroyd with the ſword, whō they buy of the ſpoiles of thē yͭ rob & ſpoyle the Chriſtian countryes: which is lawfull for any of the Turkes armye to doe, ſo that the tenth of their ſpoyle or pray (whatſoeuer it be) be reſerued to the head Turke, that is, to the great mayſter theefe.

Chriſten captiues tythed of the turke.

O wickednes paſſing all miſerie.

O miſerie aboue all miſeries.

Of ſuch as remayne for tithe, if they be aged (of whom very fewe be reſerued aliue, becauſe little profite commeth of that age) they be ſolde to the vſe of huſbandry or keeping of beaſtes. If they be young men or women, they be ſent to certein places, there to be inſtructed in theyr language and Artes, as ſhall be moſt profitable for theyr aduauntage, & ſuch are called in theyr tongue Sarai: and the firſt care of the Turkes is this, to make them deny the Chriſtian religion, and to be circumciſed: and after that they are appointed euery one as he ſemeth moſt apte, either to the learning of their lawes, or els to learn the feates of war. Their firſt rudimēt of war is to handle the bow, firſt beginning with a weake bow, and ſo as they growe in ſtrength, comming to a ſtronger bow, & if they miſſe the marke, they are ſharply beaten: & theyr allowance is two pence or three pence a day till they come & take wages to ſerue in war. Some are brought vp for the purpoſe to be placed in the number of yͤ wicked Ianizarites, that is, the order of the Turks champions, which is the moſt abhominable cōdition of al other. Of theſe Ianizaraites, ſee before pag. 736. And if any of the foreſayd yong men or children ſhal appeare to excell in any beuty, him they ſo cutte, that no part of that whiche nature geueth to man, remayneth to be ſeene in all his body, wherby while the freſhnes of age continueth, he is compelled to ſerue theyr abhominable abhomination: and when age cōmeth, then they ſerue in ſtead of Eunuches to wayte vpon Matrones, or to keepe horſes and Mules, or els to be ſcullians and drudges in theyr kitchins.

The ſeruitude of yong women captiues.

Such as be young maydens & beautifull, are deputed for concubines. The whiche be of meane beautye ſerue for matrones to theyr drudgery worke in theyr houſes & chābers, or els are put to ſpinning and ſuch other labors, but ſo that it is not lawful for them either to profeſſe their chriſtian religiō, or euer to hope for any liberty. And thus much of them which fall to the Turke by tithe.

The other which are bought and ſold amongſt priuate ſubiects, firſt are allured with faire words and promiſes to take circumciſion. Which if they will doe, they are more fauourably entreated, but all hope is taken from them of returning agayne into theyr country, which if they attempt the payne therof is burning. And if ſuch comming at lēgth to liberty, will mary, they may: but then theyr children remayne bond to the Lord, for him to ſell at his pleaſure: and therfore ſuch as are wiſe amongſt thē wil not mary. They which refuſe to be circumciſed, are miſerably handled: for example wherof, the author (which geueth teſtimony hereof) doth inferre his owne experience.

Ex Bartholomeo Georgionitz, Peregrina lib. de afflictionibus Chriſtianorum ſub Turca.

Such captiues as be expert in any manuall art or occupation can better ſhift for themſelues: but contrariwiſe, they whiche haue no handycraft to liue vpon, are in worſe caſe. And therfore ſuch as haue bene brought vp in learning, or be prieſts or noble men, & ſuch other, whoſe tēder educatiō can abide no hardnes, are the leaſt reputed, & moſt of all other neglected of him that hath yͤ ſale or keping of thē, for yͭ he ſeeth leſſe profit to riſe of them, then of the other: & therfore no coſt of raymēt is beſtowed vpon them, but they are caried about bare head, & barefote, both ſommer & winter in froſt and ſnow. And if any faynt and be ſicke in the way, there is no reſting in any Inn, but firſt he is driuē forward with whips, and if that will not ſerue, he is ſet peraduenture vpon ſome horſe: or if his weakeneſſe be ſuch, that hee cannot ſit, then is he layde ouerthwart the horſe vpon hys belly, like a Calfe, and if he chaunce to dye, they take of hys garment ſuch as he hath, and throw him in a ditch.

In the way moreouer, beſide the cōmon chayne, which doth incloſe thē all the hāds alſo of euery one are manicled which is becauſe they ſhoulde not harme theyr leaders, for many times it happened yͭ x. perſons had the leading of 50. captiues: & whē night came, theyr feet alſo were fettered, ſo yͭ they lodged in no houſe, but lay vpon the groūd al night.

The miſerable calamitie of Chriſten women being in captiuitie vnder the turkes.

The maner of Chriſten captiues, how they are brought to markets and ſolde.

The yong women had a litle more gentlenes ſhewed, being caried in paniers on the day time. But when nyght came, pity it was to heare the miſerable crying out of ſuch as were incloſed wͭin by reaſon of the filthy iniuries which they ſuffred by their cariers, in ſo much that the yong tēder age of 7. or 8. yeres, as wel of yͤ one ſexe as of yͤ other could not ſaue thē frō yͤ moſt filthy villany of the beſtiall turkes.

When the morning cometh, they are brought foorth to the market, to ſale, where the buyer if he be diſpoſed plucking of theyr garments, vieweth all the bones & ioynts of theyr body: and if he like them, he geueth his price, and carieth thē away into miſerable ſeruitude, either to tilling of their groūd, or to paſture their cattel, or ſome other ſtraūge kind of miſery incredible to ſpeake of: In ſo much that the author reporteth, that he hath ſene himſelfe, certeine of ſuch Chriſten captiues yoked together like horſe and oxen, and to draw the plough. The maid ſeruaunts likewiſe are kept in perpetuall toile and work in cloſe places, where neither they come in ſight of any man, neither be they permitted to haue any talke with theyr fellowe ſeruauntes. &c. Such as are committed to keep beaſtes, lye abroad day and night in the wilde fieldes, without houſe and harbor, and ſo chaunging their paſtour, goe from mountayne to mountayne: of whom alſo, beſide the office of keeping the beaſtes, other handy labour is exacted at ſpare houres, ſuch as pleaſeth theyr mayſters to put vnto them.

Chriſtians in their captiuitie, put to drawe in the plough like horſes.

The great daungers of Chriſten captiues which flye out of turky.

Out of this miſery there is no way for them to flye, eſpecially for them that are caryed into Aſia beyond the ſeas: Or if any do attempt ſo to do, he taketh his time chiefely about harueſt, when he may hide himſelfe all the day time in the corne, or in woodes, or mariſhes, and finde foode: and in the night onely, hee flyeth and had rather bee deuoured of wolues and other wild beaſtes, then to returne agayne to his maiſter. In theyr flying they vſe to take with them an hatchet and coardes, that when they come to the ſea ſide, they may cut downe trees, and binde together the endes of them, and ſo, where the ſea of Helleſpontus is narroweſt, about the Seſtos and Abydos, they take the ſea, ſitting vpon trees, where, if they winde & tide do ſerue luckely, they may cut ouer in foure or fiue houres: But the moſt part either periſh in the floudes, or are driuen backe agayne vpon the coaſtes of Aſia, or els be deuoured of wilde beaſtes in woodes, or periſh with hunger and famine. If any eſcape ouer the ſeas aliue into Europe, by the way they enter into no towne, but wander vpon the moūtaynes, following onely the Northſtarre for theyr guide.

The maner and ſhift of our men in getting ouer the ſea.

The manifold daungers by the way in flying.

The myſery of Chriſtian cities & prouinces which liue vnder the turkes tribute.

As touching ſuch townes & prouinces, which are won by the Turke, and wherein the Chriſtians are ſuffered to liue vnder tribute: firſt all the nobility there they kill and make away, the churchmen and Clergy hardly they ſpare. The Churches with the belles & all the furniture therof, either they caſt down, or els they conuert to the vſe of their owne blaſphemous Religion, leauing to the Chriſtians, certayn olde and blinde chappels, which when they decay, it is permitted to our mē to repayre thē agayne, for a great ſomme of mony geuen to the Turke: Neither be they permitted to vſe any open preaching or miniſtration. But only in ſilence and by ſtealth, to frequent together. Neither is it lawfull for any Chriſtian to beare office within the city or prouince, nor to beare weapon, nor to weare any garment like to the Turkes. And if any contumely or blaſphemy, be it neuer ſo great, be ſpoken agaynſt thē, or agaynſt Chriſt, yet muſte thou beare it, and holde thy peace. Or if thou ſpeake one word agaynſt theyr religion, thou ſhalt be compelled (whether thou wilt or no) to be circumciſed: And then if thou ſpeake one word agaynſt Mahumet, thy puniſhment is fire and burning. And if it chaunce a Chriſtian being on horſebacke, to meet or paſſe by a Muſulman, that is a Turkiſh prieſt, he muſt light from his horſe, & with a lowly looke, deuoutly reuerēce & adore yͤ Muſulman: Or if he do not, he is beatē down frō his horſe wͭ clubs & ſtaues.

If Chriſtians may not goe lyke turkes, why ſhould our Goſpellers goe like Papiſtes?

The turkes haue their fire & fagots, as well as our papiſtes.

The Chriſtians muſt light from their horſe, meting a turkiſh prieſt, and adore hym.

Furthermore, for theyr tribute they pay the fourth part of theyr ſubſtance and gayne to the Turke: beſide the ordinary tribute of the Chriſtians, whiche is to paye for euery polle within his family, a ducket vnto the Turke: which if the parentes cannot doe, they are compelled to ſell theyr children into bondage. Other being not able to pay go cheined in fetters from dore to dore begging, to make vp theyr payment, or els muſt lye in perpetuall priſon.

An other miſerie moſt lamentable, in takyng away Chriſten mens children from their parentes, to ſerue the turke.

And yet notwithſtanding, whē the chriſtians haue diſcharged all duties: it remaineth free for the turkes to take vp among the chriſtians children, whom the beſt like, and thē to circumciſe and to take them away being yong, from the ſight of theyr parēts, to far places, to be brought vp for the Turkes wars, ſo that they may not returne to them agayne: but firſt are taught to forget Chriſt, & then theyr parents: ſo that if they come agayne amongſt thē, yet are they not able to know theyr kinſfolkes and parents.

O myſerie.

This miſery paſſing all other miſeries, no man is able wͭ toung to vtter, or with words to expreſſe. What weping & teares, what ſorow and lamentatiō, what groning, ſighes, and deep dolor doth teare & rent a ſonder the woefull harts of the ſely parents, at the plucking away of their babes and children? &c. ſee theyr ſonnes & theyr own childrē, whō they haue borne and bred vp to the ſeruice of Chriſt Ieſus the ſonne of God, now to be drawn away violētly frō thē to yͤ warfare of Satan, and to fight agaynſt Chriſt: to ſee theyr babes borne of chriſtiā bloud, of chriſtiās to be made turks and ſo to be pluckt out of their armes and out of their ſight without hope euer to returne to them agayne: to liue perpetually with aliens, barbarous & blaſphemous Turkes, and ſo to become of the number of them which are called fatherles and motherles.

This is with teares rather thē with words to be expreſſed.

Albeit the ſame childrē afterward do greatly degenerate from the fayth of Chriſt, yet very many of them haue priuily about them the goſpell written of S. Iohn, In principio erat verbum &c. which for a token of remembraunce of theyr chriſtian fayth, they cary vnder theyr arme hole, writen in greek and araby. Who greatly deſire, and long looke for the reuenging ſword of yͤ Chriſtians to come & deliuer them out of theyr dolorous thraldome and captiuity according as the Turkes themſelues haue a prophecy, & greatly ſtand in feare of the ſame. Wherof more ſhalbe ſaid (Chriſt willing) in the chapter folowing.

Priuy Goſpellers in Turkie,

An olde Propheſie of the turkes touching the ſword of the Chriſtians.

¶ And thus haue ye heard yͤ lamētable afflictiōs of our chriſtian brethren vnder the cruell tyranny & captiuity of yͤ turks, paſſing all other captiuityes that euer haue bene to Gods people, either vnder Pharao in Egipt, or vnder Nabuchodonoſer in Babilō, or vnder Antiochus in yͤ tyme of the Machabees. Under the which captiuity, if it ſo pleaſe the Lord to haue his ſpouſe the church to be nurtered, hys good will be done and obeyed. But if this miſery come by the negligence & diſcorde of our chriſtian guides & leaders, then haue we to pray and cry to our Lord God, eyther to geue better harts to our guiders and rulers, or els better guides and rulers to his flocke.

And theſe troubles and afflictions of our Chriſten brethren ſuffered by the Turkes, I thought good and profitable for our country people here of Englande to knowe, for ſo much as by the ignoraunce of theſe, and ſuch like hyſtoryes worthy of conſideration, I ſee much inconuenience doth folow. Whereby it commeth to paſſe, that becauſe we Engliſh men being far of from theſe countryes, and little knowing what miſery is abroad, are the leſſe moued with zeale & compaſſion, to tender theyr greuaunces, and to pray for them, whoſe troubles we know not. Whereupō alſo foloweth, that we not cōſidering the miſerable ſtate of other are the les gratefull to God, when any tranquility by hym to vs is graunted. And if any litle cloud of perturbation ariſe vpon vs, be it neuer ſo litle, as pouerty, loſſe of liuing, or a litle baniſhment out of our countrey for the Lordes cauſe, we make a great matter thereat, and all becauſe wee going no further then our own country, and onely feeling our own croſſe, do not compare that which we feele, with the great croſſes, whereunto the Churches of Chriſt commonly in other places abroad are ſubiect, which if we dyd rightly vnderſtand, & earneſtly conſider, and pōder in our mindes, neither would we ſo exceſſiuely forgette our ſelues in time of our proſperity geuen vs of God: nor yet ſo impatiētly be troubled, as we are in time of our aduerſity, and all becauſe either we heare not, or els we pōder not the terrible croſſes which the Lord layeth vpon our other brethren abroad in other nations, as by this preſent ſtory here prefixed may appeare.

Neceſſary for many cauſes that the troubles of the church be knowen.

The largenes of the Turkes dominions declared.

NOw conſequently remayneth, as I haue ſhewed hitherto what tyranny hath bene vſed of the Turkes agaynſt Chriſtes people, ſo to declare likewiſe, how far this tyranny of the Turkes hath extended and ſpread it ſelfe, deſcribing as in a table, to the Chriſtē Reader, what landes, countryes and kingdomes the Turkes haue wonne, and got from Chriſtendome, to the intent that when Chriſten princes ſhal behold the greatnes of the Turks dominions ſpread almoſt through al the world, and how litle a part of Chriſtianity remayneth behinde, they may thereby vnderſtand the better, howe it is time now for them to beſtyrre them, if euer they thinke to do any good in Gods Church. And therefore to make a cōpendious draught as in a briefe table, of ſuch countryes, kingdomes, and dominions, gott from vs by the Turkes, we will firſt beginne with Aſia, deſcribing what tractes, countryes, cityes and Churches, the Turke hath ſurpriſed, and violently pluckt away from the ſociety of Chriſtian dominions, taking onely ſuche, as be moſt principall, and chiefely them that be in Scripture conteyned, for that it were to long to diſcourſe all and ſingular ſuch places by name, as the Turke hath vnder hys ſubiection.

The world being deuided commonly into three parts, Aſia, Africa, and Europa, Aſia is counted to be the greateſt in compas, conteining as much as both the other, and is deuided into 2. portions, the one called Aſia Maior: the other called Aſia minor. And although the Empery of the Turke extendeth vnto them both: yet eſpecially his dominion ſtandeth in the other Aſia, which is called Aſia Minor, which reacheth from the coaſtes of Europa, vnto Armenia Maior, beyond the riuer Euphrates, and comprehendeth theſe regions and Cityes vnder written.

Ex Aene.ſyluio.Lib.De Orbis Deſcrip.cap 74.

Æneas Syluius, otherwiſe Pope Pius.2. in deſcribing of Aſia Minor, cap. 74. reciteth a certayne facte of a worthy Virgine: who at what time the Turkes were beſieging a certayne towne in Leſbos, and had caſt downe a greate part of the walles, ſo that all yͤ Townesmen had geuen ouer, putting on mans harneſſe, ſtepped forth into the breach, where not onely ſhe kept the Turkes from entring in, but alſo ſlewe of them a great ſort. The Citizens ſeeing the rare courage, and good ſucceſſe of the Mayden, toke to them agayne theyr hartes and harnes, and ſo luſtely layd about them, that an incredible number of the Turkes were ſlayne. The reſt being repulſed from the land, reculed into theyr ſhips: who being then purſued by a Nauy of Caliſa, were worthelye diſcomfited likewiſe vpon the ſea. And thus was the Iſle of Leſbos at that time, by a poore Virgine, that is, by the ſtronge hand of the Lord working in a weake Creature preſerued from the Turkes. Ex Æne.ſil. Et Seb. Munſt.Lib.5.

A memorable facte of a virgine, in defence of her countrey.

Beſide theſe Regions and Countryes of Aſia minor, aboue deſcribed, Seb. Munſter in the fift booke of his Coſmography, declareth moreouer, that the Turkes and Sultannes haue vnder theyr ſubiection, both Arabia, Perſia, and alſo India exterior, wherein is Calecute. The which Perſia, although it be vnder the Sophi, which is an enemy to the Turke, yet it is to be thought that he is a Sultane, one of the Turkyſhe and Mahometiſh Religion. This Perſia and India were once ſeaſoned with Chriſtes Goſpell, as may appeare by the primitiue Churche, pag.98. And thus haue you the partes of Aſia deſcribed, which in times paſt being almoſt Chriſtened, do now ſerue vnder the Turke.

As I was writing hereof, a certayne ſoud of lamentable newes was brought vnto vs howe the Turke, whome wee had hoped before to haue bene repulſed by the Emperour Maximilian out of Chriſtendome, hath now of late this preſent yeare. 1566. got the towne of Gyula about Tranſyluania, after they had ſuſteined 16 of his moſt forceable aſſaultes, deſtroying in the ſame moſt cruelly, many thouſand of our chriſten brethren, men, women, and children: but becauſe we haue no full certaynty, we will referre ẏ ſtory therof, to further information,

¶ The Prophecyes of the holy Scriptures conſidered touching the comming vp and finall ruine and deſtruction of this wicked kingdome of the Turkes, with the Reuelations and foreſhewinges alſo of other authours concerning the ſame

Propheſies conſidered for the beginning and falling of the Turkes kingdome.

FOr ſo muche as you haue hitherto ſufficiently heard, to what quantity & largenes the dominon of the Turkes hath encreaſed, & doe vnderſtand what cruell tyranny theſe wretched miſcreants haue and do dayly practiſe moſt haynouſly whereſoeuer they come, agaynſt the ſeruaunts and profeſſors of Chriſt: it ſhall not be vnprofitable, but rather neceſſary, and to our great comfort, to cõſider and examine in the Scriptures, with what propheſyes the holy ſpirit of the Lord hath premoniſhed and forewarned vs before, of theſe heauy perſecutions to come vpon his people by thys horrible Antichriſt. For as the gouernment and conſtitutian of times and ſtates of monarchies & pollicies fall not to vs by blind chaūce, but be adminiſtred and alotted vnto vs from aboue: ſo it is not to be ſuppoſed, that ſuch a great alteration and mutation of kingdomes, ſuch a terrible & generall perſecutiō of Gods people, almoſt through all Chriſtedome, and ſuch a terrour of the whole earth, as is now moued and gendred by theſe Turkes, cōmeth without the knowledge, ſufferaūce and determination of the Lord before, for ſuch endes and purpoſes, as his deuine wiſedome doth beſt know. For the better euidēce & teſtimony whereof, he hath left in his Scriptures ſufficiēt inſtructiō, & declaration, whereby we may plainly ſee to our great cōfort, how theſe greeuous afflictions & troubles of the Church, though they be ſharpe & heauy vnto vs, yet they come not by chaūce or by mās working onely, but euen as the Lord himſelfe hath appointed it, and doth permit the ſame.

Two things to be conſidered in the tyme and order of the olde Teſtament. The ſcriptures, & the people.

And firſt to begin with the tyme of the old Teſtament let vs ſeriouſly aduiſe & ponder, not onely the Scriptures & Prophecies therein conteined, but alſo let vs cōſider the whole ſtate, order, and regimēt of that people: the Church I meane of the Iſraelites. For although the Scriptures and Prophetes of the old Teſtament, were properly ſent to that people, & haue their relatiō properly to things done or that ſhould be done, in that cōmōwealth, of which prophetes, Iohn Baptiſt was the laſt & made an end, as our Sauiour himſelfe witneſſeth, ſaying: The law and Prophets be vnto ẏ tyme of Iohn. &c. Yet notwithſtādyng the ſayd people of that old Teſtamēt, beareth a liuely Image & reſemblaunce of the vniuerſall Church which ſhould follow, plāted by the ſonne of God through the whole earth: So that as the Prophetes of God ſpeaking to them from the mouth & word of God, prophecied what ſhould come to paſſe in that people: ſo likewiſe the whole courſe & Hyſtory of thoſe Iſraelites, exemplifieth & beareth a Prophetical image to vs, declaring what is to be looked for in ẏ vniuerſall Church of God diſperſed through the world, planted in Chriſt Ieſus his ſonne, according as Phil. Melancthon grauely gathering vpon the ſame, teſtifieth in diuers places, in his Commentary vpon the Prophete Daniell.

As firſt the Hiſtory of godly Abell ſlayne by wicked Cain, what doth it importe, or Prophecie, but the conditiō of the people and ſeruauntes of God, which commonly go to wracke in this world, and are oppreſſed by the contrary part, which belongeth not to God?

The Saracens come of Iſmael. Reſemblāce betweene the 12. ſōnes of Iſmaell: and the 12. Ottoman Turkes.

The like may be ſaid alſo of Iſaac, and Iſmaell: of Iacob and Eſau. Of whō, thoſe two which were the children of promiſe, and belonged to the election of God, were perſecuted in this world, of the other, whiche were reiected. Where moreouer is to be noted cōcerning Iſmaell, that of his ſtocke after the fleſhe, came the Saracens: whoſe ſect the Turkes do now profeſſe & mainteine. And as Iſmaell had but xii. ſonnes: ſo it were to be wiſhed of God, that this Solyman which is the twelfe of the Turkiſh generation, may be the laſt. But of this, better occaſion ſhall follow (the Lord willyng) hereafter.

The olde church of the Iſraelites beareth a repreſentatiō or image of the publicke church of Chriſt Ieſus

Furthermore, of the xii. tribes of Iſrael, the ſacrate hiſtory ſo reporteth, that after they had a long ſeaſon cōtinued together, by the ſpace of. 8. or. 9. C. yeares, at length, for their idolatrie, & tranſgreſſion of their forefathers. x. tribes of them were cut of, and diſperſed amōg the Gentiles. 130. yeares before the captiuitie of Babilon: ſo that but ij. tribes onely remayned free, and they alſo at laſt, after a. 130. yeares, were captiued vnder the Babylonians, for a certaine time. No otherwiſe hath it happened with ẏ Church of Chriſt almoſt in the vniuerſall world, of which Church the greateſt part both in Aſia, in Africa, & almoſt in Europe (where the holy Apoſtles ſo laboured and trauailed) we ſee now to be diſparcled among the Turkes, and their cādleſtickes remoued (the Lord of his great grace, reduce them agayne. Amen:) So that of xij. partes of Chriſtendome, which was once planted in Chriſt, ſcarſe ij. partes remayne cleare, and they how long they ſhall ſo continue, the Lord knoweth: And albeit thorough the mercy of the Lord, they eſcape the dāger of the Turkes, yet haue they bene ſo beaten with the Pope, that they had bene better almoſt to haue bene in the Turkes handes.

1. Cor. 10.

Agayne, after the ſayd Iſraelites returned, beyng reſtored of Cyrus, let vs conſider well their ſtory, the continuance of tyme, the maner of their regimentes, and what afflictions they ſuſteined in the tyme of the Machabees: and we ſhall ſee a liuely repreſentation of theſe our dayes expreſſed in that Propheticall people, accordyng as S. Paul writyng of them, ſheweth how all thynges happened to them in figures: that is the actiōs and doynges of that one nation, be as figures and types of greater matters, what ſhall happen in the latter times of the whole Church vniuerſally in Chriſt collected.

The church of the Iewes a figure of Chriſtes Church.

So the tranſmigration & deliueraunce agayne of thoſe two tribes, declareth to vs ẏ affliction of Chriſtes Church for ſinne: and yet ẏ God will not vtterly reiect his people for his ſonnes ſake, as by manifold examples of ẏ Church hetherto may well appeare.

Ex Phil. Melanct. in Danielem. cap. 9.

Againe, the continuance of the law firſt geuen by Moſes, vnto the deſtruction of the ſayde people by Titus, amounteth to 1564. yeares: So we counting the age of the new Teſtament, and reckening from the day of our redemption vnto this preſent, be come now to the yeare 1534. lacking but only 33. yeares of the full number.

The tymes and yeares of the old church, compared with the newe.

The rule and dominion of the high prieſtes in the Iewes common wealth, and of our prelates, compared.

Likewiſe in counting the yeares from their deliuerāce out of captiuitie, to the ende of their diſſolution, we finde 564. yeares, during which yeares, as the Churche of the Iewes was not gouerned vnder the authoritie of kings, but the high Prieſts tooke all the power and authoritie to themſelues: ſo we Chriſtians for the ſpace eſpecially of theſe later 564. yeares, what haue we ſeene and felt, but only the iuriſdiction and domination of the Pope and his high Prieſts, plaieng the Rex in all countreys, and ruling the whole: whereby, by the count of theſe yeares, it is to be thought the daye of the Lordes comming not to bee farre off.

Antiochus beareth a figure of Antichriſt.

The family of Antiochus.

The family of the Turkes.

Furthermore, in thoſe latter yeares of the Iewes kingdome, what troubles and afflictions that people ſuſteined three hundreth yeares together, but chiefly, the laſt 166. yeares before the comming of Chriſt, by Antiochus and his felowes, the hiſtory of ẏ Machabees cā report. Wherein we haue alſo notoriouſly to vnderſtād ẏ miſerable vexations and perſecutions of Chriſtian Churches in theſe latter endes of the world by Antichriſt: For by Antiochus Antichriſt (no doubt) is figured and repreſented. Thys Antiochus ſurnamed Magnus, and Antiochus Epiphanes his ſonne, came of the ſtocke of Seleucus Nicanor, much like as the Mahumetes the Turke, and Solymannus, came of the ſtocke of Ottomannus. Wherein this is to be noted and pondered, that like as of the ſayd Seleucus iſſued xij. Syrian Kings one after another of that generation, which reigned ouer ẏ Iſraelites with much ſeueritie and tiranny: ſo of this diueliſh generatiō of Ottomannus, haue come xij. Turkiſh tyraunts, whereof thys Solyman is now the twelfe, God grant he may be ẏ laſt. And as the ij. laſt Antiochi, being ſonnes of the ij. brethrē, did fight together for the kingdome, and in fighting were both ſlaine, and ſhortly after the kingdome fell to the Romaines: ſo the Lorde graunt for Chriſtes ſake, that the bloudy brood of this old Solyman, (which had reigned now 46. yeares, may ſo fight together, and periſh in their owne bloud, that the bloudy tyranny of theirs may come to a finall end for euer, Amen.

And that the truth heereof may the better appeare to ſuch as be diſpoſed to meditate more vpon the matter, I thought good and profitable for the reader, to ſet before his eies, in table wiſe, the catalogue of both theſe Antichriſtian families, with the names and ſucceſſion of the perſons, firſt of the twelue Syrian Kings, then of the twelue Ottomans, in like number and order.

The tyme of Antichriſt examined by propheſies.

Theſe two peſtilent families and generations, riſing out (doubtles) from the bottomles pit, to plague yͤ people of God, as in number of ſucceſſion they do not much differ: ſo in maner of their doings and wicked abhominations, they be as neere agreeing, being both enemies alyke to the people and Church of Chriſt, both murtherers and paricides of their owne brethren and kindred, both blaſphemers of God, and troublers of the whole worlde. wherein we haue all to learne and note by the way, the terrible anger of almighty God againſt ſinne, and wickednes of men.

One Antichriſt prefigureth another.

Furthermore, who ſo is deſpoſed to conſider and caſt the courſe of times, and to marke how things be diſpoſed by the maruelous operation of Gods prouidēce, ſhal finde the times alſo of theſe two aduerſaries, in much like ſorte to concurre and agree. For in conſidering with our ſelues both the Teſtaments and Churches of God, the firſt of the Jewes, the ſecond of the Chriſtians, looke what time had the Syrian Kings to rage then in Hieruſalem, the ſame proportion of time hath now the tiranny of yͤ Turks to murther the Chriſtians: ſo that the one Antichriſt may well repreſent and prefigure the other. For as by the booke of Machabees may appeare, Antiochus Epiphanes was about the 191. yeares before the paſſion of our Sauiour, and day of our redemption: ſo now caſting the ſame number from this preſent yeare backward, we ſhall finde it to be about the ſame yeare and time, when Baiazetes the fourth Turke after Ottoman, began to remoue his Jmperiall ſeate from Burſa in Bithynia, to Adrianople in Europe, which is a City of Thracia. Jn which yeare & time began all the miſchiefe in Europe, as is to be ſeene before, pag. 738. and this was the yeare of our Lord 1375. Unto yͤ which yeare, if we adde 691. it maketh 1566. according to the propheſie of the Apocal. chap. 20. where it is propheſied of Gog and Magog, that they ſhall compaſſe about the tents of the Saincts, and the well beloued Citie, by the which welbeloued Citie, is meant (no doubt) Europa: and this was in the yeare aboueſaid 1375. Although touching the preciſe points of yeares and times, it is not for vs greatly to be exquiſite therein, but yet where diligence and ſtudious meditation may helpe to knowledge, J would not wiſh negligence to be a pretence to ignorāce.

Apoc.cap.20.

Machab.lib.& cap.1.
The furious crueltie of Antiochus agaynſt Gods people.

And thus much for the times of Antiochus and his felowes. Now what crueltie this Antiochus exerciſed againſt the people of God, it is manifeſt in the hiſtory of the Machabees: where we reade, that this Antiochus in the eight yeare of his reigne, in his ſecond comming to Hieruſalem, firſt gaue forth in commaundement, that all the Jewes ſhould relinquiſh the law of Moſes, and worſhip the Jdole of Jupiter Olimpius, which he ſet vp in yͤ temple of Hieruſalem. The bookes of Moſes and of the Prophetes he burned. He ſet garriſons of ſouldiours to warde the Jdole. Jn the Citie of Hieruſalem he cauſed the feaſtes and reuels of Bacchus to be kept, full of all filthe and wickednes. Olde men, women, and virgines, ſuch as woulde not leaue the lawe of Moſes, with cruell tormentes he murthered. The mothers that would not circumciſe theyr children, he ſlue. The children that were circumciſed, hee hanged vp by the neckes. The temple he ſpoiled & waſted. The aultar of God, and candleſticke of gold, with the other ornaments and furniture of the temple, partly he caſt out, partly he caried away. Contrary to the lawe of God, he cauſed them to offer, and to eate Swines fleſhe. Great murther and ſlaughter he made of the people, cauſing thē either to leaue their lawe, or to loſe their liues. Among whome, beſides many other, with cruell tormentes he put to death a godly mother with her vij. ſonnes, ſending hys cruell proclamations through all the land, that whoſoeuer kept the obſeruauncies of the Sabboth, and other rites of the lawe, and refuſed to cōdeſcend to his abhominations, ſhould be executed. By reaſon whereof the Citie of Hieruſalem was left voide and deſolate of all good mē, but there was a great nūber, that were contented to follow & obey his Jdolatrous proceedings, and to flatter with the king, became enemies vnto ther brethren. Briefly, no kind of calamity, nor face of miſerie could be ſhewed in any place, which was not there ſene. Of yͤ tiranny of this Antiochus, it is hiſtoried at large in yͤ book of Machabees: And Daniell propheſieng before of yͤ ſame, declareth yͭ the people of yͤ Jewes deſerued no leſſe for their ſins and tranſgreſſions.

1.Machab. cap.1.
Daniel.9.

Antiochus a figure of the Turke.

By conſent of all writers, this Antiochus beareth a figure of the great Antichriſt, which was to folow in the latter end of the world, and is already come, & worketh what he can agaynſt vs: Although as S. John ſayth, there haue bene, and be many Antichriſtes, as parts and members of the body of Antichriſt, which are forerūners: yet to ſpeake of yͤ head & principall Antichriſt, & great enemy of Chriſts Church, he is to come in yͤ latter end of the world, at what tyme ſhall be ſuch tribulation, as neuer was ſene before: whereby is ment (no doubt) the Turke, prefigured by this Antiochus. By this Antichriſt, J do alſo meane all ſuch, which followyng the ſame doctrine of the Turkes, thinke to be ſaued by their workes and demerites, & not by their fayth onely in the ſonne of God, of what title and profeſſiō els ſoeuer they be: eſpecially if they vſe the like force & violence for the ſame, as he doth. &c.

Ex Lyra in Gloſa ordin. cap.1.Machab.

The name of Antichriſt what it conteyneth.

Of the tyranny of this Antiochus aforeſayd, and of the tribulations of the Church in the latter tymes both of the Jewes Church, and alſo of the Chriſtian Church to come, let vs heare & conſider the words of Daniell in xj. chap. & alſo in his vij. chap. Prophecying of yͤ ſame as foloweth.

Dan.cap.11.

He ſhall returne and freat agaynſt the holy couenaunt: ſo ſhall he do, he ſhall euen returne and haue intelligence with them that forſake the holy couenaunt. And armes ſhall ſtand on his part, and they ſhall pollute the Sanctuary of ſtrength, and ſhall take away the dayly ſacrifice, and they ſhall ſet vp the abhominable deſolation. And ſuch as wickedly breake the couenaunt, ſhall flatter with him deceitfully: but the people that doe know their God, ſhall preuayle and proſper. And they that vnderſtand among the people, ſhall inſtruct many: yet they ſhall fall by ſword and by flame, by captiuitie, and by ſpoyle many dayes.

Now when they ſhall fall, they ſhalbe holpen with a little helpe: but many ſhall cleaue vnto them faynedly. And ſome of them of vnderſtandyng ſhall fall to be tryed, and to be purged, and to make them white, till the tyme be out: for there is a tyme appointed. And the kyng ſhall doe what him lyſt: he ſhall exalte himſelfe, and magnifie himſelfe agaynſt all that is God, and ſhall ſpeake marueilous thynges agaynſt the God of Gods, and ſhall proſpere, till the wrath be accompliſhed: for the determination is made. Neither ſhall he regard the God of his Fathers, nor the deſires of womē, nor care for any God: for he ſhall magnifie himſelfe aboue all. But in his place ſhall he honour the God Mauzzim, and the God whom his fathers knew not, ſhall he honour with gold and with ſiluer, and with precious ſtones, and pleaſaunt thynges.

Thus ſhall he doe in the holdes of Mauzzim with a ſtraunge God, whom he ſhall acknowledge: he ſhall increaſe his glory, and ſhall cauſe them to rule ouer many, and ſhall diuide the land for gayne. And at the end of tyme, ſhall the kyng of the South puſh at him, and the kyng of the North ſhall come agaynſt hym lyke a whirle wynde, with charets, and with horſemen, and with many ſhyppes, and he ſhall enter into the countreys, and ſhall ouerflow and paſſe thorough. He ſhall enter alſo into the pleaſaunt land, and many countreys ſhalbe ouerthrowen: but theſe ſhall eſcape out of his hand, euen Edom and Moab, and the chief of the children of Ammon. He ſhall ſtretch for his handes alſo vppon the countreys, and the land of Egypt ſhall not eſcape. But he ſhal haue power ouer the treaſures of gold and of ſiluer, & ouer al the precious thynges of Egypt, and of the Libians, and of the blacke Mores where he ſhall paſſe. But the tydynges out of the Eaſt and the North, ſhall trouble him: therfore he ſhall go forth with great wrath to deſtroy and roote out many: And he ſhall plant the tabernacles of his palace betweene the Seas, in the glorious & holy mountaine, yet he ſhall come to his end, and none ſhall help him.

To this place of Daniell aboue prefixed, might alſo be added the Propheſie of the ſaid Daniell written in the vij. chapter, and much tending to the like effect: where he intreating of his viſion of foure beaſtes (whiche ſignifie the foure Monarchies) and ſpeaking now of the fourth Monarchie, hath theſe wordes.

Dani. cap.7. After this, I ſaw in the viſions by night, and behold, the fourth beaſt was grimme and horrible, and maruelous ſtrong. It had great yron teeth: it deuoured, and brake in peeces, and ſtamped the reſidue vnder his feete: and it was vnlike the other beaſtes that were before it, for it had ten hornes. As I conſidered the hornes, behold, there came vp among them another little horne, before whome, there were three of the firſt hornes pluckt away. And behold, in this horne, were eyes like the eyes of a man, and a mouth ſpeaking preſumptuous things, and ſeemed more ſtoute then the other. Which horne alſo (whē I looked on) made battaile with the ſaints, & preuailed againſt thē: vntill the old aged came, & iudgement was giuen to the Saintes of the higheſt, and till the appointed time was come, that the Saints ſhuld haue the kingdōe.

Thus haue ye heard the plaine wordes of Daniell. In the which, as he doth manifeſtly deſcribe the comming of Antiochus the great aduerſary, toward the latter ende of the Iewes: ſo by the ſame Antiochus is figured alſo to vs the great aduerſary of Chriſt, which is the Turke.

Vide Rodulphum Gualt. de Antichriſto. Although ſome there be notwithſtanding, which wyth great learning & iudgement, do apply this place of Daniel aboue recited, not to the Turke, but rather to the Pope, & that for vj. or vij. ſpeciall cauſes herein touched and noted.

The firſt note. The firſt is this, that the wicked tranſgreſſours of the couenaunt ſhall ioine with him deceitfully and hypocritically, which ſhall pollute the tabernacle of ſtrength, & take away the perpetuall ſacrifice, and bring in the abhomination of deſolation.

The ſecond note. The ſecond note is, that the Prophet declareth, how the learned among yͤ people ſhall teach many, & that they ſhall fall into the ſword, into fire, and captiuitie, and ſhall be baniſhed, whereby they ſhall be tried, choſen, & made bright and pure, &c. All which (ſay they) is not amōg the Turkes to be ſeene, but only in the Popes Church: where yͤ faithfull preachers & teachers of the people are ſlaine and burned, and go to wracke, &c. Where likewiſe it foloweth, that they ſhall be holpen againſt Antichriſt, and that many falſe brethren ſhall ioine vnto them diſſemblingly, &c. To thys they alledge that the Chriſtians haue no ſuch help againſt the Turke, whereunto ſuch falſe brethrē ſhould ioine thēſelues, as is and hath bene commonly ſeene amōg yͤ Chriſtians againſt the Pope, from time to time, almoſt in all Countreys: as in Germany by the Proteſtants & free Cities: In Englād in King Henries time by yͤ Lord Cromwell, and afterward by King Edward, & now by Queene Elizabeth: In Scotland by yͤ godly nobilitie: In France, by the Queene of Nauarre and her ſonne: and alſo by the Prince of Condy and the worthy Admirall, and his two brethren, and many others: In Flaunders, by thē whom the Regent calleth Beggers: So as was in the time of the Machabees, againſt Antiochus.

Helpes of the Chriſtians againſt the Pope.

The third note. Thirdly, that the King ſhall exalt himſelfe aboue all that hath the name of God, and ſhal lift vp his mouth to ſpeake preſumptuouſly againſt God.

The fourth note. Fourthly, that he careth not for the deſires of women: which may ſeeme to note how the Popes doctrine ſhall forbid the honeſt and lawfull mariage in Churchmen.

The fift note. The fift ſpecialtie which they apply to the Pope, is that foloweth in the Prophet, ſaieng: Neither ſhall he regard the God of his fathers, nor any God: but in ſteade of him, ſhall ſet vp his God Mauzzim, & ſhall worſhip him with ſiluer, & gold, & pretious ſtone, &c. which they do apply to yͤ Pope, ſetting vp his God of bread, & worſhipping him with gliſtering golden ornamēts & moſt ſolemne ſeruice.

Mauzzim the popes God.

The ſixte note. Sixtly, it foloweth: & he ſhall encreaſe them with much glory and riches, and ſhall diuide vnto them, lands & poſſeſſions, &c. meaning that the Pope hauing dominiō ouer treaſures of gold and ſiluer, and all precious things of the land, ſhall indue his Cardinals, Prelats, his flatring doctours, with Friers and Monkes & Prieſtes, and all ſuch as ſhal take his part, wͭ great priuilegies, liberties, reuenues & poſſeſſions. And thus, I ſay, ſome there be, which apply this propheſie of the vij. and xj. chapter of Daniell, vnto yͤ Biſhop of Rome. Whom although I take to be an extreme perſecutour of Chriſtes Church: yet I iudge rather thoſe two chapters of Daniel concerning yͤ litle horne in the middle of the x. hornes, and the great deſtroier of the pleaſant land and glorious holy mountaine, to meane firſt Antiochus, and by him ſecondly to meane the great Antichriſt, the Turke: who hath now ſet already yͤ tabernacles of his palace betwene the Seas, accordyng to the Prophecies of Daniell, as is aboueſayd.

The 7. and 11. chapt. of Dan. meaneth the great Antichriſt the turke.

Ezech. cap. 38. 39. Gog & Magog. Ouer & beſides theſe Prophecies aboue alledged, may be added alſo the Prophecie of Ezechiel chap. 39. ſpeakyng of Gog & Magog: which as it may be applied to the oppreſſiō of the Iewes vnder the Heathen multitude, which ſtopped the buildyng of the Citie, and vnder the Syrian kynges: &c. yet in the ſame alſo is expreſſed the calamities and afflictions of Chriſtes Churche in theſe latter tymes, vnder the Saracens and the Turkes. &c.

The propheſies of the new Teſtament, concerning the turke. Proceeding further in this matter, let vs come now to the Prophecies of yͤ new Teſtament & marke the wordes of S. Paule writyng to the * Theſſalonians, which then were Chriſtened, & now either are Turkiſh, or vnder the Turke, which wordes be theſe: Be ye not ſodenly moued in your mynde, nor troubled, neither by ſpirite, nor by word, nor by letter as ſent frō vs, as though the day of Chriſt were at hand. Let no mā deceaue you by any meanes, for the Lord will not come, before there come a defection, or a departing firſt, and that wicked mā be reueled, the ſonne of perdition, which is an aduerſary and is extolled aboue all power, and that which is called God: ſo that he ſhall ſit in the tēple of God, boaſting himſelfe to be God. &c. Although this defection & departing may haue a double vnderſtādyng, as well of the popes ſect (which is gone & departed frō the free iuſtificatiō by fayth onely in Chriſt, through yͤ promiſe of grace) as of the Turkes: yet leauing a while to ſpeake of the Pope becauſe it appeareth more notoriouſly in yͤ Turke, we will chiefly apply it to him: in whō ſo aptly it doth agree, that vnles this great defection frō faith in ſo many Churches, had hapned by the Turke, it had bene hard to vnderſtād the Apoſtles mynde, which now by the hiſtory of theſe Turkes is eaſie and euident to be knowen, cōſidering what a ruine hath happened to the Church of Chriſt by theſe miſerable Turks, what Empires, nations, kyngdomes, countreys, townes and Cities be remoued from the name & profeſſiō of Chriſt, how many thouſandes & infinite multitudes of Chriſten men and children, in Aſia, in Afrike, & in Europe, are caried away from Chriſtes Church to Mahumetes Religion, ſome to ſerue for the Turkes gard among yͤ Ianizarites, ſome for ſouldiours, ſome for miners, ſome for gunners, to fight & warre agaynſt the Chriſtians: ſo that the moſt part of all the Churches plāted once by yͤ Apoſtles, are now degenerated into Turks, onely a ſmall hādful of Chriſtiās reſerued yet in theſe weſt partes of Europe, of the which ſmall reſidue, what ſhall alſo become ſhortly, except Chriſt himſelfe do helpe. Chriſt onely himſelf doth know. How great this defection hath bene ſpokē of by S. Paule, thou mayeſt ſee (gentle Reader) in the table aboue deſcribed. pag. 741.

* 2. Theſſal. 2.

The defection in time of Antichriſt declared.

Vide ſupra. pag. 903. Notwithſtanding this text of the holy Apoſtle (as I afore ſaid) may be verified alſo with no leſſe reaſon, vpō the Byſhop of Rome, thē vpon the Turke, both for that he is a man of ſinne, that is, his ſeate & Citie is a great mainteiner of wickedneſſe, & alſo for that he is an aduerſary, that is, contrary in all his doynges and proceedyngs to Chriſt.

The place of S. Paule 2 Theſſ. 2. applyed to the Pope.

Thirdly, for that he ſitteth in the temple of God, and ſo did not Mahumet.

Fourthly, becauſe he is an exalter of himſelfe, & ſitteth more like a God then a man in Rome, whereof ſee more in the booke ſet forth in Engliſh, called the CONTESTATIONS of the Popes.

Fiftly, for that he ſeduceth and hath ſeduced by his apoſtaſie, the moſt part of all Chriſtendome from the doctrine and free promiſes of God, into a wrong and ſtrāge way of ſaluation, which is, not to be iuſtified freely before God onely by our fayth in Chriſt his welbeloued ſonne (vnto the whiche fayth the promiſe of God freely and graciouſly hath annexed all our ſaluation onely, & to no other thyng) but hath taught vs to worke our ſaluation by an infinite number of other thynges: In ſo much that he bindeth the neceſſitie of our ſaluation alſo to this, that we muſt beleue (if we will be ſaued) and receaue him to be the Vicare of Chriſt in earth. &c. Ex Bonifacio Extrauag.

But to returne agayne vnto the Turkes, among all the prophecies both of the old Teſtamēt & of the new, there is none that paynteth out the Antichriſtian kyngdome of the Turkes, better then doth the reuelation of S. Iohn, whoſe wordes let vs weigh and cōſider, who in the Apocalipſe 9. where he ſpeaketh of openyng the ſeuenth & laſt ſeale, (which ſignifieth the laſt age of the world) and there writyng of the vij. trompets of the vij. Angels at the ſoundyng of the vj. Aungell ſaith, Looſe the iiij. Aungels, which are bound in the great riuer Euphrates. And the foure Aungels were loſed, which were ready both day and houre, and moneth, and yeare, to ſlay the third part of men. And the number of horſemen were 20. thouſand tymes ten thouſand: and I heard the number of them. And thus I ſawe in a viſion, horſes, and them that te

ſate on them, hauing fiery habbergions, and of Iacinth ſtone, and of brimſtone, and the heads of the horſes were as the heads of Lyons, and out of their mouthes went foorth fire, and ſmoake, and brimſtone, of theſe three plagues was the third part of men killed, that is, of the fire, ſmoake, and brimſtone, which proceeded out of their mouthes, &c.

The 7. trumpets of the 7. Angels in the Apoc. expounded.

By the ſeauenth ſeale is meant the ſeauenth and laſt age of the world, which laſt age of the world, is from Chriſt, to the iudgement and reſurrection of the dead.

By the ſeauen Angels with their ſeauen Trumpets, is ſignified the ſeauen plagues that come in this ſeauenth and laſt age of the world.

The ſixt trumpet.

By the ſixt trumpet of the ſixt Angell, is meant the ſixte plague comming laſt and next before the plague of the great iudgement day, which ſixt plague is heere deſcribed to come by the Eaſt Kings, that is, by the Turkes, as foloweth to be ſeene.

Looſing of the angels vpon the ryuer Euphrates.
Apoc. 19.

By loſing the Angels which had rule of the great riuer Euphrates, is ſignified the letting out of the Eaſt Kings, that is, the Turkes, out of Scithia, Tartaria, Perſia, and Arabia, by whome the third part of Chriſtendome ſhall be deſtroyed, as we ſee it this day hath come to paſſe.

Apoc. cap. 16.

It followeth in the propheſie, Their power ſhall be in their mouthes, and in their tayles. For their tayles be like Serpents hauing heads, and with them they hurt, &c. Meaning that theſe Turkes with the words of their mouthes, ſhall threaten great deſtruction of fire and ſword, to them that will not yeald vnto them, and in the end, when the Chriſtians ſhall yeald vnto them, truſting to their promiſes, they like Serpents ſhall deceaue thē in yͤ end, & kill them, as appeareth by the ſtory of the Turkes aboue paſt, pag. 752. 753. 757.

The 4. beaſtes in the Apoc. mean the 4. Monarchies.

The like propheſy alſo after the like words and ſence, is to be ſeene and read in the 16. chap. of the Apoc. where S. Iohn entreating of ſeauen cuppes, filled with the wrath of the liuing God, geuē to the hands of 7. Angels, by one of the foure beaſts (that is in the time of one of the four Monarchies, which was the Monarchy of Rome) ſpeaketh likewiſe of the ſixt Angell, which poured his viole of Gods wrath vpon the great riuer Euphrates, & the waters thereof dryed vp, that the way of the kings of the Eaſt ſhould be prepared, &c.

The kings of the Eaſt.
Drying vp of Euphrates.
Ibid.

By the ſixt Angell with the ſixte viole, is meant, as before, the laſt plague ſaue one that ſhall come vpon yͤ Chriſtians. By yͤ Kings of the Eaſt are meant the Saracens, and 12. Ottoman Turks. By drieng vp the riuer of Euphrates, is ſignified the way of theſe Turkes to be prepared by the Lords appointment, to come out of the Eaſt to the weſt parts of the world, to moleſt and afflict the Chriſtians. It foloweth more in the text. And I ſaw three vnclene ſpirits like frogs, come out of the mouth of the Dragon, and out of the mouth of the beaſt, and out of the mouth of the falſe Prophet, for they are the ſpirits of deuils, doing wonders, to go vnto the Kings of the whole earth, to aſſemble and gather them together, to the battayle, againſt the daye of the great God omnipotent, &c. And it foloweth ſhortly after, And he aſſembled them together into a place which is called in Hebrue Armagedon, that is, a trap or trayne of deſtruction. And immediatly it followeth in the ſame place, And the ſeauenth Angell poured out his viole in the ayre, and a mighty voice came from heauen, out of the Throane, ſaieng, factum eſt, It is done, or finiſhed, &c. Whereby it is to be vnderſtoode, that toward the laſt conſummation of the world, great force ſhall be ſeene, and a mighty army of the enemies ſhall be collected and gathered againſt the people, and Saints of the higheſt, and then commeth the conſummation, with factum eſt, &c.

Ibid.
An exhortation of the holyghoſt to the faithfull.

Wherefore it is not for naught that the holy Spirite of God in the ſame place, a little before the ſixt Angell doe poure out his viole, doth exhort all the faithfull, ſayeng: Behold, I come like a theefe in the night, Bleſſed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments, leaſt he walke naked, and men ſee his fylthynes, &c.

Apoc. cap. 13.

The propheſie of the Apo. cap. 13. diſcuſſed.

The beaſt hauing hornes like the lambe, muſt needes meane the Pope.

Nicol. de Lyra, and Paulus Biſhop of Burdens, and Mathias Dorinke writing vpon the 13. chap. of the Apoc. & expounding the miſtery of the ſecond beaſt, riſing out of the earth, hauing the hornes of a lambe, &c. doo apply the ſame to Mahumet and the Turkes, with a ſolemne declaration made vpon yͤ ſame. Which interpretatiō of theirs, although in ſome pointes it may ſeeme to haue ſome appearance of probabilitie, neither can it be denied but that Mahumet & the Turke be peſtilent and wicked enemies of Chriſt our Lord, & moſt bitter perſecutors of his Church, yet as touching the proper & naturall meaning of yͤ Apoſtle in that place, ſpeaking of the falſe lambe, &c. if we conſider well all the circumſtances of that beaſt, and marke the conſequence of the text, both of that which goeth before, and followeth after, we muſt needs graunt that Nicol. de Lyra, with hys fellowes, & with al ſuch like of yͤ Popes ſchoole, that folow that ſchoole be deceaued, and that the deſcription and interpretation of that falſhorned lambe, muſt neceſſarily be applyed only to the Biſhop of Rome, and none other, which is to be proued by ſixe principall cauſes or arguments.

The firſt reaſon.

Ex Boni. 8. Extr. de Maiorit. & obed.

The firſt is, for that this beaſt is deſcribed to beare the hornes of a lambe. By the which lambe, no doubt, is ment Chriſt. By yͤ hornes of the lambe is ſignified the outward ſhew or reſemblance of Chriſt our ſauiour: which ſhew or reſemblance can haue no relation to Mahumet, for that he taketh himſelfe to be aboue Chriſt, & Chriſt as an excellent Prophet of God, ſitting at his feete. Wherfore ſeing Mahumet commeth neither as equall to Chriſt, nor as vicar vnder Chriſt, this propheſy can not agree in him, but only in him which openly in plaine words proteſteth, that all Chriſtes lambes and ſheepe not ſingularly, but vniuerſally through the whole world, are committed to him, as Vicar of Chriſt, and ſucceſſor of Peter, and that all men muſt confeſſe the ſame of neceſſitie, or elſe they are none of Chriſtes ſheepe, &c. wherein it is eaſy to ſee where the pretenſed hornes of the lambe do growe.

The ſecond reaſon.

{ Anno. 1553. }

Vid. ſupra. pag. 649.

The ſecond argument, And he ſpake like the Dragon, &c. A Lambes hornes and the mouth of a Dragon, do not agree together. And as they do not agree together in nature, ſo neither can they be found in any one perſon, either Turke, or other (if we will iudge truely) ſo liuely, as in the Biſhop of Rome. When thou heareſt him call himſelfe the Apoſtolicall Biſhop, the Vicar of Chriſt, the ſucceſſor of Peter, the ſeruant of Gods ſeruants, &c. thou ſeeſt in him the two hornes of a lambe, and would thinke him to be a lambe in deede, and ſuch a one as would waſh your feete for humilitie: but heare him ſpeake, and you ſhall find him a dragon. See and reade the Epiſtle of Pope Martine the fift aboue mentioned, pag. 649. charging, commaunding, and threatning Emperoures, Kinges, Dukes, Princes, Marqueſſes, Earles, Barons, Knightes, Rectors, Conſuls, Proconſuls, with their Shires, Counties, and Vniuerſities of their kingdoms, Prouinces, Cities, Townes, Caſtles, Villages, and other places. See the anſwere of Pope Vrban. 2. and his meſſage to King William Rufus, pag. 192. Behold the workes and doings of Pope Innocent againſt King Iohn.

The Pope hath the hornes of a Lambe, but the mouth of a Dragon

Note alſo the anſwere of another Pope to the King of England, which for the price of the kings head, would not graunt vnto him yͤ inueſting of his Biſhops. Marke well the wordes and doings of Pope Hildebrande againſt the Emperor Henry the fourth, pag. 175. Alſo of Pope Alexāder the 2. treading vpon yͤ neck of Fredericus Barbaroſſa, not like a lambe treading vpō a dragon, but like a dragon treading vpon a lambe: ſo that his owne verſe might be turned vpon himſelfe: tanquam aſpis & baſiliſcus ſuper ouicillam ambulans, & tanquam Leo & draco conculcans agnum. Cōſider moreouer the behauior, maner, cōdition, and property, almoſt, of all the Popes which haue bene theſe 600. yeares, and what Dragon or Serpent could be more viperous then their owne doings and words can ſpeake, and giue teſtimony againſt themſelues.

The third reaſon.

It followeth moreouer in the ſame prophecy of the Apocalipſe for the third argument, And he doth all the power of the firſt beaſt, preſently before his face, and cauſeth the earth, and all the inhabitants therein to honour the firſt beaſt, the ſtripe of whoſe deadly wound was cured, &c.

The two beaſtes in the 13. cap. of the Apoc. expounded.

A deſcription of the Citie and Monarchy of Rome.

In this propheſy ij. things are to be noted: firſt, what the firſt beaſt is, whoſe power yͤ ſecond beaſt doth execute. Secondly, what this ſecond beaſt is, which ſo doth exerciſe his power in his ſight. The firſt of theſe beaſtes here in the Apoc. deſcribed, hauing 7. heads & 10. hornes, muſt needes ſignifie the city of Rome, which may eaſely be proued by two demonſtrations. Firſt by the expoſition of yͤ 17. chap. of the ſame Apocalips, where is declared and deſcribed the ſayd beaſt to ſtād of 7. hils, & to containe 10. kings, hauing the whole power of the dragon geuen: and alſo the ſame citie to be named the whore of Babylon, drunkē wyth the bloud of ſaints. All which properties ioined together, can agree in no wiſe but only to the heathē Empire of Rome, which Citie at the time of writing theſe propheſies, had the gouernment of the whole world. The ſecond demonſtration or euidence, may be deduced out of the number of the monethes aſſigned to this beaſt, Apoc. 13. For ſo it is written, that this beaſt had power to make, that is, to worke his malice againſt Chriſtes people 42. monethes, which monethes counted by ſabbates of yeares (that is, euery moneth for ſeuen yeares) maketh vp the iuſt number of thoſe yeares, in which the primitiue Church was vnder the terrible perſecutions of the heathen Emperors of Rome, as is afore ſpecified, pag. 367.

Which thing thus ſtanding, proued and confeſſed, that the firſt beaſt muſt needes ſignifie the Empire and City of Rome, then muſt it neceſſarely follow that the ſecond beaſt with the lambs hornes, muſt ſignifie the Biſhop & Pope of the ſame City of Rome. The reaſon whereof is euident, and apparant by that which followeth in the prophecye, where it is declared, that the ſeconde beaſt hauing two hornes of a lambe, receaued and exerciſed all the power of the firſt beaſt, before or in the ſight of the ſaid beaſt, which can not be verefied neither in the Turke nor in any other, but only in the Pope of Rome, who (as you ſee) receiueth, vſurpeth, and deriueth to himſelfe all the power of that Citie and Monarchy of Rome: In ſo much that he ſaith, that when Conſtantine or Ludouicus yeelded vnto him the rule & kingdome of that Citie, he gaue him but his owne, and that which of right and duty belonged to him before.

The deſcription of the beaſt with the two hornes of the Lambe. Apoc.13.

The Pope hauing all the rule and power of Rome.
ἐνώπιον τοῦ θηρίου. Apoc.13.

And this authority or power ouer all the Empire of Rome, he worketh not in Aſia, or in Conſtantinople as the Turke doth, but in the ſight of the beaſt which gaue him the power, that is, in the City of Rome it ſelfe, which is the firſt beaſt heere in this propheſy of the Apocalypſe deſcribed.

The fourth reaſon.

Fourthly, it followeth more, And he cauſeth the earth, and all the inhabitants therein, to worſhip and honour the firſt beaſt, which had a deadly wound, and was cured, &c. The interpretation of this part, as alſo of all the other parts of the ſame chapter, ſtandeth vpon the definition of the firſt beaſt, for being graunted, as it can not be denied, that the firſt beaſt ſignifieth the Citie and Empire of Rome, it muſt conſequently follow, that the Biſhop (whome we call the Pope) of the ſame Citie of Rome, muſt be vnderſtode by the ſecond beaſt, forſomuch as neither Turke nor any other, but only the Biſhop of Rome, hath holden vp the eſtimation and dignity of that Citie, which began to be in ruine and decay by the Vandalians, Gothes, Herulians, and Lombards, about the yeare of our Lord 456. but afterward by the Biſhop of Rome, the priſtine ſtate and honor of that Citie reuiued againe, and flouriſhed in as great veneration, as euer it did before. And that is it which ẏ holy Ghoſt ſeemeth heere to meane of the firſt beaſt, ſaieng: That he had a wound of the ſword, and was cured. For ſo it followeth.

The fift reaſon.

Fiftly, And he cauſed all the inhabitants of the earth to make the image of the beaſt, which had the ſtripe of the ſword and liued. And it was geuen to him to giue life to the image of the beaſt, and to make the image thereof to ſpeake, and to cauſe all them that worſhipped not the image of the beaſt, to be killed: forcing all perſons both little and great, rich and poore, bond and free, to take the marke of the beaſt in their right hand, or in their forheads, and that none might buy or ſell but they which had the marke, or the name of the beaſt, or the number of his name, &c.

Rome almoſt dead.
Roma called Odacria

By geuing life to the image of the beaſt, and making it to ſpeake, is to be preſuppoſed, that ẏ beaſt was at a neare point of death, and lay ſpeachles before, inſomuch that the Citie of Rome began to loſe and change his name, & was called a while Odacria, of Odacer King of the Herulians: which by dent of ſword ſurpriſed the Romans: and yet notwithſtanding, by the meanes of this Romane Prelate, the ſaid Citie of Rome, which was then ready to geue the Ghoſt, ſo recouered his maieſtie and ſtrength againe, that it is hard to ſay, whether Rome did euer ruffle and rage in his tirannie before, in the time of Nero, Domitian, Diocletian and other Emperors, more tragically then it hath done vnder ẏ Pope: or whether that Rome had al Kings, Queenes, Princes, Dukes, Lords, and all ſubiects more vnder obedience and ſubiection, whē the Emperors raigned, or now in the raigne of the Pope. And therefore it is ſaid not without cauſe of the holy Ghoſt: That it is geuen to him, to geue life and ſpeach to the image of the beaſt, cauſing all them to be ſlaine which will not worſhip the image of the beaſt, &c. As for example heereof, who ſeeth not what numbers and multitudes of Chriſtian men, women, and children, in all Countreys, haue bene put to the fire and ſword? Stories of all times will declare, what hauocke hath bene made of Chriſten bloud, about the preheminence and maioritie of the Sea of Rome: what Churches and Countreys both Greekes and Latin, haue bene excommunicated: what Kings haue bene depoſed, and Emperors ſtripped from their Imperiall ſeate, and all becauſe they would not ſtoupe and bend to the Image of the beaſt, that is, to the maieſty and title of Rome, aduanced vp ſo highly now by the Biſhop thereof, as it was neuer higher before in the raigne of Nero or Dyocleſian. wherefore taking the firſt beaſt to ſignifie the Empyre of Rome, which can not be denyed, it is playne, that the ſecond beaſt muſt neceſſarily be applied to the Pope, and not to the Turke, for as much as the Turke ſeeketh nothing leſſe then the aduancement of that Empire, but rather ſtriueth againſt it, to plucke it downe.

To geue life to the image of the beaſt. The Image of Rome ſpeaketh again as cruelly as euer it did.

Et faciet eos occidi, qui non adorauerint imaginem beſtiæ. Apoc.13.

The ſixt reaſon.

The ſixt and laſt argument is grounded vpon the number of the name of the beaſt, expreſſed by the holy Ghoſt in the ſame Prophecie, by the letters χ ξ ς. In which letters a though there lyeth great darckneſſe and difficultie to be vnderſtode, yet certaine auncient Fathers whiche were Diſciples and hearers of them which heard S. John him ſelfe, as Irenæus and other do expound the ſayd letters coniecturally to containe the name of the beaſt, and to be the name of a man, vnder this word λατεῖνος: where as els no other name lightly of any perſon either in Greeke or Latine, will agree to the ſame, saue onely the foreſayd name λατεῖνος. Although ſome latter writers geuing their coniectures vpon the ſame, doe finde the name of Lateranus in Hebrew Letters, to aunſwere to the ſame number. Some fayne other names, as ἄντεμος, or τεῖταν, made wordes, which ſignifie nothyng, as Diclux, or Luduuic, by Romane letters &c. But of all names properly ſignifying any mā, none commeth ſo neare to the number of this miſtery (if it go by order of letters) as doth the word λατεῖνος, aforeſayd. And this much by the way, and occaſion of Nicolaus de Lyra, Paulus Burgen, Matthias Dorinkus, the author of Fortalilium fidei, and other Cōmentaries moe of the ſame faction: who writyng vpon this xiij. Chapter of the Apocalipſe, and not conſidering the circumſtaunces thereof, both are deceaued themſelues, and deceaue many other, applying that to the Turke, which can not otherwiſe be verified but onely vpon the Pope, as may appeare ſufficiently by the premiſſes: Not that I write this of any moode or malice either to the Citie of Rome, or to the perſon of the Byſhop, as beyng Gods creature: but beyng occaſioned here to entreate of the Prophecies agaynſt the Turkes, would wiſhe the Readers not to be deceaued, but rightly to vnderſtand the ſimple Scriptures accordyng as they lye, to the entent that the true meanyng therof beyng boulted out, it may be the better knowen what Prophecies directly make agaynſt theſe Turkes, what otherwiſe.

In the which Prophecies agaynſt the Turkes, now to proceede, let vs come to the 20. Chapter of the Apocalipſe, wherein the holy Scripture ſeemeth playnly and directly to notifie the ſaid Turkes. The wordes of the Prophecie be theſe.

Apoc.cap.20.

And I ſaw an Angell deſcendyng from heauen, hauyng the key of the bottomleſſe pit, and a great chayne in his hand: and he tooke the Dragon, the old Serpent, which is the deuill and Satanas, and bound him vp for a thouſand yeares, and caſt him in the pit, and ſealed him vp, that he ſhould not ſeduce the people any more, til the thouſand yeares were expired: and after that he muſt be let looſe for a litle while. &c.

And it followeth after: And when the thouſand yeares ſhalbe complete, Satanas ſhalbe let out of his doungeon, and ſhall go abroad to ſeduce the people, which are on the foure corners of the lād of Gog and Magog, to aſſemble them to battaile: whoſe number is like to the ſandes of the Sea. And they went vp vpon the latitude or breadth of the earth, and compaſſed about the tentes of the Saintes, and the welbeloued Cities. &c.

The bynding and looſing out of Sathan examined.
Three things to be noted in thys propheſie.

To the perfect vnderſtandyng of this Prophecie, three thynges are neceſſary to be knowen. Firſt what is ment by byndyng vp, and looſing out of Satanas the old Dragon. Secondly, at what tyme and yeare firſt he was chayned vp and ſealed for a thouſand yeares. Thirdly, at what yeare and tyme theſe thouſand yeares did end, when as he ſhould be looſed out agayne for a litle ſeaſon. which three poyntes beyng well examined and marked, the Prophecie may eaſely bee vnderſtand directly to be ment of the Turke. Albeit Anagogically ſome part thereof may alſo be referred not vnproperly vnto the Pope, as is aboue notified.

What is meant by bynding vp of Sathan.

Firſt, by byndyng and looſing of Satanas, ſeemeth to be ment the ceaſing and ſtaying of the cruell and horrible perſecution of the Heathen Emperours of Rome, againſt the true Chriſtians, as is to be ſene in the x. firſt perſecutions in the primitiue Church aboue deſcribed in the former part of theſe Actes and Monumentes: in the whiche moſt bloudy perſecutions, Satanas the deuill then raged without all meaſure, till tyme it pleaſed almightie God to ſtoppe this old Serpent, and to tye him ſhorter. And thus haue you to vnderſtād what is ment by the byndyng vp of Sathan for a thouſand yeares: whereby is ſignified that the perſecution agaynſt the Chriſtians ſtyrred vp by ẏ beaſt (that is, in the Empire of Rome, through the inſtigation of Sathan) ſhall not alwayes continue, but ſhall breake vp, after certaine tyme, and ſhall ceaſe for a thouſand yeares. &c.

The tyme of bynding vp of Sathan.

Now, at what tyme and yeare this perſecution, that is, the fury and rage of Sathan ſhould ceaſe, is alſo declared in the Apocalipſe before: where in the chapter. 11. & 13. wee reade that the beaſt afore mētioned, ſhall haue power

Apoc.11.13.42. monethes in the Apoc,declared.

Supputation of yeares betwene the beginning & ceaſing the perſecutions in the primitiue Church.

Vide ſupra.pag. 385.

to worke his malice and miſchiefe, the ſpace of 42. moneths and no more, and then that Sathan ſhould be locked vp for a thouſand yeares. The computation of which monethes being counted by Sabbates of yeares (after the example of the 69. weekes of Daniell. cap. 11,) it doth bring vs to the iuſt yeare and time, when that terrible perſecution in the primitiue Church ſhould end, and ſo it did. For giue to euery moneth a Sabbat of yeares, that is, recken euery moneth for ſeauen yeares, and that maketh 294. yeares, which was the full time betweene the 18. yeare of Tiberius, (vnder whome Chriſt ſuffered) and the death of Maxentius the laſt perſecutour of the primitiue Church in Europe, ſubdued by Conſtantinus, as may appeare by calculating the yeares, monethes and dayes, betweene the ſaid yeare of the reigne of Tiberius, and the latter end of Maxentius: and ſo haue ye the ſupputation of the yeare and time, when Satan was firſt bound vp, after he had raged in the primitiue Church 42. monethes. Which monethes, as is ſaid, being counted by Sabbates of yeares, after the vſuall manner of the Scripture, mounteth to 294. yeares: and ſo much was the full time betweene the paſſion of our Lorde, which was in the 18. yeare of Tiberius, vnto the laſt yeare of Maxentius.

The pope proued to be the ſeconde beaſt mentioned in the Apoc.ca.13.

Et hic bibet de vino iræ dei Apoc.14.

And heere by the way commeth a note to be obſerued, that foraſmuch as by the number of theſe 42. monethes, ſpecified in the Apocalips, the Empire of Rome muſt neceſſarily be confeſſed to be the firſt beaſt: therefore it muſt by like neceſſitie follow, the Biſhop of Rome to be the ſecond beaſt, with the two hornes of the Lambe, for that he only hath and doth cauſe the ſayd Empyre of Rome to reuiue and to be magnified, and ſo doth not the Turke, but rather laboureth to the contrary. Wherfore let euery Chriſtian man be wiſe and beware betime, how he taketh the marke of the beaſt, leaſt peraduenture it follow vpon him, that he drinke of that terrible cup of wrath mentioned Apocal. chap. 14.

The 3.part of the propheſie for the looſing out of Satan.

The beginning of the Turkes progenie.

Thirdly, it remayneth to be diſcuſſed touching the third point in this foreſaid propheſie, that as we haue found out (through the helpe of Chriſt) the yeare and time of Satãs binding, ſo we ſearch out likewiſe the time and ſeaſon of his looſing out, which by the teſtimonie of Scripture, was appointed to be a thouſand yeares after his binding vp, and ſo rightly according to the time appointed it came to paſſe. For if we number well by the Scripture the yeare of his binding vp, which was from the paſſion of our Lorde 294. yeares, and adde thereto a thouſand yeares, it mounteth to 1294. which was the very yeare when Ottomannus the firſt Turke began his reigne: which was the firſt ſpring and welhead of all theſe wofull calamities that the Church of Chriſt hath felt both in Aſia, Affrica, and Europe, almoſt theſe three hundreth yeares paſt. For ſo wee finde in Chronicles, that the kingdome of the Turkes being firſt deuided into four families, an. 1280. at length the familie of Ottomanus preuailed, and thereupon came theſe, whome now we call Turkes: which was about the ſame time, when Pope Boniface the eight was Byſhop of Rome.

Where by the way this is againe to be noted, that after the decree of Tranſubſtantiation was enacted in yͤ Councell of Laterane by Pope Innocent the iij. the yeare of our Lord 1215. not long after, about the yeare of our Lord 1260. was ſtirred vp the power and armes of the Oguzians, and of the Orthogules father of Ottomannus: who about the yeare of our Lord 1294. began firſt to vexe the Chriſtians about Pontus & Bithinia, & ſo beginning his kingdome anno. 1300. reigned 28. yeares, as is afore mẽtioned.

The propheſie of Ezech.ca.38.

Mention was made before of Ezechiell propheſieng againſt Gog, whoſe words diuers expoſitours do apply againſt the Turke, and are theſe: Thou ſhalt come from thy place, out of the North partes, thou and much people with thee, all riding vpon horſes, a great and a mighty army, and thou ſhalt come vp againſt my people of Iſraell as a cloude, to couer the land: Thou ſhalt be in the latter dayes, and I will bring thee vpon my land, that the heathen may know me, when I ſhall be ſanctified in thee, O Gog, before their eyes. Thus ſayth the Lord God: Art not thou he, of whome I haue ſpoken in the old time, by the hand of my ſeruants, the Prophets of Iſraell, that propheſied in thoſe dayes and yeares, that I woulde bring thee vpon them? At the ſame time alſo, when Gog ſhall come againſt the lande of Iſraell, ſayth the Lord God, my wrath ſhall ariſe in mine anger. For in my indignation, and in the fire of my wrath haue I ſpoken it: Surely at that time there ſhall be a great ſhaking in the land of Iſraell, ſo that the fiſhes of the Sea, the foules of the heauen, the beaſtes of the field, and all that mooue and creepe vpon the earth, and all the men that are vpon the earth, ſhall tremble at my preſence: the mountaines ſhall be ouerthrowne: the ſtarres ſhall fall, and euery wall ſhall fall to the ground, &c.

¶ The Propheſies of Methodius, Hildegardis and other, concerning the reygne and ruyne of the Turkes.

Methodius propheſies.

The booke of Methodius miſtaken.

The propheſies of Methodius, concerning the turkes.

Vnto theſe teſtimonies aboue excerped out of the holy Scriptures, let vs adde alſo the propheticall reuelations of Methodius, Hildegardis, Sybilla, and others. This Methodius is thought of ſome to be the ſame Methodius, of whome Hierome, and Suidas make mention: which was Biſhop firſt of Olympus in Lycia, then of Tyrus, and ſuffered martyrdome in the laſt perſecution of the primitiue Church, vnder Diocletian. Unto whome alſo Trithemius attributeth the booke intituled: De Quatuor nouiſsimis temporibus. But that can not be, foraſmuch as the ſaid Methodius doth cite and alleadge the Maiſter of Sentence, namely, in his ſecond booke, and ſixe diſtinc. which Maiſter of Sentence, followed more then a thouſand yeare after Chriſt: beſides certaine other fabulous matter conteined in the ſame booke. Albeit, becauſe he ſpeaketh there of many things cõcerning the ſtate of yͤ Church vnder Antichriſt, and the reformation of Religion, as ſeemeth rightly to come to paſſe, and more is like to follow, I thought not to defraude the Reader thereof, leauing the credite of the Authour to his arbitrement, to eſteeme and iudge of him as he ſeeth cauſe. Among diuers other places of Methodius, propheſieng of the latter time, theſe words do follow: After that the children of Iſmaell haue had multiplied in their generations to an infinite and innumerable multitude, in the deſert aforeſayd, they came out of the wilderneſſe of Arabie, and entred into the habitable land, and fought with the Kings of the Gentiles, which were in the land of promiſe, and the land was filled with them. And after 70. weekes, and halfe of their power, wherewith they haue ſubdued all the kingdome of the Gentiles, their hart was exalted, ſeeing themſelues ſo to haue preuailed, and to haue conquered all things, &c. And afterward it followeth of the ſame matter in this ſort.

Viij. weekes of yeares, counting euery weeke for a Sabbate of yeres, that is, euery day for a yeare, commeth to 56. yeares.

It ſhall come to paſſe that the ſayde ſeede of Iſmaell, ſhall iſſue out and obteine the whole world, with the regions thereof, in the entring of peace, from the land of Ægypt, vnto Ethiopia: & from the floud Euphrates, vnto India: and from the riuer Tigris, to the entring of Nabaot, the kingdome of Ionithus, the ſonne of Noe: and from the North, vnto Rome and Illyricum, Ægypt, and Theſſalonica, and Albania, and ſo foorth to the ſea Ponticum, whych deuideth the ſayd kingdomes from Germanie and Fraunce: and their yoke ſhall be double vpon the neckes of all nations, and Gentiles: neither ſhall there be nation or kingdome vnder heauen, which ſhall be able to ſtand againſt them in battaile, vntill the number of eyght weekes of yeares, &c.

The firſt ſtate or alteration of tymes concerning the comming of the Saracens

Chriſtians plagued by the Saracẽs.

Briefly, as in a groſſe ſomme, this ſhall ſuffice, to admoniſh the reader, touching yͤ meaning and methode of Methodius Propheſies, which Methodius firſt deſcribing the long and tedious afflictions of Chriſtes Church, maketh mention of the ſeede of Iſmaell, which comming out of the partes and deſerts of Arabie, ſhall deſtroy (ſaith he) and vanquiſh the whole earth, So that the Chriſtians ſhall be giuẽ of God, to the hands of the filthy Barbarians, to be ſlain, polluted, and captiued: Perſia, Armenia, Capadocia, Cilicia, Syria, Ægypt, the Eaſt partes, Aſia, Spaine, all Grecia, Fraunce, Germania, Agathonia, Sicilia, The Romanes alſo ſhall be ſlaine and put to flight: alſo the Ilands of the Seas ſhall be brought to deſolation, and to captiuitie, and put to the ſword. The which tribulation of the Chriſtians ſhall be without mercy or meaſure: the raunſome of gold and ſiluer and other exactions, intolerable, but eſpecially the dwellers of Ægypt and Syria ſhall be moſt in the affliction of thoſe times: And Hieruſalem ſhall be filled with multitudes of people brought thether in captiuitie, from the foure windes which are vnder heauen. So that beaſtes alſo, and foules, and fiſh in the water, and the waters of the Sea ſhall be to them obedient. Cities and Townes, which were before full of people, ſhall be layde waſte. Women with child ſhall be ript: their children ſticked: infantes taken from the mothers, and caſt in the ſtreates, and none ſhall burie them. The rulers and ſage of the people ſhall be ſlaine, and throwne out to the beaſtes. Churches ſhall be ſpoiled: the Prieſts deſtroyed: virgines defloured, and men cõpelled to ſell their children, and the comming of them ſhall bee chaſtiſement without mercy, and with them ſhall go theſe foure plagues: captiuitie, deſtruction, perdition, and deſolation, wyth much more, which for breuitie I ouerpaſſe. And this affliction, ſayeth hee, ſhall laſt eight weekes, or Sabbates of yeares, which I take to ſignifie eight hundreth yeares, &c.

The ſeconde ſtate or alteration of the Chriſtians relieued of theyr plagues and tribulations

Secondly, after theſe terrible plagues thus deſcribed by Methodius vpon the Chriſtians, which he ſayth ſhall fall vpon them for their wicked abhominations recited in the firſt and ſecond chapter of S. Paule to the Romaines: the ſaide Methodius afterwarde, in this great diſtreſſe of the Chriſtians, being out of all hope and comfort of reliefe, declareth and ſpeaketh of a certaine King of the Greekes or

Romaines,

Chriſtians abuſing Gods benefites.

Romains which ſhall reſtore peace againe to ẏ Chriſtiãs. In which peace they ſhal reedify their cities & manſions againe: the Prieſts ſhalbe deliuered from their greuances, & men at that time ſhall reſt from their tribulations, and then ſhall the King of the Romaines dwell in the Citie of Hieruſalem a weeke or ſabbate, and a halfe of times. &c.

The third alteratiō by the cōming of the turks.

The reigne of Chriſtian kinges in Hieruſalem laſted 88. yeares an. 1187.

Thirdly, during ẏ time of this peace, the ſaid Methodius ſaith, ẏ men ſhal fal into licentious ſecuritie, & careleſſe life: and then according to the word of the Apoſtle, ſaying: Whē they ſhal ſay, peace, peace, ſodeine deſtruction ſhal fall vpon them: then (ſayth he) ſhalbe opened the gates of the North, & the beaſtly people ſhal breake in, which King Alexander the great, did cloſe vp within 2. mountaines, making his prayer vnto the Lorde God, that he would bind vp that beſtial & execrable people, leaſt with their filthy & deteſtable pollutions, they ſhuld come out and pollute the holy land. Whoſe interceſsion being heard, the Lord cōmanded them to be incloſed within 2. mountains in the North parts, to the depenes of 12. cubits (which ſignifieth peraduenture 12. C. yeres) ſo that neither by witchcraft, nor by any means they could get out, or any might come vnto them, vntill the time of the Lord apointed, which are (ſaith he) the latter times: & then, according to the prophecie of Ezechiel in the latter time of the cōſummation of the world, Gog & Magog out frō the north, ſhal come forth into the land of Iſrael, & ſhal work al this miſchiefe againſt the chriſtiās, aboue recited. And then (ſaith Method. proceding in his Propheſies) ſhall the K. of Romanes, after he hath reigned in Ieruſalē a ſabbate of times, & a half, that is, ſaith Met. x. yeres & a halfe, take the crown frō his hed, and yeld it vp to the Croſſe in Golgotha where Chriſt was crucified, and ſhall die. And the Croſſe with the crowne ſhalbe taken into heauen, which ſhal not appeare againe before the comming of the Lord.

By this reſigning vp the crowne to the crucifixe in Golgotha, is ſignified, the ceaſing of the reigne of the chriſtiās in Hieruſalē tyll the cōming of Chriſt.

By this tribe of Dā, and the citie Choroſaim, Bethſaida, & Capernaū is ſignified Gods great malediction vpon Antichriſt.

Fourthly, it foloweth then moreouer in the Propheſies of Method. whych declareth, that when the weeke or ſabbate & half weke of times ſhal end, and whē the K. of Romanes ſhall geue vp his crowne in Jeruſalem, & die. Then immediatly ſhal Antichriſt the ſon of perdition begin to appeare, & be borne in Iewry, of the tribe of Dan, wherof alſo came Iudas Iſcarioth, & he ſhalbe borne (ſaith Methodius) in Choroſaim, & ſhalbe bred in Bethſaida, & ſhal raign in Capernaū: to ẏ which 3. cities, Chriſt the Lord gaue his 3. Væ. And whē great tribulatiō ſhal increaſe & multiply in the daies of this Antichriſt, & al lordſhip & dominion ſhalbe deſtroied, the Lord ſhall ſende his 2. faithful & deare ſeruants, Enoch and Hely, to reproue and detect the falſe ſeducing, & lying forgeries of this Antichriſt, openly before all mē: ſo that the people ſeing thēſelues falſly beguiled, & ſeduced by this ſon of perditiō, cōming out of the tēple diſſēblingly, to the deſtructiō of many, ſhal leaue & flie frō him, & ioyn thēſelues to the ſaid 2. holy prophets. Which ſon of perdition & Antichriſt ſeing his procedings ſo to be reproued, & brought into cōtēpt, in his fury & anger ſhal kil the 2. Prophets of God And then ſhal appeare (ſaith Methodius) the ſigne of the comming of the ſonne of man, and he ſhall come in the clouds of heauenly glory, and ſhall deſtroy the enemie with the ſpirite of his mouth. &c.

The deſtruction of Antichriſt.

✻ Interpretation.

The interpretation.

To theſe propheſies & teſtimonies of Methodius, what credite it is to be geuen, I leaue it to the Reader. But if the meaning of his Propheſies goe by ſuch order of times, as is ſet & diſpoſed in his booke: he ſemeth to deſcribe vnto vs 4. principall ſtates and alterations of times to come.

The comming of the Saracens.

The firſt ſtate and alteration is by Mahumete and the Saracens, which be the offſprings and ſonnes of Iſmael comming out of Arabie in the time of Heraclius Emperour of Conſtantinople. An. 630. which rebelling againſt Heraclius, increaſed & preuailed ſtill more & more againſt the Chriſtians, both in Aſia, and Africa, and alſo in many places in Europe, eſpecially in Spayne, and Italy.

The coming of the turks.

Scythia iuxta Caucaſū.

The ſeconde ſtate & alteration he Propheſieth to come by the Turke, which firſt comming out of the farre partes of Scythia, ẏ is, out of the North, firſt ouercame the Saracenes, ſubdued the Perſians, and afterward ioyning together w the Saracens, conquered the kingdome of Hieruſalem about the yeare of our Lorde 1187: then ſubdued Syria and moſt part of Aſia. &c. And theſe be they, whych Methodius ſeemeth to meane of, ſpeaking of the vile and miſerable people cloſed vp of ẏ Lord God, at the interceſſion of Alexander the great captaine in the North, betwene 2. mountaines the depeneſſe of 12. cubites, leaſt that filthy corrupt nation ſhuld pollute the earth with their wickednes, wherby are ment theſe Turkes, which comming out frō the vttermoſt partes of the North, that is, out of Scythia and the mountaines of Caucaſus or els Imaus, were withholden & kept backe of Almighty God, for Chriſtes cauſe, that they myght not harme his Church a long ſpace, during the time of xii. C. yeares: yea, and then, the ſinnes of the Chriſtians ſo deſeruing, they were permitted of almighty God to breake out, and to inuade the church: who nowe ioyning together w the Saracens, haue wrought, and daily do worke, all theſe greuances againſt our Chriſtian brethren: as we ſe this day is come to paſſe, and more is like to folow, except the hād of the Lord, which let them out, do plucke them in againe.

Victory of the Chriſtians gotte againſt the Saracens.

Ex Paulo Iouio

The citie of Hieruſalē recouered by the Chriſtiās frō the Saracens

Hieruſalem poſſeſſed of the chriſtians 88. yeares.

Hieruſalē wōne frō the Chriſtiās by the turkes, an 1187.

Moreouer, in ẏ meane ſpace, betwene the reigne of the Saracens and the Turks, where Methodius ſpeaketh of the K. of Romaines, which ſhould reſtore quietnes to the church, & ſhould raigne in Hieruſalem, a ſabbate of times and halfe a ſabbate: thereby ſeemeth to be vnderſtand the viage of Chriſtian Princes out of the weſt partes of Europe, vnder Gotfridus Duke of Lotharing & his 2. brethren and many other chriſten Princes, with 300. M. footmen, and 100. M. horſemen: who fighting againſt the Saracens, recouered againe from them, the Citie of Hieruſalem, in the yeare of our Lorde. 1099. which citie before had bene in their poſſeſſion, ẏ terme of 490. yeres. After which victory got, firſt Gotfridus, then Baldwinus his brother, and other after them, to the number of 9. Chriſten kings, reigned in Hieruſalem the ſpace of 88. yeres: and after that through the diſcord of the Chriſtians not agreeing amōgſt themſelues, both Hieruſalem and Syria, with other parts of Aſia beſides, were ſubdued and wonne of the Turkes, whych to this day they keepe yet ſtill. And this was in the yeare of our Lord. 1187.

The cōming & markes of Antichriſt deſcribed.

About which yeare and time (as foloweth in Methodius) when the Citie of Hieruſalem ſhall be wonne of the Turkes, then ſhall Antichriſt begin to be borne of the tribe of Dan, of whom came Iudas Iſcarioth, and ſhalbe borne in Choroſaim and bredde in Bethſaida, and reigne in Capernaum: Meaning that this Antichriſt or ſonne of perdition, ſhalbe full of Gods malediction, noted by Iudas Iſcariothe, and theſe 3. Cities, againſt whome were ſpoken thriſe Væ of the Lord.

And heere is moreouer to be noted, that Methodius ſayth, not that Antichriſt ſhall be borne among the Saracens or Turkes, but among the people of God, and of the tribe of Iſrael. whereby is to be collected, that Antichriſte ſhal not come of the Saracēs, nor Turks, but ſhall ſpring vp among the Chriſtians, and (ſayeth Methodius) ſhall ſeeme to come out of the Temple, to deceiue many. &c. Whereby the Pope may ſeeme rather then the Saracene or the Turk, to be deſcribed, for ſo much as the Pope, being elected noriſhed, and raigning in the middeſt of Gods people, at Rome, ſitteth in the temple, and very place of Chriſt: and (no doubt) deceiueth many. &c.

The time of Antichriſt.

Petrus Lombardus.

Gratianus.

Innocentius. 3.

Trāſubſtātiatiō.

The firſt perſecution by the church of Rome

Dominicke.

Frier Fraunces.

Ex antonino part. 3. tit. 19. c 1.

The orders of Fryers beganne.

And nowe to come to the time aſſigned of Methodius, here is to be added alſo, that which we read in Antoninus. Par. 3. that about this ſaid preſent time, a certaine Biſhop of Florence preached that Antichriſte was then comming. But the pope commanded him to keepe ſilence & to ſpeake no more therof. Now why the pope ſo did, & why he could not abide the preaching of Antichriſte, I referre it to them which liſt to muſe more vpon the matter. This is certain, that about this time, heere aſſigned by Methodius, came Petrus Lombardus Gratianus, and Pope Innocent ẏ thirde, the firſt authors & patrons of trāſubſtantiation. At which time alſo began the firſt perſecution by ẏ church of Rome, againſt ẏ Albingenſes or waldenſes, about Tolous, Biturres, and Auinion. Of whome 17. M. the ſame time were ſlaine, by the Popes croſſed ſouldiors. Among whom frier Dominicke was then the chiefeſt doer. About whyche time alſo was Frier Frances, of which two came the two orders of begging Friers: al which began much about one time together. An. 1215, which were nere, within 20. yeres. after the kingdome of the Chriſtians was taken of the Turkes, according to the Propheſie aboue ſayd.

The pope exalting himſelfe aboue kings and Emperours.

It followeth moreouer in Methodius, That in hys time al Lordſhip & domination ſhal ceaſe and geue ouer. &c. The verity whereof we ſee nowe accompliſhed in the Pope. For where the Pope with his double ſword, and triple crowne dooth come, there all ſeculare power muſt geue place, both Emperors, Kings, and Princes muſt ſtoupe.

Notes of Antichriſt.

So king Iohn yeelded vp his crowne to Pandulfus the popes Legate, and was in his hand 5. daies. An. 1217.

Childerike the French K. had hys crowne taken from him, and geuen to Pipine. An. 747.

Henricus 4. Emperor was forced to ſubmit hymſelfe and his ſcepter to Pope Hildebrand. An. 1077.

Fridericus Barbaroſſa Emperour, in Saint Markes Church in Venice, was faine to lay downe hys necke vnder the Pope Alexanders feete. Anno 1277. which Fridericke alſo before, was faine to holde the ſtirroppe to Pope Adrian, &c.

What ſhould I ſpeake of the Ambaſſadour of Venice, named Franciſcus Dandulus? who being ſent to Pope

Clement the 5. was made to lie vnder the Popes table like a dog, & gather vp the croms, mẽcioned in Sabel.Enn.9.li.7.

Henry the 3. being Emperor, had hys diademe firſt ſet on with the feete of the Pope, and afterwarde ſtrocken off from his head with the Popes foote againe.

And what ſhall I ſpeake more hereof? when as Carolus Magnus ſubmitted himſelfe ſo lowe to kiſſe the feete of Pope Leo. An. 800.

Enoch & Hely.

It foloweth then in the propheſie of Methodius: That in the tribulation of thoſe dayes, ſhall be ſent from God two ſpeciall Prophettes, Enoch and Hely, to reprooue and diſcloſe the fraudulent falſehode of Antichriſt, and that many ſeeing his deluſion, ſhall forſake him and followe them: Wherat Antichriſt being greeued ſhall kill them. &c.

Iohn Hus & Hierome of Prage. Vid. in primo Tom. operũ Iohã. Hus. De Anatomia.

We neuer read yet in any ſtory, of any ſuche two Prophets to be ſent either to the Saracens, or to the Turkes: wheras againſt the Pope, we read Iohn Huſſe and Hierome of Prage, two learned Martyrs & Prophets of God to haue bene ſent, & to haue reproued and deſcribed the Anatomie of Antichriſt, and at laſt to haue bene burned for their labor. And what Prophet can ſpeake more plainely, either Enoch or Hely, then did Hierom of Prage, propheſying of the comming of Martin Luther, an C. yeres after him? when the Pope and his fellowes ſhould anſwere to God and to him. The time we ſee came iuſt. Nowe let the Pope ſee with his fellowes, what anſwer they can make.

The nearnes of the Lordes iudgement.

It followeth further in Methodius concludyng hys prophecie. And then (ſayth he) ſhall appeare the comming of the ſonne of man in the clouds of heauen, with celeſtial glory. &c.

Wherefore after the burning of theſe two notable Prophets, with many other thouſands burned alſo ſince their time, by the B. of Rome it is to be thought, that the comming of Chriſtes iudgement in the clouds, is not farre of. Veni cito Domine. Amen.

And thus muche touching Methodius, of whoſe prophecies how much or how little is to be eſtemed, I leaue it indifferent vnto the reader. For me it ſhal ſuffice ſimply to haue recited his wordes, as I finde them in his booke contained: noting this by ẏ way, that of this booke of Methodius, De nouiſſimis temporibus, neither Hierome in his Cataloge, nor Suidas, nor yet Auentinus in the place where hee entreateth purpoſely of ſuch prophecies, maketh any mention.

The propheſy of Hildegardis and Brigiete, of the Turkes.

Ex Auentino lib. 3. Annalium.

A caueat to England.

As touching Hildegardus & Brigit, & other whome the French cal Bardi for their ſongs & prophetical verſes, ſufficient hath ben alleaged before out of Auentinus: who in his 3. booke of Chronicles wryting of the teſtimonies of Hildegard, Brigit and Bardi, ſeemeth to grounde vppon them, that the Turkes, whether we wil or not, ſhal haue their Imperiall ſeate at Colen: And I pray God, that it come not to paſſe, that the Turke do geue ſome attempt againſt England by the ſeas, before that he come to Colen by land. &c.

Ex Brigitta, lib. 4. cap. 57.

Propheſies of Brigitte, againſt Rome.

Breuity cauſeth me to cut of many teſtimonies and reuelations of theſe abouesaide, or els I could here rehearſe the propheticall wordes of Brigit, lib 4. cap. 57. concerning the City and Church of Rome, which as ſhe ſayth, muſt be purged and ſcoured with 3. things: to wit, with ſharpe ſword, with fire, and with the plough, and that God wil doe with that Citie, as one that remoueth plants out of one place vnto an other: and finally, that the Citie of Rome ſhall ſuſteine the ſentence, as if a Iudge ſhould commaund the ſkin to be ſlaine off, the bloude to be drawne from the fleſh, and the fleſh to be cut in ſmall peces, & the bones therof to be broken, ſo that all the mary may be quiſed out from the ſame. &c.

The Propheſies of Erithrea Sybilla named Eriphila.

Ex Erithrea Sybilla in ſuo Nazilographo. i. imperiali ſcripto.

But for breuitie I let Brigit paſſe, & ſome thing wil declare out of Erythrea Sybilla, in her booke of prophecies found in S. Georges church in Venice: where ſhe propheſying many things of the birth of Chriſt vnder Auguſtus, and of the birth of Iohn Baptiſt, & of baptiſme, of the Apoſtles, of the conuerſion of the Gentiles, and of Conſtantinus. &c. hath theſe wordes: After that the peaceable Bull ſhall conclude all the climes of the world vnder tribute, in thoſe daies a heauenly lambe ſhal come: and the dayes ſhal come, whẽ the power of the flowing ſtreame ſhalbe magnified in water, & the Lyon the Monarche ſhalbe conuerted to the Lambe, which ſhall ſhine to all men, and ſubuert kingdomes.

Propheſies of Sybilla of chriſt.

By his feete is ſuppoſed to be ment the yeares of his age.

Moreouer ſayeth Sybilla, In the latter age God ſhall bee hũbled, and the diuine offſpring ſhalbe abaſed, & Deitie ſhalbe ioyned with humanity, the Lambe ſhal lie in hay, and God & mã ſhall be bred vp vnder a maidens attendance, ſignes and wõders ſhal go before amõgeſt the circumciſed. &c. Alſo, an aged womã ſhal cõceiue a childe hauing knowledge of things to come. The Worlde ſhall maruell at Boötes (the ſtarre) which ſhall be a leader to his birth. He hauing 32. feete and 6. thumbes ſhal chuſe to himſelf out of fiſhers and abiectes, the number of 12. and one deuill, not wyth ſworde nor with battel. &c. And afterwarde thus followeth moreouer, in Sybilla, ſaying: *The health of the lambe lying ſhalbe clothed with a fewe ſpoiles of the Lyon. Blacke ſhalbe turned into red. He ſhall ſubdue the citie of Æneas, and kings, but in the booke of the fiſher, In deiectiõ and pouertie he ſhall cõquere riches, and ſhall treade downe pride with his owne death, In the night he ſhall riſe vp, and be changed, he ſhall liue and raigne, and all theſe things ſhall be conſummated, and regeneration (or newe things) be made: at laſt hee ſhall iudge both good and euill. &c. And thus much briefly collected out of Sybilla Erythrea concerning Chriſt our Lord.

*The lambe lying, &c. that is, the Church without trauell ſhall be mainteyned with ſome liuing or poſſeſſions of cheife rulers.

By theſe foure beaſts is ment the 4. Monarchies of the worlde, that is the multitude of all the kingdõs of the Gentiles, as is in the Apocal.

By the citye of Aeneas is ment Rome

Furthermore, touching the ſtate and courſe of the Church and of Antichriſt. it foloweth in the ſayde Sybille, ſaying: Then ſhall 4. Winged beaſtes riſe vp in teſtimonie, they ſhal ſoũd out with trumpets the name of the lambe, ſowing righteouſnes, & the law irreprehenſible. Againſt which law, the beaſt ſhal gainſtand, & the abhomination & froth of the dragon. But a maruelous ſtar ſhal riſe, hauing the image of the 4. beaſts, & ſhalbe in a maruelous multitude, he ſhal bring light to the Greekes, and ſhal illuſtrate the world. The lake of the fiſher ſhall bring the name of the lambe with power, into the Citie of Eneas, vnto the end of the worlde, (or time). Then in the city of Eneas, the ſtarre ioyned, ſhall looſe ſuch as were bound of the deuill, and thereof hee ſhall reioyce and glory, and glorious ſhalbe his end &c.

The propheſies of Sybilla, of Antichriſt.

The 663. feet do meane the yeares of his reigne.

After this, Sybilla wryting (as it ſemeth) of Antichriſt, importeth theſe words. And it ſhall come to paſſe, that an horrible beaſt ſhal come out of the Eaſt, whoſe roaring ſhall be heard to Aphrike, to the people of Carthage, Which hath 7. heades and ſcepters innumerable, feete 663. He ſhall gainſtande the lambe, to blaſpheme his Teſtamẽt, encreaſing the waters of the dragon. The kings & princes of the world he ſhall burne in intolerable ſweat, & they ſhal not diminiſh his feete. And then two ſtarres like to the firſt ſtarre, ſhall riſe againſt the beaſt, and ſhal not preuaile, till the abhomination ſhall be come, and the wil of the Lord ſhall be conſummate. And again, ſpeaking of the ſame matter, he inferreth theſe words of the foreſaid 2. ſtarres aboue mẽtioned. And toward the latter dayes, two bright ſtarres ſhall ariſe, raiſing vp men lying dead in their ſinnes, being like to the firſt ſtarre, hauing the face of the 4. beaſts which ſhall reſiſt the beaſt, & the waters of the dragon, teſtifying (or preaching) the name and lawe of the lambe, the deſtruction of abhomination and iudgement, and ſhal diminiſh his waters, but they ſhalbe weakened in the bread of affliction, and they ſhall riſe againe in ſtronger force. &c.

Theſe two ſtarres ſeme to meane Iohn Hus, & Hierome, who being put to death by the pope their doctrine roſe agayne more ſtrongly then before.

And it foloweth moreouer. After the abhomination, then ſhal truth be reuealed, & the lambe ſhalbe known, to whom regions and countreis ſhal ſubmit their necks, & all earthly men ſhal agree together in one, to come into one fold, and to be ruled vnder one diſcipline, and after this ſhalbe but a ſmall time. &c.

And ſhortly after, the ſaide Sybilla ſpeaking of the latter iudgement to come, declareth how all the abhominations of ſinnes ſhall come before the lambe: and that terrible fire ſhall fall frõ heauen, which ſhall conſume al earthly things created vnto the top of heauen. &c.

Ex libro cui titulus, onus Eccleſiæ.

And thus muche out of Sybilla, touching her propheſies of Chriſt & Antichriſt, according as I founde them alleaged of a certaine catholike Romiſh wryter, in his booke entituled Onus eccleſiæ, excerped, as he ſayeth, out of the library of S. George in the citie of Venice.

Philip Melancthon in his preface vpon Bartholomæus Georgienitz Peregrinus, wryting of the Origene and manners of the Turks, alledgeth a certaine prophesy of Hikenus, mentioned hereafter, which forſaid that the Turkes ſhould beare rule in Italy and in Germany. An.1600.

Now it remaineth in concluſion of theſe propheſies of the Turks, ſome thing to ſay of the Turks owne propheſies, concerning the enduring & ending of their own kingdom, whoſe propheticall prognoſtication, being taken out of their owne language, and their own bookes, I thought here to inſert, as I finde it alleaged in the booke of the forſayd Bartholomæus Georgienitz, as followeth.

A Turkiſh prophecie in the Perſian toung of the raigne and ruine of the Turkes.

PAtiſſahomoz ghelur, Ciaferum memleketi alur, keuzul almai alur, Kapzeiler, iedı y ladegh Gyaur keleci cſikmaſſe, on ikiyladegh onlaron beghlig eder: euſi iapar, baghi diker baheſai baghlar, oglikezi olur, onichi yldenſora Hriſtianon Keleci cſichar, ol Turchi gereſtine tus chure.

The Latine of the ſame.

IMperator noſter veniet, ethnici Principis regnum capiet, rubrũ quoque pomum capiet, in ſuam poteſtatem rediget: quod ſi ſeptimum vſque annum Chriſtianorum gladius non inſurrexit, vſque ad duodecimum annum eis dominabitur. Domos ædificabit, vineas plantabit, hortos ſepibus muniet, liberos procreabit, & poſt duodecimum annum, apparebit Chriſtianorum gladius, qui Turcam quaqua verſum in fugam aget.

By the prince of the Gentiles the turkes do here meane the kingdomes and dominions of the Chriſtians, whom they call Gentiles, becuſe they are not circumciſed after their maner.

The ſame in Engliſh.

OUr Emperour ſhal come: he ſhal get the kingdome of the Gentiles prince; alſo he ſhal take the red apple and ſhall bring it vnder his ſubiection; and if the ſworde of the Chriſtians ſhall not riſe vnto the vij. yeare, hee ſhall haue dominion ouer them vnto the xij. yere. He ſhal build houſes, plant vineyardes, ſhal hedge about his orchards, ſhall procreate children: and after the xij. yeare ſhal appeare the ſworde of the Chriſtians, whych ſhall putte the Turke to flight euery where.

They whych make declaration of thys Turkiſhe propheſie do expound this xij. yeare to ſignify the xij. yeare after the winning of Conſtantinople; which Conſtantinople, they ſay, is ment by the redde apple: And after that xij. yeare, ſay they, ſhall riſe the ſworde of the Chriſtians. &c. and this propheſie being wrytten and tranſlated out of the Perſian tounge, with this expoſition vpon the ſame, is to be found in the boke of Bartholomeus Georgienitz. Albeit, concerning the expoſition therof, it ſemeth not to be true which is there ſpoken of the xij. yeare, after the wynning of Conſtantinople, being nowe 100. yeares ſince the wynning thereof.

The expoſition of the turkes propheſie.

Ex Barthol. Georgienitz.

Wherefore it may rather ſeme probable that by the vij. yeare and xij. yeare of the Turkes, this to be the meaning, that if the vij. of the Ottaman Turks do ſcape the ſworde of the Chriſtians, they ſhall continue, builde and plant. &c. vntill the xij. Turke, which is thys Solymannus, & then after that ſhall riſe the Chriſtians ſworde, whych ſhall put them to flight, and vanquiſh them in al quarters. And this expoſition may ſeeme to accord with the place of Geneſis, wherin is wrytten of Iſmael, that he had xij. ſonnes, & no mo: So that this Solymannus being the xij. Turke after Ottomannus, may (by the grace of Chriſt) be the laſt, whõ we heard credibly to be reported at the printing heereof, to be dead. But howſoeuer this prophecy is to be takẽ, it appeareth by their owne Oracles, that at length they ſhal be ouercome by the Chriſtians.

An other expoſition.

A Table deſcribing the times and yeares of the Saracens, Turkes, and Tartarians, for the better explaning of the ſtorie aboue prefixed.

The Saracẽs beginne their reigne.

AN.632. Began the kingdom of the Saracens or Arabians, after the death of mahumet the firſt ringleader of ẏ miſchief which Saracens reigning in Babylon ouer Perſia and Aſia, continued about 198. yeres

An.667. Ieruſalẽ was taken of the Saracens. Theſe Saracẽs after they had ſubdued Ormiſda K. of Perſia, ſet vp to themſelues a new kingdom, calling their chiefe prince Calipha, which ſignifieth a general Lord: and vnder him Seriphes, that is, an vnder prince: And againe vnder him their Soldan: which is a ruler or captaine vnder the which Soldanes, all the prouinces were deuided. And thus ruled they ẏ ſpace abouesayd of 198. yeres

The Egiptian Saracens or Sultans.

An.703. The Egyptians being weary of their ſubiection vnder the Romaines, called for helpe of the Saracene Calipha: and ſo caſting of the Romains, ſubmitted themſelues to the law of the Saracẽs, and had alſo their Calipha and theyr Babylon called Cairus, where their Calipha continued vnto Saraco or Syracinus. 447. yeres

An.810. Maugincтus or Muchumetus ẏ chiefe Sultan of Perſia, being at variance with Imbrael ẏ Sultane of Babilon, ſent for the aid of the turkes, out of Scythia: by whõ, when he had got the victorye againſt the Babilonians, the ſayd Turkes ſhortly after, conquered the Perſians and ſubdued their countrey within the ſpace of 20. yeres

The Saracẽs kingdome ceaſeth.

An.830. The Saracẽs being expulſed out of Aſia by the turkes, wandered about Afrike, Spayne, and Italy, and were in diuers places diſperſed, and ſo remained.

The turkes kingdome beginneth.

An.830. The Turkes after they had expulſed the Saracens out of Aſia, began to reigne in Aſia, in Perſia, & in Arabia, and there reigned without interruption, til the comming of the Tartarians, the ſpace of 192. yeres

An.1009. The Turkes wanne the city of Hieruſalem frõ the Saracens: which citie the Sultan of Egypt wan againe frõ the Turkes ſhortly after, & poſſeſſed the ſame till the comming of Gotfridus.

An.1051. Began the firſt king of ẏ turkes called Zaduke, to raign in Aſia, and ioyned league with Calipha of Egypt, and there raigned till the conqueſt of Gotfridus and the Chriſtians, the ſpace of 46. yeres

An.1078. Solymãnus nephue to Aſpaſalem ẏ turkiſh king in Aſia, otherwiſe called Turquinia, ſubdued Capadocia, which hath continued now ſince, the ſpace of 500. yeres

An.1099. Gotfridus Bulion duke of Lotharing a chriſtẽ prince, taking his voiage into Aſia, with 700000. Chriſten ſoldiours firſt got the city of Nicea againſt the Sultane of the Turkes: then Lycaonia, Cilicia, Syria, afterwarde Meſopotamia, and Comagena, then Antiochia. An.1098. and the next yere recouered Hieruſalem, being then in the hands of the Saracens, which they a little before had wonne from the Turkes, as is aforeſayde. After this Gotfridus ſucceded viij. chriſtian kings, which kept the kingdome of Hieruſalem and Aſia, both from the Turkes and Saracens, the ſpace of 88. yeres

An.1100. The Georgians, which be a people of Armenia the greater, vãquiſhed the Turks out of the kingdom of Perſia, after they had cutte their king in pieces. Wherby the Turks flying to Cappadocia, there remained vnder Solyman, & ioyned themſelues to the Soldan of Egypt, and waxed thẽ ſtrong in Aſia minor, called now Turquinia.

An.1170. When Almericus the vij. king of Hieruſalem after Gotfridus, had ouercome the Calipha or Sultan of Egypt, the Sultan being ouercome, called for the help of Saracon the Sultane of Syria. Thys Saracon after he had expulſed ẏ chriſtians out of Egypt, turned his power againſt ẏ Sultane of Egypt, and vanquiſhing him, tooke to him ſelfe the kingdome of Egypt: which kingdom he with his poſteritie did holde till the comming of the Tartarians and the Mamaluches about the ſpace of 88. yeres

An.1187. Saladinus the nephew of Saracon the Sultane of Egypt, perceauing the diſſention among the Chriſtian ſtates of Paleſtina, got Antioche, where he ſlewe Raymundus the Prince with hys owne hands: Then got Tiberias: From thence went to Accõ, where he tooke Guido king of Hieruſalem and Maſter of the Templares, priſonners: for whoſe raunſome, the Turke had Aſcalon yelded vp to him of the Chriſtians. That done, he ſubdued Hieruſalem. whych had bene in the handes of the Chriſtians before, the ſpace of. 88 yeres

An.1189. Friderike Emp. Philip French king, Rich. king of Englande made their viage into Aſia, where Friderike waſhing in a riuer at Cilicia, died. In this voiage at the ſiege of Accon, Saladinus wanne the fielde of our men, of whome 2000. were ſlaine in the chaſe. Accon at length was got of the Chriſtians. King Richarde got Cyprus. The two kings fell at ſtrife. Phillip retired home without any good doing, king Richarde laide ſiege to Hieruſalem, but in vaine, and ſo returning homewarde, was taken neare to Vienna in Auſtria, after hee had taken truce before wyth the Soldane, vppon ſuch condition as pleaſed hym. And thys good ſpeede had the Popes, ſending out againſt the Turkes.

Tranſubſtantiation.

An.1215. There was an other Councell holden at Rome by pope Innocẽt 3. where was enacted a newe article of our faith for tranſubſtantiation of bread and wine, to be turned into the body and bloud of our ſauiour. In this Councell alſo great excitation was made by the Pope, & great preparation was through al Chriſtendom, to ſet forward for recouery of the holy lãd. A mighty army was collected of Dukes, Lordes, knights, biſhops & Prelates, that if Gods bleſſing had gone wyth them, they myght haue gone throughout all Aſia and India.

Anno 1219. The Chriſtians after 18. monethes ſiege, gotte a certaine towne in Egypte, called Damiata or Elipolis, wyth much a do, but not much to ẏ purpoſe. For afterward as the chriſtian army of ẏ popes ſending, went aboute to beſiege the Citie Cairus or Babylon, the Sultane through his ſubtile traine ſo intrapped and incloſed them wythin the daunger of Nylus, that they were conſtrained to render agayne the Citie Damiata, with their pryſonners, and all the furniture thereof as they found it, into the Souldanes hande, and glad ſo wyth their liues to paſſe forwarde to Tyrus. An.1221.

Vide ſupra pag. 312.

In the meane time the Egyptian Turke cauſed the Citie of Hieruſalem to be raſed, that it ſhould ſerue to no vſe to the Chriſtians. what great thing els was done in that viage, it doth not greatly appere in ſtories. All be it Fridericus the 2. Emperour was not vnfrutefully there occupied, and muche more myght haue done, had it not bene for the violence and perſecution of the Biſhop of Rome againſt him: whereby he was enforced to take truce wyth the Sultan for 10. yeres, and ſo returned. After which things done, not many yeares after, at length the laſt citie of all belonging to the Chriſtians, which was Ptolomais or Acres, was alſo taken from them by the Sultane, ſo that now the chriſtians had not one foote left in all Aſia.

Tartarians.

Portæ Caſpiæ.

An.1203. Thus the Chriſtians being driuen out of Aſia by the Sultans & Turkes, yet the ſayd Turkes and Sultanes did not long enioy their victorie: For eftſones the Lord ſtirred vp againſt them the Tartarians, who breaking into Aſia by the portes of Caſpius ſubdued diuers partes of Aſia, namely, about Comana, Colchis, Iberia, Albania. &c. Theſe Tartarians as they had got many captiues in their warres: ſo for gaine vſed to ſhippe them ouer cuſtomably to Alexandria in Egypt to be ſolde: whych ſeruauntes and captiues Melechſala the great Sultane was gladde to buy, to ſerue him in his warres. which captiues & ſeruaunts after they had continued a certaine ſpace in Egypte, and through their valiant ſeruice grew in fauour and eſtimation with the ſayd Melechſala, and began more to increaſe in number and ſtrength: at lengthe they ſlue him, and tooke to themſelues the name and kingdome of the Sultane. And thus ceaſed the ſtocke of Saracon & Saladinus afore mentioned, which continued in Egypt, about the ſpace as is ſayd of 100 yeres Saladinus ſtocke in Aegipt ceaſeth.

Mamaluchi in Aegipt.

An.1240. After the death of Melechſala, the army of theſe foreſaide raſcals and captiues, ſet vp to themſelues a king of their owne cõpany, whome they called Turquemenius. who to fill vp the nomber of their company that it ſhould not diminiſh, deuiſed this order, to get or to buy chriſtẽ mens children, taken yong frõ their parents, and ẏ mothers lap: whom they vſed ſo to bryng vp to make them to denye Chriſt, and to be circumciſed, and inſtructed in Mahumetes law, & afterward to be trained in the feates of warre, and theſe were called Malaluchi. Among whome this was their order, that none might be aduaunced to be king, but out of their own number, or els choſen by them: neither that any ſhoulde be made knights or horſemen, but only the children of chriſtians which ſhould deny Chriſt before, called Mamaluchi. Alſo it was among them prouided, that to thys dignity neither Saracens nor Iewes, ſhould be admitted. Item, that the ſucceſſion therof ſhoulde not deſcend to the children and offpring of theſe Mamaluchi. Alſo, that the ſucceſſion of the crowne ſhould not deſcend to the childrẽ of the foreſayd Sultanes, but ſhoulde goe by voyce and election. The Tartarians wyth Turquemenius their king, aboute thys time obtained Turquia, that is, Aſia minor, from the Turkes, and wythin 2. yeres after, preuailing againſt the Turkes, expelled them from their kingdome, and ſo continued theſe Mamaluchi reigning ouer Egypt, & a great part of Aſia, till the time of Tomumbeius their laſt kyng, whych was deſtroyed and hanged at the gates of Memphis, by Zelymus the Turke, father to this Solymannus, as in hys hiſtorye is declared, pag. 747. Theſe Mamaluchi continued the ſpace of

Vide ſupra pag. 747.

An.1245. Theſe Tartarians rãging through the countreis of the Georgians, and all Armenia, came as far as Iconiũ, which was then the imperiall city of the Turkes.

An.1289. The Soldane of Egypt & Babilon got from the chriſtiãs Tripolis, Tyrus, Sydon, and Berithus in Syria.

An.1291. Laſtly, Ptolomais, which alſo is called Akers, was ſurpriſed by ẏ ſayd Soldan, raſed and caſt downe to the ground, & all the Chriſtians therein (whych were not many left) were ſlaine. And this was the laſt citye which the Chriſtians had in Aſia. So that now the Chriſtians haue not one foot (as is ſayd before) left in al Aſia. Thus the Egyptian Soldanes, and the Tartarians reigned and ranged ouer the moſt part of Aſia aboue the Turkes, till the reigne of Ottomannus the great Turke, aboute the ſpace of 80 yeres

¶ And thus haue ye the whole diſcourſe of the Turkiſh ſtory, with their names, countreyes, townes, dominions alſo with their times, continuance, interruptions and alterations, in order deſcribed and in yeares diſtincted: which otherwiſe in moſt authors and writers be ſo confuſed, that it is heard to know diſtinctly, what difference is betwene the Saracens, Turkes, Tartarians, ẏ Sultans or Soldans, Mamaluches, or Ianizarites: what is their Calipha, pha, their Scriphes, their Sultan, or Baſſa, in what times they began, and how long, and in what order of yeres they reigned. Al which in thys preſent table manifeſtly to thine eye may appeare.

Why the pope cannot preuaile againſt the Turkes.

Wherein this thou haſt moreouer (gentle Reader) to cōſider, which is worthy the noting, how the B. of Rome all this ſeaſon, frō the firſt beginning of the Turks reigne, hath not ceaſed from time to time continually, calling vpon Chriſten princes and ſubiectes, to take the croſſe and to warre againſt the Turkes: whervpon ſo many great viages haue bene made to the holy lande, & ſo many battailes fought againſt the Turke and Soldan for winning ỷ holy croſſe: and yet no luckie ſucceſſe hath followed thereof hetherto, nor euer came it proſperouſly forward, whatſoeuer through the exciting of that Biſhop, hath beene attempted againſt that great enemy of the Lorde: In ſomuch that the Chriſtians haue loſt not onely all that they had in Aſia, but alſo vnneth are able to defende that little they haue in Europe, againſt his violence. what the cauſe is of thys harde lucke of the Byſhops doings, it is hard for man to define. Let men muſe as their minde leadeth, and as the Goſpell ſayth, he that hath eyes to ſee let him ſee. This is certaine, that as there hath lacked no care nor diligence in the B. of Rome, to ſtirre men vp to that buſines: ſo on the Princes behalfe there hath lacked no courage nor ſtrength of men, no contribution of expenſes, no ſupportation of charges, no furniture or abilement of warre: onely the bleſſyng of God ſemeth to haue lacked. The reaſon and cauſe wherof I would were ſo eaſy to be reformed, as it may be quickly conſtrued. For what man beholding the life of vs Chriſtians, wil greatly maruell, why ỷ Lord goeth not with our army to fight againſt the Turks? And if my verdit might here haue place, for me to adde my cenſure, there appeareth to me an other cauſe in this matter, yet greater then thys aforeſaid: which to make plaine and euidēt in ful diſcourſe of wordes, laiſure nowe doth not permit. Briefly to touch what I conceiue, my opiniō is thys: that if the ſincere doctrine of Chriſten faith deliuered & left vnto vs in the word of God, had not ben ſo corrupted in the church of Rome, or if the B. of Rome would yet reclame his impure idolatry, and prophanations, and admit Chriſte the Lambe of God to ſtande alone, without our vnpure additions, to be our onely Iuſtification, according to the free promiſe of Gods grace: I nothing doubt but the power of this faith grounding onely vpon Chriſt the ſonne of God, had both framed our liues into a better diſpoſition: and alſo ſone would, or yet wil bring downe the pride of that proude Holofernes. But otherwiſe, if the Biſh. of Rome will not gently geue place to the milde voyce of Gods word, I thinke not contrary, but he ſhalbe compelled at laſt to giue place & roume to the Turke, whether he will or not. And yet notwythſtanding, when both the Turk & the Pope ſhal do againſt it what they can, the trueth and grace of Gods Teſtament ſhall fructify & increaſe, by ſuch meanes as the Lorde ſhall worke, which beginneth alredy (praiſe to the Lord) to come graciouſly and luckely forward in moſt places.

God offended with Idolatrie and wrong faith of the Chriſtians.

O Eternall Lorde God, father of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, creator and diſpoſer of all things, iuſt, gracious, & wiſe only, in the name and reuerence of thy ſonne Ieſus, wee proſtrate our ſelues, deſiring thine omnipotent maieſtie, to looke downe vppon theſe afflicted times of thy poore creatures and ſeruaunts: relieue thy Church, increaſe our faith, and confound our enemies: and as thou haſt geuen thine onely begotten ſonne vnto vs, promiſing with hym life to all that ſhall beleeue vpon his name: ſo encline the obedience of our faith to thy promiſes in him, that our hearts may be farre off from all other ſinnefull additions and prophane inuentions, which are beſides him, and not in him, grounded vpon thy will and promiſe. And graunt (we beſeeche thee) to thy Church, more and more to ſee how terrible a thing it is, to ſet vp any other meanes or helpe of ſaluation, but onely in him, whome thou only haſt ſent and ſealed. Reforme thy Church with perfecte doctrine and faithfull teachers, that we ſeeing our owne weakeneſſe, may put off our ſelues, and put on him without whom we can do nothing. So ſhall we ſtand ſtrong, when nothing ſtandeth in vs, but thy ſonne alone, in whome thou art onely pleaſed. Renew in this thy Church againe, the decaied faith of thy ſonne Ieſus, which may plentifully bring foorth in vs, not leaues onely, but frutes of Chriſtian life: And forgeue our wretched Idolatry and blinde phantaſies paſt, wherwith we haue prouoked manifold waies thy deſerued indignation againſt vs: For our hearts haue bene full of Idoles, our temples full of Images, our wayes full of hypocriſie: thy Sacraments prophaned, and thy religion turned to ſuperſtition, becauſe the lanterne of thy worde went not before vs, therfore we haue ſtumbled. Miſerably we haue walked hetherto, like ſonnes not of Sara, but of Agar, and therefore theſe Turkiſh Agarens haue riſen vp againſt vs. Many hard and ſtraight wayes we haue paſſed, but the wayes of the Lorde we haue not founde. Much coſt we haue beſtowed on bread that ſwageth no hunger, but that bread which onely feedeth and commeth freely, we haue not taſted. We haue ſailed farre and nere in barkes of our owne building, but haue not kept within the Arke onely of thy promiſe, and therefore theſe floudes haue taken vs. We haue prayed much, but not in thine appoynted temple, and therefore haue not bene heard. Wee haue plowed and tilled, but without thy haiffer, and therfore this vntidie ground of ours, bringeth foorth ſo many weedes We do fiſh apace and that all night, but becauſe we fiſh not on the right ſide of the boate, in our fiſhing we catche neuer a finne. Our buildings be full of good intentions & great deuotiōs, but becauſe the groūd worke is not ſurely laid vpō the rocke of thy promiſe, the Eaſt winde riſeth and ſhaketh them all to ſhiuers. We walke and haue walked long after the precepts and doctrines of men, hauing a ſhew of wiſedome, but not as holding the heade, where lieth all our ſtrength, and therefore theſe Philiſtian Turkes haue hetherto ſo preuailed againſt vs. Briefly, all the partes and bones of the body be ſhaken out of place. Wherefore we beſeeche thee (O Lorde) put to thy holy hand, and ſet them in the right ioynt againe. And finally, reduce this ſame thy myſticall body againe, to his perfect and naturall head, whych is thine onely ſonne Ieſus Chriſt, and none other. For him onely haſt thou annoynted and appoynted. Neither is there any other head, that can miniſter ſtrength and nutriment to this body, but he alone: for aſmuch as all other heades be ſinnefull, and are not able to ſtande in thy ſight, but make thys body rather worſe then better. Onely this thy welbeloued and perfecte ſonne is he, in whome onely dwelleth all our ſtrength and fulneſſe: him onely we confeſſe and knowledge. For whome, and with whome, wee beſeeche thee (O Lorde God of hoſtes) graunt to thy Church ſtrength and victory againſt the malicious fury of theſe Turkes, Saraeens, Tartarians, againſte Gog and Magog, and all the malignaunt rabble of Antichriſt, enemies to thy ſonne Ieſus our Lord and Sauior. Preuent their deuiſes, ouerthrow their power, and diſſolue their kingdome, that the kingdome of thy ſonne ſo long oppreſſed, may recouer and flouriſh ouer all: and that they which wretchedly be fallen from thee, may happely be reduced againe into the folde of thy ſaluation, throughe Ieſus Chriſte our only mediatour and moſt mercifull aduocate. Amen.

Anno. 1500.

In this long digreſſion, wherin ſufficiently hath bene deſcribed the grieuous and tedious perſecution of the Saracens, & Turkes againſt the Chriſtians, thou haſt to vnderſtand (good reader) and beholde the image of a terrible Antichriſt euidently appearing both by his own doings, & alſo by the ſcriptures, prophecied & declared to vs before. Now in comparing the Turke with the pope, if a queſtion be aſked whether of them is the truer or greater Antichriſt, it were eaſy to ſee and iudge, that the Turke is the more open and manifeſt enemye agaynſt Chriſte and hys Church. But if it be aſked, whether of them two hath bene the more bloudy and pernitious aduerſary to Chriſte and his members: or whether of them hath conſumed and ſpilt more Chriſtian bloud, he with ſword, or this with fire and ſword together, neither is it a light matter to diſcerne, neither is it my part here to diſcuſſe, which do onely write the hiſtory, and the Actes of them both. wherfore after the ſtory of the Turkes thus finiſhed, nowe to reenter agayne there, whereas we left, in deſcribing the domeſticall troubles and perſecutions here at home vnder the Byſhop of Rome: after the burning of Babram in Northfolke aboue declared. pag 737. I ſignified alſo of an other certaine aged man mētioned in an old written Chronicle borowed of one in ỷ tower, intituled Polychron. (although I finde not his name in the ſaide Chronicle expreſſed) which ſuffered the paines of burning in Smithfielde, about the ſame time, which was the yere of our Lord. 1500. Ex Polycron.

Ex ſcripto Polychronicho.

This aged father, I ſuppoſe, be hee of whome I finde mention made in certaine olde papers and recordes of W. Carye Citizen (all be it the day of the moneth doth a little differ) wherin is thus teſtified, that on the 20. day of Iuly. An. 1500. vpon the day of S. Margaret, there was an olde man burned in ſmithfield for an hereticke, & the ſame perſon vpon the 19. day before he was burned, wold haue ſtolen out of the Lolardes tower, and ſo falling out of the tower, did fowly hurt him ſelfe: wherupon he was caried in a cart to his death, as he went to his burning.

In the foreſaid papers of auncient recorde, is furthermore declared, how in the yere aboue prefixed, which was An. 1499. in the time of one Perſeuell, many were taken for heretickes in Kent, and at Paules croſſe they bare faggottes and were abiured, and ſhortly after the ſame yeare, there went 13. lolardes afore the proceſſion in Paules, and there were of them 8. weemen and a yong lad, and the lads mother was one of the 8. and all the 13. bare faggottes on their neckes afore the proceſſion.

Diuers kentiſhmen bearing fagots.

Will Tilſworth, Martir.

FOr ſomuch as the world is come now to ſuch a moroſity and peuiſh inſenſibilitie in theſe contentious and cauilling daies of ours, that nothyng can be ſo circumſpectly wrytten and ſtoryed, but ſhall lie in daunger of one Sycophant or an other, whyche neuer will credite there, where they liſt not to like: neither will they euer lyke that, which ſeemeth preiudiciall to their faction, or not to ſerue the humor wherewith their phantaſies bee infected: therefore to ſtop the mouthes of ſuch carping cauillers with as muche poſſibilitie as I may, be it knowne to al and ſingular ſuch perſons, who by euidence of truth and witnes wil be ſatiſfied, that in the towne of Amerſham, be yet aliue both men and women, which can and do beare witnes of this that I ſhal declare. Alſo there is of the ſayd company, one named william Page, an aged father and yet aliue, witnes to the ſame. Alſo an other named Agnes wetherley widdowe, being about the age of an hundreth yeares, yet lyuing and witnes heereof: That in the dayes of king Henry 7. Anno 1506. in the dioces of Lyncolne in Bukingham ſhire (william Smith being Byſhop of the ſame dioceſſe) one william Tylſworth was burned in Amerſham, in a cloſe called Standley about 60. yeares agoe. At which time one Ioane Clearke, being a marryed woman, whych was the onely daughter of the ſayde w. Tylſeworth and a faythfull woman, was compelled with her owne handes to ſet fyre to her deare father: and at the ſame time her huſbād Iohn Clearke did penaunce at her fathers burning, and bare a fagot, as did alſo.

Al theſe bare fagots, and afterward were compelled to weare certaine badges, & went abroad to certaine townes to doe penaunce, as to Buckingham, Aylesbury, and other townes mo: And alſo diuers of theſe men were afterward burned in the cheeke, as william Page, which at this preſent is aliue, and likewiſe did beare a fagot with the aforeſaid. Furthermore the foreſaid Agnes wetherley teſtifieth that at the burning of thys william Tylſworth, were lx. and aboue that were put to beare fagots for their penance, of whom diuers were enioyned to beare and weare fagots at Lyncolne, the ſpace of 7. yeres, ſome at one time, ſome at another. &c. ✻ The burning of Thomas Barnard, and Iames Mordon.

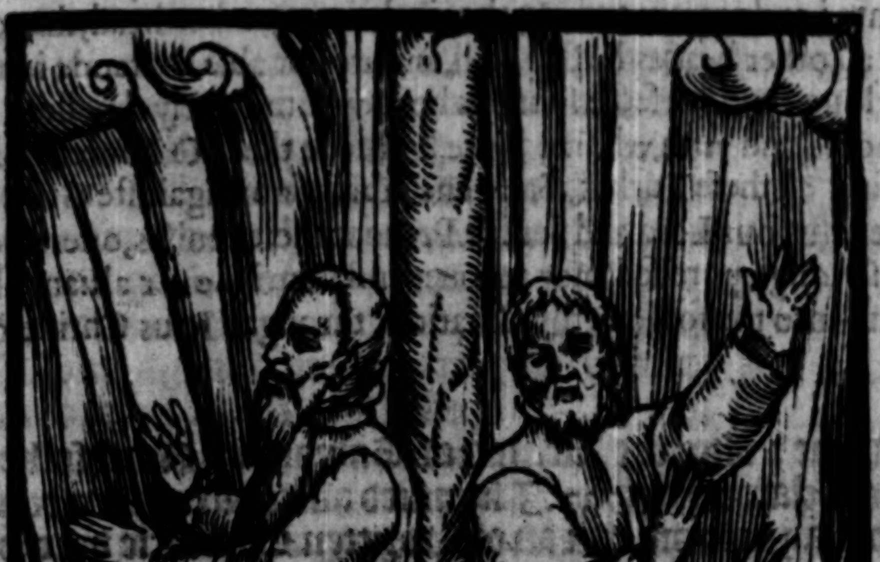
Tho Barnard, Iames Mordon Martirs.



Father Roberts Martir

It foloweth moreouer in ẏ teſtimonie of the forenamed, that about the ſame time of the burning of william Tilſworth (as the Amerſham men do ſay) or the next day after, as recordeth the foreſayd Agnes) was one father Roberts burned at Buckingham. He was a miller, and dwelled at Miſſenden: and at hys burning were there aboue 20. perſons that were compelled to beare fagots, and to do ſuche penaunce as the wicked Phariſes did compell them. After that by the ſpace of 2. or 3. yeeres, was burned at Amerſhā, Thomas Barnard a huſbandman, and Iames Mordon a labourer, they two were burned both at one fire, and there was william Litlepage (who is yet aliue) compelled to be burned in the right cheeke, and father Rogers, and father Reuer alias Reiue, whych after was burned. Thys Father Rogers was in the byſhops priſone 14. weekes together, night and day, where he was ſo cruelly handled with cold, hunger, and yrones, that after his comming out of the ſaid pryſon, he was ſo lame in his backe that he could neuer go vpright as long as hee liued, as can teſtifie diuers honeſt men that be now liuing. Alſo there was 30. mo burned in the right cheke, and bare fagottes the ſame time. The cauſe was that they would talke againſt ſuperſtition and idolatry, and were deſirous to hear & read the holy Scriptures. The maner of their burning in the cheeke was this: theyr neckes were tied faſt to a poaſte or ſtay, wyth towels, and theyr handes holden that they might not ſtirre, and ſo the iron being hotte, was put to their cheekes, and thus bare they the prints and marks of the Lord Ieſus about them.

Men of Amerſham burnt in the cheeke for Gods word

✻ The cruell handling of Thomas Chaſe of Amerſham, wickedly ſtrangled and martyred in the biſhops priſon at Wooburne, vnder W. Smith Biſhop of Lincolne.

Anno. 1506.

Tho. Chaſe Martir.

AMong theſe aforeſayd, which were ſo cruelly perſecuted for the Goſpell and worde of Chriſte, one Thomas Chaſe of Amerſham, was one of them that was thus cruelly handled, which Thomas Chaſe by the report of ſuche as did knowe him, was a man of a godly, ſober and honeſt behauior (whoſe vertuous doings doe yet remaine in memorie) and could not abide Idolatrie and ſuperſtition, but many times woulde ſpeake againſt it: wherefore the vngodly and wicked did the more hate & deſpiſe him, and toke hym, and brought him before the blinde Byſhop, beyng at that time at wooburne, in the Countie of Buckingham, and as it is wrytten. Act. 12. that wicked Herode dyd vexe certaine of the congregation, and killed Iames the brother of Iohn with the ſword, and becauſe he ſaw that it pleaſed ẏ Iewes. &c. he proceded farther, and had thys ſame Thomas Chaſe before him, aſking him many queſtions touching the Romiſh religion, wᵗ many tauntes, checkes, and rebukes, but what anſwere this godly man Thom. Chaſe made them, it is vnknowen. Howbeit it is to be ſuppoſed, that hys aunſwere was moſt zealous and godly in profeſſing Chriſtes true religion and Goſpel, and to the extirpation of idolatry and ſuperſtition and hypocriſie, for that the ſayde Thomas Chaſe was commaunded to be put in the biſhops priſon called litleeaſe, in the biſhops houſe at wooburne, which priſon had not bene miniſtred vnto him, had not his anſwers bene ſound and vpright. There Thomas Chaſe lay bound moſt painfully with chaines, gyues, manicles and yrons oft times ſore pined with hunger, where the Biſhopes almes was daily brought vnto hym by hys chapleines: whych almes was nothing els but checkes, tauntes, rebukes, and threatninges, floutinges and mockings. Al which crueltie the godly Martyr toke moſt quietly & paciently, remembring and hauing reſpect to Chriſtes promiſes, Math. 5. Bleſſed are they which ſuffer perſecution for righteouſneſſe ſake: for theirs is the kingdome of heauen, and as foloweth: Bleſſed are yee when men reuile you and perſecute you, &c. when the Biſhop wyth his bonde of ſhauelings, perceiued that by their daily practiſes of crueltie they coulde not preuaile againſt him, but rather ẏ he was the more feruent & earneſt in profeſſing Chriſtes true Religion: and that he did tolerate and beare moſt paciently al their wickednes and cruelty miniſtred vnto hym: they they imagined how and which way they might put hym to death, leaſt there ſhould be a tumulte or an vprore amõg the people. And as Richard Hun ſhortly after was hanged or ſtrangled in Lolardes tower, about the yeare of our Lord 1514. euen ſo theſe bloudſuppers moſt cruelly ſtrangled and preſt to death this ſaid Thomas Chaſe in priſon, which moſt hartely called vpon God to receiue his ſpirit: as witneſſeth a certaine woman, that kept him in priſon.

Tho. Chaſe cruelly murthered in the Biſhops priſon.

After that theſe ſtinging vipers being of the wicked broode of Antichriſt, had thus moſt cruelly and impiouſlye murthered this faithfull Chriſtian, they were at their wits ende, and could not tell what ſhift to make, to cloke theyr ſhamefull murther withall, at laſt to blinde the ignoraunt ſely people, theſe bloudy butchers moſt ſlaunderouſly cauſed by their miniſters to be bruted abroade, that the foreſaid Thomas Chaſe had hanged himſelfe in priſon: which was a moſt ſhamefull and abhominable lie, for the priſon was ſuch, that a man coulde not ſtand vpright, nor lye at eaſe but ſtooping, as they do report that did knowe it. And beſides that, this man had ſo many manacles & yrons vpon him, that he could not wel moue neither hand nor foote, as the women did declare that ſawe him dead, in ſo much that they cõfeſſed that his bloudbolke was broken by reaſon they had ſo vily beaten him and bruiſed him: And yet theſe holy catholikes had not made an end of their wicked acte in this both killing and ſlandering of this godly martyr, but to put out the remembrance of him, they cauſed him to be buried in the wood called Norlandwood, in the hie way betwixt Wooburne and little Marlow, to the entent he ſhould not be takẽ vp againe to be ſeene: And thus commonly are innocent men layd vp by theſe clerkly clergye men. But he that is effectually true of himſelfe, hath promiſed at one time or at another, to cleare his true ſeruauntes, not with lyes and fables, but by his owne true word. No ſecret ſaith he, is ſo cloſe, but once ſhall be opened, neither is any thing ſo hid, that ſhall not at the laſt be knowne clearely. Such a ſweete Lord is God alwaies to thoſe that are his true ſeruants. Bleſſed be his holy name therefore, for euer and euer, Amen.

Tho. Chaſe falſely ſlaũdered to hang himſelfe.

Thomas Harding being one of this company, thus moleſted and troubled as is aforeſaide, in the towne of Amerſham, for the truth of the Goſpell, after hys abiuration and penaunce done, was againe ſought for, and brought to the fire, in the dayes of King Henry viij. and vnder D. Langlond then Biſhop of Lincolne, ſucceeding after Cardinall Wolſey. Of whoſe death and martirdome, we ſhall likewiſe record (Chriſt willing and graunting) in order when we ſhall come to the time and yeare of his ſuffering.

Tho. Norice Martir. Anno. 1507.

After the martirdome of theſe two, I read alſo of one Thomas Norice, who likewiſe for the ſame cauſe, that is, for the profeſſion of Chriſtes Goſpell, was condemned by the Biſhop and burnt at Norwich, the laſt day of March, an. 1507.

Elizabeth Sampſon. Anno. 1508.

In the next yeare folowing, which was an. 1508. In the conſiſtory of London, was conuented Elizabeth Sampſon, of the pariſh of Aldermanberie vpon certain Articles, and ſpecially for ſpeaking againſt pilgrimage & adoration of Images, as ẏ Image of our Lady at Wilſdone, at Staninges, at Crome, at Walſingham, and the Image of ſaint Sauiour, of Barmondſey, and againſt the Sacrament of the aultar, and for that ſhe had ſpoken theſe or like wordes: that our Lady of Wilſdon was but a burnt arſe elfe, and a burnt arſe ſtocke, and if ſhe might haue holpen men & women which go to her on pilgrimage, ſhe woulde not haue ſuffred her taile to haue bene burnt: and what ſhould folke worſhip our Lady of Wilſdone, or our Lady of Crome, for the one is but a burnt arſe ſtocke, and the other is but a puppit: and better it were for the people to geue theyr almes at home to poore people, then to go on pilgrimage. Alſo that ſhe called the Image of Saint Sauiour, Sim Sauiour with kit lips, and that ſhe ſaid ſhe could make as good bread as that which the prieſt occupied, and that it was not the body of Chriſt, but bread, for that Chriſt could not be both in heauen and earth at one time. For theſe and certaine other articles, ſhe was compelled to abiure, before Maiſter William Horſey, Chancellour the day and yeare aboue written. Ex Regiſt. Lond.

¶ Laurence Gheſt.

Laurence Gheſt. Martir.

Lamentable it is to remember, & a thing almoſt infinite to comprehend the names, times, and perſons of al thẽ which haue bene ſlaine by the rigour of the Popes Clergie, for the true mainteining of Chriſtes cauſe and of hys Sacraments. Whoſe memory being regiſtred in the booke of life, albeit it neede not the cõmemoration of our ſtories, yet for the more confirmation of the Church, I thought it not vnprofitable, the ſuffering and Martyrdome of them to be notified, which innocently haue geuen their bloud to be ſhed in Chriſtes quarell.

Laurẽce Gheſt two yeares in priſon at Saliſbury.

Laurence would not be turned for wyfe nor childrẽ

Laurence died a Martir.

In the Cathalogue of whom next in order cõmeth the memoriall of Laurence Gheſt, who was burned in Saliſbury for matter of the Sacrament, in the dayes of K. Henry the 7. he was of a comely & tall perſonage, & otherwiſe (as appeareth) not vnfrended, for the which the Byſhop & the cloſe were the more lothe to burne him: but kept him in priſon the ſpace of ij. yeares. This Laurence had a wife and vij. children. Wherfore they thinkyng to expugne and perſwade his mynde by ẏ ſtirring his fatherly affectiõ toward his childrẽ, when the time came which they appointed for his burning, as he was at ẏ ſtake, they brought before him his wife and his foreſayd vij. children. At the ſight wherof, although nature is cõmonly wont to worke in other, yet in him religiõ ouercõming nature, made his conſtancie to remaine vnmoueable: in ſuch ſorte as when his wife began to exhort & deſire him to fauour himſelfe, he agayn deſired her to be cõtẽt, & not to be a block to his way, for he was in a good courſe, runnyng toward the marke of his ſaluatiõ: & ſo fire beyng put to him, he finiſhed his life, renouncing not onely wife & children, but alſo him ſelfe to follow Chriſt. As he was in burning, one of the Byſhops men threw a firebrand at his face: wherat the brother of Laurence ſtanding by, ranne at him with his dagger, and would haue ſlayne him, had he not bene otherwiſe ſtayd.

Witnes to the ſtory.

Teſtified & witneſſed by the credible report of one Williã Ruſſell an aged mã dwelling of late in Colmanſtreete, who was there preſent the ſame tyme at the burnyng of Laurence, & was alſo himſelfe burned in the cheke, & one of the perſecuted flocke in thoſe dayes, whoſe daughter is yet liuing: The ſame is confirmed alſo with the teſtimony of one Richard Web ſeruaunt ſometyme to M. Latymer, who ſoiournyng in the houſe of the ſayd William Ruſſell, heard him many tymes declare the ſame.

¶ A faythfull woman burned.

A notable ſtorie of a faithfull woman burned in Chippingſadbery.

But amongeſt all the examples of them, wherof ſo many haue ſuffered from tyme to tyme for Chriſt & his truth, I can not tell if euer were any Martyrdome more notable & admirable, wherein the playne demonſtration of Gods mighty power and iudgement hath at any time bene more euident agaynſt the perſecutours of his flocke, then at the burnyng of a certaine godly woman, put to death in Chepingſadbery, about the ſame tyme, vnder the raigne of K. Henry the ſeuenth.

D. Whittington Chauncellour a perſecutour.

The cõſtãcie of which bleſſed womã, as it is glorious for all true godly Chriſtians to behold: ſo agayne the exãple of the Byſhops Chaũcellour, which cruelly cõdemned the innocent, may offer a terrible ſpectacle to the eyes of all Papiſticall perſecutours to conſider, and to take example: which the liuing God graunt they may. Amen. The name of the Towne where ſhe was martyred, was as is ſayd, Chepyngſadbery. The name of the woman is not as yet come to my knowledge. The name of the Chauncellour, who condẽned her, was called D. Whittington. The time of her burnyng was in the raigne & tyme of K. Henry 7. orderly therfore in this place & time to be inſerted. Wherein is to be noted moreouer the oportunitie of this preſent hiſtory brought to my hands, & that in ſuch cõuenient ſeaſon, as I was drawyng toward the ende of the foreſayd kynges raigne: ſo that it may appeare to them, which behold the oportunitie of things, not to be without Gods holy wil & prouidence, that this foreſayd example ſhould not lye hid & vnremembred, but ſhould come to light & knowledge, and that in ſuch order of placing, accordyng as the due courſe of our ſtory hetherto kept, requireth.

A faithfull Chriſtian womã and Martir, burned at Chippingſadbery.

After this godly woman and manly Martyr of Chriſt was condemned by the wretched Chaũcellour aboue named D. Whittington, for the faithfull profeſſion of ẏ truth, which the Papiſtes then called hereſie, and the tyme now come whẽ ſhe ſhould be brought to the place and paynes of her martyrdome, a great concourſe of all the multitude both in the towne and countrey about (as the maner is in ſuch tymes) was gathered to behold her end. Among whõ was alſo the foreſayd Doct. Whittington the Chauncellour, there preſent to ſee the execution done. Thus this faythfull woman, and true ſeruaunt of God cõſtantly perſiſting in the teſtimony of the truth, committing her cauſe to the Lord, gaue ouer her life to ẏ fire, refuſing no paynes nor tormentes to keepe her conſcience cleare & vnreproueable in the day of the Lord. The ſacrifice beyng ended, the people began to returne homeward, commyng from the burning of this bleſſed Martyr. It happened in the meane tyme that as the Catholicke executioners were buſie in ſlaieng this ſely lambe at the townes ſide, a certayne Butcher within the towne was as buſie in ſlaieng of a Bull, which Bull he had faſt bounde in ropes, ready to knocke him on the head. But the butcher (belike not ſo ſkilfull in his arte of killing beaſtes, as the Papiſtes be in murthering Chriſtians) as he was lifting his axe to ſtrike the Bull, failed in hys ſtroke, and ſmit a little too low, or elſe how he ſmit, I knowe not. This was certayne, that the Bull although ſomewhat greued at the ſtroke, but yet not ſtroken downe, put his ſtrength to the ropes, and brake loſe from the butcher into the ſtreete, the very ſame tyme as the people were comming in great preaſe from the burning. who ſeeing the Bull comming towardes them, and ſuppoſing him to be wilde (as was no other lyke) gaue way for the beaſt, euery man ſhifting for himſelfe, as well as he might. Thus the people geuing backe, and making a lane for the Bull, he paſſed through the throng of them, touching neither man nor childe, till he came where as the Chauncelour was. Againſt whome the Bull, as pricked with a ſodeine vehemēcie, ranne full but with his hornes, and taking him vpon the paunch, gored him through and through, and ſo killed him immediatly, carieng his guts, and trailing them with his hornes all the ſtreete ouer, to the great admiration and wonder of all them that ſawe it.

A compariſon betweene butchers, and the popes murthering miniſters.

A rare & ſpeciall example of the iuſt puniſhment of God vpon a perſecutour.

D. Whittington ſlaine of a Bull.

Although the carnall ſence of man be blinde in conſidering the workes of the Lorde, imputing many tymes to blinde chaunce the thyngs which properly pertayne to Gods only praiſe and prouidence: yet in this ſo ſtraunge and ſo euident example, what man can be ſo dull or ignorant, which ſeeth not heerein a plaine miracle of Gods mighty power and iudgement both in the puniſhing of this wretched Chauncelour, and alſo in admoniſhing all other like perſecutours, by his example, to feare the Lord, and to abſtaine from the like crueltie?

Witnes to the ſtory.

Now for the credite of this ſtory, leaſt I be ſayde vpon mine owne head to commit to ſtory, things raſhly which I can not iuſtifie, therefore to ſtop ſuch cauelling mouths, I will diſcharge my ſelfe with authority I truſt ſufficient: that is, with the witneſſe of him which both was a Papiſt, and alſo preſent the ſame time at the burning of the woman, whoſe name was Rowland webbe: which Rowland dwelling then in Chippingſadbery, had a ſonne named Richard webbe, ſeruant ſometime to Maiſter Latymer, who alſo enduring with him in time of his trouble ſixe yeares together, was himſelfe empriſoned and perſecuted for the ſame cauſe. Unto the which Richard webbe being now aged, then yong, the foreſaid Rowland his father, to the entent to exhort him from this ſect of hereſie (as he then called it) recited to him many times the burning of this woman, and withall added the ſtory of the Bull aforeſayd, which he himſelfe did ſee & teſtifie. This Richard webbe is yet liuing, a witnes of his owne fathers wordes and teſtimonie, which I truſt may ſatiſfie all indifferent Readers, except onely ſuch as thinke no truth to be beleeued, but that only which is in their Portues.

And thus much concerning the ſtate of the Churche. wherein is to be vnderſtand, what ſtormes and perſecutions haue bene raiſed vp in all quarters againſt the flocke and congregation of Chriſt, not only by the Turkes, but alſo at home within our ſelues, by the Byſhop of Rome, and his retinue. where alſo is to be noted in the daies and reigne of this king Henry the vij. how mightely the working of Gods Goſpell hath multiplied and increaſed, and what great numbers of men and women haue ſuffered for the ſame, with vs in England, as by theſe ſtories aboue paſt, may be apparent.

The ſtate of the cōmō wealth, commonly foloweth the ſtate of the church.

Now theſe things declared, which to the Church matters be apperteining, cōſequently it remaineth ſomething to entreate of the ſtate likewiſe of the cōmon wealth, which commonly doth follow the ſtate of the Church. where the Church is quietly and moderately gouerned, and the flock of Chriſt defended by godly Princes in peace & ſafety, frō deuouring and violence of bloudy wolues: the ſucceſſe of ciuile eſtate, for the moſt part, there doth floriſhe, and the Princes long cōtinue through Gods preſeruation, in proſperous reſt & trāquillitie. Contrariwiſe where the church of Chriſt either through the negligence of Princes, or thorough their ſetting on, the poore members of Chriſt be perſecuted and deuoured: ſhortly after enſueth ſome iuſt recompence of the Lord vpon thoſe Princes, that eyther their liues do not long continue, or elſe they finde not that quiet in the common wealth, which they looke for. Examples heereof, as in all other ages be aboundant, ſo in this preſent time be not lacking, whether we conſider the ſtate and condition of other countreys farre off, or elſe of our owne countrey neare at home.

The duetie of princes to defend their ſubiectes frō the ſlaughter of the Church of Rome.

And heere not to wander in our ſtory, farther then to Fraunce onely, let vs a little behold the example of Kyng Charles the viij. who liuing in this Kings time, died alſo not long before him. This Charles is commended of Philippus Cominæus, to be a moderate, valiant, and victorious Prince, adorned with many ſpeciall vertues to a Prince apperteining. And yet the ſame king, becauſe he was ſlack and remiſſe in defence of Chriſtes Church, neither did vſe his authority, nor tooke his occaſion offered to him of God, to amend and refourme the ſtate of the Biſhop and Cleargy of Rome when he might, he was therefore himſelfe puniſhed and cut off of the Lord, as by his ſtory enſuing may right well appeare. For ſo it is of him recorded, that being maruelouſly excited and prouoked, of his owne minde (cōtrary to the counſaile of moſt of his Nobles) he tooke hys viage into Italy, neither being furniſhed with money, nor the ſeaſon of the yeare being cōuenient therunto. And that this may appeare the better to proceede of ẏ Lords doing, to the entent he woulde haue the Church and Cleargy of Rome reformed by the Princes ſword, which ſo vexed all Chriſtendome at that time, we ſhall heare what is teſtified in the Commentaries of the foreſaid Philip. Cominæus Lib. 3. De bello Neapolit. writing in this wiſe.

Ex cōmentariis Phil Cominæi De bello Neapolitano. lib 3.

The propheſie of Hierome Sauonarola.

There was (ſaith he) in the City of Florence the ſame time a Dominicke Frier, named Hieronimus Sauonarola (of whom mētion was made before, pag. 731.) a man of a right godly and approoued life: who in the ſaid City of Florence preached and prophecied long before, that the French King ſhould come with an army into Italy, being ſtirred vp of God to ſuppreſſe the tiraunts of Italy, and none ſhould withſtand him. He ſhould alſo come to the Citie of Piſæ, and the ſtate of Florence ſhould be altered: all which hapned true. He affirmed moreouer to be ſignified to him of the Lord, that the Eccleſiaſticall ſtate of the Churche muſt bee redreſſed Per vim armorum, i. by the ſword, or force of armes. Many things alſo he propheſied of the Venetians, & of the French King, ſaieng that the King with ſome danger & difficultie, ſhould paſſe that iourney, yet notwithſtanding ſhoulde ouercome it and eſcape, albeit his ſtrength were neuer ſo ſlender: for God woulde ſafely conduct him in that iourney, and ſafely bring him home againe. But becauſe he had not done his office, in amending the ſtate of the Churche, and in defending his people from iniurie, and from deuouring, therefore it ſhoulde come to paſſe (ſaid hee) and that ſhortly, that ſome incommoditie or detriment ſhoulde happen to the King: or if hee ſhoulde eſcape that danger of hys ſickneſſe, and recouer health, then if he did reſiſt the cruelty of the wicked, and procure the ſafety of the poore and miſerable, God would ſhew mercy vnto him, &c. And this the ſaide Hieronymus declared before to Cominæus one of the Kings counſaylours, whych was the writer of the ſtory, and required him to ſignifie the ſame vnto the King, which ſo did, and he moreouer himſelfe comming to the preſence of the king, declared no leſſe.

Note.

All which things, as he had foretold, came directly to effect. For the King being but eaſely accompanied wyth a ſmall power, entred into Italy, where firſt he came to Aſta, then to Genua, and to Piſæ, from thence proceeded to Florence, which alſo he obteined, diſplacing there Petrus Medices the Duke, who had vſed great tyrannie vpon the ſubiects.

Vide Phil. Cominæũ de bello Neopol.lib.5.

ſubiects. From thence he remoued toward Rome, where a great part of the Citie wall at the comming of the french King, fell downe.

Afterward when the King was entred into the Citie, and the Pope (who then tooke part with Alphonſus King of Neaples againſt the French King) had immured himſelfe within the mount of Adrian, the wall of the Caſtell fell downe of it ſelfe: whereby, when the King was both occaſioned, and exhorted alſo by his Captaines to inuade yͤ Pope, and to depoſe him, & to reforme yͤ Church of Rome, (which he might then eaſely haue done, as it had pleaſed him) yet all theſe occaſions offered ſo opportunely of God, moued not yͤ king to do his duty, & to help the poore church of Chriſt: wherefore ſhortly after, returning home into France from Neapolis, either yͤ ſame yeare or yͤ next yeare folowing he was ſtrooken with a ſodeine ſicknes at Amboiſe, as he was looking on thẽ that played at tennes, and that in the ſtinkingeſt place in all the Caſtle, where he fell downe & died within twelue houres, according to yͤ forewarning of Hieronimus, who wrote vnto him a little before, both of his ſonnes death and of his owne, which was about the yeare of our Lord 1498. Ex Philip.Cominæo.Lib.5.

De bello Neopolit. lib. 5.

Like examples we haue many heere alſo in this our realme of England. So long as king Iohn kept out of the realme, the Popes authority and power, he continued ſafe and quiet with his nobles: but ſo ſoone as he brought the realme vnder tribute and ſubiectiõ to that forreine Biſhop, God ſtirred vp his Nobles againſt him, whereby he had much diſquiet and trouble and ſoone thereupon decayed.

Examples of kinges of England, which were bleſſed of God with long proſperitie, being enemies to the byſhops of Rome.

Of all the Kings of England, from william Conquerour, to this king Henry vij. were none which either longer continued, or more proſperouſly flouriſhed, then King Henry the ſecond, King Henry the third, King Edward the firſt, King Edward the third, of whome the firſt, how ſtout he was in withſtãding Tho. Becket and Pope Alexander the iij. is ſufficiently before comprehended, pag. 206.

Auguſtus reigned 55 yeares.

The ſecond, which was ſonne of King Iohn, albeit through the wretchednes of that time his power was not ſufficient to repulſe the Popes vſurped iuriſdiction out of the Realme: yet his will was good: at leaſt he ſo defended & prouided for his ſubiects, that they tooke no great wrong at the Popes handes: who reigned one yeare longer then Auguſtus Cæſar, which hath not commonly bene ſeene in any Prince.

The third, which was King Edward the firſt, ſo vigilantly behaued himſelfe for the publique cõmoditie & ſafetie of his people, that he defended thẽ frõ all forraine power and hoſtilitie both of the Scottes (then our enemies, now our frendes) and alſo from the Biſhop of Rome, takyng part with them againſt vs, as may appeare aboue, page 340. Furthermore of the ſame King, and of his worthy Nobles and houſe of Parliament, how valiantly they ſtoode in deniall of the Popes ſubſidies, and alſo how the ſayd King ſecluded out of his protection the Biſhops, and eſpecially the Archbiſhop Peccham for ſtanding wyth the Pope, reade pag. 352.

Vide ſupra pag. 340.

Vide ſupra pag. 352.

Now as touching King Edward the third, how little he regarded, how princely he with his Nobles likewiſe reſiſted the Popes reſeruations and prouiſions, how hee bridled the Archbiſhop Iohn Stratford, and reiected the vaine authority of the Biſhop of Rome, both in defenſe of his ſubiects, and alſo in defence of claiming his right title in the Realme of France, reade pag. 383.

Vide ſupra pag. 383.

Not that I do heere affirme or define, as in a generall rule, that worldly ſucceſſe and proſperitie of life alwayes followeth the godly, which we ſee rather to be geuen more often to the wicked ſort: but ſpeaking of the duty of Princes, I note and obſerue by examples of hiſtories, that ſuch Princes as haue moſt defended the Church of Chriſt committed to their gouernance, from iniurie and violence of the Biſhop of Rome, haue not lacked at Gods hand great bleſſing and felicitie: whereas contrarywiſe, they whiche either themſelues haue bene perſecutours of Chriſtes mẽbers, or haue not ſhielded thẽ by their protection from forreine tiranny and iniuries, haue lacked at Gods hand that protection, which the other had, as may appeare by King Edward the ſecond, Richard the third, King Henry the fourth, King Henry the v, king Henry the vi, &c. who becauſe either negligẽtly they haue ſuffered, or cruelly cauſed ſuch perſecuting lawes to be made, & ſo much Chriſtẽ blood iniuriouſly to be deuoured: therefore haue they bene yͤ leſſe proſpered of the Lord, ſo that either they were depoſed, or if they floriſhed for a while, yet they did not long continue, almoſt not halfe the time of the other kings before named.

What difference betweene moderat princes, and thẽ that were perſecutors.

And therefore, as the ſtate of the common wealth doth commonly folow the ſtate of yͤ Church, as ye hard before: ſo it had bene to be wiſhed, that this King Henry the vij. beyng otherwiſe a prudent & temperaunt Prince, had not permitted the vntemperaũt rage of the Popes Clergy ſo much to haue their willes ouer the poore flocke of Chriſt, as then they had: accordyng as by theſe perſecutiõs aboue mẽtioned may appeare. The which king Henry vij. albeit he had a ſufficiẽt continuaunce, who had now raigned 24. yeares, yet notwithſtãding here commeth the ſame thyng to be noted, wherof I ſpeake before: that whẽ the Church of Chriſt begynneth to be iniuried with violẽce, & to go to wracke through miſorder & negligẽce, the ſtate of the common wealth can not there long endure without ſome alteration, & ſtroke of Gods correction. But howſoeuer this marke is to be takẽ, thus lyeth the ſtory: that after the burnyng & vexyng of theſe poore ſeruauntes of Chriſt aboue recited, when the perſecution begã now in the Church to be hoate, God called away the kyng, the ſame yeare aboue mentioned, which was 1509. after he had raigned yͤ terme of yeares. 24. who if he had adioyned a litle more pitifull reſpect, in protectyng Chriſtes poore mẽbers, from the fire of the Popes tyrãny, to his other great vertues of ſingular wiſedome, excellent tẽperaunce, & moderate frugalitie: ſomuch had he bene cõparable with the beſt of thoſe Princes aboue comprehended, as hee had bene inferiour but to a few: but this defect which lacked in him, was ſupplyed moſt luckely (bleſſed be yͤ Lord) by his poſteritie ſucceding after him. Of whom in the next volume folowing (Chriſt thereunto aſſiſting vs) we haue to ſpecifie more at large.

The yeare of our Lord. 1485. March 9. amongeſt diuers and ſundry other good men in Couetry, theſe ix. here vnder named were examined before Iohn Biſhop of Couentry and Lichfield, in S. Michaels Church, vpon theſe Articles, folowyng in order.

I. Blomſtone.

FIrſt, Iohn Blomſton was openly and publickely, infamed, accuſed reported & appeached that he was a very hereticke, becauſe he had preached, taught, holden & affirmed, that the power attributed to S. Peter in the Church of God, by our Sauiour Ieſus Chriſt: immediately did not flit, or paſſe frõ him, to remaine with his ſucceſſours.

The power of Peter flitteth not to his ſucceſſours.

Item, that there was as much vertue in an herbe as in the Image of the Virgine Mary.

Purgatory denied.

Item, that prayer and almes auayle not the dead, for incontinent after death, he goeth either to heauen or hell, whereupon he concludeth there is no Purgatory.

Item, that it was fooliſhneſſe to go on Pilgrimage to the Image of our Lady of Dancaſter, Walſingham, or of the Tower of the Citie of Couentry: for a man might as well worſhip the bleſſed Virgin by the fire ſide in the kitchin, as in the foreſayd places, and as well might a man worſhip the bleſſed Virgin, when he ſeeth his mother or ſiſter, as in viſityng the Images, becauſe they be no more but dead ſtockes and ſtones.

Images not to be worſhipped.

Item, that he ſayd in Engliſh with a frowning countenaunce, as it appeared: a vengeaũce on all ſuch horſon Prieſtes, for they haue great enuy that a poore man ſhould get his liuyng among them.

Richard Hegbã.

RIchard Hegham of the ſame Citie was accuſed, &c. to be a very hereticke, becauſe he did hold that a Chriſten man beyng at the point of death, ſhould renounce all his owne workes good and ill, and ſubmitte him to the mercy of God.

Merites condemned.

Item, that it was fondneſſe to worſhip the Images of our Lady of Tower in the foreſayd Citie, or of other Saintes, for they are but ſtockes and ſtones.

Images ſerue rather to be burned, then to be worſhipped.

Item, that if the Image of our Lady of Tower were put into the fire, it would make a good fire.

Item, that it were better to deale money vnto poore folkes then to offer to the Images of Chriſt and other Saintes, which are but dead ſtockes and ſtones.

Robert Crowther.

RObert Crowther of the ſame Citie was accuſed, that he was an hereticke, becauſe he did hold, that who ſo receiueth the Sacramẽt of the altar in deadly ſinne, or out of charitie, receiueth nothyng but bread and wine.

Item, that neither Byſhop, nor Prieſtes or Curates of Churches, haue power in the market of penaunce to bynde and looſe.

Againſt Pilgrimage.

Item, that Pilgrimage to the Image of our Lady of Tower is fooliſhneſſe, for it is but a ſtocke or a ſtone.

Iohn Smith.

IOhn Smith was accuſed to be a very hereticke, becauſe he did hold that euery man is bounde to know yͤ Lordes

Prayer,

The Lordes prayer to be in Engliſhe.

Prayer, and the Creede in Engliſh, if he might for theſe falſe Prieſtes.

Item, that who ſo beleeued as the Church then did beleeue, beleeued ill: and that a man had neede to frequent the ſchooles a good while, ere that he can attaine to the knowledge of the true and right faith.

Item, that no Prieſt hath power to aſſoile a man in the market of penance, from his ſinnes.

Roger Browne.

Against Pilgrimage.

ROger Browne of the ſame Citie, was alſo accuſed to be an hereticke, bicauſe he did hold that no man ought to worſhip the Image of our Lady of Walſingham, nor the bloud of Chriſt at Hailes, but rather God almighty, who would geue him whatſoeuer he would aſke.

Item, that he held not vp his hands, nor looked vp, at the eleuation of the Euchariſt.

Item, that he promiſed one to ſhew him certaine bookes of hereſie, if he woulde ſweare that he woulde not vtter them, and if he would credite them.

Fleſhe eating in Lent.

Item, that he did eate fleſh in Lent, and was taken with the maner.

Item, if any man were not ſhriuen his whole life long, and in the point of death would be confeſſed, and could not, if he had no more but cōtrition only, he ſhould paſſe to ioy without Purgatory: And if he were confeſſed of any ſinne, & were enioined only to ſay for penance one Pater noſter, if he thought he ſhould haue any puniſhmēt in Purgatory for that ſinne, he would neuer be confeſſed for any ſinne.

Againſt Purgatory and confeſſion auricular.

Againſt confeſſiō & ſatiſfactiō.

Item, becauſe he ſaid all is loſt that is geuen to Prieſts.

Item, that there was no Purgatory, that God woulde pardon all ſinnes without confeſſion and ſatiſfaction.

Thomas Butler.

THomas Butler of ẏ ſame Citie, was likewiſe opēly accuſed to be a very hereticke, becauſe he did hold ẏ there were but two wayes, that is to ſay, to heauen, and to hell.

Againſt Purgatory.

Item, that no faithfull man ſhould abide any paine after the death of Chriſt, for any ſinne, becauſe Chriſt died for our ſinnes.

Item, that there was no Purgatory, for euery man immediatly after death paſſeth either to heauen, or hell.

Againſt merites.

Item, that whoſoeuer departeth in the faith of Chriſt and the Church, howſoeuer he hath liued, ſhall be ſaued.

Item, that praiers & pilgrimages are nothing worth, and auaile not to purchaſe heauen.

Iohn Falkes.

Againſt Images.

IOhn Falkes was accuſed to be a very hereticke, becauſe he did affirme that it was a fooliſh thing to offer to the Image of our Lady, ſayeng, her head ſhall be hoare or I offer to her; what is it but a blocke? If it could ſpeake to me, I would geue it an halfepeny worth of ale.

Item, that when the Prieſt carieth to the ſicke the body of Chriſt, why carieth he not alſo the bloud of Chriſt?

Item, that he did eate cowe milke vpon the firſt Sonday of Lent.

Item, that as concerning the Sacrament of penaunce & abſolution, no Prieſt hath power to aſſoile any man frō his ſinnes, whē as he can not make one heare of his head.

It is hereſie to ſay a ſtone is a ſtone, & a blocke is a blocke.

Item, that the Image of our Lady was but a ſtone or a blocke.

Richar. Hilmin.

RIchard Hilmin was accuſed that he was a very hereticke, becauſe he did ſay and mainteine that it was better to depart with money to the poore, then to giue tithes to Prieſts, or to offer to the Images of our Lady, and that it were better to offer to Images made by God, then to the Images of God painted.

Scripture in Engliſhe.

Item, that he had the Lords Prayer and the Salutation of the Angell and the Creede in Engliſh, and another booke did he ſee and had, which conteined the Epiſtles and Goſpels in Engliſh, and according to them woulde hee liue, and thereby beleeued to be ſaued.

Item, that no Prieſt ſpeaketh better in the Pulpit then that booke.

Item, that the Sacrament of the aultare is but bread, and that the Prieſts make it to blinde the people.

Item, that a Prieſt whiles he is at Maſſe, is a Prieſt, and after one Maſſe done, till the beginning of another Maſſe, he is no more then a lay man, and hath no more power then a meere lay man.

¶ After they were enforced to recant, they were aſſoyled and put to penaunce.

Margery Goyt.

IN the yeare of our Lord 1488. the iij. of Aprill, Margery Goyt, wife of Iames Goyt of Aſburne, was brought before the foreſayde Iohn Biſhop of Couentry and Lichfield, who was there accuſed that ſhe ſaid, that that which ẏ Prieſts lift ouer their heads at Maſſe, was not the true and very body of Chriſt: For if it were ſo, the Prieſtes could not breake it ſo lightly into foure parts, and ſwalow it as they do: for the Lordes body hath fleſh and bones, ſo hath not that which the Prieſts receiue.

Againſt the Sacrament of the Aultar.

Item, that Prieſts buieng xl. cakes for a halfepeny, and ſhewing them to the people and ſaieng, that of euery of them they make the body of Chriſt, do nothing but deceiue the people and enrich themſelues.

Item, ſeeing God in the beginning did create and make man, how can it be that man ſhould be able to make God?

¶ This woman alſo, was conſtreined to recant, and ſo was ſhe aſſoyled and did penance.

Thus much I thought heere good to inſerte, touchyng theſe foreſaid men of Couentry, eſpecially for this purpoſe, becauſe our cauilling aduerſaries be wont to obiect againſt vs the newnes of Chriſtes old and auntient Religion. To the intent therefore they may ſee this doctrine not to be ſo new as they report, I wiſh they woulde conſider both the time and Articles heere obiected agaynſte theſe foreſayd perſons, as is aboue premiſed.

Picus Mirādula Earle.

I ſhould alſo in the ſame reigne of King Hēry vij. haue induced that hiſtory of Ioannes Picus Earle of Mirandula, the mention of whoſe name partly is touched before, page. 704. This Picus Earle of Mirandula being but a yong man, was ſo excellently witted, & ſo ſingularly learned in all ſciences, and in all toungs, both Latine, Greeke, Hebrew, Chaldey, and Araby, that cōming to Rome booted and ſpurred, he ſet vp 90. concluſions, to diſpute in the ſame with any in al Chriſtēdome, whoſoeuer would come againſt him. Of which concluſions diuers were touching the matter of ẏ Sacramēt, &c. And when none was found in all Rome, nor in Europe, that openly would diſpute wt him, priuely and in corners certaine of the Popes Clergy, Prelates, Lawyers, & Friers, by the Pope appointed, cōſulted together to inquire vpon his cōcluſions, wherupon they did articulate againſt him for ſuſpicion of hereſie. And thus the vnlearned Clergy of Rome priuely circumuēted and intangled this learned Earle in their ſnares of hereſy, againſt whome they neuer durſt openly diſpute. He dyed being of the age of 32. of ſuch witte and towardnes, as is hard to ſay whether euer Italy bredde vp a better. In his ſickenes Charles viij. the French King, moued with the fame of his learning, came to viſite him. The furniture of his bookes coſt him 7000. florens. A little before his death his mind was to giue all away, and to take a coule, to go about & preach, but the Lord would not permit him. His ſtory requireth a long tractatiō, which if place do ſerue, we will not peraduenture forget. With ij. Popes, that is, with Pope Innocent, & Alexander vj. he had much vexation.

¶ The names of the Archbyſhops of Canterbury in this ſixt booke conteyned.

62	Iohn Stratford.	viij.
63	Iohn Kempe.	iij.
64	Thomas Burchier.	xxxiij.
65	Iohn Morton.	xiiij.
66	Thomas Langhton.
67	Henry Dene.	ij.
	Guliel. Warham.	xxviij.

This Thomas Lāghton was elected Archbyſh. but died before he was confirmed.

¶ Heere endeth the ſixt Booke, and the firſt Tome.

❊ A briefe note of Eccleſiaſticall lawes ordeined by auncient Kings in this Realme.

Eccleſiaſticall lawes ordeined by auncient kings of this Realme.

FOrſomuch as it is, and hath bene a perſwaſion lōg gendered in the heads of many, that the Biſhops of Rome be the vniuerſall heads of the whole militant Churche of Chriſt in earth, and haue alwaies ſo cōtinued from the beginning of the primitiue time. And that no Prince, King, nor Emperour in his owne Realme hath any intereſt to intermedle with matters and lawes Eccleſiaſtical, but only the ſayd Biſhops of Rome; to refell and remoue that opiniō out of the heads of all Engliſhmen, as a thing moſt falſe, and contrary both to hiſtories of time, and examples of ancient Kings & gouernors of this Realme, I thought to fill vp a litle end of paper here left, with ſome ſuch briefe rehearſall of lawes deuiſed & appointed by Kings and rulers of this land, for the ordering of the Church, and cauſes Eccleſiaſticall, to the intent that all the world may ſee the gouernement of Chriſtes Church heere in earth vnder Chriſt, hath not depended only of the Pope from auncient time, but hath ben rather directed by ſuch kings and princes, as God here had placed vnder him to gouerne ẏ people of this Realme of England, as foloweth heere in this preſent table to be noted.

¶ A briefe recapitulation, of auncient Eccleſiaſticall lawes by ſondry Kinges of this Realme ordeyned, for gouernment of the Church, before the Conqueſt.

¶ Eccleſiaſticall lawes of King Inas, or Ina.

3. Item, that no mā lay or ſpirituall, free or bond, ſhould labour vpon the Sonday.

4. Item, he eſtabliſhed immunitie of Churches, & Sanctuarie. Alſo he tooke order for the true paiment of Church dueties, and of the firſt fruites of all that was ſowen to be payd at the day of S. Martin.

¶ Eccleſiaſticall lawes of King Alured, or Alfred.

King Aluredes lawes.

1. KIng Alured, after he had ordeined diuers iudiciall puniſhments for violating ẏ holy precepts of God commanded by Moſes, he alſo cōfirmed and enlarged the priuiledge of Sanctuarie; he laid double paine vpon ſuch as committed offences in ẏ ſolemnities of certaine feaſts: Alſo againſt them that committed ſacrilege.

2. He made a law againſt Prieſts committing murther.

.3 Alſo he made a law againſt whoredome, adultery, and fornication.

4. He appointed daies of faſting and ceaſing frō labour.

5. Item, he ſet order for making and keeping vowes.

¶ Eccleſiaſticall lawes of kyng Edward the elder, and Gythrum the Dane kyng.

K. Edwards lawes.

FIrſt, they agreed vpon the Sāctuary: they forbad Gentilitie and Paganiſme: they layd puniſhment vpon the Clergy committing theft, periurie, or murther, fornicatiō, or any capitall crime.

1. They puniſhed Prieſtes, that pretermitted their office in pronouncyng feſtiuall, or faſtyng dayes.

3. They made a law agaynſt all labour, buying, and ſellyng vpon the Sabbaoth: alſo for keepyng of feaſtes. Itē, for no execution to be done on the Sonday. Alſo agaynſt witches and ſorcerers. &c.

¶ Eccleſiaſticall lawes of kyng Ethelſtane.

K. Ethelſtanes lawes.

1. KIng Ethelſtan, who reigned the yeare of our Lord, 924. commaunded that euery Village of his owne, ſhould geue a monethly corrodie to a poore perſon.

2. That 50. Pſalmes ſhould be ſong dayly in the Church, for the kyng. &c.

3. He alſo ordeined puniſhmēt for witches, & ſorcerers. &c

¶ Eccleſiaſticall lawes of kyng Edmund.

K. Edmūdes lawes.

1. AFter kyng Ethelſtan folowed kyng Edmund about the yeare of our Lord. 940. who eſtabliſhed and prouided lawes agaynſt the vnchaſt liuing of Churchmen.

2. Item, he made lawes concernyng tythes, with firſt fruites of euery mans croppe, and almoſe money duly to be payd.

3. Item, he enacted that Byſhops of their owne proper charges ſhould repayre Churches, and ſhould alſo admoniſh the kyng for the furniſhyng of the ſame.

4. For periury alſo, and for fighting within the Church, he ſet lawes and paynes.

¶ Eccleſiaſticall lawes of kyng Edgar.

K. Edgars lawes

1. KIng Edgar, who begā his reigne about the yeare of our Lord. 959. amongeſt other cōſtitutions Eccleſiaſticall, ordeined, that the Sōday ſhould be kept holy from Saterday at noone till Mōday in the mornyng.

2. Item, he ordeined and decreed concerning liberties & freedomes of the Church, for tythes alſo, and firſt fruites of corne, and paying of Peterpence.

3. Item, for holy dayes and faſtyng dayes.

4. Itē, that aſſemblies or Synodes ſhould be kept twiſe euery yeare, whereat as well the Byſhop of the Dioceſſe ſhould be preſent as the ciuill Magiſtrate.

¶ Kyng Æthelrede, Anno. 979.

King Ethelredes lawes.

KIng Æthelrede alſo which ſucceeded after Edgar, and Edward appointed diuers lawes for publicke regiment, whereof we finde but few touching matters Eccleſiaſticall, for tythes, lightes, feaſtes and nothyng els, and therfore we paſſe further to the lawes of Canutus.

¶ Eccleſiaſticall lawes of kyng Canutus.

King Canutus lawes.

CAnutus the Dane kyng began to reigne in this lād in the yeare of our Lord. 1016. The ſaid Canutus (as Aethelrede had done before) diuided his lawes into Eccleſiaſticall and temporall.

1. That Eccleſiaſticall perſons beyng accuſed of fightyng, murder, or any other offēce, ſhould purge thēſelues therof

2. That Prieſtes ſhould be degraded for periury, and put in ſureties of good behauiour.

3. He prayeth Prieſtes, that they will liue chaſt, and commaunded other Religious.

4. He limited the degrees of Mariage.

5. Item, he commaunded celebration of the Sabbaoth frō Saterday at noone till Monday mornyng, as Edgar had done before, forbiddyng markets, huntyngs, labours, and Court keepynges, duryng the ſayd ſpace.

6. He ordained eche Chriſten man to come to the houſell thriſe yearely at the leaſt: That they ſearch and enquire after Gods law, and his commaundementes.

7. That euery Chriſtian man vnderſtand the pointes of his fayth, & that at the leaſt he learne perfectly the Lordes Prayer, and the Creede, and that whoſoeuer can not the ſame, ſhall be excluded from the Euchariſt, and ſhall not be receiued to vndertake for others in Baptiſme.

8. That Byſhops and Prieſtes ſhould doe their duties: that they cry out and warne their flockes when the wolfe commeth.

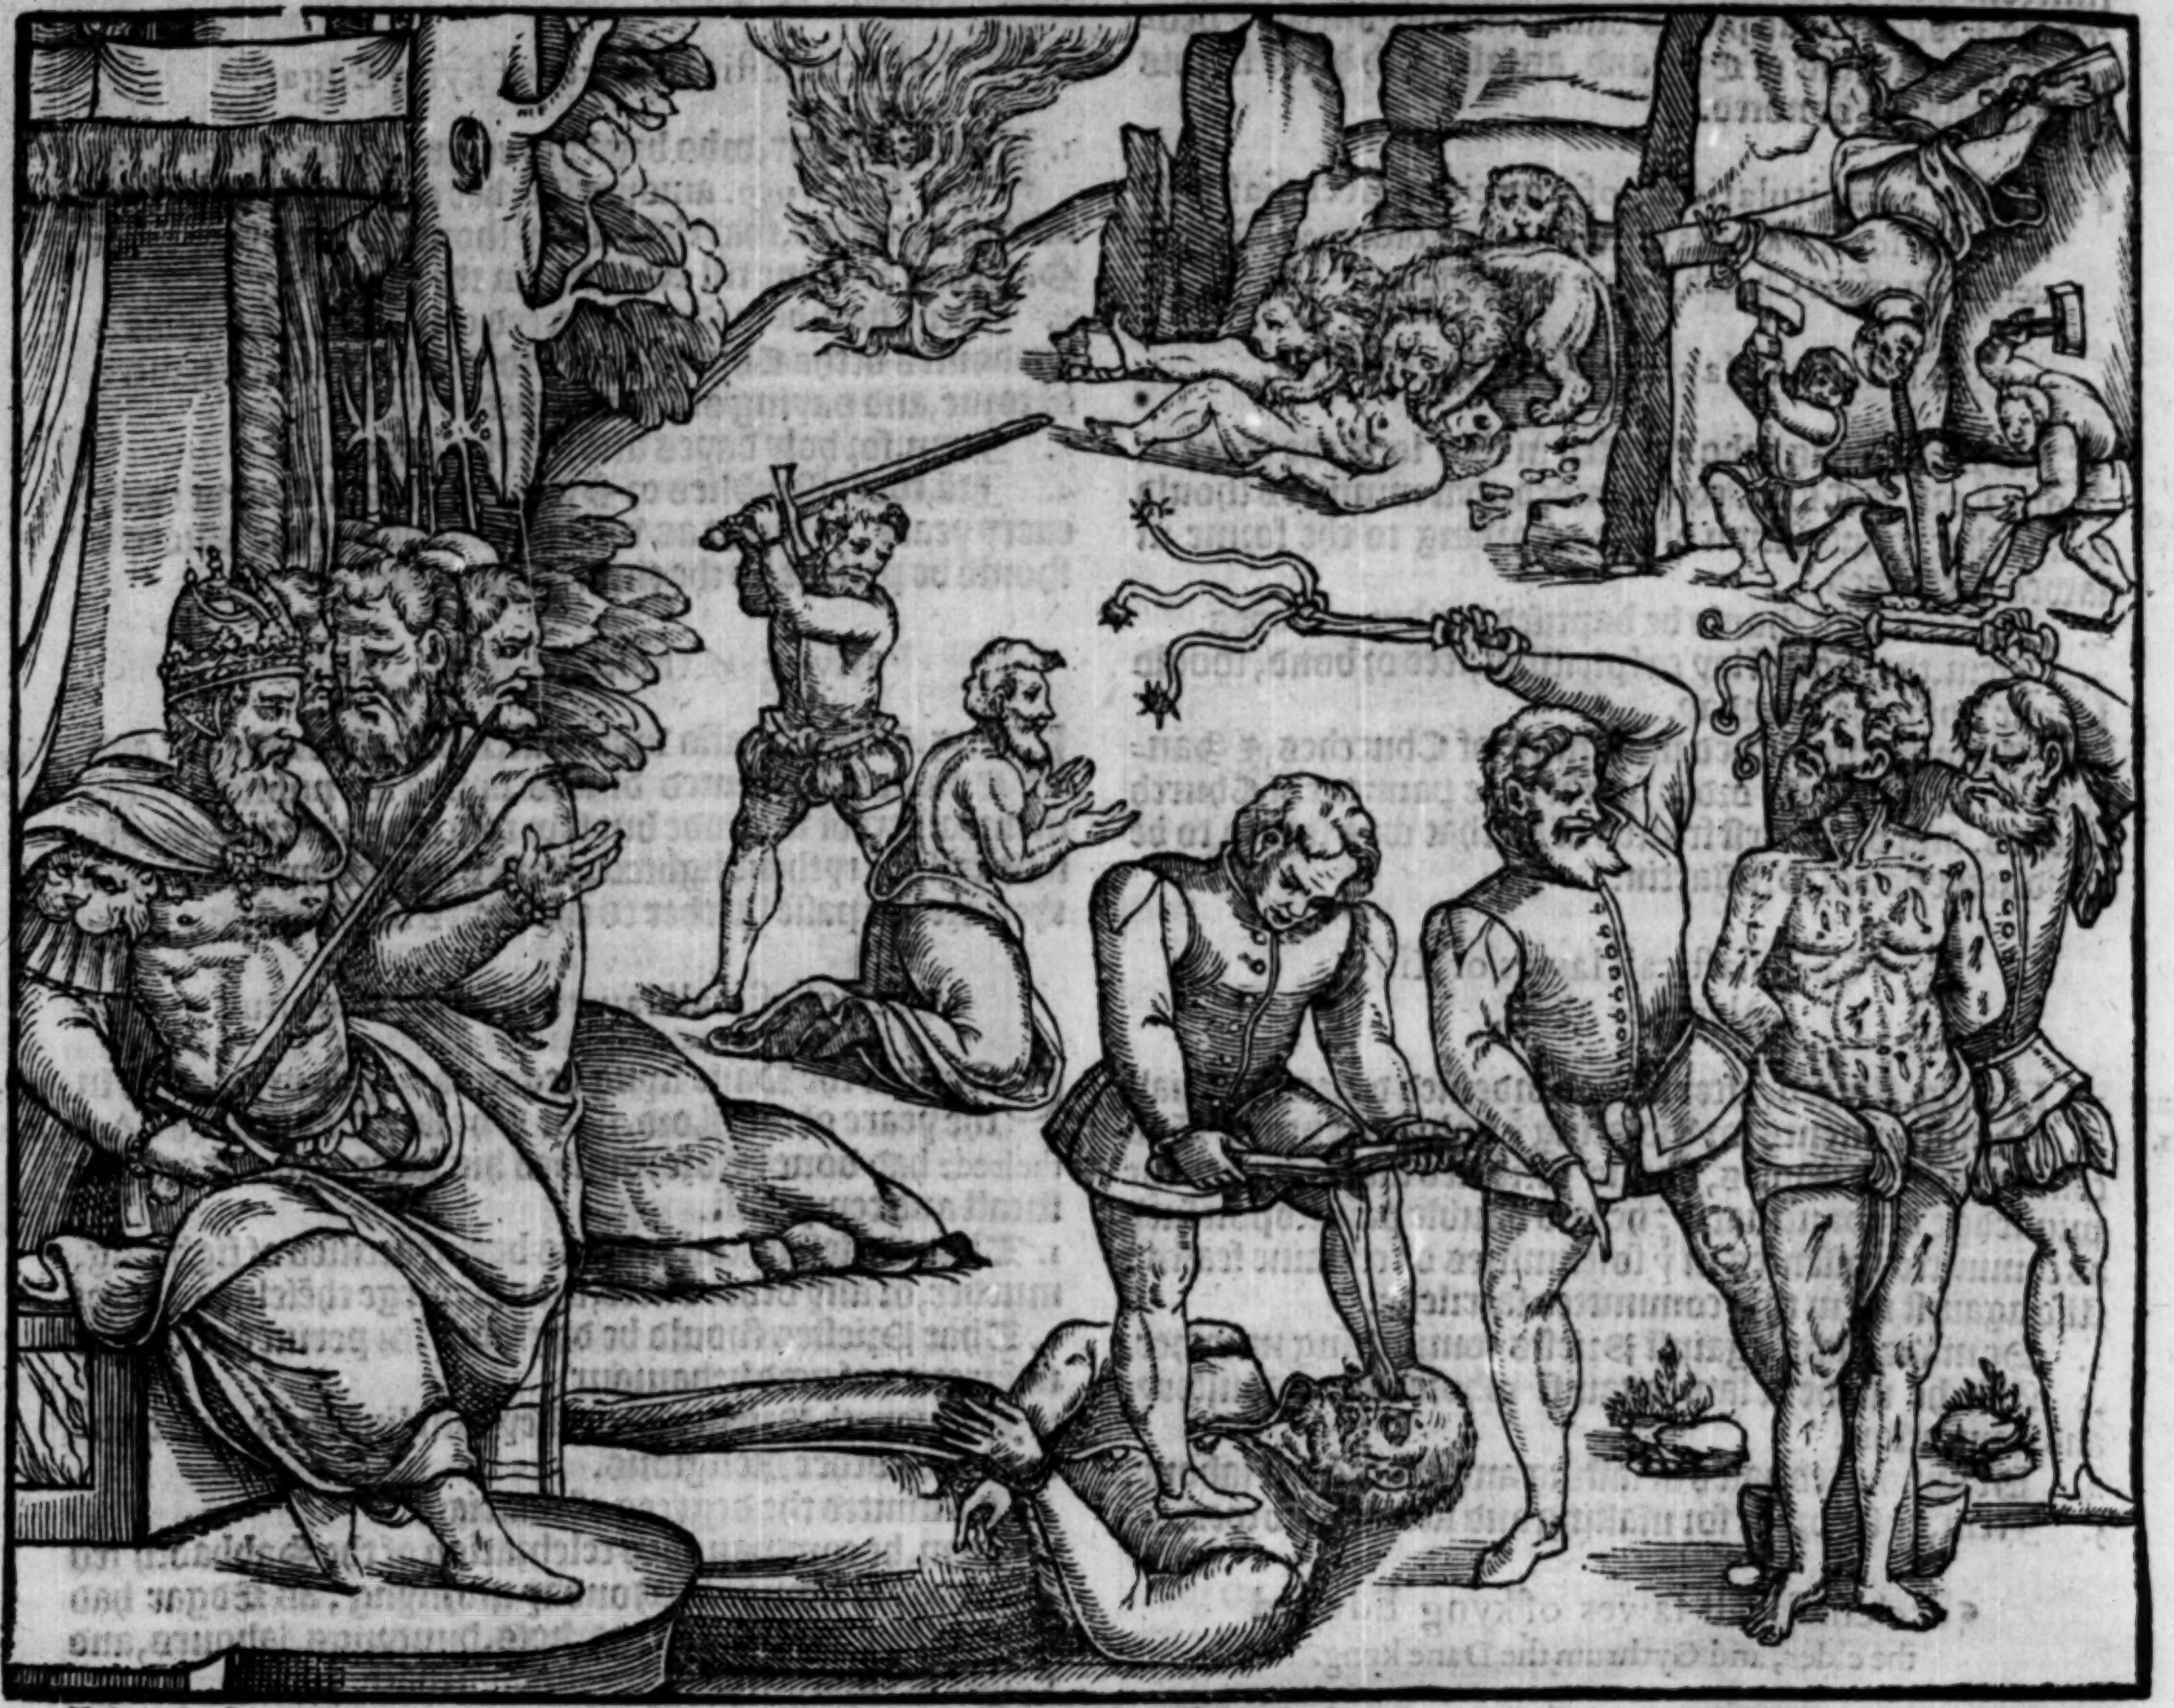
9. That at the Court of euery Shire, the Biſhop of the Dioces ſhal be preſent with the Sheriffe, and that the one ſhall teach them Gods law, and the other mans law, as ye heard in King Edgars lawes before.

Kinges of England before the Conqueſt gouernours as well in cauſes Eccleſiaſticall as temporall

Many other lawes both Eccleſiaſticall and temporall beſides theſe were enacted by theſe and other Kings heere in England before the Conqueſt, but theſe be ſufficient to geue the vnderſtanding Reader to conſider, how the authority of the Biſhops of Rome, all this while, extended not ſo farre to preſcribe lawes for gouernement of the Church, but that Kings and Princes of the Realme, as they be now, ſo were then full gouernours heere vnder Chriſt, as well in cauſes Eccleſiaſticall, as temporall, both in directing orders, inſtituting lawes, in calling of Synodes, and alſo in conferring Byſhopricks and benefices, without any leaue of the Romiſh Biſhops. Thus Odo, Dunſtane, Oſwold, Ethelwold, Aldelmus, and Lancfrancus, although they fet their palles afterwarde from Rome, yet were they made Biſhops and Archbiſhops by Kings only, not by Popes.

Whē kinges of England came firſt vnder the Popes ſubiection.

And thus ſtoode the gouernement of this Realme of England all the time before the Conqueſt, till Pope Hildebrand through the ſetting on of the Saxons, began firſt to bring the Emperour (which was Henry 4.) vnder foote. Then followed the ſubduing of other Emperours, Kings, and ſubiects after that; as namely heere in England, when Lancfrancus, Anſelmus, and Becket, went to complayne of their Kings and gouernours, then brought they the Popes iudiciall authority firſt from Rome, ouer this land, both ouer Kings and ſubiects: which euer ſince hath continued, till theſe latter yeares. Albeit the ſayd Kings of this Realme of England being prudent Princes, and ſeeing right well the ambitious preſumption of thoſe Romiſh Byſhops, did what they could to ſhake off the yoke of their ſupremacie, as appeareth by the lawes and Actes of their Parliaments, both in king Edward the thirds time, King Richard the 2. and King Henry the 4. aboue in their Parliament notes ſpecified: yet for feare of other foreine Princes, and the blind opinion of their ſubiectes, ſuch was then the calamitie of that time, that neither they could nor durſt compaſſe that, which faine they would: till at laſt, the time of their iniquitie being complete, through the Lords wonderfull working, theyr pride had a fall, as in the next Volume enſuing (the Lord ſo graunting) ſhall by proces of hyſtorie be declared.



The proude primacie of Popes paynted out in Tables, in order of their riſing vp by little and little, from faythfull Byſhops and Martyrs, to become Lords and gouernours ouer King and kingdomes, exalting themſelues in the Temple of God, aboue all that is called God, &c. 2. Theſſalonians. 2.

The martirdome of good biſhops vnder wicked Emperours in the primitiue Church.

IN the Table of the primitiue Churche aboue deſcribed, hath bene (gentle Reader) ſet forth and exhibited before thine eies the greeuous afflictions and ſorowfull tormentes, which thorough Gods ſecret ſufferance, fell vpon the true Saints and members of Chriſtes Church in that time, eſpecially vpon the good Biſhops, Miniſters, and teachers of the flocke: of whome ſome were ſcourged, ſome beheaded, ſome crucified, ſome burned, ſome had their eies put out, ſome one way, ſome another, miſerably conſumed: which daies of wofull calamitie cōtinued (as is foreſhewed) neare the ſpace of CCC. yeares. During which time, the deare ſpouſe and elect Church of God, being ſharply aſſaulted on euery ſide, had ſmall reſt, no ioy, nor outward ſafetie in this preſent world, but in much bitternes of hart, in continuall teares and mourning vnder the croſſe paſſed ouer their daies, being ſpoiled, unpriſoned, contemned, reuiled, famiſhed, tormented and martired euerywhere, who neither durſt well tarie at home for feare and dread, and much leſſe durſt come abroade for the enemies, but onely by night, when they aſſembled as they might, ſometimes to ſing Pſalmes and Hymnes together. In all which their dreadfull dangers, and ſorowfull afflictions, notwithſtanding the goodnes of the Lord left them not deſolate: but the more their outward tribulations did increaſe, the more their inward conſolations did abound: and the farther off they ſeemed from the ioyes of this lyfe, the more preſent was the Lorde wyth them wyth grace and fortitude, to confirme and reioyce theyr ſoules. And though theyr poſſeſſions and riches in this world were loſt and ſpoyled, yet were they enriched wyth heauenly giftes and treaſures from aboue an hundreth fold. Then was true Religion truely felt in hart. Then was Chriſtianitie not in outwarde appearance ſhewed, but in inward affection receaued, and the true image of the Churche not in outwarde ſhew pretenſed, but in her perfect ſtate effectuall. Then was the name and feare of God true in hart, not in lippes alone dwellyng. Fayth then was feruent, zeale ardent, prayer not ſwimming in the lippes, but groned out to God from the bottome of the ſpirite. Then was no pride in the Church, nor layſure to ſeeke riches, nor tyme to keepe them. Contention for trifles was then ſo far from Chriſtians, that well were they when they could meete to pray together agaynſt the Deuill, authour of all diſſention. Briefly, the whole Churche of Chriſt Ieſus, wyth all the members thereof, the farther it was from the type and ſhape of this worlde, the nearer it was to the bleſſed reſpect of Gods fauour and ſupportation.

The true riches of the Church deſcribed.

¶ The firſt riſing of the Byſhops of Rome.

The firſt riſing of the Biſhops of Rome.

AFter this long tyme of trouble, it pleaſed the Lord at length mercifully to looke vpon the Saints and ſeruauntes of his ſonne, to releaſe their captiuitie, to releaſe their miſerie, and to binde vp the old Dragon the Deuill, which ſo long vexed them, whereby the Church began to aſpire to ſome more libertie: and the Biſhops which before were as abiects, vtterly contemned of Emperours, through the prouidence of God (which diſpoſeth all things in his time after his owne will) began now of Emperours to be eſteemed and had in price. Furthermore, as Emperours grew more in deuotion, ſo the Biſhops more and more were exalted, not only in fauour, but alſo preferred vnto honour, in ſo much that in ſhort ſpace they became not quarter maiſters, but rather halfe Emperours with Emperours.

The ſpirituall riches of the Church turned to worldly riches. Ex libro Serm. Diſcipuli.

After this in proceſſe of tyme, as richeſſe and worldly wealth crept into the Cleargye, and that yͤ diuell had poured his venome into the Churche (as the voice was heard yͤ ſame time ouer Conſtantinople) ſo true humilitie began to decay, & pride to ſet in his foote, till at laſt they played as the Iuy doth with the Oke tree, which firſt beginning with a goodly greene ſhew, embraceth him ſo long, till at length it ouergroweth him, and ſo ſucketh all his moiſture from him, ſetting his roote faſt in his barke, till at laſt it both ſtifleth the ſtocke and killeth the braunches, and ſo cometh to be a neſt for Owles and all vncleane byrdes. Not vntruly therfore it was ſayde of Auguſtine: Religio peperit diuitias, & filia deuorauit matrem. i. Religion begat riches, & the daughter hath deuoured the mother. The verity whereof notoriouſly may appeare aboue all other in the Churche of Rome, and the Byſhoppes of the ſame. For after that the Church of Rome, through fauor of Emperours, was endued with landes, donations, poſſeſſions, & patrimonyes, ſo that the Biſhops thereof feeling the ſmacke of wealth, eaſe, and proſperity, began to ſwell in pompe and pride: the more they floriſhed in this world, the more Gods holy ſpirite forſooke them, till at laſt the ſayd Biſhops who at ẏ firſt were poore, creeping low vpon the groūd, & were perſecuted long time, euery man treading vpon them in thys world: now of perſecuted people, began to be perſecutors of others, and to tread vpon the necks euen of Emperors, and to bring the heades of kinges and princes vnder theyr girdle: And not onely that, but furthermore through pride and riches they were ſo farre gone from all Religion, that in the very end they became the great aduerſary of GOD (whom we call Antichriſt) prophecied of ſo long before by the ſpirite of God to come, ſitting in the temple of God. &c Of whom thus we read in the Epiſtle of Paule. 2. Theſſ. 2. where he ſayth: We beſeech you brethren, by the comming of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, and by our felowſhip together in him, that ye be not ſodenly moued in your minde, nor troubled neither by ſpirit, nor by word nor letter, as it were frō vs, as though the day of Chriſt were at hand. Let no man in any wiſe deceiue you for that daye ſhall not come except there come a departing firſt, and that man of ſinne be reuealed, euen the ſonne of perdition, that aduerſarye whiche exalteth himſelfe aboue all that is called God, or that is worſhipped, ſo that he ſhall ſit in the temple of God, as God, and ſet forth himſelfe as he were God. &c.

The great aduerſary called Antichriſt deſcribed by S. Paule. 2. Theſſ. 2.

A declaration of Saint Paules wordes.

By which words of S. Paul we haue diuers things to vnderſtand: Firſt, that the day of the Lordes cōming was not thē nere at hand. Secōdly, the Apoſtle geuing vs a tokē before, to know whē that day ſhall approch, biddeth vs looke for an aduerſary firſt to be reuealed. Thirdly to ſhew what aduerſary this ſhalbe, he expreſſeth him not to be as a common aduerſary, ſuche as were then in his time. For although Herode, Annas and Cayphas, the high Prieſtes and Pharaſyes, Tertullus, Alexander the Copperſmith, Elymas & Symō Magus, & Nero ẏ Emperor in Paules time were great aduerſaryes, yet here he meaneth another beſides theſe greater thē all ẏ reſt, not ſuch a one as ſhould be like to Prieſt, King or Emperor, but ſuch as farre exceding the eſtate of all kinges, prieſts and Emperors ſhould be the prince of prieſts, & ſhould make kings to ſtoupe, and ſhould tread vpon the necke of Emperors and make them to kiſſe his feet. Moreouer, where the Apoſtle ſayth, that he ſhall ſit in the temple of God, thereby is ment, not the perſonall ſitting of the Pope in the Citty onely of Rome, but the authority and iuriſdiction of his ſea exalted in the whol vniuerſall Church, equall with God himſelfe. For let men geue to the Pope that which he in his lawes, decrees, and in his pontificall requireth, and what difference is there betweene God and the Pope? If God ſette lawes and ordinaunces, ſo doth he? If God haue his creatures, ſo hath he, if God require obedience, ſo doth he. If the breach of Gods commaundementes be puniſhed, much more be his. God hath his Religion, the Pope alſo hath his: yea for Gods one Religion, he hath an hundreth. God hath ſet vppe one Aduocate, he hath an hundreth. God hath inſtituted but a few holydayes: for Gods one, he hath inſtituted xl. And if the holy day that God hath appoynted be ſimplex, the feaſte that the Pope appoynteth is duplex & triplex. Chriſt is the head of the Church: ſo is the Pope. Chriſt geueth influence to his body: ſo doth the Pope. Chriſt forgeueth ſinne, the Pope doth no leſſe. Chriſt expelleth euil ſpirites by his power: ſo pretendeth the Pope by his holy water. Farthermore, where Chriſt went barefoote vpon the bare ground: he with his golden ſhoes is caried on mennes ſhoulders. And where Chriſt was called Sanctus Sanctorum: he is called Sanctorum Sanctiſſimus. Chriſt neuer practiſed but onely the ſpirituall ſworde, he clayneth both ſpirituall and temporal. Chriſt bought the Church: he both buieth and ſelleth the Church. And if it be neceſſary to beleue Chriſt to be the Sauiour of the world: ſo is it neceſſary to beleue the Pope to be the head of the Church. Chriſt payd tribute to Ceſar: he maketh Ceſar to pay tribute vnto him. Finally, the crowne of Chriſt was of ſharp thorne: the Pope hath three crownes of golde vpon his head, ſo farre exceeding Chriſt the ſonne of God in glory of this world, as Chriſt exceedeth him in the glory of heauen. The Image and Paterne of whoſe intollerable pride and exaltation, according as S. Paule doth deſcribe him in his epiſtle aforeſayde, we haue here ſet forth, not onely in theſe Tables to be ſeene, and by hys owne factes to be noted, but alſo his owne wordes and Regiſters, Clementines, Extrauagantes, and Pontificals, expreſſed as in order (ẏ Lord willing) ſhall folow.

¶ The exaltation of popes aboue Kinges and Emperours out of hiſtoryes.

Firſt, after that Italy and the City of Rome were ouerrunne by the Gothes and Vandales, ſo that the ſeate of the Empire was remoued to Conſtantinople, then began Ioannes Patriarch of Conſtantinople, to put forth hymſelfe, and would needes be called vniuerſall Biſhop of the world: but the Biſhoppe of Rome in no caſe would ſuffer that, and ſtopped it. After this came the Emperours deputy, and Exarch of Rauenna to rule Italy, but the Byſhop of Rome through ayde of the King of Lombardes ſone quayled him.

Iohn Patriarch of Conſtantinople ſubdued by B. of Rome.

The Emperours Lieuetenaunt of Rauenna ſubdued by the Lumbardes and Romaine Byſhops.

Not long after, about the yeare of our Lord 60[illegible]. came Phocas the murderer, who ſlue the Emperor of Conſtantinople his maiſter Mauritius and his children. By which Phocas the biſhops of old Rome aſpired firſt to their preheminēce, to be coūted ẏ headbiſhops ouer ẏ whole church and ſo together with the Lombardes began to rule the city of Rome. Afterward when the Lombardes would not yeld vnto him, in accompliſhing his ambitious deſire, but would needs require of the Biſhop the ſaid city of Rome: he ſtyrred vppe Pipinus, but firſt depoſed Childericus the king of Fraunce, and ſo thruſting him into an Abbay, ſette vp in his place Pipinus and his ſonne Carolus Magnus to put downe the ſayds king of Lombardes called Aiſtulphus. And ſo tranſlated the Empyre from Conſtantinople into Fraunce, deuiding the ſpoyle betwene him and them: ſo that the kinges of Fraunce had all the poſſeſſions and landes which before belonged to the Empyre, and he to receiue of them the quiet poſſeſſion of the city of Rome, with ſuch donations and Lordſhips, which now they challenge vnto thē vnder the name of S. Peters patrimony, which they falſly aſcribe to ẏ donatiō of Conſtantinus the great.

How the Byſhops of Rome came firſt to be the head Byſhops of the Church.

It foloweth then in proces of tyme, after the dayes of Pipinus, Carolus and Ludouicus (who had indued theſe Biſhops of Rome, called now Popes, with large poſſeſſions) when the kinges of Fraunce were not ſo applyable to theyr becke, to aide and mayneteine thē agaynſt the Princes of Italy, who began then to pynch the ſayde Byſhops for theyr wrongful vſurped goodes, they practiſed with the Germanes to reduce ẏ Empyre to Otho firſt of that name Duke of ſpayne, referring the election thereof to 7. Princes Electours of Germany, which was aboute ann. 1002. notwithſtanding reſeruing ſtill in his handes the negatiue voyce, thinking thereby to enioy that they had, in quietnes and ſecuritie, and ſo did for a good ſpace.

Pope Gregory 5. practiſeth with the Germains to reduce the Empyre to Germany. an. 1002.

Otho firſt Germaine Emperour.

At length when ſome of theſe Germane Emperours alſo after Otho began a litle to ſpurne agaynſt the ſayd biſhops and Popes of Rome, ſome of thē they accurſed, ſome they ſubdued and brought to the kiſſing of theyr feet, ſome they depoſed, and placed other in theyr poſſeſſions.

So was Henricus 4. by theſe Byſhoppes accurſed, the Emperoure himſelfe forced with his wife and child to wait attendaunce vppon the Popes pleaſure three dayes and three nightes in winter at the gates of Canoſſus. Reade before pag. 179. Beſides all this the ſayd Pope rayſed vp Rodulphus to be Emperor againſt him: who being ſlaine in warre, then the ſayde Pope Gregorye vij. not reſtyng thus, ſtyrred vppe his owne ſonne Henricus. 5. to fight agaynſt his owne naturall father and to depoſe him, whiche Henricus the 5. was alſo himſelfe afterwarde accurſed and excommunicated, and the Saxons at laſt ſet vp by the Byſhops to fight agaynſt him.

Emperours brought to kiſſe the popes feete.

Henricus 4. accurſed, wayteth at the popes gate 3. daies. Rodulphus, and at laſt his owne ſonne ſet vp to fight againſt him. Read before pag. 179.

After this the Emperours began to be ſomewhat calmed and more quyet, ſuffering the Byſhops to reigne as they liſted: till Fridericke the firſt called Barbaroſſa came, and began to ſtyrre coales agaynſt thē. Howbeit they hampered both him, and his ſonne Henry in ſuch ſort, that they brought firſt the necke of Fridericke, in the Church of Venice, vnder theyr feet to tread vpon: and after that the ſayde biſhops crowning Henricus his ſonne in the church of S. Peter, ſet his crown on his head with theyr feet, and with theyr feet ſpurned it of agayne to make him know that the Popes of Rome had power, both to crowne Emperours, and to depoſe them agayne. whereof read before pag. 784.

Pope Alexander. 3. treadeth vpon the necke of Fredericke Emperour.

Pope Celeſtine crowneth Henry. 5. Emperour with his feete, and with his foote ſpurneth the crown from his head agayne.,

Then folowed Philippus brother to Henry aforeſaid, whome alſo the Popes accurſed, aboute the yeare of our Lord. 1198. and ſet vp Otho Duke of Saxonye. But when the ſayd Otho beganne to be ſo ſaucy to diſpoſſeſſe the Byſhops of theyr Cittyes and landes whiche they had encroched into they handes, they could not beare that, but incōtinent they put him beſides the cuſhin. The like alſo fell vpon Otho the 4. that folowed after Philip, who was ſuffered no longer then foure yeares to raigne, about the yeare of our Lord. 1209.

At this tyme Fridericus 2. the Sonne of Fridericus Barbaroſſa aboue mētioned, was but yong, whō the Byſhops of Rome ſuppoſing to finde more mortified & tamed to theyr hand, aduaunced to be Emperour after his father. But that fell out much cōtrary to theyr expectation. For he perceiuing the immoderate pompe and pride of ẏ Romain biſhops, which he could in no caſe abide, ſo netled them, & cut theyr combes & waxed ſo ſtout agaynſt them intending to extirpe theyr tyranny and to reduce theyr pompous riches to the ſtate & condition of the primitiue church agayn, putting ſome of them to flight, and priſoning ſome of theyr Cardinals, that of 3. Popes, one after another he was accurſed, circumuẽted by treaſon, at laſt depoſed, & after that poyſoned, and at laſt forſaken and dyed.

Warre rayſed againſt Conradus, by the Byſhops of Rome.

After this Friderick folowed his ſonne Cõradus, whõ the foreſayd Biſhops for his diſobedience ſone diſpatched, exciting agaynſt him in mortall warre the Lantgraue of Thuring, whereby he was at length driuen into his kingdome of Naples, and there deceaſed.

Ex Anentino.

This Conradus had a ſonne called Conradinus duke and prince of Sueuia. When this Conradinus after the deceaſe of his father came to enioy his kingdome of Naples, the ſayd Biſhops ſtyrred vp againſt him Charles ẏ french kings brother in ſuch ſort, that through crafty conueyance, both Conradinus which deſcended of the bloud of ſo many Emperours, & alſo Fridericke Duke of Auſtria were both takẽ, and after much wretched handling in theyr miſerable induraunce vnſeeming to theyr ſtate, at length were both brought vnder the axe by the Popes procurement, and ſo both beheaded. And thus ended the imperiall ſtock of Fridericke the firſt ſurnamed Barbaroſſa.

The inſolencie of Pope Boniface 8. againſt Philip French kyng.

The like as happened to Fridericke the Emperor, had almoſt alſo fallen vpon Philip the French king, by Pope Boniface the 8. who becauſe he could not haue his commodityes and reuenewes out of Fraunce after his will, ſent out his Bulles and letters patents to diſplace king Philip aforeſayd, and to poſſeſſe Albertus king of Romanes in his rowme.

The tyrannous iniuries of Byſhops of Rome agaynſt kings of England. Pope Alexander 3. againſt Kyng Henry. 2. Pope Innocent 3. againſt king Iohn.

And thus hitherto of forreigne ſtoryes. Now touching our countrey Princes here in Englande to ſpeake ſomewhat likewiſe of them: did not Pope Alexander the 3. preſumptuouſly taking vpõ him where he had nothing to do to intermeddle with the kinges ſubiectes, for the death of Becket the rebell, albeit the king ſufficiently cleared hym ſelfe thereof, yet notwithſtanding did he not wrongfullye bring the ſayd king Henry 2. to ſuch penaunce as it pleaſed him to enioyne, & alſo violently conſtrayne him to ſweare obedience to the Sea of Rome? pag. 227. The lyke alſo was ſhewed before in this ſtory to happen to K. Iohn hys ſonne. For when the ſayd king like a valiaunt Prince had held out the tyranny of thoſe Biſhops 7. yeares together, were not all the Churches in England barred vp, and hys inheritaunce with all his dominions geuen away by pope Innocent. 3. to Ludouicus the French king, and he afterward compelled to ſubmitt both himſelfe and to make hys whole Realme fedotary to the Byſhops of Rome & moreouer the king himſelfe driuen alſo to ſurrẽder his crowne to Pandulphus the Popes Legate, and ſo continued as a priuate perſon 5. dayes ſtanding at the popes curteſy whether to receiue it agayne at his handes or no? And when the nobles of the realme roſe afterwarde agaynſt the king for the ſame, was not he then fayne to ſeeke and ſue to the foreſayd Pope for ſuccour, as by this his owne letter, takẽ out of the publicke roles, may appeare.

¶ The Image of Antichriſt, exalting himſelfe in the Temple of God, aboue all that is named God, out of his owne Decrees, Decretals, Extrauagantes, Pontificals. &c. word for worde as it is out of the ſayde bookes here alleaged and quoted.

1. FOr as much as it ſtandeth vpon neceſſity of ſaluation, for euery humaine creature to be ſubiect vnto me the Pope of Rome, it ſhalbe therefore requiſite & neceſſary for all men that will be ſaued, to learne and know the dignity of my ſea, and excellency of my domination, as here is ſette forth according to the truth and very wordes of mine owne lawes, in ſtile as foloweth. 2. Firſt my inſtitution began in the olde Teſtament, and was conſummate and finiſhed in the new: in that my prieſthood was prefigured by Aaron: And other biſhops vnder me were prefigured by ỹ ſonnes of Aarō that were vnder him. 3. Neither is it to be thought that my church of Rome hath bene preferred by any generall Councell, but obteined the primacy onely by the voice of the Goſpell, and the mouth of the Sauiour. 4. And hath in it neither ſpotte nor wrinckle, nor any ſuch like thing. 5. Wherefore as other ſeates be all inferiour to me, and as they cannot abſolue me: ſo haue they no power to bind me or to ſtand againſt me, no more then the axe hath power to ſtand or preſume aboue hym that heweth with it, or the ſawe to preſume aboue him that ruleth it. 6. Thys is the holy and Apoſtolicke mother church of all other Churches of Chriſt. 7. From whoſe rules it is not meet that any perſon or perſons ſhould decline, but like as the ſonne of God came to do the will of his father, ſo muſt you do the will of your mother the Church, the head whereof is the Churche of Rome. 8. And if any other perſon or perſons ſhall erre from the ſayd Church, eyther let them be admoniſhed, or els theyr names taken, to bee knowne who they be that ſwarue from the cuſtomes of Rome. 9. Thus then for as much as the holy Church of Rome, whereof I am gouernour is ſet vp to the whole worlde for a glaſſe or example, reaſon would what thing ſoeuer the ſayd Church determineth, or ordeineth, that to be receiued of all men for a generall and a perpetuall rule for euer. 10. Whereupon we ſee it now verified in this Churche, that was forprophesied by Ieremy, ſaying: Beholde I haue ſet thee vp ouer nations & kyngdomes to plucke vp and to breake downe, to builde and to plant. &c. 11. Who ſo vnderſtandeth not the prerogatiue of this my Prieſthood, let him looke vppe to the firmament, where he may ſee two great lightes, the Sunne and the Moone: one ruling ouer the day, the other ouer the night. So in the firmament of the vniuerſall Church. 12. GOD hath ſet two great dignityes, the authoritye of the Pope, and of the Emperour. Of the which two this our dignity is ſo much more weightier, as we haue the greater charge to geue accompt to GOD for kinges of the earth, and the lawes of men. 13. Wherefore be it knowne to you Emperours, which know it alſo right well, that you depend vpon the iudgement of vs: we muſt not be brought and reduced to your will. 14. For (as I ſayde) looke what difference there is betwixt the Sunne and the Moone, ſo great is the power of the Pope ruling ouer the daye, that is, ouer the ſpiritualty, aboue Emperours and Kinges ruling ouer the night, that is, ouer the laity. 15. Now ſeeing then the earth is ſeauen times bigger then the Moone, and the Sonne eight times greater then the earth, it followeth that the Popes dignity 56. tymes doth ſurmount the eſtate of Emperours. 16. Uppon conſideration whereof, I ſaye therefore and pronounce that Conſtantine the Emperour dyd naught in ſetting the Patriarch of Conſtantinople at his feete on his lefte hand. 17. And although the ſayd Emperour wrote to me, alleadging the wordes of Saynt Peter, commaunding vs to ſubmitte our ſelues to euery humane creature, as to kinges, dukes, & other for ẏ cauſe of God. &c. 1.Pet.2. yet in aūſwering again in my decretall, I expoūded ẏ minde & the words of S.Peter to perteine to his ſubiectes, & not his ſucceſſors, willing the ſayd Emperor to conſider ẏ perſon of the ſpeaker, & to whom it was ſpoken. For if the mind of Peter had bene there to debaſe the order of prieſthod, and to make vs vnderlings to euery humane creature, thē euery Jack might haue dominion ouer Prelates: which maketh agaynſt the example of Chriſt, ſetting vp the order of Prieſthode to beare dominion ouer kings, according to the ſaying of Ieremy: Beholde I haue ſet thee vp ouer kinges & nations. &c. 18. And as I feared not then to write this boldly vnto Cōſtantine, ſo now I ſay to all other Emperours, ẏ they receauing of me their approbation, vnction, conſecratiō, and crowne Imperiall, muſt not diſdain to ſubmit theyr heads vnder me, & ſweare vnto me theyr alegeance. 19. For ſo you read in the Decree of pope John, how that princes heretofore haue bene wont to bow & ſubmit theyr heads vnto Biſhops, & not to procede in iudgement agaynſt the heads of biſhops. 20. If this reuerence and ſubmiſſion was wont to be geuen to Byſhops, how much more ought they to ſubmit theyr heads to me being ſuperiour, not onely to kings, but Emperors, and that for two cauſes: Firſt for my title of ſucceſſion that I Pope of Rome haue to the Empyre, the rowme ſtandyng vacant. Alſo for the fulneſſe of power that Chriſt the king of kings, and Lord of Lords hath geuē to me though vnworthy in the perſon of Peter. 21. By reaſon whereof, ſeing my power is not of man but of God, who by his celeſtiall prouidence hath ſette me ouer his whole vniuerſall Church maiſter and gouernour, it belongeth therefore to my office to looke vpon euery mortall ſinne of euery Chriſten man: 22. whereby all criminall offences as well of kings as all other, be ſubiect to my cenſure. 23. in ſuch ſort, that in al maner of pleading, if any maner of perſon at any time either before the ſentence geuen or after ſhall appeale to me, it ſhall be lawfull for him ſo to do. 24. Neither muſt kinges and Princes thinke it muche to ſubmit themſelues to my iudgemēt: for ſo did Valentinianus the worthy emperor, ſo did Theodoſius, & alſo Carolus. 25. Thus you ſee al muſt be iudged by me, and I of no man. Yea and though I Pope of Rome, by my negligence or euill demeaner be founde vnprofitable, or hurtfull, either to my ſelfe or to others: yea if I ſhoulde draw with me innumerable ſoules by heapes to hell, yet no mortall man ſo hardy, ſo bolde, or ſo preſumptuous to reproue me. 26. or to ſay to me: Domine cur ita facis: i. Syr why doe you ſo? 27. For although you read that Balaam was rebuked of his aſſe, by the whiche aſſe our ſubiectes, by Balaam we Prelates are ſignified: yet that ought to be no example to our ſubiectes to rebuke vs. 28. And though we read in the Scripture that Peter, who receiued power of the kingdome, and being chiefe of the Apoſtles, might by vertue of his office controlle all other, was content to come and geue annſwere before his inferiours, obiecting to him his goyng to the Gentiles, yet other inferiors muſt not learne by this example to be checkmate with theyr Prelates becauſe that Peter ſo tooke it at theyr handes, ſhewing therby rather a diſpenſation of humility, then the power of hys office: by the which power he might haue ſayde to them agayne in this wiſe: It becommeth not ſheep, nor belongeth to theyr office to accuſe their ſhepheard. &c. 29. For els why was Dioſcorus Patriarche of Alexandria condemned and excommunicated at Chalcedone? not for any cauſe of his fayth, but onely for that he durſt ſtand agaynſt Pope Leo, and durſt excommunicate the Biſhoppe of Rome: for who is he that hath authoritye to accuſe the ſeate of Saynt Peter? 30. Albeit I am not ignoraunt what Saynt Hierome writeth, that Paule would not haue reprehended Peter, vnleſſe he had thought hymſelfe equall vnto him. 31. yet Hierome muſt thus be expounded by my interpretation, that this equality betwixt Peter and Paule conſiſteth not in like office of dignity, but in pureneſſe of conuerſation. 32. For who gaue Paule his lycence to preach but Peter, and that by the authority of god, ſaying: Separate to me Paule and Barnabas? &c. wherefore be it knowne to all men that my Church of Rome 33. is Prince and head of all nations. 34. the mother of the fayth. 35. the foundation Cardinall: wherupon all Churches doe depend as the doore doth depende by the hinges. 36. the firſt of all other ſeates, without all ſpot or blemiſh. 37. Hauyng both ſwordes in my power, both of the ſpirituall and temporall iuriſdiction. 62. ſo farre ſurmounting the authority of the Emperour, that I of myne owne power alone without a Councell haue authoritye to depoſe him, to transfer his kingdome and to geue a new election, as I did to Fridericke and diuers other. 63. What power then or poteſtate in all the world is comparable to me: who haue authority to binde and loſe both in heauen and earth? 64. That is, who haue power both of heauenly thinges, and alſo of temporall thinges. 65. To whom Emperors and kinges be more inferior, then lead is inferior to Gold. 66. For do you not ſee the neckes of great kinges and Princes bend vnder our knees, yea and thinke thēſelues happy and well defenced, if they may kiſſe our handes? 67. Wherefore the ſawcines of Honorius the Emperor is to be reprehended, and his conſtitution aboliſhed who with hys laity would take vpon him to intermeddle, not onely wyth the temporall order, but alſo with matters eccleſiaſtical and election of the Pope. 68. But here percaſe ſome wil obiect the examples & wordes of Chriſt, ſaying, that his kingdome is not of this worlde, & where he being required to deuide betwixt 2. brethrē theyr heritage, did refuſe it. But yͭ ought to be no preiudice to my power. 69. For if Peter & I in Peter, if we I ſay, haue power to binde & looſe in heauē, howe muche more thē is it to be thought, that we haue power in earth to looſe & take away empyrs, kingdoms, dukedoms, & what els ſo euer mortal mē may haue, & to geue thē wher we will? 70. And if we haue authority ouer Angels, which be yͤ gouernors of princes, what then may we do vpō theyr inferiors & ſeruants? 71. And for yͭ you ſhall not marueil yͭ I ſay: Aungels be ſubiect to vs, you ſhall heare what my bleſſed clerke Antoninus, writeth of yͭ matter, ſaying yͭ our power, of Peter & me, is greater then yͤ Angels in 4. things: In iuriſdiction 2. in adminiſtratiō of ſacramēts 3. in knowledge, 4. & in reward. &c. 72. And againe in Bulla Clementis, do I not there cōmaund in my Bull, yͭ Angels of Paradiſe to abſolue yͤ ſoule of mā out of purgatory, & to bring it into the glory of Paradiſe? 73. And now beſides my heauenly power, to ſpeake of mine earthly iuriſdiction, who did firſt tranſlate the Empyre from the Greekes to the Almaynes, but I? 74. And not onely in the Empyre am I Emperor, the place being empty, but in all Eccleſiaſticall benefices haue full right and power to geue, to tranſlate, & to diſpoſe after my arbitremēt. 75. Did not I Zacharyas put down Childerick the old king of Fraunce, & ſet vp Pipinus? 76. Dyd not I Gregorius 7. ſet vp Robert Wyſard and made him king of Sicilia & Duke of Capua? &c. 77. Did not I yͤ ſame Gregorius alſo ſet vp Rodulphus agaynſt Henry 4. Emperour? 78. And though this Hēricus was an Emperor of moſt ſtout courage, who ſtood, 62. times in opē fielde againſt his enemies. 79. yet did not I Gregori. bring hym corā nobis, & made him ſtand at my gate 3. daies & 3. nights barefoot & barelegge with his wife & childe, in the deepe of winter, both in froſt and ſnow, intreating for his abſolutiō & after did excōmunicate him agayne, ſo yͭ he was twiſe excommunicated in my dayes? 80. Againe did not I Paſchalis after Gregory, ſet vp yͤ ſonne of yͤ ſaid Hēricus againſt his father in war, to poſſeſſe yͤ Empyre, & to put down his father, & ſo he did? 81. Item, did not I pope Alexander bring vnder Hēry the ſecōd king of Englād, for yͤ death of Thomas Becket, & cauſe him to go barefoot to his tombe at Canterbury with blee-

Did not I Innocentius the thyrd cauſe King Iohn to kneele downe at the feete of Pandulphus my Legate, and offer vp his crowne to his handes: alſo to kiſſe the feete of Stephen Langton Byſhop of Caunterbury, and beſides marſed him in a thouſande Markes by yeare? 83. Did not I Vrbanus the ſeconde, put down Hugo Earle in Italy, diſcharging his ſubiectes from theyr oth and obedience to him? 84. Did not I Paſchalis excommunicate alſo his ſonne Henry 5. and get out of his hands all his right and title of elections and donations of ſpirituall promotions? Did not I Gelaſius 2. bring the Captayne Cintius vnder, vnto the kiſſinge of my feete. And after Gelaſius, did not I Calixtus 2. quale the forſayd Emperour Henricus 5. and alſo bring in ſubiection Gregorye whom the ſayd Emperor had ſet vp againſt me to be pope, bringing him into Rome vpon a Cammell, his face to the horſe taile, making him to holde the horſe tayle in his hand in ſtead of a bridle? 85. Further, did not I Innocentius 2. ſet vp and made Lotharius to be Emperour for driuynge out Pope Anacletus out of Rome? 86. Did not I the ſayd Innocentius take the Dukedome of Sicile from the Empyre, and made Roger to be king thereof, whereby afterward the kingdome became the patrimony of S. Peter? 87. Did not I Alexander 3. ſuſpend all the Realme & churches of England for the kinges mariage? an 1159. 88. But what do I ſpeake of kinges? did not I the ſayd Alexander bring the valiant Emperor Fredericke the firſt to Venice, by reaſon of his ſonne Otho there takē priſoner, & there in S. Markes church made him fall down flat vpō the groūd while I ſet my foote vpon his necke, ſaying the verſe of the Pſalme. Super aſpidē & baſiliſcum ambulabis. &c. 89. Did not I Adrianus pope, an engliſh mā borne, excōmunicate W. K. of Sicile, & refuſe his peace, which he offered? & had not he ouercome me in playne field, I would haue ſhaken him out of his kingdom of Scicil & dukedom of Apulia. 90. Alſo did not I ẏ ſaid Adrianus, cōtrol & correct the foreſaid Fridericus Emperor, for holding the left ſtyrrup of my horſe whē he ſhould haue holdē the right? 91. & afterward did not I excōmunicate & curſe him, for that he was ſo ſawſy to ſet his owne name in writing afore mine? 92. And although a poore ſlye afterward ouercame & ſtrāgled me, yet I made kings & Emperors to ſtoup. 93. Did not Innocētius 3. deiect Philippus, brother to Fridericus from the Imperiall crown, being elected wout my leaue, & after ſet him vp againe? & alſo ſet vp Otho of Brūſwicke, & after did excōmunicate & alſo depoſe the ſame 4. yeares, ſetting vppe the frēch K. to war againſt him. 94. Thē was Fridericus 2. by me ſet vp & reigned. 37. yeres, & yet 5. yeares before he dyed. 95. did not I Honorius interdict him, for not reſtoring certaine to theyr poſſeſſiōs at my requeſt? 96. whō alſo Gregor. 9. did excōmunicate twiſe together, & raiſed vp the Venetiās againſt him. 97. And at lēgth Innocētius ſpoiled him of his Empyre: after ẏ he cauſed him to be poiſoned, at lēth to be ſtrangled by one Manfredus, & dyd excommunicate his ſonne Conradus after him, not onely depriuing him of his right inheritance, but alſo cauſed him with Friderick Duke of Auſtria to be beheaded. 98. Thus then did not I excommunicate and depoſe all theſe Emperours in order? Henricus 4. Henricus 5. Fridericus 1. Philippus Otho 4. Fridericus 2. and Cōradus his ſonne? 99. Did not I interdict King Henry the 8. 100. and all his kingdome of England? 101. And had not his prudence and power preuented my practiſe, I had diſplaced hym from his kingdome alſo. Briefely, who is able to comprehende the greatneſſe of my power and of my ſeate? 102. For by me onely generall Councels take theyr force and confirmation 103. and the interpretation of the ſayd Councels & of all other cauſes hard and doubtfull ought to be referred & ſtand to my determination. 104. By me the workes of all writers, whatſoeuer they be, either be reproued or allowed 105. Then how much more ought my writinges & decrees to be preferred before all other? 106. Inſomuch that my letters and Epiſtles decretal be equiualent with generall Councels. 107. And where as God hath ordeined all cauſes of men, to be iudged by men, he hath onely reſerued me, that is the Pope of Rome, without all queſtion of mē, vnto his owne iudgement 108. And therefore where all other creatures be vnder theyr iudge, only I which in earth am the iudge of all, can be iudged of none, neither of Emperour, or the whole clergy, nor of Kinges, nor of the people. 109. For who hath power to iudge vpon his Iudge? 110. This iudge am I, and that alone, without any other aſſiſtaunce of any Councell ioyned to me. For I haue power vpon Councels, Councels haue no power vpon me. But if the Councell determine amiſſe, it is in my authority alone to infringe it, or to condemne whom I luſt without any Councell 111. And all for the preeminence of my predeceſſour bleſſed Saynt Peter, whiche by the voyce of the Lorde, he receyued, and euer ſhall reteyne. 112. both of Councelles, perſon, or perſons, may and ought to be examined. 113. for that, they may be corrupted foure wayes, by feare, by giftes, by hatred, by fauour: onely my ſentence and iudgement muſt ſtand. 114. as geuen out of heauen by the mouth of Peter himſelfe, which no mā muſt 115. breake, nor retract. 116. No man muſte dyſpute or doubt of. 117. Yea if my iudgement, ſtatute, or yoake ſeeme ſcarcely tollerable, yet for remembraunce of S. Peter it muſt be humbly obeyed. 118. Yea and moreouer obedience is to be geuen, not onely to ſuche decrees ſet forth by me in time of my Popedome, but alſo to ſuche as I doe foreſee and committe to writing before I be Pope. 119. And although it be thought by ſome writers, to be geuen to all men to erre, and to be deceiued. 120. yet neyther am I a pure man. 121. and agayne the Sentence of my Apoſtolique ſeat is alwayes conceiued with ſuch moderation is concoct and digeſted with ſuch patience and ripeneſſe, and deliuered out with ſuche grauitye of deliberation, that nothing is thought in it neceſſary to be altered or retracted. 122. Wherefore it is manifeſt, and teſtified by the voyce of holy biſhops, that the dignity of this my ſeat is to be reuerenced through the whole world, in that all the faythfull ſubmit themſelues to it as to the head of the whole body. 123. Whereof it is ſpoken to me by the Prophet, ſpeaking of the Arke: if this be humbled, whether ſhall you run for ſuccour, & where ſhall your glory become? Seing then this is ſo, that ſo holy Byſhops & Scriptures do witneſſe with me, what ſhall we ſay then to ſuch as will take vpon thē to iudge of my doings, to reprehend my procedings, or to require homage & tribute of me to whō all other are ſubiect? 124. Againſt yͤ firſt ſort yͤ ſcripture ſpeaketh Deut. thou oughteſt not to put thy ſithe in an other mās corne. Which thing to attempt agaynſt me what is it but plaine ſacriledge? 125. According to my Canoniſts, which thus define ſacriledge to conſiſt in 3. thinges, either when a man iudgeth of hys Princes iudgement: or when the holyday is prophaned, or when reuerēce is not geuē to lawes and Canons. 126. Agaynſt the ſecōd ſort maketh the place of the booke of kinges, where we reade the Arcke of God was brought from Gaba to Hieruſalem, and in the way the Arke inclining by reaſon of yͤ vnruely Oxen, Ozias the Leuite put to his hand to helpe, and therefore was ſtriken of the Lord. By this Arke is ſignified the Prelats: by the inclination therof: the fall of Prelates. 127. which alſo be ſignified by the Aungels that Iacob did ſee goyng vp and comming downe the lader. 128. Alſo by the Prophet, where he ſayth: He bowed downe the heauens and came downe &c. By Ozias and by the vnruely Oxen are ment our ſubiectes. 129. Then like as Ozias was ſtricken for putting his hand to the Arke inclining, no more muſt ſubiectes rebuke theyr Prelates going awry. 130. Albeit here may bee aunſwered agayne, that all be not Prelats which ſo be called: for it is not the name that maketh a Beſhop, but hys life. 131. Agaynſt the third ſort of ſuche as would bring vs vnder the tribute and exactions of ſecular men, maketh the new Teſtament, where Peter was bid to geue the groate in the fiſhes mouth, but not the head nor the bodye of the fiſh: No more is the head or body of the Church ſubdued to kings, but onely that which is in the mouth, that is, the externe thinges of the Church. And yet nor they neither. 132. For ſo we read in the booke of Gen. that Pharao in time of dearth ſubdued all the land of the Egyptians, but yet he miniſtred to the Prieſtes, ſo that he tooke neither their poſſeſſions from them, nor theyr liberty. If then the Prelates of the church muſt be neither iudged, nor reprehended, nor exacted, how much more ought I to be free from the ſame? 133. which am the Biſhop of Biſhops, and head of Prelats. 134. For it is not to be thought that the caſe betwixt me and other Prelats: betwixt my ſea and other Churches be like. 135. Although the whole Catholicke and Apoſtolicke Churche make one bridechamber of Chriſt: yet the Catholicke and Apoſtolicke Church of Rome, had the preheminence geuen ouer all other by the mouth of the Lorde him ſelfe ſaying to Peter: Thou art Peter. &c. 136. Thus a diſcretion and difference muſt be had in the Church as it was betwixt Aaron and his children. 137. betwixt the 72. Diſciples, and the 12. Apoſtles: betwixt the other Apoſtles and Peter. 138. Wherefore it is to be concluded, that there muſt be an order and difference of Degrees in the Churche betwixt powers, Superiour and Inferiour: without which order, the Vniuerſitye of the whole cannot conſiſt. 139. For as amongeſt the Angelicall creatures aboue in heauen, there is ſet a difference and inequality of powers and orders, ſome be Aungels, ſome Archaungels, ſome Cherubines and Seraphines. 140. So in the Eccleſiaſticall Hierarchie of the Church Militant in the earth, Prieſtes muſt not be equall wyth Byſhoppes, Byſhoppes muſt not bee like in order wyth Archbyſhoppes, wyth Patriarckes, or Primates. 141. who conteyne vnder them three Archbyſhops

Cardinals or Principals, ſo called, becauſe as the dore turneth by his hinges, ſo the vniuerſall church ought to be ruled by them. 143. The next and higheſt order aboue theſe is mine, whiche am Pope, differing in power and maioritie, and honour reuerẽtiall, from theſe and all other degrees of men. 144. For the better declaration whereof my Canoniſtes make three kindes of power in earth: Immediata, which is mine immediately from God Deriuata, which belongeth to other inferior Prelates from me. 145. Miniſtralis, belonging to Emperours and Princes to miniſter for me. For the whiche cauſe the annoynting of Princes and my conſecration doth differ: for they are annoynted only in the armes or ſhoulders, and I in the head to ſignifie the difference of power betwixt princes and me. 146. This order therefore of prieſtes, biſhops, and Archbiſhops, Patriarckes and other, as a thing moſt conuenient my church of Rome hath ſet and inſtitute through al churches following therin, not onely the example of the Angelicall army in heauen, but alſo of the Apoſtles, 147. For amongſt them alſo there was not an vniforme equallitie or inſtitution of one degree. 148. But a diuerſitie or diſtinction of authoritie and power. Albeit they were all Apoſtles together, yet it was graunted notwithſtanding to Peter (themſelues alſo agreeing to the ſame) that he ſhould beare dominion and ſuperioritie ouer all the other Apoſtles. 149. And therfore had hys name geuen him Cephas, that is, head or beginning of the Apoſtlehood. 150. Whereupon the order of the prieſthood firſt in the new teſtamẽt began in Peter, to whõ it was ſayd: Thou art Peter, and vpoon thee I will build my Church. 151. And I will geue thee the keyes of the kingdome of heauen. And thou being conuerted confirme thy brethren. 152. I haue prayed for thee, that thy faith ſhal not fayle. Wherefore ſeeyng ſuch power is geuen to Peter, 153. and to me in Peter, beyng hys ſucceſſour. 154. Who is he then in all the worlde that ought not to be ſubiecte to my decrees whiche haue ſuche power, in heauen in hell, in earth with the quick and alſo the dead? 155. commaunding and graunting in my bull of lead ſent to Vienna, vnto all ſuch as died in theyr peregrinatiõ to Rome, that the payne of hell ſhould not touch them: And alſo that all ſuch as tooke the holy croſſe vppon them, ſhoulde euery one at his requeſt not onely be deliuered himſelf, but alſo deliuer 3. or 4. ſoules whome ſoeuer he would, out of purgatory. 156. Agayne, hauing ſuche promiſe and aſſurance that my fayth ſhall not fayle, who then wil not beleue my doctrine? For did not Chriſt himſelfe firſt pray for Peter that his faith ſhould not fayle? 157. Alſo haue I not a ſure promiſe of Paules owne mouth, writing to my Church by theſe wordes: God is my witnes whom I ſerue in my ſpirite, in the Goſpel of his ſonne, that without ceaſing I make mention of you alwayes in my prayers? Rom. 1. 158. Wherefore as I condemne all ſuch worthely, which will not obey my decrees to be diſpoſſeſſed of all theyr honour, without reſtitution. 159. So all they yͭ beleue not my doctrine or ſtand agaynſt yͤ priuiledge of the church eſpecially the Church of Rome, I pronounce thẽ heretickes. 160. And as the other before is to be called vniuſt, ſo this man is to be called an heretick 161. For why, he goeth agaynſt the fayth whiche goeth agaynſt her who is the mother of fayth. 162. But here may riſe percaſe a doubt or ſcruple, that if my fayth and knowledge ſtand ſo ſure by the promiſe of Chriſt, and by the continuall prayer of S. Paule: whether is it true, or is to be graunted, that any other ſhoulde excell me in knowledge or interpretation of holy Scripture. 163. For looke whoſe knowledge is grounded of moſt reaſon, hys wordes ſhold ſeeme to be of more authoritie. 164. Whereunto I aunſwer and graunt, that many there be and haue bene more aboũdauntly indued with fuller grace of the holy Ghoſt, and greater excellency of knowledge, and therefore that the tractations of Auguſtine, Hierome and others ought to be preferred before the conſtitutions of diuers popes: yet I ſay in determination of cauſes, becauſe they haue not the vertue and height of that authoritie, which is geuen to me therefore in expounding of ſcriptures they are to be preferred, but in deciding of matters they ſtand inferiour to my authoritie. By vertue of whiche authoritie. 165. both they themſelues be allowed for doctors, and theyr workes approued, and alſo all other matters be ruled, through the power of the keyes whiche is geuen to me immediately of Chriſt. Although I denye not but the ſame keyes be alſo committed to other prelats, as they were to other apoſtles beſides Peter: 166. yet it is one thing to haue the keyes, an other thing to haue the vſe of the keyes.167. Wherfore here is to be noted a diſtinction of keyes, after the minde of my ſchooldoctors: one key whiche is called Clauis ordinis, hauing authoritie to bind and loſe, but not ouer the perſons whom they bind and loſe, and this authoritie they take not immediately of Chriſt, but mediately by me the vicare of Chriſt. The other key is called Clauis iuriſdictionis, whiche I the vicar of Chriſt take immediately of him, hauing not onely authoritie to binde and loſe, but alſo dominion ouer them on whom this key is exerciſed. By the iuriſdiction of which key, the fulnes of my power is ſo great, that where as all other are ſubiectes.168. yea and Emperours themſelues ought to ſubdue theyr executions to me. Onely I am a ſubiect to no creature,169. no not to my ſelfe, except I liſt, In foro pœnitentiæ, to my Ghoſtly father ſubmitting my ſelfe as a ſinner, but not as Pope: So that my Papall maieſtie euer remaineth vnminiſhed. Superiour to all men.170. whom all perſons ought to obey.171. and follow 172. Whom no man muſt iudge nor accuſe of any crime, either of murder, Adultery Simony, or ſuch like.173. No mã depoſe, but I my ſelf.174. No man can excõmunicate me, yea though I cõmunicate wᵗ the excõmunicat, for no Canõ bindeth me. Whõ no man muſt lye to.175. For he yͭ lyeth to me is a church robber.176. And who obeyeth not me is an hereticke, & an excõmunicate perſon.177. For like as al the Iewes were commaũded to obey yͤ high prieſt of yͤ Leuiticall order, of what ſtate or condition ſo euer they were, ſo are al chriſten men more and leſſe bound to obey me Chriſtes Liefetenaunt in earth. Concerning the obedience or diſobedience of whom, ye haue in Deut.17.178. where the commõ gloſe ſaith, that he who denyeth to the hye prieſt Obedientiam, lyeth vnder the ſentence of condemnation, as much as he that denieth to God his Omnipotentiam. Thus then appeareth that the greatneſſe of my prieſthoode: 179. begonne in Melchiſedeche: ſolemnized in Aaron: continued in the Children of Aaron, perfectionated in Chriſt: repreſented in Peter: exalted in the Vniuerſall iuriſdiction: and manifeſted in Silueſter. &c. So that thorough this Præeminence, of my prieſthood, hauing al things ſubiect to me. 180. it may ſeeme well verified in me yͭ was ſpoken of Chriſt. Pſal. 8. Omnia ſubieciſti ſub pedibus eius, oues & boues, & vniuerſa pecora campi. Volucres cœli & piſces maris. &c. i. Thou haſt ſubdued all thinges vnder his feete ſheep, & oxen, and all cattell of the fielde, the birdes of heauen, and fiſh of the ſea, &c.181. Where it is to be noted, that by oxen, Iewes and heretickes, by cattell of the field, Paganes be ſignified. For although as yet they be out of the vſe of my keyes of bynding and looſing, yet they be not out of the iuriſdiction of my keyes, but if they returne I may abſolue them.182. By ſheepe and all cattell, are ment all Chriſten men both great and leſſe, whether they be Emperour, Princes, prelates or other. By birdes of the ayre you may vnderſtand the Angels and poteſtates of heauen who be all ſubiect to me, in yͭ I am greater then the Angels, and that in foure thinges as is afore declared: & haue power to binde and loſe in heauen:183. and to geue heauen to them that fight in my warres, 184. Laſtly, by the fiſhes of the ſea, are ſignified the ſoules departed in payne or in purgatory, as Gregory by his praier deliuered the ſoule of Traianus out of hell, and I haue power to deliuer out of Purgatory whom I pleaſe.185. Laſtly by the fiſhes of the ſea, are ſignified ſuch as be in purgatory: in ſomuche that they ſtand in neede and neceſſitie of other mens helpe, and yet be in theyr iorney Viatores, & de foro Papæ i. paſſengers and belonging to the court of the pope: therefore they may be relieued out of the ſtorehouſe of the Church, by the participation of indulgence. And foraſmuch as ſome do obiect that my pardons cannot extend to them that be departed, for that it was ſayd to Peter: what ſoeuer thou ſhalt loſe vpon earth, and therefore ſeeing they are not vpon earth they cannot be loſe of me. Here I aunſwere agayne by my doctours, that this word Super terram &c. i. vpon the earth may be referred two maner of wayes: firſt to him yͭ is the loſer, ſo that he which ſhall loſe ſhalbe vpon the earth. And ſo I graunt that the pope being dead can looſe no man. Alſo it may be referred to hym that is looſed, ſo that whoſoeuer is looſed muſt be vpon the earth or about the earth. And ſo the ſoules in purgatory, may be looſed, which albeit they are not vpon the earth, yet they are about the earth, at leaſt they be not in heauen. And becauſe oft tymes one queſtion may riſe vppon an other, and the heades of men now a dayes are curious, a man hearing nowe that I can deliuer out of purgatory will aſke here a queſtion, whether I be able alſo to emptie all purgatory at once, or not? To whom my Canoniſt Auguſt. de Ancho doth aunſwere by a triple diſtinction: Quantum ad abſolutam meam iuriſdictionẽ, quantum ad ordinatam executionem, quantum ad diuinam acceptationem. Firſt touching my abſolute iuriſdictiõ, he ſaith I am able to rid out all purgatory together, for as many as be vnder my iuriſdiction, as all be, except onely infants vnbaptiſed In Limbo, and men departed onely Cum baptiſmo flaminis, that is, with the baptiſme of the ſpirite: & ſuche as haue no frendes to doe for them that wherfore pardons be geuen: theſe onely excepted. For all other beſides, the Pope (he ſayth) hath power to releaſe al purgatory at once as touching his abſolute iuriſdiction. Albeit Thomas Aquine part. 4. denyeth the ſame, foraſmuch as Chriſt himſelfe (he ſayth) when he came downe, did not vtterly at once releaſe all purgatory, As touching my ordinary execution they hold, that I may if I will, but I ought not to doe it. Thirdly, as concerning the deuine acceptation, that is, how God would accept it if I did it, yͭ (they ſay) is vnknowen to them, and to euery creature, yea and to the Pope hymſelfe.

And to the intent I would all men to ſee and vnderſtād that I lacke not witneſſes moe beſides theſe, if I liſt to bring them out, you ſhal heare the whole queare of my diuine clergy brought out, with a full voyce teſtifying in my behalfe, in their bookes, tractations, diſtinctions, Titles Gloſes, and Summaryes, as by their owne wordes here followeth. The Pope (ſay they) being the vicare of Ieſu Chriſt throughout the whole worlde, in the ſtead of the liuing God, hath that dominion and Lordſhip which chriſt here in earth would not haue, although he had it in habitu, but gaue it to Peter in Actu, that is, the vniuerſall iuriſdictio both of ſpirituall thinges and alſo of temporall, which double iuriſdiction was ſignified by the 2. ſwordes in the Goſpell: And alſo by offering of the wiſe men, who offered not onely incenſe, but alſo gold, to ſignifie not onely the ſpirituall dominion, but alſo the temporall to belong to chriſt and to his vicare. For as we read: the earth is the Lordes and the fulnes thereof, & as Chriſt ſayth: all power is genē to him both in heauen & earth. So it is to be affirmed Incluſiué, that the vicar of Chriſt hath power on thinges celeſtiall, terreſtriall, and infernall. which he tooke immediately of Chriſt: all other take it mediately by Peter and the Pope. wherfore ſuch as ſay that the Pope hath dominion onely on ſpirituall things in the world and not of temporall, may be likened to the counſellers of the king of Syria 3. Reg. 20. which ſayd that the Gods of the mountayns be theyr Gods, and therefore they haue ouercome vs, but let vs fight agaynſt them in the low midowes and in valleys where they haue no power, and ſo we ſhall preuayle ouer them. So euill counſellers now a dayes, through theyr peſtiferous flattery deceiue kinges and princes of the earth, ſaying, Popes and prelates be Gods of mountaynes, that is, of ſpirituall thyngs onely, but they be not Gods of valleys, that is they haue no dominion ouer temporal things and therefore let vs fight with them in the valleys, that is in the power of the temporall poſſeſſions, and ſo we ſhall preuayle ouer them. But what ſayth the ſentence of God to them, let vs heare. Becauſe (ſayth he) the Syryans ſay that the God of mountaynes is theyr God, and not the God of valleys, therfore I will geue all this multitude into your hand, and ye ſhal know that I am the Lord. what can be more effectually ſpoken to ſet foorth the maieſtie of my iuriſdiction, which I receaued immediatly of the Lord of the Lord I ſay, and of no man. For where as Conſtantine the Emperour gaue to Silueſter, induing hym with this poſſeſſion & patrimony that is, ſo to be expounded and taken not ſo much for a donation, as to be counted for a reſtitution made of that which tyrannouſly was taken from hym before. And agayn, where as I haue geuen at ſondry tymes to Ludouicus and other Emperours, of my temporall lands & poſſeſſions, yet yͭ was done, not ſo much for any recogniſing of homage to thē, as for keeping peace with thē, For I owe to Emperoures no due obedience yͭ they can clayme: but they owe to me as to theyr ſuperiour. And therefore for a diuerſitie betwixt theyr degree and myne, in their conſecration they take yͤ vnction on theyr arme, I on yͤ head. And as I am ſuperior to thē, ſo am I ſuperiour to all laws, & free frō al cōſtitutiōs. which am able of my ſelf, and by my interpretation, to prefer equitie being not written, before the lawe written: hauing all lawes within the cheſt of my breſt, as is aforeſayd. And whatſoeuer this my ſea ſhall inact, approue or diſproue, all men ought to approue or reproue the ſame, without eyther iudging, diſputing, doubting or retracting. Such as the priuiledge geuen of Chriſt in the behalfe of Peter, to the churche of Rome. 186. that what countrey ſoeuer, kingdome or prouince, chuſing to themſelues biſhops and miniſters, although they agree with all other Chriſtes faythfull people in the name of Ieſu, that is in fayth and charitie, beleeuing in the ſame God, and in Chriſt his true ſonne, and in the holy Ghoſt hauing alſo the ſame Crede: the ſame Euangeliſtes and ſcriptures of the Apoſtles: yet notwithſtāding vnles their Byſhops and Miniſters take theyr origine and ordinatiō from this Apoſtolicall ſeate, they are to be counted not of yͤ Church. So that ſucceſſion of fayth onely is not ſufficient to make a church, except the miniſters take theyr ordination by them which haue theyr ſucceſſion from the Apoſtles. So theyr fayth, ſupremacy, the chayre of Peter, keyes of heauen, power to binde and loſe, all theſe be inſeparable to the church of Rome: ſo that it is to be preſumed, that God alwayes prouiding, & S. Peter helping the Biſhopricke and Dioces of Rome, ſhall neuer fall from the faith. And likewiſe it is to be preſumed and preſuppoſed that the Byſhop of that Church is alwaies good & holy. Yea & though he be not alwaies good, or be deſtitute of his own merites yet the merites of S. Peter, predeceſſour of that place, be ſufficient for him, who hath bequethed and left a perpetuall dowry of merites, with inheritance of innocency to his poſteritie. 187. yea and though he fall into homicide or adultery, he may ſinne, but yet he can not be accuſed, but rather excuſed by the murders of Sampſon, the theftes of the Hebrues, yͤ Adultery of Iacob. 188. And likewiſe if any of his Clergy ſhoulde be founde embracing a woman, it muſt be expounded and preſuppoſed that he doth it to bleſſe her. Furthermore, the P. (ſay they) hath al the dignities & all power of all Patriarches. In hys primacie he is Abell: In gouernment, the Arke of Noe: In Patriarchdome. Abraham: In order Melchiſedech: In dignitie Aaron: In authoritie Moſes: In ſeate iudiciall Samuell: In zeale Helias: In meekenes Dauid: In power Peter: In vnction Chriſt. (Nay thou art Antichriſt). My power (they ſay) is greater then all the Saintes. For whom I confirme, no man may infirme. I may fauour and ſpare whom I pleaſe 189. to take from one, and to geue to an other. And if I be enemy to any man, all men ought to eſchew yͤ perſon forthwith, and not tary and looke while I bid them ſo to doe. All the earth is my Dioces, & I the Ordinary of all men, hauing the authoritie of the king of all kinges vpon ſubiectes. I am all in all, and aboue all. 190. ſo that God hymſelfe and I the vicare of God haue both one Conſiſtorie. 192. and am able to do almoſt all that God can do, Claus non errante. 192. Itē it is ſayd of me, yͭ I haue an heauēly arbitrement, and therefore am able to chaunge the nature of thinges, Subſtantialia vnius applicando alteri, and of nothing to make thinges to be: and of a ſentence that is nothing, to to make it ſtand in effect: In all things that I liſt, my will to ſtand for reaſon. For I am able by the law to diſpence aboue the lawe, and of wrong to make Iuſtice, in correcting lawes and chaunging them. You haue hearde hetherto ſufficiently out of my Doctors. Nowe you ſhall heare greater thinges out of myne own decrees. 193. Read there Diſt. 96. Satis. 194. Alſo, 12. Cauſ. 11. q. 1. cap. Sacerdotibus 195. Alſo, 12. q. 1. cap. Futuram. Doe not you finde there expreſſed how Conſtantinus the Emperour ſitting in the generall Councell of Nice, called vs Prelates of the Church, al Gods? 196. Agayne, read my Canon Decretal. De tranſl. Epiſc. cap. Quanto. Do you not ſee there manifeſtly expreſſed how not man, but God alone ſeperateth that which the biſhop of Rome doth diſſolue and ſeperate? wherfore if thoſe thinges yͭ I do be ſayd to be done not of man, but of God what can you make me but God? Agayne, if Prelates of yͤ churche be called and counted of Conſtantinus for Gods, I then being aboue all prelates, ſeeme by this reaſon to be aboue all Gods. wherefore no maruell, if it bee in my power to chaunge time and times, to alter & abrogate lawes to diſpenſe with all thinges, yea with yͤ preceptes of Chriſt For where Chriſt biddeth Peter put vp hys ſword, moniſhed his Diſciples not to vſe any outward force in reuenging themſelues. 197. do not I Pope Nicholaus writing to the byſhops of Fraunce, exhort them to drawe out theyr materiall ſwordes in purſuing theyr enemies, and recouering their poſſeſſions, ſetting againſt the precepte of Chriſt, the Prophet ſaying: Diſſolue colligationes impietatis &c? Item, where Chriſt was preſent himſelfe at the maryage in Cana Galilea. 198. do not I pope Martinus in my diſtinction inhibite the ſpiritual clergy to be preſent at mariage feaſtes, and alſo to mary themſel ues? Item where matrimony by Chriſt, cannot be loſed but onely for whoredome, 199. do not I pope Gregorius Iunior, writing ad Bonifacium permitte the ſame to be broken for impotencie or infirmitie of body? 200. Item, agaynſt the expreſſe caution of the Goſpell, doth not Innocentius the 4. permitte vim vi repellere? 201. Likewiſe againſt the old teſtament. I do diſpēce in not geuing tythes. 202. Itē, againſt yͤ new teſtament in ſwearing and that in theſe 6. cauſes: 203. Pax, fama, fides, reuerentia cautio damni. Defectus veri, poſcunt ſibi magna caueri.

Wherein two kindes of othes are to be noted. whereof ſome be promiſſoria, ſome be aſſertoria. &c. 204. Item, in vowes, and that ex toto voto, where as other Prelates cannot diſpenſe ex toto a voto, I can deliuer ex toto a voto, lyke God himſelf. 205. Itē in periury if I abſolue, my abſolutiō ſtandeth, 206. where alſo note, that in al ſwearing alwaies the authority of the ſuperiour is excepted, 207. Moreouer, where Chriſt biddeth to lend without hope of gain, do not I Pope Martinus geue dipenſation for the ſame? & notwithſtanding the Councell of Thuron enacted the contrary, yet with two Bulles I diſanulled that decrement 208. what ſhould I ſpeake of murder, making it no murder nor homicide to ſlay them that be excommunicate. 209. Likewiſe agaynſt the law of nature. 210. Item, againſt the Apoſtle. 211. Alſo agaynſt the Canons of the Apoſtles. I can and do deſpenſe. For where they in theyr Canon commaund a Prieſt for fornication to be depoſed, I thorough the authoritie of Silueſter do alter the rigour of that conſtitution. 212. conſidering the mindes and bodyes alſo of men now to be weaker then they were then. 213. Briefly, agaynſt the vniuerſal ſtate of yͤ Church I haue diſpenſation ſcilicet quando ſtatus eccleſiæ non decoloratur: And for mariage in the ſecond degree of conſanguinitie and affinitie, In collateralibus æquali linea, that is, betwene the brethrens children: although not in æquali linea, ſo that the vncle may not mary hys nice, vnles for an vrgent and weighty cauſe. As for all ſuch contractes betwixt party and party, where that matrimonie is not yet conſummate by carnall copulation, it is but a ſmall matter for me to diſpenſe withall. In ſumma, if ye lyſt briefly to heare the whole number of all ſuch caſes as properly do apertayne to my Papall diſpenſation, which come to the number of one and fifty poyntes that no man may meddle with all but onely I my ſelfe alone, I will recite them firſt in Latin, then in Engliſhe, as they be ſet forth in my Canonicall Doctours.
